Mr. ARMSTRONG. I think the minister understood my remarks very well. However, I may say that in the appointment of six men I was urging upon the minister the necessity of looking not solely to one political party but to see that some members of that commission were adherents of the opposite party. I did refer to the Civil Service Act of the United States, in which only two men out of three can be adherents of one party. I referred to several examining boards in the United States to show that a similar law is in force, and is giving satisfaction throughout the country.

Mr. CONMEE. I am prepared to accept that version of the hon. gentleman's earlier remarks. For myself I should be opposed to any measure that would take out of the control of parliament appointments to the civil service. I believe our system is better than that of the United States, and better than that which is invoked as in operation in the mother country.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) suggested that members of one party were confident the government would change hands at the next election. I ask him if he really thinks that those gentlemen give proof of a judgment sufficiently mature to warrant them being placed on a board of such great responsibility?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That is the best kind of proof, because the minister will realize that so far as this party is concerned, one of the strong planks in our platform is to bring about civil service reform in this country, and my suggestion as to appointments on the commission would be one step in that direction.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend weakens his argument again that we should take men from the Conservative party for this commission, because it does not show as mature judgment as it ought to show for a man to be qualified to take such a responsible position. The question of civil service reform is one that I will not discuss at present. I think my hon. friend has taken an undue advantage of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) in getting in ahead of him on this great question of civil service reform. Now as to the appointments, no person will argue that the late Mr. Justice Killam was a partisan. At the present moment I have not the faintest idea of what his politics were, or ever had been. He was selected as a man of great ability, without any reference whatever to his politics. So as a matter of fact, appointments have not all been made from one political party.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What about the other two ?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend only asks for one-third of the appointments, and when I point out to him that all the appointments have not gone to the Liberal party, he ought to be satisfied with that, without asking any more. Now as to the chief commissionership, I want to say that no applications for this position are being considered or will be considered. The government is looking for a man, and no man is looking for this position : if he were ; we would think that a reason why he should not have it. The government is trying to get for the position of chief commissioner the best man available. I may say that in this case men are not seeking for the position, but the position is seeking for the man. The salary is not as large possibly as it might be, but still the government is in hopes of securing a first class man to succeed the late Justice Killam, and if he occupies that position as ably as the late justice did, the country and the government will be satisfied. As to the other appointments, I would remind the hon. gentleman that in Canada a large number of independents are springing up, and my hon. friend might get somewhat at sea if he went on the assumption that there were only two parties in this country.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I distinctly said that no matter what government was in power it would be their duty to see that only four out of the six members of this commission should be adherents of one party. I did not say what party the others should belong to.

Mr. GRAHAM. I may say that men are changing their minds continually. Many men who were Conservatives a few years ago are now proud to be Liberals, consequently you see the rule might not work. It is said of civil servants that they usually support whatever party is in power, as some other people do. So you see this rule could not be adhered to rigidly. The government has the responsibility of making these appointments, the government is wholly responsible to this House and to the people for what they do. We are in hopes of being able to select men for these positions fully competent to carry out the duties thereof, and we do not propose to permit the question of their political leanings to enter into the decision at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think it is unkind for the Minister of Railways and Canals, even in the absence of the Minister of Public Works, to make that indirect reference to the New Brunswick elections. Now as to the appointment of the chief commissioner, or of any position to the bench, it is an extreme form of partisanship which compels, or impels, any government to look solely within the ranks of its own party. I think that the wise course in all such cases would be to look for the best man to fill the position ; and that is a course which I think the government of the late Sir John A. Macdonald, and particularly Sir John himself, followed on a good many occasions. Now the office of chief commissioner of this board demands a very unusual combination of qualities. Any one who has seen something of the work of that board, any one who has appreciated at all the work which Judge Killam did as chairman, must thoroughly comprehend that. The man selected in the first place, ought to be a very able lawyer. If possible it would be well to have one who has had experience for a term upon the judicial bench which will have given to him a certain training in that regard. He ought to be a man of great firmness and strength of character, ready to withstand the encroachments of corporate power on the one hand and the possible injustice of popular clamour on the other. Last but not least if the plan which the government is proposing to adopt in this Bill is carried out, he ought to be a man of considerable executive and administrative ability, a man endowed with the genius for organization, because I believe that if there is one thing more than another which the Railway Commission requires it is a thorough organization of its system and methods from beginning to end. This is certainly, as I have said, a very unusual combination of qualities, and the question is whether or not the salary and position will attract the proper man. I have not as much confidence as the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals in the belief, or even the supposition, that there are no persons looking after the office at the present moment.

Mr. GRAHAM. It may surprise my hon. friend to know that there are not more than two gentlemen in Canada who have suggested their own names, or whose names have been suggested by others, as candidates for this position. I would not say the same as to the other positions, but the chairmanship seems to have been left practically in the hands of the government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The positions that I had more in mind were the four appointments to the board and not so much that of the chief commissioner. I would be prepared to accept the assurance of the hon. minister in that regard, but I would like to impress, if there is any necessity of impressing, upon my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals and the government, the very great responsibility which I think lies upon them at the present moment of making a proper appointment to the chairmanship of that board. I do not think there is a single appointment in Canada, not excepting even appointments to the judicial bench, which are as important in the public interest as the appointment to the chairmanship to this commission. Upon the chairman depends, to a very great extent, the future success or failure of the commission. The machinery is there all right, the Act is in very good shape at the present time if it can be worked out—no doubt it will require amendment in the future—but it is capable of being put to the very greatest possible use—the machinery, I repeat, is there, but what is required is steam to work it, and that steam can only be supplied in a great measure by the appointment of the proper man to the chairmanship of that commission. I sincerely trust that the appointment will be one which will commend itself to every man in this House and to the people of this country. I do not think that Mr. Justice Killam was ever known as a Conservative. Before he was appointed to the judicial bench he was an active member of the Liberal party. That did not lead me in the slightest degree to object to his appointment, because I recognized him as a man eminently proper to be appointed to that commission, and in this House and elsewhere I have often referred to the splendid work which that gentleman was doing for the people of Canada; and I only hope that the government will succeed in securing as able and devoted a man as Mr. Justice Killam was for the position of chairman of that commission.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I do not suppose that the government will act upon the suggestion of my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), but I have a suggestion to make that I believe will meet with the approval of the government in regard to the appointment of some of the new commissioners, and that is that Prince Edward Island should have a representative on the board. We have, as you know, some very difficult problems of transportation, and the board, as at present constituted, is composed altogether of western men who are not familiar with the different phases of transportation in regard to Prince Edward Island and the maritime provinces. For that reason, it is most essential, having reference to the difficulties that have to be overcome there, that the eastern provinces should be represented by a good man. I am not asking the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) to even take that man from the Conservative ranks. We have good men on both sides of politics down there, and there are a number who would be capable of sitting with the representatives of any part of Canada and doing good service, not only for the interests they would be familiar with down in the east, but also with regard to the western transportation problems. I think it would be a rounding out of the commission if the province of Prince Edward Island were represented on it by a good man. There have been a number of other commissions and boards appointed, but Prince Edward Island has been continually left out. There is the Transcontinental Railway Commission. There are four commissioners upon that board, but Prince Edward Island is not represented. Now, we are going to have six representatives on the Board of Railway Commissioners, and it seems to me that the government might very well take into consideration the appointment of one of these commissioners from Prince Edward Island. A number of other boards have been appointed, and on each occasion the smallest province down by the sea, which has interests just as vital as the other provinces, has been left out. Another case is that of the appointment of a commission in regard to transportation. Where we have so many vital questions of transportation, questions of freight rates and the question of the tunnel to be settled, it will be a wise precaution for the minister to see that Prince Edward Island is represented on the board.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I have only a word or two to say, and I would have had nothing to say whatever had not my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) made the suggestion which he presented this afternoon. The principle which has been put forward by my hon. friend seems to me to be one worthy of consideration by this government. I do not know of any other place where that principle would be more applicable than in the appointment of this Railway Commission. In so far as the late Judge Killam is concerned, I knew him personally for a great many years, and there is no doubt that Judge Killam was a pretty strong partisan. He was first a member of the legislature in Manitoba. He was always a strong Liberal, but I do not know of any man in Canada who enjoyed the confidence of both the Liberal and Conservative party as Judge Killam did. Judge Killam did not have to die to receive such expressions of confidence as that to which I am giving utterance at the present moment. When he was a judge in the province of Manitoba all parties had confidence in him, but I think that our experience is that it is not so easy to secure for this commission men who enjoy the confidence of the country to the extent that Judge Killam did. I do not see why, in a commission like this, the princple advocated by my hon. friend from East Lambton should not be adopted. It does not matter whether this government is returned at the next election or whether a Conservative government is returned in so far as that principle goes. The principle is that appointing men to occupy places on this commission two at least should be selected from the opposite party. I believe that the adoption of such a principle would have a most beneficial result. We see that to some extent in this House. We believe that government by party is the best system we can have, and the present government has a very large majority, and I have not the slightest doubt that the fact that there is an opposition party in this House to watch and to suggest has a very wholesome effect. As was well said by the leader of the opposition, it is of the greatest importance that the people of the west and of the whole Dominion should have confidence in this Railway Commission, and they should feel it is at all events one department of government which is free from partisanship. I could not allow this matter to pass without expressing a strong view on this point. Although the idea may be novel, still it is well worth the government considering the appointment of one or two men to that commission who are not political friends of the government.

Mr. PATERSON. If I understand the argument of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Schaffner) it was that a certain number of the commissioners should not be in a political accord with the government.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON. Then the hon. gentleman from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) said the day was near at hand when the Conservative party would be in power.

Mr ARMSTRONG. I said that.

Mr. PATERSON. Well, this commission cannot be constituted much before the time when that change will take place, and if you appointed Conservatives now and the Conservative government came into power these appointees would be in accord with the government, a thing which would not suit the views of my hon. friend. If the Conservatives are coming into power in a year or so it will serve the hon. gentleman's purpose to appoint Liberals in the meanwhile, and then when the Conservatives get to power the members of the commission will not be in political accord with them. It seems to me that that is the logical result of the arguments of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The Minister of Customs is not so dense as he would wish us to believe he is. He knows perfectly well that if the principle is adopted now it will be continued for the future.

Mr. BARR. It would be wise on the part of the Minister of Customs to read the signs of the times, and to set an example by appointing to this commission a Conservative minority. Then, when the Conservatives hold the reins of power the principle would be continued and his side would have a claim upon the loaves and fishes. No doubt if we get a good example now, then—as parties out of power in Canada are fond of carrying out their pledges, as for instance the Liberals did—when the Conservatives come to power they would see that the Liberal party had representation on the commission.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.). This question should be above party politics and I am sorry to hear politics talked of in connection with a matter of such vital importance to the country. Above all, good able men should be appointed as commissioners. The commissioners occupy very important positions, and if the government cannot rise above party exigencies in making these appointments the country will be suspicious. The best men should be selected irrespective of their politics. I rise specially to say that no one section of the country should be represented exclusively on that commission, that the east and the west, that British Columbia and the maritime provinces and my own province should have a representative on such an important tribunal.

Mr. TALBOT. Wait till your turn comes.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.). I don't expect very much from the new member. Not very long ago I suggested that the Intercolonial should be placed under the control of the Railway Commission and I repeat that suggestion. Every one knows that at the present time the Intercolonial is run by this government merely as a political road to be used for political purposes. It is desirable for the Minister of Railways himself it is desirable for the country that it should be taken out of the hands of the government and placed under the control of this independent Railway Commission. We hear a great deal about transportation in the west but there is nothing done about transportation in the east. Not very long ago, my hon. colleagues (Mr. Lefurgey and Mr. McLean) placed before the Minister of Railways and the House a statement of the high freight rates charged in Prince Edward Island, which was enough to startle the country. I believe that if the Intercolonial Railway were placed under the Railway Commission these exhorbitant charges would disappear very quickly. I was speaking with one of the Railway Commissioners not very long ago and he said he was astonished that the Intercolonial was not placed under the commission. Why is it that the Intercolonial is not brought under the jurisdiction? Is it that it may be in the hands of the Minister of Railways at election times to do with it as his party interests require? If it were placed under the control of the commission the people would have more confidence in it, the deficits would disappear, and we would have a railroad run in the interests of the people and not in the interests of the party in power.

Mr. BERGERON. The Minister of Railways is receiving so many suggestions from this side of the House, and he takes them in such a good natured way that I would remind him of a speech delivered in this House some years ago by a gentleman who held a very high position in the Liberal ranks and in which that gentleman strenuously advocated that no member of parliament should be appointed to an office until two years after he had ceased to hold a seat in this House. That distinguished Liberal said it was most demoralizing and scandalous that a man expecting a position should sit in this House, because he was not a free man. I would suggest to the minister that he should read that beautiful speech in the 'Hansard' of 1895, in order that he may find out what an exceedingly bad policy it would be to choose any men for these important positions from among his colleagues.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. While I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) as to the necessity of civil service reform, I submit that above the question of the party or province which a man belongs is the necessity of appointing not only the ablest and most incorruptible men we can find in Canada for these positions but men who have particular judicial qualities of mind that would enable them to decide impartially upon questions that come before them. For that reason I would suggest that no matter how impartial a railway man would seem to be it is hardly possible for him, having spent most of his life in dealing with railway questions altogether from the point of view of the railway, to disabuse his mind sufficiently of that influence to be an absolutely impartial judge of such cases. The act provides that there shall be two judges or lawyers of ten years' standing upon the board. I have no objection to that, I feel it is necessary; but I also beg the minister not to place any more lawyers upon the board than the two. Of course we all recognize that lawyers are men who can reach a decision impartially to a greater extent perhaps than many others. They would not have the partiality of railway men or of shippers, but the experience of the past must teach us that there is a tendency among lawyers to perhaps string out matters rather too long. This tribunal should be one where questions can be dealt with in a summary and prompt manner, more quickly than is done in our courts. Therefore I would suggest that the other two members to be appointed should be either business men, or men from other professions, engineers, professors—surely in Canada there are in other classes men of the judicial frame of mind and rare ability who would fill this position satisfactorily for the salary named. I agree that the salary is not sufficient, especially for the chief commissioner, to secure the best men in Canada; I believe there are many who would fill that position if the salary were $15,000 instead of $10,000. Many such men are drawing much better pay than $10,000 a year, and if it were necessary to do that I feel that the government and the country would be justified in paying such a salary to the chief commissioner as would ensure obtaining the very best man available. As the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has said, there is no more important position than that of chief commissioner as the board has to deal with questions so far-reaching and of such importance to the whole community. The government cannot possibly exercise too great care and I feel sure they are fully seized of that opinion and will be impressed with that view. I would prefer to see some of these positions left open for a year rather than have men appointed who are not the very best to be found in this country.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not want to overwhelm the minister with advice as to the kind of men he should have appointed, but I wish to draw attention to the question of ages. The commissioners have to act promptly and quickly, to be full of nerve, force and energy. It will probably take them a few years to thoroughly learn how to best use their nerve, force and energy in order to perform quickly their important duties, and I would therefore suggest that we should not appoint men too far advanced in years; as after four or five years, in which they would learn how best to serve the commission, they might be prevented from acting on account of their age. If he finds two gentlemen of equal ability I would strongly advise him to appoint the younger of the two.

Mr. HAGGART. I was not present when the minister introduced the Bill, but I would like him to state what is the necessity for the appointment of three more commissioners and what the expense of the additional commissioners and the necessary staff will probably be. I presume that the work of the commission has become too heavy to be performed by the present commissioners.

In reference to the ideals—I must call them ideals—of my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) as to the proper men to be appointed commissioners, he has apparently forgotten the maxim of this government. This government adheres to an old maxim which I have heard again and again from my youth upwards :

We'll gae our ain fish guts
To our ain sea maws.

This idea of distributing patronage which is in the hands of the government to your opponents is very nice to talk of when you are in opposition, but when you are in power and your government depends to some extent for existence on the distribution of patronage and other such means and has not enough patronage to go around among all your friends, it is another matter and to preach an ideal of what is correct and right for this government to do is, I think, wasting time.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend will remember that when I presented the resolution I made a full explanation as to the necessity for the enlargement of the board. The ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) has really covered the whole question. The work has greatly increased already and we are adding to it by placing telegraphs under their control and making certain amendments to the Act which will enlarge their duties and powers, so that if the board is to be at all of the advantage the country expects them to be, will have to have an enlargement. As to the cost, the chief commissioner receives $10,000 ; the assistant chief commissioner, $9,000 and the other four commissioners, $8,000 each. The cost of the offices I suppose will depend on the distribution of the commission, where they are employed. If they do a great deal of travelling the expense will be greater.

Mr. BERGERON. Some additional secretaries will be required, I suppose ?

Mr. GRAHAM. They will have to have some additions to their staff undoubtedly.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it expected that they will all be residents of Ottawa or will some of them live in other portions of the Dominion?

Mr. GRAHAM. That question is now under consideration. Under the present Act all the commissioners must reside in Ottawa. We have not given that as much consideration as we might but the advisability of adhering to that particular clause of the old Act is being considered.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I was not present when the minister introduced the resolution but as a great number of suggestions have come from members in this House to the Minister of Railways I would like to say a word or two on behalf of the practical railway men and to suggest that when the commission is being enlarged a man with practical knowledge of the operation of railways should be appointed on the board. There are a great many reasons why that should be done. Laterally many prosecutions have been brought against railway employees for remissness of duty and representations have been made to the minister by the railway men regarding this matter as I understand. As I understand the law and the practice, recommendations have been made by the Railway Commission, in certain cases, that certain prosecutions be started against the employees. Under the circumstances the railway employees are entitled to have on that board a representative who will stand between them and the agitation created in the public mind against them, owing to recent prosecutions.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not know that the commission has ever suggested that action be instituted. The commission has an official who investigates and places, as best he can, the responsibility for the accident and advises some means for preventing its recurrence. The suggestion of my hon. friend is entitled to consideration.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is another reason why it should be considered. The powers and jurisdiction of the railway board touch very closely the every day work and life of the ordinary railway man. The board has jurisdiction respecting the running of trains, the provisions to be taken for the safety of the passengers and employees upon these trains and other cognate matters, and it is desirable that some man, having practical knowledge of those duties and that every day work and life, should be appointed to this board. I do not think it would be very difficult to find a suitable man. I have met at various times, during the past two or three years, delegations of railway men, and have been very much impressed indeed by the evident ability and thoughtfulness of these men, by their regard, not only for their own interests, but the interest of the roads and the corporations for which they work. No doubt they have a very vigilant regard for their own interests. They would not be human unless they had, but I have found a certain broadness of view among them which would perhaps not be realized by any one who had not come closely in touch with them. It would not, therefore, be difficult to find a suitable man in the ranks of the railway employees, and the suggestion ought to be very carefully considered by the government.

Mr. LENNOX. As regards the appointment of a man identified with the railway interests, I have not been in favour of appointing one from the class who have been managing the railways, because I realize the possibility that such people had become so wedded to certain ideas that unconsciously they would be governed by them after they became commissioners. But I would not have the same objection to a selection from the ranks of the railway employees. They are especially an intelligent class of men who, by their own efforts in many cases, have risen very considerable from the position in which they originally started. I have a pretty intimate knowledge of that class, and I believe that they could furnish a very efficient commissioner. It would be only fair to that large army of useful workers in our country that they should be recognized to the extent of having at least one commissioner selected from the more advanced thinkers of their class.

Mr. LANCASTER. There is one other reason why a man from that body would serve on the commission perhaps better than one might at first sight consider. In that very important matter of the saving of life and property, the railway operator knows more about what really causes an accident than all the railwaymen sitting in the head office and not operating trains can possibly be expected to know. A man whose life has been spent in operating trains can do more, on account of that experience and knowledge, on the Board of Railway Commissioners than a score of the best witnesses appearing before it. Where there are conflicting interests, witnesses are called who contradict each other, and a commission, which has not actual knowledge of the operating of trains, does not know which set of witnesses to believe. It is important that the great loss of life and property, which has taken place in the last ten years, should be put a stop to, and I do not believe that anybody could do better service on the commission in that respect than one taken from the ranks of the great body of railway working men.

Mr. MACPHERSON. In my opinion the railway operators, who have under their charge the care of the lives of so many people, should have some recognition upon this board. We have had in the last two years many prosecutions of engineers, firemen and conductors, instituted by the Board of Railway Commissioners. Having lived in a railway town for twenty years among railway men, I do not think there is any class in Canada to-day whose intelligence is any higher than that of the engineers operating our railway trains.

Mr. LANCASTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACPHERSON. There is no accident I have seen—and I have seen many disasters, as I live in the upper part of British Columbia where such accidents have been more frequent than elsewhere—where the engineer himself was to blame. At any rate I know of very few cases in which he was. If an engineer overruns his hours and an accident occurs in consequence or a train is stopped and the conductor fails to send back his rear end brakesman to flag the on-coming train, the case is wide open for the company to discipline the man in default. But to say that an engineer who, on the interpretation of an order, believed that his interpretation was correct, or whose watch may have gone out ten seconds or fifteen seconds or a minute, and a disaster has resulted—to say that such a man shall be placed in gaol as a common criminal is going much further than the laws of the country demand. As a member of the House of Commons I want to warn the Railway Commission that they are attempting something they have no right to do when they place behind the bars of a common gaol an engineer and call upon him to defend himself as a criminal without first having had an investigation.

Will anybody say that an engineer will deliberately run the risk of losing his own life and the lives of the men, women and children on the train which he draws? When an accident happens, I think there should first be a thorough investigation by the railway company, and then, if criminal negligence is found, it will be time enough, and not till then, for the Railway Commission to place any of these men behind the bars of the common goal. I speak for the men; I have talked to many of them; I know the engineers, the firemen, the conductors, the brakesmen in my province, and I know that they have a deep and earnest desire to perform their duties and to run their trains in the best possible way. You will destroy the discipline and the esprit de corps of a class of men whom we want to keep to that high standard if you maintain this system of persecution, which has been, I think mistakenly, pursued during the past few years. Nine-tenths of the men who are in charge of the railways of Canada are men who have worked their way up from being simply road bosses, and they know the duties and the dangers of every man on the road. They are the people who will take action, because they are desirous of seeing their road run in such a manner that the public will feel safe upon it, and they will endeavour to keep in their service the best class of men. Take an engineer who has been running on trains for fifteen or sixteen or eighteen years, and who is brought up before a justice of the peace, and committed to the common gaol. When the men hear of this, a shudder goes through them, and they ask, 'What are we coming to in this country? Are we coming to an autocracy, that we are not allowed to have the same privilege as the man who operates a stationary engine in a factory in case his boiler blows up, of having an investigation by his superior officer before the criminal law is invoked?' I want to impress on the Railway Commission, who have done, are doing, and will do good work, that these persecutions and prosecutions they are undermining a class of men who are doing good service for the public. I speak strongly in this matter, because I know the feelings of these men.

Mr. GALLIHER. I think my hon. friend is labouring under an error in supposing that the Railway Commission have anything to do with prosecuting the men for negligence.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The men think they have.

Mr. GALLIHER. That is a mistaken idea. The Railway Commission have nothing to do with that, good, bad or indifferent. With the main portion of my hon. friend's argument I strongly agree. When the Railway Act was amended and a special clause was inserted regarding prosecutions of railway men, there was a strong feeling, and a proper feeling too, that the greatest safeguards should be provided for the travelling public. But to my mind the object sought to be attained by that amendment has not been and will not be realized. In my opinion, when you place a man in a responsible and dangerous position, such as that of a railway engineer or a fireman or a man in charge of a train, his mind should be absolutely clear and free from any idea that there is hanging over him, for what might be due to no fault or negligence on his part, but possibly to a lapse of memory, a prosecution such as could not be applied to a man employed in any other work in Canada. I believe it will have the effect of driving some of the best men from the railway service. Like my hon. friend who has just spoken, I have consulted railway men on this subject, and I will say for them that a finer body of men or men who have more at heart the safety of the people placed in their charge, it would be impossible to find. When you have men who are ready to sacrifice their lives for those people, you have a class of men who are going to do what is right. I believe that men who neglect their duties, and thus cause injury or loss of life, should be prosecuted in the ordinary way under the Criminal Code.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I am very glad to see the great unanimity that there is among hon. members regarding the wisdom of appointing at least one of these commissioners from the ranks of the railway employees. On the occasion of the first reading of this Bill I took the opportunity of suggesting to the Minister of Railways that some such course should be adopted. It seemed to me then, and it seems to me now, that at least one of the board of six commissioners should be a man who, if he has not risen from the ranks of the railway employees, is in thorough touch and harmony with the work and the interests of those men. I think where we have a board composed of six members, as this will be, you could not complete it better than by the addition of one man who is familiar with all the work of railway employees. These men have both a practical and a technical knowledge, some of them have an advanced technical knowledge. So where you get a combination of the two elements of ability as a practical man, with skill and technical knowledge, you have a combination that will be very useful on this commission.

Regarding the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson), he was in error regarding the action of the Board of Railway Commissioners, although I concur entirely with the spirit of his remarks. I think that the member for Kootenay (Mr. Galliher) hit the nail on the head when he said that there should be but one criminal law for all classes of persons. It does not seem to me that one man should be liable criminally for an act for which his co-labourer in some other department of life is not liable. We must remember that these men are in the forefront of every accident, they are usually the greatest sufferers in such accidents, and it seems to me it is largely taking the nerve out of them when you not only place them in a position of danger, although they assume it voluntarily, but in addition you make them criminally liable for something that in itself is without criminal intent. The test should be criminal intent; intent to do wrong is the test in every crime, and should be in this case. There is, I know, a section of the Railway Act which permits these prosecutions to be taken, but I think the feeling of the community generally is out of harmony with such a provision. I think those prosecutions that have taken place had only the half-hearted support of the community at large, and in cases where imprisonment has been inflicted by the judge the executive have intervened, and in one case at least that comes to my mind, have granted pardon. I think such intervention has met with entire public approval. This may not be a matter for parliament to consider, but it is certainly one that the Railway Commission might consider, and no doubt when the board is fully constituted they will have an opportunity of considering the effect of the various provisions of the Act, including this one.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I understand the clause to which the hon. gentleman refers has been added to the Criminal Code.

Mr. LENNOX. No, to the general Railway Act.

Mr. MACDONELL. I am glad the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Duncan Ross) has mentioned it, because that is just where the law should be; it should be in the Criminal Code, and be made of general application instead of applying to one section of the community. I trust the Minister of Railways will give more than a passing consideration to the wisdom of appointing a man who is in touch with the actual operation of these railways, a man who has first-hand knowledge of the business, and not one who gets his knowledge at second-hand by reading reports.

Mr. GRAHAM. The question my hon. friend has raised might be discussed in a proposition to amend the General Railway Act, and I may say that a little later in the session I may have some amendments to propose to the Railway Act which will give ample room for this discussion.

Mr. LENNOX. I think the minister introduced the other day an Act to amend the Railway Act in several particulars, and to give the board enlarged powers.

Mr. GRAHAM. I did introduce a Bill to give the board jurisdiction over telegraphs and telephones, and to enlarge its powers. Amendments to the General Railway Act might have no reference to the Board of Railway Commissioners. The section to which my hon. friend refers in the Railway Act has been brought to my attention a good many times, and I have been giving a good deal of thought lately as to the effect of the operation of what I may call this double-barrelled statute directed against one class of the community. I am considering what might be the effect of removing that provision. Prosecutions under that law do not begin with the Railway Commissioners, but with the attorneys general of each province, whose duty it is to attend to the enforcement of law in that respect.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know whether the Minister of Railways has considered the organization of the Railway Commission in two divisions, one having more especially jurisdiction over matters that might be called litigious, as involving work of a judicial character, and the other division having power more especially to deal with executive and administrative matters, in which, for example, it is not necessary to have hearings. I am not thoroughly familiar with the work of the commission, but I suppose that it might be divided into those two branches. If that could be accomplished it would be very desirable.

Eventually you may work out under the system now proposed three tribunals, one of whom might be presided over by the chief commissioner, another by the assistant chief commissioner and a third by the deputy of the chief commissioner. That ias a very good system so far as it goes and no doubt will facilitate prompt hearings. But it is open to the objection that these different tribunals may give entirely dissimilar decisions, and there is not in the case of a railway commission that correcting power which deals with similar conditions in the courts, namely, a court of appeal. There are various divisions in the court throughout the country, but they are all subject to the appellate power of the Court of Appeal, so that where principles of law have been laid down by one tribunal in one way and by another tribunal in another way, the Court of Appeal corrects them. It has been said that on one occasion the Court of Common Pleas in England decided upon a proposition of law in one way, the Court of Exchequer decided the same point in another way, and the Court of Queen's Bench, in its anxiety to be right, decided the point in both ways. Those were all subject to the power of a higher tribunal. I do not observe any provision in this Bill by which appellate powers are conferred upon the commissioners as a whole to deal with any possible discrepancies of that character and it seems to me that they are very likely to arise under this Act. Of course if they do arise we may prefer to modify the Act later on.

That is all very well as far as it goes, subject to the criticism that I have just now made, but the minister's scheme does not get us very much further along with the executive and administrative branch of the work. I speak on this subject with deference and with a full realization of how little I know of the work of the commission. If rumours which come to us are correct, there are thousands of tariffs lying in the office of the commission which have not even been read over there and work of that kind has not been carried very vigorously up to the present moment. I have no doubt that the failure to carry on that work very vigourously is due to the fact that the commission is overworked. What I have said is not by way of criticism of the commission in this connection. I would like to know from the minister if this subject has engaged the attention of the government and if he thinks that the proposal that I have mentioned will be feasible at a later date if not now.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am glad to get all these suggestions. Our object is to get a Bill that will produce the most satisfactory results. Suggestions from the other side of the House are very welcome indeed. This is a very pertinent question. I was impressed with the view which the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) takes of it when it was suggested to me first that it would be well to divide the commission into different parts, each part having its own specific work to perform ; in fact, it was suggested to me that one department of the commission should be a railway and engineering department, to deal with engineering subjects and to look after the railway portion of the work, that another should be the legal department and that another should be the traffic department, or something of that kind. But this difficulty arose which seemed to be a fair reply to that suggestion. A portion of the commission goes to British Columbia as the board to hear cases. If that were the traffic portion of the commission it would be unable to hear any cases outside of that particular branch of its work and we would have to go to the expense of sending another branch of the commission out to take up another part of the work. There would be not only the additional expense but there would also be a great waste of time. I have come to the conclusion after a great deal of consideration that to get practical results it is better to have each separate part of the board with power to act as the board with regard to all cases that may be brought up in any particular community in order to get a speedy adjustment and to dispose of these cases as rapidly as possible. As to the question of appeal, I suppose there is no doubt in the world that the board has very wide powers for forming regulations and if the parts of that board were not absolutely satisfied as to a question of law no doubt they could settle it as a whole by adopting a regulation before they gave judgment. Perhaps I am narrow in my views in this respect but, I was trying to guard against the possibility or the probability of there being too many appeals. It struck me that there must be corporations against whom an order was made by the board; that is a portion of the board which is the board. There is in the Act power by which an appeal may be made from the board to the court on questions of law and to the Governor in Council on questions of fact. It struck me that if we were to insert in the Act power by which they could appeal to the full board from the decision of a part of the board possibly some of the railways, or some other companies, or some people might take advantage of that fact to delay the putting into force of an order by asking leave to appeal from a portion of the board to the entire board, getting as many adjournments as possible between the legal men and the companies, then going from the board to the Governor in Council with as much delay as possible with the result that by time time that they got the final decision there would be no use for the decision at all. Perhaps I am narrow in that view but I was trying to avoid too many appeals.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is a great deal in that, but what I was suggesting would not involve any of these difficulties. You could insert a clause that would give the board as a whole power to order that any question argued before a division should be re-argued before the board as a whole and not confer the power of appeal on either one of the litigants. However that is a matter for consideration later on perhaps. But I do not know that the minister exactly grasped my suggestion of a moment ago. I entirely agree with him that it would not be advisable to make any distribution of jurisdiction which would involve the necessity of sending first one division of the board and then another to deal with these respective subjects in different parts of the Dominion. But, what I have in my mind —I do not know whether it is feasible or not—is that there must be a great deal of work of an administrative and executive character which would be dealt with altogether by men who would never leave Ottawa at all and who would accept and act upon the reports of their expert officers in regard to the matters they have to deal with. If that could be accomplished I would regard it as desirable; on the other hand if it is not possible to make a division of that character I would be inclined to accept the view that the minister has just now expressed.

On section 3,

Section 12 of the said Act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

12. In case of the absence of the chief commissioner and the assistant chief commissioner, or of their inability to act, the deputy chief commissioner shall exercise the powers of the chief commission for him or in his stead, and in such case, all regulations, orders and other documents signed by the deputy chief commissioner shall have the like force and effect as if signed by the chief commissioner.

2. Whenever the deputy chief commissioner appears to have acted for or instead of the chief commissioner, it shall be conclusively presumed that he so acted in the absence or disability of the chief commissioner and of the assistant chief commissioner within the meaning of this section.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I suggest that in view of the change already made in the the Act you should say:

Whenever the assistant chief commissioner or the deputy chief commissioner appears to have acted, &c.

In view of the change that you have already made in paragraph (c) of subsection 5, as amended by section 2 of this Bill, the addition of certain words here seems desirable. I have led the minister to make that change and I want to keep him straight as far as I can. I think you should say:

Whenever the assistant chief commissioner or the deputy chief commissioner appears, &c.

Mr. GRAHAM. That would tangle it up in the next case.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You have said that the assistant chief commissioner shall exercise the powers you give him only in the absence of the chief commissioner. It seems to me you should state that when he does exercise these powers it shall be presumed that the chief commissioner is absent.

Mr. GRAHAM. The Minister of Justice points out that this section is merely the old section, adding an assistant chief commissioner.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That has nothing to do with what I have said.

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot convince the Minister of Justice that we should have any other amendment to this.

Mr. LENNOX. This section provides that the deputy chief commissioner shall act in the place of the chief commissioner, but it does not provide that he shall also act in the place of the assistant chief commissioner. Suppose a section of the board goes to Vancouver, comprising the assistant chief commissioner, the deputy chief commissioner and a commissioner, and the assistant chief commissioner is unable to get there you have no provision for the deputy chief commissioner taking his place, although you have a provision for his taking the chief commissioner's place. You should state that in case of the absence of the chief commissioner and of the assistant chief commissioner or of their inability to act the deputy chief commissioner shall exercise the powers of the chief commissioner or of the assistant chief commissioner as the case may be.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. If the deputy chief commissioner is acting for the chief commissioner he cannot act for the assistant chief commissioner at the same time, and if he is acting for the chief commissioner he has all authority to act.

Mr. LENNOX. That would be right if he were taking the place of the chief commissioner.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. If he takes the authority of the chief commissioner surely he would have full power to act.

Mr. LENNOX. In certain cases he may be acting for the assistant chief commissioner and he should have the same power as if he were acting for the chief commissioner.

Mr. GALLIHER. If we were dividing the board into different heads your argument might be good.

Mr. LENNOX. It now says that the deputy chief commissioner shall exercise the powers of the chief commissioner for him or in his stead. If it said 'for them or in their stead' it would be correct.

Mr. GALLIHER. The first two lines of the clause cover that.

Mr. GRAHAM. If the chief commissioner is not present the assistant commissioner is then chief commissioner, and if neither be present then the deputy chief commissioner is acting for the chief commissioner. When they get together in Winnipeg they are the board. If the chief commissioner is there he is the head; if he is not there and the assistant chief is, then the assistant chief has all the powers of the chief. If neither of them is there, the deputy acts for the chief commissioner and not for the assistant chief.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. The minister will observe the necessity of the suggestion I put forward as to the constitution of the board.

Mr. GRAHAM. Oh yes, about the lawyers.

On section 4,

4. Subsection 2 of section 13 of the said Act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

2. The chief commissioner, when present, shall preside, and the assistant chief commissioner, when present, in the absence of the chief commissioner, shall preside, and the opinion of either of them upon any question arising when he is presiding, which in the opinion of the commissioners is a question of law, shall prevail.

Mr. LANCASTER. That does not provide for the board sitting in three sections. It says that either one of two of the commissioners must preside and therefore only two sections can sit at one time. We should go further and provide that the deputy may preside; otherwise the Act will be self-contradictory.

Mr. GRAHAM. In this we are not dealing with the powers of the deputy. His powers are defined in the existing Act and the section relating to them is not repealed.

Mr. LANCASTER. If we intend to have three boards of two commissioners each sitting at the same time, we should not have this section in this Act because we are clearly saying here that no one but the chief or the assistant chief shall preside at any meeting.

Mr. GRAHAM. Section 13 of the old Act subsection 2 provides:

The chief commissioner, when present shall preside and his opinion upon any question which in the opinion of the commissioners is a question of law, shall prevail.

We are simply in this giving the same powers to the assistant chief, we are not interfering with the powers of the deputy. It is fully provided in the preceding sections that in the absence of these two the deputy shall preside.

Mr. LANCASTER. You have here contradictory sections. I would also suggest that provision should be made to secure a decision where two commissioners are sitting and they cannot agree on a material question of fact. I would suggest for want of a better remedy that we should say, as one of the two has to be either the chief, the assistant chief or the deputy, if their opinions are not in harmony the opinion of the chief, the assistant or the deputy in that order should prevail.

Mr. BARR. Then you might as well have only one commissioner.

Mr. LANCASTER. No. Two gentlemen trying to do their duty are affected greatly in their decision by the fact that they do not agree and if the opinion of the chief, or the assistant or the deputy was to prevail and if he insisted on it, it would be all the more perfect and likely to be correct from the very fact of its having being criticised by his brother commissioner.

Mr. GRAHAM. As a matter of fact if it is a question of law the Act provides that the opinion of the chief, the assistant or the deputy shall prevail.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is on a question of law, but I was careful to state that I meant on a question of fact that might decide the whole case. We should provide something to break that deadlock.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is partly correct, not so far as the deputy is concerned.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think you will find it in clause 12. I do not think in practice it has occurred but I would say that in case of such a deadlock the case would have to be reheard before an odd number of commissioners, there could not be any decision.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is that wise, it is doubling the expense and delay ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Possibly the commission will not often sit in twos and that there may never be a deadlock of the kind suggested. You could hardly provide that on a question of fact the opinion of the legal members of the commission should prevail, nor would it be right to say that the opinion of the other members should prevail. I think if such case arose it would have to be re-argued before an odd number of commissioners.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course you might require some provision for that. The difficulty exists under the present law. There is a provision that two shall form a quorum. I do not know whether any difficulty has arisen, if not it may arise. If you apply the legal rule, then the action fails. You go to the court making application and asking for action. The court is equally divided and therefore cannot act and so your application fails. That is the legal rule and perhaps the same thing would result here. It might be desirable to get some kind of decision and let the parties go on further.

Mr. GRAHAM. Possibly it could be done by a regulation of the board.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as the chief commissioner and the assistant are concerned, the questions of law are already disposed of by the statute but questions of fact are not. I do not know of any very practical suggestion unless you might say you would adopt, for the purpose of appeal, the finding of the chief or the assistant chief or something of that kind. That would be merely an arbitrary way but it is sometimes better to get a decision than let the parties do the fighting all over again.

Mr. GRAHAM. I would like to get it into a shape so as not to open the door to an appeal if I could. Possibly we could work out something that would reach the desired effect.

Mr. LANCASTER. Let the section stand.

On section 6,

Section 18 of the said Act is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

2. The Governor in Council, upon the recommendation of the minister, may establish at any place in Canada such office or offices as are required for the board, and may provide therefor the necessary accommodation, furnishings, stationery and equipment.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the object?

Mr. GRAHAM. Suppose this board is going to be in Winnipeg hearing a number of cases, the hearing of which will take two or three months. We require a staff and the necessary accommodation. We might have to leave a portion of the board there a longer time and it may become necessary to have headquarters there. It would be cheaper for us to do that and have a permanent place which the public would know is their headquarters.

Mr. BERGERON. That would apply to all parts of the Dominion.

Mr. GRAHAM No, only to the headquarters in that respect.

Bill reported.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY EMPLOYEES' PROVIDENT FUND.

Bill (No. 117) to amend the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways Employees' Provident Fund (Mr. Graham) read the second time and the House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Section 17 of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railway Employees' Provident Fund Act, chapter 22 of the statutes of 1907, is amended by adding the words 'and are not reinstated' at the end of paragraph (b).

Mr. GRAHAM. The object is this : As originally passed by this House, the Act provided that employees belonging to the provident fund who had been dismissed would not rank on the fund unless reinstated. The Bill was amended partially in the upper chamber by striking out the words 'and are not reinstated.' These words were struck out of the English statute and remained in the French statute. There is a case where the preference is given the French language. In the working out of the Act, I find it is possible to do injustice to some worthy employee who might be dismissed under misapprehension or after investigation.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it correct in French?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Then it is an Act of parliament and is the law.

Mr. GRAHAM. The French language and the upper chamber are in conflict.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then the upper chamber will have to give way.

Mr. GRAHAM. My object is to amend the statute so that the provident fund can be better worked out.

