A Suitor Stabs his Sweetheart Eight Times and then Attempts to Kill Himself.

NEW YORK, Aug. 11.

Last night William Anderson, an ice vender, stabbed Miss Annie Cunningham eight times in the back with a jack knife at South Fifth and First streets, Williamsburgh. Anderson is 21 years old, Miss Cunningham is 18. They have been lovers, having become acquainted a year ago. The girl's parents disliked Anderson, and forbade Annie associating with him. She and her father and mother reside at the corner where Anderson stabbed her. Anderson is a tall young man; is described as industrious, quiet, and sober. Frequently since his acquaintance with Annie he has spoken to his fellow workingmen about their troubles by the intermeddling of her parents. Whenever he had an opportunity he visited Annie, and owing to the ill feeling of her parents she has met with him clandestinely.

Miss Annie is a stout blonde. Her hair falls in heavy tresses over her shoulders. She was infatuated with Anderson, but dreaded the anger of her parents. Her sister ill-treated and abused her. "She never," says a friend of hers, Miss Russell, "had a moment's rest on his account."

Two weeks ago Anderson proposed marriage. She refused, and since that time Anderson has endeavored to meet her. After his day's labor he repaired to the corner where she lived, but she refused to see him.

Last night Anderson repaired to his accustomed corner. He had been around the neighborhood all day, frequently getting into liquor stores. At 8 o'clock he saw Annie step from her house with Miss Russell. As they crossed the street he approached them. Miss Russell, after saluting him, withdrew one side. Annie stood, and after taking his proffered hand started toward Miss Russell. Anderson asked her where she was going, and before she made a reply he drew a large pocket-knife and made a lunge at her. She turned and received the blow on her shoulder. While screaming, Anderson caught her by the hair and struck her eight times. At each blow the knife went through her dress and cut ugly gashes on her back.

The girl's cries attracted attention, and Officer James Hallett tore the infuriated man from the girl, and she fell to the walk, covered with blood.

Anderson saw her fall, and he drew the bloody knife and quickly plunged it into his breast. As he made the fourth stroke the officer tore it from his hand.

Miss Cunningham was removed to her home, and Anderson taken on a stretcher to the Fourth street police station. Each is seriously hurt.

As Anderson lay on the stretcher in the police station, he said that when he spoke to Annie he did not know where he was. "I was not aware of what I did until I saw her fall. Her people abused and ill-treated her," he said, "because she thought something of me."

He denied that he stabbed her because she refused to marry him. "I never asked her to-night to marry me, but did a week ago, and she refused."

A Chinese Secret Court.

A remarkable story concerning what is known in that quarter as a Chinese Supreme Tribunal, reference to which has already been made, comes from San Francisco. This institution is said to be composed of twenty of the wealthiest and most influential Chinamen in that city, and exercises the same autocratic power among the Celestials that was wielded in Venice by the Council of Ten. Chinamen are assassinated by the order of this secret body, and the verdicts of United States Courts are often rendered null by compelling the party obtaining the verdict to refund or to indemnify his Celestial brother for any trouble caused him by the verdict of an American court. Many cases are disposed of by this Tribunal that Americans never hear of. In fact, the Chinese maintain a distinct and separate government in the heart of San Francisco in defiance of law. The escape of three young Chinese girls from the low life to which this court had condemned them resulted in the exposure and arrest of some of the leading spirits. The council room is adorned with an altar and various Chinese idols and ornaments. Two large goblin heads, made of wood and paper, are located in the corners of the room, and on the side is a still larger one, with huge glass eyes staring down into the council room. The latter has a huge jaw, which can be opened and shut by means of strings. Along the lower side of the jaw are ranged little bells which tinkle as the mouth is opened. It is well known that a large number of Chinamen have been assassinated here at the dictation of some mysterious power. The institution was started a number of years since, mainly for the purpose of looking after Chinese women, but it has since extended its powers, until it has grown into a formidable organization, which exercises a sort of judicial office among the Celestials.
