Sample of Timber To Be Tested in England to Ascertain Its Commercial Value.

The Ontario Government department of forestry has determined to take steps towards ascertaining the value for commercial purposes of jack pine, which is to be found in immense quantities in the forests of the province. Arrangements have been made through the curator of the Imperial Institute, London, whereby the timber will be scientifically tested by the engineers of the London County Council, with a view more particularly of learning its suitability for street paving material. A stick of timber which has been selected for the purpose has arrived from Sault Ste. Marie at Toronto, and the sample will be packed and shipped to England at the earliest opportunity.

The department is likewise receiving sections of white pine from various lumbering sections in Ontario, together with data showing the heights of the trees from which the sections were cut, and other particulars. The object of this is to enable an estimate to be formed of the earliest period at which white pine is available for the needs of commerce.

A Great Gathering at Toronto Last Night.

Sir Richard Cartwright on Progress Under Liberal Rule.

Canada's Trade Makes a Phenomenal Increase.

The Ontario General Elections Discussed by Sir Richard and Premier Hardy.

Bright Prospects for the Success of the Liberals in the Ensuing Contest.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—The banquet of the Young Liberal Club last night was a great success. The principal speakers were Sir Richard Cartwright, minister of trade and commerce, and Premier Hardy, both of whom had a most enthusiastic reception. The tone of the addresses proved that the national horizon is rapidly widening and that developments within the arctic circle, in far northwest Canada, and in the far east, with which we would have had but a remote connection in pre-confederation days, are now of importance to every Canadian, whether of the east or of the west.

Sir Richard Cartwright made an exceedingly happy and inspiriting speech. He pointed with pardonable pride to the expansion of trade as an evidence that Liberal government had been very far from the disastrous thing predicted by the Conservatives eighteen months ago. In the first year of Liberal rule the exports had increased from $109,915,000 to $123,933,000, an increase of $14,000,000, the greatest within a twelvemonth within his knowledge. In the first five months of the present fiscal year the exports of Canadian products had reached the great total of $74,896,000, another increase of $14,000,000, as compared with the same five months of last year. In all, therefore, Liberal rule had been accompanied—he did not pretend to say it was wholly due to Liberal rule—by the enormous expansion of $28,000,000 in out exports within 17 months. This statement was greeted with tumultous cheering. In the latter part of his speech Sir Richard dealt with the problems of Klondike development, and of the relations of Canada as a North American state to the empire. The greatest fact of the century politically was that two-thirds of the Anglo-Saxon race found their homes in the North American continent. To the sentiment that the Anglo-Saxons north of the line were not prepared to barter their national existence for trade there was a splendid response, and this was no less marked when Sir Richard declared it to be the duty of Canadians to the Anglo-Saxon race to do everything possible to remove all prejudices and misunderstandings between the two great branches of the race. Behind the words of Sir Richard was unquestionably the thought that some day it may yet be possible to realize the dream of an Anglo-Saxon world-wide confederacy, guiding men onward to that day when the war drum beats no longer and the battle flags are furled.

THE ONTARIO ELECTIONS.

Sir Richard referred to the approaching provincial general elections. He would not say that Mr. Hardy or his colleagues were perfect, but the government of Ontario was today held up as a pattern, and a model by political friends and opponents all over our sister provinces. Although he was aware that there were men in our own camp and country who conceived that the Liberal government deserved very summary treatment on the part of the electors. In other provinces they would be pleased to have half as good a government. If the government had held the reins of office for 27 years, and in that time had not incurred one single cent of public debt, and not been found guilty of any wrong-doing, that was seven and twenty excellent reasons for keeping them in power a good many years longer. He had been at some pains to examine into the matter of what was said against the government; he had examined the diatribes of Mr. St. John on political ethics and the great practical inconvenience of holding any man responsible on the floor of the house for what he said in the country; he had noticed the lucubrations of Mr. St. John as to diseases to which hogs were subject and the inconvenience to which young piglings were subjected when deprived of their share of nourishment out of the public crib; the essays of Dr. Ryerson on anything and everything; but up to the present but one charge was proved, one that Mr. Hardy could not deny, that of being in power for 27 years, and this was 27 reasons for continuing them there. He was reminded of the divine, who, after partaking of a dish of strawberries, said, "Providence, in its wisdom, might have made a better berry, but Providence never did." He was free to say that in the abstract he could conceive a better government, but he did not know where to find it, and of one thing he was sure, that it was not going to be found in the ranks of her Majesty's loyal opposition for Ontario.

THE TIDE OF VICTORY.

Since June 23 the tide of Liberal victory has gone on without break. The government's majority had increased from 22 to something like 47. Since that time they had faced their foes on many occasions and had always been victorious. In Prince Edward Island they beat them in the ratio of two to one; in the sister province of Nova Scotia, the home of the Tuppers, be it remembered, he was creditably informed that it was the intention of the government to introduce an alteration of the rules of parliament in order to enable the present opposition to call for a division when they desired. The rule of parliament was that it required five to get a division. The opposition consisted of one leader, one private and one Tupperonian, and there were difficulties in obtaining a division unless the government lent them one of their supporters. Of Quebec he said that he would not speak. There were circumstances which might well call for a defeat on the part of the Liberals, but all knew how completely their political friends were overthrown. Could it be possible, he asked, that the great Liberal province of Ontario would be the first to check the tide of Liberal victory? (Cries of "No!") He could not think it, and if it were so all he could say was that the province of Ontario would show itself extremely ungrateful, to say the least of it, to the men who during the last quarter of a century had maintained an unblemished record in every sense, and who, if entrusted again with the reins of power would continue to pursue the same cour[illegible] of good conduct that had disting[illegible]ed them during all that period. B[illegible]n-cluded by expressing the ho[illegible]t within a very few weeks he w[illegible]e able to congratulate his fri[illegible]r. Hardy on being once again th[illegible]ey, recipient of the confidence of his fellow-countrymen.

THE PREMIER'S SPEECH.

Mr. Hardy was in magnificent form, and slashed away at the opposition with splendid and characteristic vigor. The hollowness of the opposition policy, or lack of policy, was shown, and how the lion-like roar of the Conservatives in the country had been changed to a denial in the house of the words attributed to them by their own journalistic friends. His praise of the excellent candidates coming forward for the first time to carry the standard of Liberalism in the campaign—not a few of them of historic name—was a graceful tribute to companions in arms, and will be appreciated by the gentlemen referred to. As to the date of dissolution, the premier was discreetly silent, but he warned his hearers that it would be soon.

The accident occurred immediately in front of the telegraph operator, and the operator was compelled to jump through the back window in order to save himself from injury.

Rev. Charles Fish, Methodist Minister Dunn Ave., Toronto, Cured of Eczema.

About ten years ago I felt the beginnings of what is commonly known as Eczema. The disease commenced in my ears and spread entirely over both sides of my head and also developed on my hands. During those ten year I was a great sufferer. Specialists on skin diseases treated me. As I write this I am commencing on the fifth box of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and, judging from the rapid improvement effected, I am certain that before the box is used I shall be completely cured.
