THE PROPOSED MONUMENT.

The proposal to erect a monument to John Frederick Young who lost his life on Thursday, while heroically attempting to save the life of another, is one which will meet with the instant approval of the people of this city. We are glad that in this matter his worship the mayor has so well voiced the general sentiment and taken the lead in a matter in which every person in St. John should feel a deep interest. St. John has had its heroes in times past whom it delighted to honor, but none of them have been of quite the same calibre as the hero of Courtenay Bay. St. John crowds have shouted themselves hoarse over the prowess of champion oarsmen and base ball players and it is cheering to find that there are other achievements besides winning a boat race or taking part in a base ball match [illegible] can win distinc[illegible] "Rafferty, the [illegible] invincibles, may [illegible] man Governor Tilley [illegible] shouting multitude [illegible] curves, but when a real [illegible] John Frederick Young appears [illegible] the scene his glory becomes dim. There is no man, however ignorant or however deficient in that quality himself, who does not admire courage, and when to that courage is linked, unselfish devotion to duty, as was the case with the young hero, whose death we lament, it is proper that our admiration for his brave deed should be expressed in a permanent form. The GAZETTE will cheerfully contribute itself, and do its utmost in other ways to forward the object set forth in the letter of the mayor, and we have no doubt the response of the public will be prompt and hearty.

THE FURNESS LINE.

We observe that Schofield & Co., agents for the Furness Line in this city, have addressed a letter to the Common Council in which they state that the Furness Line contemplates almost immediately increasing the number of their steamers in the service between St. John and London, in anticipation of enlarged business in connexion with the C. P. R. but that in order to develop this business it will be absolutely necessary that suitable facilities be provided at Sand Point, Carleton, and that there should be better accommodation on this side of the harbor for the increased city business. This is certainly a reasonable request and it should be met by the common council in a proper spirit. The present wharf accommodation given to the Furness Line on this side of the harbor is by no means what is required. The wharf at which their steamers lie has no railway upon it so that it is not available for goods which have to be forwarded to distant points and the warehouse is very insufficient and unsuitable besides being too far from the front of the wharf. The common council ought at once to provide a good warehouse for this wharf and they should take steps to have it connected with the Intercolonial Railway. The Dominion government is ready to do its part of this work so that it only remains for the common council to proceed. As to terminal facilities on the other side of the harbor, these would already have been ready if the Leary scheme had been adopted for that provided for more than half a mile of deep water wharves with suitable warehouses sufficient to contain many thousands of tons of freight. If the Sand Point property is to be transferred to the C. P. R., it must only be on condition that facilities are provided for such steamships as the Furness Line, the least that will suffice being 700 feet of deep water wharf front at Sand Point with the necessary warehouses and railway connexion. No doubt the common council will see that the necessary facilities are provided for the Furness Line.

THE POPE'S ENCYCLICAL.

His holiness, the pope, has issued another encyclical letter, in which he complains grieviously of the conduct of the Italian government. He predicts a great religious war as a result of the lack of harmony, between the Italian officials and the true Italian catholic church, and he expresses the opinion that the king of Italy ought to leave Rome and take his court with him, giving that city back to the pope, so that he may exercise temporal authority there as he did prior to the year of 1870. It is not likely that King Humbert will be much moved by this appeal, or that he will be greatly disturbed by the prediction of a religious war. It seems to us that the greater number of wars that have taken place in the world have been due to attempts to mix up religion and politics, even the Crimean war having its origin in a dispute in regard to the custody of the holy sepulchre. The Italian government may not be quite as perfect as it might be, but every one admits that the state of Rome is much better now than it was under the dominion of the popes. Nor is there any reason why the pope should not live at the Vatican in peace and harmony with the inmates of the Quirinal. We believe that it is best for the interests of all, not less for those of the Catholic church than for those of the world at large, that the temporal power of the pope should be abolished, and we do not think there is any nation which would draw the sword to have it restored. The people of Italy, certainly, are better satisfied to be ruled by their King and parliament than by a conclave of cardinals, and the great catholic powers, Austria and France, are not likely to do anything to interfere with King Humbert's policy in this respect.

NOTE AND COMMENT.

We are glad to see the Rev. Mr. Macneil and other clergymen denouncing bribery and the use of money in elections from the pulpit. Mr. Macneil's language yesterday on this subject was none too strong for the occasion. The corrupt use of money is the clamant evil of the day in Canada and it must be put down.