Mr. BERGERON. Why not say simply the French version is correct?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend suggests that we should amend the English version. I was advised that that was not the better way to do it. Can you amend half your statute?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will not the result be, if this Bill passes, that these words will go into the French version twice?

Mr. BERGERON. It is the law of the country to-day and we do not require to pass an Act of parliament to change that.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend suggested that we might get a duplicate statute in French. I made that suggestion but was informed by a member of the legal profession that this Bill was the orthodox way to do it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why not insert a preamble stating clearly what the trouble is?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Minister of Justice is fixing it up by inserting after the word amended the words 'in the English version thereof.'

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I would like to ask if the fact that the Senate struck out these words, and by a typographical error they were included in the French version, makes it a legal statute?

Mr. BERGERON. It is legal as long as it is in one of the two official languages.

Amendment agreed to, Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

DOMINION COAL COMPANY LABOUR DISPUTE.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX. Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House, I would like to read a telegram which I have just received, as follows:—

Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, March 13, 1908.

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux,
Minister of Labour, Ottawa, Ontario.

Have reached satisfactory settlement of Dominion Coal Company dispute. All parties pleased.

ADAM SHORTT.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 110) respecting a certain patent of Frederic C. Rehm, Elias Frank and Isidor Frank.—Mr. Béland.

NIAGARA, ST. CATHARINES AND TORONTO RAILWAY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 82) respecting the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Railway Company.—Mr. Adamson.

On section 1,

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I cannot permit this Bill to pass without again recording my protest against legislation of this character being enacted by this House. This Bill is short, it has been thoroughly discussed in the Railway Committee, and it is not my intention to do more than to briefly review its history. It provides for an extension of the right to construct this railway. The company was originally incorporated nine or ten years ago, its powers have been extended on two occasions since, and the time within which this railway should be commenced and completed will expire in the month of June next should this measure not be adopted. The company, it is true, has built some of its line of railway—that is to say, a line of railway from Niagara Falls to St. Catharines or in the vicinity—but the portion they now propose to build, namely, an extension from St. Catharines on to Hamilton—at least part of the distance—and from Hamilton to Toronto is entirely a new undertaking. At most the company has only surveyed that line, so that in applying to parliament to-day for charter rights the company is in the same position as it was when it originally made application, and I submit that we should regard it as if the company were making its application de novo. That being so, parliament should provide all the safeguards which it is customary to provide in a measure of this kind. Now, under the powers contained in the original charter of this company I submit it is a fair statement to say that they have the right to build a railway into the city of Toronto. I quote from their charter :

And an extension to a point in or near the city of Toronto by way of Hamilton or thereabouts.

Practically speaking, therefore, this company has the power to construct a railway into the city of Toronto.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. Is it a steam road?

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. It is in part a steam road and in part an electric road. I am not speaking now of the railroad itself, but it has amalgamated with or taken over one or two other railways, and on its system, so far as it has a system, it is in part a steam road and in part an electric road, in part running on a highway and in part running on its own right of way. It is very hard to say just what the character of this road is, and that is why I say some provision should be inserted in this Bill for the protection of the municipalities, because it may bob up any time as an electric street railway exercising running rights over municipal highways. In the Railway Committee I suggested that there should be a provision inserted to the effect that this railway should not be permitted to operate as a street railway, in whole or in part, within the limits of the city of Toronto. The reason for such a provision is quite obvious. It would be absurd for any one to contend that this railway should be given the right to operate in Toronto. The promoters have declared that they are a steam railway, and if that be so what objection can there be to insert in this charter a provision that this company shall not operate, either in whole or in part, as a street railway in the city of Toronto?

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. The hon. gentleman says this is a steam railway in part and an electric railway in part; are they obliged to run by electricity only on a certain part, or can they run with steam on all of the road?

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. They can use either, and they are using both as a matter of fact.

Mr. GALLIHER. That does not quite answer the question. Have they power to use steam on any portion of the road ; for instance, the part that they simply have an electric charter for?

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. They are a railway declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, and I suppose they have power to use steam the same as any other railway company. There is nothing in their charter one way or the other about it, but I understand they are using steam for hauling freight and electricity for passenger transportation.

Mr. BRISTOL. I might say that in 1901 the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Railway Company, by chapter 76 of the statutes of that year, were authorized by this parliament to lease or purchase, on such terms as may be agreed upon, the Niagara Falls, Wesley Park and Clifton Tramway Company, or the Port Dalhousie, St. Catharines and Thorold Electric Railway Company, or the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric Railway Company.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. They have power to acquire, purchase and operate these roads, and they have in part acquired and they are operating some of these lines. As the charter stands to-day in its present wide-open manner, this company would have power to operate its line of railway in the city of Toronto. The city of Toronto is not different in the abstract from any other municipality ; that is, in the abstract the city of Toronto is entitled to no greater consideration than any other municipality, but because of the congested condition of the population at that centre, and because of the very great value of the local franchise for operating street railways in that city, the conditions are very different from those to be found in a rural municipality. I cannot perhaps better express this view than to read a short extract from a leading editorial in to-day's 'Globe,' a public journal that I understand the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and those who support him will at least listen to with consideration. The article is headed 'A Case for Sir Wilfrid' :

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has always been a federalist, believing in the fullest exercise of local self-government compatible with the maintenance of an effective central authority for the transaction of national business. The 'Globe' wishes respectfully to direct Sir Wilfrid's attention to the fact that the Dominion parliament has no more right to meddle with the street railway franchise of Toronto than with the snow by-law. The people of Toronto, exercising their undoubted rights, have given a franchise to a company conveying the sole authority to operate a surface street railway within the city limits until 1921. In return for this the city gets over a thousand dollars a day in revenue as its share of the street railway earnings. If there is any ambiguity in the Bill under discussion, any loophole that might force the city to defend itself against an attempt to run a street railway under a Dominion charter, surely it is not asking too much to urge that parliament remove the ambiguity. The Minister of Railways, the man responsible for the drafting of safe railway laws, holds that the amendment could do no harm and yet his advice was thrust aside by the people's elected representatives.

There is need for a declaration from the premier, that, no matter what individual members of either party may do in the Railway Committee, the Liberal party in Canada is still a party believing in the utmost possible exercise of the principle of local self-government.

I hope that the Minister of Railways will approve of what I have just read and as he is the minister who is responsible for the railway administration in this country, I hope he will see to it that proper means are taken to have incorporated in this Bill the amendment which I moved in regard to having it declared unequivocally and without any doubt that this railway is not to be permitted to do a local street railway business in the city of Toronto. The burden of the support of this Bill in the Railway Committee was something like this: It was said, in the first place, that Toronto had no more rights than any other place. I think one hon. gentleman of that committee said that Toronto had no more rights to consideration than the smallest hamlet. That proposition bears upon its face its own refutation, because, as I have said, the congested condition of the population makes it very different from a rural municipality or a hamlet. It was said that the Railway Commission was ample protection to the city of Toronto. That did not seem to me to be a sufficient protection and I tried to urge that it was not a sufficient protection. Assuming that this is a steam road and that it crosses highways from the western entrance to the city to the terminal this road will cross twenty-seven highways, while, if it goes through the city, it will cross one hundred highways. At many of these streets the traffic is enormous, especially at certain seasons of the year. The city of Toronto is struggling with the two existing railway systems and is receiving their co-operation in the effort to either elevate these railways on a viaduct or depress them and compel them to go by means of subways under the streets which they cross. At some of these crossings as many as 200,000 people pass in a day. These people are not all Toronto people, but many of them are people who come from all over the province and from other provinces in Canada and elsewhere. The city of Toronto is endeavouring to get rid of all level crossings and the railway companies are agreeing to that. The present question is merely as to the method of doing that. The railway companies have their engineers at work endeavouring to devise the best means by which this difficulty can be solved, the question of expense is being considered and it looks as though the city and railways will be able to divide the expense in a way agreeable to both and that they will find a solution of the question as to the best means of crossing the highways agreeable to both parties. Just when that is being done this railway company gets its charter rights renewed which gives it a wide open door to run wherever it chooses, because it may cross whatever highways it chooses and the city has no right to lift its little finger against it. The city can, it is true, appeal to the Board of Railway Commissioners. The Railway Commission has proved a very useful body. Nobody will deny that. Its usefulness is felt more and more every day, but yet it is very largely an experiment. Only to-day we find a Bill going through to provide for appointing additional members of that board. It is yet in its experimental stage, and to leave the rights of a municipality like the city of Toronto to be dealt with, possibly in an off-hand way by a very busy commission, is not fair. By this Bill you actually deprive the city of Toronto of certain rights which a rural municipality possesses. Let me direct the attention of the hon. gentleman to section 235 of the Railway Act. It was laboured in the committee upstairs that section 235 gave the municipality all the protection and power which it wanted or could find any need or occasion for. Section 235, to those who are conversant with the Railway Act, is a very well known section. It is the section regarding crossings of railways and highways. It is this:

The railway may be carried upon, along or across an existing highway upon leave therefor having been first obtained from the board as hereinafter authorized.

That is a railway may be carried along a highway in any municipality if the board gives it leave.

Provided that the board shall not grant leave to any company to carry any street railway or tramway, or any railway operated or to be operated as a street railway or tramway, along any highway which is within the limits of any city or incorporated town until the company has first obtained consent therefor by a by-law of the municipal authority of such city or incorporated town.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. That covers this company in so far as the street railway part is concerned.

Mr. MACDONELL. I am very glad th the hon. gentleman makes that interjection. As far as I have read seemingly that is true, but in subsection 3 of that very section we find this:

Nothing in this section shall deprive any such company of rights conferred upon it by any special Act of the parliament of Canada, or amendment thereof, passed prior to the 12th day of March, one thousand nine hundred and three.

So that any railway company that has its charter prior to the 12th March, 1903 is exempt from that prohibition and the Railway Commission has no power, in the case of a street railway that is incorporated prior to that time, to say to that railway company: You shall first obtain the consent of the municipality.

In cases where railways were incorporated since the 12th of March, 1903, the municipality has the veto power. They may say: You shall not pass along or across the highway or a public place. So Toronto is in the position with regard to this railway, which was incorporated in 1899, four years prior to the date laid down in the present Railway Act, that the municipality has no right to be consulted whether the railway shall run upon the highway or not. The municipality of the city of Toronto has no right to any voice as to whether a railway shall run across a highway. I say that is the effect of the operation of section 235. I referred a moment ago to the level crossing; that is the question to-day in the city of Toronto and every other big city, both in the States and Canada. The level crossing theory has no application at all to a place like Toronto. The legislation regarding level crossings, the jurisdiction of the board over them, and so on, all apply to level crossings where you can maintain them as level crossings, where you have gates, watchmen, and protection of that nature. But to-day the absolute need is to elevate or depress the railways, or elevate or depress the highways. You must do one thing or the other. The level crossing has got to go, it is a death trap. There is scarcely a week in the city of Toronto that there is not some fatality on some one of these one or two hundred level crossings with which the city is infested so it becomes an absolute necessity to abolish the level crossing, to deal with the matter on a more up-to-date and humane basis, namely, the elevation or depression of either the tracks or the highways. That is the way the difficulty has been solved in other large cities, and that is what it is coming to in Toronto. Now just when Toronto is dealing with other railways, and they are agreeing to elevate or depress their tracks, it seems to me there could be no more unfair measure than the present Bill.

It was urged in the Railway Commission —where the Act was again relied on— that it afforded ample protection in regard to elevating or depressing the railway. Now let me show how far that protection is assured by the Railway Act. I refer to section 237 of the Railway Act. What I contended in the committee and, what I contend here is—and it has not been controverted—that in so far as obliging the railways to elevate or depress their tracks the Railway Commission has no power. Now what does that mean? It simply means that if Toronto says: We do not want these level crossings, we do not want any railway to cross on a level, the railway makes application to have its plans approved and to have the crossing allowed. The matter is considered, on investigation it is shown that these roads must either be elevated or depressed, there cannot be a level crossing. The Railway Commission is asked to make a ruling that they must be either elevated or depressed. Yet under the Railway Act as it stands at present, they have no power to compel the railway to elevate or depress, they have only power to say to the railway company: You cannot cross that highway; they can apply the block system, and there you are, there is a deadlock. The railway company cannot be compelled to elevate or depress, yet the municipality may be compelled, under section 237, to elevate or depress their highway. Now this is a serious matter, and I am glad to see that the Minister of Railways seems to realize it fully. At the present time, as I have tried to show, the Railway Commission has power to order a municipality to elevate or depress its highway, but they have no corresponding power to order a railway company to elevate or depress their tracks. I have an amendment on the Order Paper to amend the Railway Act so as to give the Railway Commission power, in proper cases where they think it is rigbt and just, to order railways to elevate or depress their tracks. That may or may not become law, but in the meantime as the law stands, Toronto is in the position that they cannot force the railway to do this needed work.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. gentleman claim that under section 237 the commission cannot order the railway to do the elevating or depressing?

Mr. MACDONELL. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. The import of the whole section is that where application is made by the railway to cross a highway, then the order is made.

Mr. MACDONELL. Section 2 of section 237 reads as follows:—

> Upon any application for leave to construct a railway upon, along, or across an existing highway, or to construct a highway across an existing railway, the applicant shall submit to the board a plan and profile of such crossing, showing the portion of railway or highway affected.
>
> The board may, by order, grant such application upon such terms and conditions as to protection, safety and convenience of the public, as it may deem expedient, or may order that the highway be carried over or under the railway, or be temporarily or permanently diverted.

And so on. There is here no corresponding right for the board to order the railway to be carried over or under the highway. There can be no two constructions put upon it. There is no power in the Railway Commission to order the railway to do that work. What was asked for in the committee was this, not that this railway be blocked from coming into Toronto, but that where it proposed to cross a highway it should not cross on a level without the consent of the municipality; that is, that in cases where there is manifestly a dangerous crossing the city should have the right to say: You shall not make that crossing on a level. That is a reasonable effort on the part of the city to protect life and property. Now this provision was sought to be put in the Hamilton Radial Bill, over which we had a long fight, and the promoters of the Bill finally agreed to accept it; they will operate under that provision. Now all we ask is that this railway should be treated in the same way as the Hamilton Radial Railway in regard to level crossings.

They are not to stop except at certain intervals and must not do a street railway business. That was asked of the Hamilton Radial Railway people and they put such a provision in their Bill. They can only stop at two points between their entrance into Toronto and their terminals in that city and they have no power to do a street railway business. It must be remembered that there is as yet no money invested in the whole section from Toronto, forty miles to Hamilton and around the bay to Stoney Creek. It is not as if they had entered into bond obligation on the faith of this charter, they have simply surveyed a line. When they come to this parliament nine years after their original application, when conditions have changed, when the level crossings in Toronto are not as they were ten years ago, I think that modern restrictions should be imposed on the company. They should be asked no more than what is fair. There is no desire to restrict them in their powers or to hamper them in their operations, but it is asked that they shall not be permitted to do a street railway business and to perpetuate the level crossings in Toronto with these recurring fatalities. These crossings are no more than death traps.

Mr. R. BLAIN (Peel). I am sure the members for Toronto will take care of the interests of that city; I simply wish to call attention to the fact that this road will be constructed on a right of way purchased many years ago by the Toronto and Niagara Power Company between Hamilton and Toronto. Speaking particularly for my own county, the farmers in selling that right of way sold the land cheap owing to representations that they would have an electric railway so that their small products could be conveyed quickly and cheaply to Toronto and Hamilton. They were anxious to have such an electric service but now they are confronted with the fact that this is to be a steam railway. There are already three steam railways in this part of Peel county within a radius of three miles, the Canadian Pacific Railway main line, west; the Grand Trunk double track line along the lake shore to Hamilton and the Canadian Pacific Railway service under leasehold arrangement over the Grand Trunk double track. This road will run between these two existing lines and the farmers will not have the better service they expected. The steam railways do not give much attention to the carriage of these small products of the farmers. They run their fast passenger trains past the stations in my county when there are hundreds of boxes of strawberries piled upon the platforms at the stations. The farmers have been complaining of this for some years, but the railways would rather attend to the enormous passenger traffic between Toronto and Hamilton and westward to the United States. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) has not many sins to answer for in his department—I do not know about his past history elsewhere—but I must remind him that his government and he particularly will be held responsible by the people if greater care is not exercised in the granting of charters to railways in different parts of the country, permitting these companies to hold out the inducement to the people that they will have an electric road for the carriage of their products and then having the charter taken over by one of the great railway corporations and converted into a steam railway. This will give four lines of railway running within a radius of three miles in my county and the farmers will have no electric service. My friends from Toronto must remember that until the road is built through the counties between Hamilton and Toronto they will not have to worry about entrances into the cities. I would suggest to them that it will be necessary for them to lend some assistance to the municipalities before they may expect much assistance from the municipalities in connection with the demands that they are making upon the railway company. I wish to say that I sympathize very much with the representatives of Toronto in their contention that as Toronto has a large and growing population, it is very important that level railway crossings should be done away with within its limits.

Mr. BRISTOL. So far as Toronto is concerned, we are glad to have railways of all kinds come in and bring people and traffic to us, but we are at a loss to know—and nobody has yet been able to tell us with certainty—whether this Bill has reference to a steam railway or an electric street railway or a hybrid which will take whatever character may be necessary for the purpose of developing its franchise along the most profitable lines. I have had the curiosity to look at its charter and the amendments thereto prior to 1903, because if it were an electric street railway incorporated subsequent to 1903 I think we are amply protected. But if it be an electric street railway or if it has electric street railway powers given to it prior to 1903, I think there is some question in the matter, and it would be in the interest both of the railway company and the cities of Toronto and Hamilton that that question should be set at rest, and I think that the suggestion that the Bill should state that this railway was not to exercise street railway powers in these cities should have been acceded to.

In order that we may understand whether this is really a steam or an electric railway, we are first of all referred to its charter of incorporation, chapter 77 of the statutes of Canada 1899. In that statute the company is said to be for the general advantage of Canada and clause 8 provides :

The company may, upon such terms and conditions as are agreed on with the purchasers of the line of railway heretofore owned by the St. Catharines and Niagara Central Railway Company, acquire such line of railway and the rights, powers and franchises connected therewith, and may repair, reconstruct and operate the same; and may lay out, construct and operate an extension thereof to a point on the Niagara river at or near Fort Erie, and an extension to a point in or near the city of Toronto by way of the city of Hamilton or thereabouts, and a branch line from a point on the main line in or near the city of St. Catharines to a point on Lake Ontario, in or near Port Dalhousie, in the county of Lincoln.

Then section 10 provides :

The company may, for the purposes of its business—construct, acquire and navigate vessels upon or across the Niagara river and Lake Ontario to Toronto and points west of Toronto and may carry on generally the business of transportation in connection with its railway and vessels; construct, acquire, lease and sell wharfs, docks, &c.; acquire lands and erect and manage machinery and plant for the generation and distribution of electric and other power and energy; acquire and utilize water-power and dispose of the surplus power and so on.

Then in 1901 the charter was amended, and section 1 of the amendment is as follows :

The Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Railway Company——

Which is the company we are discussing.

—may acquire, by agreement of lease or purchase, on such terms as may be agreed on, respectively, with the Niagara Falls, Wellesly Park and Clifton Tramway Company or the Port Dalhousie, St. Catharines and Thorold Electric Railway Company, Limited, or the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric Railway Company (if when and such companies respectively are lawfully authorized to enter into such agreement) the undertakings, rights, franchises, powers, lines, assets and properties, real and personal, of such companies, respectively, and may construct, operate and maintain the same.

So that under section 1 of the Act of 1901, the company is given clear powers to acquire three electric railway systems and operate them as such, and these powers relate also to the towns of St. Catharines, Thorold, Hamilton, Grimsby and other places.

I am not here to make an argument as to the rights and powers of this railway company, but I do say that, taking the original Act and the amending Act of 1901 together, it is certainly fairly arguable that the company has certain powers of a character which are not affected by subsection 3 of section 235 of the Railway Act. That section is as follows :

Nothing in this section shall deprive any such company of rights conferred upon it by any special Act of the parliament of Canada, or amendment thereof, passed prior to the 12th day of March, 1903.

That relates to electric railways. Under the circumstances, the supporters of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) might have given his opinion a little more consideration, and I trust that on this occasion the minister will again give us his opinion on this matter. It must be conceded that cities of the size of Hamilton and Toronto should be entitled to run their own street railway systems and control them without interference from this parliament. It seems to me that that should be a provision of this Bill before we pass it. But my hon. friends thinks that the Railway Act ought to be sufficient protection, so far as the city of Toronto is concerned. The argument was advanced that Toronto and Hamilton and other cities of that character were in precisely, or should be, the same position as the smallest municipality. As far as I am personally concerned I have no argument to offer against the rights of the smallest municipality. If the Minister of Railways thinks that these municipalities have a special right to protection as regards railway crossings on the leved, that is a matter on which he should enunciate a policy in this House. But we find that in the two cities of Toronto and Hamilton the growth of population is such that it would be a wise policy to lay down the principle that their streets should not be closed on the level. It is well known that in New York, Chicago and London you could not find such a thing as a level crossing. There must always come a period in the growth of any large city when it must insist on railways entering it coming in either overhead or underground. I refer of course to through lines of transportation as distinct from tramways. Have Toronto and Hamilton reached that point? These cities pretend that they have and that it would be cheaper both for the railway companies and the cities to insist on either overhead or underground crossings. We find that people are killed once a week at these level crossings; and while we have no objection to any railway coming in, we consider it necessary, for the protection of life, that level crossings should not be allowed. This simply means the expenditure of a little more money by the railway companies for the protection of life. I submit that these municipalities are the ones to judge because it is they who are directly responsible.

They are the parties most vitally interested. In other cities this matter is not left to be dealt with by railway commissions; and I venture to think that cities of the size of Hamilton and Toronto should have the right—and I do not say that smaller cities should not have the same right—to say where and how a railway shall come in. If the smaller municipalities also are against the level crossing, they have my entire sympathy. I think the time is not far distant when the level crossing, in thickly congested parts of the country, will be a thing of the past, and when the railways will be obliged to build underground or overhead crossings at their own expense as part of the cost of their construction as commercial undertakings. After seven or eight years discussion we have finally got an arrangement with the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway for the protection of the lives and property of people who live in Toronto and people who come to Toronto, and in our judgment it is unfair and unreasonable that we should be compelled to have another eight or nine years of discussion with these people in order to get proper settlement of the question of level crossings in cities. Under these circumstances, unless the promoters of this Bill can see their way to give to the cities of Toronto and Hamilton the protection we ask in this respect, I strongly urge that this Bill should not pass.

The hour for private Bills having expired the Committee rose and reported progress.

SUPPLY—DESTITUTE DOUKHOBORS.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. THOMAS CHISHOLM (East Huron). Mr. Speaker, before the House goes into Committee of Supply I desire to call its attention to a matter which I think is of very great importance, and which ought to be attended to immediately. I refer to the condition of the Doukhobors who are on the tramp and have settled for the winter in the town of Fort William. It would appear from an article in the 'Winnipeg Tribune' of Saturday, March 7, that these people are at the present time herding together like cattle, many of them in an absolutely nude condition, and conducting themselves in direct opposition to the ordinary forms of decency and morality. The article is as follows:

Revolting conditions—Gruesome funeral of Doukobors pilgrims who died at Fort William was stopped by police—Sensations at Coroner's inquest.

Fort William, March 6.—The death of John Czlin, one of the Doukhobor pilgrims, which occurred last Monday, on which date also the crude funeral conducted by his fellow countrymen was stopped by Chief of Police Dodds, has created a sensation here which is only intensified by the discoveries made at the inquest into the death of the man.

Mr. BRISTOL

The coroner's inquest brought out the fact that neglect, starvation, lack of medical attention and pneumonia were the causes of death.

No aid summoned.

Interesting evidence as to the belief and customs of the Doukhobors was given by Alexis, one of the band.

Czlin had been sick for three weeks. He was given all he asked for to eat. All he had for the last couple of weeks was plums and dry bread.

The band intended to place his body in the bush, where it would be devoured by wild animals. This is their custom, and they believe it is the way God requires burials to be made. Dogs would not touch the body, but wolves would tear it to pieces and devour it.

No medical aid was summoned for Czlin, as all believed that Jesus would look after him.

All Doukhobors are brothers and sisters. They have one large family and believe in free love.

Gruesome funeral.

Chief Dodds gave the jury some facts about the house the Doukhobors live in, and he also gave evidence as to the manner of funeral which was being held. The dead body was secured on a home-made sleigh and dragged by six or eight men, and from information which he got from them it was their intention to merely take the body out to the burying ground and there leave it to be destroyed by animals and the forces of nature.

Evidence of the post-mortem examination of the deceased was given by Dr. C. C. Withrow. He stated that the organs of the man were in perfect condition, but though he was six feet three inches tall he weighed at the time of his death only 125 pounds, whereas a normal weight would have been in the neighbourhood of 180 pounds. He was evidently suffering from pneumonia. He had not received any attention, and as the stomach was empty it appeared as though he had starved.

Revolting conditions.

After hearing the evidence of Chief Dodds as to the stopping of the funeral the jury adjourned to make an inspection of the Doukhobor house on May street.

Thirty of the pilgrims were found together in one room, while in a much smaller room upstairs fourteen were huddled together.

Several of the band looked as if they were starving to death, while others had coughs which were almost bad enough to lead to the belief that consumption had taken hold of some of the members of the band. The rooms were all in a high degree of temperature and all the pilgrims were lying around in a naked condition.

After the inspection the jury returned to the court-room, where the following verdict was brought in:

We, the jury empanelled to inquire into the death of John Czlin, find that he died in the house known as the Doukhobor house on May street, city of Fort William, district of Thunder Bay, and that he died at 10 o'clock p.m., March 2, 1908, from a complication of causes, namely, starvation and pneumonia, conditions being aggravated by most evident neglect and lack of medical attendance.

Presentment of the jury.

In addition to the verdict the coroner's jury this morning brought in the following presentment:

It devolves on the coroner's jury in considering the conditions leading up to the death of John Czlin, to visit the house occupied by the Doukhobors.

Our visit revealed a condition of affairs most deplorable and of such a nature as warranted this jury in making a presentment of the facts and an urgent request that some immediate and effective measures be adopted by the proper authorities to remedy the abuses existing.

Many were naked.

The premises are mainly a building 24 by 36, with an addition thereto 14 by 16, large enough in all for possibly eighteen people at the most. In this area we found 76 men, women and children. In one room, 7 by 13, there were 14 inmates all together naked, both sexes, ranging from 13 to 55 years of age. A similar condition was found in other rooms of the house, where men and women, covered and naked were found together, with no regard for decency or respect for common morality. They do not accept our marriage laws, but practice a system of free love, which admits of practices which, in our opinion, are not tolerated in any civilized community and which they were not allowed to pursue in their own country. Under this system the children, of whom we found 19 apparently bright and capable, are lost to their parents and grow up without proper restraint. We, therefore, advise that these children at least be transferred from their present debasing surroundings to some suitable institution where they can be taught the principles of industry, morality and good citizenship.

As for the adults, they do not appear to be amenable to reason and we can suggest no other solution than the breaking up of the community. There is then a possibility of their adopting the usages of our country and becoming good citizens.

Now, Mr. Speaker, no doubt you have noticed that this band, when it first started out, declared their intention of coming to Ottawa. They tramped as far as Fort William in the fall of the year, and there they halted for the winter; but they have declared their intention, as soon as spring opens, of making their way to the city of Ottawa. Now, I would advise the government to consider what the result of their visit would be. Imagine these people walking down Sparks street, imagine the effect it would have upon our young men and women, our boys and girls. If this article is correct, certainly the condition of affairs in Fort William would indicate that there is a weak spot in our immigration laws, and it is time that the government should see that the defect is remedied. Why, it would appear that in far-off Russia, the country from which they came, they are not allowed to live in the way we find them living here to-day. People who practise these customs are neither more nor less than moral lepers, and they should be put in some asylum, or in some moral lazar house, where they could be prevented from setting a bad example to the young people of Canada. I shall blame this government if they do not take steps to prevent these people marching into Ottawa. Evidently we need something more than a medical examination of immigrants, we should have a moral quarantine as well as a medical quarantine. Men who are morally unfit to come into this country should not be allowed to come. I must say that there are other immigrants coming into Canada the tendency of whose conduct must lower the tone of morality in this country. And what is a country worth if its moral tone is lowered? At present there is no country in the world, I think, where the moral tone is higher than in Canada. Let us protect that with care, let us see that immigrants brought into this country are moral and respectable. We know that the old Roman empire went to decay simply because its citizens, who, in the early history of the nation, were moral, patriotic and brave, were corrupted by the barbarians which the wars of the republic had brought in; the tone of morality was lowered, and the fall of the empire is said to have been due entirely to the licentiousness of its citizens. Now, we are told that some of these British and European immigrants were farm labourers in the old country. I do not believe it. They show by their ignorance of farming that they know nothing about it. You cannot make the farmers of Ontario believe that these men were either farmers or farm servants in the old country. You might as well tell me that that desk in front of me is a span of horses and a wagon. I suppose that if an hon. gentleman were to tell me that that desk was a span of horses and a wagon I would have to take his word for it, but nevertheless I would not believe him. In the same way, you may tell me that these people were acquainted with farm work in Britain or Europe, but you cannot make me believe it. I heard of one man who was brought into the country not long ago; he was engaged by a farmer, and after he had been several weeks on the farm his master ordered him to go to the barnyard and drive the cattle to water. A little while afterwards the boss went out into the yard and saw this man waving his hands and shouting, trying to drive the gobbler and an old rooster to drink; he thought they were cattle. The fact is that most of these people come from the slums of cities and not from the farms, although some of them make good farm servants afterwards. They come from places where they have not had a proper training. Some of them may have been in prison, some of them may have come to this country to escape prison. It is to be remembered that when a farmer engages servants he has to take them into the bosom of his family, he has to make them companions for his sons and daughters. Therefore, I cannot too strongly impress upon the government the need of exercising the greatest care in order to prevent the entry into Canada of farm labourers who are unfit to associate with the sons and daughters of our Canadian farmers. They must be real farm servants and fit to associate with our own farmers and their families. Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope the government will take prompt action so as to prevent this threatened parade of Doukhobors down the streets of Ottawa.

Mr. PETER ELSON (East Middlesex). After listening to the article which has been read by the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Chisholm) I feel impelled to make a few remarks. Some years ago when I read about the Doukhobors in the Northwest, I got the impression that they were somewhat immoral and unchristian in their habits of life; but I had no idea they were quite so bad as is shown by this article which has just been read by my hon. friend. It appears that these people congregate together in large numbers and that would go to show that it is not a very healthy way for them to live. It seems to me that their homes, so many people being assembled together in them would be hot beds of disease and that diseases of various kinds would be likely to emanate from them. Tuberculosis is something that the people of our country are trying to prevent. The people are spending their money, giving their time and doing their best to prevent the spread of tuberculosis, but, according to the article which the hon. gentleman has read, it appears there is something of that kind amongst these people. There is another thing. It appears that these people congregate together and they go about in large bodies on a kind of pilgrimage looking for something they hardly know what and they are generally, in fact, almost always, quite destitute of clothing, not having enough to cover them. I am sure that it would be most unpleasant and something that would shock the nervous system of any body to meet these people upon the public highway even out in the far west let alone meeting them on Sparks street in the city of Ottawa. These people have been brought here by the government and I must understand that the sum of $5 a head has been paid for them. I do not blame the government. No doubt they thought that they would be desirable immigrants. Then again we have the Lord's Day Act and the various Acts which have been passed by the different provinces for the purpose of keeping people straight and for assisting them to live respectable, but it would seem that it is impossible to cause these people to assimilate with their neighbours around them. As the government of the day have brought these troublesome people in, believing that they might become good citizens it would seem to me that it is up to the government to do something in regard to them. The question is what to do. The solution of the trouble would seem to me to be something like this: If they cannot be brought to assimilate themselves with the good citizens of our country they ought to be handed back, everything that belongs to them, even a little more than absolutely belongs to them, and then they should be deported from our country, returned to the country from whence they came and let the land that they occupied be given to good citizens who would cause the prairies of the west to blossom and bloom like the rose, instead of having these people living there and doing little if any good for the country. I felt a little in earnest upon this matter when listening to the article which was read and I sincerely hope the government will take this matter in hand and try and regulate it so that these people will not be a nuisance. I speak of the Doukhobors only. From what I have heard of other immigrants, I conclude that they are fairly good citizens, but it does seem that the Doukhobors are not a desirable class.

Mr. J. BARR (Dufferin). An object lesson has been placed before us of the foolish course we have been pursuing during the last ten or fifteen years in connection with the immigrants who have been brought out to this country. These Doukhobors were brought from Russia and placed upon some of the best land we have in the west, as I know from personal observation having been out there a few months ago. The portion of the land which was not occupied by these people was taken away from them and hundreds and hundreds of the best citizens of our country put forth every effort to obtain it. Some of our best young men out there were anxious to obtain a portion of that land and being in the east for the purpose of spending the winter, they asked the government for an extension of time, even for a month, in order that they would not have to go back west in the cold winter to file their applications, but they were told that they could not have a day and that if they were not on the land by the appointed time they would lose it. Contrast this with the treatment of the Doukhobors. They were brought from the country of their birth and placed on land in the west at the expense of the Dominion and they have been kept there for many years while our boys were prevented from obtaining land which they desired to occupy. We do not wish to settle that vast western country with foreigners of a class who will not make good citizens, permitting them to occupy the best land compelling our own boys to take land of an inferior quality. We do not desire that these Doukhobors and other foreigners who will never make good citizens shall be given advantages which our own citizens do not enjoy. The time has come when we should call a halt, when we should review our immigration system and endeavour to people that vast country with good citizens or retain the land for future generations. These Doukhobors have taken possession of a part of Port Arthur and the inhabitants of that city have been obliged to feed them. From a medical point of view these people have become a menace to the health of Port Arthur. The time has come when something must be done because we cannot allow these people to become a menace to our country and probably to start infectious diseases in the communities in which they are living for the time being. It is our duty to see that none are permitted to come into this country who will not make desirable citizens. I believe that one American coming over here is better than probably half a dozen of the other immigrants who are coming in and they are prepared to come in large numbers if we give them the ordinary inducements that we are offering to these foreigners. The result of our immigration policy is that the land is being taken up as rapidly as is necessary. We are paying out annually a large sum of money to encourage immigration. We paid $5 a head for every one of these Doukhobors and from the time they came up to the present we have been nursing them and looking after their wants; yet to-day we find them in a worse state of civilization than they were when they arrived. Have we elevated their morals? There is danger of their presence having a degrading effect upon the morals of this country because these people present an object lesson for our young men who look upon them in Port Arthur and other towns which, to say the least, must have a demoralizing effect. If we wish to become a great nation, a nation among the nations, if we wish to have a quiet Sunday and to have all those conditions which are essential to the highest state of civilization we must have intelligent citizens in this country and we must see to it that the morals of our people are properly looked after.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). I am surprised that there is no member of the government who feels himself called upon to answer this charge of my hon. friend from Huron (Mr. T. Chisholm) and of the other hon. gentlemen who have spoken. This is a serious matter. We should know how these people were brought to this country; whether they were paid for at the rate of $5 a head and whether the North Atlantic Trading Company of unsavory memory had anything to do with their importation. If we have paid for them it is bad enough, but whether we have or not it would be a good thing for the country to pay to send them back again. I saw some of these immigrants in the west last summer and it was a sad spectacle. I saw them in Fort William too but fortunately, although the weather was more clement then than it is now, they were not so scantily attired as report says they are at present. Since the members of the government seem to be afraid to speak on this question, perhaps the hon. member from Mackenzie (Mr. Cash) who has quite a number of them among his constituents will tell us something about them, and as he is a medical man, and a kind hearted man as well, I am sure his description of them would be interesting. If these Doukhobors can ever be made good citizens of Canada there may be some hope, but if that is an impossibility then the Minister of the Interior should send them home. It is not becoming a Christian nation that we should allow these unfortunate people to live amongst us in such an uncivilized state. It was nothing short of a calamity to bring these Doukhobors to this country, and the sooner they are packed back to their native land the better for all. Then, the member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) has quite a number of them among his constituents at the present time and perhaps he would tell us something about them, if he is not afraid of losing their votes at the coming election.

Mr. E. L. CASH (Mackenzie). The Doukhobors in Canada number about 8,000 and some of them live in my constituency. It appears that one of these people died of pneumonia at Fort William, but pneumonia is a very common disease and it proves fatal to many who have the very best medical attendance. I therefore do not see why all this fuss should be raised because one of these people died without having a physician to attend them. I can say that the Doukhobors living in the McKenzie district do avail of medical attendance and they pay their medical attendant. In the hospital at Yorkton there are Doukhobors at all seasons of the year; they have a hospital of their own there where minor diseases are treated and in their villages they contemplate building hospitals and employing trained nurses. We must remember that those Doukhobors who have gone to Fort William are a fanatical section of the community, and we are glad to get rid of them.

Mr. BERGERON. Did you send them to the Rainy River district?

Mr. CASH. We did not care where they went; we were glad to get rid of them. Now as to the Doukhobors being immoral I can say that if the reports in the newspapers are true their morals would compare favourably with the morals of some people in Ontario. Just a couple of days ago we had a report in the Toronto 'Globe' of a young lady who was living with a man in Ontario and she burned down a barn.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. She was found not guilty.

Mr. CASH. She did not burn the barn.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. No.

Mr. CASH. If some hon. gentlemen would go among the Doukhobors and study their characteristics they would come to the conclusion that they are a moral people. They may do some things that to our civilization seem immoral, but nevertheless, in the light which they look upon these things, you cannot call them an immoral people. Then, again, there are no people more cleanly in their habits than they are. It is true some fanatics have tramped to the constituency of my hon. friend from Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) but we all have our little difficulties in our constituencies and we manage to get along in some way.

Mr. BERGERON. But they wear clothes in Yorkton.

Mr. CASH. Well, we had a pilgrimage into Yorkton and the Doukhobors came unclothed but they were taken charge of by the mounted police, locked up in the prison, and furnished with clothes. Possibly on my advice, a small portion of these Doukhobors were held to be insane. They were examined by two respectable physicians, they were adjudged insane and sent down to Regina. Mr. Haultain who was then attorney general for the territories would not accept the judgment of the physicians and he insisted that the Doukhobors should be charged with indecent exposure, and although the asylum was in my opinion the proper place for them they were sent to jail. That I think was a mistake. Really, the greatest objection I have to the Doukhobors is that they will not become Canadian citizens, However, this very fact will meet the argument of one gentleman on the other side who has said that we may be afraid of losing their votes, because not being Canadian citizens they cannot have votes, and therefore we who have them in our constituencies can speak with perfect frankness about them. I do not think you will find a single criminal record against the Doukhobors in Canada. There is not a class of people in Canada to-day with less crime attributed to them than the Doukhobors. I believe that the action of the government in taking away the large area of land from them was well advised because some of this land, as hon. gentlemen opposite have said, is very desirable land. But in all such land there is some which is very undesirable and that is one advantage which I can see in the community system. Where we have a community taking up land, section after section in a solid block, if they are intelligent and make intelligent use of the land, it should certainly redound to the greater benefit of the people living there for the reason that they would have their hay land, their plough land and their pasture land. In that way the land can be better used than if each man had a quarter-section, because some quarter-sections would not be of any advantage to the men living on them. I do not think I need further detain the House

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). I do not purpose going into the Doukhobor question, which has been discussed over and over again. I think the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) was at one with me in the early days in opposing their introduction to this country. That, however, is not the point to-night, and I am surprised that none of the ministers have expressed an opinion with reference to the state of things existing in Fort William. It is a shame to allow people like these to be brought into this country and then to have a report in the newspapers that one of them, a full-grown man, apparently in good health, has died of starvation. If these people cannot be controlled in any other way, they should be arrested and confined in an asylum, jail, penitentiary or other place of safe-keeping. It is perfectly outrageous that they should be allowed to live as they are—in fact, it can hardly be called living; they are not getting enough to eat and to keep body and soul together. In a civilized country like this that should not be allowed. We may talk about the misfortune of bringing them to this country and of Mr. Preston's great desire to show his ability as an immigration agent, but that does not relieve the situation. The hon. gentleman who brought this matter to the attention of the House is, in my opinion, deserving of thanks. It is an urgent matter; the government is responsible for bringing these people here, and should take care of them. They took care of them the first year they were here, and if they required and deserved care then they should be taken care of now, just as when they first came here, if they cannot take care of themselves. It is a disgrace to this country to allow a whole horde of people to live in a house capable of accommodating only eighteen people. We are told there are seventy men, women and children living in such a place, not half clothed; I do not see how they can live in this climate. It appears to me to be the duty of the Minister of the Interior to make a statement, and to pledge himself that these people will be looked after in some intelligent way. It is a disgrace to Canada. Yet with all these idle people in Canada we have the government still sending special agents to the old country to bring more immigrants, and last January they doubled the bonus on immigrants from Europe. I think it is altogether out of place. I do not think it is in the best interests of this country or of the people that come to this country as immigrants under these circumstances, and I hope the minister will tell us what he is likely to do about this matter, that he will see that these people are not left to suffer as they have been suffering, because they are human beings like ourselves, and quite as capable of feeling and suffering.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I presume that the reading with which my hon. friend from Huron entertained the House a little while ago was just as useful a manner of obstructing the business as any other that he could adopt.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I do not think that is fair.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. OLIVER. And the remarks made by my hon. friends opposite are about as much in keeping with the facts and the occasion as is usual under such circumstances.

