NOTES AND NEWS.

UNITED STATES.

Horse thieves in Texas are serenaded by string-bands.

What's in a name? "Swears & Dams" is the sign of a legal firm in St. Louis.

In Carbon County, Pa., lives a German 73 years old and the father of 30 children, the youngest of whom is four months old.

One member of the junior class of Dartmouth College is a clergyman about 50 years of age. He is married, preaches and has gray hairs. He doesn't take part in the rushes.

The Chicago Public Library, founded just after the great fire, has now 40,000 volumes. It is supported by a tax of one-fifth of a mill, which already gives an income of $65,000 a year.

The funny man of a Western paper says that to paint a fence green in the grasshopper region is to insure its being devoured by the pests which consume everything green. If that be so, what a place Minnesota would be to colonize with fools.

A delicate lady who went to the White Sulphur Springs on a mattress was so restored to health that she married a man worth $200,000. The waters of those springs, then, are wealth-giving as well as health giving, it would seem.

San Francisco has an ordinance forbidding the employment of female bartenders, or the attendance of females in saloons. The arrest of a woman for selling liquor over her own bar has brought up the question of the law's constitutionality.

The Chinese of San Francisco have a cheerful custom of gathering up the bones of their dead in the graveyards and bringing them into town in sacks on the street cars, when they desire to ship them to China. The non-Asiatic passengers protest against this unsavory practice.

A shower of white toads took place in Larimer county, Col. The shower embraced a strip of country half a mile wide and several miles in length. From a distance the frogs, as they bounced along the ground, looked for all the world like hail stones. After the storm the frogs hopped about over the country in droves of ten thousand.

Four doctors tickled Johnny Smith,
They blistered and they bled him:
With squills and anti-bilious pills
And ipecac they fed him.

They stirred him up with calomel,
And tried to turn his liver,
But all in vain; his little soul
Was wafted o'er the river.

—Genuine Obituary, Philadelphia Ledger.

The granite soldier who is to surmount the national monument at the battlefield of Antietam has been completed, and is claimed to be the largest figure in sculpture out of Egypt. He weighs over thirty tons, and is twenty-one and a half feet high. The gun he holds is eighteen feet long, and his shoe three feet in length. The face is smooth shaven, except a heavy moustache, and is that of a resolute man.

The Chinese servants in California are in the habit of posting on the cellar door or wood shed or pantry locker little bits of red paper with a few Chinese characters on them. In this way they notify their successors of the character of their employers. A gentleman at Stockton, who had had trouble with his servants, recently engaged a new cook, but the man had no sooner gone into the kitchen than upon reading one of those insignificant bits of paper he turned and fled from the house. On being followed by the master, who asked what was the matter, he said: "Me no wantee here stop—woman here talkee bad—quick, long tongue—pay no monee—workee all day—me go." And he went.

At West Troy, N. Y., on Monday afternoon, a man named Martin Supple, 50 years old, residing with his family in that village, took his own life in a manner that exhibits a terribly deliberate purpose. For some days he had manifested much depression of spirits, and on the day in question took an old musket which he loaded with a double charge. He then placed the stock in a vice, securing it in a desired position at full cock, after which taking off one boot and stocking, he affixed with a piece of cord a loop from the trigger, in which he inserted his big toe, then leaning forward until the muzzle pressed against his left breast, directly over the heart, he pressed his toe downward, the piece was discharged and he was launched into eternity. His left breast was shockingly mutilated and burned, and two of his ribs were blown completely into fragments

Don Francis of Assisi, husband of Queen Isabella, publishes a card in a Spanish paper, in which he states that he takes no part in politics nor in the education of his son. He is simply content to be "le maria de la reine."

An international congress of hairdressers has been held at Dresden. Unfortunately a proposition to discourage parting the hair in the middle was voted down. The assembled "artists" had no desire to have a brush with a numerous class of their patrons.

