The Farmer's Corner.

Parson Murray on Harnessing the Colt.

When the foal is 15 months old we begin to educate him to harness. Most colts, remember are timid; they are born so. The first day we simply put saddle without the back-strap on, buckling up the belly-band loosely. This is done many times, increasing the pressure. Then we take the neck collar and put it over his head, first permitting him to smell it, and touch it with his nose, until he is entirely convinced that it is not calculated to hurt him. In like manner we add part to part until the colt is fully harnessed. He is then allowed to stand with the harness on until he has time to reflect upon the whole matter, and become accustomed to the pressure of the harness against his sensitive skin; for we must remember that all this performance seems very queer to him, and startling. When he has fully composed his mind, and settled down into conviction that everything is all right and as it should be with him, he is then walked about, the harness still on, and brought back every few minutes to the spot where he is to be unharnessed, and taught to stand as long as it would naturally take to remove the harness. Straps are loosened, buckle tongues started, saddle and collar eased; in short, everything done that would be done in unharnessing, save removing the harness. After several times, this standing still while being unharnessed has come to be, in his mind, a part of the programme, and he understands it, and assents to it as such. Once learned in the case of an intelligent horse, always learned. This same process should be gone through with in the case of a high spirited, valuable colt, once or twice each day, for a week at least. And remember that he is learning many lessons in one, including that the greatest of all a colt can learn; viz., to have confidence in and yield his will to man. Have great patience at this point of his education, and proceed, step by step, advancing no further than your pupil's success justifies. During the harness exercises, accustom the colt to pressure against breast and shoulder by tying long cords into the buckle either side of the collar, and pulling gently, causing him to brace himself, as he would naturally do, against it. This gives him the idea of drawing weight somewhere behind him, and by permitting him to pull you along, he will grow to feel that he can pull anything.—The Golden Rule.

Systematic Farming.

The great object in farming, as in every other pursuit, is to make the business pay. If this end is not gained, there is certainly something wrong. If the men who feed the nation are inadequately remunerated the evil is too great to be trifled with, and the first duty of the farmer is to trace out the causes. Until he does this he is simply groping in the dark. No man can remedy an evil until he understands it. If two men cultivating adjoining ground, with soils alike and other conditions similar, present a marked difference in the result of their labors, one getting invariably larger products and better prices than the other, we should not think of charging the losses of the slovenly farmer to accidental causes, but would naturally conclude that the difference is in the men and in the manner of conducting their business. In one case there is little or no thought or enterprise, and a total lack of system and of method. In the other the labor of the hand is guided by a fertile brain, and the business of the farm is reduced to a system. Clearly, then, if husbandry is to be made profitable, it must be done just as in the case of any other business, by adopting the best methods. If we expect as farmers to make our vocation lucrative, we must make it more systematic in its processes. If all other industries are carried on with more attention to rules, methods and principles than the cultivation of the soil, how can we be surprised if they outstrip the latter in prosperity.—Christian Union.

CHARCOAL FOR POULTRY.—The benefit which fowls derive from charcoal is, I believe, acknowledged.—The method of putting it before them is, however, not well understood. Powdered charcoal is not in the shape in which fowls usually find their food, and consequently is not very conducing to them. I have found that corn burnt on the cob, and the refuse—which consists almost entirely of the grains reduced to charcoal, and still retaining their perfect shape—placed before them is greedily eaten by them, with a marked improvement in their health, as is shown by the brighter color of their combs, and their sooner producing a greater average of eggs to the flock than before.—S. Rufus Mason, in the Poultry World.

CLOVER AN ACCUMULATOR OF NITROGEN.—Dr. Voelcker, by a series of the most exhaustive analyses of soils and plants, has discovered and established the fact that an immense amount of nitrogenous food accumulates in the soil during the growth of clover, especially in the surface soil amounting, including that in the clover roots and tops, to three and a half tons of nitrogen per acre, equal to four tons and a third of ammonia. If this be a fact, the wonderful effects of clover, vetch, and similar plants on the soil ceases to be mysterious, and the farmer need no longer buy ammonia in his commercial fertilizers, but only add to the soil the lime and other ash elements required, which can be cheaply furnished in available forms.

The other day a cow, the property of Mr. Gilmour, of Cahenny, parish of Abgadowey, after laboring under some peculiar disease, died and on being opened it was found that the horn of it was larger than usual. It was evidently opened, when an animal, like an eel in shape, measuring inches in circumference, inches in the body, with hairy fibres, was found occupying the centre cavity of the heart. As indeed, nothing but a shell; the creature, which had a nose and ears like a squirrel, and seemed to be almost entirely composed of blood, having eaten and appropriated the whole of the interior of the distressed animal's heart.—Coleraine Chronicle.

LUMBERERS, ATTENTION!

I AM SOLE AGENT FOR THE

WOODBRIDGE SAW MILL,

which with the late improvements, stands unrivalled.

This Machine requires no expensive puffing, as it has by its own merits become the leading Saw Mill of Canada.

It is so geared that the Saw makes two revolutions to one stroke of the piston, thus avoiding the shaking caused by direct action.