As to the responsibility for the Doukhobors in Canada, my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Uriah Wilson) has reminded the House that he and I were opposed to the movement to bring them here. I do not at this date remember how far our opposition went or to what extent we voiced our opinions on the floor of the House, but I remember very distinctly that if we voiced our opposition we were the only members of parliament who did. At the time of the bringing of the Doukhobors to Canada public opinion in Canada, I believe, with the exception of my hon. friend and myself, was quite unanimously in favour of the movement, and endorsed it in every particular as being a movement for the advantage of the country.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Would the hon. minister allow me? I do not wish to interrupt or contradict him, but I think the feeling was that immigrants were wanted.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. And that they were almost glad to get any kind to get a start. It was not especially because they were Doukhobors, as I understand.

Mr. OLIVER. I had not stated that yet, but I propose to say so now. Part of my argument was that, with the exception of my hon. friend and myself, so far as I know, public opinion was unanimously in favour of the movement to bring these people, one reason, as was stated by my hon. friend, being that the country needed and wanted immigrants; these people were immigrants, and therefore they were welcomed with open arms by both sides of the House and by the people all over the country. But there was another reason why they were especially welcomed, they were looked upon as a persecuted people, persecuted for religion's sake, as the people of this country understood at that time, and it was because they were a people persecuted for religion's sake that they were more especially welcomed by so many in Canada. It was strange to hear certain gentlemen on the other side who have spoken to-night denounce these people as being irreligious and immoral and undesirable from this point of view, when the very basis of their being brought to this country was that they were too religious for the country in which they lived. The trouble with these people who are to-day in Fort William is not that they lack in religion, or in the ordinary observances of religious life, but that they are fanatics, that they have gone to extremes in their theories in regard to their religion, until, as our friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Cash) has said, they are, to all intents and purposes, insane. As regards the conditions prevailing in Fort William, I deplore them quite as much as any member in this House, and I am sure that to-night's discussion will draw the attention of the authorities, who are really responsible, to that condition and probably induce them to take some action. These people are not immigrants. They have been seven years settled in the country and have earned their right to citizenship twice over if they would have accepted it. This government has therefore no right or authority to interfere. These people are subject to the laws of Ontario; and if they in any way contravene these laws, it is for the provincial authorities to take such proceedings as may be necessary. They are residents of Ontario, and this government has no authority to punish them for any offences against decency or good living. We have an immigration law which gives the federal government authority to deport people under certain circumstances, but that deportation must take place within two years after arrival. Any responsibility which pertains to this government we are prepared to discharge, but we are not prepared to assume a responsibility which rests entirely on the province.

My hon. friend from Dufferin (Dr. Barr) spoke most feelingly of the hardship inflicted on Canadians who had acquired Doukhobor lands in the rush at Yorkton last year. He has hardly stated the case correctly. This government has not interfered with the right of any of these people to hold their land. They can hold them six, eight, ten or twelve months so far as we are concerned; but if some other Canadian comes along and demands that land at the end of the six months which was allowed to go into residence, in our view, one Canadian is as good as another, and the man who has not carried out his agreement must lose his land to the other who will.

Mr. BARR. Is there any difference made between a Canadian and an American?

Mr. OLIVER. Not a bit of difference in the eyes of this government, only in the eyes of my hon. friend This government is not taking any land away from those people who have taken it up. They take it up subject to the consideration that they shall go into residence on it within six months from the date of entry; and if another man comes afterwards, at the end of that six months and says 'the first man has not fulfilled his agreement and I want that land the government says it is yours.'

I do not think it is necesary that I should go into the general question of immigration. I am sorry to hear some of my friends object so strongly to some immgrants who have come within the past year but I want to say that this government absolutely denies any responsibility for their presence. As a matter of policy or of administration we are not responsible for their presence. Further than that it is part of the policy of this government and its administration that any of those people who have been in this country less than two years may under certain circumstances and conditions which are well known be sent back to the country whence they came on proper demand being made and proper procedure being taken. If these people are objectionable they can easily be sent away. But that can only be done under the law on the demand of the municipal authorities. If the municipal authorities do not see fit to make such a demand this government is powerless to act.

As regards the Doukhobors I have nothing to say for or against them. They have been in this country seven years. There were about 8,000 of them altogether. They have been, as my hon. friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Cash) has, said, moral, law abiding and industrious, and in every way worthy residents except that they have not, as a whole, taken upon themselves the responsibilities and the rights of citizenship. But in morality, industry, thrift and law abiding character, and in their enthusiastic belief in the Christian religion, they are not second to any class of our population. It is only fair that that much should be said on their behalf. There was the objection made for some time they were holding a large amount of land which they were not cultivating, contrary to the spirit and letter of our land laws. But that situation has been changed. The land they held in excess is now occupied by other people. They have been here seven years, during which they have added to the wealth of the country by production on their farms, by labour on our railways and in the woods and in other ways. They have interfered with nobody. They have enterprises which are a credit to them and a model to other people, and I am very sorry that such expressions should have been used towards them as we have heard to-day. These expressions could only have been used out of a lack of knowledge of the facts. I cannot imagine that any hon. gentleman would so distort the facts, if he really knew them as they are.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman has said that this government is not responsible in any way for the presence of these people.

Mr. OLIVER. The government of that day was certainly responsible for the presence of the Doukhobors, but its policy in that regard was unanimously endorsed by this House, barring, I believe, my hon. friend and myself, so far as I know. But I did say that the government was not responsible in any way, shape or manner for the immigrants to whom my hon. friend from Huron took such strong objection, that is to say, the immigrants principally from the old country who are now unemployed in some of the cities and centres of population in Ontario.

Mr. LANCASTER. Who are responsible?

Mr. OLIVER. The charitable associations and organizations of the old country in a large degree ; so far as we have been able to discover, and we have followed up the matter very carefully, both on the other side of the water and on this.

Mr. BERGERON. Doesn't the government pay their passage ?

Mr. OLIVER. I want to say to my hon. friend and to the House that this government does not pay the passage of anybody, and does not pay one dollar to assist the immigration of any class or condition. That is not its policy, and is not its administration.

Mr. BERGERON. Do we not pay $5 per head to agents, $5 per head to steamship companies, and $2 per head to another agency, making altogether about $12 per head on immigrants coming to Canada ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am very glad my hon. friend has given me the opportunity of stating the case as it is, because I can easily see that if a large number of our people have the same idea as my hon. friend from Beauharnois, our immigration policy can scarcely be very popular in the country. I wish to repeat that the Department of Immigration does not, and, so far as I am aware, with the exception of these Doukhobors who have been mentioned, never has paid a part of the passage of any immigrant. The policy of assisted immigration is absolutely contrary to the immigration policy of this government. The policy and the practice of the government is to spend large amounts of money for publicity, to draw the favourable attention of desirable people to this country ; but while it has spent and is spending, and I believe is prepared to spend, large sums of money for publicity, it has not, does not, and is not going to spend one cent for assistance. It spends money for publicity in sending agents to the countries from which we desire immigrants ; it spends money for publicity in printing literature, in advertising in newspapers, and in paying a bonus to ticket agents on certain classes of people who come to Canada.

Mr. BERGERON. How much is paid ?

Mr. OLIVER. Five dollars per head on certain classes ; but that is not in any way an assistance to the immigrant. It is a part of the campaign of publicity, and is an inducement to the booking agent to direct the immigrants to Canada rather than to the United States.

Mr. BERGERON. Do we pay that $5 per head also on the immigrants who go to the United States ?

Mr. OLIVER. No. I wish to state the reason for paying that $5 per head to the booking agent. The steamship lines run from ports in Great Britain to ports in the United States. The booking agent, who holds an agency for the different steamship lines, gets his commission from the steamship company for every ticket he sells, whether it is to Canada or the United States or anywhere else. By Canada paying the booking agent a bonus on each immigrant that he sends here it must be evident that when an intending immigrant asks for a ticket to America, it is to the interest of the booking agent to sell him a ticket to Canada rather than one to the United States. It is on that principle that the money is paid, but it is paid only on certain classes of immigrants.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Can the minister tell us on what percentage of those who come to Canada the bonus is paid ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot tell that offhand; but my hon. friend has a question on the Order Paper, which will come in due course on Monday next, the answer to which will give him the information ; and when he gets that he will see that we pay a bonus on only a fraction of those who come. We are not in any way responsible for the coming of the classes who are absolutely unlike the classes we specifically advertise for. Our literature states very distinctly the only classes we want, the only classes we pay for or instruct any of our agents to induce to come to this country.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Everybody seems to have known of this undesirable class coming to this country, except the government. If they had three or four years ago taken the steps which they are now taking, by passing an order in council, not to allow any to come without the endorsement of an officer in England, we would probably have been saved a great deal of the present pauperism in this country.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no doubt about that. The action we have taken recently might have been taken profitably some time before ; but the necessity for doing it did not arise until recently. At the last session of this parliament the Immigration Department was criticised, and criticised very strongly, I do not say very ably, both by a gentleman sitting on this side and by several gentlemen sitting on the other side, because of the scarcity of help in eastern Canada and because due measures were not taken to supply the demand then existing. While we might be aware that there were people coming whom we did not induce to come, yet so long as there was such a demand for labour as evidently did exist at that time, so long as there was room and opportunity for these people, it did not seem to us that it was our place to raise objections to them. But as soon as the conditions changed, and it became apparent that it was necessary to put a check upon this class of immigration, forthwith we proceeded to put checks upon it, and we believe that the results will be advantageous. Moreover, that is not the point at issue. The point at issue is this, Is this government responsible for the introduction of that class of people into this country at the present time ? I say absolutely no, not in any shape or manner, by inference or by fact. At present, as the hon. gentleman has suggested, we are taking means absolutely to exclude them, not contrary to our previous policy, but carrying out our previous policy under changed conditions.

Mr. BERGERON : I understand my hon. friend to admit that $5 a head is paid to the booking agent for every immigrant of a desirable class that comes into this country. Now I want to put a question to my hon. friend. The other day, in an answer given in this House, it was stated that 25,000 or 30,000 of those immigrants went over to the States. Now I want to know what becomes of that $5 a head that the government paid on these 25,000 or 30,000 immigrants that went over to the States.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, we try to keep track of the immigrants for some time after their arrival, and when we find that any of them have passed over to the States, bonuses are not paid on those men. The bonus of course is not paid immediately on the arrival of the immigrant, not until some time afterwards ; and if we find after the bonus has been paid that the immigrant has crossed the line, that amount is deducted from the next payment that we make to that booking agent. While it is impossible absolutely to guard against cases like that, I would like the hon. gentleman to understand that we are quite aware of this movement taking place, and we take every reasonable means of guarding against paying money on behalf of people who have passed over to the United States. That is one reason why we were not able to settle with the friends of our hon. friends, the North Atlantic Trading Company, as promptly as we would otherwise have done. We had to hold back their final payments for a year in order to check as well as we could payments on immigrants who had gone over to the United States.

Mr. BERGERON. Are their claims all settled ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister explain to us the system of inspection of immigrants after they land in Caanda, by which he may know whether they go into the United States or not ?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not give such an explanation as would fully satisfy the hon. gentleman. We have a very large number of immigration officers, and every one of them is employed from time to time in noting the movement of the immigrants. But what might be done in one case could not be done in another, and the same system does not prevail everywhere.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It is quite evident from what the minister says that no check is kept on these men, and that my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) was right when he said that the $5 per head on these 25,000 who went over to the States, is money lost to this country.

Mr. TALBOT. He has not named one.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) will go up to Niagara, or to Port Huron, or to any other port of entry into the United States, he will find a constant stream of immigrants passing over into the United States.

Mr. TALBOT. And the American customs officers watching over there ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes, the American officers are watching. I have seen with my own eyes fifty people in one day turned back at Port Huron, undesirable immigrants that the United States would not receive under any consideration. When they were turned back I followed them as far as London, where I understand they were hired by a railway company. I know that hundreds and thousands of these immigrants of a most undesirable class are turned back by the United States authorities at the ports of entries, and become a burden on our community. Go into the hospitals and asylums of Ontario to-day and see the enormous number of these undesirable immigrants crowding these institutions. If you visit the jails you will find the bulk of the prisoners are of this class, people who have been turned back from the United States. Evidently the inspection at our ports of entry has been most unsatisfactory. Would the minister make some explanation of the method of inspection which allowed these people to come into this country ? If the government are not responsible for these people being here, then the officials who made the inspections at the port of entry are responsible.

Mr. OLIVER. I think my hon. friend's imagination is as vivid as that of his colleagues, when he speaks about the asylums and jails of Ontario being full of undesirable immigrants. But if that is the case it is the fault of the provincial authorities, because this government under the present law has deported several hundreds of such people from this province within the past few years, and will continue to do so.

Mr. BERGERON. Where do you send them to ?

Mr. OLIVER. To the country from which they came, and at the expense of the transportation company. Under our immigration law it costs us nothing, that is, if we can fix the responsibility upon the transportation company. Sometimes we cannot fix that responsibility and then we have to pay ; but generally it is the transportation companies who take these people back at their own expense. If Ontario is suffering to-day in the way the hon. gentleman says, it is the fault of the provincial government and not of this administration. Now as to the method of inspection. When the ship lands, the immigrants are passed under close review before one or two medical officers. The inspection is, of course, a hurried one and unless there is evidence of some diseased condition or some unfortunate mental condition the immigrant passes. It is impossible in the hurry of that inspection to locate every case.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I would like to ask the minister if he says that a personal inspection is made.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. If the minister will look at the report of his chief medical inspector he will see that sometimes they inspect them in batches of a thousand.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know what our chief medical inspector has said in a particular case but I have seen the inspection myself. I took the place of an immigrant, went through the chute along with the rest, and I certainly passed in close review before the doctors. The system is the same at the Canadian port as it is at the United States port, and the United States people have the same system of inspection at Quebec as our people have.

Mr. BERGERON. Is my hon. friend sure of that because in the United States they take a longer time to examine them than we do ?

Mr. OLIVER. I quite admit that. They are perhaps more particular than we are and they take a longer time to do it but I do not think they arrive at a better result I think we keep out as fair a proportion of undesirables as they do and if they take a longer time to do this work it is simply because they have more red tape and offi-cialism, whereas it is a matter of good judgment with us.

Mr. BERGERON. You cannot inspect a thousand immigrants in a few hours.

Mr. OLIVER. Of course you cannot do it effectively and I admit that there are undesirables who slip through. It is because it is absolutely impossible to prevent the admission of a certain number of undesirables that we have the deportation provision under which we can pick them out and send them back. But, there is an inspection at every ocean port, every individual is inspected, and if there is evidence of physical deformity or of mental defect the immigrant is picked out at once, more thoroughly examined and either detained, deported or let go as the case may be. The same is done with the United States immigrants who land at Canadian ports. There land at Canadian ports a large number of immigrants destined for the United States and these immigrants pass inspection by United States officers at Canadian ports just as if they were passing at a United States port, after which they go through to their destinations in the United States.

Mr. BERGERON. And they leave the bad ones here.

Mr. OLIVER. They turn back any who are medically unfit just as we turn back any who are medically unfit. If they let an unfit person pass they are inefficient. If we let an unfit person pass we are, to that extent, inefficient. I think that both sides do their duty and, generally speaking, do it very effectively, and the result is very good. If an immigrant is destined for a United States point and fails to pass the inspection of the United States medical officers he is not allowed to come into Canada. He is excluded at that point and never comes into Canada at all.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If I may be permitted to substantiate the statement I made a short time ago——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman can only put a question. He has already spoken.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I want merely to substantiate a statement I made. I have here the 38th annual report of the inspector of prisons and public charities for the province of Ontario, and I turn to page 15 where I find reference to 'undesirable immigrant classes.'

There is marked evidence that public attention should be called to the large number of undesirable and unsuitable immigrants that are being induced to seek shelter in Ontario. This has been found nowhere more noticeable than in the city of Toronto, where more than half of the indigent casuals, who have had to be provided for, belong to the immigrant class. In many instances, however, they prove quite incapable and, when winter comes on, they drift into the cities and are not slow to find the location of the charitable institutions.

Mr. TALBOT. What book is that ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The 38th annual report of the Inspector of prisons and public charities of the province of Ontario. This is the statement of the inspector himself.

The whole fault for this condition must be placed where it belongs, namely, in the system that permits and encourages immigration without a proper discrimination. The present policy of Canadian emigration agents in Europe would seem to be to secure the number and pay no heed to the quality of persons urged to seek a haven in this country. The system of the Dominion government of bonusing agents to send out in an apparently indiscriminate manner a class of people totally unfit to provide a livelihood for themselves is deplorable.

Mr. TALBOT. Is that in order ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand the hon. gentleman has already spoken. He can put a question.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. He only asked a question before.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I ask a question.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think this is going beyond the limits of a question.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. All right, if the hon. gentlemen do not care to hear this.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I think the hon. gentleman only asked a question previously, that the minister answered him and now he is going to make his speech.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I will only take a few moments; I am just about through.

During the past years it has cost the hospitals and public charities of Ontario thousands of dollars to provide for these people, who are homeless and friendless and quite incapable of earning a living in this country.

Mr. TALBOT. I rise again to a point of order. I would like to know what this has to do with the Doukhobor question which is the question before the chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand the hon. gentleman is putting a question to the minister on that subject.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I want to ask the minister what he intends to do in this matter :

More precautions are needed. 'Quality, not quantity,' should be a rule from which there should be no deviation. More than ever before Ontario has been made, during the past year, the dumping ground of a most undesirable class.

Just a few lines in regard to orphans.

The number of children in the orphanages of Ontario is two hundred more than last year. This is not a hopeful sign, and on inquiry I find that the increase in the number of inmates is, in many institutions ascribed to the many children belonging to the immigrant class, recently arrived in this country, who have had to be provided for.

I would like to ask the minister what he intends to do and if he is going to recoup the province of Ontario for having to pay for this undesirable class of immigrants.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the question at issue between the hon. member and myself was as to the immigrants who are now inmates of gaols and asylums of Ontario and my hon. friend has not informed us as to any who are in either gaols or asylums.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. We will have no trouble in doing that a little later.

Mr. OLIVER. So far my hon. friend has had the opportunity, he has had the book and he has failed to do so. Regarding the statement contained in the book which has been read that there is a campaign in European countries without regard to the quality of immigrants, I can only say that my hon. friend is not warranted in reading such a statement, and that he would not be warranted in making it himself after the statement I have made. I do not think it is right or proper that a statement which was evidently written so maliciously or ignorantly should be placed before this House in the way in which my hon. friend has done it. I want to say further that if the city of Toronto is suffering from the presence of immigrants within its limits as my hon. friend here suggests the city of Toronto has just the same remedy in that regard as it had in the months of November and December in regard to certain other immigrants in Toronto who were deported at the order of the municipality. There was no limit placed by the Department of the Interior on the number of immigrants that the city of Toronto might see fit to deport. The only question was whether they were subject to deportation under the laws of Canada, and if they were any immigrant the city of Toronto wanted deported has been deported. If these people are there to-day to the injury of the city of Toronto, the city of Toronto is responsible and not this government.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The Minister of the Interior has no justification for saying that this official report was written maliciously or in ignorance. I believe the person who penned that report was just as honest in his intentions, as sincere in his aims, and as truthful as the Minister of the Interior is himself. Those who know the gentleman who prepared that report will never attribute any such character to him as the minister has. This is the report of the hospitals and charities of the province of Ontario for 1907 printed by order of the legislative assembly of Ontario, and it does not deserve any such criticism as the minister has passed upon it. But the minister seems prone to that kind of argument tonight. He started out by saying that the conduct of the opposition was useful for obstruction only, and I want to tell him that neither as minister of the Crown nor as member of this House has he the right to use such language.

Mr. TALBOT. Oh.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman from Bellechasse laughs at that.

Mr. TALBOT. So well he may.

Mr. SPROULE. Does he know that under the rules of the House, no member, whether he be minister or not, has the right to impute motives. I am in the judgment of the House when I say that the opposition were not only within their rights but that they were justified, before granting supplies, to bring this grievance to the attention of the country and to ask the government for a remedy. The minister says that these people to whom reference is made are not immoral. Is it his idea of morality that 60 or 70 men, women and children, in a nude state should be crowded into the one House. That allegation has been made and the Minister of the Interior has not contradicted it. He says they are insane or they are fanatics, but if they are insane why did the government bring them to this country and pay $5 a head for them? The minister also told us that when the Doukhobors were brought here they were welcomed by both sides of the House and that none but himself and the member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) raised an objection. That statement is not in accordance with the facts. because I know that I for one, and that many other members of this House protested at the time.

Mr. OLIVER. I said I did not recall having opposed it in the House.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the minister to say that the Doukhobors were received, with open arms except by the member for Lennox and himself.

Mr. OLIVER. I admitted holding an opinion adverse to the immigration of these people, but I said I did not remember having voiced that opinion in the House, although I may have.

Mr. SPROULE. Why, I remember the Minister of the Interior when he was a private member declaring against the policy of the government, stating that Canadians were a moral people, an intelligent people, and a civilized people, and then asking did the government hope to raise that civilization higher by importing this kind of immigrants. I remember the Minister of the Interior speaking in strong condemnation of the policy of the government. I admired him for it, because as he told us he came from the west and he knew more about it than other people did. I remember that he condemned the government strongly and many members of the House agreed with him, but to-night he forgets all about it. Then the Minister of the Interior told us that the government has not and does not spend one cent for immigration.

Mr. OLIVER. For assisted immigration.

Mr. SPROULE. What is he paying the booking agents $5 a head for, is it for sending out cattle or merchandise. What is it for ?

Mr. OLIVER. For publicity.

Mr. SPROULE. And what is the publicity for if not to bring immigrants out here? What is the use of telling any man who is fit to be outside a lunatic asylum that the government is not assisting immigration? Such a statement is not complimentary to the common sense of the members of this House. The government must be responsible for bringing these immigrants here, and, as a member of the government, the Minister of the Interior cannot evade a share of that responsibility. To-night the Minister of the Interior said that this government had nothing to do with these immigrants ; but if so, why does he send out his agents occasionally to corral them, put them in wagons, tie them down and, with the assistance of the Northwest Mounted Police, take them off to a place where they are kept like prisoners ? After doing that, surely they will not say to-night that they have nothing to do with them ; they have tried to keep them on the land, they have prevented them from killing their cattle, taking the cattle from them, and yet they say the government has nothing to do with them. If they have no right, why did they interfere with them ? They were practically wards of the government. They had to corral them and drive them like cattle, they took care of them for days and weeks—I think in one case for a month—because they were brought into the country by the government and taken care of by them. Those now at Fort William may well be left to the tender mercies of the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee). The minister speaks of the vivid imagination of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. If any more vivid imagination can be displayed by any member than the minister has shown to-night, I would like to see it. For these reasons, I say that we are not only within our rights, but simply fulfilling our bounden duty in bringing this matter to the attention of the House, and no member has a right to assert that we are trying to retard or obstruct the progress of business. The minister himself spoke nearly as long as all the members on this side together, and he will not say that he was obstructing; he was simply doing his duty as other members were, and he should not apply such expressions to hon. members on either side of the House.

Mr. JAMES CONMEE (Rainy River). I rise to correct a wrong impression that may be created by some remarks that have been made. I understand that the newspaper quoted by the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. T. Chisholm) stated that this man died from starvation and pneumonia. That is not in accordance with the facts. I was at Fort William when this occurred, and the information that reached me as to the cause of the mans' death was not at all that it was starvation, but that, in the opinion of the coroner's jury, exposure had something to do with hastening his death. It would be a mistake to have that wrong impression go abroad.

One or two hon. gentlemen opposite have given us to understand that we may regard the conduct of these people as immoral. I shall not quarrel with any hon. gentleman as to his opinion in that respect, but I do not think it is believed by those who have had more opportunity of observing the character of these people than hon. gentlemen who have perhaps never seen one of them, that their conduct is in any sense immoral. It is a system of religion to which they have been trained from their early youth, and they desire to practise it. Anything that would prevent them from doing that would be regarded by them as persecution and tyranny, and therefore, from that point of view, I do not think they should be wrongly judged ; I do not know who is in a position to judge them in that respect. If there is responsibility for the presence of these people at Fort William, I do not think it attaches to this government. As has been stated by the minister, they have been here seven years, they have been here beyond the limit of time for which the laws relating to deportation apply.

There is a condition of things in connection with these people for which there is responsibility, but I do not believe that responsibility rests on this government. There are some thirty or thirty-five children amongst the number at Fort William, ranging in age from sixteen years down to a few months old. I do not think that these children are having what the majority of the people of Canada would regard as a good example. The Ontario government have laws and machinery for the care of neglected children, and they have authority, where children are neglected, or where the parents are judged to be immoral, or for other reasons incapable of taking proper care of the child, to take it away and care for it under the provincial institutions. My hon. friend likes to air the virtues of the government at Toronto. That government has been petitioned to take action in this case ; the member for the city of Fort William, who is a supporter of the Ontario government, has been requested to see if he could not do something to relieve the situation of these unfortunate children, but so far nothing whatever has been done by the provincial authorities.

As to the report which the hon. gentleman has read to the House from the Inspector of Prisons for Ontario, I do not hesitate to stamp that report as a partisan report. It does not state the facts, it states what is untrue, what cannot be proven or established, and the inspector who wrote it has, in my humble judgment, gone out of his way to prepare campaign literature for some party in a way that his duties do not call on him to do.

Mr. BLAIN. Since my hon. friend has made a political reference to the Ontario government, may I ask to what political party that inspector belongs?

Mr. CONMEE. This inspector is a good Conservative.

Mr. BLAIN. Oh, no.

Mr. CONMEE. Oh, yes; and appointed since the present government of Ontario came in. They discharged the inspector, Dr. Chamberlain, when they came in and put another in his place. I am not quarrelling about that, but I can assure my hon. friend that the inspector has just as strong political opinions as he has himself. I do not want particularly to make an attack on the Ontario government in regard to these Doukhobors, but if there is responsibility for the unfortunate condition of the younger people in that community, I feel quite justified in pointing out the fact that the Ontario government have the institutions, the law and the authority to relieve these children from their present surroundings. So far they have not done it. I am told that a man should not impute motives, certainly not behind the back of those to whom these motives might be imputed, and therefore I shall not state my opinion of the reasons that action was not taken in this case. I leave that to hon. gentlemen to work out for themselves.

Mr. H. S. CLEMENTS (West Kent). I should not have risen but for a remark of the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee), which was rather an insinuation that hon. members on this side were not in a position to judge the Doukhobor immigrants because they had not seen any. I for one have seen Doukhobors who have come to this country; I for one have seen the Doukhobor immigration to which the hon. gentleman refers.

Mr. CONMEE. I said that the people of Fort William had knowledge of these people and were perhaps in a better position to judge of their morality than the hon. gentleman who perhaps had never seen them. I did not say that no hon. gentlemen had ever seen them nor did I wish to convey the opinion that hon. gentlemen are not entitled to their opinion.

Mr. CONMEE.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I am bound to accept the hon. gentleman's statement. From the very first I thought the Doukhobors were not the class of people we should have in this country. I spoke on many platforms in different ridings adjoining the one I have the honour to represent, and I strongly protested, before I came to this House, against that immigration. I do not believe there is an hon. gentleman on the government side who will say that the Doukhobors brought into this country by this government are a class of immigrants who are a credit to this Dominion. I visited their settlement last summer; and after seeing their manner of living and the treatment they submitted to at the hands of their high priest Peter Veregaen, I came to the conclusion that it was very unfortunate they should ever have been admitted. So far as nationality or religion is concerned, I would be glad to see any immigration of people who are prepared to be Canadians and live up to our laws; but so far as I could judge there never has been a death or a marriage registered among the Doukhobors since they have been here. They entirely ignore any British or Canadian laws, and I would be wanting in my duty if I did not protest against such immigration. If there was any chance of deporting the whole bunch, the government cannot do it too soon. This government brought them out here at great expense; and if they allowed the opportunity to pass when we could have deported them, that is to their discredit.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT (Bellechasse). I was somewhat astounded a moment ago to hear the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) lecturing the Minister of the Interior about imputing motives to the members of the opposition during the obstruction carried on by the opposition during the last two or three weeks. Well, I came across something published in the papers lately in which the hon. member for East Grey has alluded to that very obstruction. In the Toronto 'Globe' of the 12th inst., page 9, there is an account of an Orange Grand Lodge meeting at Mount Forest. Among other insanities given expression to on that occasion is the following language credited to the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). That hon. gentleman was introduced by Mr. Essery, of London, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Ontario west, in the following words:

> I introduce to you the Sovereign Grand Master of British America, the greatest Orangeman of the empire, a member of the House of Commons, who does not earn his $2,500 by lying around saloons.

When it came to Dr. Sproule to reply, he used the following language:—

Mr. BLAIN. I rise to a point of order. Does the reading of this article come within the scope of this discussion ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. On a motion to go into Supply, great latitude is allowed.

Mr. TALBOT. Here is the language credited to the hon. member for East Grey :

When I have thought it my duty to stand up in the House of Commons to say something I considered it my duty to say, there were from ten to fifteen French and Irish Roman Catholics jumping up to interrupt me, and I regret to say that some Protestants joined in those interruptions.

The hon. gentleman ought not to be surprised when he is interrupted, for I do not know that there is an hon. member of this House who has filled the columns of 'Hansard' with more nonsense. Standing up on every occasion, he says every thing that comes into his mind and always bases his statements on creditable information, on something he heard on the street and so on. There is not a day when he does not get up and say something of that kind. He is probably one of the most expensive members we have as regards 'Hansard.' On the occasion of this Orange meeting, the hon. gentleman, to his discredit, referred to the conduct of a late member, a dead man, one of his colleagues and friends, and what language did he use ? He referred to him in this way :

He criticised the action of the late Mr. Martin, then member for the riding in which Mount Forest is located, and some other members who had refused to present to the House petitions from the Orangemen.

It speaks very poorly for the hon. gentleman that he should have made references of that kind to one of his late friends. I would commend these utterances very strongly to the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), and for his special benefit I will read another specimen of the sentiments expressed at that meeting. Here is what was said on that occasion by a leading grand master of an Orange lodge about the inhabitants of the city of Montreal. That should prove interesting to my hon. friend and cause him to have greater admiration for the company of the hon. gentleman who sits alongside him (Mr. Sproule) :

Mr. H. C. Hocken urged that the Protestant missions in Quebec should be supported with abundant funds, for unless Quebec becomes Protestant it will become Atheistic, like France, Italy, and even Spain. There is no city in Canada where Atheism and Anarchy prevail as they do in Montreal. What is happening is that the working classes are becoming socialists or anarchists, the wealthy and the educated are becoming atheists, and the rural districts just now are under the control of the church, and to counteract all this the Protestant mission should be very greatly strengthened.

This is very good political literature for the back lodges of Ontario, and I am not at all surprised at the language of my hon. friend. But I want to draw his attention to it and the attention of my hon. friend from Beauharnois. What kind of language have we been sometimes met with when we paid high compliments to Sir Wilfrid Laurier before French Canadians ? How does my hon. friend from Beauharnois like this particular language ? I leave that to him and to the hon. member for East Grey; and if parliamentary usuage permitted me to say what I feel with reference to this, I would use some very strong language indeed. All I can say is that it is with the greatest contempt and scorn that I read this language which I have every reason to believe my hon. friend used.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to say in reply that if I were permitted to go into the private life of the hon. gentleman and refer to some of his language, and put this alongside of that, I think it would compare very favourably with it.

Mr. TALBOT. I defy the hon. gentleman to go into my private life and to state anything he knows of it, in this House or anywhere outside of this House.

Mr. SPROULE. Don't defy too far.

Mr. TALBOT. I defy the hon. gentleman to say it now or anywhere else.

Mr. BARR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose I may be allowed to say one word, as my hon. friend has brought my name into this.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman can only make a personal explanation, as he has already spoken.

Mr. BERGERON. As my hon. friend has brought my name into this, I am bound to defend myself. The hon. gentleman reads from the Toronto 'Globe,' which does everything in its power to set creed against creed and race against race ; that is one of the fundamental principles of the Liberal party. We have suffered from that for many years. I remember the time when the Prime Minister boasted that there were no Orangemen in his party, although at that very time one of the principal organizers of the party was an Orangeman, an ex-member of this House. We are suffering from the same thing in Quebec to-day. 'Le Soleil' and other Liberal papers almost every day mention the fact that I am sitting in this House beside Orangemen—that, in fact, I am sitting between two of them, the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes). And yet the Orangemen in the province of Quebec—and I say it here to the Grand Master—vote with that party which is insulting them on almost every occasion. I do not see why the hon. member for Bellechasse brought my name into this. The hon. member for East Grey can say what he wants to say, just as the hon. member for Bellechasse can. There are other things in the paper which the hon. gentleman might have read, but he did not read the whole article.

Mr. TALBOT. Read it yourself.

Mr. BERGERON. No, I am not a scavenger. It is very small politics when we have to come down to this. There are different creeds and nationalities in this country, and I say it to the honour of the Conservative party that it has included in its ranks men of different nationalities and creeds, and in doing so it has worked in the best interests of Canada. It has been the policy of men like my hon. friend from Bellechasse to do the reverse. It is time that they ceased. This country is getting large, and if we want to make a great country of Canada, we must put a stop to all that kind of nonsense.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

River St. Lawrence ship channel, $760,000.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). This amount is required for the purpose of dredging the St. Lawrence ship channel between Father Point or La Traverse and Montreal, and the maintenance of the ship yard at Sorel. The work to be carried out consists of dredging at Cap à la Roche, and at the same time enlarging the ship channel at Lake St. Peter. We are providing also for the dredging of the St. Lawrence at Beaujeu Bank. The Shipping Federation and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have been urging this in order to get a depth there of thirty feet at low tide. That is the only place below Quebec where we have not that depth. Above Quebec at high tide we have now reached thirty feet; but we are working to obtain thirty feet at low tide. We expect that the work at Cap à la Roche will be completed in two years. We have now six dredges at work there. Dredge No. 7 is working at Lake St. Peter. The cost of dredging last year was $302,-677.37 and the quantity dredged was 3,110,-000 yards, at an average cost of 15·55 cents per yard.

Mr. BERGERON. Are all these dredges the property of the government ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How many months in the year are they at work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. They generally work from the end of April till November, and they work day and night.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the width of the channel where No. 7 is working?

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. BRODEUR. Five hundred feet.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that the width which my hon. friend wants to have everywhere ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is proposed to make it 450 feet on the straight line, and 750 feet at the curve.

Mr. DANIEL. Is the 'Galveston' a successful dredge ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Very successful. The superintending engineer is entirely satisfied.

Mr. DANIEL. I notice in this report that three gentlemen were sent down to Galveston, Texas, and their expenses were paid. Was that in connection with the Galveston dredge ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. Before we purchased it we sent Mr. Cowie the superintending engineer to examine the dredge to find out whether it would be suitable for our purpose.

Mr. BERGERON. When was the dredging between Montreal and Quebec commenced ?

Mr. BRODEUR. In 1851.

Mr. BERGERON. Can the hon. gentleman give us an idea of the cost of the dredging until now ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The entire cost, including all accessories, has been $9,345,121 ; the cost of dredging alone, $6,232,647 ; expenditure for plant, staff and surveys, $3,112,-470. The quantity dredged has been 51,-038,680 yards, that is between Montreal and Quebec. About 70 miles have been dredged. The material is dumped into the river in the neighbourhood of the channel, and we have never yet been obliged to remove any of it the second time. Besides, we are sweeping the channel every year, and if it did happen that anything was carried back from the banks, it is removed by that process.

Mr. GANONG. What do you mean by sweeping the channel ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We employ a scow upon which we put an apparatus which gives the depth of the water, and shows us whether the channel is of the proper depth, or whether there is any obstruction. We have a boat for that purpose, the 'De Levis.'

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister tell us what are the plans of the department for the future with regard to dredging the St. Lawrence, and the probable cost ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The policy of the department which we are now carrying out is to obtain 30 feet depth of water at extreme low tide between La Traverse and Montreal, because below La Traverse the river does not need to be dredged. Below

Quebec the only part which requires to be dredged is at a place called Beaujeu Bank, opposite St. Thomas de Montmagny. That is the place where salt water and fresh water meet, and it is probably due to that circumstance that a bank has formed there which requires to be dredged out. We have now 30 feet at high water between Montreal and Quebec, but it is considered necessary to obtain 30 feet at extreme low water in order to accommodate vessels of the larger size which it may be desired to bring up to the port of Montreal and Quebec. When we have obtained 30 feet it will be a question whether we shall go further and obtain a still greater depth. We estimate it will cost about $700,000 to obtain 30 feet at low water between Montreal and La Traverse.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has the minister considered, in building the Quebec bridge, whether it was high enough to allow vessels of the larger size to pass under it coming up to the port of Montreal? I brought up this matter a couple of years ago and showed that at the height at which the bridge was then placed the large ships which were being built at the present time would be unable to pass under it.

Mr. BRODEUR. I remember there was some discussion with regard to whether the Quebec bridge as proposed would be high enough to permit the larger vessels to pass underneath. Of course, if we were contemplating that vessels like the big ones which are now running between Liverpool and New York, such as the 'Mauretania,' were to undertake to navigate the St. Lawrence to Montreal it would be impossible for boats of this size to pass under the bridge, but I suppose it will take some time before we have such large boats as those going up the St. Lawrence.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is there not sufficient water for these boats?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think there will be enough water but that is not the question that has to be solved; it is whether these big boats will be able to go up the St. Lawrence. As to the boats which are now running to Montreal and Quebec the height of the bridge does not interfere with vessels of that class.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would it not be wise to look ahead a few years? The boats that are being built are larger than they were previously and the Marconi system of wireless telegraphy has to be established on every boat of any account. Necessarily the masts cannot be interfered with or lowered.

Mr. DANIEL. Is there any rock dredged in the ship channel.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, at Cap à la Roche there is some shale rock and that is the worst place that we are now dredging. It is very hard material and that is the reason why the other night we voted an amount of money to purchase a spoon dredge so that we might be able to carry on the work more effectively.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. What was the original cost of the 'Galveston'?

Mr. BRODEUR. $145,000.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I see that there was a payment of interest in connection with this purchase to the High Commissioner. Why was that interest paid to the High Commissioner?

Mr. BRODEUR. The dredge was at Galveston but she was purchased from people in Great Britain and the payments were made through the High Commissioner. The reason we paid interest was that when the purchase was made we had no appropriation.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I understand the minister to say that $700,000 will complete the channel between Montreal and Quebec.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will not say that it will complete it. It will complete it to 30 feet at extreme low water, but I will not say we will stop there.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The point that my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) brought up in regard to the height of the bridge is a very important one.

Mr. BRODEUR. Representations have been made by some associations and these representations have been referred to the Department of Railways and Canals which has to deal with that question.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Is there an investigation going on at Sorel in reference to some irregularities?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, in connection with the construction of piers in Lake St. Peter, it was represented to us that some people had been on the pay-roll who should not be there and I ordered an investigation to find out whether that statement was correct or not.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Has it been concluded?

Mr. BRODEUR. Not yet; we got an interim report from the commissioner stating that the man who is charged with having put these names on the roll has asked to have a witness examined for his defence. It appears that this man is very sick and the sworn certificate of the doctor has been filed before him stating that the man is too ill to give his evidence.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Will the minister lay a copy of the interim report on the table ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Salaries and allowances to light-keepers, $300,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Does the minister intend to increase the salaries of any of these lighthouse keepers ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman will see that in the amount which is asked in the estimates now under consideration there is an increase which is for that purpose.

Agencies, rents and contingencies, $32,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is the same amount as last year except a small increase which is provided for the purpose of giving to the agents and the staff a slight increase in their salaries.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the minister tell us something about the rentals ?

Mr. BRODEUR. In Quebec we have a place of our own but we are obliged to lease other property. In Montreal the property we occupy is under lease entirely.

Maintenance and repairs to lighthouses, $650,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This amount is the same as last year except that there is an increase of $1,500. This amount is to carry out the important service of the maintenance and repairs to the lighthouses throughout the country. During last year and the year before large additions had been made to the aids to navigation the maintenance of which now require to come out of the vote for maintenance and repairs to lighthouses, but it is expected that with economy the sum that is now asked for will be sufficient.

Repairs to lightships, $20,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is for repairs to lightships 'Lurcher' and 'Anticosti.'

Maintenance and upkeep of dockyards, $40,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. By virtue of an arrangement we have with the Imperial government we have the use of the dockyard at Halifax and it is expected that the negotiations which are now going on between the Imperial and Canadian governments will result in our taking charge of the maintenance and upkeep of the dockyard at Esquimalt. The sum of $40,000 is for the maintenance of these two dock yards.

Construction of lighthouses and aids to navigation, including apparatus, submarine signals, and providing suitable boats for carrying on construction work in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and elsewhere in the Dominion, $1,260,000.