The Toronto Empire calls attention to the interesting fact that the head quarters of the Grit party has been transferred to 314 Broadway from which campaign literature is being issued under the signature of Erastus Wiman. It must be rather humiliating to those Liberals who still retain their patriotism to find that their party is being run from a foreign country and by a man who is an avowed annexationist.

The Chatham World says:—

The St. John papers ought to be ashamed to chronicle the sad drowning accident of which we give the Sun's account in another column. Fred Young, it seems was allowed to die, a few yards from the shore, when nothing but a rope was needed to save him. He was three-quarters of an hour clinging to a life buoy, within sight of hundreds, and no one has the courage and ability to get a rope to him! It is a most extraordinary story of cowardice or incompetency. If there had been one resourceful and energetic man in the crowd the lad would not have been drowned.

We believe this censure to be undeserved. The persons who witnessed the accident did their best to save the young hero, and their failure can only be attributed to lack of appliances and the heavy sea which prevailed and in which no common boat could live.

DISS DEBAR.

The High Priestess Makes Her Home in Brooklyn.

(Brooklyn Eagle.)

The long haired, wild eyed fraternity and the vision beholding sisterhood of Brooklyn will be gratified to learn that Princess Ann O'Delia Diss Debar, arch priestess of witchcraft and sorcery, whose exploits have been heralded all over the world, is in Brooklyn and gives the most cordial assurance of her intention to make the city of churches her home.

The fact was made known to-day through a modest card among the clairvoyant's advertisements in the Eagle that the great priestess would hereafter give sittings from 10 to 4 daily at 106 Carlton avenue.

When a reporter called at this house, which is a shabby, three story frame structure, just below Myrtle avenue, there was a protracted delay before the door opened to his ring. A very slight noise overhead drew the attention of the visitor to a gray head, with a pair of piercing eyes, which was withdrawn a fraction of a second too late to escape the glance from below. A moment later the door opened and a short, stout woman asked what was wanted. She said she was the lady of the house, and her name was Brown, and after a little hesitation and curious inspection of her caller admitted that Diss Debar was stopping at the house. The latter, however, could not be seen before next week, Mrs. Brown declared. When the representation was made, however, that it was of the utmost importance that an interview with the priestess should be secured, the woman retired a few moments and then ushered the reporter into the presence of a very large woman, clothed in a flowing black robe and with her hair combed straight back from her face, sitting at a table which was covered with manuscript. The clairvoyant welcomed the reporter with a witching smile. Miss Debar, it will be remembered, has been entirely out of the public view since the dramatic exposure of her identity on shipboard while she was coming to this country disguised as a nun, after creating a sensation in Paris and Rome. She got to America, she told the reporter, about four months ago, and went to California to look after some property given her by Lola Montez. Returning here she located with very dear friends and has been in this city for some time. It was only at the solicitation of her friends that she consented to give sittings thus early. She is negotiating, she declares, for a house on Vanderbilt avenue and will certainly make Brooklyn her home. Among her friends she mentioned a Mr. Nealand, a politician, whose business she looks after by clairvoyancy.

The priestess declared that she intended to wage a relentless war against Archbishop Corrigan, to whom she devoted a merciless excoriation. She denounced him as an imposter and a scoundrel and various other things.

"I am still a good Catholic, no matter what is said about me," she continued, "and this" (pointing to a decoration on her portly breast), "was given to me by the pope himself. I am the only woman in the world that has ever been honored with such a present."

Diss Debar concluded by inviting the reporter to submit himself to her spook process and with a low bow ushered him from the room. She talked with great fluency and clearness and characterized as an infamous outrage "the attempt of the bar of New York to debar Diss Debar," from the practice of her profession in the "celebrated lawyer Marsh case."

Minnesota's Fighting Twins.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Oct. 25.—A St. Paul paper prints a two column article in which it claims that the weekly bank clearances of Minneapolis are padded from $1,000,000 to $3,000,000 to give the city a ficitiious business importance. It purports to show the clearances for Minneapolis for the past seven weeks are $13,000,000 greater than at the same period last year, while the increased receipts for flour, wheat, lumber and real estate, the dealings in which comprise practically all the business of the Flour City, had increased but $4,000,000.

