Peter Rabbit Has To Think Quickly

By THORNTON W. BURGESS.

Peter Rabbit was sitting not far from Johnny Chuck's house. It was a long time since he had seen Johnny Chuck. It was so. But he knew that deep down in a snug bedroom below the reach of Jack Frost was Johnny, sleeping comfortably, as he had been sleeping for many weeks. Peter couldn't understand how anyone could be willing to sleep all winter and miss all that was going on. At least, that is how he felt most of the time. But once in a while there were time, as when fierce storms of snow and ice made it almost impossible to get anything to eat, that Peter envied Johnny Chuck with nothing at all to worry about.

Down on the Green Meadows, now white with snow, and not green at all, Peter saw a moving spot. "There is Reddy Fox," muttered Peter. "I hope he won't come up here, but I fear he will. He seems to be headed this way now. I don't feel like running this morning." He thought quickly. "I know what I will do. I will have some fun with Reddy if he does come up here. I'll pretend not to see him until he is almost within jumping distance and is sure that he can catch me. Then I'll dive down into Johnny Chuck's house. Johnny won't mind. In fact, he don't know anything about it, because he is 'way down in his bedroom fast asleep, and I won't go 'way down there I'll just go down his long hall just far enough to be out of Reddy's reach."

So Peter continued to sit where he was and watched Reddy Fox draw nearer and nearer. He knew that Reddy didn't see him, for he was sitting perfectly still, and at a distance looked like a brownish-gray stone. It looked as if Reddy would pass without seeing him. Instead of being glad, Peter suddenly felt disappointed. He felt so sure of his safety with Johnny Chuck's house so close by that he wanted the fun of fooling Reddy. That wasn't at all nice of him. Of course not. He knew what Reddy was hungry. He knew that Reddy must have had hard work to get enough to eat during this bad weather and that if he should feel sure of a Rabbit dinner and then miss it he would be dreadfully disappointed. Peter knew all this, but he didn't think about it. All he thought of was the fun it would be to fool Reddy.

It looked to him as if this time Peter was to be his.

So when he saw that Reddy was going to pass without seeing him, Peter sat up. The instant Peter moved Reddy saw him. Like a red flash he turned and bounded straight toward Peter. He saw that Peter was not near enough to the old stone wall to get there. It looked to him as if this time Peter was to be his.

Peter almost chuckled inside. He waited just an instant as if too frightened to move. He wanted Reddy to be right at his heels when he dived into Johnny Chuck's doorway. That would make it more fun. Reddy was right at his heels. With his eyes rolled back Peter could see Reddy's look of hungry, eager pleasure in the thought of the dinner he was now sure of. And then with a final kick of his long heels Peter dived through the doorway of Johnny Chuck's house and started down the long hall.

Peter would have laughed aloud if he could. He thought himself very smart. He hadn't a fear. No, sir, he hadn't even the shadow of a fear as he dived through the doorway. He would go down that long hall a short distance and there rest comfortably until Reddy grew tired of waiting and went away. And right then Peter bumped his nose! Then Peter did some quick thinking.

ST. GEORGE'S CLASS GIVES ENTERTAINMENT

Songs, Christmas Carols and Dialogues Make Up Interesting Program.

The infant class of St. George's Sunday school, West London, held its annual Christmas tree yesterday afternoon. The entire class of 94 were present at the entertainment and a present had been placed on the tree for each of the kiddies. Following the distribution of the presents a very interesting program was given by the tiny members of the class. The program consisted of songs, Christmas carols and dialogues.

As the children left the tables after supper each one was given oranges and candy. The teachers of the class are Mrs. J. Dean, Miss Bowles and Mrs. W. R. Kennedy. The following ladies also helped in the entertainment of the kiddies: Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Kingsmill, Mrs. Stinchcomb, Mrs. Wood, Mrs. Norton, Mrs. Gregg, Miss English, Miss Winnifred Brown, Miss M. Bowels, Mr. T. A. Andrews, superintendent of the Sunday school, and members of the men's club also helped.

FORMER WIFE'S ATTITUDE IMPELS TO MURDER, SUICIDE

St. Paul, Dec. 30.—Crazed because his attempts at reconciliation had failed, Frank Hoffman, 19, shot and killed his former wife and then turned the shotgun on himself and ended his life here last night.

Three children, ranging from eight to eleven years of age, witnessed the shooting. The Hoffmans were divorced Oct. 9. Five children survive.
