CRUMBS OF COMFORT

FOR THE SINGLE LADIES OF ANYWHERE!

Affectionately Presented to them

BY THE MARRIED LADIES OF SOMEWHERE!

We're married! we're married! and find, O ye fair,
Our castles of happiness built but in air!
They were guarded by Cupids, who promised to stay
Yet on Hymen's arrival, the rogues fled away!
Our stores of felicity are but a joke!
And the bright torch of Hymen has ended in smoke!
'Tis true we no longer dread people should say,
"Do look at that 'Old Maid' just over the way!"
But it's still more appalling for some one to sigh,
And remark "how neglected is poor Mrs I.
That sweet Mrs A makes an excellent wife,
But her husband's so cross, she is weary of life,
What a warm, ardent lover was handsome young B.,
When he courted the rich, and accomplished Miss T
They were married last year, and his plain the connexion
Has brought his regard for her Cash to perfection.
Sir John is delightful, his smiles are so bland,
How envied the woman who gave him her hand,
With this bright constellation abroad she may roam,
But a total eclipse shrouds his radiance at home."
SILLY THINGS! we won't think that these Lords of Creation,
Who, when single, behold us with such admiration,
Who swear and who vow their existence depends
On a look! on a word! that they'd compass the ends
Of the world to procure us a moment's repose,
Will, as soon as we marry 'em, turn up their nose
At our tears, our entreaties, and look on our grief
With a stoic philosophy, passing belief!
Yes, the gay cavalier, the gallant single man,
Who so kindly accepts all "invites" that he can,
Who eats Papa's dinner, and drinks Mamma's tea,
Hands "dear Jane" to the carriage, and flatters all three,
Will, if caught by a fortune, a figure, or face,
Prove that strange metamorphoses still can take place
For the thousand and one constant, unceasing attentions
Once so freely bestowed, are now quite condescensions;
Superseded by "Here, Mrs. ——, take this seat,
"And just give me the stool which is under your feet!"
The party selected, because she'd be there,
Cards and music neglected to stand by her chair,
Give place to a cavalier, "You'll go to the N——s,"
"Say I'll come if I can, but I promised some friends
To look in after dinner, and then, let me see,
You'll return in the carriage, so cannot want me."
Of presents the lover is always profuse,
But the husband discovers those things are no use.
"I must buy a dress, love, to go to the ball!"
"You must wear what you've got, dear, or not go at all.'
"I'm sure, Mr ——, you can't wish me to stay
"At home, when I'm told that it will be so gay."
"Indeed, Mrs. ——, you may go, or remain,
"It is not of that you will find me complain,
"But as for this dress, you are taking a out,
"I can't spare the money, that's flat, so don't pout!"
"There once was a time, Mr. ——, when you swore
"My wishes should ever"—"Pshaw! Madam, no more!
"That nonsense is over, I've had time to cool.
"Married men soon get tired of playing the fool:
"I've just bought that hunter, those dogs, changed my gun,
And must pay Snip the tailor, that fellow's a dun!
"A little reflection, I'm sure, Mrs. —ash,
"Would show you 'tis selfish to ask now for cash,
"But so thoughtless you are, as I've told you before;
"I would drive any man mad!"—Exit, slamming the door!

Oh! sisters! dear sisters! your liberty prize
In true "single blessedness" stay if you're wise,
Leading Asses by dozens can never compare
With the tortures you'd suffer if led by a bear!
And howe'er you may flatter yourselves, or each other,
You'll find courtship is one thing and wedlock another!

VARIETIES.

STEAM NAVIGATION.—It is a remarkable fact, that, in the United States, since the introduction of Steam Navigation, not less than fifteen hundred persons have lost their lives from the explosion of steam-boilers (according to the authority of Professor Silliman,) a far greater number than have fallen a sacrifice in all the countries of Europe put together. These dreadful accidents do not appear to have originated so much from the use of high pressure engines, which are equally safe under proper superintendence, as from a want of proper attention to the manufacture of boilers. It is also not improbable that the quality of the iron in the United States may be somewhat inferior to the best English or Swedish iron. The fact is, however, sufficiently important to show the great necessity of employing only the very best materials that can be produced in the construction of steam engines, and in no case to allow men to be placed in the highly and fearfully responsible situation of engineers in steam-boats, without similar guarantees as to their practical knowledge and general qualifications to those required by the Trinity Board from persons applying for a Pilots' warrant. The responsibility of an engineer is infinitely greater than that of a pilot, unless we estimate the lives of five hundred persons only at the value of so many tons of merchandize.

