SHE KNOWS ALL ABOUT INDIANS

MISS MARY A.OWEN.

When the compilers of a weighty encyclopedia at Edinburgh, Scotland, wanted an article on the death and burial customs of the American Indians, they just naturally wrote to Miss Mary Alicia Owen of St. Joseph, Mo.

Miss Owen knows about all there is to be known of Indian folklore, voodoo magic and gipsy customs. She was admitted to Indian tribal membership in 1892. She joined the redskin secret societies and always attends the big pow-wows.

She's a great collector of Indian relics, noted writer on all things pertaining to the Indians, councillor of the American folklore society, honorary member of the English folklore society, and retiring president of the Missouri folklore society.

Mary Alicia Owen is simply folk lore, spelled another way.

Worth Designer Of This Beauty

Worth's name is a "conjure" for women who dote upon the latest French styles. Here's a model which will make us all gasp with delight on sight. The photograph arrived by the latest steamer.

It's a white mohair of brilliance with hairline stripe of black. The cutaway jacket is but 25 inches in length. The tiny collar is of white satin, and the broad rovers are of the mohair, trimmed with bands of white braid. A necktie bow of cyclamen satin adds a touch of color.

The back and front of this coat are cut through and across the side from the coat is skirted. Pocket flaps ornament the sides at a waistline of empire height, and are finished with ornaments with black and white braid and olives.

The skirt is in tunic form, and divides directly in the front and back to show an almost invisible panel of white satin. At hem height this tunic spreads to reveal the satin foundation, which is here trimmed with bands of white braid. Cord loops and buttons outline the hem division.

On Monday the latest design in tailored suits by Bernard will be shown.

One hundred of the fishermen escaped to land, while numbers are known to have been drowned. Ice breakers have been sent to the rescue.

Only two days ago the fishermen declined assistance offered them by two vessels, declaring that they were in no danger and refusing to be taken off.