Then as a clincher the paper takes the clearings for the week ending October 3 from the Market Record, the commercial paper of Minneapolis, in which the daily exchanges were given and footed up for the week as $6,296,371, but these returns it says were sent out to the country as $8,296,371, padded exactly $2,000,000.

Fishery officer fired at. Special officer Noble, while on duty at Bay du Vin river, the other night, watching salmon pools, was fired on by unknown persons. Mr. Noble strongly suspects certain poachers of having made a target of him.

Last evening a countryman went to one of our public houses for his supper. TOLD OF FAMOUS MEN.

Curious Incidents Handed Down About Every-Day Heroes.

Some of the great Generals whose names are familiar to us have a wonderful power of sleeping for a few moments even on the battle-field. The Duke of Wellington, just before the attack on St. Sebastian, in Spain, found that the breaching batteries would not be ready to open the attack for two hours.

"The best thing we can do," he said, "is to sleep," and slipping off his horse into a trench, he was asleep in an instant.

Napoleon, at the very crisis of the important battle of Wagram, ordered up his reserve, which he never did except in great emergencies. Confident that the movement would be carried out and would insure the victory, he ordered his bear-skin to be placed on the ground and in a moment he was in deep asleep. He slept for twenty minutes and his staff began to be alarmed, but waking he issued further orders without asking any questions, as if he had not slept.

Lord Chesterfield was universally regarded as one of the most polished gentlemen in the English court in the last century. His manners were faultless, and the grace of his bearing was inimitable. But he gives a comical account of the first party he attended. He was thoroughly uncomfortable, knowing neither what to do or to say. At length growing desperate, and feeling that something must be done, he addressed a beautiful lady near by, and added force to the question, by energetically clasping both hands.

"Madam don't you find it very warm to-night?"

It was not a very promising beginning for the man who became the first wit of his age.

A curious incident is handed down from the boyish life of Schiller. One day, in a tremendous thunder-storm, the family gathered together in ill-disguised terror. But Fritz was missing, and the father, alarmed for his safety, sought him in vain in all the rooms of the house.

He went out doors to search for the truant, and, to his surprise, found him perched on a branch of a solitary tree, eagerly watching the heavens and the flashes which lighted up the gloom. He was wholly indifferent to the rain, which had wet him to the skin, and to the danger he incurred. To the sharp reproofs of his father the boy replied, with a glowing face:

"The lightning is so beautiful that I wished to see where it came from."

An amusing anecdote is told of an adventure between the boy Curran, who became a celebrated Irish orator and a mastiff. "I had heard some body say that any person throwing the skirts of his coat over his head, stooping low, holding out his arms and creeping along backward, might frighten the fiercest dog and put him to flight. I accordingly made the trial upon a miller's dog in the neighborhood, who would never let the boys rob the orchard. I found, to my sorrow that I had a dog to deal with who did not care which end of the boy went forward, so as he could get a good bite out of it,

"I pursued my instructions," said Curran, and as I had no eyes except those in front, I encired the mastiff was in full retreat; but I was greatly mistaken, for at that moment I thought myself victorious the enemy attacked my rear, got a reasonably good mouthful out of it and was fully prepared to take another before I was rescued. I thought for a time the beast had devoured my entire centre of gravity and that I should never go on a steady perpendicular again."

Historians always stop to describe the dying of Wolfe and Montcalm, the two opposing cammanders in the battle of Quebec. But their deaths were simply heroic compared with the Christian death of Stonewall Jackson.

About 1.30 on the day of his death he was told that he had about two hours to live, and he answered feebly, but firmly, "Very good; it is all right."

A few moments before he died he cried out in his delirum; "Order A. P. Hill to prepare for action. Pass the infantry to the front rapidly. Tell Major Hawks"—then stopped, leaving the sentence unfinished.

Presently a smile of ineffable sweetness spread itself over his pale face and then he said quietly and with an expression of relief, "Let us cross over the river and rest under the shades of the trees." And then without a pain or the least struggle, his spirit passed away.

Probably Mozart was the greatest musical genius the world ever saw, and some of the stories told of his precocity seem almost supernatural. At four he could retain in memory the brilliant solocos in the concerotes which he had heard, and his father began half in sport to give him lessons. The musical faculty seems to have been intuitive in him; for in learning to play he learned to compose at the same time; his own nature dictating to him some important secrets in melody, rhythm, symmetry, and the art of setting a bass.

