THIRD READING OF THE COMPULSION MEASURE SLATED FOR TUESDAY

Reclassification and Drastic Rules Are Added.

NEWSPAPERS ARE GAGGED

Hon. Frank Oliver and G. P. Graham Fight Hampering Clause.

[Special to The Advertiser.]

OTTAWA, July 17.—The military service bill has taken another step forward. Tonight it received its final touch in committee, and was reported. The scrutiny that has been given the measure in committee had been long and careful. It emerges with the principle intact, but with the details considerably altered.

There has been a reclassification of the men liable for conscription; there was added to the bill most drastic and stringent provisions against interference with its enforcement. The reclassification puts the first six classes into two classes; single men and widowers without children to be called first.

A clause exempting divinity students was put in by way of amendment, and taken out by way of further amendment.

Now the measure stands for third reading, and then goes to the Senate for enactment by that chamber.

It will reach the Senate on Wednesday next, and the centre of interest will be transferred from the green to the red chamber. There is expected to be no great difficulty in getting the measure through the Senate. The Government now has a majority there, and vacancies enough to increase that majority by further appointments. As in the Commons, it is expected that a number of the English-speaking members of the Upper House will vote with the Goverment for the bill.

The vote of French Government members of the Senate against the bill is expected to be limited to two. The debate in the Senate is not likely to last as long as in the Commons. The measure has been much discussed already; there is little that can be said further, and it is not the practice of the Senate to struggle with a measure with the bitterness of the Commons.

Canada will soon have conscription as a part of the law of the land.

Condition Needs Fixing.

Capt. Burnham informed the House that many gallant officers of Canada, who were over age, had succeeded in getting to the front and doing fine service. There were others equally willing who had not been able to get to the front, and there were some, not over age, and of military age, who neither desired nor endeavored to go to the front, but preferred to remain and hold down jobs. Capt. Burnham declared it a scandal that they should be allowed to do so. They were blocking the advancement of worthy men who could not rise past them. There were many cases where men who had seen service, who had suffered wounds, and who had efficiency, and were entitled to be brought back and given positions held by men less worthy. This condition exasperated young men in the service, and the Government should take steps to correct the condition.

Board Must Be Sworn.

Mr. Meighen made an amendment to the bill, requiring members of the exemption board to take oath of service if they were not judges.

The penalty provisions against newspapers were attacked by the Hon. Frank Oliver. He stated that newspapers involved large investments, and the value depended upon continuous publication. The suppression of a book merely destroyed the investment in an issue, the suppression of a newspaper destroyed a business. He offered an amendment providing that suppression in the case of a newspaper should be limited to the single issue in which the offence was committed, and that action had to be taken by indictment before a judge. That would give the newspaper a chance to plead its case.

Hon. Mr. Meighen did not see the purpose to be served by suppression of a single issue of a newspaper. After the contents of an issue had reached the public the harm had been done, and could not be reached by the suppression of the issue. The paper would not care a fig whether the issue were suppressed or not. Almost since the outbreak of war the Government had power to suppress offending newspapers without resort to a court, but no paper had suffered unjustly. Under this law newspapers, he thought would be no more harshly dealt with.

Government's Word Not Enough.

Hon. George P. Graham preferred to have the protection of newspapers in the statute rather than the promis of the Government. It was extreme law that permitted the suppression of a paper for the fault of a minor employee.

Hon. Mr. Meighen held that the only way to deal with offences against the military service act was with firmness, and that the hands of the Government should not be tied.

Hon. Mr. Oliver did not see why such a property as a newspaper should be subject to destruction by the Government without proof of offence by the Government or possibility of defence by the paper. To put the Government into possession of such a law would be to give them power of destroying partisan opponents. There was a book entitled "The Fiddlers" that he held in his hand. It was simply a powerful arraignment of the liquor traffic. Because the liquor traffic had more friends than the people of the country, the pamphlet had been placed under a ban.

To Gag the Press.

It was the solicitor-general who had framed the resolution for the incarceration of a citizen of Canada in the tower of Parliament. It was the solicitor-general who had introduced closure into Parliament, and now it was the solicitor-general who stood sponsor for a law by which he and his colleagues could hold the threat of suppression against any newspaper in Canada. He believed that the provisions of this bill had been framed with the view of gagging the press of the country.

Mr. Meighen replied that if a newspaper became guilty of printing seditious matter it should be suppressed. However, drastic action would be taken in extreme cases only. The newspaper of the member for Edmonton had never been interfered with for criticizing the Government.

The amendment was declared lost, but the discussion broke out again when Mr. Graham asked if the Government was considering the advisability of having censorship taken from the secretary of state and given to the minister of justice.

Borden Defends Bill.

