POLICE SEIZED 45 CASES OF LIQUOR; MEN ESCAPED

CHATHAM, June 10.—High Constable Peters, aided by a number of assistants, invaded Jeanette's Creek and Tilbury Plains and spent the night in an energetic search in an endeavor to break up a clever booze ring which operates in that vicinity, the brains of which are believed to be in Detroit. No arrests were made, the police unfortunately not having facilities to give chase to the rum-runners, who have at their disposal high-powered automobiles and motor launches.

Forty-five cases of liquor were seized in a shack and brought to this city.

HELENE'S MARRIED LIFE

BY MAY CHRISTIE

Copyright, 1920, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate

XCV.—Clearing a Mystery.

Somehow, I was not in the least surprised at Alice's confession. I already knew that Tony had been concerned in the purchase of the bracelet.

But what did surprise me was the general secretiveness which Alice had displayed over the whole affair. Pleading shortness of funds, she had borrowed money from me on more than one occasion. She'd made no effort to repay the money I had expended on getting the wretched piece of jewelry out of pawn. Nor had she given me back the hundred dollars that I had lent to her quite recently.

It was difficult to feel any pity for Alice Anstruther. Yet—sitting there, dabbing her eyes dejectedly—she was a pitiable little object.

And—there was my promise to her husband.

"Tony is a rascal, I'm sick to death of telling you so, Alice," I said, shortly. I got up from the leather couch, and began to pace the floor. It was rather difficult to collect my thoughts.

"I want my bracelet back," wailed Alice, much after the order of a petted child, whose favorite toy has been taken from it. "Tony is a—a thief!"

I wheeled round and looked at her. Alice's affection for this unscrupulous youth must be surprisingly shallow, when she was so ready to condemn him.

"You say the real value of the bracelet is two thousand dollars. Well, do your debts to Tony amount to that sum—or not?"

"I'm sure I haven't got the faintest notion," cried Alice, pettishly. "Oh, Helene, don't stare at me in that hard, condemning way! Just as though you were a female policeman!"

I sat down once more beside her on the couch. My tones were quite gentle as I said:

"Try to remember what you owe Tony. If it's less than two thousand dollars you can force him by law to give you back your piece of jewelry."

She shuddered daintily.

"The law? Oh, how perfectly awful, Helene! You mean I might have Tony arrested?"

I made no answer. Personally, I had no wish to be mixed up in this affair. If only Alice's husband were with us, then the burden of her troubles wouldn't rest upon my shoulders.

But Alice's husband was very far away. . .

"There are one or two things I'd like to get to the bottom of," I announced. My thoughts wandered back to that first memorable week-end spent at the home of Travis Lloyd, when the attempted robbery of our host's safe threw all the guests into a turmoil, and when suspicion had turned quite definitely on Alice.

"Ask me anything you like, Helene," said my companion, with a surprising show of meekness.

And so I spoke about the affair to her.

"I want to know just how your scarf came to be flung about my head," I said. "Quite a number of people thought that you were the guilty party, Alice—that you were the would-be thief. Things did look rather black against you, though I personally was quite convinced that you were innocent."

Here Alice favored me with a sarcastic smile.

"You flatter me!" was her terse comment.

I took no notice of this, and went on:

"As a matter of fact, I rather suspected Tony."

Over Alice's face there crept a slow, deep flush.

"What makes you say such a thing, Helene?"

I smiled. For Alice is so changeable in her moods and opinions.

"Well, didn't you say just a little while ago, that Tony was a rascal and a thief?"

She looked nonplussed.

"There was no evidence against him at that time——"

My smile was a trifle crooked as I answered:

"No—because I'm sure you held such evidence back!"

She started, and the flush faded, leaving her cheeks quite pale.

"Are—are you trying to hint that Tony and I were hand-in-glove in an attempted robbery?"

"No, not in a robbery," I said slowly, "but in an indiscreet flirtation, Alice." My eyes were on her face.

She looked the very picture of confusion. Yet still she tried to brave it out. She pretended total ignorance of my meaning.

"When we went upstairs, and found you fully dressed, Alice, you informed us that you'd been sound asleep on the bed. But there was nothing to indicate that you'd been doing anything of the sort. There was everything to indicate that you'd but recently come upstairs."

Alice got up to her feet. Her eyes were blazing.

"Are you daring to accuse me of the robbery?"

She faced me like a little tragedy queen.

"No; But didn't you steal down to meet Tony in the library, long after we'd gone to bed——"

Alice's haughty airs evaporated. She sank down on the couch as though the floor had suddenly given way under her. Daylight seemed breaking on her.

"Tony!" she breathed. "Of course—I see it all now—after I'd left him—the attempted robbery of the safe——"

"You left your scarf behind you," I cut in, "and—when I disturbed him at his work—it was that scarf he used to fling about my head—and so incriminate you, Alice, and shield himself!"

Tomorrow—An Unwelcome Task.

ACID STOMACH IS DANGEROUS

The Real Cause of Indigestion

Acids in the stomach irritate and inflame the delicate stomach lining, sour and ferment the food, prevent proper digestion and lead to nine-tenths of all Dyspepsia and Indigestion. Pepsin and other artificial digestants give only temporary relief and do not correct the cause.

Stomach acids should be neutralized daily, and the stomach kept sweet and clean after eating by drinking a glass of pure Magnesia water made from a teaspoonful or four tablets of Bisurated Magnesia, obtainable at any reliable drug store. This prevents food fermentation and your meals digest naturally and without pain. By following this plan you may eat almost anything without fear of Indigestion.
