BLIND TOM'S DECLINE.

The Famous Musical Prodigy Passing His Last Days in an Asylum.

The greatest musical wonder of the negro race—"Blind Tom"—who for years delighted the public with his remarkable performances upon the piano, is passing the closing days of his life amid the pathetic scenes of an insane asylum.

Tom, in the days of slavery, was the property of General James N. Bethune, a planter of Georgia, who, after the war moved to Virginia and took up his residence on an estate near the town of Warrenton, one of the prettiest villages in the old commonwealth, a classic spot in the history of the war, and noted then as now for its cultivated and pleasure-loving people. Here it was, in the shadow of the beautiful Blue Ridge Mountains, that "Blind Tom's" genius unfolded itself, found vent in that atmosphere of refinement and culture, and finally astonished the world.

His masterpiece, "The Battle of Manassas" (which was fought a few miles away), is a miracle of imaginative form. His conception of the event captivates the ear with its first chord, and in the execution that follows he imitates the music of the fife and drums, the charge of the cavalry, the thunder of the batteries, and the agony of the wounded and dying so faithfully that a great martial panorama seems to float through the fancy of the hearer.

When a mere lad Tom would conceal himself in his master's house, and after midnight creep into the parlors and play the same airs with which his young mistress had entertained her guests a few hours before, being cautious to suppress his notes by placing his foot on the "soft" pedal. He was soon detected, however in this innocent diversion and reprimanded. The children of the household, were delighted with his marvelous powers, encouraged him to play on all occasions by stealth. But his genius became so manifest that his master found it to his interest to have it cultivated and turned to profit.

Tom has been a simpleton from his birth. As an evidence of his mental weakness he invariably applauded himself by clapping his hands and appeared as if in a fit of ecstacy after each performance.

Although nature fashioned him simple-minded she gracefully atoned for this shortcoming, attuned his gentle soul to a wondrous harmony.

Previous to his retirement he could reproduce the notes of the most extraordinary reformers. Eminent musicians who have tasted his acumen for music agree that he has the finest native ear for one who was born blind that has ever come under their notice.

SHE COULD ARISE AND WALK.

Sudden Recovery of a Woman Long Helpless from Paralysis.

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—Ten years ago Miss Nellie Bennett, a daughter of Barnardus Bennett, of Jamaica, became afflicted with a spinal trouble, which finally deprived her of the use of her legs, so that she could not walk without the aid of crutches. At times she was confined to her bed. Three weeks ago she visited a friend, Mrs. Montfort, in India street, Greenpoint. One evening while there she had her lap full of pictures and photographs, which she was examining. While she was doing this she surprised Mrs. Montfort by calling out to her to come and take away the pictures, as she was going to get up. Her actions and tone alarmed Mrs. Montfort, who said:

"Wait until I get your crutches."

"I don't want my crutches," replied Miss Bennett. "I feel that I can walk without them."

Miss Bennett is about 40 years old and quite stout. The answer startled Mrs. Montfort, but she was more amazed when Miss Bennett arose from her chair and started to walk across the floor. At first her step was wavering and undecided, but it became firm before she walked across the room. Mrs. Montfort wanted to help her, but she needed no help. She was so elated over her recovery that her friends had difficulty in restraining her from exhausting herself. The following Wednesday she returned to her home in Jamaica. Her mother caught sight of her entering the house without the aid of crutches and, it is said, she actually fainted. Then her sister, Mrs. Siney, saw her and she, too, it is declared, fainted.

When Miss Bennett appeared in the streets of Jamaica without the aid of her crutches she was greeted with astonishment by her friends. Her recovery appears to be permanent.

Dr. P. M. Wood, of Jamaica, who has attended her for more than twelve years, said her sudden restoration was remarkable. He said she was afflicted with paralysis of the spine, and that palsy of the lower half of the body had fully developed. She had not received any treatment for her malady for three years.

In describing her recovery, Miss Bennett says only that she suddenly felt life rush through her limbs. She felt she could walk, and on the impulse she stood up.