Sir Robert Borden said that the minister of justice always had charge of summary action respecting a newspaper. The law was administered, almost entirely, by officials appointed for the purpose, who come to the Government occasionally for direction. In defence of the bill under discussion, he said that there might be cases of a newspaper printing an article of so seditious character that it would be necessary for the central judge to act promptly. In conclusion he said that from the beginning of the war newspapers and news dealers almost without exception had loyally and effectively co-operated with the Government in keeping from becoming public matter that might be injurious to the country in war times.

Judge D. D. MacKenzie said that the proposed law was in the nature of a permanent injunction, and suggested that it be changed to the nature of a temporary injunction, providing for the suspension of a newspaper while its offence was being inquired into.

There was no response to this.

S. A. Officers Exempt.

Hon. George P. Graham asked if officers of the Salvation Army would be exempt from service; they were not clergymen in the regular sense of the term.

The premier replied that he had not considered the matter.

Hon. Mr. Meighen declared it would be an injustice if officers of the Salvation Army were treated differently from other denominations. It was the intention of the bill to cover them, and he had no doubt it did so.

This closed the committee work. The bill was reported and stands for third reading.

The prime minister suggested that it should receive third reading at once, but Sir Wilfrid demurred, stating that many members were leaving Ottawa and could not be present for the vote.

The prime minister then agreed that the vote would be taken Tuesday on third reading.

Divinity Students Not Out.

The exemption of divinity students from military service, which was inserted in the bill on the motion of the prime minister, was dropped this afternoon on the motion of the prime minister.

Consideration of the proposal and pressure against the exemption resulted in the change of view. There was a division over the proposal, and it was carried by 72 to 32.

The prime minister explained he found that the words "divinity students" covered a larger class than was contemplated. It had been represented that some of the persons who would come under the exemption did not desire it. Then, too, Hon. Mr. Marcil had maintained that the word "clergy" included practically all of the theological and divinity students of the province of Quebec. So the prime minister thought it best that the exemption shoud be struck out and the clause restored to its original form.

Include All Sects.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier held that the original clause would exempt Roman Catholic and Anglican divinity students but not those of the Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist and other churches. He favored retaining the amendment and giving the exemption to all divinity students. This had been done in England and in the United States.

Sir Sam Hughes wanted to know if the clergy themselves were excluded from the operation of the act.

Dr. Paquette, Conservative, of Quebec, opposed the withdrawal of the amendment, and said that the action would raise religious prejudices.

"Bill of Exemption."

Hon. Mr. Oliver said that this again called attention to the fact that while the militia act was designed to raise men, this bill was designed to exempt men.

Hon. Mr. Graham said that the clergymen of the Methodist church, to which he belonged, had stated that they did not desire exemption.

Mr. Blain of Peel said that there was nothing to prevent Methodist clergymen from volunteering.

Mr. Lemieux submitted a subamendment providing for the exemption of "students preparing for the ministry in any recognized theological or divinity school."

Mr. Gauvreau charged the prime minister with political jockeying.

The Lemieux amendment was defeated 74 to 40. Liberals who voted against Mr. Lemieux were Pardee, Nesbitt, Ross, Graham, Oliver, Buchanan and Guthrie. The Quebec French-Conservatives voted with Mr. Lemieux.

ALGONQUIN PARK.

The Highway to Health and Happiness.

No better place could be devised for a real holiday for red-blooded men and women than Algonquin Park, situated about 200 miles north of the city of Toronto. It is an unspoiled territory of nearly two million acres, starred with beautiful lakes and intersected by winding streams. No reserve in Canada can approach it in the wealth of attractions it offers to the lover of out-of-doors.

Away up in the highlands of Ontario, 2,000 feet above the level of the sea, the park is a wonderful spot in which to renew the energies of a tired body or refresh a wearied spirit. Its tonic air filters through hundreds of square miles of pine, balsam and spruce; the days are unusually long, with bright sunshine, while the cool evenings are a time of enchantment. The park is a paradise for the fisherman and canoeist; the excellence of its sport draws anglers from every part of the Dominion and from every state in the union, while the canoeist can travel for hundreds of miles in his light craft and be in a veritable kingdom of his own.

The accommodation in the park is such that the most varied tastes can be pleased. There are hotels for those who want to be in the wilderness—yet enjoy all the comforts that good service and social companionship can bring; there are groups of log cabin camps, comfortably furnished and ideal for family parties, with central lodges containing recreation and dining-rooms where you may dine and find everything ready for you on your return from the tramp; or if you have planned to camp under your own canvas you may step into a canoe at one of the little railway stations, and after a short paddle find a site unmarred by the hand of man, yet within easy reach of the park outfitting stores.

Many families now go into the park expressly for the camping, making their headquarters at the hotels long enough to get supplies and camping outfit ready for the trip. Then in canoes and with guides, or without them, they launch out into the deep woods, camping where fancy prompts.

A handsome illustrated publication telling you all about this famous park is issued by the Grand Trunk Railway, and a copy can be had free on application to C. E. Horning, Union Station, Toronto, Ont. July 31
