McBEAN BROS.

On August 10 we inserted advertisements in newspapers, etc., advising farmers to hold their wheat for at least $1.00 per bushel for 1 Northern, clear on track at point of shipment. Today 1 Northern sold at $1.20 per bus. in store Fort William or Port Arthur. This price means on a freight rate of 12c per 100 lbs. about 111¾c; at 13c rate, 111¼c; at 14c rate, 110⅝c; at 15c rate, 110c; at 16c rate, 109⅜c; at 17c rate, 108¾c; at 18c rate, 108¼c; at 19c rate, 107⅝c; at 20c rate, 107c; at 21c rate, 106⅜c; at 22c rate, 105¾c; at 23c rate, 105¼c; at 24c rate, 104⅝c; and at 25c rate, 104c, clear to shipper on track at point of shipment after paying freight from point of shipment to Fort William or Port Arthur and our commission. We give these figures to enable farmers to figure out whether it would pay to load and ship their own grain and have it sold here at the highest market prices going at the time. Think this over carefully.

The devastation by war and loss through lack of harvesters in European countries means a huge world's grain shortage almost touching famine conditions, and will be felt more next year than this year. Instead of farmers spending time this fall shipping their grain forward, it would pay far better to get as much land as possible in condition for next season's crop. We claim that world's market situation means very high prices for the next two or three years, and every effort possible should be made for a bumper yield next season. Prices will fluctuate widely up and down, but should a decline take place, don't get alarmed, because they will range very high later on whether war continues or not.

Load your grain direct from wagon into car. Cars will be plentiful this year. Harvest and thresh carefully—every bushel of grain is valuable and may be needed in the worst way. Write us for shipping instructions.

August 27, 1914 Grain Exchange, Winnipeg

straightway to the bedside of the patient.

All night long, with a finger on the old man's pulse, the new doctor and the old administered oxygen and plied the heart with stimulants. Could they keep the vital forces active until the myriads of bacteria had made their final assault, until the last and strongest wave of disease had spent its force? Human knowledge could not foretell. The little mother besought the source of all knowledge and all power, and the men of science did not despise her entreaties.

In the morning, just as the sun shot its beams down the long western slopes of the Sierras, Cathcart, weary of body and heavy-eyed, came out on the veranda at the east side of the house. James, who had served the Drummonds for two decades, was driving past, toward the gate, the arched neck and lively step of the little sorrel telling of days of unwonted idleness.

"James," called the doctor, and the horse was reined to a standstill, "I'll drive to the station and get Miss Evelyn myself."

She left her car the moment the train came to a stop; and recognizing the sorrel and the buggy, she came quickly to where they stood, quite failing of surprise, however—such was the concentration of her thoughts—at the unexpected presence of the doctor. He helped her to the seat, and, getting in beside her, permitted the horse to start, tho holding him to a walk.

Her face, too, showed lack of sleep, and there were little tremblings of racking worry about her eyes and mouth. The pressure of responsibility, which had weighed upon him, was lifted as he looked at her; and he thought only that he cared for her, that he wanted her; wanted her that he might care for her and protect her.

"Why don't you hurry, doctor? How is father? Tell me, quick."

"He was sleeping soundly when I left. The fever has gone. He will get well—Evelyn."

She took a little, gasping breath and her eyes closed and opened. The tension of her nerves were relaxed and she leaned against the back of the seat, looking straight ahead. Then she cried softly; and Cathcart wondered at the absurdity of her carrying a handkerchief so inadequate to the demands now made upon it.

He, too, looked straight ahead, struggling with an impulse. Then his arm stole around her and he drew her to him.

CORRECTION

In the Regina fair report owing to an oversight the awards in Berkshire hogs were accredited to the Yorkshire classes and the awards for the latter breeds were omitted. As was noted in the report, the Yorkshire classes were especially strong, the majority of the awards going to A. D. McDonald and Son, Napinka, Man. These breeders obtained six firsts, five seconds, one third and one fourth prizes, besides obtaining the championships for boar and sow, together with the grand championship over all breeds, either sex. Of the other exhibitors Follett Bros., Duval, Sask., obtained one first, one second, one third and one fourth; W. J. Mortson, Fairlight, Sask., obtained one first, three seconds, four thirds and two fourths; A. B. Potter, Langbank, Sask., obtained one first, four seconds, one third and one fourth; E. E. Baynton, Big Stick Lake, Sask., obtained first in boar under six months, while R. I. McMurchy, Regina, Sask., obtained first and third in sow under six months and first in both classes for four pigs bred and owned by exhibitor.

SWINE AWARDS AT REDVERS FAIR

At Redvers summer fair A. Coleman and Son were successful in obtaining first for Yorkshire boar any age, first for Yorkshire sow any age, first, second and third for pair of 1914 pigs, and third for pair of bacon hogs. At the same fair Sutter Bros. won second and third in Yorkshire boar any age, second and third in Yorkshire sow any age, and in Berkshires they obtained second in boar any age and second in sow any age.