An English savant has started the theory that workingmen never have the hay fever. He finds that that this interesting disease is peculiar to the educated classes, and more common in proportion to the spread of mental culture and the intensity of intellectual occupation.

Snooks's boy heard him say the other day that there was money in hens, and he proceeded to investigate the old man's poultry-yard. He had gone through a dozen fine specimens when the old man descended upon him, and the boy now wonders if there's a balm in Gilead.

The Martini-Henry rifle, which has been adopted as the weapon of the British army, kicks so badly that a loud outcry has been raised against it since the last Wimbledon competition, and the military authorities are engaged in experiments for lessening the recoil.

A new association is about to be formed in England by Evangelical churchmen and dissenters, to be called the United Protestant Alliance and to have for its objects "the banding together of all sections of Protestants against the attempted revival of superstitious teachings and the protection of Protestant interests in all parliamentary reforms."

A writer in Harper's Magazine describes a cotton mill near Queretaro, in Mexico, the yard of which is full of the daintiest flowers and fruits with statues and fountains, and he asks why Northern factories should not be thus embowered, at least so far as the climate would allow. There would certainly seem to be no good reason why the surroundings of the average New England factory should not be pleasant.

Dr. Schlieman has had 10 of his Trojan inscriptions deciphered by Prof. Gomperz, of Vienna, who says they are in primitive Cyprian characters, but contain purely Greek words. Schlieman calculates that the objects he dug up at Illium Novum were made about 2,000 years before Christ, while the Homeric poems are about 900 years before Christ. He has made an arrangement with the Turkish Government by which he pays one-half the value of the treasures he discovered, and thus they become his absolute property. Schlieman's book is to be published in English by John Murray, with very perfect engravings.

Ancient Egyptians Put to Modern Uses.

From the London Times.

The other day at Sakhara I saw nine camels pacing down from the mummy pits to the bank of a river laden with nets, in which were femora, tibia, and other bony bits of the human form, some two hundred weight in each net on each side of the camel. Among the pits there were people busily engaged in searching out, sifting, and sorting out the bones which almost crust the ground. On inquiry I learned that the cargoes with with which the camels were laden would be sent to Alexandria, and thence be shipped to English manure manufacturers. They make excellent manure, I am told, particularly for Swedes and other turnips. The trade is brisk, and has been going on for years, and may go on for many more. It is a strange fate to preserve one's skeleton for thousands of years in order that there may be fine Southdowns and cheviots in a distant land! But Egypt is always a place of wonders.

How One Strike was Terminated.

At least one practical and immediate good has come from the meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science at Belfast. There had been a strike and lock out in that place for seven weeks, and one day while the Economic Science section was discussing the relations of capital and labor the masters and men involved in the strike each sent delegations to the meeting to profit by the wisdom which might be evolved. Some suggestions were made of such a practical and timely kind that both delegations were impressed with them; and by means of the hints thus given, coupled with the direct and friendly intervention of some members of the Association, an understanding was arrived at by which the difficulties in the way of an amicable settlement were removed, and the long standing quarrel was adjusted. The very next day the wheels of industry were set again in motion and masters and men went happily back to their employments, glad to have seen the last of a strike which had already cost more than a million dollars. Professor Tyndall, in his closing words to the Association, had the happiness of announcing this satisfactory conclusion, and the meeting broke up with the feeling that Belfast would hold this much, at least, of its proceedings, in grateful remembrance.

A Letter of Keats.

