BRONCHITIS CAN BE CURED

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup Will Do It.

Bronchitis is generally the result of a cold caused by inclement weather or exposure to wet, and is a very dangerous inflamatory affection of the bronchial tubes.

The symptoms are tightness across the chest, sharp pains and difficulty in breathing, and a secretion of thick phlegm at first white, but later of a greenish or yellowish color.

Neglected Bronchitis is one of the most general causes of consumption, so cure it at once by the use of

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup

Mrs. S. Fidder, Linton's, N. B., writes: "I feel it my duty to let you know of my experience with Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. My little girl was very low with Bronchitis and our doctor did all in his power for her, but could only give her relief for a short time. My husband saw your medicine advertised, and immediatly procured three bottles. I never saw anything give so much relief in so short a time. It stopped the annoying cough at night and she is now perfectly cured. I am so glad I can hardly express my gratitude for what Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup has done for us."

Price 25 cents at all dealers.

EVELYN THAW NOW IN JEROME'S HANDS

tended re-direct examination, and this together with Mr. Jerome's cross-examination on the re-direct, promises to keep the prisoner's wife on the witness stand for an indefinite period. Mrs. Thaw seemed perfectly self-possessed at every stage of the cross-examination. At times her voice trembled perceptibly but almost always it was clear and emphatic. She fenced with the prosecutor continually, corrected him at times as to assumptions drawn from previous answers, and occasionally told him his questions were entirely too long to permit of a proper answer. The young woman seemed to be swayed by the district attorney's mood. When his voice was soft and purring, and perhaps a bit insinuating, she answered in the same low tone. When Mr. Jerome would become aroused and snap questions at her in a loud voice, she replied in kind. When the prosecutor would persist with a question she had answered two or three times, Mrs. Thaw would finally reply with an emphasis on each word speaking slowly, distinctly and defiantly.

The defendant was always alert to catch every word. He seemed impatient at times at some of the questions put by the prosecutor and kept up a running fire of whispered comment with his attorneys.

There was a great rush of curious persons to see Evelyn Nesbit Thaw under the ordeal of cross-examination at the criminal courts building this morning, but only those provided with special credentials were permitted to enter the room where the trial of Harry K. Thaw for the murder of Stanford White is in progress. Even under these restrictions every available seat was occupied as the court convened.

Among the spectators were L. M. Kettle, of Glesnevin, Ireland, and Richard Hazelton, of Black Rock, Ireland, both members of the British parliament, representing respectively East Tyrone and North Galway.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw was immediately recalled that Mr. Jerome might continue his cross-examination. Her face was slightly flushed as she took her place in the witness chair with her usual little smile at her husband.

Mr. Delmas moved his chair inside the rail and seated himself beside the witness box. When Mrs. Thaw saw him she smiled faintly and then turned her eyes to District Attorney Jerome who sat before her. The latter began by showing Mrs. Thaw a photograph of herself taken in a kimona and asked if she could recall the date of the picture.

"I think it was taken in 1904."

"Where did you live after your return from Europe in 1904 until the time of your marriage?"

Mrs. Thaw gave eight or nine addresses.

Mr. Jerome by his next few questions indicated that he did not in any way intend to spare the feelings of the young woman. He interrogated her sharply as to the details of her dress when she was posing for artists in Philadelphia and New York. He persisted in certain questions even after Mr. Delmas had objected, and insisted on having definite answers, though Mrs. Thaw usually said she couldn't remember.

"Was there any exposure of the person or did you wear the so-called artistic draperies?"

"I couldn't say that," replied the witness. "I posed in a Greek dress and a Turkish costume."

Mr. Jerome persisted with questions as to the exposure of the person and Mrs. Thaw replied:

"I posed with low neck draperies after I was on the stage."

"The pictures were like those ordinarily seen in photographers' windows?"

Mr. Delmas objected to this, and District Attorney Jerome withdrew the question.

Mrs. Thaw testified that she and her mother first lived in West 38th street and her first employment was in the Floradora Company. She took a photo of herself to the Broadway magazine and it was published over the name of Evelyn Florado. Reporters were given other pictures by her mother. She acknowledged meeting and corresponding with Ted Marks, a vaudeville manager. She said she visited a warehouse with Lawyers Warren and Hartridge but did not remove any letters.

Mr. Jerome here turned to the story Mrs. Thaw told her husband and the witness again declared it was true.

"How long were you unconscious in that 24th street house at the time of your experience with Stanford White?"

"I don't remember."

"Was it after midnight that you became unconscious?"

"Yes, I think it was."

"Was it before daylight?"

Mrs. Thaw hesitated. "Yes, before daylight."

Mr. Jerome read from Mrs. Thaw's direct testimony that she sat up all that night.

She replied that she meant the rest of the night after she had been taken home.

"There was nothing to show that your mother was willing to sacrifice you for a pecuniary consideration?"

"No." (Indignantly.)