To learn a minuet he required half an hour; a longer piece an hour and having once mastered them he played them with perfect neatness and in exact time. His progress was so great that at four years of age, or earlier, he composed little pieces which his father wrote down for him. "Later, "In music he astonished his teacher, not so much by an avidity for his information as by the impossibility of telling him anything that he did not know before. At the age of six Mozart knew the effect of sounds as represented by notes, and had overcome the difficulty of composing unaided by an instrument. Having commenced composition, with recourse to the clavior, his powers in musical music constantly increased, and he soon imagined effects of which the original type existed in his brain."

The Earl of Chesterfield was called the first gentleman of his age. It was a cardinal point of etiquette with him never to exhibit ill temper in company or to be remiss in courtesy to any guest. But he was sometimes sorely tried by the rude and awkward manners of his son, Philip Stanhope, whom he tried in vain to educate to gentlemanly habits.

Philip was a great glutton and could not restrain his appetite even in company. On one occasion, when his father had invited a large number of titled guests, an elegant entertainment was provided. One of these rare dishes was a platter of baked gooseberries, snowed over with rich cream. Philip had been helped bountifully by Lady Chesterfield who knew his weakness. But when a servant was taking out the dish in clearing the table, Philip beckoned to him, and taking it in his hand began to lay into it by the rich cream. Lord Chesterfield was disgusted, but without change of face or voice to indicate the tempest within said in a calm tone to the servant;

"John, why do you not fetch a strop and razor, you see your master is going to shave himself?"

Philip' greedines was checked for that meal.

An Instructive Fish Story.

The following incident might be used with much advantage to bring confusion upon those who deny the theories of Darwin regarding the ability of various species to adapt themselves to their environment. What here happened in a single instance might readily occur on a much grander scale in the history of development of our innumerable species. A certain young man, both an eager reader of Darwin and an acute observer of nature, residing for a few months in a small fishing village, and wishing to apply his theories to test the limit of adaptability of at least one species to its environment, obtained a herring from the bay near which he resided. This herring he placed in a tub of sea water and took it to his house. Every day this water was changed and its amount gradually lessened, till at last the tub was empty and the fish apparently quite reconciled to its new conditions. Placed upon the ground the herring floundered about for some time, but in the course of a few days its locomotion, though not very graceful, became quite easy and rapid. Soon, too, it began to follow its master in his strolls around the village. All went well, and the result was truly marvellous; till one day the herring followed its master over a very dilapidated foot-bridge, when jumping for a fly, of which it had become very fond, and in catching which it was an adept, careless of its surroundings, it lost its balance, fell over the bridge into the water beneath, and, sad to relate, was drowned. The inevitable conclusion is that sudden changes of environment alone interfere with the existence of the species.

DR. HARTLEY IN TROUBLE.

A clergyman Charged with Being in Company with a Female of disreputable Character Near Midnight.

(Amherst Press.)

Presiding Elder Crosby of the Nova Scotia Conference of the A. M. E. church, pastor of Zion Church, Halifax, who it is remembered served his term of three years in Amherst, held a court of trial yesterday to investigate certain charges preferred against Rev. Dr. Hartley. The charges were, a too great attention to literary pursuits and a too great neglect of ministerial duties. A too great a leaning towards Episcopalianism, together with attempts to transfer the church and membership to that fold. An apathy to the Temperance work, manifested by continued absence from Lodge Meetings. A too dominant air, and autocratic demeanour. Conduct unbecoming a minister, being seen at 11 p. m., on Saturday, in a remote locality with a female of questionable character, and also for prevarication, having stated on his arrival in Amherst, that his wife was in Fredericton, and would shortly follow him. And again, having further stated that he sent her passage money of five dollars, and that she would be here in a week's time. And again, on the week of the St. John exhibition, having stated that he would have to leave Amherst for three reasons, to see the exhibition, to see his friends, Mr. and Mrs. Tripp of Trinidad, to attend as a vice-president to the 2nd convention of the Prohibition Party, and to ship a stone for his mother's grave, from St. John to Port of Spain, per monthly steamer, and also to bring his wife with him, notwithstanding which promise, he returned without her.

