SHARP AS A STEEL TRAP.

Nothing like being sharp in this world. Tom Average of this city is not the only one in the world who believes this to be true.

And yet he is not so certain, after all, but that there is such a thing as being too smart.

Tom is looked upon by those who know him best as being an oleaginous fraud, although the church to which he belongs looks upon him in quite another light. He is always foremost in charities and other good works, and possibly may have without meaning it, done some good work in the world.

Not long since, it was decided to have a fair in the church to which he belonged, and as usual, Tom was one of the important committeemen.

This fair was something of a success, but nearly all of the valuable articles remained unsold, and so Tom suggested that they be disposed of by lottery. This idea became instantly popular, for among other things to be got rid of was a valuable piano and several choice paintings.

Tom was voted just the man to conduct such a scheme as this, and he was at once given full power to go ahead with the lottery. And this pleased him very much, for he was determined to get that piano himself.

It may as well be stated here as elsewhere, that Tom Average was a broker—a Wall street operator—a man who considered himself as sharp as a steel trap; and that he at once took measures to manipulate affairs in such a way as to secure himself that valuable piano.

This manipulation was to be affected by the tickets, and as he had everything in his own hand, there was no reason why he should not succeed.

So he proceeded to number them, placing the grand number which was to win the piano at 502, and, at the same time, marking the number down on a piece of paper on his table, so that he might not forget it.

After this had been fixed, he handed the tickets all over to a committee of ladies to sell, and then went about his business as if nothing had happened.

And nothing had happened up to this time.

It must be understood that the bundle of corresponding tickets were given to the minister, by him to be kept from all eyes until after they were drawn out of the wheel in the regular way, while those for sale, with corresponding numbers, were given out to the committee.

Now there was a young lady in the family where Tom boarded who did not exactly believe in his piety or honesty. She had seen quite enough to convince her that he was but a trifle better than the ordinary run to rascals, although his landlady had every belief in him.

This young lady saw the number 205 marked on the piece of paper, with a circle drawn around it, and she at once suspected that he was up to some roguery. Five hundred and two was, undoubtedly, to be a large prize, and she resolved to head him off. She was doing up the work in his chamber at the time of her discovery, and taking a piece of rubber, she obliterated 502 and wrote 502 in the same place.

That evening Tom returned from business, and after dinner he slicked himself up, preparatory to visiting the fair, now on its closing night, calculating to buy a package of tickets, including, of course, that particular number.

It had already slipped from his mind, but just before starting away he consulted his memorandum; 502, that was it, of course; he remembered it now well enough; 502, and he repeated to himself.

Thus refreshed in memory, he started for the vestry, to carry out his sharp little game; and that pretty servant girl also slicked up and went to the fair. She took about as much notice of him as he did of her, in everything save the purchase of tickets; in this respect Sarah took more notice of him than he did of her. She kept pretty close to him until she heard him call for several tickets, among which was 205, and then she felt sure that her suspicions were correct.

Tom purchased about fifty dollars' worth of tickets, to make it appear that he was above suspicion, and finding the magic 502 among the number he at once proposed to sell or do almost anything else. In fact he gave away nearly all of the tickets to poor people, and made himself very popular with everybody save the suspicious Sarah. He snubbed her completely, not even recognizing her presence, and she said that he had a very good reason for doing so.

But the fair was brought to a close, and the announcement made that the remaining articles were to be disposed of the following night by lottery, the tickets to which were nearly all sold at a dollar a piece.

Tom Average felt so good that he bought more tickets and gave them away to a lot of young ladies, wishing each, at the same time the good luck to draw the piano, the particular object on which everybody's heart seemed to be set. At all events, the tickets were nearly all disposed of before the evening was over, and the party retired to dream of coming luck.

The next evening the vestry of the church was crowded, and after some delay the drawing commenced. Tom in the meantime, had given his ticket, 502, in charge of a particular business friend, so as to appear above suspicion himself when the result was made known.

So the drawing progressed, the numbers coming out of the wheel in all kinds of figures, from one to one thousand. Some proclaimed blanks, and others drew washboards, tin whistles, mouse traps, babies' stockings, a paper of pins, a picture—in fact a sample of everything to be found at the fag end of a fair; and finally 502 was drawn, and the prize of the Grand Piano announced.

Tom Average leaped to his feet; so did many others.

"Who has No. 502?" asked the minister."

"I have," replied Sarah Smith, rising and blushing.