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the minister allow this item to stand? It is a large vote and I think the leader of the opposition wants to make some remarks on it.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am ready to explain the item.

Mr. DANIEL. If the minister allows this item to stand we can take up the others.

Mr. BRODEUR. All right.

Item allowed to stand.

Construction of lighthouses and aids to navigation—further amount required for the construction or purchase of a lighthouse tender and buoy steamer for the great lakes and Georgian bay (revote), $150,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. We have been obliged in the past to charter boats for this service, and the government has come to the conclusion that it would be in the public interest to have a boat of our own. I might mention that the American government have eight boats engaged in this particular service. We are now asking for tenders for the construction of this boat.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will it cost $150,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is supposed it will cost that amount.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What has been expended in the past for chartering vessels for this service?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have not the figures here but I am told we have paid $10,000 or $12,000 a year, not including the transportation of supplies.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will this boat be built in the Dominion?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am calling for tenders in Canada only.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the estimated cost of running this new boat for a season?

Mr. BROODEUR. I am told it will be between $16,000 and $18,000, but we will have the entire use of the boat.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. On that basis you would lose about $6,000 a year by having your own boat.

Mr. BRODEUR. In addition to the buoy service the transportation of supplies costs $7,000 a year.

Mr. GANONG. You will have to allow for depreciation on your new boat which will be about 10 per cent per annum. I am not complaining about it, but I would point out that the cost will be nearer $30,000 than $18,000 a year.

Mr. BRODEUR. We will have a boat built to suit our requirements and it is not always an easy thing to find a suitable boat to charter.

Mr. GANONG. Has it not been suggested by the St. John Board of Trade and other bodies that the boat at present in the bay of Fundy is not adequate for the service?

Mr. BRODEUR. Such representations have been made to the department and the government is considering the advisability of building a boat for the service there.

Mr. BLAIN. When will the new boat for the Georgian bay be completed?

Mr. BRODEUR. Inside of a year we expect.

To provide for breaking ice in Thunder bay and Lake Superior and other points deemed advisable for the good of navigation, $40,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This service is undertaken by the department for the purpose of keeping open till late in the fall and earlier in the spring the harbours of Fort William and Port Arthur, and some harbours on the Georgian bay. Duluth harbour is open much later in the fall than our ports, and the wheat from the west is taken there to the detriment of the Canadian route. The boards of trade of Winnipeg, Port Arthur and Fort William, and the Winnipeg Grain Exchange sent petitions to the government and two or three years ago it was decided to attempt to keep Port Arthur and Fort William harbours open so long as the canals should be open. I have this year added the following words to the vote:—'and other points seemed advisable for the good of navigation,' the purpose being to include some Georgian bay ports.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am glad the minister has taken into consideration the breaking of the ice in other portions of the great lakes to aid navigation. The other day the member for Kent (Mr. Clements) made an earnest plea for the opening of navigation on the Thames near Chatham, which would tend to prevent floods there, and I would ask the minister whether it would not be possible for him to send a boat from Sarnia for this purpose. I understand there is a boat there available and that it would not cost more than $1,000 to do this.

Mr. BRODEUR. We have no ice-breaker to do the work referred to. The idea of this boat is to keep navigation open for a longer period in order to enable the farmers of the Northwest to get their wheat to the market when it is first available in September, as it is very important for them to do so. Last year we were able to keep the harbour at Fort William open until December 17, with great benefit to the western exporters. I do not know whether this vote will cover such a request as that of the hon. gentleman, but I will look into the matter and see what can be done.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I am glad that the hon. member has brought this up. I do not know whether it properly falls under the Marine or Public Works Department, but I think it should come under the Marine Department. The expenditure of $1,000 here may prevent damage of hundreds of thousands of dollars to these valuable farm lands, so that in addition to the aids to navigation this would be of great advantage to the people of that district.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know whether this would come under my department; I think that the flooding of private property would really come more under the provincial than under the Dominion authorities. The purpose of this vote is to aid navigation rather than to prevent floods as my hon. friend suggests.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The Thames is a navigable river and it is not a question of preventing the floods, the aid to navigation being considered as important as the floods. Within fifteen miles of Chatham the river rises 18 or 20 feet, but at the lake front it does not rise 3 feet and the upper ice jamming into the lower ice causes the water to rise and flood the land. I believe a small amount of money would be sufficient and it would be a great aid to navigation as well as to the public.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the minister explain whether this comes under the Marine or the Public Works Department? The member for Kent (Mr. Gordon) who sits on the Liberal side, sees the necessity of this work being done without delay. He urged on the Minister of Public Works the other day the necessity of going on with this work without delay. I do not think we are unreasonable in asking the minister to define whether this comes under the Public Works Department or the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I must give the Minister of Public Works the credit of admitting that he did say he would send an engineer to the place at once and see that it was looked after. The reason I brought up the question before the Minister of Public Works was because the ex-Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hyman) intended sending a boat up to break the ice, but could not get one. Does this come within the control of the minister's department or the Department of Public Works? As to its being a provincial or a Dominion work, I think there can be no question about it being a Dominion work. There is a precedent for it in the Nation river.

Mr. BRODEUR. This vote is for the improvement of navigation, and I could not use any of it for the purpose of preventing floods.

Mr. CLEMENTS. What I want to impress on the hon. minister is that if he is not asking any vote for this purpose, he should ask for a certain amount to take care of that work from year to year.

Mr. GANONG. Is this money to be devoted to hiring vessels to break the ice ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We asked for tenders last year. I think there was only one tender, as there is only one boat on the great lakes which can carry on this work.

Mr. GANONG. It seems rather a large amount for ten or twelve days' work.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is a month in the fall and a month in the spring. We paid more than that, I think, before we adopted the method of calling for tenders.

Mr. SPROULE. Who got this $40,000 last year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The Canadian Towing and Wrecking Company of Port Arthur. Mr. Whalen is the manager. Under the contract they are bound to break the ice up to the 17th December each year and also in the Spring of each year. They also have to remove the lighthouse keepers. There is a big ice-breaker and there are six or seven other boats kept busy keeping the channel open.

Mr. SPROULE. The statement was made by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) the other night, and the minister did not contradict it, that the work was done by one boat, and that only a small boat.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is a big ice-breaker called the 'James Whalen'; length, 108 feet; breadth, 24 feet; depth, 13 feet; gross tonnage, 313.

Mr. SPROULE. That is not a big boat.

Mr. BRODEUR. She does the work very successfully. They have to furnish the necessary plant to keep the channel open.

Mr. SPROULE. In the first place, this seems to me to be a very large amount of money to pay for the work done. There is another element which may make it of very little use to keep the ice broken late in the fall or early in the spring in Lake Superior or in the Georgian bay, that is, whether navigation is open in the Sault canal. There is no use of bringing vessels down from Port Arthur or Fort William unless they can get through the canal, and my information is that the navigation of the canal is closed by ice very much earlier than it is at Port Arthur and Fort William.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed by Mr. Fraser, who has been attending to this work for the last four or five years, that Sault Ste. Marie canal was open last year even after the 17th of December.

Mr. SPROULE. What time did it open in the spring ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It opens in the spring much earlier than the navigation at Fort William and Port Arthur, because these ports being surrounded by islands, the ice there forms earlier in the fall and remains later in the spring.

Mr. SPROULE. I have more than once heard it stated that in the spring of the year vessels laden with grain at Port Arthur were ready to start as soon as the ice was out of the Sault canal, and I have frequently heard vesselmen say that they could bring down a great deal more grain if it were not for ice forming in the canal, which they said was about the last place where navigation opened in the spring.

Mr. BRODEUR. The information given me by Mr. Fraser is that the ice remains at Port Arthur and Fort William very much later than in the canal.

Mr. SPROULE. The matter is capable of verification, for I assume that you have data which shows when navigation opened at these different points. What is being done in regard to breaking the ice in the Georgian bay ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Last year some vessel owners claimed that they had broken ice on Georgian bay, and they asked us to deal with them in the same way as we did with those who broke ice at Fort William and Port Arthur. We thought it was a fair claim, and this year I got Mr. Fraser to make contracts with vessel owners on the Georgian bay for breaking ice, if it became necessary to do so, in order to have continuous navigation from Fort William to Georgian Bay ports.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not objecting to it because I think it is right, but I merely refer to the fact that these three elements have to be kept in mind and attended to in order to make the undertaking a success. Outside of that, even if there were no grain coming down, it would still be desirable to keep the Georgian bay ports opened, because there is navigation in the Georgian bay which does not extend to the Sault canal. I would like to know if any number of trips are to be made by this ice-breaking steamer or is it simply to keep the navigagian bay ports.

Mr. BRODEUR. The contract is made as wide as possible. There is no limit as to the number of trips. We simply require them to keep the channel open for the free passage of vessels till the 17th of December in the fall and as soon as the canal is open in the spring.

Mr. SPROULE. How long did they require last spring to keep the navigation open ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Last year it was a serious task, and I think they must have lost some money, if we may judge from the repairs which they were obliged to make on their boats. It is true that last year was an exceptional year. They have filed a claim with the department which of course we do not recognize, because we claimed they had to break the ice, not only in the harbours of Port Arthur and Fort William proper, but even outside; they went many miles outside. In consequence of the use of this ice-breaker the harbour was kept open a little more than a month beyond the usual period.

Mr. SPROULE. I think this work is all right, but I thought that from the length of time I was told this boat was operating they were getting a large amount of money for the work they were doing. At best the tug is only of moderate size.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is no matter of ours whether the tug is large or small so long as she does the work properly. We have advertised in all the papers for a new contract.

Signal service, $9,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to pay the signal service at Halifax, St. John and Quebec. There is a reduction here, because last year we took an appropriation for a place called Point Grey near Vancouver, which this year we do not require the service to be performed by the wireless telegraph station at that place.

To provide for the building and maintenance of wireless stations, $131,550.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I think there was a dispute last spring in reference to the work of the wireless telegraph, and complaints were made by shippers at Montreal that the system was not in good working order in the Straits of Belle Isle and some other places along the coast and that delays took place.

Mr. BRODEUR. I remember the report which was published to the effect that some stations were not open earier. Those wireless stations were in the Straits of Belle Isle, and we are obliged by our contract with the Marconi Company to convey the operators to their various stations. Usually the boats make that trip on the 1st of July. We expected to use the 'Montcalm' to convey these operators to their stations. We had given instructions to the 'Montcalm' to go to Sydney in order to take the mails from the Atlantic mail boats to Sydney. The mails had to be transferred from the Atlantic steamers to the 'Montcalm,' which was to carry them to Sydney, whence they would be distributed. Unfortunately the 'Montcalm' was stranded there for a few days, and that prevented her from being sent to carry the operators in time to meet the first boats that came through the Straits of Belle Isle.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. What was the nature of the dispute between the government and the Marconi Company?

Mr. BRODEUR. The Marconi people took an action against the government, claiming that we had infringed upon their patents by the use of some apparatus in the province of British Columbia. This question is still pending.

To provide for the administration of pilotage and pensions and maintenance and repairs to the pilotage steamer 'Eureka,' $30,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is an increase of $3,000 in this vote and this is for the purpose of making repairs to the steamer 'Eureka.' The 'Eureka' is the boat that carries out the pilots from Father Point to the steamers coming up the St. Lawrence.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. By allowing one of these items to remain I understand that we can discuss any of the items at a future time.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is all right. There is already an item which has been allowed to stand.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 12.25 a.m. Saturday.

---

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 16, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

RAILWAY SURVEYS IN NOVA SCOTIA.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I desire to present a corrected reply to a question asked by Mr. Stanfield. The question reads:

1. Were government surveys ever made of proposed railways between (a) Truro and Parrsborough via Five Islands; (b) between Truro and Brulé; (c) between Truro and Upper Stewiacke, the first two named in Colchester and Cumberland counties, the last two in Colchester?
2. If so, at what date were the surveys made?
3. Were subsidies voted in connection with the same, and when?
4. Are all subsidies still valid or have they lapsed?

To this the corrected reply is as follows:

1. No Dominion government surveys were ever made of proposed railways between (a) Truro and Parrsborough via Five Islands; (b) between Truro and Brulé; (c) between Truro and Upper Stewiacke.
2. Answered by number one.

3. By chapter 57, 1903, a subsidy was voted for a railway from Truro to Brulé, (b) and revoted in 1906. No subsidies have been voted to the other lines (a) and (c) mentioned.

4. The subsidy is still available, from Truro to Brulé.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. SPROULE.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I desire to call the attention of the Houses to some remarks made by Senator Cloran in the Senate which refer to myself. I find in the Senate 'Hansard' that Senator Cloran is reported as reading from the 'Globe' as follows :—

Dr. Sproule in his reply did not refer to this remark, but immediately launched into a defence of the Orange order, claiming that it was the champion of free speech, a free press and of religious liberty.

And again :

He declared that Roman Catholics had received an undue share of appointments in the departments at Ottawa.

I was answering a question that is sometimes raised to the effect that as a body of Orangemen, we were not disposed to give the Roman Catholics the height of fair play in the distribution of offices, and I said that nothing could be further from our aim or our desire. I gave as an illustration the employees in the House of Commons and incidentally mentioned the Senate. The 'Globe' report proceeds :

The Roman Catholic population of Canada was only 40 per cent of the whole, yet in the Printing Bureau there were two years ago 388 Roman Catholics and 149 protestants. He was told that now the numbers were 525 and 75 respectively. Of the 78 pages and messengers of the House of Commons, 58 were Roman Catholics and 20 Protestants, and of the 67 pages and messengers in the Senate, 42 were Roman Catholics and 25 Protestants.

I have only to say that the report of my speech was an absurdity and if the gentleman who was sent there by the 'Globe' and who wrote that report had desired to be at all fair, he knew that I stood with a paper in my hand and that he could easily have verified the figures in his report before he sent it. I said nothing with regard to the numbers in the Senate, because, as I said at the time, I had not the papers in my hand. I said nothing but this, that from the information I had, the clerks, messengers, pages and servants in the House of Commons there numbered 78, of whom 58 were Roman Catholics and 20 Protestants, and I was informed that the proportion was about the same in the Senate, but I said nothing about the numbers. That was all I said about it, and there was no occasion for sending a report which was entirely inaccurate and untrue. I am quite willing to be held responsible for what I do say, and for that I have nothing to apologize, but I do not want to be held responsible for what I do not say.

WHISKEY PERMIT AGENTS IN THE YUKON.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of Interior). On the 13th of January last the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) asked the following question :

Who are the whiskey permit agents for the various districts of the Yukon, and what is the salary attached in each case ?

As the commissioner of the Yukon Territory is empowered by ordinance to appoint, prescribe the duties of, and fix the salary of the chief preventive officer, and of such other officer and assistants as he considers necessary for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of the ordinance, Mr. Foster was informed that the commissioner of the Yukon Territory had been requested to furnish this information at an early date. The information asked for has now been received, and is as follows : The preventive officers, or whiskey permit agents, of the Yukon are : E. S. Ironsides, Dawson, salary, $600 per annum; Fred. McLennan, Whitehorse, salary, $250 per annum.

PRIVILEGE—RETURNS TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY (Prince, P.E.I.). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. When the question of the return of documents was before the House the other day, I had not seen the report on the subject, and did not know that my name was mentioned in connection with two sets of papers that were apparently out of the department for a long space of time. I find in the 'Globe' of March 12 an editorial which says among other things :

It was not a falsehood that Mr. Lefurgey had returned a document mutilated.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that it is an absolute falsehood that I returned any document mutilated. I do not know how far you would extend the term mutilation of documents ; but if the party who published this statement in the 'Globe' had read the record of Mr. Polkinghorne in regard to the return, he would have found that there was no such word in it as mutilation. Mr. Polkinghorne stated in his marginal notes that the document was incomplete. When the newspapers have the facts before them, I do not think they have a right to garble the language of a report to such an extent as to mislead the public. I took occasion to go to Mr. Caldwell's office, to which the sessional papers are returned, and I found the two returns to which reference was made, Nos. 173 and 181, and in neither case could Mr. Caldwell say that there was anything wrong or anything missing. I took the two same returns to Mr. Polkinghorne, and he also told me that he could not see anything wrong at the present time in those returns, although he intimated that there must have been something wrong when I returned them. I have here the two returns as brought down, and they ratify the statements of Mr. Caldwell and Mr. Polkinghorne. There is nothing wrong in these returns, to my absolute knowledge they are in the same condition as they were when I received them. I find that this statement of the 'Globe' was copied by one of our Prince Edward Island papers, the 'Watchman,' which said:

Mr. Lefurgey kept one return out 261 days, and then returned it with several pages missing.

This is a case of two black crows, for the story grows as each successive paper gets hold of it. I would suggest that the papers publishing these reports should be more careful of the language they use. I may say, in excuse for probably having had these papers a longer time than is usual, that the returns were not brought down until late in the session of 1906, and it was not until near the close of the session that I got them. Neither of them were original documents, and the department was in possession of the originals from which these copies were made up. I got the returns at the close of the session, and I returned them at the opening of the following session.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. LAKE. Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to ask the Minister of Justice when I may expect the return called for on the 29th of January last in regard to certain cases against the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, for taxes, which were undertaken on behalf of this government in respect to the company's claim to exemption from taxation in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The return which the hon. gentleman asks for is perhaps ordered, so far as the Department of Justice is concerned, but if any such order has been made, it is without my knowledge. I will make inquiries with regard to it.

Mr. LAKE. I may say that last session I asked some questions in regard to this particular subject, and they were answered by the Minister of Justice, and I presumed that he would have the papers, because he then said he would bring them down if they were called for.

PRIVATE BILLS.

NIAGARA, ST. CATHARINES AND TORONTO RAILWAY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 82) respecting the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Railway Company.—Mr. Calvert.

On section 2,

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). In reference to this Bill I would like to make a few observations. It must be remembered that the Bill is for the renewal of a charter, not the granting of a new charter. It was renewed some two years since, just as it stands today. Possibly the conditions were a little different then from what they are now. The objections taken to this Bill in committee were two, if I remember correctly. One was that it did not provide protection for the cities of Hamilton and Toronto as regards crossings, and the other was that it made no provision to protect the centres of population against this road doing a street railway business as an electrical road. The position taken by me was that under the Railway Act the Board of Railway Commissioners had ample power to grant protection at crossings, not only in Toronto and Hamilton, but in every municipality through which this road might run. The powers given to the Railway Commission are wider than those given to any similar organization in the world and the provisions of the statute are very broad. The hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) questioned whether the board under the present Act had power to make the railway elevate its tracks. The provision is that the board has power to compel the raising or depression of a highway and a good many legal gentlemen were of opinion that was sufficiently wide, but in order, that there might be no dispute about that I consented to an amendment which made it absolutely clear that the Board of Railway Commissioners had power to compel the railway to elevate its tracks or to depress them at any crossing, as well as to elevate or depress a highway. In Toronto negotiations are now under way for the elevation of the tracks of the Canadian Pacific Railway and Grand Trunk Railway in one part of the city and the depression of these tracks in another part of the city. An amendment was moved to this Bill to the effect that this line could not enter the city of Toronto except by elevating its tracks or depressing them as the case might be, unless by the consent of the municipality.

Mr. BRISTOL. I will hand you over the amendment I purpose moving.

Mr. GRAHAM. This amendment reads:

Except with the consent of the council of the city of Toronto expressed by by-law, the railway of the company shall not be constructed along any highway in the said city or across any highway therein except by a subway underneath or by a bridge over such highway.

Now, if the other railroads entering Toronto were elevated or depressed at the present time that might be proper, although even then the Board of Railway Commissioners would have ample power, and I would hope ample common sense to make this road do as other roads had done. But the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway are not elevated, and if the negotiations did not culminate in the elevation of these roads then we would by this amendment give the city of Toronto power to for ever shut out the Canadian Northern entering the city of Toronto, because it would be an absurd proposition that one line should elevate its tracks while the other two are allowed to run on the level. If on the other hand these other railways do elevate their tracks, then there is not the slightest doubt in the world, but that the Board of Railway Commissioners possesses full power to make this line elevate its tracks, and the practical result would be in all probability that the Board of Railway Commissioners would compel these railroads to come in on the same line of elevated tracks. My contention is that the Board of Railway Commissioners has full power to protect any municipality in Canada in regard to crossings in cities or towns or villages or rural districts. I am free to confess that I have always taken the ground that no electrical railway should have the right to run on the streets of any municipality without getting the consent of that municipality, and for fear there might be some possibility that this line would be converted into an electric line and do a street railway business either in Hamilton or Toronto or any other municipality. I express the belief that some amendment should be made so as to protect the centres of population in this regard. With such an amendment I think the public interest would be properly safeguarded.

Mr. BRISTOL. Would the minister look at the fourth clause and see if that amendment is satisfactory?

Mr. GRAHAM. I will deal with that later, but from a reading of the first line it appears to me that it would be unsatisfactory as it only includes Toronto, while it should include other centres of population. We possibly forget this phase of it in discussing these Railway Bills we seem to have two things only in mind namely, the city or the cities interested, and the railway company, forgetting altogether that the object of granting charters is to afford facilities for the public generally. The people of Toronto or the people of Hamilton or the people of anywhere else have no right to put any impediment in the way of the people in the rural districts getting into or out of the centres of population. It is these people who support these centres of population, and if we were only giving charters to help the company or to help a particular municipality we should say so. But a railway charter is given to assist in the transportation of all the people and to carry the products of all the people. Of course the interests of these large centres must be protected, but I have outlined what I think is ample protection for them, and with that I think this Bill ought to pass, leaving the question of crossings to be dealt with by the Railway Commissioners who will no doubt make this railway conform to what is done by the other lines already in the city.

Mr. BRISTOL. It would facilitate matters so far as the city of Toronto is concerned if the minister could approve of the amendment, notice of which was given by Mr. Claude Macdonell and which I am moving. I am quite content to have the amendment cover the rights of places other than Toronto, and I shall leave that point for a moment to discuss the position of the minister with reference to Toronto and the subject of grade crossings. I cannot agree with the minister that this matter should be left to the Railway Commission in the shape suggested. I deny most emphatically that the city of Toronto, and, so far as I know, the city of Hamilton, desire to place any impediment in the way of the entrance into these cities of the Canadian Northern or any other railway. That would be an absurd position for any city to take in regard to such a matter. The city of Toronto is proud of the Canadian Northern; it is the first railway of a transcontinental character that has made its head office and established its chief quarters in the city of Toronto. The city of Toronto has got along in a most excellent fashion with the Canadian Northern; there never has been the slightest dispute with that railway; they have now an entrance into the city of Toronto and are running trains daily from the Union station. To say that the city of Toronto could or would by any possibility keep the Canadian Northern for all time from entering the city of Toronto is simply an absolute absurdity and contrary to existing facts, and if the minister were well informed he would know that the Canadian Northern does run into the city of Toronto to-day and is indeed a welcome visitor. Now, so far as this particular railway we are considering is concerned, we are not raising any contest over this railway as such, but we are taking the position that so far as Toronto is concerned the grade crossing has come to an end.

Mr. GRAHAM. I used the term Canadian Northern; that is not the name of this company. Ostensibly it is the Niagara and St. Catharines, but the same capital owns it.

Mr. BRISTOL. The hon. minister may have more information than I have on the subject, but I can only say that the Canadian Northern has to-day an entrance into

Toronto; has never had the slightest trouble with the council of the city of Toronto, and it is a most welcome railway in Toronto, as this railway or any other railway will be. We are glad to have these railways, and to say that we want to place an impediment against railways coming into Toronto is an absurdity. We are more anxious to have the railways come in than they can be, because it is the railways that bring trade to our cities; it is the people they bring in who contribute to our growth and prosperity. But when the people come to our cities we do not want them to walk on streets where they are liable to be run over and killed. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to quote one or two Liberal newspapers on this question. For instance, the Toronto 'Star' of last Saturday says:

The Senate of Canada is sometimes described as a useless body, but it has at least the mild virtue of being comparatively innocuous. It is doubtful whether that moderate praise can be ascribed to the Railway Committee of the House of Commons. There are cases in which this body seems to be eager for power, yet unwilling to do its duty. At least it contains a proportion of members whose chief desire is to get through the business somehow or anyhow with very little regard for public duty, for the important questions involved, or for the rights and interests of the people.

This disposition was shown in the case of the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Railway Company. The committee insists upon dealing with electric railways, although it is at least very doubtful whether they ought to have federal charters. But while it grasps at this power, it has a very poor sense of the responsibility that ought to accompany power. The city of Toronto, asking for fair and reasonable protection for human life, and for the right to control its own streets, is treated like an intruder, and its position most grotesquely misrepresented. Any member who understands the situation, knows that the sole object of the city is to prevent any radial railway company from obtaining a franchise for the use of our streets extending beyond the expiration of the charter of the Toronto Street Railway Company. There never was a time when the radial railways could not enter the city on fair terms, saving the right of the city to the control of its own streets.

Mr. CALVERT. Does the hon. gentleman remember the solicitor representing this company stating that this was a steam railway and not an electric railway ?

Mr. BRISTOL. I recollect that very well and I recollect also that in view of the fact that the company has power to operate three street railways, we wanted a provision put in the Bill that this was also such a railway. But for some reason or other my hon. friend and those associated with him did not put it in, it would have been a great help if they had. Then there is another newspaper that might be familiar to some of my hon. friends, known as the 'Globe.' On Saturday, March 14th, the 'Globe' had an article under the heading: 'Danger of level crossings.'

The debate in the Senate on Thursday brought into strong relief the danger to human life from the level intersections of railways and highways. Clearly those who use the highways have the prior claim to the free use of the crossing, but if they try to exercise their privilege at a wrong time they invite destruction and often incur it. Unfortunately it is not always possible to keep out of the way of passing trains. It is extremely difficult to do so at Sunnyside, for example, because the westbound trains come out of a cutting which obscures them till they are close upon the unfortunate victim. Passengers using the highway are not all so fortunate as the man whose horses were unable to take the loaded sleigh off the track, and who had time to save them and himself by sacrificing his property.

The number of level crossings in Canada and the United States is enormous, and though the process of separating the grades is going on, the list of such crossings is, owing to the construction of new lines, rapidly increasing. The number of people killed every year is so large as to be a serious blot on our civilization, more especially as it is not merely possible but feasible to greatly minimize the danger of collisions. Gates afford some protection, but the seperation of the grades by the use of subways or bridges is the only effective safeguard.

In Toronto the problem of separating the grades has come up in an acute form. The city and the railways have entered into a contest on this question which must be settled before the struggle is ended. It would be extremely impolitic and unjust to a great centre of population like this to have a new railway put into the advantageous position occupied already by those which now enjoy the use of the esplanade. Parliament should leave the city to fight its present battle to a conclusion before taking the side of another corporation against it. There would be no injustice or hardship in telling the Niagara and Toronto Railway Company to negotiate with the city for permission to cross its highways, subject to the authority of the Railway Commission. But to place a municipal corporation at such a disadvantage would be a piece of insufferable tyranny, apart from the legality of the legislation which would be clearly questionable and probably contested.

Now Mr. Chairman, this is not a new problem in the United States. I quote from a well known authority on that subject as follows :

We have on our steam railroads thousands of grade crossings (a very barbarous and stupid device), by means of which every year hundreds of persons needlessly lose their lives.

If there were no stock watering, there need be no grade crossings. The money that normally would have been used to abolish these death-traps has gone for dividends on the watered stock.

That has been the experience in the United States, why should we in Canada have to go ahead on any such lines ? So far as the city of Toronto is concerned, we say to the minister that we recognize the rights of the municipalities to give protection to the people, we are prepared to go as far as the minister in that respect, and possibly further; but we say that where a city has the size of Toronto, or Montreal, or Hamilton, and a railroad comes in and kills a person nearly every week, sometimes oftener, by reason of the existence of these level crossings, the matter has become acute, it has become a matter of policy that the city should be absolutely mistress to say whether it is going to have trains come in on the level or not. That is the position in the city of Toronto. We think it is reasonable that this matter of policy should be decided here and now, and that this railway should not be put in the advantageous position of the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway which, years ago, were given powers which ought never to have been given to them, or at least would never have been given to them under existing modern conditions. I want to point out another thing to the minister. We may have the spectacle later on of a railway commission ordering a level crossing in the city of Toronto; we may have the further spectacle of a railway commission ordering a subway or an elevated bridge and compelling the city to pay a portion of the costs. Now we contend that if the city has the right to say whether these railways shall cross on a level or not—it is the interest of the city to have these railways, the people and the city council of Toronto are not so insane as to want to shut out the railways—but they do want to abolish death traps, and they come and say to the minister: We want this done, and the minister says, I am not prepared to trust the intelligence of the city council of Toronto, I believe the Railway Commission have more intelligence to deal with this matter, in which however they are not so vitally interested, and therefore I will say that the streets of Toronto are to be subject to what the Railway Commission may decide. Now I protest strongly against any such outrage on the city of Toronto. I believe the Toronto city council are reasonable men, and will deal reasonably with this railway, as they have with other railways, because it is in the vital interests of the city that they should do so. How can Toronto expect to grow and become the great city that it hopes to become, unless it does get these roads? I must say to the minister that the city of Toronto as a rule gets very scant justice from this parliament. Toronto has worked hard to make it the city that it is. It has a population of nearly 350,000, it has about one-twentieth of the population of the Dominion, it pays $5,000,000 taxes, and very little of that $5,000,000 is returned to the city in the way of public works. They have come here and said: 'We want to protect the lives of our citizens by preventing railways from crossing on a level, and yet the Minister of Railways says: No you must go to the Railway Commission. Under this Act, assuming it is amended, it is not clear now whether the Railway Commission have power to order the railway to elevate or depress its tracks. But you are going to give this railway company the power to say: We have a charter allowing us to enter the city of Toronto, we are willing to build an overhead bridge or a subway, but the city must pay some portion of the costs. Now it is this railroad coming into Toronto for business purposes that occasion the danger. We are glad to have this railway, we are glad to have the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway which have received a great deal of public assistance wherewith to build them. And while they are causing this danger, and while they are making money out of the city, they say to the city, and the Railway Commission says to the city: You must pay a portion of the costs of protection of the lives of the general public, the city must pay its share of the elevation or depression of the tracks.

Mr. SPROULE. They are the ones that are doing the killing.

Mr. BRISTOL. Yes, the railways are doing the killing and they are making the money out of the transaction. Because the city of Toronto wishes not merely to protect its own people but to protect hundreds of thousands of people who come from everywhere every year, it is really going to be compelled to pay a portion of the cost to the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway of the protection of the lives of these people while the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railways which kill the people make all the money. We say that the city of Toronto should not be put in any such position as regards a new railway. We say that it should not be left to the Railway Commission to deal with a matter which is a matter of policy and especially where a city has arrived at a position such as Toronto or Montreal have arrived at with respect to level crossings it should have the say as to whether railways shall cross on the level or overhead. So I move an amendment to section 3 of this Bill as follows:

Except with the consent of the council of the city of Toronto expressed by by-law, the railway of the company shall not be constructed along any highway in the said city, nor across any highway therein, except by a subway underneath or by a bridge over such highway.

Mr. BARKER. The suggestion made by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) would remove some of the difficulty in this case. That is that this company should be prohibited from operating its road as a street railway in a city without the consent by by-law of the city. It is quite true, as has been said here, that the legal gentleman who is looking after the interests of the owner of this company did say that the company had no intention of operating this road otherwise than as a steam railway, but when an effort was made to get him to put that in black and white in the Bill there was a sudden withdrawal and we found a very great desire on the part of everybody promoting the Bill to keep any such declaration out of it. I think this is, especially to the city of Toronto and, to a large extent, to the city of Hamilton, a very important question and I wish to impress this more upon the Minister of Railways than has yet been done. Everybody knows that the gentlemen interested in this Bill are the same gentlemen who are interested in the Toronto Street Railway and if this Bill pass there will be nothing in the world to prevent an arrangement being made between the Toronto Street Railway Company and this company that may seriously interfere with the streets of Toronto, at all events, unless we distinctly declare in this Bill that they shall not operate their railway as a street railway. The same thing applies to the city of Hamilton. The city of Hamilton has a street railway and has suburban railways which have certain rights by contract. No one can tell but that within six months all these roads may be controlled by these same people and in the same way they may use their power of ownership of the other roads to practically conduct a street railway business in the city of Hamilton. Whatever may be said about the city of Hamilton or the city of Toronto obstructing this Bill, there is no the slightest truth in that, but I do not believe there is a gentleman representing any city, town or village in the Dominion who would concede such powers as these to be placed in the hands of any railway company. We simply say that every municipal corporation desires to protect its own highway. It is a perfectly reasonable thing and it is not reasonable to ask us to leave it to the commissioners sitting in Ottawa or anywhere else to exercise the control which the cities say ought to be exercised by themselves. That is the point upon which the cities of Toronto and Hamilton have interposed here. I would suggest, following out the proposal of the minister, that these words should be inserted in the clause.

Said company shall not operate its railway as a street railway in any city or town without the consent by by-law of the corporation of such city or town.

That would remove a great danger as regards Toronto and Hamilton. I submitted to the minister in committee a somewhat modified clause. I sympathize with the views of the city of Toronto on account of the enormous interests involved as to the question of level crossings, but if the House does not go as far as Toronto and Hamilton wish in that respect, I would say that, whatever may be said about the crossings of streets and about the power of the commission to regulate crossings, I think there can be no doubt that these cities are perfectly reasonable and within their rights in saying that no commission shall have power to allow a railway company to run its railway along the streets of a city or to cross such a place as a market, or a park or anything of that kind. I would submit this to the committee as a second proposal which is absolutely fair:

Said company shall not construct or operate its railway along any street or highway, or upon or along any public place in any city or town without the consent by by-law of the corporation of any such city or town.

I submit these to the consideration of the minister and I think that they ought both be passed.

Mr. GRAHAM. As I caught the hon. gentleman's first amendment I absolutely agree with him. May I ask the hon. gentleman what would be construed as the legal meaning of 'any public place.'

Mr. BARKER. It may be put in stricter words if you like. What I mean by it is such a place as a park, market place, public square, court house square, or any place that is owned by the public as distinguished from private ownership.

Mr. GRAHAM. We might say across or upon a park, market place, square or other public place.

Mr. BARKER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think that is not unreasonable at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps you could say 'any public thoroughfare.'

Mr. GRAHAM. Well that raises the question again. I do not want to be misunderstood. I agree with the hon. gentleman in his argument about level crossings. I am just as strongly opposed to level crossings as he is but my way will protect the public against level crossings as thoroughly as his will.

Mr. BRISTOL. I wish I could see it.

Mr. GRAHAM. Well, it will all the same. I agree with the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) too. I have been through this same fight for a number of years with the same company in the provincial legislature where I thought they were trying to get on the streets of Toronto by a back door. I always opposed that. I want to put something in the Bill that will preclude their doing that and to protect the cities of Toronto and Hamilton. This company has no right to go into such centres of population and do street railway business there, either in competition with the companies there or in conjunction with them, to the detriment of the city, financially or otherwise. I think we should get this Bill into shape to suit us all if we work along these lines.

Mr. BRISTOL. In view of the attitude the hon. minister has assumed, there are two things that might be said on the grade crossing question not covered by the amendment of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker). The first is that if the city of Toronto could have its way it would not have a grade crossing without the consent of the city council. That is one point. The second is that we feel that if the proposal of the present Bill is carried out, the Railway Commissioners, if they choose, can order the city to pay half the cost of crossing a highway, either by subway or overhead crossing. Now, if the minister would amend section 235 of the Act so that the Railway Commission could not give any consent to a crossing on the level without the consent of the municipality where any portion of the crossing was to be charged against any such municipality, that would be one point. So far as I am personally concerned, I cannot see why the city of Toronto should not be the one to say where the level crossing, if any, should be.

Mr. BLAIN. While I agree with the amendment of my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol) and also with the amendment of my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker), I think neither of these amendments goes far enough. Every member of the House will agree that in a great centre of population such as Toronto, and in other centres such as Hamilton, no railway, at this time in Canada's history, should be permitted to cross the streets or construct its lines upon the streets without having the consent of the municipal council. But I cannot see why this should not apply also to rural municipalities. Take, for instance, the section between Toronto and Hamilton. It is thickly populated—in some places quite as thickly populated as some parts included within this population of 350,000 of which the hon. member for Centre Toronto has spoken. This section has become a network of railways. I pointed out the other evening, when this matter was under discussion, that the right of way on which this road will be constructed was first purchased from the owners with the distinct understanding that the line was to be an electric railway to carry the small products of the farm to these two cities. On this understanding the owners sold the right of way at very cheap rates, and also they allowed that right of way, in some cases, to run close to their residences or to their magnificent bank barns. These people thought that the line would use electricity, and that there would be no locomotives with their flying sparks to cause fire. Now, we are confronted with the fact that the road to be constructed on this right of way is to be a steam road, with all the danger and inconvenience to residents involved in such a road. Moreover, this will mean that the three leading railways of Canada will run through that section of my county within a distance of three miles. According to this Bill, without carrying it further, the railway would have the right to run rapid trains across the highways without being required first to obtain the consent of the municipality. I do not see why these municipalities, even though not so thickly settled, should not have the same opportunity of self-protection as we all agree should be given to the city. After all the discussion that we have had in recent years, in the Railway Committee and in this House, no Bill should pass granting privileges to railway companies without providing for the protection of the rights of municipalities.

As to the city of Toronto, there is some force in what the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) says, that it would not be quite fair that the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway, having their rights within the limits of the city and having no high level crossings, this new road should be compelled to provide high level crossings into the city. But I cannot believe that the Railway Commission would order the Canadian Northern to provide high level crossings without, at the same time, putting a similar condition upon the other lines.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) seems to be in a peculiar mood or frame of mind just now. He verbally concedes everything, but he is not willing to do much. It seems to be a case where the spirit is willing but the flesh is weak. I see that the minister is writing and consulting. Evidently a 'hustle' is on for some reason.

Mr. CALVERT. Trying to fix up Mr. Barker's amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. But the amendment of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) is not the first amendment. I notice that these hon. gentlemen caught at that very quickly. It is only an alternative in case the good sense of the House does not give what we think ought to be given as asked for in the first amendment. What is the position of the Minister of Railways or of any member of this House with reference to level crossings and the separating of grades? Surely it should not be necessary to ask that question. With the history of railways and the growth of cities in mind, and with the constant dangers threatened and actually incurred at times by the loss of life at level crossings, surely every one must have come to the conclusion that, instead of adding to the number of level crossings, the number must be, as rapidly as possible, diminished. And, although in small communities the same principles apply, yet the danger is greater where the population is most numerous and the travel greatest, and so the principle applies with peculiar strength in a city like Toronto, the largest city in Ontario. I do not know whether the Minister of Railways knows just the depth of the feeling existing in Toronto upon this question. It did not originate in any feeling against railways or with any idea of keeping railways out of the city, or with any idea of curtailing the reasonable privileges of railways; it arose out of the idea, impressed upon the people by repeated killings of its citizens and of strangers within its borders, that these level crossings must be, so far as possible, done away with. The feeling among the citizens of Toronto is acute on this matter, and for the last few years no public question has been more thoroughly discussed in the city than how to protect the lives of the people at these level crossings. The minister believes, he says, that it would be a proper thing to have the grades separated and to have no level crossings in Toronto, and that being so, why is he adverse to putting such a provision in the Bill. He says that his belief is that the Railway Commission would not grant an entrance to a railway over level crossings. If that be so is it not a fair proposition that the city itself should say that it is the best judge of what it needs in that respect within its own borders? There is always the possibility that the Railway Commission will make some other arrangement than that the level crossings shall be abolished, and all the city of Toronto asks is that in this Bill which allows this railway entrance into the city, provision should be made in the first place to protect the lives and property of the citizens. It has been said that it would not be fair to allow the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway to have level crossings in the city and to compel a competing road to go to the expense of raising or depressing its line. But, suppose it is ultimately decided that the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific are not to elevate or depress their tracks, then the Canadian Northern would have the argument before the Railway Commission that a disability should not be put upon them which is not put upon the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk which enter on level crossings. That argument no doubt would have a great deal of effect before the Railway Commission. It may take years—I hope it will not—before that question with reference to the elevation of the tracks of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway in Toronto is settled, and if in the meantime this road asks that it be given the same privileges as the others it will have a strong case before the Railway Commission. The city of Toronto wants to avoid that; it does not want further delay, litigation, and trouble, and why should you force it to. Here is a railway corporation knocking at its door asking for entrance to the city, and the city would like to have the right to say by what method it should enter the city. Why not settle the question here and now and get it off the list of unsettled questions.

Mr. CALVERT. Suppose a clause were inserted in this Bill saying that the tracks of this railway shall either be depressed or raised, and suppose the tracks of the other railways were not changed, would the Railway Commission have the power to say this railway shall come in on the level the same as the other roads?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. CALVERT. Of course not.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Calvert) takes my very argument and he shows the force of it. His argument is that you are to allow this railway to come in on the level and to accentuate the danger that already exists by two other roads entering the city on the level.