The Presiding Elder ruled that he could in his capacity as Episcopal Delegate suspend, or entirely depose a preacher against whose fair name or administration, faults had been made. He would not however, assume so great a responsibility, especially when dealing with such a Presbyter, as Dr. Hartley.

The Dr. at this stage, rose to his feet, and questioned the jurisdiction of the present court, affirming that a Presbyter, he could only be tried by a board of presbyters and not merely by a Presiding Elder. He refused specifically to reply to the charges or to rebut the allegations. He could stand on his antecedents. The Presiding Elder, thought he ought in common justice to Presbyter Hartley, the present Secretary of N. S. Conference to state that his record in the church in the past, was beyond gainsays, that he did not conspire against the interests of Methodism to the advantage of Episcopalianism. That his attention to literary work was the outcome of his well-known culture. That his absence from temperance meetings was phenomonal and must have been caused by reasons satisfactory to himself. That his general behavior was rather marked by Christian humility than by arrogance That it was impossible for him to be seen under suspicious circumstances on Saturday at 11 p. m., as he did not leave St. John till 10.30 p. m., arriving here on Sunday morning. That, in relation to prevarication, Presbyter Hartley undoubtedly meant all he said, and said all he did with a purpose true. He no doubt expected his wife had gone to Fredericton, and was not to be blamed if she remained in St. John, and did not follow him immediately as he expected, and so also if, when he sent her passage money, she did not come and also did not care to leave St. John during exhibition time, it was his misfortune and not his fault. The reverend brother told him on his arrival here, that his wife would soon come and he knew he fully and anxiously expected her, hence if she kept postponing and finally did not come, he ought not to be blamed. Dr. Hartley as a Methodist preacher, grave and solemn, was above prevarication or double dealing.

He would however exercise his authority and remove the Dr. from Amherst to another charge.

The Dr. then stated that he would save all further trouble, by at once tendering his resignation of the church here to the Presiding Elder, and would not accept any other charge, this resolve he would at once telegraph to Bishop Tanner, in Philadelphia.

DYSPEPSIA IN FASHIONABLE.

Prevalence and Cause of the Disease in High Society.

Nervous prostration is no longer the fashionable disease. It is dyspepsia, and Princess Maud of Wales has it. Her distinguished papa ordered her to Vichy for treatment, and now everybody has dyspepsia. and everybody is drinking Vichy. Nothing else is called for at the uptown soda-fountains, and for a time the druggists couldn't account for the sudden popularity of the German water.

There is a very exclusive physical-culture club in one of the cross streets, just off Fifth avenue, patronized by the wives and daughters of a 400-set but not, the 400.' These ladies pay $40 for membership, and the expenses for alcohol and salt baths applied by hand, for massage, shampoos, perfumery sprays refreshments, and maid service amounts to $25, making the cost about $75, including the uniform. Now when a member applies for admission and is received she is denuded, weighed, measured and throughly examined, the physical investigation including the best part of the family history. The book in which this record is kept is sacred to the house physician and medical board, but it is a fact, obtained from the very best authority, that 99 per cent. of these fashionable and athletic ladies are suffering from indigestion.

When one of the doctors was asked for the cause he said; "Tight dresses and laziness. Women don't lace any more then they used to, but their dresses are so tight they not only cannot digest their food properly, but are unable to breath correctly.

"At home these tight dresses are laid aside, but the women are actually too lazy to take the exercise that might overcome the bad influences of a tight waist and choking collar. The little girls are born dyspeptics, but after the fourth year or so the malady is overcome by outdoor life and activity, only to be regained when the coming out season arrives.' This is a plain talk. It is also truth.

Purify The importance of keeping the blood in a pure condition is universally known, and yet there are very few people who have perfectly pure blood. The taint of scrofula, salt rheum, or other foul humor is heredited and transmitted for generations, causing untold suffering, and we also accumulate poison and germs of disease from the air we breathe, the food we eat, or the water we drink. There is nothing more conclusively proven than the positive power of Hood's Sarsaparilla over all diseases of the blood. This medicine, when fairly tried, does expel every trace of scrofula or salt rheum, removes the taint which causes catarrh, neutralizes the acidity and cures rheumatism, drives out the germs of malaria, blood poisoning, etc. It also vitalizes and enriches the blood, thus overcoming that tired feeling, and building up the whole system. Thousands testify to the superiority of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a blood purifier. Full information and statements of cures sent free.
