MARY'S DREAM.

They parted in tears at the shining bay,
And her heart was sad and her eyes were dim:
And her lover was gone for a year and a day,
And she looked o'er the waves and prayed for him.

And still she heard by the land or the lea
The wail of the moaning sea.

She dreamed that she saw him one stormy night,
When the billows were high and the wind was loud:
The ship was tossing, the waves were white,
And the black hull seemed like a drifting shroud.

The sun shone out on the morrow morn,
And Mary went down to the quiet shore,
To see her lover all white and torn
And kiss the lips that would speak no more.

And still she hears by the land or the lea
The wail of the moaning sea.

NOTES AND NEWS.

LITERARY.

"Robin Gray—a novel," by Charles Gibbon, cannot be recommended to the admirers of the sensational school of fiction, but it will please all lovers of a pure style of fiction. Its scenes are laid in Scotland, and most of the dialogue is in the favorite dialect of Burns and Scott. Many peculiarities of Scottish life and character are portrayed. The language is simple, the style pure, and the story good. Published by the Messrs. Harper, New York, and for sale at Mr. T. H. Hall's, St. John.

"Kenelm Chillingly—his Adventures and Opinions," from the fertile pen of that great man, the late Lord Lytton, is one of the works on which his fame will rest. It is an absorbing story with a good plot, and an interesting development of character. The author shows his creative and analytic power to good purpose, and the reader's attention is fixed by the tale, and his mind enlivened by a judicious sprinkling of incidents, from the first to the last chapter. Published by Messrs. Harper, New York, and sold by Mr. T. H. Hall, St. John.

"Santo Domingo, Past and Present, with a Gance at Hayti," gives the results of the careful observation and thorough study of the Dominican people and country. The story is agreeably told, the descriptions being highly graphic and picturesque and the views expressed being sound. The peculiarities of the people are often described in a most amusing manner. Mr. Hazard pictures the country as one of the most beautiful and productive lands in the world, and finds defects in the character of the inhabitants that account for their lack of advancement. It is as entertaining as a novel, and full of useful information. The illustrations are excellent and bear the marks of genuineness. Published by Messrs. Harper, New York, and for sale by Mr. T. H. Hall, St. John.

"The Fishing Tourist, Angler's Guide and Reference Book," by Charles Hallock, will become a sportsman's classic. Mr. Hallock is a sportsman of great enthusiasm and experience, with personal knowledge of the places and things of which he treats, and he is also a writer of much excellence and versatility. The trouble with most books written for sportsmen is that their authors are sportsmen and nothing else, or literateurs and nothing else. Mr. Hallock is both. His fishing experience gives him the facts, and his severe literary training enables him to curb his enthusiasm. The book is full of facts and the style is racy and interesting. No angler can afford to be without it. Published by Messrs. Harper of New York, and sold by Mr. T. H. Hall, of Saint John.

"Middlemarch, a Study of Provincial Life," is undoubtedly the greatest of Geo. Eliot's works, and one of the greatest works of fiction ever written. It displays to a greater degree than any of her previous works that remarkable power of characterization that has made her famous. In the first three chapters of this book four remarkable characters are shown to the reader—not introduced to him—by a few slight touches that make them living characters with whom he is desirous of an intimate acquaintance. These personages are odd, but not exaggerated or unreal. The author who describes hasty conceptions of odd characters gives his readers caricature. George Eliot's character studies are so thorough that all the traces of caricature that might have attached to the original conceptions vanish before they are presented to the world. To the student of humanity as revealed away from the artificial life of cities, to the lovers of style, and to the admirers of the pithy sayings for which this author is renowned, "Middlemarch" is a treasure. It is published by the Messrs. Harper, New York, and sold by Mr. T. H. Hall, St. John.

UNITED STATES.

This motto stands at the editorial head of the Albany (Ga.) News:

"It is not rank, nor birth, nor state,
But the go-up-and-get that makes men great."

MacBride, of the Washington Chronicle, was rushing along D street, one day last summer, pencil in hand, and caromed against Rev. G. A. Hall, who is always equally in a hurry, through his zeal on religious chores. "Hallo, Mac!" exclaimed the Rev. G. A., impulsively, taking him by both hands. "What are you doing for Jesus?" "Well," says Mac, "to tell the truth, I ain't doing much. I'm on the Chronicle now."

The people of Colorado won't admit that there is any possible comfort or convenience which they don't possess. An inquisitive and incredulous Easterner examining the flora of that region, happened to observe something which he was informed was "soap weed." Innocently asking why it was thus dubbed, an old settler mildly remarked that "it was because it bore little balls of scented soap all through the summer for the convenience of visitors."

South Fifth Avenue, New York, is said to be infested with a band of ruffians who carry on a lively business in hats. They run a line across the street just after dusk and at the right elevation to skim off the "tiles" of passers-by, and then immediately pounce upon their prey, keeping the owners off with a fusillade of brick bats, old tomato cans, and other missiles. The policemen of that region are under the impression the whole thing is either legitimate business or harmless sport, and cannot be induced to interfere with it. So says one of the victims of it is contraband hat traffic.

Boston is a dangerous place for unsophisticated clergymen from the country, and they should beware of its allurements. A "Rev." Mr. Hughes, from Woodstock, Vt., was arrested there the other night, and such was the effect of Puritan influences on his sensitive nature, that he swore like a trooper, gesticulated like a maniman, and made strong asseverations regarding his capacity for whiskey. He insisted that he was an Episcopalian clergyman of good standing, though he could hardly stand at all at the time, and said that he had lost some hundreds of dollars in unknown haunts in the wicked "Hub."

No cloud so dark that there is not a light behind. A wretched little ten year old boy, ragged and almost bare footed, drifting along Detroit streets one day last week, was asked where his father was. "Dead," responded the young gentleman, amiably. "Where's your mother?" "Run away," he answered. His interlocutor expressed sympathy, and observed that he must feel lonesome. Did this interesting child wipe the eye of selfish sensibility at this speech? No, his nature ran in broader and more humanitarian and artistic channels. His noble countenance glowed and brightened, and an exulting smile played upon his lips. The purest, sweetest dreams of his early years, and tender anticipations of the future, mingled in that smile. Lonesome? "Not a bit of it," exclaimed this brave boy, "there's goin' to be the biggest circus here next month yer ever set eyes on!" There is a striking resemblance in character between this true-hearted youth and the British child, who, on being told that his father was lost at sea, burst into tears, remarking, "he had my best jack-knife with him!"

GENERAL.

It is interesting to observe the way a man turns and looks at a stone his toe has stubbed against. We forbear to repeat his usual exclamation on such occasions. His looks indicate the sentiments of his heart.

A model of the boat in which the London crew beat the Atalantas of New York has been presented to the captain of the Yale University crew by the London Rowing Club. The boat is said to be the finest ever built in England.