Tom Average sat down on his seat like a lump of dough.

"Goodness gracious!" said everybody; "Sarah Smith to draw that beautiful piano, and only a servant girl! Going to be married next month to Harry Browne! Oh, oh!"

Sarah smiled, and was satisfied.

But Tom Average was not; and to this day, although he believes in being smart, he can't understand how he made such an expensive mistake. Sarah has been married since, but she keeps her own counsel.

"What's the matter there, Alice? Don't your shoes fit?" "No, papa, they don't fit me at all," replied the little one. "Why, they don't even squeak when I go out for a walk."

"If I put my money in the savings bank, when can I get it out again?" asked one of the newly-arrived. "Och!" said his friend, "sure an' if you put it in to-day you can draw it out to-morrow by giving sixty days' notice."

A boy living on the Sugar Hollow road ate twenty-one buckwheat cakes one day last week, and so disturbed his stomach as to cause his death in three days after. The last words he uttered were of modest triumph. He said: "I slung 'em!"

A Troy editor took his wife to New York Friday. The conductor, when he came along, recognized our Troy brother as entitled to free passage, but knowing the lady, whispered to him, "Is this lady a friend of yours?" "No, no," said the Troy editor, in haste; "she is my wife."

A lawyer in Bucyrus, Ohio, stated at a temperance meeting that, having seen his father killed by the carelessness of a drunken man, he took a solemn oath never to drink again. "Since that time," he continued, "I have never broken that oath, at least not very much.

Some people are not endowed with the faculty of seeing a joke. Lord Morpeth used to tell of a Scotch friend, who to the remark that some people could not feel a jest unless it was fired at them with a cannon, replied: "weel, but hoo can ye fire a jest out of a cannon, mon?"

Conversation in the horse-car: First Young Lady—Father says that we girls must be economical, for the panic has struck him. What does your father say? Second Young Lady—Oh he don't say much; you know pa is so slow that I don't believe he'll hear the panic is in town till it has most gone away.

A wife wanted her husband to sympathize with her in a feminine quarrel, but he refused, saying, "I've lived long enough to learn that one woman is just as good as another, if not better." "And I," retorted the exasperated wife, "have lived long enough to learn that one man is just as bad as another, if not worse!"

A politician, trying to find the way home, ran foul of a tree. He didn't dare to let go, for fear of falling, and yet he wanted to go home. So he kept on walking till he went round the tree eleven and a half times—then let go and struck a lamp post. He went round this fourteen times, and stopped, looked to see where he was, and said; "All right got so far now—know the rest of the way first rate."

PROSTRATION, resulting from the effects of the intense heat of the summer months, is the pre-disposing cause to so many of the diseases peculiar to hot weather. The stomach partaking of the loss of vitality pervading the whole system, is unable to complete digestion; the food passing undissolved through the bowels, irritates the lining membrane, and Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Cholera Morbus, and when prevailing, Asiatic Cholera may be excited.—Attention to diet, moderate exercise, bathing and regular habits must be observed. To maintain the vital forces and prevent lassitude and exhaustion, Dr. Wheeler's Compound Elixir and Calisaya is unquestionably reliable, as it invigorates the digestive organs, and supplies material for generating nerve force.

TAKE NOTICE. That the reliable Old Johnstown Mutual Fire Insurance Company is daily increasing in business and in the confidence of the public. All losses promptly paid. Head office, Brockville

EXHIBITION! North Lanark Agricultural Society. The annual exhibition of the North Lanark Agricultural Society, will be held on the Agricultural Grounds in the Village of Almonte on Tuesday & Wednesday, 29th and 30th September, 1874. The Prize List which has been very much enlarger can be had on application to the Secretary. As the Directors are endeavouring to do all that is necessary in keeping up to the reputation which this society has so justly earned, it is to be hoped that the members will put themselves to a little extra trouble and inconvenience to bring to the exhibition all and such samples of produce as they have, during the year, endeavored to cultivate, grow or manufacture. There are many articles of a domestic nature made by our farmer's wives and daughters which, if brought out and placed on exhibition, would attract attention. We hope to see them brought forward in every variety, on this occasion. If the members do their duty on this occasion, as the Directors have done, this will be one of the most successful exhibitions ever held by this Society.

Remember—Special Prizes given to such articles as are worthy of merit, though not placed on the Prize List.

THOMAS COULTER,
Secretary.
