GREGORY SOLD.

He Was a Pretty Man, So He Was, Sure He Was Mr. Fellows.

The origin of the attack on Hon. J. I. Fellows' seat is rather amusing, but the farce might have been succeeded by a tragedy. An inquisitive farmer from the country was in the capital asking who's who of the great men in the Queen Hotel: a wag pointed out a particularly good-looking sojourner there, as "the great Mr. Fellows, you know, our agent general in London." And so this independent farmer went up to him: "Why, be you Mr. Fellows that's a goin' into our House of Lords?" "Yes, I'm the man." Well, now, let's licker on to it." And so the new friends did; and in confidential terms he asked, "Goah, so glad I met you; now, do tell, how much did you give Blair and McLellan for that lift up, eh?" "Oh, not much, only $10,000." "Jumminey! thet's jest what I said, only I thought it was $5,000." But the hotel friend being dry and ready for another drink, repeated, "Yes, $10,000!" And so for the honor of a drink with one made of money, he ordered another tot; and then ran off to his friend Gregory with all the news. Gregory, elated that he had at last found the dynamite charge that would blowup Blair and his accursed government, brought his skill to bear and the fight went on to the bitter end.

Of course the real Mr. Fellows was not in the plot; gave no money to Mr. Blair, or any other man, for it was at the request of Mr. Blair that Mr. Fellows entered the Legislative Council that he might be the more useful to his native province. The wag told his little joke to the agent general, who enjoyed the fun, and offered an apology; but the Queen Hotel visitant still swears he must have been Mr. Fellows "for I hearn he was a owful good lookin' man, and this man was."

A Surprise Party at Rev. Mr. Stewart.

A pleasant surprise. The Brussell St. Baptist congregation took their pastor and his good lady quite by surprise last evening, About six o'clock a gentleman in the ice cream business called at the parson's with a freezer full of delicious ice cream. Mrs. Stewart answered the ring of the bell and protested against the ice cream entering the house as she had not ordered it. Mrs. S. said "she just loved ice cream but this was not for her and the good man must go elsewhere to find his customer." The gentleman with the ice cream was "in the secret" and he insisted on leaving it. At last Rev. Mr. Stewart was called and Adam like decided to partake of the forbidden fruit or at least to allow it to be brought into the house. About 8 p. m. people began dropping into the parsonage, one after another until the house was packed to overflowing with a very happy party. After spending a very pleasant evening together and consuming the contents of the freezer Mr. E. M. Sipprell, finance minister of Brussell street Baptist church called the congregation to order and in a neat little speech presented Mr. and Mrs. Stewart with a casket full of money. Mr. Stewart replied assuring the flock that they would be always welcome at the parsonage especially if they brought a nice little casket like the one they brought on this occasion. Aftersinging and prayer the party broke up.

The Athletic Meets.

The members of the Y. M. C. A Athletic club met last evening to the number of twenty-five, Mr. Geo. Jeakins in the chair. Discussion took place with regard to club representation in the Beaver's sports to be held on Thursday next. The Y. M. C. A,s will have a number of contestants in these sports, who will probably sustain the credit of the organization to which they belong. The sports of the Y. M. C. A. A. A. club will be held on the 7th of May, the special committee believing that they can obtain the Lansdowne rink for that purpose.

Sir:—I wish to announce to the bandmaster of the Artillery band the music they played at the Exhibition of Centuries was splendidly played and that they need a great credit for the way they play their music.
