An Australian Writer.

Capt. R. Hugh Knyvett, who died in New York on April 25, two days after the publication of his book, "Over There With the Australians," was at the outbreak of the war a pearl fisher in Australia. He had been graduated from Sydney University and had lectured on psychology, but an outdoor life appealed to him more. He enlisted as a private, was trained as a scout in Egypt, served at Gallipoli, and then on the western front as an intelligence officer. It was while scouting behind the German second line that he was severely wounded. He dragged himself 800 yards back to the allied lines. Invalided to Australia, a nerve was grafted in his leg. He came to America to recuperate, thinking to get back into service. Meanwhile he lectured and wrote his book. Although constantly growing weaker he kept at work, often rising from his bed an hour before the time set for a lecture.

Street Posts for Shells.

It has been suggested that London should rid herself of a number of street posts and other unnecessary iron ornaments in the interests of the quick production of munitions. The question of the guard posts is being considered by the authorities, but a number of these prove to be old cannon that have historical interest and the historical associations are protesting against their removal.

It has already been suggested that the Albert Memorial would be of more use in the shape of munitions than in its present form, but a writer in the Star goes further and suggests that all the statues erected from the time of George I. to the Prince Consort should be melted down and adds that they would not be missed, because the majority of them represent Germans.—N. Y. Sun.

Old Age Pension of $5 a Week.

The agenda of the forthcoming conference of the Australian Labor party includes proposals for a 40 hours' week, Saturday being a universal holiday; an increase of old age pensions to £1 a week; abolition of all the compulsory clauses in the Defence Act, and the nationalization of all mines. The significance of these is that Australian Labor proposals to-day generally become accomplished facts to-morrow. — London Daily Mail.

QUEEN WIELDED A HAMMER.

To Satisfy Herself Munition Work Wasn't Too Hard for Girl.

How thoroughly the royal family is at one with the people in the present situation has been shown both by the King's informal visit to the battle front and by the Prince of Wales' return to duty before the expiration of his leave. Since his return his Majesty and the Queen have been busy visiting munition factories and equipment works.

At a factory at Walthamstow the Queen, as ever, was chiefly interested in the girl and women workers, among whom she mingled with her usual cheery smile, chatting most of the time—when not passing a few words with the girls — with Mrs. Phipps, the organizer.

The Queen, impressed by the appearance of the girls, remarked to Mrs. Phipps they seemed to be girls of a very superior type, when one of the conducting party remarked, "Yes, your Majesty, we are some stunt on these girls."

The Queen looked puzzled, not understanding the slang, but quietly laughed with pleasure when it was explained that what the official meant was that their experience in the employment of female labor had been altogether satisfactory.

Queen Alexandra has been busy, too, visiting factories with Princess Victoria, throwing out a useful word or two of advice as it occurred to her practical mind. In one shop she saw a girl wielded a hammer and punching identification marks on a shell.

She thought this must be very heavy work for a girl, but to the Queen's inquiry the girl smilingly replied it was quite simple now she had grown accustomed to it. Accepting an invitation to try for herself, Queen Alexandria held the punch in position with one hand, and with the other hit a series of hard blows; but on examination of the marking feared that they came far short of the standard.

Desertion and Divorce.

years should, in future, be a ground

Desertion for a period of three for divorce is one of the recommendations of the Parliamentary Committee of the British Marriage Law Reform Committee.

This, it may be recalled, was recommended by the Royal Commission on Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, which reported in 1912.

In the last report issued the committee further recommend that jurisdiction to a limited extent in divorce and matrimonial cases should be conferred on county courts for the accommodation of the working classes.

"It is thought by many," the report goes on, "that the proposed bill might also contain provisions, with all proper safeguards, as to other married persons who have been in fact separated for a prescribed period, either:

(1) By voluntary but informal arrangement.

(2) By reason of incurable insanity.

The committee contend that permanent separation orders should no longer be made.

The report concludes as follows:— It need hardly be added that at the present time, when the manhood of the nation has been depleted by the most terrible of wars, it is exceptionally urgent, in the interest of the community and of the Empire, that no obstacles to marriage, such as those which arise from legal technicalities and pecuniary circumstances, should be allowed to remain.

Princess Mary a Nurse.

Princess Mary, daughter of King George, has commenced a course of regular training as a nurse at the Children's Hospital in Great Ormond street, London. She will work in the Alexandra ward. The princess will attend the hospital two days each week, and will undertake the usual work of a probationer in order to make herself efficient in the care of children.