Mr. CALVERT. Suppose the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway should elevate their tracks before this road comes in, then when this railway submits its plans to the minister to enter the city of Toronto could not the minister or the Railway Commission say that this railway must elevate its tracks just the same as the others?

Mr. FOSTER. I believe the Railway Commission possibly could say that, but that is all dependent upon a contingency and the feeling is so acute in the city of Toronto that they do not want it left dependent upon such a contingency. If by any possibility the existing roads are allowed to continue with the level crossings there would probably be no disposition in the commission to compel this new incoming road to elevate or depress its tracks.

Mr. GRAHAM. The position taken by hon. gentlemen opposite in the committee inferred that if the other railways were not elevated they had no desire to compel this railway to be elevated. They wanted to get it in the hands of the municipality, always saying that if the other railways did not elevate they would not be so unreasonable as to make this railway elevate its tracks. That was their argument in the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. Whether that was the argument or not the whole point was that you left it absolutely in the hands of the city which is the first interested party. I think my hon. friend said that if you allowed the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk to continue with level crossings it would be unfair to impose the condition that all new railways entering Toronto should elevate or depress their tracks. I deny that proposition. I say that you have to take cognizance of the progress of the times and of the change in public opinion about these matters. It may be that the two old companies have certain vested rights to come in on the level and that they will be able to keep these rights in spite of anything that can be done. But the city of Toronto has the right to come to parliament and say that we should take note of the changed conditions, and that because the two existing roads have acquired certain rights, that is no reason why the city should be obliged to allow every other railroad to enter the city by a new route on level crossings and thus add to the danger. The argument is irresistible. That what you allowed years ago it may not be good policy to allow to-day. No city in the world would be progressive if it followed the doctrine that it must give to new comers what old comers got forty years ago in the way of privileges and franchises. Now, if the minister believes that the Railway Commission would not allow the new road to enter the city on the level, and if he believes that they should not be allowed to enter on level crossings what is his objection to have that provided for in the Act. If it is in the Act it makes the thing certain and it avoids all litigation, all contingencies, all deputations, and it settles the thing from the very start. After all the protection of human life is the great thing. The hon. minister gave prominence to the rights of the outside travelling public, and he said that it was not only the city of Toronto and the railway we had to consider, but that we should also consider the outside public who wanted to travel and to get their products into the city.

He was quite right in giving a certain prominence, but I do not think it ought to have the chief prominence. I think the chief prominence ought to be given to the city which is in question, which has the franchise to give, and which has the main part of the difficulty to make good. The road itself is a commercial undertaking, whose owners are just as anxious to get it into the city for the convenience and profit of its business as the city is to get the road in for its progress and development and convenience. The road comes to the entrance of the city, the city has its distinctive being, its own entity, and it has power within its own borders, and ought to have. Is it then not right, when the railway comes to the borders of the city and asks to be allowed to come in, that it should make the matter clear and plain to the city? The city says: We want you in, but the life and property of the city must be protected, and you must come in in a certain way; you must not cross on the level, twenty-seven or twenty-eight of our streets, which are crowded with people going to and fro; if you want to come in, you must come in overhead or underneath, and if you do that we welcome you. That is surely the right of a city or other municipality. I think my right hon. friend concedes that. There are, however, the other two questions. There is the possibility of this railway, when it once gets in, making its own arrangements with the street railway, and practically taking from the city its well-understood franchise and power over its streets in the operation of the street railway. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways says he is quite willing to guard that by putting something in the Bill. He says he would like to see it in the Bill. Has he used any influence with the promoter of the Bill to get him to put it in? These words sound well to the ear, but if they do not become embodied in the Bill they are of very little use. If the Minister says it is better that a new railway should come in on the level, he is consistent; but if he maintains that it should come in overhead or underneath, why should that not be put in the Bill? There is many a slip between the cup and the lip, and though the commission in nine cases out of ten might give good decisions, it might in the tenth case give a bad one. In the interests of the city of Toronto and the municipalities generally I press for the right of the municipality to protect the lives and properties of its citizens in having the say as to how these lines of railway shall come in.

Mr. CONMEE. This Bill has been discussed at considerable length by the Railway Committee, where the same ground was taken by the hon. members for the city of Toronto that they are taking here. I just rise to say that, for one, I cannot agree with them as to the absolute power they seek to vest in the city corporation. I quite understand the necessity of this House considering the very great interest that the city of Toronto or any other large city has in a question of this nature, and the very great difference that should be paid to so large a community. There is no doubt that the level crossing is a danger which, speaking generally, should be remedied; but there may be great difficulties in the way of bringing that about. It might operate against the interests of other communities or other people who are not citizens of the city. I think that the Mimico Railway was for a number of years refused a connection with the tracks of the street railway of the city of Toronto by the city corporation, not because they did not want a connection or because it would not accommodate both the citizens of Toronto and the citizens of towns and villages outside of Toronto, but because of a difference between the city corporation and the street railway company. Because of that standing altercation, that accommodation to the public was held up for more than ten years. Then the Mimico Railway passed into other hands, and the city corporation were before the legislature urging with all their influence that the connection should be made; but the company was not then in the humour to make the connection. I have not been in touch with that question in the last few years, and I do not know that the connection is made yet. I am not blaming the city corporation; it has its own views; but I do say that in this way it imposed on its own citizens and on the community outside of the city great hardship and inconvenience. On this occasion I take the same ground that I did then with regard to that matter, that is, that while I believe the position of the city should be recognized and everything to safeguard its citizens and the interests of a great city, should be carefully considered and embodied in legislation, yet I do not believe that the paramount authority should vest in the city. It may be said that a city should have jurisdiction over its own streets. So it has, as a general rule, but it is in a sense a trustee. The streets are in a measure the property of the Crown, and the outside public who visit Toronto or any other city, and through their trade and purchasing power, have largely maintained and built up the city, have some rights on these streets. The hon. member for North Toronto says that the city does not want any third power to intervene. By that he puts the city over and above the parliament of Canada. It has clothed with authority a certain commission to deal with these matters, why should the city of Toronto be exempt from its operation. I do not agree with the argument that the commission would not have the power from time to time to make such an adjustment of that matter as would be in the public interest. The question is, which is the safer body to entrust this very important action to? Will the public be better protected, including the citizens of Toronto or of any other city, if the matter be left with the city authority than to the Railway Commission? I think the commission the safer body; it has better machinery to deal with the question, and can approach it with less bias than the city corporation. We all know that city alderman are somewhat influenced by their surroundings. The city corporation would no doubt wish to deal fairly with a matter of this kind.

But I have doubt of their good judgment in all cases and I have doubt of their being free to exercise even the judgment they might possess in some cases owing to influences which would act upon them but which cannot have an effect upon this railway board. The board can prevent any railway company from doing any act that it is not authorized to do either by the general Railway Act of Canada or by the special Act incorporating the railway company; and the board can compel the railway to carry out any requirement that is imposed upon it by its charter or by the General Railway Act of Canada. They can do that upon the application of any person or upon their own motion, without application. If they exercise these powers as fairly as is the general rule—and the people of Canada begun to have great confidence in that board—surely all the requirements of the case will be met. I do not want to argue that the board may not make a mistake nor do I think it is competent for hon. gentlemen to argue that the city of Toronto will not make a mistake. I have just pointed out a mistake and injustice to which the city of Toronto has been a party even against its own citizens and still more against those who are not its citizens. Taking the whole matter into consideration, viewing it from a disinterested standpoint, I believe the board is the safer authority in the public interest—and I would even go so far as to say even in the best interests of the citizens of Toronto, for it was not very long ago at the time the Union Station was built in Toronto that the railway companies obtained the privilege of building a portion of the building by an arch over the street at that point, and it was not very long until they obtained from the council absolute control of that street and power to exclude the public from it and still do so; they have the power to have their officers exclude any man from that particular area, which is a public highway, a public place, and which they acquired without the consent of the citizens of Toronto, through the corporation. Thus it will be seen that the corporation of any city is not always a safeguard to the best interests even of its own citizens. I believe the Board of Railway Commissioners are a safer body with whom to entrust that power.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I think the time has arrived when the authorities of municipalities, particularly of such municipalities as Hamilton and Toronto, should be recognized in all these bills and should have practically absolute power to control their own streets. That principle has been recognized within a few weeks in this parliament, when the promoters of the Hamilton Radial Bill, before approaching this House, made their arrangements as to their entry into both Hamilton and Toronto and I think, in view of the great difficulties that are daily arising in the United States, in all the large centres on this continent, on this very question, that we should take time by the forelock and pass a general Act giving the cities their rights as to their own streets and the entrance of railways into the cities.

Mr. BLAIN. What objection would there be to applying the same principle to rural municipalities?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The cities are altogether different. While I would be quite agreeable to have the same power given to the municipal council in the country as in the city, yet I do not think, with the sparse population in the country, that the time has arrived when these restrictions should be placed on the railway company. I am sure there is not a municipality in this country that would stand in the way of the building of railways within its borders, but in the large centres I think the municipalities should have power to say how they shall enter a city, the route to be followed and whether the entrance shall be overhead or underground. In view of what has taken place in the United States, I fancy it would be in the interest of the railway companies themselves to have such restrictions placed on them. In every large city in the United States, Buffalo, Chicago, or any other, it is a burning question how the railway shall be got off the streets; millions of dollars are being spent in overcoming what should have been overcome by restrictions placed on the railways before they obtained the right to enter these cities. I would be prepared to support the amendment of the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Macdonell). If the House will not accept that, I would be prepared to accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Barker). Of course the hon. the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) tells us that he is placing an amendment in the Railway Act which will cover it. That amendment will assist, but it does not go far enough; I think the power should be placed entirely in the hands of the municipalities.

Mr. SPROULE. With many of the amendments that have been proposed I heartily agree, but I think, in view of the explanation made by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) that we should have another amendment with regard to the running of a steam railway over a right of way purchased for an electric railway only. Mr. Blain said that originally this was the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Railway, which was intended to be an electric railway; and because of the advantage this would be to the farmers in the district they were induced to sell the right of way very cheaply and, owing to the absence of any danger of fire that there would be from a steam railway, they were not disinclined to allow the road to run close to their buildings, orchards or other property. While the advantage of an electric railway service for the transportation of his family and the products of his farm weighed greatly with the farmer, this absence of danger from fire was perhaps the most potent influence in inducing him to sell the right of way cheaply; he would not have acted in the same way if he had known that this would be a steam railway, because the steam railway might practically destroy his farm. No farmer would allow it to cross his farm if he could avoid it unless he was paid a very large compensation; many would fight it, no matter what compensation was offered, baceuse of the danger to his property by fire. There should be a clause in this Bill preventing the railroad from using the right of way for the purpose of a steam railroad unless it compensated the farmer for the disadvantage to him of having the right of way used for a steam railway.

We should not encourage this. It is getting property under false pretences, it is taking the property of people and giving them no adequate compensation. Looking up this Act of incorporation. I notice that there are other rights which this company will acquire, and which it was never contemplated they should enjoy. The first company has a right to carry on works for the transmission and distribution of electric power, not only for its own use but generally. That being so, if it enters the city of Toronto, as it desires to do, I do not see that there is anything to prevent them from selling electric power in the city, which clearly never was contemplated. They are authorized also to acquire and utilize water-powers and dispose of power either directly or in the form of electric energy. So, here is another right that this company is getting in this roundabout way. We have reached a stage when we should watch very carefully the railway companies that amalgamate with others. One railway gets the right to run an electric line. Another gets the right to run a steam railway. These two amalgamate intending to use whichever power best suits their purpose. The parties who sold the right of way to the electric railway would never have sold for the purposes of a steam railway, for the steam railway is exceedingly dangerous. Every summer we have barns, houses and crops destroyed by fire caused by sparks from passing locomotives. This habit—it seems to be becoming a habit—of steam railway corporations amalgamating with electric railways, thus acquiring widely extended powers, should be carefully watched by this parliament, and in every way we should guard the rights of the people interested.

Mr. BRISTOL. I wish to press the amendment that I have submitted for I am not able to see, after listening carefully to all the arguments why the city of Toronto should not, as a matter of policy be allowed to say whether or not there should be a level crossing at any particular place within the limits of the city. In such a matter, the intelligence of the city council should govern. I regard it as very unfortunate that a Bill of this kind should come before this parliament. It is just one of those cases where we are dealing with a local matter which should have been left to be dealt with locally. I can assure you that if it were being dealt with in the local legislature there would be no difficulty about it. The rights of the city would be safeguarded, because the representatives dealing with it could be got at by those whose rights are most affected. It is another case of the difficulty arising out of this particular 'work for the general advantage of Canada' clause. Members from various parts of Canada are called upon to deal with local matters affecting particular municipalities. It is a most unfortunate thing. In view of that and in view of the sentiment in favour of protecting the rights of municipalities, I am sorry that the minister cannot see his way to protect the rights of the city of Toronto. I can assure him that we do not want to be unreasonable. Not only we, and not only the minister's Liberal friends, but all thinking people of the city have become so worked up by the number of murders that have been caused by railways at these level crossings that they have come to believe that no amount of money should be allowed to stand in the way of the public safety. For that is what it amounts to after all—it is a pure question of money. The minister says: If we put a restriction upon this road which did not exist in the case of other roads that came into Toronto from twenty to fifty years ago, it will cost this company much more money to enter the city than it cost the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific Railway. But look at the changed conditions. When these other companies entered the city, Toronto was a hamlet. This company comes to a great centre containing 350,000 people to trade with and do business with. They can afford to pay more—if it is to come down to a basis of money, they can afford to pay more. To pass the Bill as it is, we practically have to say to the mayor and city council of Toronto: You are not ready to be fair about a matter of business which affects vitally the citizens of Toronto and all who visit the city. You tell us that we must go to the Railway Commission to decide as to forty or fifty railway crossings, whether they are to be level crossings or not. We are not compelling this railway to come into Toronto overhead or underground, but we say that, if there is to be a level crossing, it should be because the city council, by by-law, has consented to it. The representatives of the city are most vitally interested; they must look after the streets of the city and the protection of life and property of the inhabitants. They are directly responsible to the people of Toronto, while the Railway Commission is responsible to the people of all Canada. One can readily understand that the Railway commission may come to the conclusion, after hearing counsel, that the difficulty has been exaggerated. But the council of the city of Toronto is directly responsible to the people of the city. If they do wrong in preventing a railway entering which should be allowed to enter the city, their official life will not be very long. I say that the minister is placing this simply on the basis of money, and if you bring it down to that, these people may reasonably be asked to pay more money to enter the city of Toronto than was paid by other railways twenty or thirty years ago. But, at the same time, that is a very poor basis upon which to consider a question such as this, affecting the lives of the people in one of our greatest cities.

Mr. CALVERT. As one who happens to be opposed to the amendment of the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol), I must take exception to his statement. We are just as anxious to protect life, not only in Toronto but elsewhere—for the railways extend throughout Canada—as is my hon. friend. This matter does not come before us for the first time this session. This is not a new charter. It has been before the House for ten years, and was renewed in 1906. We did not find these gentlemen taking exception at that time. This question of the depression of the tracks of the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway has been before the city for many years. I do not think it is fair that we should place a clause in this Bill compelling this company to elevate or depress its tracks until such time as the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway have been dealt with. It may be two years before this company is actually ready to enter Toronto. They have to submit their plans and specifications to the minister and also to get the consent of the Railway Commission. I think that by the time that has been done, Toronto will have dealt with the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway so far as elevating or depressing their tracks is concerned. It would be unfair, in the meantime, to place a clause in this charter to compel this road to elevate or depress its tracks until satisfactory arrangement is made with the other roads. We do not know that they will want to build into the city of Toronto. They may wish to effect running rights with some other road. So far as the clause proposed by the minister is concerned, I was under the impression, and so, I am sure, were many other members of the committee, that section 235 of the Railway Act provided protection for the city so far as street railways are concerned.

Section 235 says:

> The railway may be carried upon, along or across an existing highway upon leave therefor having been first obtained from the board as hereinafter authorized; provided that the board shall not grant leave to any company to carry any street railway or tramway, or any railway operated or to be operated as a street railway or tramway, along any highway which is within the limits of any city or incorporated town, until the company has first obtained consent therefor by a by-law of the municipal authority of such city or incorporated town.

I was under the impression when this Bill was before the committee that that section afforded ample protection to the city of Toronto or any other city, if this was a street railway. But in reading the Act further, I find that clause 3 states:

Nothing in this section shall deprive any such company of any rights conferred upon it by any special Act of the parliament of Canada, or amendment thereof, passed prior to the 12th day of March, 1903.

Now it is just possible that that saving clause might prevent municipalities from exercising their right under this Bill; consequently I agree with the minister when he suggests that a new clause should be placed in the Bill, so that there shall be no doubt that when a street railway comes into Toronto or Hamilton the citizens of both those municipalities shall have ample control. But I must object to, and will vote against the amendment of my hon. friend to compel this road to elevate or depress their tracks under the present charter.

Mr. CONMEE. In respect to the remarks of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) as to the right of way acquired by this company when it was represented to be an electric road, does he say that right of way was acquired through towns or villages?

Mr. BLAIN. So far as my county is concerned, the same objection would apply, whether it passes through the towns or villages, or through a thickly settled portion of the township.

Mr. CONMEE. If the Railway Act does not now provide any protection to a municipality against a railway company operating a steam railway through the streets of cities, towns or villges, I am quite in favour of such an amendment as would provide protection.

Mr. BLAIN. Why should you not go further, and include thickly settled portions of rural municipalities, such as the one I have referred to?

Mr. CONMEE. There is not the same reasons nor the same interest. I cannot see that there would be much difference between the operation of a steam road running through a farming settlement and the operation of an electric road. If the company in any way causes damage, the law says they are responsible. I do not see that the motive power by which the road is operated could make much difference to a rural community. But certainly there might be strong objection to a steam railway taking certain kinds of traffic through a village street.

Mr. BLAIN. Though my hon. friend (Mr. Conmee) may not be able to see what difference it would make in a rural municipality, if he will consult such a municipality he will find that they have great objections. I repeat that the farmers were induced to sell their property with the understanding that this would be an electric road, and would pick up their smaller produce such as strawberries, potatoes, celery and other like vegetables which are grown to a great extent in that section. The farmers already have two steam railways in that section within a mile of some of the most important seats of this industry, and they were induced to allow another company to purchase another right of way with the understanding that when it was in operation they would be able to send their small produce to Toronto and Hamilton, because the other roads were devoting their attention to the large passenger traffic that is carried between Toronto, Hamilton and Niagara Falls. I have myself witnessed railway trains running past the stations in that county and refusing to pick up boxes of strawberries that were lying there, the railway authorities contending that they could not stop to pick up strawberries because they were running rapid trains between these two cities. Therefore the Minister of Railways can easily understand that the people up there will have three steam railways within a radius of three miles, and they are now confronted with the prospect that this road that was bought for an electric road to carry their small products, is to be converted into a steam road. That is a point that should receive the attention of the committee, and especially of the Minister of Railways. Surely the rights of the people of that section should be protected. We do not wish to interfere with the rights of the people of the city of Toronto or Hamilton. But it is one thing for the farmer to have a steam railway running within a few rods of his farm buildings, and an entirely different thing to have an electric road running close by them. The government should not compel the farmers in that section of the country to part with their rights. They sold the right of way for a small compensation, with the understanding that an electric road would be constructed; that is to be changed, and one of the great steam railways is to use that right of way.

Mr. CONMEE. With all deference to my hon. friend, I cannot yet see what difference it would make to the farmer whether the road is operated by steam or electricity so long as it picks up the freight that is waiting at certain stations. The company will still be liable for any neglect to carry this freight, and they do not escape because we pass this Bill. The municipality still has power to compel them to carry out their obligations.

Mr. BLAIN. What about the question of fire?

Mr. CONMEE. I will admit that there is a little danger there ; but if there is there is a remedy. While it is contended that this is to be a steam road, the promoters have said that it is likely to be an electric road. They do not admit that it is going to be a steam road. I am willing to concede the point that the municipalities should be protected but not put beyond the authority of this parliament.

Mr. BLAIN. Some of the insurance companies doing business in the province of Ontario refuse absolutely to take a risk upon any building that is placed close to a steam railway. That is one of the reasons why I have taken the position that I have on this point. In answer to the question as to whether it should be a steam railway, picking up these products, or an electric railway, I admit that there is no difference, provided the steam railway will do the work. But they have already two railways running there which refuse to do the work. The owners sold them the right of way for the express purpose of getting an electric railway that would pick up this kind of business and let the steam railways take the more general traffic.

Mr. BRISTOL. I am not discussing the portion of the amendment which relates to the question of the operation of this road with respect to it being an electric road, because I understand that has been agreed upon. But my hon. friend from East Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has proposed a further amendment, which is to the effect that this railway should not be permitted to run along a highway or public park or place without the consent of the municipality. I would say, in so far as the city of Toronto is concerned, in the first place, that danger to life from that cause does not arise, and there is no expectation of anything of the kind happening, because no existing railway comes into the city of Toronto along an existing highway, and we have not the slightest conception that any board of commissioners would permit any railway to come into the city of Toronto along a highway. The point in regard to which we have been asking protection has reference to the crossing of highways in Toronto, and this amendment does not affect that position at all. As far as Toronto is concerned, it would not help us in the slightest. I do not propose to reiterate the arguments that have been already stated, but what I want to say to my hon. friend from West Middlesex (Mr. Calvert) that there seem to be two points that are clearly against his contention. First, he says that it would be unfair to put this railway in a different position from that of the existing railways already in Toronto—the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway. When the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway entered Toronto the conditions were entirely different. There was not the enormous population that there is to-day. The effect of that population is that this new railway wants to come in and do business.

Mr. CALVERT. But my hon. friend will admit that they have to submit plans and specifications to the minister and to the board before they will be passed.

Mr. BRISTOL. The conditions are entirely different. There is a larger population with which to do business and to make money out of. The other point is that the fact that the two existing railways years ago got in on the level is no reason why we should let in another railway now, when the danger to life has been demonstrated, and I have been trying to argue with the Minister of Railways and Canals that it is bad enough to have these two railways crossing on the street level and trying to come to an arrangement with them without having a second problem handed to us. So we say that if they want to come to Toronto we are glad to have them, but let them come in a way that protects the public. We say that we believe the council of Toronto is much more anxious than the Railway Commission can be to welcome this railway to Toronto, and that it will be most reasonable with this company on the question of crossings. All it asks is that this principle should be laid down, not merely for this railway that wants to enter Toronto, but for any railway that wants to enter any large city, that the city shall have control of its own streets as regards where railways are to cross, whether they should cross beneath, above or on the level.

Mr. GRAHAM. That the committee may clearly understand the amendments of the hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Barker), I want to read them. In reference to railways, our ideas are all the same. My contention is that the Railway Commission will absolutely protect the people of Toronto or Hamilton, or any one else, as far as crossings are concerned. May I say to the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol), who argues so strongly that Toronto should have the absolute power to protect its own streets, that I have always contended that, but does he not know that the city practically agreed to give the present street railway company a perpetual franchise, that the agreement was typewritten and handed to every member of a certain legislative committee with the request that it be put through, and that had it not been for one or two country members who saw the poison in the draught that would have gone through, Toronto consenting and requesting? But when it was pointed out that they had consented to something that would absolutely give a perpetual franchise the agreement was torn up in fifteen minutes and the Bill was withdrawn. That is one case even in which Toronto was protected against itself by a legislative committee. I assisted a little in that philanthropic movement. I believe that the Railway Commission has been selected and given power to do this very work. Had we only one city to look after, perhaps I might be able to put in special provisions, but I am trying to adhere to some line of action that will be defensible and will be applicable to all like conditions that may arise. Perhaps

I may be wrong, but that is what I am honestly trying to do. I am trying to get this down to a certain point that will be applicable to any condition that may arise. I say that the commission have such power, I have confidence that the commission will exercise it wisely, and if I did not believe that Toronto would be protected as other places have to be protected by the commission, I would feel differently upon this question. I am absolutely convinced that the board will deal with the different conditions that arise. I am free to say this—perhaps I am almost too brutally frank—that if the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway do not elevate their tracks, but are allowed to continue the level crossings, I do not believe Toronto would make one individual road elevate its tracks. It would not be practicable. I believe that the commission probably would not allow them to do it, but would make them come in on the same line as the others. Our objects are the same, but on that point I think it is best to leave it in the hands of the commission owing to the unsettled condition that now exists in Toronto with respect to other railways. The hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Barker) proposes another amendment to meet another condition, as follows :

The said company shall not operate its railwas as a street railway in any city or town without the consent by by-law of the said corporation of such city or town.

The second clause of the amendment amply protects the city. It is as follows :

The said company shall not construct or operate its railway along any street or highway or upon or along any public park, market square, or any such public place in any municipality without the consent of the said municipality expressed by by-law.

If we put in that amendment the city's interests are thoroughly guarded.

Mr. BLAIN. Would that cover the right of way that has already been purchased ?

Mr. GRAHAM. It would not cover the right of way because my hon. friend will see the difficulty ; it is a question of fact whether the right of way was purchased on certain conditions making it legally binding on them to run an electric road. That is a matter that we could not very well deal with in the charter. Half of the amendments are directed against this as a steam railway and the other half are directed against it as an electric railway. It cannot be both. By leaving it as a steam railway to the commission so far as the entrance is concerned and placing these clauses in the Bill to protect the cities against any encroachment on their rights as to its operation as a street railway, I think we will come as near getting this Bill right as it is possible to get it.

Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. W. JACKSON. Are the regulations different for streets in cities and large towns, from what they are in rural municipalities ?

Mr. GRAHAM. My amendment is that they cannot run along a highway of any municipality without the consent of the municipality.

Mr. W. JACKSON. There is more objection to these roads running on the public highway in rural districts than there is in towns and cities, because in towns and cities there is legislation restricting their speed, but when they get to the rural districts a forty mile an hour clip is not an unusual thing and therefore the rural municipalities need more protection than the populated centres.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The only amendment I have before me is that proposed by the member for Toronto (Mr. Bristol) ; no notice has been given of the motion proposed by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker).

Mr. HENDERSON. This is an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is an important amendment to the Bill and cannot be moved without notice.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. member for Hamilton could not possibly have known how to draft an amendment until he had seen the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Toronto. I understand the rule to be with reference to an amendment to a Bill and not as regards an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is an important amendment affecting the whole Bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. It may but the promoter of the Bill must look out for that.

Mr. CALVERT. Can it not be done with the consent of the committee ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It can be done with the unanimous consent of the committee. Does the hon. member (Mr. Bristol), withdraw his amendment ?

Mr. BRISTOL. I insist upon my amendment but I am not going to oppose any amendment which helps me to the extent that this amendment does.

Mr. GRAHAM. It would save confusion to vote on the amendments separately.

Amendment (Mr. Bristol) negatived.

On amendment (Mr. Barker) :

1. The said company shall not operate its railway as a street railway in any city or town without the consent by by-law of the said corporation of such city or town.

2. The said company shall not construct or operate its railway along any street or highway or upon or along any public park, market square, or any such public place in any municipality without the consent of the said municipality expressed by by-law.

Amendment (Mr. Barker) agreed to.

Bill as amended reported ; read the third time and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 7) to incorporate the Northern Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Adamson.

Bill (No. 35) to incorporate the Travellers Life Assurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Gervais.

Bill (No. 56) to incorporate the Bank of Hamilton Pension Fund.—Mr. Barker.

Bill (No. 46) respecting the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company.—Mr. Monk.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

Bill (No. 62) respecting the Subsidiary High Court of the Ancient Order of Foresters in the Dominion of Canada.—Mr. Guthrie.

Bill (No. 37) to incorporate the Canada Weather Insurance Company—Mr. Schell (Oxford).

PRIVILEGE—MR. TURRIFF.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (East Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, before you proceed to this order I wish to speak on a question of privilege. I notice in the Toronto 'News' of Saturday an article headed 'Timber Berth Inquiry,' and among other things it states:

Berth No. 1048, north of Prince Albert, was taken by Perkins, Fraser & Burbidge for $5,000. No amount is stated in the tender and the form is endorsed by Mr. J. G. Turriff, '$5,000.' The further surcharge showing that the cheque was received is dated two days after the opening of the tenders.

I think the reporter in reporting this has evidently misunderstood what took place in the committee. There was nothing stated to the effect that the cheque had been received two days later. What was said was that the cheque had been received in the accountant's office two days after the date for the receiving of tenders, but the cheques go from the commissioner's office to the timber and mines branch and sometimes take a couple of days to get down to the accountant's office. This article would leave the impression that the cheque was first received in the department two days after the date fixed for the receiving of the tenders, which is altogether erroneous. Nothing of that kind occurred and I would state here that neither in this case nor in any other case was a tender or cheque for a tender received at any time after the closing hour fixed for the receiving of tenders.

QUESTIONS.

EMPLOYMENT OF KENNETH FALCONER BY RAILWAY DEPARTMENT.

Mr FOSTER asked :

What departments other than that of Marine and Fisheries have employed Kenneth Falconer, or his firm, in connection with their accounting business, and what has been paid by such departments, if any?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Kenneth Falconer and his associates were engaged to reorganize the entire accounting system of the Intercolonial Railway and of the Prince Edward Island Railway in February, 1906. The work before being completed included every detail incident to the business transactions, not only at the head office; but at every station along the line; and the members of the staff visited every point of importance on the Intercolonial Railway and Prince Edward Island Railways. They not only reorganized the system but they spent about a year and a half instructing and assisting the railway staff in the proper carrying out of the system, so that the results expected might be obtained. The chief adviser in this reorganization was Mr. W. W. Stevenson, at that time comptroller of the Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company, and at present comptroller of the Mutual Life Assurance Company of New York. The work was performed according to schedule prices, and totalled when completed $43,084.23. In addition to the work of reorganization proper, the department has been furnished with several expert reports which are almost invaluable. The results obtained have already much more than compensated for the outlay for this purpose.

EXPENDITURE ON WHARFS, PIERS AND HARBOURS.

Mr. BLAIN asked:

What amount has been expended on wharfs, piers and harbours each year since 1895, showing the amount expended in each province?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I think that my hon. friend (Mr. Blain), on reflection, will see that that should be a subject of return. I ask that it be allowed to stand accordingly.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as notice of motion for a return.

INDIAN LANDS—ISLANDS OWNED BY INDIANS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked:

1. What is the total number of acres of Indian lands not disposed of in the Dominion?
2. What is the total number of islands owned by the Indians and not sold in Canada?
3. What is the total number of islands owned by the Indians and sold by this government since they came into office?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. On the 31st of March, 1907, there were 229,923:65 acres of Indian lands not disposed of.

2. 2,309 islands, not including those contiguous to the Manitoulin Island, which have not been surveyed.

3. 956.

JAMESTOWN EXHIBITION.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked:

1. Did the government make any exhibit at the Jamestown exhibition? If not, what reason does the government give for not taking part in said exhibition?

2. Was any person or corporation given permission to make an exhibit on behalf of Canada at the Jamestown exhibition? If so, what is the name of the person or corporation and the nature of the exhibit?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture):

1. No. Canada having so recently participated in the Louisiana Purchase Exposition at St. Louis, and in an exhibition held at Pittsburg, and also as she was participating at that time in the exhibition held at Milan, Italy, and at another in Christchurch, New Zealand, it was not deemed advisable to participate in the Jamestown exhibition.

2. The Grand Trunk Railway system having represented to the Minister of Agriculture that it proposed to make an exhibit there in a building on which the words 'Grand Trunk Railway System' were to appear, asked permission to use the word 'Canada' in connection therewith, and such permission was granted. The government is not aware of the nature of the exhibit.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND SUBSIDY.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN—by Mr. Clements—asked:

1. When was the first instalment of the subsidy payable to Prince Edward Island under the amendment to the British North America Act, 1907, paid to the province?

2. Has any and what part of the provincial subsidy been deducted in respect of the Hillsborough Bridge? If so, what amount?

3. Was the subsidy remitted direct to the provincial government, or through the agency of a bank? If through a bank, what bank, and why was the change made in the mode of remitting?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

1. 30th November, 1907.

2. Yes. $19,500.

3. Direct to the provincial government. No change was made in the mode of remitting.

Mr. ARMSTRONG.

CANADIAN ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. What amounts have been paid by the government to the Canadian Associated Press since the subsidy was first granted?

2. How many Canadian newspapers are now taking this service, and what proportion of the cost of it is being paid by the government and the subscribing newspapers, respectively?

3. When will the subsidy expire?

4. Has any request been preferred to the government for a renewal of the subvention for a further term of years? If so, what is the nature of such request?

5. Has any proposal been made to the government for a subsidy to a domestic, Canadian, news service?

6. Is the government aware that in the event of a further bonus to the Canadian Associated Press being granted, it is proposed to confine the use of this service to newspapers which will undertake to subscribe also to the domestic service?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

1. For the year ending 30th June, 1904, $12,500; for the year ending 30th June, 1905, $11,592.81; for the year ending 30th June, 1906, $10,765.76; for the year ending 30th June, 1907, $10,000; for seven months ending 31st January, 1908, $2,916.66.

2. We deal with the association and have no record of the number of papers interested.

3. 30th June, 1908.

4. Yes, for a renewal for a further term.

5 and 6. No.

DEPORTATION OF IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. URIAH WILSON—by Mr. Sproule—asked:

1. Are immigrants who are deported always so deported at the expense of the transportation companies who have brought such immigrants to Canada?

2. What amount has the government paid for the deportation of refused immigrants since July 1, 1906, up to March 1, 1908?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Not always. Each case is dealt with separately, according to the facts disclosed in the evidence connected therewith.

2. The cost of returning immigrants, refused at Canadian ocean ports, is borne entirely by the transportation companies.

EXPENDITURE FOR IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HERRON asked:

1. What was the total amount expended for immigration from March 1, 1907, to July 1, 1907?

2. What is the total expenditure of the government for immigration purposes for the eight months ending March 1, 1908?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. $274,550.
2. $447,500.

Mr. HERRON asked:

1. What was the total amount paid by the government in immigration bonuses from March 1, 1907, to July 1, 1907?
2. What is the total amount paid by the government in immigration bonuses from July 1, 1907, to March 1, 1908?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. $36,147.98.
2. $91,095.51.

MONOGRAPH ON GRAPHITE.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked:

1. What was the total cost of the publication brought out by the Department of Mines called 'Graphite, its properties, occurrence, refining and uses'?
2. How much was paid Mr. Fritz Cirkel for its preparation?
3. What was the value of the time of the clerks and officials of the department editing and revising it?
4. What was the value of the time of the Dominion geographer and his staff preparing maps, &c., for it?
5. What was the cost of engraving the cuts and plans in it?
6. What was the cost of printing and binding it?
7. What was the total value of the graphite produced in Canada during 1906 and 1907?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue):

1. $3,467.51.
2. Contract price for monograph on graphite, complete with drawings and photographs, $1,300.
3. Edited by private party in Montreal at expense of author. Carried through press by member of staff, who made additional changes and corrections. His work was done a few hours at a time. Probably seven full days' work would cover this item, $35.
4. $50.
5. $269.92.
6. $1,123.37. Printing maps, $689.22.
7. 1906, production, $18,300; 1907, production, $16,000.

IMMIGRANT DETENTION HOSPITALS—EXPENDITURE.

Mr. URIAH WILSON—by Mr. Sproule—asked:

1. What was the total amount expended by the government on immigrant detention hospitals, construction and maintenance, for the eight years ending July 1, 1907?
2. What amount has been expended by the government on the above objects from July 1 to March 1, 1907?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. $175,987.04.
2. $32,433.59.

LA COMPAGNIE DE PUBLICATION DU CANADA.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. What amount has the government paid to the 'Canada Publication Company' (La Compagnie de Publication du Canada), of Montreal, from the 1st January, 1907, to the 1st March, 1908, for advertisements, printing and other work?
2. Has the government an advertising contract with the Canada Newspaper of Montreal? If so, what is the date of such contract, and what is the tariff fixed for the advertisements, and by whom is the contract signed?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). So far as the Department of the Interior is concerned:

1. $300.
2. Yes; 9th August, 1907, and 6th February, 1908; the tariff is $60 per month for the insertion of Homestead and Mining Regulations, long form, in the daily; and $20 per month for the insertion of Homestead Regulations, short form, in the weekly. The contracts are signed by the King's Printer.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). So far as the Department of Marine and Fisheries is concerned:

1. $599.15.
2. No contract made in this department.

IMMIGRATION FROM THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SCHAFFNER asked:

1. What was the total amount expended by the government in connection with immigration from the United States from the 1st March, 1907, to the 1st of July following?
2. What is the total amount expended by the government in connection with the same branch of immigration during the eight months ending 1st March, 1908?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. $60,000 approximately.
2. $130,000 approximately.

IMMIGRANTS FROM EUROPE ENTERING UNITED STATES FROM CANADA.

Mr. SCHAFFNER asked:

1. Does the government receive regularly from the American authorities a list of immigrants from Europe entering the United States from Canada?
2. Who furnishes said list, and at what intervals is it handed in?
3. Why is not the data contained in said lists given in the annual report on immigration laid before parliament?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Yes.

2. Mr. John H. Clark, United States Commissioner of Immigration, Montreal; monthly.

3. Because it is emigration.

MUSKODAY INDIAN RESERVE.

Mr. LAKE—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. Have any negotiations been commenced or arrangements made for the sale of any portion of the Muskoday Indian reserve No. 99?

2. Has any sale of land included in this reserve been made? If so, when, to whom, at what price, and what were the terms of the sales?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. No.

2. No.

DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN LANDS.

Mr. LAKE—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. Has the government disposed of any of the following lands? If so, when and to whom, and have patents been issued: sections 2, 10, 14, 22 and 24, township 28, range 29, west second meridian; northeast quarter-section 26, township 28, range 29, west second meridian; northwest quarter-section 2, north half-section 10, and northwest quarter-section 14, township 26, range 2, west third meridian?

2. Are any of these lands open to homestead entry? If so, which?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Yes, as follows:—

Sections 2, 10, 14, 22 and W. ½ of 24, in township 28, range 29, west 2nd meridian, sold 24th April, 1907, to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, Limited. Patent not issued.

N.E. ¼ 24, homesteaded 7th September, 1905, E. H. Boon. Patent not issued.

S.E. ¼ of 24, homesteaded 26th July, 1905, R. J. Willis. Patent not issued.

N.E. ¼ section 26, township 28, range 29, west 2nd, sold 24th April, 1907, to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, Limited. Patent not issued.

N.W. ¼ section 2, N. ½ of 10 and N.W. ¼ of 14, in township 26, range 2, west 3rd meridian, sold 24th April, 1907, to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, Limited. Patent not issued.

2. No.

PAYMENTS TO C. BOONE OR THE BOONE COMPANY.

Mr. BENNETT—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

How much has been paid to C. Boone or the Boone Company since 1896, and what was the amount paid for work in each year at each point where same was performed by said party, firm or company?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). As this covers the figures for a number of years, I would suggest that it be allowed to stand as notice of motion for a return.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as notice of motion for return.

IMMIGRATION—EXPENDITURE FOR MAINTENANCE.

Mr. SCHAFFNER asked:

What has been the expenditure of the government for food, clothing and other maintenance for immigrants after landing in Canada for the years 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, 1908, to March 1?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I would ask that that be allowed to stand as notice of motion for return.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as notice of motion for return.

HON. MR. JUSTICE DRYSDALE.

Mr. TAYLOR asked:

1. On what date did the government first communicate to the Hon. Arthur Drysdale its desire or intention to appoint him a Justice of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia?

2. Was such intimation communicated to him orally or by letter or by telegram, and on what date?

3. At what date did the said Hon. Arthur Drysdale communicate to the government or to any member of the government, either directly or indirectly, his willingness to accept said appointment?

4. Was such willingness communicated orally by letter, by telegram or how otherwise?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice):

1. When forwarding him his commission as such judge on 21st March, 1907.

2. By letter forwarding such commission.

3 and 4. No such communication was made at any time.

THE DOKESE INDIANS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN—by Mr. Sproule—asked:

1. What is the name of the government agent for the Dokese or Dokis Indians, where does he reside and what is his salary?

2. Is any percentage allowed the Indian agent in connection with the surrender of the timber on the Dokese or Dokis Indian reserve?

3. If so, what is that percentage?

4. On what is the percentage based, is it on the valuation already made or on the sales as timber is sold?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. The name of the agent for the Dokis Indians is George P. Cockburn, who resides at Sturgeon Falls, Ontario. His salary is $450 per annum, and he is allowed $100 per month extra during the negotiations with Indians for surrender of timber.

2. No.

3. Answered by No. 2.
4. Answered by No. 2.

WM. M. SMITH, FRUIT INSPECTOR.

Mr. SPROULE asked:

1. Is the government aware that William Maxwell Smith, fruit inspector, is said to be engaged in the business of dealing in real estate?
2. If the government is not so aware, does it propose to make inquiries with respect thereto?
3. Is Mr. Smith paid for his entire time during the whole year? If not, for what portion of the year is he paid?
4. When officials of the government make payment on behalf of the government, is it the custom to fill in or sign the vouchers, or must such vouchers be filled in and signed by the person to whom the payment is made?
5. What steps does the government take to check the accuracy of such vouchers?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture):

1. The government is not aware that William Maxwell Smith, fruit inspector, is said to be engaged in the business of dealing in real estate.
2. Inquiry will be made in respect thereto.
3. Mr. Smith is paid for his entire time during the whole of the year.
4. It is the custom for the party to whom payment is made to fill in and sign the voucher, but it is not considered material who fills in the voucher so long as it is signed by the proper party.
5. The usual steps in accordance with the executive regulations, sub-vouchers being required when they can be furnished.