Dancing Fish.—In a paper on "Oceanic Dangers," in the United Service Journal, is the following:—There is a species of grampus from two to three tons weight, and about sixteen feet in length, that amuses itself with jumping, or rather springing its ponderous body entirely out of the water, in a vertical position, and falling upon its back; this effort of so large a fish is almost incredible, and informs us how surprisingly great the power of muscle must be in this class of animal. I have seen them spring out of the water within ten yards of the ship's side generally in the evening, after having swam all the former part of the day in the ship's wake, or in either quarter. When several of these fish take it into their heads to dance a "hornpipe," as the sailors have termed their gambols, at the distance of half a mile, they, at or just after sun down, may easily be mistaken for the sharp points of rocks sticking up out of the water, and the splashing and foam they make have the appearance of the action of the waves upon rocks. An officer of the navy informed me, that after sunset, when near the equator, he was not a little alarmed and surprised (because quite unexpected) at the cry of "rocks on the starboard bow;" looking forward through the dubious light, (if the expression may be admitted) he indistinctly saw objects which he and all on board took to be the pinnacles of several rocks of a black and white colour; in a short time, however, he discovered this formidable danger to be nothing more than a company of dancing grampuses with white bellies; as one disappeared, another rose, so that there were at least five or six constantly above the surface!

Two Ways of Seeing.—Rosseau said, that the difference between a learned and a sensible man was this—viz. that a learned man saw every thing behind him, and a sensible man every thing before him.

THE PRESS.—Some of the high and mighty in the House have been pleased to utter a sweeping denunciation against the Press, styling it, "a corrupt and profligate thing," to which they say, they are compelled "to be the slaves." That there is a portion of the Press truckles to the basest purposes, we with sorrow, admit; inventing reports for the benefit of stockjobbers, and veering round to any party that may gain ascendancy. But we ask, who are they that fear the press? Surely not the men proud in the consciousness of their own rectitude—not the men whose opinions are founded on the principles of justice, and the strict regard for the national interests and honour. "The corrupt and profligate thing" cannot tarnish their good name. Fear implies the existence of something rank within, which the searching spirit of the press can drag to light. The bold virtuous dreads it far less than the hypocrite, who vaunts his deeds, is ever suspicious of detection, and painfully affected whenever a doubt of his integrity is implied.

THE PROPERTY TAX.—The first tax on personal property was levied by Henry the Second (whose reign began 1154,) which amounted to two-pence in the pound on the amount of every individual's net effects, after deducting the debts owing, to be verified on oath; and one penny for the four following years. This tax was afterwards raised to one-tenth part of all personal property, as, in 1188, intelligence had been received that Jerusalem had been taken by the Sultan of Egypt.

The Deccan Prize Money.—A banquet was given a short time ago by a certain noble Duke, to which was invited, among the rest, an old officer, who was a large claimant for some portion of the Deccan Prize Money. On the removal of the cloth, and after the glass had been pretty freely circulated, solving enigmas became the order of the evening. When it came to the noble host's turn to propose one, he "brought out" the following:—"What is that which did not come last year—has not come this year—and will not come next year?" The guests were all posed; not one could untie the Duke's Gordian knot, until the old officer, (before alluded to,) rising from his chair, and furiously striking the table with his clenched fists, until "glasses and decanters chattered again," vociferously bawled out, in the ear of his host, "'Tis the Deccan Prize Money, by ——!" The Duke "looked unutterable things," and enigma-solving was dropped for the remainder of the evening. It is whispered that "Parliamentary Reform" was the solution intended to be given by the proposer of the enigma. The old officer, however, appears to have been nearer the mark.

PUNCH.—A Frenchman, in his recently published "Tour through England," remarks that, "punch in all shapes is a great favorite with the English:—punch is his favourite liquor—punch his favourite entertainment—and a punch on the head his favourite argument."

The Latin for a hired horse?—Hac.

How would you express your disapprobation of an actor in Latin?—His.

What would you say in Latin, if you were puzzled with a conundrum?—Con-vex-us

If you wanted to take a boat to Richmond, what would you say to the waterman?—Pull us.

The Latin for money borrowed?—Lent-us.

It is a fact, honourable to British enterprise, that there are no less than 33 periodicals in the English language published at Calcutta alone. Among them are two annuals, a number of magazines, a Literary Gazette, and several newspapers. Many distinguished natives are contributors.
