TRUTH ABOUT PRINCE RUPERT

British Newspaper Speaks of the New City of the North—Will Recover Trade.

(Vancouver Daily News-Advertiser, Jan. 1, 1909.)

Mr. E. B. Osborn, special commissioner of "Canada," the London illustrated journal, who was in Vancouver not long ago, gave a Winnipeg "Free Press" reporter some information concerning Prince Rupert. He said:

"I should think more lies have been told about Prince Rupert than about any new city ever yet sprung up in the west. For example, I was warned not to go there until the spring, unless I wished to walk 70 miles over the ice-floes to get in and out. Another Ananias (with modern improvements) told me that it rained there all day and all night all the year round. But, why repeat these libels? Prince Rupert is in the latitude of London, England, and everybody who knows the British Columbian coast knows very well that it is an ice-free port. As for the rainfall (which is said on good authority to be virtually the same as that of Vancouver, and similarly distributed through the year), all I can vouch for is that the weather was fine and mild during the week I was there.

"The harbor is the finest in Canada. It is formed by a perfectly-protected curved inlet 16 miles long, a mile broad, and 26 fathoms deep on an average. The bottom has good holding for anchors, and there is 30 feet of water at the lowest tide, by the temporary wharves. The nature of the approach from seaward has been criticised in certain quarters. But all such criticisms have been finally disposed of by Capt. J. F. Parry, R.N., of H.M.S. Egeria, which is making the admiralty survey of the entrance. He says: 'It is no breach of etiquette on my part to state that the result of the survey is entirely satisfactory in so far as the approach to Prince Rupert from seaward is concerned.' That ought to be enough for the political variant of the modern 'Ananias.'

"Of course, the real Prince Rupert is not yet in being. Until the townsite is sold—probably in May — permanent buildings cannot go up. Nearly everything there now will be swept away when the plans of the engineers are carried out. Prince Rupert is not to be a checker-board city. To my mind, that is a great point. You can't get a picturesque city on the rectangular plan. Those who know Detroit with its radiating avenues know how pleasant it is to get away from that particular form of the square deal. Prince Rupert is to have places and parks—which will prevent a fire running far—and undulating avenues and hills crowned with white edifices. It will not be one of those dull, decorous cities where a boy and a girl can't lose themselves in case of necessity. I climbed up one of the hills—probably it was what is called the Acropolis on the plan—and the view across the harbor was charming. Three years ago the site was virgin forest; and though it has been cleared, the stumps remain here and there.

"The soil, which overlies solid rock, is made of decayed vegetation, and is damp and peaty. Many of the present temporary buildings are set on piles; they look like packing cases on sticks. There are two really good hotels, and a number of dollar-a-day propositions, where they give the guests 'good, square meals,' and ask them to sleep in bunks as in French-Canadian shanties. At present it is a dry town, the sale of liquor being forbidden in view of the railway construction work going on there. It is said they make a kind of cider for the use of the citizens suffering from a chronic thirst. But nobody offered us any. Whoever wishes to get "full" must go to Port Essington, several hours' voyage, where a perpendicular person is regarded with suspicion. When I was there I asked a man with a face like a tombstone, who was reclining on the wharf, why the whole population was celebrating the occasion. 'That's so,' was his only reply. Port Essington, a miniature Seattle, will be put out of action when Prince Rupert makes it real start.

"Of course, Prince Rupert is bound to become a great seaport. It will be served by the shortest and by far the easiest freight route on the continent, and the sea journey from Prince Rupert to Yokohama is 400 miles shorter than the Vancouver route and 600 miles shorter than the distance between San Francisco and the Japanese port. Naturally, Prince Rupert will be the distributing point for all Northern British Columbia—a country richer in mineral resources than the more developed southern half — for the Yukon territory and for all the Alaskan shoreline. It will eventually recover for Canada all the trade with the north that was lost to Seattle, a live city whatever its faults, during the Klondike boom. Also, it must become a great centre of lumbering, canning and the manufacturing of fishery products. Just outside the harbor is the finest halibut fishery in the world—an asset which has not yet been realized to any extent. Good progress has been made with the grading of the first 100 miles eastward of the G. T. P., and next summer the tracklayers should be at work.

"There will be a record rush to Prince Rupert when the townsite is sold. Everywhere across the Rockies the interest in the new city is extraordinarily keen—as keen as was the interest in Dawson more than ten years ago. Anybody who can buy a city lot there will be making a good investment, if he buys to hold and not to sell again. If he does it for speculative purposes, he will be taking a hand in a game such as was seen in Winnipeg in 1881-2, though there will be more at the back of Prince Rupert than there was at the back of this city twenty-five years ago. I should like to see British and Canadian investors get the lion's share of the profits of Prince Rupert's development. As for the opportunities there for workers, not capitalists, I do not care to express an opinion. There is much unemployment on the coast, more even than on the prairies at the present time. Anybody who has a job in Winnipeg ought not to throw it up on the chance of doing better in Prince Rupert, or any other city on the coast. For the present at any rate, a job in the hand—even if it be not exactly a 'bird'—it worth two in the British Columbia bush."

Flees From the Hindus Assassins

Calcutta, India, Jan. 25.—There is no better illustration of how far native discontent has progressed here than the fact that fear of his life has compelled Sir Andrew Fraer, formerly lieutenant-governor of Bengal, to return to England by way of Madras, instead of Bombay, the usual and most convenient route.

In the past year frequent attempts have been made to murder him. Only a few days ago three Bengalis, who the police think tried to assassinate the aged statesman, were arrested while going to Madras.

The man who tried to assassinate Sir Andrew as he was presiding recently at a lecture before the Calcutta Young Men's Christian Association has been sentence to ten years at hard labor. This is the maximum punishment. As the crime was committed only three weeks ago it may be imagined that this speed of the legal machinery, usually clogged and slow-moving, has made a sensation.

Lightning Destroys a Caradoc Barn

Strathroy, Jan. 24.—The barn of Isaac Linton, on the eighth concession of Caradoc, was burned by lightning this morning.

Three cows which were in the barn were instantly killed. A quantity of hay and grain was also destroyed.

As soon as the barn was struck the neighbors quickly responded and saved the second barn and the adjoining buildings.

Mr. Linton's two sons, aged 10 and 12, were knocked down by the shock but were not dangerously hurt.

The loss will be about one thousand dollars.

The barn was insured for three hundred dollars with a small insurance on the contents.
