Thinks He Has Found Funeral Chamber of Egyptian King Osiris

Professor of University of Geneva Returns After Season of Excavation—Osiris Enticed Into Coffin, Lid Shut Down and Thrown Into Nile.

Paris, June 21—Professor Edward Naville, the Egyptologist, who has been directing six hundred men and boys in excavations to unearth the temple and tomb of Osiris, has returned to his chair at the University of Geneva elated with the belief that he has penetrated to the actual funeral chamber of the ancient Egyptian king-god, and that another winter's work which is already assured under auspices of the Anglo-American Egyptian Exploration Company, will bring to light important details bearing upon the history of Osiris.

The legend is that Osiris, a wise and beneficient King who reclaimed the Egyptians from savagery, met a sudden and premature death by the scheming of his wicked brother Seth, who, with 72 fellow conspirators, invited Osiris to a banquet and induced him to enter a cunningly-wrought coffin. They shut down the lid and cast the chest and its body into the Nile. Isis, faithful wife of the beloved King, recovered the body.

The legend continues that Seth and his fellow conspirators then cut the body into fourteen pieces, and scattered the parts all over Egypt—each piece being entombed by worshippers of Osiris—which accounts for the numerous tombs to him. The faithful Isis, however, regathered the pieces and brought them back to the Temple of Abydos.

This, temple, where Prof. Naville has been conducting the excavations, is, he is sure, the true burial place of Osiris. The place is about equidistant between Cairo and Assouan, in the desert about eight miles westward from the Nile.

Prof. Naville believes this temple is older even than the Pryamids. Relating some details of his work to The Associated Press correspondent at Geneva, he said:

"We worked from December 24, 1913 to March 11, 1914, and during the eleven weeks we experienced some anxiety and excitement. At nine yards under the soil we found a large building constructed of granite and very hard red sandstone. This edifice is divided into three naves, which are surrounded by sixteen large cells all identical in size and shape. They have no inscriptions on the walls whatever. This proves that the building is very ancient as the walls of more modern edifices in Egypt are covered with inscriptions.

"In front of the cells is a stone platform supported by ten huge blocks of granite. Skirting this platform, we came upon the reservoir—or well of Osiris, which undoubtedly is that mentioned by the Roman historian Strabo. While the reservoir has not yet been explored, it is probable that its waters had been popular at one time for their supposed curative virtues.

"On the opposite side of the temple to that where we entered, we found the burial place of Osiris, as the Book of the Dead and the inscription on the walls of the funeral chamber, twenty yards by five, proved to us beyond all doubt. You can imagine that we were greatly delighted at the discovery.

"We found also that in some remote past Egyptian thieves had been at work there. They had entered the funeral chamber by piercing a hole in the wall, but of course it will never be known what the thieves carried away. Did they take the sarcophagus of Osiris? All Egyptologists in the course of their researches in the ruins of Egypt have come across traces of thieves who were considered to be the cleverest in the then known world. They formed themselves into associations and gangs with the special object of robbing tombs, as it was the ancient custom among Egyptions to bury valuables with their dead. There was a supervision of the tombs, but this the thieves seem to have avoided easily, judging by their exploits.

"The whole of the vast edifices we discovered is in a bad state of ruins, because it and its surroundings were used as a quarry in the time of Ramses II."

Professor Naville, who is an elderly man, insisted upon paying honor to his "brave assistants," Messrs. Wainwright and Gibson of London and Thomas Wittemore, of Tufts College, Massachusetts.

Rhinoceros and Elephant in Danger Of Extermination

Getting Scarce in Africa—Conference Held at London Discusses Means to Preserve These Animals — Gambling on the Derby Race Greater This Year Than Ever.

London, June 22—An "elephant and rhinoceros congress," in which delegates representing all of the great powers directly interested in Africa have participated, has finished a week's sitting at the foreign office, and as a result it is probable that effective action will be taken to preserve these animals from extinction in Africa.

The conference met at the suggestion of W. Woosnan, game warden of British East Africa, who pointed out that the elephant and rhinoceros were in greater danger of extermination than any other species of big game in Africa. Delegates came from Germany, Belgium, Spain, France, Italy, and Portugal, all of which countries have colonies in the African continent.