"In all the troubles that you went through you never thought anything but that your mother lacked judgment?"

"No."

"What were in the letters Ted Marks wrote you?"

"He said he had seen my pictures in those papers and would like to place me on the stage."

"When did you first become ambitious to become a great actress?"

"Before I went to Philadelphia."

"Then when you came to New York you already had this ambition?"

"Yes."

"How long were you with Marks that Sunday evening?"

"I don't remember; I remember going to a restaurant with Mr. Marks, but I don't know whether it was night."

Mr. Jerome asked what Mrs. Nesbit thought about her daughter going on the stage.

"Mamma said I ought not to go without her," replied the witness.

"At this time did you know Francis Belmont?"

"No."

"Or Edna Goodrich?"

"No."

"Or James A. Garland?"

"No."

Mr. Jerome next asked about a man named Hooper Hopley. He wanted to know if he had not lived at the same house with her.

"Not while I lived there," she said positively.

"Have you seen him since 1901?"

"I may have passed him on the street."

"I don't mean that."

"No," with a stamp of her foot.

"Who introduced you to White?"

"Edna Goodrich."

"Where did you meet Miss Goodrich?"

"She was playing in Floradora."

"When she introduced you to White that was the first time you had been anywhere with her?"

"Yes."

"During the time you were in the Floradora company had you ever been out?"

"Yes."

"With whom?"

"With mamma and Mr. Garland."

"Where did you meet him?"

"At the boarding house in 38th street."

"Did you ever write any letters to him?"

"I don't remember. I might have."

Mrs. Thaw said her mother was pleased with Mr. Garland's attentions and that she and her mother went yachting with him Saturdays.

"It is not true," went on Mr. Jerome, reading from a paper, "that in 1901 you were getting unruly; that your mother still stuck by you; that a married man, ..., paid attentions to you?"

At this point Mr. Delmas objected to Mr. Jerome reading from what he termed a statement by Evelyn Thaw's mother.

"If the district attorney wants the mother's testimony he should produce her on the stand," he said.

"I'd like to, but you know that it is impossible. You know where she is," said Mr. Jerome.

The question regarding Evelyn becoming unruly was allowed to stand.

"No," she answered decidedly.

"Is it not true that that married man was Jas. A. Garland, and that he was getting a divorce and that you and your mother frequently quarrelled about him?"

"No, indeed." (Indignantly.)

"Is it not true that you went alone with him on the yacht?"

"Mamma and I, yes."

An objection as to the question whether she had been co-respondent in Garland's divorce suit was sustained.

After more questions regarding her association with Garland—"Did George W. Lederer have anything to do with your going into the Floradora cast?"

"Not that I know of."

"During this time did you ever pose for an artist in the nude?"

"Never."

"Ever have any casts made in the nude?"

"No."

"Did you not, in 1901, have such a cast made?"

"No."

She had never heard of Mr. Wells, a sculptor. Her acquaintance with Garland closed when she met White.

"Isn't it true that Garland became annoying when you lived at a certain apartment house, and your mother got the telephone girl to refuse to send up his card?"

"No."

"Did your mother meet you every evening at the theatre?"

"Yes, except when White came."

During the morning session when Mr. Jerome was questioning the witness as to the whereabouts of certain letters from White, Thaw leaned over and was heard to whisper to his counsel: "Stanford White stole them; that's where they are."

After the recess Mrs. Thaw identified several pictures of herself as having been taken at the 22nd street studio when she was there with White all day being photographed. That was the day before her experience in the mirrored room. Some of these were additional copies of the famous pictures in which, dressed in a kimona, she posed on a white bear skin. Mrs. Thaw whispered to Mr. Jerome the name of the man supposed to have owned the studio. Mr. Jerome exhibited the photos freely.

"None of the photographs were suggestive of any more impropriety than these?" he asked.

"There were some in a low neck dress."

"Are you quite sure that you posed in low necked draperies that day?"

"Yes."

"Were they improper?"

"They were very low necked."

"You said this morning there was no exposure of the person?"

"White had some pictures put into a book and he gave me the book.

"You have that book?"

"Yes."

"Will you bring that book here tomorrow?

"Yes."

"How many photographs were taken that day?"

"I don't know."

"Where were you living in May, 1902?"

"At the Wellington hotel."

"Except yourself and your mother, whose names were the same, was there another Evelyn Florence Nesbit in that hotel?"

"Not that I know of."

You were then receiving checks from time to time?"

"Yes."

"Isn't that check in the customary form of the checks you received?"

Mr. Delmas objected that this was not proper cross-examination, and Mr. Jerome replied that it was to test the credibility of the witness, as he intended to show that she knew where the funds were coming from. The question was asked in various ways, but Mrs. Thaw could not remember. Mr. Jerome read seven checks to the jury. They were dated from Aug. 1 to Oct. 1. Four were for $30 each and three for $50. They were drawn by the Mercantile Trust Company, and all were endorsed "Evelyn Florence Nesbit."

