Mystery of the Silverwing.

"SILVERWING" was the name of a country inn where I frequently stopped nearly half a century ago, when connected with a surveying party, establishing certain dividing lines on the section known as the "fire-lands,"

It was one of the places where travellers liked to tarry, for the host was genial fellow, a good provider, and made everybody feel comfortable who found it convenient to stop at his house.

Only one thing was there to mar the perfect quiet of the place. Now and then a robbery had been committed there by some expert burglar, and with all the efforts put forth to detect the thief or thieves, no clue had been obtained that pointed with certainty in any direction.

It was generally supposed that some member or members of a regularly organized band of thieves, known to exist in that part of the country at the time of which I write, carried on the work.

In every instance the robber had got away with the plunder, leaving no distinct trace of how he came or how he went.

The landlord had a standing reward posted up in the bar-room and other places, of five hundred dollars for the apprehension of the guilty party.

I, perhaps, felt a greater interest in the affair than any other outsider: not from any danger of losing a great amount of money, for it was, unfortunately, not in my possession, but because I had formed a warm attachment for that beautiful daughter of the proprietor of the Silverwing. I had indeed become infatuated with Eleanor, and had the blessed satisfaction of knowing from her own sweet lips that my love was not bestowed in vain.

For more than a year I had become a frequent guest at her father's house, and each occasion had been one of exceeding happiness. The parents of my ideal knew that fancy for each other had ripened into a strong affection, and they most heartily encouraged the proposed union.

Eleanor at times wore a troubled look; often in the midst of a spirited conversation would lapse into silence or burst into tears, and especially was this the case when reference was made to the disrepute her father's house was likely to fall into if the crimes perpetuated in it were much longer continued.

Her emotion showed a sensitive nature, and a filial affection which strengthened my admiration, and led me to vow over and over again, with solemn oath, that I would not rest until the rogues had been detected and punished.

My first investigation developed the fact that room 13 of the chamber was the one in which the greater number of robberies had taken place; but this was accounted for from the fact that it was the best room in the house, and the one usually occupied by parties of considerable means.

The second developement was, that as the doors and windows were amply supplied with locks, bolts and bars, there must be a confederate connected with the house, for these appeared to in no way to interfere with the silent and successful working of the thieves.

My suspicions naturally fell upon the hostler, who was a shrewd fellow, faultless in deportment, but a man who kept his own counsel.

The more I thought of it, the more I became certain that I had a clue.

These suspicions were conveyed to Eleanor and her father, who were somewhat surprised at first, but finally admitted that they were not, perhaps, groundless, and both promised their full co-operation in working up a plan to bring the criminal to the surface.

I had only got my net-work arranged, as I supposed, for capturing the thief, when I was called away to attend to other and important business, which might detain me for a month.

I informed my host and Eleanor of my call to leave, and after getting a full insurance that they would play the part of detectives, according to the plans I had laid out, I took an affectionate leave of my affianced, promising to return at the earliest possible day.

I had not been away from the Silverwing more than a week, when my matters took such shape as to allow me to return.

I was glad it was so, for my heart, felt strangely sad away from the one who had awakened its first emotions of love, and I made haste to retrace my steps.

My mind had been a good deal occupied with the robbery matter, and I invented a new device for detection, which led to the unravelling of the whole affair.

I changed my clothing entirely, darkening my face, put on a pair of heavy black, false whiskers, and astride of a new horse, reached Silverwing sometime after midnight, when I knew all would be in repose.

I aroused the hostler and told him, in a changed voice, that I wished the best room in the house, as I had considerable money, and was very tired. He at once stepped into a hall and knocking at the door of the landlord, repeating my words and receiving the reply to do the best he could for me. I was of course shown to room 13, as desired.

This hostler informed me that I was the only guest at the inn that night, and could sleep as late in the morning as I chose, for I would not be disturbed.

I weighed his words well, and thought he had a purpose in telling me that I might sleep soundly, etc. I concluded to not sleep at all; so bolting the door and window securely, and making a thorough examination of the room, I threw myself upon the couch without undressing, blew out the candle, and awaited developments.

A dim light came in at the casement, allowing me from my position to see both door and window, and I kept a close watch of them.