WHARF AT GRAND BEND.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked:

1. When was the contract for the wharf at Grand Bend accepted, and at what date was work commenced?
2. Is the wharf at Grand Bend completed? If so, when was the work finished and has the contractor been paid in full?
3. Did the said contract include dredging the mouth of the River Sable near the above-named pier?
4. If it did, has the government completed the dredging? If not, why not?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (for Minister of Public Works):

1. (a) 26th March, 1904. (b) 15th April, 1904.
2. (a) Yes. (b) 6th October, 1905. (c) Yes.
3. No.
4. No dredging has been done.

PAYMENTS TO E. A. WALLBERG.

Mr. BOYCE asked:

1. What moneys, if any, have been paid during the years 1905-6, 1906-7, and 1907-8 by the Department of Public Works to Emile A. Wallberg and the Steel Concrete Company, or either of them, and in respect of what work or service?
2. Have the works in respect of which such payments were made been completed? If not, what works remain uncompleted?
3. What was the contract price in each case?
4. Was the contract let by public advertisement and tender?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (for Minister of Public Works). I am advised by the Public Works Department that these firms are not known to this department.

APPOINTMENTS TO TITLE OF GENERAL.

Mr. STANFIELD—by Mr. Cockshutt—asked:

1. How many officers of the permanent force in Canada have received the rank and title of general?
2. What are their names and respective qualifications for the title and rank?
3. Have the imperial authorities been consulted in regard to this matter, and is it with their approval and sanction that such titles have been conferred?
4. If not, when was the Militia Act amended so as to make provision for the granting of this rank?
5. What are the qualifications necessary to enable officers of the permanent force to obtain this honour?
6. Is it the intention of the government to make further promotions of a similar character?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (for the Minister of Militia and Defence). There are no officers of the permanent force in Canada who have received the rank and title of general.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Stanfield) wished to make some change in that question if the minister would allow it to stand.

Mr. FISHER. I give the answer to the question as it stands.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a copy of all tenders, contracts, specifications and plans for the construction of machine shops, freight sheds and other buildings, other than railway station, for the use of the Prince Edward Island Railway at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, and of all correspondence between the government or the Department of Railways, and the inspector of the works, or the contractor or contractors, respecting the contracts and the construction of the works, including orders for changes in plans and specifications, and the construction of the work; and all other correspondence, statements and information in possession of the government, relating to the works, with a statement of all moneys paid to the contractor and inspectors of the works to date.—Mr. McLean (Queens).

For a copy of all Orders in Council, letters, telegrams, correspondence and papers of every description and nature relating to the appointment of the Hon. Arthur Drysdale as Justice of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, and especially all such documents as relate to the date of his acceptance of said appointment or the date of his declaration of intention to accept the same.—Mr. Taylor.

For a copy of all Orders in Councin, reports, memoranda, agreements, contracts and other documents and papers of every kind, nature and description, from the 1st day of January, 1900, up to the present time, relating to or touching the Dokese or Dokis Indian reserve, or touching the surrender thereof of the timber thereon, and especially all such documents as aforesaid as relate to any proposals or arrangements for the surrender of any rights by the Indians in the said reserve or in the timber thereon, or to the sale or disposal of the said timber or any part thereof. —Mr. R. L. Borden.

For a return showing the cost, outside of the indemnity of the Senate, for the sessions of 1905 and 1906-7.—Mr. Foster, by Mr. Taylor.

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, petitions, &c., in possession of the government or any member or official thereof, respecting the dismissal of Archibald McDonald as postmaster at Whim Road Cross, Prince Edward Island, and the appointment of William McKinnon as his successor.—Mr. Martin (Queens).

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and petitions in the possession of the government or any member or official thereof, respecting the dismissal of Alex. McLeod in 1905, as postmaster at Valleyfield East, Prince Edward Island, and the appointment of his successor.—Mr. McLean (Queens).

For a return showing: 1. What leases for coal lands in the Northwest Territories were granted by the Government in the years 1903 and 1904.

2. To whom, and on what dates the same were granted, and the amounts paid therefor.

3. Whether the person to whom the lease was granted was the original applicant.

4. Whether any assignment of such leases has been made, when, and to whom.

5. Who the present holders are of said leases.—Mr. Boyce.

For a return showing all lands acquired from the government by the Grand Trunk Pacific Town and Development Company, together with the area, location, purchase price of each tract, and a copy of all correspondence between the government and the company or any individuals interested therein or connected therewith, as to the general terms and conditions under which the government land should be granted to the said company.—Mr. Ames, by Mr. Taylor.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF CIGARETTES.

Mr. RICHARD BLAIN (Peel) moved:

That the object of good government is to promote the general welfare of the people by a careful encouragement and protection of whatever makes for the public good; and by an equally careful discouragement and suppression of whatever tends to the public disadvantage.

Mr. FISHER.

That the smoking of cigarettes has been proved by overwhelming testimony to be productive of serious physical and moral injury to young people; impairing health, arresting development, weakening intellectual power and thus constituting a social and national evil.

That the legislation, licensing and restricting the sale of cigarettes has not proven sufficient to prevent these evils, which will continue while the public sale of the cause of the mischief is permitted to go on.

That this House is of the opinion, for the reasons heretofore set forth, that the right and most effectual remedy for these evils is to be found in the enactment and enforcement of a law prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes; and that it is expedient to bring in a Bill at this session to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the question that I have the honour of presenting to the House to-night is a very important one. I do not think that a greater question could receive the attention and consideration of this House than that of the advisability of prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes. I may say that I have been expecting that the government themselves would deal with this question. I realize at once that it requires a government to deal with the question in an effective way. I only regret that it has been left to an humble member of the opposition to introduce this resolution and to bring the government's attention to this important question, so that we may have the matter thoroughly before us and that the country may understand fully that the government have received ample and timely warning upon this question and have, at the same time, behind them a large majority of the representatives of the people in this House, I propose to briefly review the history of this question both in this parliament and in the parliament preceding it. In 1903 the hon. member for St. Lawrence division, Montreal, (Mr. Bickerdike) introduced a resolution similar to the one I have just read. That resolution was very fully discussed. Gentlemen on the government side and many representatives on the opposition side expressed their views and while there was some difference of opinion as to the best method of reaching this evil it was declared on every hand that it was a great and growing evil and one that ought to be dealt with by the parliament of Canada. Those who wish to look into this question more fully at their leisure may turn to the debate on the resolution which will be found at page 820 of 'Hansard,' 1903. It was discussed very fully and on a division being called 103 representatives of the people voted in favour of the resolution introduced by the hon. member for St. Lawrence division, Montreal, and 48 against, giving the splendid majority of 55 in favour of the total abolition of the sale, importation and manufacture of cigarettes in Canada, there being 151 present and voting out of a representation of 214. This was a fair average vote. I take this, and I am sure the people of Canada take it as an expression of opinion of the representatives of the people in this House. Those who are particularly interested in this question thought that when that resolution had carried they would only have to wait a short time until this government would introduce a measure embodying the principles of that resolution. Following the adoption of that resolution the hon. gentleman introduced a Bill, on April 29, 1903, page 2014 of 'Hansard,' embodying the principles of the resolution which was carried by the majority to which I have referred. The government allowed that Bill to be introduced giving another indication to the people who are interested in the question that the government and opposition were unanimously in favour of the principles of the resolution. On May 18, of the same session, page 3286 'Hansard,' the hon. gentleman moved a second reading of his Bill and at that time the objection was taken in the House, that the resolution itself should have originated in the Committee of the Whole rather than it should have been introduced by a private member. In the discussion on the second reading the Speaker ruled the question out of order and the hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill withdrew it and nothing more was heard of it during the session of 1903. In the session of 1904 the then member for Huntingdon, Mr. Maclaren, moved in Committee of the Whole for leave to introduce a resolution similar to that which had been discussed the previous session. The following resolution was then moved by Mr. W. S. Maclaren of Huntingdon, adopted in Committee of the Whole, read a second time and agreed to on division: ('Hansard,' 1904, page 3978):

That it is expedient to bring in a Bill to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes.

This resolution was agreed to unanimously by the House, and those representing the different organizations who were pressing on the government the introduction of a Bill to prohibit the manufacture, importation and sale of cigarettes, of course thought that the resolution would be given effect to and that such a Bill would be enacted. On June the 2nd, 1904, 'Hansard,' page 4052, Mr. W. S. Maclaren, of Huntingdon, moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 128) to prohibit the importation, sale and manufacture of cigarettes. Mr. Maclaren was granted leave to introduce his Bill and it was read a first time unanimously. On June 14, 1904, 'Hansard,' page 4724, Mr. W. S. Maclaren moved the second reading of Bill (No. 128) to prohibit the importation, sale and manufacture of cigarettes, and the House divided on the question for the second reading and by a vote of 52 for and 28 against, the Bill was read a second time. Now as this question had received the approval of parliament some times unanimously and at other times on division, the vote being always in its favour, the people expected that the government would introduce legislation to give effect to the wish of parliament. On June the 20th, 'Hansard,' page 5129, Mr. Maclaren's Bill was considered in Committee of the Whole, and a pretty general discussion took place upon the principle of the Bill; a great many opinions were expressed, a great deal of information was placed upon 'Hansard' and the representatives of the people seemed very much interested in the success of the measure. At the close of the discussion in the committee a vote was taken on the preamble of the Bill and the preamble was carried, Yeas, 41; Nays, 32, 'Hansard,' page 5156; and the Bill was reported. As a representative of the people I thought the government would aid their supporter, Mr. Maclaren, in having the Bill passed and placed upon the statute-books so that the expressed wishes of the people through their representatives would be given effect to. But the session of 1904 closed without any further action on the part of the government. Nothing then happened with regard to it until the session of 1907, the session of last year, when I asked a question. I was of opinion that the government, having been able to give the matter due consideration, would carry out the wishes of the people and pass a Bill embodying the principles which the House of Commons had so often pronounced in favour of. On March 4 of last year, 'Hansard,' page 4055, the question and answer is reported:

Will the government at this session introduce legislation to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes as expressed by resolution of this House on April 1, 1903?

The Prime Minister answered:

The government has not come to the conclusion that they should introduce any legislation to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes as expressed by resolution of this House on April 1, 1903. But I need not tell my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) that it is quite open to him to introduce such legislation if he sees fit.

I took the note of warning given by the Prime Minister, and realizing that the government was forgetting its duty, on the 4th of March, 1907, 'Hansard,' page 4053, I introduced a resolution similar to the resolution I have the honour to introduce to-night. The matter was discussed and a large number of representatives of the people expressed themselves in favour of this resolution, and it was my intention to introduce a Bill embodying the principle of the resolution so that the people of Canada would have a legislative enactment that their representatives had so often pronounced in favour of. But that discussion was headed off, if I may use the expression, the members supporting the government talking out the resolution until six o'clock; and therefore it was impossible for me as a humble representative—not impossible for the government, of course—to ventilate this matter further in that session. But I may remind the House that my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), whom I am glad to see present giving his attention to this question, expressed himself at that time as very much in favour of the principle of the resolution. I have always had a high opinion of the hon. gentleman upon these moral questions; and so I expected after that discussion, and after he had rather chastised members for not leaving the measure over to this session, that at the opening of this session my hon. friend would have had a Bill ready and would have asked the approval of this House of legislation of the kind he had expressed himself in favour of in the session of 1907. But to my surprise nothing was found in the speech from the Throne. My hon. friend has been active in the House and out of the House in dealing with other important questions, but he has not said a word upon the cigarette question. So it was left again to myself to place among the notices of motion the resolution which I have the honour of moving to-night. During the discussion last year, my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture uttered a pretty strong condemnation of the people of Canada, at page 4074 of 'Hansard,' the hon. gentleman spoke thus:

I feel, however, that perhaps there has not been that fair effort on the part of the inferior powers in this country to accomplish the end which we might reasonably demand and expect. One speaker this afternoon referred to the influence of the home, the school and the church in this country. These are most potent influences in this land, and yet, as far as I can see, looking abroad in the land, the influence of the home, the school and the church is lessening in Canada to-day in regard to the bringing up of our youth.

Mr. FISHER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend expresses his assent to this statement again to-night. If that be true, surely that is an all-important reason why the government should see that legislation of this kind is placed upon the statute-book. My hon. friend calls upon the people of Canada to listen to the statement that the fathers and mothers of Canada are less influential with their children now, and are not able to control them as they were in years gone by. Of course, my hon. friend is not a very good judge on these points; but nevertheless I supposed that he was speaking his mind upon the question. For myself I wish to say that I differ entirely from the statement of my hon. friend, and I point to the fact that at no time in the history of Canada have the boys and the girls been able to take such important positions as they are taking to-day in every part of Canada and in every branch of life. That I think is an answer to the statement of my hon. friend. There is another point to which I wish to direct his attention: if the thoughts expressed by him to the House on March 4, 1907, are true, then it behooves this government, and my hon. friend in particular, to see to it that legislation of this kind is not neglected any longer, and I am sure that my hon. friend will not allow this session to go by without introducing a Bill for the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes in Canada.

Let me point out the rapid increase in the consumption of cigarettes in this country. During the debate of last session I pointed out that in 1896 in Canada there were manufactured 85,994,400 cigarettes and consumed 87,507,840. For the year ending the 30th June, 1906, the number consumed in Canada had increased to 277,420,850. During the nine months ending March 31, 1907, there were manufactured in Canada 266,903,760 cigarettes. A small portion of these were exported, but there were entered for consumption 266,377,710 and there were imported 9,000,000, making a total consumption of cigarettes in Canada in those nine months of 275,377,710, almost as many as there were consumed in the previous twelve months; showing that a rapid increase of consumption is going on, and I believe a large part of it is among the youth of our country, particularly boys under fifteen or sixteen years of age.

When this matter was being discussed last year there was no difference of opinion as to the evil effects of the use of cigarettes. There was some slight difference of opinion as to how the evil should be remedied. Some expressed the view that it should be remedied by the legislatures of the different provinces. In the province of Ontario, we have legislation dealing with this subject. A law was passed by the local legislature in 1892, which reads, in part, as follows:

1. Any person who either directly or indirectly sells or gives or furnishes to a minor under eighteen years of age, cigarettes, cigars or tobacco in any form, shall on summary conviction thereof before a justice of the peace be subject to a penalty of not less than $10, or more than $50, with or without costs of prosecution, or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding thirty days, or to both fine or without cost and imprisonment to the said amount and for the said term, in the discretion of the convicting magistrate. And in case of a fine, or a fine and costs being awarded, and of the same not being upon conviction forthwith paid, the justice may commit the offender to the common gaol, there to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding thirty days, unless the fine and costs are sooner paid.

2. This Act shall not apply to a sale to the minor for his parent or guardian under a written request or order of the parent or guardian.

3. A person who shall appear to the magistrate to be under eighteen years of age, shall be presumed to be under that age unless it is shown by evidence that he is in fact over that age.

Though that has been the law of the province of Ontario since 1892, as I have stated, yet, I regret to say, it does not reach the object aimed at. Somewhat similar statutes have been passed in other provinces of Canada, but, notwithstanding these laws, the evil goes on and the consumption of cigarettes is greater than at any time in its history. As my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) pointed out last year, in the main, this provincial legislation is a dead letter—it does not reach the evil at which it is aimed. Why not? I believe that the reason is that the provincial legislature has not power to prohibit the manufacture or importation of cigarettes into the province, and so long as cigarettes may be imported into the province, or manufactured within the province, it is not possible for legislation to stop, or even diminish to any great extent, the consumption of cigarettes within that province.

Mr. BRODEUR. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) would permit, I would like to ask whether any proceedings have been taken in accord with that statute—any action to enforce it ?

Mr. BLAIN. Yes. The provincial government has given power to the municipalities in Ontario to pass municipal legislation governing this matter ; and in many towns and villages in the province, with some of which I am myself familiar, legislation of this kind has been placed upon the municipal statute-book by by-law. I am quite sure that the provincial government under which this statute was passed were strongly in favour of its enforcement and, I suppose, lent their aid to that end. The great religious denominations in the province have given it their support. Almost every municipal council has had the matter up for discussion. The primary schools and colleges of the province, the reformatories, and almost every public institution have dealt with the subject. The Sabbath school, with all its vast influence in the province, has been united in the effort to enforce this legislation.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the legislation had any effect in restricting the sale?

Mr. BLAIN. The only answer I can give is to refer to the large increasing consumption of cigarettes in Canada.

Mr. CLARKE. That means an increase by all the people. Has there been an increase among the minors?

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) is suggesting that, perhaps, the men are smoking more cigarettes than before.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not know the facts. I am asking for information.

Mr. BLAIN. My own opinion is that there is an increasing consumption by the boys in the province, particularly in the cities and towns, and in the rural districts as well.

Mr. BRODEUR. Have any proceedings been taken to enforce the municipal by-laws that have been passed on this subject?

Mr. BLAIN. Yes. The municipalities, as a rule, when they have placed such legislation upon their statute-book have put the enforcement of those laws in the hands of officers. They certainly have made efforts to enforce the laws. I do not suppose that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) would suggest that any municipal council sufficiently interested in this subject to pass legislation dealing with it would fail to appoint some one to enforce that legislation. That would be merely idle on the part of the municipal council, and it would be carelessness which would not be permitted by those whom these municipal councils represent. I do not wish to minimize the efforts of the local legislatures and municipalities to put down this evil. But I repeat that, in my opinion, they are unable to cope with the evil; and, will never be able to cope with it satisfactorily until this parliament passes legislation to prohibit the manufacture, importation and sales of cigarettes, if not entirely, then at least to boys and girls under sixteen or eighteen years of age. I would not wish to press the government unduly. I have my own opinions upon this question, which are pretty well expressed by the resolution. It may be that some members of the government, and some members of this House, have a different opinion upon this question. But I contend that, with all the information before us, with the expression by the representatives of the people in this House, with the provincial enactments which have been passed, with the many petitions that have been presented to this House, we cannot but believe that the government of Canada would have a large majority of the people behind them if they were to lead in placing legislation of this kind upon the statute-book. When this matter was up for discussion last year one hon. gentleman, as reported at page 4087 of 'Hansard,' moved :

That it is the duty of the government to introduce legislation at the present session of parliament prohibiting the sale of cigarettes to and the use of cigarettes by persons under eighteen years of age.

That received some attention at the hands of the members of this House. In 'Hansard,' page 4085 during the same discussion another gentleman moved this :

That it is the duty of the government to introduce legislation at the next session of parliament prohibiting the sale of cigarettes to and the use of cigarettes by persons under sixteen years of age.

Other motions were moved during that discussion, none of which were carried, and the resolution itself was not carried.

I think I have given a sufficient history of this question to influence the members, if influence be necessary, to vote unanimously for this resolution.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend from St. Lawrence division of Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike) endorses the principle.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAIN. I hope my hon. friend will use his influence with the hon. gentlemen from his own province.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. All in favour of it.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend says they are all in favour of it. If that be true, I am quite sure it will pass this House because it will receive splendid support from this side of the House. I would suggest to my hon. friend that he take this matter a little more seriously and not be so easily influenced by the government he is supporting. He is a strong representative of the people. I have heard him on the floor of the House upon other important questions, even going so far as to condemn the government and the party to which he belongs.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Oh, no.

Mr. BLAIN. I think so, on the transportation question. If he had used the strong language he at that time used towards this government upon this great moral question no doubt his voice would be heard, the government would listen to my hon. friend as they would not, of course, listen to me in the presentation of his case.

I wish to quote an extract from 'Le Canada' of Monday, January 22, 1907, headed: 'Let Us Save Our Children.'

Ask, in our city, of the directors of our great public schools (I can cite names and testimonials if wanted) and all will say that the number of young smokers increases daily, that it can be proven by the state of stupor and brutishness that prevails amongst those who are addicted to this dangerous pastime.

A mother, upon this subject, was relating that her son who was twelve years of age was entirely unhappy and utterly incapable of applying himself to anything if he were prevented from purchasing cigarettes, and that he fell into a fuddled state as soon as he would smoke a few.

I wish to quote from a gentleman whom I am informed by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has had a very wide experience in the province of Quebec, His Honour Judge Choquette, to whom I find this reference:

Judge Choquette, before whom appear so many young offenders, interviewed upon this subject, declared that all the children that he was obliged to condemn to gaol or the reformatory school had their fingers stained by the smoking of so many cigarettes.

Owing to Judge Choquette's wide experience in the city of Montreal, I regard his testimony as very important and I am sure it will be listened to by this House with a great deal of attention.

I could, of course, quote as was done when this matter was up last year and on other occasions, a great many testimonials from representative people in Canada, the United States and Great Britain, but at this stage of the discussion this in my opinion would be altogether superfluous. The great fundamental principle for which we have been fighting has been conceded by the people of Canada and by their representatives in this House. Therefore it would be idle for me to support what I have said by the testimony of representative people who have had great experience in connection with this great moral question. I may, however, say that when the Provincial Sabbath School Association, representing the thousands of children of every denomination in the Sabbath schools of the province of Ontario, met in Brampton in 1907, they unanimously passed a resolution in favour of the principle of this resolution. If necessary, I could quote those who represent us in connection with the Boys' Reformatory and the opinions of the leading men of every religious denomination of Canada. Indeed I could quote if necessary, the opinions of some hon. members of the government when they were discussing this question—not very seriously in my opinion, yet I suppose their opinions were expressed honestly and were really the opinions of hon. gentlemen who are in the government at the present time.

Mr. CLARKE. Could my hon. friend tell what section of the Municipal Act relates to it?

Mr. BLAIN. Section 52 of the statutes of Ontario for 1892.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman said there was something also in the Municipal Act?

Mr. BLAIN. No, my hon. friend misunderstood me. What I said was that powers were given to the municipal councils to deal with this question.

Mr. CLARKE. Where is that?

Mr. BLAIN. I have not it under my hand, but my hon. friend knows that to be the case.

Mr. CLARKE. I cannot locate it.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend is conversant with the fact.

Mr. BRODEUR. The statute of 1892 does not refer to that.

Mr. BLAIN. No. I was pointing out that many of the municipal councils of towns and villages in the province of Ontario have adopted by-laws embodying the principles of the statute of Ontario of 1892, going as far as it is possible for them to go, realizing of course that they have no power to prohibit the importation and manufacture of cigarettes within that province.

Mr. CONMEE. Does the hon. member contend that the province has no power to prohibit the sale? And if a province can prohibit the sale, would not that meet the point ?

Mr. BLAIN. What I said was that the provincial governments had power to restrict the sale of cigarettes within the province, but I said further that the provincial governments had no power to prohibit the importation or manufacture within the province. My hon. friend will not disagree with that.

Mr. CONMEE. I understood the hon. member to make that statement, but I wanted to learn if he had made the further statement that the provincial governments had not power to prohibit. I think they have full power to prohibit the sale.

Mr. BLAIN. I did not make any reference to that, I am rather inviting my hon. friend's attention to the resolution, which I am sure will receive his support. I do not wish to continue my remarks further, except to invite the co-operation of the government and representatives on both sides of the House in this important matter. I am pleading particularly for the boys of Canada. It is agreed on every hand that the smoking of cigarettes is very harmful to boys. It arrests the development of both mind and body. Some of the larger manufacturing institutions in the United States, when advertising for boys to work in their establishments, mention in the advertisement that no boys who smoke cigarettes need apply. Indeed I know myself that there are many large institutions in Canada where, when boys make application for employment, one of the first questions asked them is : Do you use cigarettes? If they answer that they do use cigarettes, they are rejected, because the manufacturers desire to employ only those boys who do not use cigarettes. Therefore at the present time this parliament is legislating against the welfare of our boys so long as we allow this enormous sale, this enormous importation and this enormous manufacture of cigarettes. I invite the attention of the government to this matter. It will not do for my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) to say that at an earlier part of this session a deputation waited upon the government suggesting that possibly greater powers might be given to provincial governments to deal with this question. That has been discussed years ago, and it is too late to bring up the proposition again. For my part I would rather see a government boldly face an issue like this, than try to shoulder it off on the provincial legislatures. The government know full well that the legislatures have no power to deal with this question in an effective manner. The government will not satisfy the people by saying that they have discussed this question with the representatives of these organizations, and that they have decided now, or at some future day, to give more power to the legislatures to enable them to deal with this question. The people of Canada will not be satisfied with this answer. The people of Canada are knocking at the doors of this parliament, and they expect to get justice at the hands of this government, a government that talked so much about moral reform when its members were in opposition, particularly the Minister of Agriculture, (Mr. Fisher) who was prominent in advocating the prohibition of the liquor traffic, and who took so much interest in great moral questions generally. The people of Canada desire to see a government carry out the reforms they advocated when in opposition. I feel I have discharged my duty, and I hope the government will discharge theirs by taking this question up and dealing with it effectively. While I have no authority to make any promise, I can safely say, knowing the opinions of my hon. friends on this side of the House, that the government will receive a very strong support on this side if they conclude to deal with this question ; indeed I think I will venture to say that a large majority of the representatives on this side of the House will support a Bill, if the government will bring one down, to prohibit the manufacture, importation and sale of cigarettes throughout Canada.

Mr. PETER ELSON (East Middlesex). I feel that the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) deserves a great deal of credit for introducing this motion; and I sincerely hope the House will accept it, and that the government will carry it into effect. The motion explains itself. It is entirely true, as the motion states,—

> That the smoking of cigarettes has been proved by overwhelming testimony to be productive of serious physical and moral injury to young people; impairing health, arresting development, weakening intellectual power, and thus constituting a social and national evil.

Now, Sir, that statement is true, and I think every hon. gentleman in this House will concur in it. It is certainly the duty of the government to legislate for the benefit of the people in every way they can, and it seems to me they can do nothing more useful than to remove the temptation from the rising generation. What more valuable asset has Canada than our growing boys? And how important it is that we should so legislate as to allow them freely to develop their physical and intellectual powers, and grow up healthy and moral citizens. It is well known that boys who drift into the use of cigarettes are apt, as this motion says, to dwindle physically and intellectually. The mover of this motion has referred to the position of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) last year. I remember distinctly, when a motion similar to this was being discussed that the Minister of Agriculture said: Let us lay it over until next session of parliament—which of course is the present session. He felt then very much inclined to introduce a Bill that would have the desired effect. Now I have no doubt that the Minister of Agriculture is of the same mind yet, and no doubt he will introduce a Bill to give effect to the recommendations in this resolution. We believe that the only way to remove the temptation from these boys is to prevent the manufacure, importation and sale of cigarettes. Therefore, without occupying the time of the House further, I have great pleasure in seconding the motion.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.). Mr. Speaker, I desire to join with the mover and seconder of this resolution in expressing my entire sympathy with the object that it is designed to accomplish. I listened with a great deal of pleasure to both speakers and especially to the few pithy words which have been uttered by my hon. friend in front of Mr. (Mr. Elson). As a rule I do not advocate the curtailment of the liberty of the subject, but there are instances where the liberty of the subject is curtailed. While we may not be of one mind with regard to curtailing the liberty of the subject we must certainly agree that it is time to take another step in regard to the protection of minors. There are certain drugs on the druggists' shelves which may not be obtained except under certain restrictions because these drugs are injurious and these restrictions are placed against the full grown subject as well as the minor. I do not know of anything—and I have read medical opinions upon it gathered from one end of this country to the other—that is more injurious to young people than the smoking of cigarettes. We have had societies of men and women all over this country which have the best interests of our young people at heart and which have given this question serious consideration. They all agree as to the pernicious effects of cigarette smoking. The medical fraternity agree upon the question. We have, in my province, the League of the Cross both pledged in regard to cigarette smoking and the consumption of liquor, and there is the C.M.B.A. in regard to liquor. There are temperance societies all over the country. However, we see that this government have not come to their support in any tangible way although those societies are working in the best interest of the rising generation. I am not going to make a speech, but I simply wish to place on record my entire sympathy with the resolution. I do not think that any one who has given the subject the least attention can come to any other conclusion than that at which I have arrived in regard to this question. I am sure that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) who has done such great work for the promotion of temperance will now take the arena and record his vote in favour of this resolution. Cigarette smoking, in my opinion and in the opinion of others, has done much to undermine the health of young people, both boys and girls. I think it is most lamentable. It is bad enough to see boys smoking cigarettes, but when we see young girls indulging in this habit, when cigarette making is growing and becoming fashionable in the upper circles, I think it is time that we should do something and I am sure that it has been well said that the Dominion government have the remedy in their own hands. Let them now show that they are just as sincere in their desire to promote the welfare of the young and rising generation as they were previous to 1896. If they will, I for one will say that there is one part of their policy that I approve of if they will only carry it out. I only got up to say a few words and to express my sympathy with the resolution.

Mr. JOHN BARR (Dufferin). Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that we would have heard from the government a statement of their policy on this all important question, and I was surprised that after three hon. members on this side of the House had expressed their opinion we did not hear from the other side in regard to this question. Last session the subject came up and on that occasion we had an expression from the government benches that this was a question which they were considering, that it was a question that they considered of the utmost importance and one which, whilst they did not desire to legislate in a hurried way, would have then consideration and that in the future they would be prepared to take it up and would do so, as I understood, during the present parliament. We have reason to suspect that this is probably the last session of this parliament and that the members of the House must go before their constituents before another parliament is assembled and give an account of their stewardship. That being the case, surely it is the duty of the government and of the representatives of the people in this House to declare themselves upon this question before they go back to their constituents. This has been a burning question during the last decade. During the last ten years I venture to say there is no question that has attracted the attention of the free and independent electors to a greater extent than this question has. Yet during all these years the government have failed on every occasion to pronounce themselves upon it. They have told us that it was a burning question. They have admitted that this is a question of vast importance to the electors of this country and to the young and rising generation, and yet at the close of this parliament, as we believe, they have declined so far to declare their policy upon this all absorbing question. I say that for the last ten years it has been a burning question and during the present parliament it has been brought prominently to the attention of the people. I cannot speak authoritatively as to the other provinces, although I know that the subject has been much discussed in the other provinces, but in so far as the province of Ontario is concerned I venture to say that there is no representative in this House or defeated candidate in that province who was not approached on that question and who, if he was not afraid to give his opinion, did not do so. I venture to say that there was not one that was not asked how he stood upon this question, and I also venture to say that nine out of ten of the candidates placed before the people expressed themselves as being in favour of this proposition and as being prepared to support a law that would reduce the terrible evil that we have here in connection with the smoking of cigarettes. I think that my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) deserves the thanks not only of this House but of the Dominion of Canada for persistently bringing this question up session after session. It has been proved beyond a doubt by the figures that he has given that in so far as cigarette smoking is concerned it is largely on the increase and I am sorry, on examining these figures, to find that it is increasing much more rapidly than the increase in the population of the Dominion. There can be little doubt that the evil is increasing year by year. It is an evil which we must strenuously combat in the near future. Like all other moral defects, this question of cigarette smoking has attracted the attention of the ladies of this fair country and they have time and again petitioned parliament to preserve our youth from its ill effects. I believe that these ladies feel that great though be the evil of intemperance greater still is the evil of cigarette smoking.

Mr. MILLER. What about cigars?

Mr. BARR. Cigars come next. Throughout the length and breadth of the land the churches and the different other organizations, whose object is to promote the welfare of the people, have endeavoured to cope with this evil of cigarette smoking. The legislature of Ontario has done all in its power to stop this evil, which is spreading day after day and month after month. In 1902 I was in the legislature when they passed the anti-cigarette law, and although it undoubtedly has accomplished a great deal of good, still the smoking of cigarettes has increased. The municipalities were given power to take measures to prevent the use of cigarettes, and they have been endeavouring to overcome the evil as far as possible. Medical health officers have been instructed to stamp it out, and the caretakers of the public schools have been asked to report whenever they detect cigarette smoking amongst the pupils. But all these measures have proved futile so long as cigarettes are imported and manufactured and exposed for sale so generally as they are. Cigarette smoking, whilst it may not have such ill effects on older people, it undoubtedly is most injurious to the youth of our country. In the common schools it is found that nine-tenths of those who lag behind are cigarette smokers, and many of these are brilliant youths who otherwise would be ahead in their classes. In our high schools it is even worse, and the boys who make the failures there are most certainly those who are addicted to the use of cigarettes. Careful examination in the colleges has shown that 99 per cent of those who fail year after year in their examinations are cigarette smokers. We know that the nicotine poison affects the nerves, weakens the brain and undermines the whole system, so that the young people who indulge in the pernicious habit often become moral and physical wrecks. The time has come when this government should take the question seriously into consideration and stamp out the evil. It is utterly impossible for the provincial government to succeed without the assistance of the federal government, for so long as cigarettes are imported and manufactured the boys will get hold of them. We are paying over $1,000,000 a year to bring immigrants to this country, many of whom have proven failures, and is it not well known that we should take care of the young and rising generation of our native land, who are the real wealth of the country? We were told by the government last year that they would give this matter due consideration, and as this is probably the last session of this parliament, I trust the government will at once take action.

Mr. WILLIAM P. TELFORD (North Grey). In discussing a question of this kind it is perhaps too much to expect that the members of this House would be guided by the principle laid down by St. Paul:

> If meat make my brother to offend I will eat no meat while the world standeth.

If that principle were adopted, it would settle, not only this question, but a great many moral questions. But that is perhaps too high a standard for ordinary mortals such as we are to adopt. It is very evident from the delicate compliments we pay one another across the floor of this House that we are not by any means an assembly of saints. Still I think we could go this far in adopting the principle; we can say to the man who smokes cigarettes: We will allow you to make your own, but we will prevent you from manufacturing cigarettes and selling them to others, and we will prevent any person from selling cigarettes to you or selling them to any other person in this country. There is no great hardship in adopting a principle of this kind, for if a cigarette smoker does not wish to make his own cigarettes, he has tobacco, cigars and snuff, in all of which there is the nicotine which his soul craves, and therefore there is no hardship about it.

I do not believe that any reasonable man who gives the subject one moment's careful consideration, even if he smokes cigarettes himself, would object to make this small sacrifice, if it is a sacrifice at all, in view of the fact that this habit of cigarette smoking is demoralizing and degrading a great many of the boys of this country. There is scarcely a town or city in Canada where you will not find boys, the sons of respectable parents, who have dwarfed their bodies, ruined their intellects and damaged their moral perceptions to such an extent that they do not know the difference between right and wrong, and consequently many of them have had to be sent to reformatories. The medical profession almost to a man affirm the same thing with regard to this insidious habit; and I believe a majority of the members of this House will admit that it is an unmitigated curse to the boys of this country without a single redeeming feature. Therefore something ought to be done, more than has been done in the past, to lessen this growing evil. I do not believe that any country on the face of the globe produces finer animals than Canada. Although our climate is severe, it is bracing and healthy. But we do not depend wholly on the climate to give us this result. We have adopted strong regulations in order to preserve the health of animals and we have adopted most drastic measures for stamping out disease when it has made its appearance. And surely, when we do so much for animals, we should do as much for the boys of this country. They are the most valuable asset we possess. In a few years they will be the men to take charge of the future of this great country, and if they are not sound in body and mind, what will they make of it? Surely it ought to be the object of every well-wisher of his kind, the object especially of every member of this House, to do all he possibly can to leave this splendid heritage in the hands of capable men, who will make the most of the unrivalled and inexhaustible resources of this country and place Canada at the head of the nations of the earth. We know that material wealth alone will not effect this result. It was not poverty that caused the downfall of Rome or Greece or Babylon; it was luxury, effeminacy and debauchery. A few centuries ago Spain stood at the head of the nations of the earth, with greater possessions than any other country in Europe; but although she had great wealth and possessions, luxury, debauchery and degeneracy have reduced her to the ghost of her former self.

A high authority, which I generally regard as an end of all controversy, has recommended a good spanking as the proper remedy for boys who indulge in cigarette smoking. I believe in a good spanking for certain kinds of bad behaviour among boys. I have had experience of that remedy myself, and I know its beneficial effects. I know of no remedy so effectual in correcting bad conduct in boys, such as imprudence, as that of a good spanking, and I sometimes think that the education of some of the members of this House in that respect has been neglected. But when you consider that nine-tenths of the fathers of the boys in this country are smokers themselves, of what benefit would a spanking from one of these fathers be to his boy? I have discovered in my experience that if a father or a teacher spanks a boy for a vice to which he himself is addicted, he produces two results. The boy will not repeat the offence in his father's or teacher's presence, but will do it behind his back, and he goes into training for a sneek. It has a most damaging effect upon a boys' character to do in private what he will not do before his superior. It has also this effect, that the boy looks upon his father or his teacher as a hypocrite. Boys are like young animals—they have to be broken in; but they are more than animals—they have reason; and they have grave suspicions of the father or the teacher who tells them, you must do as I tell you on pain of punishment, but you are not to follow my example. Now, that is not the way to train boys, if you expect to make good boys of them; and that is the reason that whipping or any kind of punishment by such a father or teacher would be of no earthly use to break a boy off the habit of cigarette smoking; there must be also the power of example. I hope the government will devise something to take the place of the proposal made in this resolution, if they are not satisfied to take it as a whole.

Mr. H. H. MILLER (South Grey). Mr. Speaker, as far as the use of tobacco generally is concerned, I think I am not a fanatic. While I do not use tobacco myself, because I prefer not to do so, yet I realize that there are many men, who are just as wise and as moral as I am, who do use tobacco, and with a great deal of apparent pleasure and comfort to themselves. I remember reading a lecture, either by Bill Nye or Bod Burdette, I forget which, to young men on the use of tobacco. The humorist was very much opposed to the use of tobacco, but he said: Young man, I will not argue with you, as you have sometimes been argued with, that if you will abandon the use of tobacco, if you will refrain from using the two cigars a day which cost you a nickel or a dime apiece, and put the money out at interest, after a term of years it will amount to a considerable sum of money; I will not use that argument, because while I am opposed to your using tobacco, I would sooner see you become a confirmed user of tobacco than a confirmed miser. I quite agree with that: I consider that there are greater evils than the use of tobacco in a general way. I rather like to see an elderly man indulging in his pipe and taking from it the comfort he appears to receive. But it does appear to me that some special evil accompanies the use of the cigarette. I have sometimes wondered what peculiarity there is in the use of tobacco in the form of a cigarette that produces results worse than those that come from the use of tobacco in other forms. That there is some peculiar evil attending the use of cigarettes was impressed upon me very forcibly by the case of a young man approaching the age of twenty whom I knew in my own town. The constant use of the cigarette had made him a physical wreck and mentally an imbecile. He was physically unfitted for performing a day's manual labour and was in every respect a wreck. I decided that while I do not know what the peculiar evil attending the use of cigarettes is, the evil result as exhibited in that young man was something far beyond what would be induced by the use of the pipe or cigar.

I remember some years ago talking to a young man of 25 or 26 years of age, who was himself a user of the cigarette and who was smoking a cigarette as he talked to me. I asked him his opinion as to the effect of the use of the cigarette. He said that it was injurious to the health, and I said: Why do you think it is more injurious than the pipe or the cigar? He said that in his opinion this was due to the peculiar manner of inhaling the cigarette smoke.

In conversation with some ladies of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, a few months ago, I asked them to be kind enough to give me some literature upon the subject in order that I might have an opportunity of reading it. They left me a quantity of literature, some of which I would not make use of because it gave the opinions of authorities whose names were not given, and to such opinions I would not attach any importance. However, amongst this literature were the opinions of persons to whose judgment I should think considerable weight should be given by any person desiring to form an unprejudiced and unbiased opinion and to arrive at a proper conclusion.

I shall take the liberty of reading two or three short extracts in order to give to the House the opinions of men to whose judgment they will attach weight; I shall quote particularly the opinions of men in the medical profession. The first is the opinion of Isaac Wood, M.D., of Kingston, Ont., who said:

I have carefully studied the effects of tobacco and its alkaloids upon the human system, and am convinced that when used by the young, especially in the form of cigarettes, it delays and limits the developments of the great nerve centres and leads to serious impairments of the physical and mental powers.

Other medical opinions are thus given:

W. O. Lambly, M.D., Cookshire, province of Quebec.—The effect of cigarette smoking on the young and undeveloped system is certainly most injurious, not only affecting the mucous membranes of the nose, throat and lungs, but also having its most injurious effect on the nerve centres.

James Stuart, M.D., Prescott, Ontario.—There are not two sides to this subject. Cigarette smoking is a pernicious habit, injurious to body, mind and soul.

C. F. McPherson, M.D., C.M., Prescott, Ontario.—I regard cigarette smoking as the worst form of the tobacco habit, and especially destructive to the young.

Sir William Hingston, M.D., of Montreal, on being asked his opinion, said: To youth generally, hurtful, sometimes disastrous, never beneficial.' When asked in what way or on what organs, replied, 'The digestive, nervous and circulatory chiefly.'