"While you were living at the Wellington were you not entitled and did you not draw $25 a week when you were not playing?"

"Yes."

"Were you entitled to any more than $25 a week?"

"I don't know."

"Who furnished the money?"

"Stanford White."

"When you were out of employment in 1902 didn't you always inform Mr. Hartnett, Stanford White's secretary?"

"I don't know."

"Well, you got the $25 a week when you were not acting, didn't you?"

"Yes."

"That was the stipend Stanford White provided."

"Yes."

Mrs. Thaw also identified the indorsements on sixteen other checks as in her handwriting. Each check was for $25. One of the checks bore the endorsement of "Mrs. W. S. Nesbit," and another the endorsement of Mrs. E. F. Nesbitt, in addition to the signature of Evelyn Florence Nesbit.

After reading the receipts to the jury, Mr. Jerome turned once more to the witness and said:

"Wasn't this money received by you in pursuance of an agreement by which you were to receive from Stanford White $25 a week when you were not acting?"

"That is too long a question," pouted Mrs. Thaw.

"I'll break it up for you. Was not there an understanding by which you were to receive $25 of Stanford White's money every week you were not acting?"

"Understanding with whom?" Mrs. Thaw queried.

"With anybody?" snapped the district-attorney.

"I don't know."

"Who do you think was putting up this money for you?"

Mr. Jerome spoke in a tone of exasperation.

"Stanford White," said Mrs. Thaw emphatically.

"Now, weren't you told you could only draw this money when you were not working?"

"I don't remember any such definite statement."

"What were you told?"

"I was told that some money had been put in the Mercantile Trust Company, and when I needed it I could draw on it when we were back in the rent."

"Were you not told that you could draw certain sums only when you were not working?" Mr. Jerome insisted.

"I do not remember."

The district-attorney also showed the witness a check and a receipt and asked:

"Don't these refresh your memory as to the conditions?"

"No, sir."

"Did you believe Stanford White when he told you all women were bad and some were simply clever at concealing it?" asked Mr. Jerome.

"Yes."

"You believed all women unchaste?"

"Yes."

"And you were just 16 3-4 years old?"

"I don't know that I was 16 3-4 exactly—I was 16."

"How old were you when you went to Europe in 1903?"

"Eighteen."

"So you say that, until you were 18 1-2 years old you believed all women with whom you were associated—that all women were unchaste and that some had simply been unfortunate enough to be found out?"

"Yes."

"Were you ever instructed in the scriptures—the Bible?"

"Slightly."

"Did you ever attend church?"

"Slightly."

"Did you ever attend Sunday school?"

"Slightly."

"What denomination?"

"I don't remember—I went to a Methodist church, I think, and to a Presbyterian church, and once to a German church of some sort."

"In rejecting Thaw in Paris had you anything in mind other than your own unworthiness?"

"No."

"Did you consider yourself different or better than other women?"

"No, sir."

"Or worse?"

"No, sir."

"Do you recall the state of the weather the day you had the experience with Stanford White?"

"No, sir."

"Do you recall the day of the week?"

"No, sir."

"The day of the month?"

"No, sir."

"Have you ever seen Abe Hummel since the day you saw the affidavit burned in his office?"

"Yes."

"Where?"

"I think it was at some sort of a theatrical benefit."

"Was it the children's Christmas festival?"

"Yes, I think so."

"Who were you with?"

"With a gentleman, a friend of Mr. Thaw's."

"Were you and this gentleman not the guests of Mr. Hummel at supper in the committee room after the performance?"

"Mr. Hummel was at the table. I did not know I was his guest."

"Were you not his guest at supper?"

"I did not eat any supper."

"Didn't you sit down at the table and drink champagne as Abe Hummel's guest?"

"I sat down at a table where he was and drank some champagne, but I did not know I was his guest. I thought I was the guest of the gentleman I was with."

Mrs. Thaw spoke each word with emphasis and in a tone of defiance.

"Did you converse with Mr. Hummel?"

"Sightly."

"When did you first see Mr. Hummel?"

"In 1902 when Stanford White took me to his office."

"Before or after your trip to Europe?"

"After."

Mr. Jerome introduced the register of the Hotel Savoy, showing that Evelyn Nesbit arrived there Oct. 24, 1903. Mrs. Thaw said the signature on the register—Evelyn Nesbit, Paris—was in her handwriting, but the words "and maid" were not.

Mr. Jerome then asked a number of questions in an effort to show when White first visited the witness after her return from Europe in 1903, and when she went to Hummel's office she could give no exact date but thought it was at least four days after her return before she saw White on the street, and he called her up on the telephone.

"Your great love for Mr. Thaw could not have been crushed in less than four days, could it?" asked Mr. Jerome.

"No, sir."

At this stage an adjournment was taken until 10.30 tomorrow morning.
