DUSTIN FARNUM AT THE HAPPY HOUR THURSDAY.

Mystery and romance vie for interest in the newest William Fox production, "The Scarlet Pimpernel," which, with Dustin Farnum as its star, will be shown at the Happy Hour Theatre Thursday.

The story of the picture deals with the attempts of a band of revolutionary leaders in the France of 1792 to catch a group of Englishmen who are rescuing condemned noblemen from Paris. The conspirators are headed by Sir Percy Blakeney, known as the "Scarlet Pimpernel" (Dustin Farnum).

Chauvelin (William Burress) leads the revolutionists, and in his efforts, he almost converts Lady Blakeney (Winifred Kingston) to his aid. At the time she does now know that her husband is the leader of the rescuing band.

Matters are brought to a crisis when Blakeney is almost captured in Calais. By a clever piece of trickery he manages to escape, and Chauvelin last sees him in a boat, singing lustily, on his way back to England.

GEORGE M. COHAN IMITATES BILLY SUNDAY IN PICTURE "HIT-THE-TRAIL HOLLIDAY"

Delightful Artcraft Photoplay Provides Famous Actor-Manager With Most Characteristic Role.

The Artcraft photoplay "Hit-the-Trail Holliday," based upon the play which ran for a season on Broadway and which was written by George M. Cohan, the famous dramatist, composer and actor-manager, will be seen in picture form with George M. Cohan as the star at the Happy Hour Theatre next Friday and Saturday. The scenario was prepared by John Emerson and Anita Loos, and was produced in splendid style under the direction of Marshall Neilan.

In this unusual picture Billy Holliday is the replica of Billy Sunday, the famous evangelist, he being a widely advertised bartender, whose characteristics have won him enviable celebrity. He plays the bartending game on the square, and refusing to supply liquor to some miners at the behest of his employer, he finds himself out of a job and drifts into a little country town seeking employment.

In this town are two elements—one dry, the other wet. When he meets the beautiful daughter of the leader of the drys, he casts in his lot with them and when the leader of the brewery element threatens vengeance Holliday is instantly on the job. At a meeting of prohibitionists, which the brewery element seeks to disrupt by the introduction of a number of rough-necks, Holliday takes the platform and nullifies their efforts in a thrilling prohibition speech. He succeeds finally in putting the wet element out of business, and in numerous characteristic scenes wins the love of Edith Jason and simultaneously makes himself a power in the community.

In this photoplay Mr. Cohan is finely supported by Marguerite Clayton, Robert Broderick, Pat O'Malley and others.
