BOWMANVILLE, ONT. tzw

A Countess on Domestic Arts.

The Countess of Aberdeen, in opening a Mill Girls' Institute at Manchester, said that a walk through the building, and a knowledge of what was to be done in it, made one feel what a grand thing it was to live in the present age. Fifty years ago there were no such institutions, but now everywhere, both at home and in the colonies, there were indications of efforts showing a universal recognition that "Man doth not live by bread alone." In all directions they found associations, guilds and institutions which had for their tendency the moral and spiritual elevation of their members. In the Manchester Mill Girls' Institute, added the countess, they were not only having classes for intellectual improvement, but also for cookery, laundry-work, dressmaking, millinery, and many things beside. To acquire a knowledge of the domestic arts, she maintained, was most important. They should combat the general feeling that anyone could clean a house, or cook, or sew up a garment. To properly accomplish these things needed a great deal of skill, and required head as well as hand training. Let them consider what a change would come over the ideal life of a girl who had spent some years in association with such an institution. She would be able to hold her own anywhere. She would have acquired a love for the companionship of good books, which would revolutionize her whole life, and that of her husband and children. She would have learned that recreation did not consist of giggling and laughing and coarse amusements. She would also have formed an altogether new idea of what friendship meant; and above all, she would have found that the ideal of life rested, after all, in whole-hearted service to the Master whose Spirit and teaching it was intended should permeate that institute. —[Christian World.