I wish to quote also the opinions of some educationists as given in this literature:

F. L. Mitchell, M.A., Public School Inspector, Lanark county, Perth, Ontario.—The cigarette is the bane of our youth, and has, to my knowledge, done immense evil by sapping the vitality of our boys, beclouding their minds and making them totally incapable of exercising their natural energy.

S. P. Wells, M.A., Principal Model School, Guelph.—I cannot too strongly condemn the use by the young of the cigarette, or, in fact, tobacco in any form. It weakens the appetite, causes headache, and weakens the body, giving a peculiarly sallow look to the countenance—it is a great foe to digestion, and predisposes to mental as well as bodily disease.

I attach particular weight to the figures cited by Hon. George Torrence, formerly superintendent of the Illinois State Reformatory, who says:

Of two hundred and seventy-eight boys between the ages of ten and fifteen in the Illinois State Reformatory, when the investigation was made in 1899, ninety-two per cent were found in the habit of smoking cigarettes at the time they were committed. Even more astonishing is the fact that eighty-five per cent had become so addicted to their use as to be classed at the time as 'cigarette fiends.'

Speaking of the opinions of medical men, I find by reference to a newspaper published in my own town that a short time ago one of the medical practitioners of that town, an able physician, addressed the pupils of the public school on the subject of cigarette smoking. I shall quote this article, which is as follows :—

At the request of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, Dr. Taylor gave a very instructive address to the boys of the public school, Hanover, on Friday afternoon last. The subject was 'The Cigarette, its composition, and the evil effects resulting from its use.' A few members of the union also availed themselves of the privilege of hearing this address. By permission of the principal, the boys from the higher departments of the school were congregated in one room to the number of about 75. After listening to the description of the material which enters into the make-up of the cheap cigarette particularly, surely no boy who prizes manliness and cleanliness will want to defile his body and weaken his intellect by indulging in this degrading practice.

What I wish to call attention to is not so much the doctor's opinion as the facts that he states in giving his opinion. The report continues :

The cheap cigarette manufactured from the stumps of old cigars gathered from the streets and sweepings of hotel floors and then handled in the dirty hands of hundreds of workmen and boys are then wrapped in paper and then sealed with saliva from their mouths. These are flooding our Canadian markets in millions to-day. Even the machine-made cigarette, which is at least more cleanly, contains four different kinds of poisons besides narcotic poison in the tobacco itself, the innocent looking wrapper being prepared in a solution of poisons to make it attractive to the taste and the use of which creates a constant desire for more.

The doctor explained the effects of the cigarette on the heart, debilitating its action, dulling the eye causing diseases of various kinds, often leading to insanity and death. The doctor received from the boys a hearty clapping of the hands as a vote of thanks for his painstaking address.—'Hanover Post.'

I think, as the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Telford) has said, that, in this country of wonderful resources, our greatest asset is our Canadian boys and girls. And if I speak about our girls, let me point out to the members of this House that, in Great Britain and the United States, smoking is becoming altogether too common among the ladies. I do not think any of us would desire to see Canadian ladies addicted to the habit of smoking. Nor do I think there is any danger that Canadian young ladies and girls will acquire the habit of smoking by the use of either the pipe or the cigar; if our young ladies and girls do learn to smoke, it will be by the use of the cigarette. I think that, beyond any manner of doubt, cigarette smoking has done and is doing a great deal of harm to young men and boys of Canada, as witness the testimony of physicians, teachers, keepers and superintendents of reformatories and men of all classes who come into intimate contact with the youth of our country. Now, as I have said, if this were a resolution to do away with smoking if it were a resolution tyrannically to cut out the use of tobacco in all forms and deny to men the enjoyment they now receive from the use of tobacco in cigar or pipe, I would oppose it as being unreasonable and uncalled for by the circumstances existing. But, as we are all patriots, I trust, and as we desire to see Canadian men able to hold their own with the men of any other nation and even to surpass in every way possible, I think we shall be unselfish enough, while we are permitted the use of pipe or cigar, to abandon willingly and unselfishly the use of the cigarette, in order to prevent evil that may come to our youth, and to our ladies if there is danger in that direction, and that we will not object to the passing of any law that this government or this parliament in its wisdom sees fit to pass for the protection of its people.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT (Muskoka). It is not my intention to speak at any length, I simply rise to express my hearty sympathy with the resolution of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain). I think we need not discuss the evil effects of cigarette smoking. The fact that its effects are evil is admitted by all the members of this House. As a rule, I am not much in favour of attempting to cure all the evils of the body politic by means of legislation, but, inasmuch as, in this case, the undesirable habit aimed at gets in its deadly work at a period when the victim is a mere child, before he has arrived at years of maturity and discretion, I think there is every reason why the protection which legislation of this parliament can afford should be extended. The hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Telford) has discussed the efficacy of spanking in this connection. I heartily agree with him as to the inadvisability of attempting that course of procedure. There is not much use in spanking a boy for following his father's example. If any spanking is to be done, I should advise that we tackle the old man. If we could induce the grown-up people of this country to quit smoking, this evil would die out very speedily, because it arises simply from the boy trying to be a man before he has arrived at years of maturity. Now, I think that, everything considered, the government would be justified in introducing legislation designed to do away with this very great evil. I may point out that we have not yet realized the evil effect of cigarette smoking. Probably there is not a man of middle age in this House who was addicted, in his earlier years, to this practice. But in ten or fifteen years from now, this evil will be more patent in the faces of the adult population than it is to-day. It is pitiful to see these mere children with their pallid faces and wan looks as you meet them on the street from time to time. I believe an effort should be made to save them from their folly. I would be prepared to give my hearty endorsation to any move that the government may make designed to do away with, or lessen to some appreciable extent, the evil effects of cigarette smoking. It was pointed out, I think by the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller), that probably some of the evil effects of this habit come not so much from the tobacco, as from the wrapper in which the tobacco is filled. I have frequently heard it stated that this paper is dipped in a solution of which a very dangerous drug forms an important part, and that the evil effect of cigarette smoking is, to some extent, attributable to this. I have also heard it stated that the method used by some of the largest manufacturers in this country for the production of certain kinds of tobacco includes a process of steeping in a solution of the same or a similar drug which has the effect of creating a great appetite in the user of that form of tobacco. I have in mind one particular kind of tobacco sold in this country in the preparation of which, many of those engaged in the tobacco trade distinctly state, a very deadly drug is used. If that be the case, I think there are probably other ways in which we might legislate which would materially reduce the evil resulting from the use of tobacco in this country. At any rate it will not be amiss to draw the attention of the government to this matter. If they do not see their way to prohibit the manufacture, importation and sale of cigarettes, they might, at least, direct attention to the stamping out of the use of harmful drugs in the manufacture of these articles.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I see very plainly that now, as always, this is not a party question and should not be treated from a party standpoint. No doubt there are those on both sides of the House, with different party affiliations, who view the cigarette evil with the greatest abhorrence, and there may be on both sides those who are not prepared to go so far as some of us would like to go in the way of repressive measures. I accept the compliments of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) extended to me, I hope, in all sincerity, with regard to this matter, and I will say at once that I am heartily in sympathy with anything in the way of legislation or education which may minimize the harm which, I have no doubt, cigarette smoking is doing in this Dominion of ours. I note that my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) seemed to lay upon the government the duty of taking hold of this question. The hon. gentleman last session introduced a resolution, I think in exactly the same words as the one now before the House. As my hon. friend stated, at the late date in the session when he introduced that resolution, I took it upon myself to point out that it was practically impossible for us to discuss and thrash it out thoroughly, and to put a law upon the statute-book during that session. My hon. friend is proceeding earlier this session, and I am glad he has made so much progress as that. But I venture to suggest that it was quite as competent for him as for myself to introduce a Bill.

Mr. BLAIN. I have not as much influence.

Mr. FISHER. That is a compliment that my hon. friend gave a few minutes ago. He pointed ou that I was no doubt engaged in very important work. I am and have been. My hon. friend has not been so busily engaged as I have, he is not weighed down with the charge of so many important public interests as I have been; and yet he is just as competent to introduce a Bill on this matter as I am. He could have taken a step in advance, and proceeded by resolution, and brought this matter up in concrete form so as to put a law upon the statute-book, had he chosen to do so. I am not complaining that he has not done so; he has taken his own course, as he is at liberty to do. But I do not think it lies in his mouth to cast reproaches upon me, or upon any other member of the government or of the House, for not doing what he himself has failed to do. It is true that in the session, I think of 1903, my hon. friend from St. Lawrence division, Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike), did move a Bill. But he did not take the right course of procedure. He should have proceeded first by resolution, and then introduced a Bill founded upon it, which then could have been adopted by the House. But exception was taken to his form of procedure, and the Speaker ruled against my hon. friend. With that example and that warning before him, my hon. friend from Peel could have proceeded by resolution in the proper form and introduced a Bill founded upon it, which could have passed the House if the majority had supported it.

Mr. BLAIN. That was done by the hon. gentleman representing the county of Huntingdon in the following session of 1904.

Mr. FISHER. And what was the result?

Mr. BLAIN. The result was that the government did not assist him to place it upon the statute-book.

Mr. FISHER. I am not saying anything about the action of the government; my hon. friend might be successful without the assistance of the government. He shakes his head; sometimes he does not think the government has as much influence as he now credits it with. But my hon. friend is quite right in saying that so far no effective step has been taken by this parliament. I regret that, I say it frankly, speaking for myself alone, not for the government; the government does not take any position upon this question to-day. So far as I am personally concerned, I would go as far as my hon. friend. Other members of the House, perhaps other members of the government, would not go so far. It is a question on which there is a difference of opinion on both sides of the House, and I cannot force my opinion on my colleagues or on my fellow-members.

My hon. friend also quoted me as having reproached the home, the school and the pulpit, for not having done their full duty in this respect. I do not think the hon. gentleman fairly quoted what I said, or meant to say. What I said, and what I say now, is that the home, the school and the pulpit have not been successful in accomplishing what I would like to see them accomplish. My hon. friend seems to think that it is the duty of the government to undertake to do what the home, the shcool and the pulpit have failed to do. Now, the government can only do what the people will support them in doing; and if the home, the school and the pulpit have failed to induce the fathers and mothers in Canada to exercise their influence to restrict the smoking of cigarettes, I fear the government will not be able to succeed, and I doubt even if parliament can succeed. This is to a certain extent a moral question, I grant; but it is a question of habits, a question of practices, and I fear that law can hardly overcome the tendencies to bad habits and bad practices. My hon. friend referred to the provincial Act of Ontario, assented to in 1892, nineteen years ago. That Act says distinctly:

> Any person who, either directly or indirectly, sells, or gives or furnishes to a minor under eighteen years of age, cigarettes, cigars or tobacco in any form, shall be convicted.

Now, that that law has been on the statute-book of Ontario for sixteen years, and yet during all that time, my hon. friend says himself, the cigarette smoking evil has increased terribly in the province of Ontario. Now, I grant that that Act does not go as far as an Act of this parliament might go; at the same time, it does go very far. My hon. friend says that it has been adopted by a number of municipalities by way of municipal by-law, and he says that of course they would have appointed an officer specially to enforce it. I do not know whether that has been done. I am inclined to think that my hon. friend exaggerates the action of the municipal bodies. He shakes his head; I must accept his judgment, because he is more familiar with the province of Ontario than I am. Now, I would invite him, or somebody else who is familiar with the province of Ontario, to state whether they are aware that a large number of actions and prosecutions have been taken out under that statute and been successfully carried out. There are a number of lawyers in this House representing Ontario constituencies, and I would like any one of them to get up and say whether he knows any cases where that statute has been enforced, if there have been prosecutions against people who sell cigarettes, cigars and tobacco in the province of Ontario, prosecutions to any appreciable extent. I do not believe there have been, but of course, as I say, I am not very familiar with that province. If there had been prosecutions, the people of Ontario who are agitating against cigarettes would have been able to point to action in that province, and would have been able to show that they were going as far as the law allowed them to go.

Mr. MILLER. I think the law in Ontario is practically a dead letter.

Mr. FISHER. Well, that has been my own idea but I am not prepared to give an opinion, because I am not very familiar with the province of Ontario. But, I do think that the Women's Christian Temperance Union and other organized bodies in Ontario who are fighting to put down the cigarette evil, if they had been making use of this law would, in their meetings and publications in regard to it, have given us a statement that this law has been effective as far as it goes. I have not seen anything of the kind in their publications. I have not seen any reference to its enforcement in the report of their meetings, their gatherings and their speeches and therefore I am disposed to think that the law has not been effective. This leads me to say again what I said a few minutes ago that the regulation of the habits of the people by law is very difficult indeed and if it is not supported will lead to no great success. Personally I am willing to pass the statute; personally I think that it is better to have a good law, even if it is not altogether effective and try and get the people to put it into force, than to have no law at all, but I know a great many men who do not take that view. I know eminent men, I know a great many men in the legal profession who say that it is worse in any community to have a law which is a dead letter than to have no law at all. I have never, myself, taken that view. I think that the burden of the responsibility rests upon the legislature and that it is their duty at all events to do their duty. But, I venture to think that if they have not behind them the full and strong feeling of the people the law will be a dead letter and will be ineffective, and I am not prepared under such circumstances to advocate the passing of such a law. The figures which have been given by one or two hon. gentlemen to-night are appalling. I am not going to discuss the question of the use of tobacco or the use of cigarettes. I personally have never used tobacco. I have not done so in the first place, because I think it is injurious, and in the second place because I do not like it—two very sufficient reasons, I think, and I rather think that these people who do like it have very bad taste and that they are foolish to use it, but they are grown men and are at liberty to use it as long as the law allows them to. It may be that I am not a good judge. One hon. gentleman said that I am not a good judge in regard to the home and the family because I am an old bachelor. But, I would say to my hon. friend that the lookers on see most of the game and perhaps I can see more even than the parents of the children because my eyes are not so prejudiced as the eyes of the parents are.

Mr. BLAIN. I was referring more to the experience of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FISHER. I do believe most emphatically what I have already said that the use of cigarettes amongst our youth to-day is doing to the individual who uses them more harm than drink. I do not say that the use of cigarettes is as much an evil in the country as the immoderate use of drink because a person who drinks immoderately becomes irresponsible and brings evil upon his family, his friends and the community perhaps to a greater extent than a person who uses tobacco moderately, but I do believe that a lad who uses cigarettes to any considerable extent is doing more to stunt his own growth and to prevent his development morally, mentally and physically than does a person who uses a very considerable amount of liquor in his youth. Physiologically and from my own observation I think that is true. It was only the other day that I was reading an article in a publication on this question of cigarette smoking in which a long list was given of corporations and employers of labour who had distinctly declared that they would not employ any youth who used cigarettes. That is pretty good evidence from the business man's standpoint of the evil of the habit. When it comes to the point that large employers of labour, whether they be private corporations or individuals, find the evil so great that they say they will not employ a youth or young man who uses cigarettes, it is evident that the case has gone very far and that the evil is terrible. These people do not move in this way unless they are convinced. They do not from any fad, or any idea take this ground, but from a purely business standpoint and for the benefit of the corporation or the work which they are doing they say they cannot afford to employ a youth or a lad who uses cigarettes. It is evidence of what I said a few minutes ago that the use of them to any considerable extent at all dwarfs the intellect and prevents young men from growing up into good citizens. I think therefore that it would be a very good thing indeed to do if we could stop it and I am prepared myself to advocate and support any motion in regard to the matter which will stop the use of cigarettes in this country. I do not wish to say anything more. The question came up last session and was talked out, I am sure, without any design or desire to do so but in consequence of the late period of the session. I think it would be much more effective for some member to move in the way of a resolution and by the introduction of an effective Bill rather than in a general resolution of this kind and I would be glad if the hon. member for Peel would take that step. Personally I am prepared to support any such Bill.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, I am glad that at last one member of the government has the moral courage to give expression to his views upon this important question, but I must take exception to the conclusion which he reaches in regard to it. In the first place, he asks; Why does not a private member introduce this Bill ? Now, there are various reasons why a private member could not properly introduce such a Bill. In the first place, it is a Bill that affects the revenue; therefore properly speaking, it can only be introduced by a member of the government.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, I say that the usual custom of parliament is that the government is responsible for what affects the revenue or expenditure of public money.

Mr. FISHER. There is absolutely no rule of parliament to prevent any member from introducing such a Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. Introducing, but the government always controls money Bills and expenditure and they have the rule of parliament behind them. It is not the practice either in the British parliament or in this parliament for private members to be allowed to introduce or carry through money Bills. This responsibility rests upon the cabinet and the cabinet should do it. But the minister says : I am in favour of it and I agree with the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) in the conclusion he reaches, but I think he ought to go further and if he will introduce such a Bill I will help him. The minister has the majority of this House at his back. My hon. friend from Peel has not. The minister is one of the cabinet that control the majority of this House and if he desires this House to pass any such measure and he introduces it as a member of the government I will guarantee that it will pass without any difficulty. The very fact that four times in succession a majority of this House have expressed their opinion in favour of such legislation is an evidence to the government that they may take it up and pass it with every hope of getting a very large majority of this House in support of it. What more do they want? The Minister of Agriculture admits that the evil is a great one, admits that some remedy is necessary, admits that the remedies which have been provided up to the present are a failure and he thinks that a Bill may be effective. Then I ask: Why does he not make an effort? Why does he not initiate action and try to introduce such legislation and bring about whatever good legislation upon this subject would bring about? I think he ought to do it. Yet, he says: I am only one of the administration.

Mr. FISHER. Why should you not take it up?

Mr. SPROULE. Because I have not the majority of this House at my back. I would have no chance of carrying any Bill through this House, for if the Minister of Agriculture would hold up his hand to his followers they would vote any Bill I introduced down even it it was the best Bill ever submitted to parliament.

Mr. FISHER. If the hon. gentleman is correct in his statement that the majority of this House is in favour of such a measure, surely he would pass his Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. Independently they are in favour of it, but if a member of the government says: we don't desire it to pass, that ends it.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend must not cast such a reflection on the members of this House.

Mr. SPROULE. The government has many ways of burking the action of parliament and they can so control this House that it will be a hopeless task for any private member to introduce such a Bill. The hon. member said that the home, the school, and the pulpit have not been successful, and if that be so all the more does it indicate the wisdom of parliament devising some means to prevent this evil. The only effective means we know of is the legislation which it is in the hands of this government to pass, and I submit that in the interests of the country they should take that means to prevent this evil. Now with regard to the use of cigarettes, the Minister of Agriculture agrees, and I think every member of this House agrees, that it is a pernicious habit, and so I need not argue it.

Mr. MILLER. I would like for my own information to have the opinion of some medical man as to what is the peculiar evil that I believe there is in connection with cigarette smoking.

Mr. SPROULE. I was going to deal with that later on, but perhaps I might as well deal with it now. There is the same effect following cigarette smoking as follows the use of any narcotics, and narcotics are simply slow poisons; some are more virulent than others, some are more injurious than others, but all are injurious, and all are dangerous when used immoderately. The nicotine is the narcotic poison of tobacco, and it may be found in cigars or pipe tobacco, but the cigarette differs from these in that it is adulterated with other poisons that make it more intensely injurious than cigar tobacco or pipe tobacco. Cigarettes are mixed with stramoniuni which is another of the deadly narcotic poisons; they are saturated with belladona, and I believe this originated in France. It is said that the people of that country, especially the ladies who desired to make themselves bright, brilliant and attractive indulge in the use of certain drugs.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh.

Mr. SPROULE. I am speaking from a professional standpoint and I know whereof I speak. At their social gatherings they used belladona because it dilates the pupil of the eye; it gives a more attractive, sprightly appearance and it has some of the soothing effects of a narcotic. The tobacco that is used in cigarettes is saturated with belladona for that purpose. It is one of the narcotic poisons that for the time being quiets the irascible nervous condition of human nature. It is for these reasons that cigarettes are more injurious than even cigars or tobacco. It is because of the other narcotic poisons that are mixed with the narcotics in the tobacco. Then, I believe there is something also to be attributed to the wrapper and the nature of the parafine mixture in which the paper is steeped. I have sometimes thought as well, that this prevents the admixture of the atmosphere with the smoke to the same extent as it does using either a cigar or a pipe. These are my opinions with regard to the more injurious nature of cigarette smoking than either cigar or pipe smoking.

Mr. W. ROCHE (Halifax). Do not the medical faculty prescribe belladona and stramonium for asthma and throat affections?

Mr. SPROULE. Oh, yes, they prescribe almost every poison: strychnine and hydrocyanic acid, and digitalis and almost all the poisons. But they prescribe them only in certain specific diseases where they have a specific action in affording relief for the time being, but not as curatives. I say that the immoderate use of cigarettes produces physical, moral and mental degeneracy, and I think that will be admitted by every medical man in the House and most of those outside of it. Now, anything that tends to produce moral, physical and mental degeneracy must tend to the degeneracy of the human race. That being so, surely it is the part of wisdom for us in this parliament to take measures to stop the rapidly growing consumption of cigarettes in this country. The figures given by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain)—and by the way I think he is entitled to the thanks of the House and of the country for the persistent effort he is making year after year to educate parliamentary sentiment up to that desirable standard which will induce it to pass legislation to control this evil—the figures the hon. gentleman has given the House are the strongest possible evidence that the pernicious habit is increasing. In 1896, Canadians made use of 87,000,000 cigarettes, and in 1906, ten years later, they used 277,000,000, and during the past nine months of this year they have used 275,000,000 which, taking the same proportion for the balance of the year, would mean a consumption of 344,000,000 cigarettes for the twelve months. Do not these figures indicate the rapidity with which this baneful habit is growing? Why this rapid growth? It is because of the natural tendency to cultivate the bad habits of those with whom we associate. The American people are a nation of smokers, and the cigarette is their most luxurious device, and as we mix more and more with them we imbibe their habits. Then, the foreigners who are coming to our shores in countless thousands are cigarette smokers and as they go amongst our people the young boys catch the habit and often they regard it as a manly thing to smoke a cigarette. If, in the future the consumption of cigarettes should increase as in the past two years, what effect must it not have on the degeneracy of the people in the future. The hon. member for Peel in his resolution says the object of good government is to help people in every way and even to control people so that they may not do what injures themselves. We are obliged, for the benefit of our people, to surround them with restrictions and curtail their liberty in many directions. We make a law that druggists shall not sell strychnine, opium and other poisons except under certain regulations and restrictions, because they are dangerous; we prevent people drinking liquor immoderately, partly for the same reason; we control and restrain people in a thousand ways in what they regard as their natural and free rights as citizens. If that is the aim of good government, I would hope our government would be as desirous to accomplish by legislation what can be accomplished in this direction, as they would in any other. Therefore I would expect from them early action. The responsibility of legislating on this question rests with the government. It is within the jurisdiction of this parliament. It is constitutionally one of the subjects on which we can properly legislate, because it affects trade and commerce. We can prevent the importation and manufacture. The provinces cannot do that. It is true, they may make laws to restrict the sale; but as long as you allow the unrestrained importation and manufacture, it is practically useless to make a law to restrict the sale. The Minister of Agriculture asks what has been the effect of the law we have had in force in Ontario? Have any complaints or prosecutions taken place under that law? Yes, I know several that have taken place; but I frankly confess that I regard that law as a failure, because of the ease with which boys can get cigarettes. For instance, half a dozen boys will get together and hand their money over to a boy who is over the prohibited age, who will go to a store and buy the cigarettes and distribute them to the other boys in some shed or out-of-the way place. This I have seen done. Therefore I regard that law as a failure, and we must look to some other source to accomplish what it does not. Now, a vote of this House in favour of a certain kind of legislation is equivalent to a command to the government. Whenever this House, by a large majority, says that it desires legislation along any line, that is an intimation to the government that it is the wish of the House that the government shall introduce such a measure and that a majority of this House will support them in doing so. Why do the government delay? They know that a majority of the members of this House and a majority of the people desire this legislation, and they know that the legislation will be effective. Then, why do they not act? Is it for want of moral courage? It must be surely, or else they would act. What are they afraid of? Do they desire to go down in history as a good government? If so, will they not legislate along the lines which a good government is expected to legislate? The power rests with them and with them alone; will they do their duty? I am afraid that so far they have not done their duty, and the time may come when the voice of the electors of this country will speak to them in louder tones than we are speaking to-night, and remind them that before they came to power they declared, with regard to the temperance question, that they would submit a plebiscite and that if a majority of the people pronounced in favour of prohibition, they would follow it up by legislating along that line. The plebiscite was submitted, and a majority of the people pronounced themselves in favour of prohibition; but from that day to this the government have not introduced that legislation. The same reasoning will apply to this question, and yet they have refused to act. The Women's Christian Temperance Union have called upon them over and over again to act, and this House has told them that it is prepared by a majority to support them, yet they will not act. Therefore I say they must be regarded as doing less than their duty in failing to introduce such a measure.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to detain the House more than a minute or two. I desire to leave the House, for reasons of my own, and possibly may not be here when the vote is taken. I therefore wish to declare myself on this resolution, so that my constituents may know where I stand. I heartily endorse the resolution, as I have voted before for resolutions of the same character. I confess that I was surprised at the statement of the Minister of Agriculture that the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) could introduce a Bill on this subject just as readily as a member of the government. If that doctrine is correct, I have been labouring under a grievous error for the last twenty years, for I never so understood it. In fact, it is the universal practice that when an hon. member of the government brings down a Bill that affects the revenue, he has to declare to the House that he has the consent of His Excellency to bring down the measure. Now, we know very well that the hon. member for Peel has not the ear of His Excellency.

Mr. FISHER. This is not such a Bill as that.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is certainly a Bill that would affect the revenue of the country, and I have no doubt that if a member on this side of the House presumed to introduce a Bill of that character, he would very soon be told that he must have the assent of His Excellency.

Mr. FISHER. No, no.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Why don't you try it ?

Mr. HENDERSON. The minister signifies his dissent from that; but I say that has been the practice of this House ever since I have been a member of it. I do not recall a single instance to the contrary. Therefore I say the Minister of Agriculture should not charge the hon. member for Peel with neglect in not bringing in a Bill on this question.

Mr. CLARKE. Was not a Bill brought down before by a private member on this very question ?

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not aware of it.

Mr. CLARKE. I am told there was.

Mr. HENDERSON. Possibly it was brought down by a member supporting the government, who had the ear of the minister, and was able to get him to obtain His Excellency's assent. I do not say that that was the case. I say that an hon. member on that side of the House would have a privilege that we on this side would not. I do not remember, in fact, that a Bill affecting the revenue of the country was ever introduced by a private member. I may be wrong, but I believe the constitutional practice of this parliament to be that no member outside of the government can introduce a Bill affecting the revenue of this country without having the assent of His Excellency. What right have we on this side of the House, what right has any private member, to introduce a measure and to practically take away the revenues of the government which they require for carrying on the affairs of the country? It does not seem reasonable and I am quite sure that this has not been the practice of the House and that it would not be constitutional. I regret that I am unable to remain until the resolution is voted upon. Were I to remain I would support the resolution.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE (South Essex). Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have had the pleasure of listening to a debate in this House on this much-debated question. It seems to me that from the outset there has been a feeling on the part of hon. members who have spoken that this resolution will not be passed, or if passed, that it will not be consummated by an Act of parliament at this session ; and there seems to be a disposition on the part of the mover and those who have supported him to make it the basis of an attack upon the government for not bringing in a measure to give effect to the resolutions which have been passed at previous sessions. It has been said that such a Bill can only be introduced by a member of the government. The debate in 1903, which has been referred to by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), was followed up by a Bill introduced by a private member of the House. At page 2014 of 'Hansard' of 1903, I see that Mr. Bickerdike (Montreal, St. Lawrence) :

> Moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 133) to prohibit the importation, manufacture or sale of cigarettes.

He was called on for an explanation, and the same objection was then taken by Mr. Taylor, that it was a Bill which could only be introduced by a member of the government. But the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said :

> My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) is somewhat in error when he wants to minimize the powers of members of this House. A member of this House cannot introduce a measure which would put any burdens upon the people, but a member of this House can always introduce a measure which will decrease the taxation and take burdens off the people and as I understand it, in this case the objection of my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) does not apply.

Rightly or wrongly, that was the opinion of the Prime Minister at that time—and it was given effect to—that any member of this House had a full right to introduce a Bill similar to the one now sought to be introduced by the resolution under discussion.

With a good deal of what is in the present resolution I heartily concur. There are some things that it seems to me may be improved on, and before I sit down I intend to move an amendment to the resolution. It is a very easy thing for grown-up people who smoke to pass laws affecting boys who want to smoke. It would perhaps be more manly if we said to the boys: Follow my example, I will cut out the weed myself, than to say we will go on smoking and will punish the boy if he attempts to do what his father does. I do not think the legislation which we are now discussing is very manly or courageous. But the matter has been discussed and is of so much importance that it must be dealt with. It reminds one of the man who was willing to sacrifice his wife's relations in case of war. The first part of the resolution is most commendable, and it is a pleasure for members of this parliament, or any other parliament, to be able to give expression to such noble sentiments. We are unanimous with regard to the first part of this resolution.

The conclusion to be drawn from the second part is not quite logical. It is:

That the smoking of cigarettes has been proved by overwhelming testimony to be productive of serious physical and moral injur. to young people.

It is confined to young people, but the effect of the resolution is to prevent, not only young people, but all people from using cigarettes. If it is not injurious to older people to use cigarettes, the House is being asked to go a long way for the sake of preventing children from using cigarettes. When it is asked to deprive persons of mature judgment who desire to use them of the opportunity of doing so. If we are going to justify that, we should say that it is injurious to all, and that no one shall be allowed to use cigarettes.

The third part is perhaps right:

That the legislation, licensing and restricting the sale of cigarettes has not proven sufficient to prevent these evils.

There is nothing more deplorable than to see young boys smoking cigarettes or, for that matter, pipes and cigars. I have seen boys using pipes and cigars, apparently confirmed smokers, fully as often as I have seen them using cigarettes, and I have never been able to understand why the proposed legislation in regard to minors should be confined to cigarettes. Since I have been in public life this matter has been repeatedly brought to my attention by the good women, who are always perhaps more unselfish than the men are in looking after the welfare of the children. I have always said: Why confine it to cigarettes? Let us stop them, as far as we can, from using tobacco in any form. That is the correct position, and I do not think that this talk about cigarettes only is going to accomplish the object sought to be accomplished by this resolution.

Mr. BLAIN. Does not my hon. friend believe that the larger number of boys who learn to smoke commence with cigarettes?

Mr. CLARKE. I do not know that; it may be; I do not dispute it. Whether they commence with cigarettes or not, I do not think the prevention of the use of cigarettes will stop the evil practice of boys using tobacco.

I have had occasion to observe the working of the Ontario law, which is a pretty strong law, that is the Act of 1892. It is not confined to cigarettes, it prevents, with the sanction of penalties, the sale to minors, under eighteen years of age, of cigarettes, cigars or tobacco in any form. I think most of the provinces have similar legislation. I believe that in Nova Scotia the limit is sixteen years of age; in Ontario it is eighteen. I have lived in a border town, I have been engaged in the capacity of Crown Attorney for quite a considerable number of years, and I cannot say that I remember a single prosecution for violation of that Act. I do not say there has never been such a prosecution, because I would not be called upon for a summary offence of that sort, but I have had a pretty good idea of what was going on, and I cannot at present recollect a single case of a prosecution under that Act. I do not say there were none.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend lives in a tobacco-growing section?

Mr. CLARKE. Yes, in a tobacco-growing section and a tobacco-smoking section, and a section where boys smoke. I have seen them smoking in the streets, but public sentiment apparently is not strong enough to enforce the law we already have, or it may be for the reason given by the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule), that it is difficult to enforce the law because you are not able to discover who makes the sale. I think the weakness of the law is that you seek to punish the man you cannot find—the man who sells the tobacco—whereas the one on whom you find it—the boy himself—is not subject to any penalty. The purpose of my amendment is to get right after the boy himself, to impose penalties so that you will not have to hunt up the man who sells to the boy, but if you catch the boy in the act with the tobacco on him you put a stop to it immediately; this seems to be the only effectual way to put a stop to smoking by boys. I do not in any case think that this resolution, if carried into effect, would prevent smoking. I do not know if by the use of the word 'manufacture' you would prevent a boy or a man from rolling up his own tobacco. But many of the cigarettes used are not bought in cigarette form. The boys buy the fine-cut tobacco and the tissue paper and roll their own cigarettes and smoke them. If that is 'manufacture,' this resolution would meet it; but I take it that that is not what is intended. The mere fact of preventing a boy from buying cigarettes already made will go but a little distance to cure the evil if you allow him to buy the tissue paper and tobacco and make his own cigarettes. I think it would be well if the Ontario Act went further and provided a penalty for the boy who violates the Act as well as for the seller. But I do not know that this House is without jurisdiction. It seems to me that we could amend the criminal law. Unfortunately, in these matters, there seems to be a tendency to shift responsibility. The tendency on the part of my hon. friend opposite is to shift responsibility upon the government. If this House does not do anything, it might be said that we were trying to shift responsibility upon the provincial legislature. We could amend the criminal law to prevent boys, as effectively as possible, from using tobacco in any form. With that view I move the following amendment:

That all the words after the word 'disadvantage' in the fourth line of the proposed resolution be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

That the smoking and use of tobacco in any form has been proved to be injurious to the physical and intellectual development of the youth of the country besides encouraging habits of idleness.

That the legislation now in force restricting the sale of cigarettes, cigars or tobacco has been ineffective to wholly prevent these evils.

That this House is of the opinion that the most effective remedy for the existing evil is to amend the Criminal Code so as to make it an offence for persons under eighteen years of age to use tobacco in any form for smoking or chewing, or to have possession of tobacco for either of such purposes, and also for the sale or gift of tobacco in any form to persons under eighteen years of age.

That it is expedient to bring in a Bill at this session to give effect to this resolution.

Mr. MELZAR AVERY (Frontenac). I do not know that that amendment reaches the point, though, in one way it goes a step beyond the original motion. In fact, I doubt that it is properly an amendment at all. In any case, I think the original resolution is much nearer the point. If cigarette smoking is an evil, let us deal with that; and, if we are successful, we can go further. We are particularly bound to deal with this matter of cigarettes, because as has been shown, the injury is to the young people, pupils in our schools and others. If the Minister or Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) is honest, he will have a Bill brought in by the government to deal with this matter. The question has been raised whether this amendment affects the revenue. If it affects the revenue, it is clearly a matter for the government. Well, let us see how far the government will go. Let them bring in a Bill in accordance with the resolution of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) and I think they will find that both sides of the House will support it. But if the Minister of Agriculture intends to leave it to a private member of this House to introduce the Bill, it will simply mean that the government is trying to get out of the responsibility. I think that the government is properly responsible for the measure, and if the Minister of Agriculture will bring in a Bill in accordance with the resolution of the hon. member for Peel, he will find that this side of the House will give it hearty support. For my part, I am ready to support it, because I think the use of cigarettes by our young people is an evil, and if we can stop this practice we shall benefit our boys. The government should introduce a measure to deal with the evil of cigarettes. Then, if it wants to go a step further and try to stop the use of tobacco in any form by young people. I hope they will take the matter up and make it a government measure, so that the country may see on what side the government stands.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). I am sure we all appreciate the efforts made by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) in bringing forward this measure year after year and the splendid support of facts and figures that he has given it this evening. I am glad to see the hon. members take the position they do. I think it is the desire on both sides of the House to see legislation introduced that will effectually curtail the smoking, and possibly the manufacture and sale of cigarettes in our country. The hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Clarke) does not go so far as the hon. member for Peel, yet I will not say that I will not support his motion if no legislation is brought in at this time. But I should like to see him go further than he has gone. I cannot agree with the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) when he says that, so far as bringing in legislation is concerned, it is important for the opposition to take a position on the subject. I am satisfied that it is the duty of the government to bring in this legislation and give it their hearty and undivided support. As has been stated, the youth of this country are our best assets, and we are proud to see the general advancement made in our schools and colleges in advising young men to curtail smoking and drinking habits. I am sure that, as legislators, we cannot take too much time debating this subject and placing it before the country in the most emphatic manner, to show the young men that, so far as we are concerned, we are determined to bring about legislation that will be for the benefit of the youth of our country. I rose mainly to express my appreciation of the efforts of the hon. member for Peel. That hon. gentleman is deserving of the hearty sympathy of both sides for bringing this measure before us from time to time. I am glad that both sides regard it from a non-partisan standpoint and are decided that, so far as we are concerned, we are going to bring in legislation that will tend in the direction of reform.

Mr. ROBERT STEWART (Ottawa). The amendment moved by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Clarke) has merit in it. I should be very glad to support that resolution if it were proposed at some other time, or if it did not set aside the motion moved by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain). But I fear very much that that is the effect it would have. If the amendment is so intended or will have that effect I shall be reluctantly compelled to vote against it at this time. I am in thorough sympathy with the motion of the hon. member for Peel and with all that has been said concerning the injurious effects of cigarettes upon the youth of our country and in opposition to the use of cigarettes by the young.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I am in hearty sympathy with the motion of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain), and I entirely approve the manner in which he has presented the motion. I supported, five years ago, I think, a motion of a similar character presented by my hon. friend and esteemed friend, the member for St. Lawrence division, Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike), and I have seen nothing since then to alter my opinion as to the great evil with which this motion deals. At the time the former motion was under consideration, members of this House who were then members will remember that we had the advantage of the medical opinion of a gentleman who holds a very high position in the medical fraternity. Dr. Roddick was at that time the member for St. Antoine division, and if I remember rightly what he said, he was of the opinion that although cigarettes in themselves were not more injurious than tobacco in other forms when used by the young, they were especially liable to be used to excess, in which case they caused very serious injury. A grown man smoking a cigarette not otherwise vitiated by obnoxious ingredients, would probably not suffer more than a man smoking a pipe. The difficulty pointed out then was that excessive cigarette smoking by young men and boys was attended with very harmful results. My own experience, after being connected for more than twenty-five years with educational institutions and with young men in the university, is that cigarette smoking is a great evil and produces extremely deplorable results. There is this peculiarity about it, that young men and boys seem to contract an immoderate desire for cigarettes, some of them smoking as many as sixty or seventy, or even a hundred cigarettes a day. It is therefore easy to understand that under these circumstances, cigarette smoking has become a very great evil in this country. Recognizing the evil as I do, I also recognize the desirability of applying a remedy.

My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture does not seem to be logical when speaking on behalf of the government, he separates his responsibility from that of his colleagues. He agrees with what has been alleged as to the existence of the evil, and would be prepared for himself to support a remedy, but he has not the concurrence of his colleagues, or at least of all of them, as I understood him. I do not think it is possible for a minister speaking on behalf of the government on a question of that kind, to take up such a position. If there is an admitted evil it is for the government to introduce a remedy, and it is impossible for a minister to isolate himself from his colleagues on that matter. Neither do I agree with the Minister of Agriculture when he says that it is competent for any member of this House to introduce a Bill, as called for by the resolution. The hon. gentleman knows perfecly well that no private member of this House could attempt to carry through legislation of this scope and importance, it would be absurd to make the attempt. In England no private member would dream of introducing legislation of this nature, because it is well known there that no private member could carry it through the House. When a crying evil is brought to the notice of the government, as this has been for many years, it is for the government, placed in their responsible position, to bring in a remedy for the evil. Of course I admit that it is possible for a member to introduce a measure involving a reduction of taxation without the consent of the Crown; but as my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) has said, that is very unusual. It is not at all according to the customs of parliament. We know that ever since the date in the seventeenth century when the English House of Commons passed the memorable resolution by which it divested itself of the right of imposing taxation without the initiative of the Crown, the custom has been that no law affecting the public revenue in any way could be introduced by a private member. This is essentially a government measure. This evil has been brought to the notice of the government for a number of years now, and we have members of the government rising in the House, as the Minister of Agriculture has done this evening, and disclaiming responsibility. Now that is very unsatisfactory, even to those who do not agree on all points with what has been said in favour of this resolution. As a rule the discussion of this matter has led to what? It has led to the government making such declarations as the Minister of Agriculture has made this evening, and it has led to the resolution being talked out, or else to the introduction of amendments with the object of escaping the issue, which has been put very frankly before the House by my hon. friend from Peel to-night. It is possible that the remedy suggested by the amendment may be open to some objection. But the object of introducing an amendment is, as a rule, to escape the issue. Now it seems to me that at this stage, the issue having been brought fairly before the government, it is the duty of the government to declare its policy. Usually, when the government has recognized the existence of the evil and has promised to introduce a remedy, those who have introduced the motion are prepared to withdraw it. But under these circumstances, with our experience of what has happened in the past, I do not think that step would be warranted. For my part I am cordially in sympathy with the resolution, and am prepared to support it.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (Leeds). I am strongly in favour of the motion of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain), and I cannot support the amendment; nor do I think there is a member in the House that can agree with this language of the amendment :—

This House is of the opinion that the most effectual remedy for the existing evil is to amend the Criminal Code so as to make it an offence for persons under eighteen years of age to use tobacco in any form for smoking or chewing, or to have possession of tobacco for either of such purposes.