Although the proceedings of the conference will not be divulged until the delegates have reported to their home government for ratification of the proposals, it is understood the most important item in the plans of the meeting was the formation and maintainence of absolute sanctuaries for the elephant and rhinoceros in suitable localities. The shooting of these animals would then be permitted only on licenses, the conditions of which would be made as nearly identical as possible in the different territories. Absolute protection for the rhinoceros would be given for a number of years and the standard weight for ivory for export would be raised to 22 pounds.

The various laws in the different territories have not only proven vexatious to the hunter, but have given refuge to the poacher and illicit irory dealer. Every year the need for adequate protection grows more urgent. Both the elephant and rhinoceros take long to attain maturity and like the American bison and elk seem unable to protect themselves from the modern hunter. They breed slowly and the stock is becoming dangerously reduced. Herds have been wiped out because of their occasional raids on plantations, a course which Selous, the great game hunter, declares unnecessary, for the killing of their leaders would effectively frighten away the rest of the herd. But the greatest destruction has been due to ivory hunting in the case of the elephant, and horns, hide and meat in the case of the rhinoceros.

Gambling on the Derby—recently won by an American horse—is believed to have attracted more money this year than ever. The first prize of the Calcutta sweepstake lottery, which is the most popular method of risking one's money, amounted this year to about $300,000. Ten years ago the investments in this lottery warranted a prize of only 100,000. The prize as it now stands is probably the largest offered by any reliable form of lotery in existence.

The Calcutta Turf Club started this lottery as a mere club affair many years ago, but when the sale of tickets was thrown open to all applicants the investments rapidly grew until this year saw them coming from all parts of Europe, all the British colonies, and the Orient.

The London stock exchange had a sweepstake this year which offered a first prize of $12,500. This also was originally a friendly affair among members, but it has become almost a public business. Members subscribe for batches of tickets and sell them to outsiders at a premium. At par value of $5 the tickets brought five-sixteenths premium this year.

Nearly all the London clubs have their Derby lotteries. One pound ($5.) is the favorite price for a chance, but in some wealthy clubs there are five pound tickets as well, while in the less opulent club houses, chances may be taken for one dollar. Many of the gamblers are men who know nothing about racing, and in some clubs practically every member has a small investment. Even the King's name is put down at the clubs to which he belongs.

Neuralgia of the Heart

This Letter Tells of Wonderful Change Effected by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Mr. James G. Clark, Fosterville, York County, N. B., writes:—"I have been a great sufferer from what the doctors said was neuralgia of the heart. The pain started in the back of the neck and worked down into the region of the heart. Though I had taken a lot of medicines of one kind and another, I could not get anything to help me until I used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

"When I began this treatment I could not rest in bed, except by sitting upright, on account of the dreadful pains about the heart and the quick, loud beating. The change which Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has made in my condition is wonderful. It has entirely overcome these symptoms, and is making me strong and well. If this statement will help to relieve the suffering of others, you are at liberty to use it."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is a true tonic and the greatest of nerve restoratives, 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50; all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

A Good Work

In asking the city commissioners to authorize the execution of an agreement between the crown and the city of St. John, releasing the government from any claim for damages done by dredging at North Market wharf, Commissioner Russell said that Hon. J. D. Hazen, minister of marine and fisheries, had been responsible for having the dredging done at no expense to the city. The tract being dredged was situated in front of the North Wharf and had for some time been a hindrance to steamers. At low tide it was said there was only ten feet of water but the dredges now at work would soon have a much greater depth.

MUST COMPLY WITH LAWS OF GR. BRITAIN

London, June 22.—American corporations whose stocks are sold in Great Britain must comply with British laws in making public reports of their business or be outlawed from the protection of the courts, under the terms of a bill which Major Archer Shee has introduced in the House of Commons.

While this bill is entitled "foreign companies control" it is aimed particularly at the United States and is designed, among other things, to give British shareholders in American corporations a larger share of control in them and to compel them to give more information concerning their business to their British investors than they can be forced to do under existing laws.

The enactment of the bill into law is considered probable. It provides that a director of a foreign company who is a British subject and is domiciled in this country may be sued here under British laws, which compel corporations to file an annual report and balance sheet at Somerset House. Corporations which are not represented by a director or other official who may be sued in England and which fail to comply with these laws would be outlawed by making their contracts non-enforceable by courts on the same basis as gambling debts. Under such conditions the stock of companies which failed to comply with the law could not be dealt in on the stock exchange, nor could it be sold privately with safety, except by cash transactions.

My husband had been using "Fruit-a-tives" for Indigestion, getting much benefit from them, and I thought what did him good might help our boy.