The family clock had struck three, and I had almost given up receiving a visit, when my attention was attracted to a closet door directly in front of me. It was being silently opened, and a minute later the figure of a man appeared.

Here was a mystery that made me half believe I was dreaming. I had examined the closet closely, and there were no false doors or panels in back or sides, yet I was certain the figure before me was no mythical thing, grown out of imagination, and still further, I positively knew that I was wide awake.

Not the slightest noise had been made by the coming of the thief, and a breathless stillness prevailed.

For fully a minute, and it may have been many, neither of us moved. Through the window came sufficent light to show that a pair of eyes were bent upon the bed where I lay, as if to ascertain if its occupant was sleeping.

Apparently becoming satisfied the shadowy figure cat-like moved forward. The situation was one of more terror than I had anticipated, and my heart pounded as if it would break from my breast. Perhaps if I moved, I would the next instant feel a blade of cold steel in my flesh. To allow him to escape would undo all that I had done for detection. I thought of my affianced and resolved to act.

I had a small, single barreled pistol, and as the object came slowly to the bed I quickly leveled the weapon and pulled the trigger. It missed fire, and the burglar made for the closet again. Springing from the bed, I clutched the villain by the throat.

Twice had I thrown my adversary to the floor with all my power, before I could get hold of anything in the way of a weapon. Luckily, I stumbled against a chair; seizing this, the contest was soon brought to a close: one crushing blow laid the interloper senseless upon the floor.

The noise brought the family to my door, and unbolting it, the landlord and hostler rushed in. The lights which they bore revealed a sight more terrible to me than the suspense of a few moments before.

A bleeding and apparently lifeless form lay before us. The blow I had given removed a cap which allowed a profusion of beautiful, long, dark tresses to flow out upon the floor.

One glance at the bruised and blood stained face, told the whole story. For a moment I stood paralyzed; the landlord looked me full in the face and spoke my name. I only had power to utter a single word: ELEANOR! and staggered from my room.

An hour was spent in wandering, bewildered thought. Had I killed my own sole idol? I dreaded to know the truth. The sweet, bloood stained face haunted me at every turn, and I was glad when the daylight came to drive the phantom away.

I was met at the steps of the inn by the landlord, who informed me that his daughter would like to see me.

"Then she is not dead?"

"She is not seriously injured," were the welcome words that fell upon my ear, and I hastened to the room where Eleanor was sitting in an armed chair, with a bandage around her fair brow.

Upon entering I was motioned to a seat close beside her, and taking my hand in hers, she sat silent for some time.

At last she spoke in a clear collected voice, telling me that all was now over, and her happy dream of a loving and sinless life was ended.

The crimes she had committed had not been her voluntary actions; her father had compelled her to do the deeds; had prepared trap doors in the closets; had provided the male attire for her to wear. She had only acted in obedience to a law she had never been allowed to think could be disobeyed.

She told me that I had kept my vow to detect and punish the thief, and she would ask but one more pledge—that of secrecy, and then we would forget all else, or remember it only as a dream.

Her father hoped for my mercy, and only asked a trial as a test of his pledge to never violate the law again at the Silverwing.

The hostler, who was an entirely innocent party, would keep the secret and retain his position.

The question of justice came up, and for a moment battled with my stricken heart, and, dear reader, you know which conquored. I vowed not to ever divulge the secret so long as either of the guilty parties lived, and I kept it.

I will not attempt to describe my parting with Eleanor. It was painfully bitter; the poor girl mourned as if her heart would break, and I wept as I had never done before.

We never met again. I dared not venture a visit to the Silverwing, knowing too well that I had left the life light of my soul there, and I knew her too well to encourage the hope for a moment that she would ever renew the troth-plight.

Both she and her father have been for long years beyond the cold river.

I am an old man now, but there is upon my heart of hearts a spot as green as the valley in spring time, an imprint for eternity, a name engraved there which is part of my existence, and that is the name of my misguided ELEANOR.

DIED

"In the United States, alone, during the past twelve years, over One Million people, (about one hundred thousand annually) of that incurable disease Consumption. Medical statistics go to show, that over three-fourths of the alarming devastation of human life had its origin in neglected Catarrh, or, as it is more commonly spoken of, 'cold in the head.' What a blessed God-send it would be, could some local remedy be found, and offered to the catarrh sufferer, that would Effectually and Permanently Cure him. When shall such a remedy be found?"—U. S. Journal of Medicine, Aug. 1877.

