THE ROYAL COMMISSION.

Sir John tells what he knows about the great Scandal—Why Sir Hugh spent his money in the elections—Must have a Railway.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

OTTAWA, Sept. 18.

Yesterday was liveliier, in many respects than the general run of days in Ottawa. A large number of strangers were in the city—some to see the citizen soldiers firing harmless cartridges at imaginary foes in Cartier Square; others to witness the Dominion Rifle match now in progress, and others again to visit the Royal Commission, where a different kind of shooting was going on; where Huntington's witnesses act like a gale of wind across a rifle range, blowing all his shots wide of the target.

THE FORENOON was chiefly occupied in reading over Campbell's evidence, to which he made some additions. While this was in progress Sir Hugh Allan entered and took his seat beside Mr. Abbott. Just over his head hung a very large map of America, and Sir Hugh had just got comfortably seated when down came the map with such a commotion as only a map can make, and for a few moments completely hiding the Knight of Ravenscraig from mortal view. Sir Hugh may be hard to beat; but in this Pacific Railway matter it is time for him to give in when

THE WHOLE CONTINENT OF AMERICA COMES DOWN ON HIM.

At 2 o'clock the Commission adjourned for half an hour, Judge Day announcing that Sir John A. Macdonald, would then be examined.

Long before the half hour was up the room was crowded, by a mixed audience of M. P's, lawyers, merchants and politicians. At the time named, Sir John was called, and began his testimony in narrative form, giving a complete history of the Pacific Railway matters, from the admission of British Columbia to the present time. The substance of it has already appeared in print in the testimony of Sir Francis Hincks, Mr. Campbell and others. When Sir John approached the points concerning his and Cartier's dealings with Sir Hugh, a perfect stillness reigned in the room. Sir John's utterances were made with great clearness, and from first to last his statements were made in the most unreserved manner. The charge of having an understanding with Sir Hugh respecting the sale or disposal of the Charter received a comprehensive denial.

After relating his efforts to induce McPherson to consent to an amalgamation of the two Companies, previous to the general election, Sir John telegraphed to Sir George as follows:

"JULY 26th, 1872.

"Sir George Cartier, Canada:

"Have seen Macpherson. He has no personal ambition, but cannot in justice to Ontario concede any preference to Quebec in the matter of the Presidency, or in any other particular. He says the question about the Presidency should be left to the Board. Under these circumstances I authorize you to assure Allan that the influence of the Government will be exercised to secure him the position of President, the other terms to be as agreed on between Macpherson and Abbott, and the whole matter to be kept quiet until after the election; then the two gentlemen to meet the Privy Council at Ottawa, and settle the terms of a provisional agreement. This is the only practical solution of the difficulty, and should be accepted at once by Allan. Answer.

"(Signed)

"JOHN A. MACDONALD."

On the 30th of July Sir John received a letter from Sir Hugh Allan, stating that he had come to an arrangement with Sir George Cartier. He did not send a copy of the arrangement, but stated it generally. Sir John went on say:

"I was not satisfied with this. It was "not in accordance with my programme "of the 26th, and although it was exceedingly inconvenient for me to leave "Kingston just then (being engaged in "my election) I telegraphed back that I "would not consent to it all, and that I "would go down to Montreal that night "or the next, so that there should be no "misunderstanding about the matter. It "appears that Sir George saw Sir Hugh "at once and informed him that I objected "to the arrangement, and that unless "the position contained in my telegram "of the 26th were adhered to, I would go "down to Montreal. I received two telegrams, one from Sir George and the "other from Sir Hugh, dated 31st July. "Cartier said, 'I have seen Sir Hugh. "He withdraws the letter written to you "since you object to it, and relies for a "basis of arrangement on your telegram "to me.' Sir Hugh said, 'I have seen Sir "George to-day. You may return my "letter or regard it as waste paper. It "was never regarded as anything official.' "This was the only arrangement that was "ever made between the Government and "Sir Hugh Allan, or the Canada Pacific "Company, and I had no communication "or instruction in a contrary sense, "either from Sir Hugh Allan or any member of his company, or Sir George Cartier, from that day to this."

That is an unreserved statement upon that point. Sir John was equally definite upon other points. Previous to the election he told Sir George that the fiercest contest would be in Ontario, and he hoped that Sir George's Montreal friends would aid in the Montreal elections. During the contest Sir John received a letter from Sir Hugh in which the latter volunteered a subscription of toward the Ontario elections. Not one cent of this was used in Sir John's election.

Afterwards Sir John found that the struggle was fiercer than he anticipated, and that the Opposition were "spending two dollars to our one." Constant appeals were made to him as the leader of the party, and he sent to Montreal for further aid, receiving making $45,000 in all subscribed by Sir Hugh to the Ontario elections. The money was sent to different constituencies; but Sir John did not know particulars or its disposal. He paid his own election expenses out of his own pocket. Sir John then took up McMullen's statement respecting interviews with the Premier, money loaned to him, arrangements with Sir George and Sir Hugh, and showed each one of them to be either absolutely false, or so distorted as to bear slight resemblance to the truth.

To-day Sir John concluded his evidence, and put in the copies of the letters given him by McMullen.

Judge Day questioned him as to Sir Hugh's motives for spending such large sums of money. Sir John said it was a great matter to Sir Hugh to secure the return of a railway Parliament, whether he got the Charter or not. The Grand Trunk Railway Company were