A delightful and characteristic letter of the poet Keats, hitherto unpublished, is given in the Athenæum. Here is the first part of it:

MY DEAR REYNOLDS.—I have an idea that a man might pass a very pleasant life in this manner. Let him on any certain day read a certain page of full poesy or distilled prose—and let him wander with it, and muse upon it, and reflect from it, and dream upon it until it becomes stale—but when will it do so? Never. When man has arrived at a certain ripeness in intellect — and one grand and spiritual passage serves him as a starting post towards all "the two and thirty palaces." How happy is such a voyage of conception, what delicious diligent indolence! A doze upon a sofa does not hinder it, and a nap under clover engenders ethereal finger-pointings—the prattle of a child gives it wings, and the converse of middle age strength to beat them—a strain of music conducts to "an odd angle of the isle," and when the leaves whisper it puts a girdle round the earth. Nor will this sparing touch of noble Books be any irreverence to their Writers—for perhaps the honors paid by Man to Man are trifles in comparison to the Benefit done by great works to the "spirit and pulse of good" by their mere passive existence.

Memory should not be called knowledge—many have original minds who do not think it—they are led away by custom. Now it appears to me that almost any man may, like the spider, spin from his own inwards his own airy Citadel—the points of leaves and twigs on which the spider begins her work are few and she fills the air with a beautiful circuiting; man should be content with as few points to tip with the fine Webb of his soul and weave a tapestry empyrean—full of symbols for his spiritual hive—of softness for his spiritual touch—of space for his wandering—of distinctness for his luxury.

Freedom of Thought and Speech.

The Liverpool Mercury, in an editorial on Prof. Tyndall's address before the British Association, points out the fact that there is as much danger to be apprehended from dogmatism in science as from dogmatism in religion, and concludes its remarks in the following excellent paragraph:

Nor are we careful to pursue the subject further, beyond pointing out what strikes us as being a very dangerous attitude assumed by the science of the day. No men have claimed or won more for freedom of thought than the men of science. The very fact that Professor Tyndall could deliver such an address as his before a mixed audience in a town like Belfast is a triumph of advanced thought. The further fact that one of the sections was allowed to meet in the lecture theatre of the Wesleyan College marks the rate at which freedom of thought has traveled during the last, say, twenty or thirty years. Still, for all that, we must not exchange one kind of dogmatism for another. And we think we perceive something of this kind running through not only Professor Tyndall's address, but through the utterances, whether in print or on the platform, of those who think with him. Should unbelief ever crystallize into belief, and science become a dogma, the human mind will be led once more under a tyranny as heavy as that which marked the dark ages. We have not long escaped from the days when a man of Prof. Tyndall's opinions would have been thought worthy of the stake. We do not wish to rush into another period when men's piety shall be thought worthy only of their lodgment in a lunatic asylum. Let Professor Tyndall have all the freedom of thought and of speech; but do not let him appoint himself the high priest of a creed to which all other creeds are to submit. What is meant by freedom of thought is not freedom for this particular form of thought, or that, but for all forms of thought. Any man has as much right to believe in revelation as Professor Tyndall has to disbelieve in it; and it strikes us as being a little too arrogant, even for the President of the British Association, to tell such a man that 'all religious theories embracing notions of cosmogony must submit to the control of science.'"

The Great and Only Genuine

TOOTH-ACHE REMEDY

In The Dominion.

IT WILL NOT SOIL THE FINEST LINEN!

IT removes dust from the Teeth, and where baldness is not hereditary it makes the hair grow. Follow the directions carefully, and eat sparingly the best that may be furnished. Hard biscuit are bad for the teeth; they are too elastic. Read the opinions of the independent farmers of Gaslingville.

Mr. Ducrow says, at our request, in a crefully written letter:

"DEAR SIR—I have never used your unrivalled Tooth-ache Anodyne, and, therefore, can recommend it heartily to all sufferers. It is good to varnish picture frames with; and as a fly poison it has no superior. Send up a lot of it. We want to decorate our windows."

WHAT IT DOES.

A prejudiced pioneer in railways writes:—

"My wife ruined a magnificent set of false teeth with your villainous compound. It destroyed the gold plate and oxidized the enamel. I'll see you about it. Look out for the engine when the bell rings."

We are preparing a lot of new testimonials, in Gaelic, from the hardy settlers of New Kincardineshire. There is nothing immoral or objectionable in a twenty-five cent bottle of the Anodyne.