It Has Been Found!

and for over thirty years has been the favorite and prized remedy of an eminent physician in his private practice. During the past two years, where it has been advertised and brought to the notice of the catarrh invalid, over three thousand cases have been permanently cured by its use. Hundreds of unsolicited testimonials on file at the offices of the Huxley Medical Dispensary bear testimony, that Old Doctor Huxley's is without a parallel in the cure of all catarrhal affections. Pleasant to take, speedy in its work, instantaneous in giving relief, and effectual and permanent in its cure. The most obstinate and hopeless cases cured in from One to Three months. It has cured cases of from Twelve to Fifteen years standing, where every other medicine had utterly failed. Remember, it is sold under a positive guarantee to cure, and is Not a Patent Medicine. So sanguine is the proprietor of the great good it will accomplish, that he unhesitatingly offers for an incurable case of catarrh.

Golden Cure for Catarrh

Catarrh Not Incurable.

Our past experience and success has taught us that Catarrh is not incurable, whether it be Acute, Chronic or Ulcerative. The final fatality is owing to delay, or ignorance of good remedies which do actually exist, and which would cure the terrible sufferer if reasonably and properly employed. Also, that a disease that is wholy incurable by one remedy is easily and Perfectly Curable by another.

Old Doctor Huxley's Golden Cure for Catarrh will be sent to any address on receipt of the price:—$1.00 per bottle, $5.00 for six bottles, or $9 00 for twelve bottles. Address,

THE perfection and great simplicity of the Williams Singer Sewing Machines, have placed them ahead of all other makers, and notwithstanding that, all other sewing machine companies find their trade constantly reduced being now not one-half of what it was in former years, and give as a reason hard times. The C. W. Williams Manufacturing Company find their trade rapidly increasing. Their sales in the month of May, 1877, were one-third more than they ever made in one month since the Company had an existence. What does it mean? Simply this that the Williams Singer is the best Sewing Machine made. The ladies find it out, tell their friends and neighbors, and so sales are increased.

DR. HALLOCK'S
Or the EXILIR of LIFE.
This justly celebrated Cordial is the only efficacious remedy for those sad derangements of the body and mind caused by early improper habits of youth or indulgence of the passions, the effects of which are prostration, dyspepsia, pain in the head and dimness or vision, weakness of the back and lower extremities, weakness of memory and power for mental application; dejection, aversion to society, timidity and self-distrust. Young and middle-aged men may here learn why they are declining in health, why they are losing their youthful appearance and vigor, why they are disinclined to business, and incapacitated for matrimonial alliance.
The Lucina Cordial has restored thousands of persons to health and vigor who have ignorantly injured themselves in youth. Procure it, then; you can use it without exposure or hindrance to business, at home or abroad, and be restored.
Objection has been naturally made to the price of this Cordial, because the trash that has been thrown on the market, in opposition to it, is sold cheaper, but the fact is, it cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costliest things in nature; whereas the others are made up of cheap drugs, worth but little in money and less in merit.
We assure our readers that the utmost reliance may be placed on the LUCINA CORDIAL in the cure of the maladies mentioned above, and also to those which follow,: Loss of Muscular Energy, Physical Lassitude and General Prostration, Irritability and all Nervous Affections, Indigestion, Sluggishness of the Liver, and every disease in any way connected with the procreative functions, in all of which it will effect almost instant relief, and if used as directed, is almost certain to produce a positive and permanent cure. Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness, should take the Cordial, as it infallibly restores health and vigor in a brief period.
Sold only at Dr. Hallock's office, 110 Court st., Boston, and sent by express to all parts of the country, free from observation. Address all letters to the HALLOCK MEDICAL INSTITUTE 110 Court st., Boston, Mass Post Office Box 1218.
Dr. HALLOCK'S MEDICAL MUSEUM OF ANATOMY, 110 Court st. Admittance free. Dr. Hallock's may be consulted free, daily on all diseases in both sexes. DR. HALLOCK, 110
