War Veterans and Peace

James E. Darst of the American Legion, a veteran who served with a machine gun battalion in the 89th Division, and was wounded in action during the World War in France, writes in Our World for October:

"There will be a world peace conference in New Orleans, October 19th and 20th, to enter whose councils no politician need apply. The United States, and seven of our late allies, Great Britain, France, Belgium, Italy, Roumania, Serbia, and Czecho-Slovakia, will be represented not the governments of these nations, bear in mind, but the men who did the fighting and the getting wounded. Therein it is unique.

"A certain slogan of 1917 ran: 'This is a war to end all wars.' The soldier really thought it meant something, particularly the American soldier, who couldn't find solace in being shot at, and sometimes hit, for the sake of Alsace-Lorraine or Italia Irerdenta.

"The statesmen chucked that slogan overboard at Versailles and it went down like a window-weight. The soldiers have been groping for it ever since. They have plumbed strange waters of national and international indifference. They found they had come back to a world of disillusion. Each soldier fumbled with his own problem and set about organizing himself and a hundred or a million fellows to save something from the moral wreckage.

"Then they sent out feelers toward each other, reaching hands across national boundaries and ignoring existing alignments of their politicians. From the American Legionaire and the British veteran and the French expoilu came the Interallied Veterans' Federation.

"The Federation has met twice in international conventions and its Council has assembled on numerous other occasions to consider urgent problems. Its third convention will be held in New Orleans, just preceding the fourth national convention of the American veteran in his American Legion. The delegates all will be rank and file service men who must always think of war from their own experience and never as a move on an international checker-beard of oil control or coal monopoly. They have taken seriously that talk about a war to end wars; there is no lurking smile when these men discuss international friendship."