Now that would not be half as effectual a remedy as to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale. If this amendment carries, the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes can go on as heretofore; whereas if we prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale, boys of eighteen years of age, or older persons, cannot use cigarettes. It is to be remembered that the whole agitation in the country is against cigarettes, but the amendment does not deal with cigarettes at all, it only makes it a criminal offence for persons under eighteen years of age to use tobacco in any form. In my opinion the most effective action would be to do away with the manufacture, importation and sale of cigarettes. Therefore, I could not support the amendment because as my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier says, I believe it is only intended to side track the motion made by my hon. friend from Peel.

Mr. ROBERT BICKERDIKE (Montreal, St. Lawrence). Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to detain the House as on this question I made myself very clear in 1903. I do not think that any amount of talk on the subject will change one vote here this evening. I think that every hon. member has made up his mind just how he is going to vote on this question. In 1903, I introduced a resolution something on the lines of that which has been introduced by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain). It was not quite in the same language but it had the same purpose in view. My hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Clarke) has moved an amendment which may have just as good an effect as the resolution of the hon. member for Peel, but it does not go quite far enough. I do not think we should confine ourselves entirely to chastising a boy. I think the very object would be defeated if we stop there. If the hon. gentleman would go a little further with his amendment and move to punish the manufacturer, or the man who sells cigarettes to the boy as well as the boy he would be doing something to stop the evil.

Mr. CLARKE. The reason I did not put that in was that most of the provinces already have such a provision, but I am quite willing to have that go in if it is desirable.

Mr. TAYLOR. Stop the manufacture and sale.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Stop the manufacture as well as punish the boy. I do not like to punish the boy at all because he is hardly responsible at that age for what he does. It is very dangerous sometimes to make criminals of boys if we can avoid it. However, I introduced that resolution in 1903, and I have no doubt that almost all members of this House will remember that it was carried by a very large majority. The resolution was adopted by a majority of 103 against 48 and a great many members on the other side of the House, I am pleased to say, voted with me on that occasion although they seldom do. I afterwards introduced a Bill and got the second reading some time later. I then moved for the House to go into committee for the consideration of the Bill. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) who was then Speaker of the House ruled me out. He just discovered it at that late moment, at least he looked serious as if he had discovered it and then it was ruled out and dropped for the session. It was brought up some time afterwards by the then member for Huntingdon, again last session by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) and now an amendment is moved by the hon. member for Essex. What I want to say is that any effective measure that is brought up in the House and that has any chance of carrying, will have my hearty support.

Mr. W. A. GALLIHER (Kootenay). Mr. Speaker, I do not want to give a silent vote on this resolution. I am one of those who believe that the practice of smoking cigarettes by young people is certainly injurious. On the other hand I think there are other things that have to be considered in connection with the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) which, of course, is very far reaching in its character. We have for many years had cigarettes imported, manufactured and consumed in Canada. People have entered into the business and there has been nothing unlawful in carrying it on. They have invested probably large sums of money in the business.

Now, there is another feature. I am not very much in favour of what may be termed paternal legislation. I am quite willing to support any measure whether brought in by a private member or not—although I have some doubt as to whether he is at liberty to bring in such a measure—to make it an offence to either sell or give cigarettes to any one under the age of 18 years. Further than that I do not think I am prepared to go. The amendment of my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Clarke) does not go far enough.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) how far legislation in his own province goes ?

Mr. GALLIHER. That is a point that I was just going to mention. Our province is one in which a man who would sell to a boy would not be punished as a result of the adoption of the amendment of the hon. member for Essex.

Mr. CLARKE. Well, I will amend it in order to meet that point.

Mr. GALLIHER. If we introduce legislation here that will prohibit the sale or gift to a boy under 18 years of age and impose a good heavy penalty for the infraction of that law, I am prepared to support such a Bill. But, to go to the extent of saying that a grown man, who, after all should be capable of judging for himself, shall be subjected to a penalty or should not be permitted if he so desires to smoke cigarettes, is to adopt a form of legislation that I for one do not agree with. I believe it is to a certain extent interfering with the liberty of the subject. If we can not prevent the wholesale smoking of cigarettes by young boys in any other way then I am prepared to go to that extent. At all events I think we should make a trial and see if we cannot stamp out the evil by the method which I suggest. I look upon it as an evil. I would be sorry indeed to see my own boy who is 15 years of age, smoking cigarettes. In fact, I do not like to see the child of any parent smoking cigarettes because I believe they are injurious to him both bodily and mentally. When a man comes to mature years I do not think that we should legislate to restrict him in regard to what he should smoke, whether he should smoke tobacco in a pipe or a cigar or a cigarette. If we cannot by intermediate legislation, if I may so term it stamp out this evil, as it affects our young people, then, as a last resort, I will be prepared to go as far as the resolution of my hon. friend from Peel. I think we might safely in the first place confine it to boys up to 18 years of age instead of 16, because a boy will have become a little more mature in his mind and developed in his body as well, and if we find that such an Act strictly enforced and providing good heavy penalties for either the sale or gift of cigarettes to boys does not reach the end that I believe everybody in the House desires to see reachd in so far as young people are concerned we can take the matter up again and go to a greater extent.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to say that I am not in favour of the amendment of the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Clarke). I do not believe that it is the most effectual remedy. I do not believe that very many members of this House will agree with the hon. member that it is more effectual to fine the boy who is found smoking or with tobacco in his possession up to 18 years of age than it is to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale. If you take the temptation out of the way there are fewer who will be likely to fall into it. We allow a boy 18 years old to take up his homestead and we treat him as being responsible for his conduct, and yet when a yougn man approaching the age of 18, following the example of older people smokes a cigarette I think it would be regarded as an outrage that you should punish him and let the older heads go scott free. The hon. member for Montreal objects to the motion because it does not go far enough, and he says that if you allow the importation and manufacture you cannot stop the evil, and in answer to that the mover of the amendment says he is willing to go further and to amend the criminal law so as to make it a criminal offence.

Mr. CLARKE. I did not say that.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that.

Mr. CLARKE. That was in answer to what was said, that in some of the provinces they had no law to punish the sale. I suppose all the provinces had the same law as the province of Ontario which punishes the sale to minors, but it seems British Columbia has not. I propose with the consent of the House to make the sale an offence as well as the use by the boy.

Mr. SPROULE. It was in answer to the question of the member for Montreal who said: what is the use of this law if you still allow the sale and manufacture, that my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) says you could go further.

Mr. CLARKE. If I said that I did not mean it.

Mr. SPROULE. That proposal was an unreasonable one to say the least. I do not think the amendment would be as effectual as the motion would be and hence I will vote against it.

Mr. GILBERT H. McINTYRE (South Perth). There appears to be no argument necessary as to the evil of the cigarette habit. We are offered a couple of remedies. Remedies by law are seldom all we desire and they do not work out to the full extent we would wish them to. But that is no reason why we should not attempt as far as possible to remedy the evil. We are offered two remedies. One is the total prevention by law of the manufacture or importation or sale of cigarettes. That has its weakness in this, that while you are endeavouring by that to prevent the use of cigarettes by minors you are also preventing their use by older people, and we cannot very well say that their use by older people is so serious a matter that we should prevent it by law. We at least should have very strong reason indeed before we would go that far. On the other hand the amendment does endeavour to reach the particular person affected, but unfortunately it is accompanied by an Act of legislation that makes the offence a criminal one apparently, and one would hesitate very much to punish a child under 18 who is not responsible and who is tempted by the example of his elders. As between the two, if we are only to have these two remedies to choose from, we must do so recognizing that neither one will fully answer all we require, but of the two I would prefer, if there is no change in the amendment, the motion of the member for Peel.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT (South Renfrew). I am heartily in accord with the resolution of the member for Peel. It seems to me that the amendment which has been introduced is nothing more or less than an attempt to draw a red herring across the track of the resolution. Now, I would like to ask you, Mr. Speaker, how you are going to provide a remedy for this case which I will bring to your notice and which came to my notice about six months ago. In coming from my home I saw four little tots about five years old—two of them were girls and the others boys—and one of them had a cigarette and he started to smoke it and then he passed it around, each one taking a draught and so on from one to the other until the cigarette was finished. I asked the little boy where he got the cigarette and he told me he 'got it out of papa's pocket.' Now, how is this legislation to meet such a case as that. It seems to me that the only way to remedy this evil, and evil it is—and no one denies it is an evil—the only effectual way to remedy the evil is to put in force the resolution introduced by the member for Peel. I can assure you that in my own town this evil is growing with terrible rapidity. The teachers in our schools are not able to cope with it, the mothers in our homes are not able to cope with it, the clergymen in our pulpits are not able to cope with it, and will we not do all we can in this parliament to assist these three great forces of the land in the cause of mortality? Will we not strengthen their hands if it is possible for us to do so. So far as I am concerned I am heartily in accord with the resolution of the member for Peel and shall vote for it, and if we pass this resolution or one similar to it half a dozen times in this House and yet there is no effectual law put into force, I shall still vote for this resolution until we get a government that will do something for us.

Mr. R. G. MACPHERSON (Vancouver). I think possibly no other subject calls for more self restraint on the part of the majority of men who speak on it, than the subject of smoking. I smoke myself and I think nine-tenths of the men of this country smoke.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. MACPHERSON. My hon. friend says no, but I will say that nine-tenths of the people of my province smoke, and still we have this fact staring us in the face, that we do not want our sons to smoke. My good friend from East Grey said a few moments ago that you must keep temptation out of the small boy's way, but you simply cannot keep temptation out of his way, because if he walks along the street he finds that the majority of men he meets are smoking cigars or pipes, if not cigarettes. The small boy is simply following in the footsteps of his father in that respect. Do you intend to go further, and say that a boy cannot smoke a cigar or a pipe any more than he can smoke a cigarette? That must be the logical conclusion if smoking does such immense harm. And, if the boy cannot smoke cigarettes or a pipe or cigars, are you going to pursue the logical course further, and say that a man shall not smoke cigarettes or a cigar or a pipe? There is much to be said pro and con on this question. The liberty of the individual is concerned, the revenue is concerned, the tobacco growing industry is concerned and the cigarette making industry is concerned. I therefore do not think that even the wise men who are in this chamber to-night can, with all their wisdom, devise a solution of the difficulty. The other day I read a bill advertising a political meeting to be held by our good friends opposite and many distinguished Conservatives were announced to speak and young men were invited to be present. Mr. Speaker, what do you suppose this bill said? That a smoking concert was to be held, and that there would be cigarettes, cigars and pipes. I do not think the hon. member for Peel smokes; I will do him that justice. I think he is one man who is in earnest in this matter. I believe he feels the responsibility placed upon him; so I would omit him from this category. But when we have parties in this country, whether Liberal or Conservative, advertising smoking concerts, and especially inviting young men to them, where they will see the wise men of our country gathered together and sitting up on the platform smoking their long clay pipes or good fat Havana cigars, or rolling cigarettes in their nimble fingers and smoking them, what will they say? They will say: These men cannot be as sincere as they try to make us believe. These people do not read 'Hansard,' and therefore will not know what has been said here to-night, because, after all, the papers will not publish much of it beyond the fact that the hon. member for Peel moved such a resolution and certain members spoke upon it, so that they will not know how we feel about this matter. Is there any hon. member of this House who, when he has ranged around him 400 or 500 of the electors of this country, gets on the platform and says to them: Are you gentlemen teaching your boys and girls not to smoke cigarettes? Not a solitary man will preach that doctrine when he has the chance; at least, I never heard it. I do not do it myself, and yet I believe cigarette smoking is a bad thing for small boys. I would never hire a boy who smokes cigarettes. But when you cut a tree down, you do not begin at the top. I would not say: Stop the manufacture and sale of cigarettes by prohibiting it; but I say that if hon. gentlemen themselves are in earnest about this matter, they will themselves show the first example by saying: We will not smoke tobacco in any shape or form. That is the only logical conclusion they can come to. There is so much to be said on this question, Mr. Speaker, and I have further remarks to make that would delight hon. gentlemen around me, but I have not time to make them to-night at this late hour-, and therefore I will move the adjournment of the debate.

House divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Macpherson).

YEAS:

Messieurs

Adamson,
Archambault,
Beauparlant,
Bourbonnais,
Boyer,
Brodeur,
Brown,
Bureau,
Carney,
Cash,
Chisholm (Antigonish),
Copp,
Crawford,
Delisle,
Demers,
Desjardins,
Dubeau,
Ethier,
Fielding,
Finlay,
Finlayson,
Fisher,
Fortier,
Galliher,
Gauvreau,
Geoffrion,
Gervais,
Girard,
Gladu,
Johnston,
Knowles,
Lachance,
Lanctot (Laprairie-Napierville),
Lanctot (Richelieu),
Lapointe,
Laurier (L'Assomption),
Law,
Lemieux,
Logan,
Lovell,
Maclean (Lunenburg), Macpherson,
McColl,
McCool,
McLennan,
Marcile (Bagot),
Marcil (Bonaventure),
Martin (Wellington),
Parmelee,
Pickup,
Ratz,
Savoie,
Sinclair,
Sloan,
Templeman,
Tobin,
Turcotte,
Hughes (Kings, P.E.I.),
Jackson (Selkirk),
Turgeon,
Turriff.—61.

NAYS:

Messieurs

Alcorn,
Armstrong,
Avery,
Barr,
Bickerdike,
Blain,
Boyce,
Broder,
Chisholm (Huron),
Christie,
Clarke,
Clements,
Crocket,
Elson,
Fowler,
Ganong,
Graham,
Herron,
Jackson (Elgin),
Lake,
Loggie,
Macdonald,
McIntyre (Perth),
McKenzie,
McLean (Queens, P.E.I.),
McLean (York, C.),
Martin (Queens, P.E.I.),
Miller,
Monk,
Morin,
Pardee,
Paquet,
Reid (Grenville),
Roche (Halifax),
Roche (Marquette),
Schaffner,
Schell (Oxford),
Smith (Wentworth),
Sproule,
Stanfield,
Staples,
Stewart,
Taylor,
Tolmie,
Walsh (Huntingdon),
Watson,
White,
Wilson (Lennox & Addington),
Worthington,
Wright (Muskoka),
Wright (Renfrew)—51.

Amendment to the amendment agreed to, and debate adjourned.

FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Mr. FIELDING presented a message from the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the message as follows:

GREY:

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons supplementary estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending on the 31st March, 1908, and in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, the Governor General recommends these estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House,
Ottawa, March 16, 1908.

On motion of Mr. FIELDING the message, together with the estimates, were referred to Committee of Supply.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. The Budget.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, March 17, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE ROYAL ASSENT.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received from the secretary of His Excellency the Governor General the following communication :—

Ottawa, March 17, 1908.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. the Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber this afternoon at 3.15 o'clock, for the purpose of assenting to such Bills as have passed the Senate and the House of Commons.

I have the honour to be, sir.
Your obedient servant,
J. HANBURY WILLIAMS,
Colonel,
Governor General's Secretary.

The Hon.
The Speaker of the House of Commons.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved :

That from this date to the end of the session, government orders have precedence immediately after questions to be put by members on Wednesday.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is of course a pretty long list of public Bills and orders, as the Prime Minister has no doubt observed. Of these some at least are of an important public nature. It may possibly be practicable to take a day for some of them that are of more vital importance than others.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In this matter the government are anxious to meet the wishes of the House. If it would be more convenient to take to-morrow for public Bills and orders, I have no objection to that course being followed. In that case, the motion would apply to Wednesdays beginning to-morrow week. I would move accordingly.

Amendment agreed to, and motion as amended agreed to.

THE ROYAL ASSENT.

A message was received from His Excellency the Governor General by the gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows :—

Mr. Speaker,—His Honour the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of your honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable Senate.

Accordingly Mr. Speaker, with the House, went up to the Senate Chamber.

Mr. FIELDING.

And having returned.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that his honour the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills :—

An Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.
An Act respecting the Niagara, Grand Island Bridge Company.
An Act respecting the Lindsay, Bobcaygeon and Pontypool Railway Company.
An Act respecting the Macleod, Cardston and Montana Railway Company.
An Act respecting the South Ontario Pacific Railway Company.
An Act respecting the Kamloops and Yellowhead Pass Railway Company.
An Act respecting the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company.
An Act respecting the Boundary, Kamloops and Cariboo Central Railway Company.
An Act respecting the Calgary and Fernie Railway Company.
An Act respecting the Ashcroft, Barkerville and Fort George Railway Company.
An Act respecting the Tobique Manufacturing Company, and to change its name to 'Fraser Lumber Company, Limited.'
An Act respecting a patent of Eugene François Giraud.
An Act respecting patents of the Windsor Pump and Foundry Company, Limited.
An Act to incorporate the Women's Auxiliary to the Missionary Society of the Church of England in Canada.
An Act respecting patents of the Goodwin Car Company.
An Act respecting patents of Montague Moore and Thomas James Heskett.
An Act to amend the Copyright Act.
An Act respecting the Surveys of the public lands of the Dominion and the surveyors entitled to make such surveys.
An Act respecting the St. Clair and Erie Ship Canal Company.
An Act respecting the Ministers', Widows' and Orphans' Fund of the Presbyterian Church of Canada.
An Act to incorporate the Alberta and Brazeau River Railway Company.
An Act respecting the British Yukon Railway Company.
An Act respecting the National Battlefields of Quebec.
An Act respecting the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company.

MAILS TO YUKON.

Mr. ALFRED THOMPSON (Yukon). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) a question relating to the Yukon mails. I have under my hand a letter from the 'Engineering and Mining Journal,' of Toronto, stating that a copy of that journal addressed to a subscriber in Yukon had been returned marked 'non-transmissible during the cold season.' I called the attention of the Postmaster General to this matter on January 27 last. I would be glad if he could give an explanation now.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). I am aware that some packages were detained at Whitehorse. In order to make the matter clear, I think I should give my hon. friend the regulation which has been in existence in the department for some years respecting mail matter to the Yukon territory during the winter months. My hon. friend is aware that only correspondence limited to a certain class can be forwarded if addressed to places beyond Whitehorse, as follows :

Letters (in their usual and ordinary form); post cards ; singly wrapped newspapers and periodicals from the office of publication, addressed to public libraries, to newspaper publishers and to individual subscribers; transient newspapers and third-class matter of all kinds except books, trade catalogues, circulars and patterns and samples of merchandise.

The following articles are not transmitted from places north of Whitehorse during the season of closed navigation :

Newspapers and periodicals sent to dealers for purposes of trade (in bulk or otherwise), sample copies of newspapers and periodicals, books, trade catalogues, circulars and patterns and samples of merchandise and fourth-class matter (merchandise).

The term 'package' as used does not enable the department to say with certainty whether what has been detained in the post office mentioned by my hon. friend should have been detained under the regulations or not. As to that, we will have an inquiry made at once, and my hon. friend will be made aware of the result as soon as possible.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty. He said : Mr. Speaker, the last volume of Public Accounts in the possession of the House is for the fiscal period of nine months ended 31st March last. Perhaps it is worthy of note—though we here generally understand it—that the broken period was made necessary by the change in our fiscal year. Of course, it is difficult to make comparisons between a period of nine months and a period of twelve months ; but, after the passing of the present year, we shall come to conditions under which comparisons may be made as usual.

The outturn of the financial period to which I have referred proved somewhat more favourable than the anticipations which I ventured to present to the House in the budget speech of the previous November. I had estimated a revenue of $65,000,000 ; the actual revenue for the nine months was $67,969,328.29, an excess over the estimate of $2,969,328.29. I estimated an expenditure chargeable to Consolidated Fund of $52,000,000 ; the expenditure proved to be $51,542,161.09, which was less than the estimate to the extent of $457,838.91. I estimated a surplus of $13,000,000 ; the actual surplus for the nine months was $16,427,167.20. That is, the surplus for the nine months was larger than the surplus of any fiscal year in the history of confederation. It may be well to note, in passing, though the figures are in the possession of the House already, that the main sources of our revenue were as follows :

| | |
|---|---|
| Customs.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $39,760,172 53 |
| Excise.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 11,805,413 21 |
| Post Office.. .. .. .. .. .. | 5,061,728 45 |
| Dominion Lands.. .. .. .. | 1,443,632 03 |
| Railways.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6,509,099 78 |
| Miscellaneous.. .. .. .. .. | 3,389,282 29 |
| | $67,969,328 29 |

The customs revenue during the nine months proved very buoyant, showing a very large proportionate increase over that of 1905-6. The same may be said of excise.

The post office revenue continues to increase and that service may now be regarded as being firmly established on a paying basis. In the nine months of the financial period 1907, we received from this source $5,061,728.45. The expenditure for that period was $3,979,557.34, leaving a surplus of $1,082,171.11. The operations of the Post Office Department up to and including 1902 resulted in deficits year by year. In 1903 we had a small surplus of $292,654. Each succeeding year has shown a surplus and so well has the administration of this branch of the service prospered that in the nine months of 1907 we actually netted a surplus of $1,082,171.11.

The statement of post office revenue and expenditure for a series of years is so interesting that the House will pardon me if I spend a moment in calling attention to it. The statement from 1896 to 1907 is as follows :

| Year. | Revenue. | Expenditure | Deficit. | Surplus. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | $ | $ | $ | $ |
| 1896.. | 2,964,014 | 3,665,011 | 700,997 | |
| 1897.. | 3,202,938 | 3,789,478 | 586,540 | |
| 1898.. | 3,527,809 | 3,575,411 | 47,602 | |
| 1899.. | 3,193,777 | 3,603,799 | 410,022 | |
| 1900.. | 3,205,535 | 3,758,014 | 552,479 | |
| 1901.. | 3,441,504 | 3,931,446 | 489,942 | |
| 1902.. | 3,918,415 | 4,023,636 | 105,221 | |
| 1903.. | 4,397,832 | 4,105,178 | ..... | 292,654 |
| 1904.. | 4,652,324 | 4,347,540 | ..... | 304,784 |
| 1905.. | 5,125,372 | 4,634,527 | ... ... | 490,845 |
| 1906.. | 5,933,342 | 4,921,577 | .... .. | 1,011,765 |
| 1907.. | 5,061,728 | 3,979,557 | ..... | 1,082,171 |

It is of course to be remembered that this great change from a period of deficits to a period of surpluses is coincident with a very material reduction in the most important postal rates of the country. We have not only had a greater revenue with a lower rate of postal taxation, but from year to year a continued expansion in the service. Taking only the last period of nine months, it is found that there have been the following increases in that service:

| Class of office. | Increase for nine months. |
|---|---|
| Post offices.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 236 |
| Postal note offices.. .. .. .. .. .. | 355 |
| Money order offices.. .. .. .. .. .. | 115 |
| Savings banks.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 32 |

This is in addition to the large increase in the mileage of mail service as compared with previous years.

The Intercolonial account to which attention has already been called by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. G. P. Graham) showed that there was a revenue for the nine months of $6,248,251.45, while the working expenses were $6,030,171.83, showing an excess of revenue over working expenses, for the nine months, of $218,079.62.

The Prince Edward Island Railway was treated separately; there the balance is the other way, there is an excess of expenses over revenue of $67,713.55.

For convenience of reference I have put in summary form the expenditure of all kinds, the revenue, and the net debt statement for the period of nine months. That is set out in the following table:

Summary of revenue, expenditure of all kinds, and net debt for fiscal period of 9 months ended March 31, 1907.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Expenditure chargeable to Consolidated Fund .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | | $51,542,161 09 |
| Capital expenditure— | | |
| National Transcontinental Railway .. | $5,537,867 50 | |
| Railways.. .. .. .. .. .. | 1,603,701 07 | |
| Canals.. .. .. .. .. .. | 887,838 61 | |
| Public works.. .. .. .. | 1,797,871 16 | |
| Dominion lands .. .. .. | 526,582 61 | |
| Militia.. .. .. .. .. .. | 975,282 87 | |
| | | 11,329,143 82 |
| Special expenditure— | | |
| Railway subsidies .. | $1,324,889 30 | |
| Bounties.. .. .. .. .. .. | 1,581,944 36 | |
| | | 2,906,833 66 |
| Total expenditure.. .. .. .. .. | | 65,778,138 57 |
| Total revenue.. .. .. .. .. .. | | 67,972,109 65 |
| Excess of total revenue over total expenditure.. .. .. .. .. | | 2,193,971 08 |
| Add sinking funds.. .. .. .. .. | | 1,177,146 71 |
| Decrease of net debt.. .. .. .. | | 3,371,117 79 |

It will be observed that there is an excess of total revenue over total expenditure of $2,193,971.08. Adding to that the sinking funds, which are simply taken from one side of the account and placed on the other, and which amounted to $1,177,146.71, we see that as a result of the year's operations there was a decrease in the net debt of Canada of $3,371,117.79. This question of the public debt is at all times one of much interest. Occasionally we have had the happy privilege of calling attention to a reduction of the public debt, but on every occasion when I have had to speak of that I have taken the precaution to warn the House and the country that it would not be reasonable to expect, in a country like Canada, that we should have frequent reductions of the public debt. Indeed, it may surprise some hon. gentlemen who are not familiar with our affairs to be told that in the whole history of confederation there have been only six years during which there have been reductions in the public debt. One of these reductions stands to the credit of Sir Francis Hincks, away back in 1871. Another stands to the credit of Sir Leonard Tilley in 1882. The remaining four have occurred in recent years and can be claimed by the present administration. A moderate increase in the public debt from time to time is to be expected and would be quite defensible. I think it must be a cause of surprise to many persons, and even to our critics, to know that after the lapse of 10¾ years of the present administration there has been such a very small addition to the public debt. During that period we have carried on large operations. We have provided very liberally for that portion of our public expenditure which is 'chargeable to consolidated fund.' We have provided generously for the public service—perhaps my hon. friends opposite would use the stronger word, 'lavishly.' We have provided for our capital and special expenditure. We have expended $127,000,000, apart from the ordinary charges, on what is called the capital and special account. Yet notwithstanding all these liberal allowances for all the public services, notwithstanding the large capital and special expenditure, notwithstanding the liberality with which all branches of the public services have been maintained, notwithstanding the energy carried into the development of our public works, we find ourselves at the end of this 10¾ year period with an addition to the public debt amounting to only $5,174,427. If it were not for the special item of the National Transcontinental Railway, which every hon. gentleman will admit is of exceptional character, we would find that during the 10¾ years we have had no increase of the public debt whatever, but a very considerable surplus over expenditures of every kind. If we look into the question of the debt in its relation to the population of the country, which is a very fair way to look at it, we find reason for believing that Canada is very modest in the matter of incurring public debt. As the country increases its population, we, of course, increase in ability to bear the burden. If the increase of the public debt should simply keep pace with the increase of population and the development of our resources, there would be nothing to complain of. But when we are able to show that from the point of view of the debt per head there has been no increase, but in reality an actual decrease of the public debt per head, I think it will be admitted that we are making a very gratifying statement. Beginning at the year 1891 and taking the figures of the population as furnished from time to time by our census department, we find that the net debt of Canada per head stands as follows:

NET DEBT PER CAPITA.

| | |
|---|---|
| June 30, 1891 | 49·09 |
| " 1892 | 49·15 |
| " 1893 | 48·96 |
| " 1894 | 49·40 |
| " 1895 | 50·57 |
| " 1896 | 50·82 |
| " 1897 | 50·87 |
| " 1898 | 50·77 |
| " 1899 | 50·62 |
| " 1900 | 49·88 |
| " 1901 | 49·84 |
| " 1902 | 49·59 |
| " 1903 | 46·84 |
| " 1904 | 45·74 |
| " 1905 | 45·63 |
| " 1906 | 44·63 |
| March 31, 1907 | 42·84 |

I take as the estimate of population for the last date mentioned, 31st March, the figures furnished by our Census Department as 6,153,789.

The fiscal year for 1907-8 will close within a few days, on the 31st of March, according to the new system. In England the fiscal year is closed on the same date; and they are able to close up the business of the year very quickly. In fact I think it is the practice there to take the accounts as they actually stand on that date and declare the result immediately. That can be done in a country like England, with a comparatively small area and with nearly perfect means of communication. But with us in Canada, with a vast territory, and in some cases at least imperfect means of communication, it has been found necessary to make a liberal allowance in closing up the accounts. The Audit Act permits three months; we do not usually take the whole of three months; the practice in late years is to close up the accounts in about six weeks from the close of the year. Although we are now close at the end of the year, it is not easy to make a very close estimate for the reason that all over the Dominion, with vast distances, there are accounts still to be rendered. Still we are so near the end of the year that we ought to be able to make our estimate somewhat closer than usual. Our revenue to the 29th of February for the current year amounted to $87,601,299. For the remainder of the year we make a conservative estimate, for we are aware that at the present time there is some check upon business activity. We place the revenue for the year at $96,500,000. The expenditure chargeable to consolidated fund up to the 29th of February was $60,720,353. Making a reasonable allowance for the expenditure to the close of the year, we think the total outlay of the year chargeable to the consolidated fund will reach $77,500,000. If these figures be realized, with a revenue of $96,500,000 and an expenditure chargeable to consolidated fund of $77,500,000, we shall have for this year the magnificent surplus of $19,000,000. That will be a larger surplus than in any previous year.

Coming now to our capital and special expenditure, we have to estimate that on a pretty liberal scale, for we are now engaged in the construction of large works. We estimate our capital and special expenditure for the current year at $33,000,000. This will make our expenditure of every kind for the year $110,500,000. If we deduct from this our estimated revenue of $96,500,000 and the sinking fund of about $2,000,000, making $98,500,000, we shall find that there will be a balance at the end of the year to be added to the public debt, of probably $12,000,000. In this present year, in the figures which bring about this result of a possible and probable addition to the public debt of $12,000,000, we shall spend no less than $17,750,000 on the National Transcontinental Railway. If we did not have to make provision for that particularly large and exceptional item, we could close the year, not with an addition to the public debt, but with a reduction of the public debt to the extent of $5,750,000.

I gave the House a few minutes ago the figures of the debt per head up to the 31st of March last, at which time there was a reduction of the public debt. At the end of the current year there will be a considerable addition to the public debt, and therefore it might be thought that would affect adversely the figures I have given of the debt per head. But I believe it is not so. During the past year we have had a particularly large immigration; I believe the population of Canada has increased during the past year very much more than in any previous year in our history, and I have no doubt that if a careful account be taken, it will be found that the increase in population will more than balance this increase in the public debt, and the net result will be that the debt per head at the close of this fiscal year will be no higher than it was in the figures I gave some little while ago.

I have spoken of the expenditure on the National Transcontinental Railway. We have for several years been spending money on that great work. At the beginning of the work the demands upon the public treasury were not great, but we are now reaching a point when the expenditures for that service will and must continue to be large. I find we have expended up to date on the National Transcontinental Railway, that is on the eastern division which the government are constructing, the following sums:

| Year. | Amount. |
|---|---|
| 1904 | $ 6,249 40 |
| 1905 | 778,491 28 |
| 1906 | 1,841,269 95 |
| 1907 | 5,537,867 50 |

Making a total up to the date of the last public accounts, of $8,163,878.13. To this if we add the estimate for the current year, of $17,748,000, we find that at the close of the present fiscal year on the 31st of March, we shall have spent within a few dollars of $26,000,000 on the National Transcontinental Railway.

Mr. TAYLOR. I thought my hon. friend was going to build it for $13,000,000.

Mr. FIELDING. That was one of my hon. friend's dreams ; if I wished to be more accurate and more just I would use a harsher word. The total expenditure on the Transcontinental Railway up to the 31st of March, to be exact, according to the actual outlay at the end of last March, and the estimated outlay this year, will be $25,912,-478.13. In considering the question of our increased expenditures it is well to bear in mind that by the amendment of the British North America Act we are now paying to the provincial governments very much larger allowances than were paid in former years. Provincial subsidies have hitherto amounted to $6,745,133 per annum, but under the recent amendment to the British North America Act these provincial subsidies now call for $9,032,774, an increase for that item alone of $2,287,641. That, of course will stand in the general statement of expenditure of this government, but it is to be remembered that it is money which this government does not expend at all, but turns over to the provincial governments of the country to administer it as they think best and, I have no doubt, for the development of their respective provinces.

The trade returns for the eleven months which have passed are by no means discouraging. The total imports for eleven months to February 29, 1907, were $308,-264,306; for the corresopnding eleven months to February 29, 1908, the imports were $341,175,095.

Mr. FOSTER. Are these imports for home consumption ?

Mr. FIELDING. These are the total imports. The total exports for the eleven months of 1907 were $266,076,601 ; for the eleven months of 1908 they were $261,434,-521. It will be seen from this statement that the imports have somewhat increased and that the exports show a slight decrease, but on the whole the statement of the trade up to the present time is by no means discouraging, although I quite realize that we are now at the stage when there must be some falling off in our revenue.

Mr. FIELDING.

FISCAL YEAR 1908-9.

Turning now to the fiscal year 1908-1909, upon which we shall soon enter, I think I am correct when I say that the general feeling of our business men is one of hopeful confidence united with much caution. We are just emerging from a period of world wide financial stringency. Financial systems and institutions of all countries have been severely tried. It should be a gratification to us all that none have stood the test better than those of Canada. In the single case in which one of our banks became embarrassed, sister institutions promptly took over its affairs and its business went on without the slightest hitch so far as the public interests were concerned. One of the conditions which accentuated the difficulties in the neighbouring republic was, fortunately, unknown here. I refer to what is called the hoarding of money. In the United States men lost faith in financial institutions and withdrew their money and locked it up. Happily nothing of the kind occurred in Canada. There was a justifiable confidence in our banking institutions. Where money was withdrawn it was not to be hoarded, but to be applied to investment or other useful purposes. The curtailment of credit naturally produced some embarrassments. But even out of this condition good may come. There was danger that the rapid expansion might lead to overtrading and imprudent ventures. It is as well, perhaps, that all concerned should be warned against such things. Business has received a check, but I do not look for a continued period of depression. Conditions should improve in the early summer, and if we are blessed with a season of good crops confidence will be fully restored.

On the part of the government it is a time for caution, and yet a time for courage. Large new enterprises, which would call for great outlay, may well be laid aside for a little while. But the works which we already have in hand, and perhaps other works not calling for heavy outlay, must not be neglected. Particularly must we not fail to push forward the great enterprise of the Transcontinental Railway. We have reached a stage in that enterprise which calls for heavy expenditure, yet we feel it our duty to urge upon the commissioners the prosecution of the work so that the new road may be completed at the earliest possible date.

The main estimates for the year, already in the possession of the House, propose to appropriate on account of consolidated fund $76,871,471, and for capital account, $42,-365,620.

Supplementary estimates will come in due course and add considerably to these appropriations. It must be remembered, however, that the estimates do not usually by any means represent the actual expenditure. A considerable portion of the appropriations of every year remains unexpended and the works concerned are provided for in the following year.

As to the probable revenue for the coming year I would wish to speak with caution. The monetary stringency is producing a curtailment of imports. Some of my hearers will not regard that as a misfortune. I anticipate a falling off in our revenue in the early part of the new year. I am hopeful that later on the loss will, to a considerable extent, be made up and that in the end we shall find the revenue fairly satisfactory. I am estimating a revenue of $96,500,000, for the year soon to close. I do not feel justified in expecting so large a revenue for the coming year. Probably it will be more likely to fall below $90,000,000 than rise above it. Such a revenue would enable us to retain our strong financial position. We should have to be content with a reduction of the surplus. But I would expect the revenue to enable us to provide for all our consolidated fund expenditure and something as well by way of surplus. For our capital expenditure, or a considerable part of it, we shall undoubtedly have to add to our public debt. But, as I have often pointed out, it is unreasonable to expect that in a country like Canada we can carry on our work of development without occasional additions to that debt. If we have to add in the coming year to our debt account, it will not be for ordinary expenditure, but for our work on capital account, and particularly for our great work of the Transcontinental Railway. For that work alone we are asking an appropriation of $30,000,000 for the coming year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the hon. minister if he has an estimate of the total cost of the eastern division of the road ?

Mr. FIELDING. No. Estimates were made in the earlier discussion, but I have not had them revised of late.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Would the hon. minister say at what he estimates the total expenditure ? He mentioned $30,000,000 for the Transcontinental Railway.

Mr. FIELDING. I have not spoken of the capital expenditure for the current year, except for the Transcontinental Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. How much is that ?

Mr. FIELDING. Thirty millions is what we are asking for. Of course, the estimates of the capital expenditure are before the House, but I have referred to this item particularly which is a large one and which seriously affects our finances.

LOANS.

In regard to the general question of loans, always a matter of interest, we have been exceptionally fortunate in not being required to go very often to the money market. Our large surpluses have from time to time enabled us to meet payments which under ordinary conditions would have necessitated the borrowing of money. We have from time to time borrowed money temporarily on treasury bills, but as I have already pointed out we have added very little to the public debt. Now that we are in the midst of our Transcontinental Railway expenditure it is, of course, to be expected that we must go more frequently to the money market. Besides, we have reached a period in which we have to provide for very considerable maturing loans which have to be renewed, and this will necessitate our turning to the money market. Some have already been provided for and others are the subject of careful consideration and observation of the money market. In the last eight months we have borrowed over $31,000,000 in the London and Paris markets. This money, obtained at a time of financial stringency, was obtained, on the whole, on favourable terms. Some portion was obtained on treasury bills some on short term loans, and some, as in a recent case, on a long term loan.

MATURED LIABILITIES.

On the 1st May, 1907, there fell due in London £1,831,398 1s. 5d. This represented a portion of the 4 per cent loan originally issued in 1874, which matured on the 1st May, 1904, and which was extended for three years from that date. On the 1st May, 1907, it was extended for a further period of four years to the 1st May, 1911, at the same rate of interest and with the same option to that offered to the holders in 1904, namely, the option of conversion into 3 per cent stock due 1938 ; the basis of conversion being £105 of threes for each £100 of fours, the option to expire on the 1st April, 1910.

This option was availed of to some extent by those who extended their holdings in 1904. The extension in 1904 amounted to £2,500,000. The balance between that and the amount extended in 1907 represents the conversion into 1938 stock.

On the 1st December, 1906, $500,000 3½ per cent Canadian currency debentures matured and were paid off at Ottawa on presentation. These debentures were originally issued on the 1st December, 1891.

TEMPORARY BORROWING.

To provide for expenditure in connection with the Transcontinental Railway and other expenditures which could not be met out of the revenue, a temporary loan of £500,000 was made on treasury bills on the 17th August, 1907, for one year at the rate of 4½ per cent.

In December a short term loan for £1,500,000, to fall due 1st October, 1912, and bearing 4 per cent interest, was negotiated; and on the 24th January a further temporary loan of £1,000,000 on treasury bills was made for one year at 4¼ per cent.

On the 6th February, 1907, a further temporary loan on the security of treasury bills was negotiated for $2,000,000 at the rate of 4 per cent for one year, one million of which was discounted by the Banque de Paris et de Pays Bas and the other million by the Crédit Foncier Franco-Canadien. It was felt that at the time these temporary loans were made it would not be in the public interest, on account of the unsatisfactory state of the money market and the high rates of interest prevailing, to make a loan of a more permanent character. Conditions, however, have recently improved, and as on the 1st April, 1908, the Intercolonial guaranteed 4 per cent loan of £1,500,000 matures, it was thought advisable in providing for this at the same time to provide a further amount of £1,500,000, or £3,000,000 in all, the rate of interest being 3½ per cent. This loan is redeemable on the 1st July, 1950, with the option to the government to redeem at par on or after the 1st July, 1930, on giving six months' notice. Holders of the £1,500,000 4 per cent guaranteed Intercolonial Railway bonds maturing the 1st April, 1908, were given the option of exchanging their bonds for an equivalent nominal amount of this stock. The issue price of the loan was par and the amount was over-subscribed. Holders to the amount of £1,123,000 of the bonds maturing 1st April, 1908, exchanged for bonds of an equal nominal amount of the new loan.

To sum up, the following amounts have been borrowed temporarily since 17th August:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Treasury bills.. .. .. .. | £1,500,000= | $7,300,000 |
| Short term loan.. .. .. .. | 1,500,000= | 7,300,000 |
| Treasury bills.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | | 2,000,000 |
| In all.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | | $16,600,000 |
| To which must be added the long term loan of .. .. .. .. | £3,000,000= | 14,600,000 |
| Or a total of.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | | $31,200,000 |

A very interesting feature to which I wish to call the attention of the House is that the people over there who invest in Canadian securities seem to be fond of their Canadian investments and stay with them, and so when they are offered an opportunity of exchanging an expiring loan for a new one, in a great many instances they have come forward and simply continued their investment with Canada.

EARLY MATURING LIABILITIES.

On the 1st November, 1908, a 4 per cent loan of 1878-9 of £4,500,000 falls due. The amount of sinking fund of the loan is £1,128,014. This is a large obligation to be met, and due regard must be had to it in arranging our financial affairs. It is hoped that the summer will see still more improvement in the market conditions. Such arrangements will be made to meet the obligation as will be considered best in the public interest.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister has not said anything about the overdraft, I think about £300,000, which he mentioned earlier and which was paying Bank of England rate.

Mr. FIELDING. I mentioned in an earlier discussion this session that there was an overdraft from our financial agents in London, and the arrangements which have been standing for some time have been that the bank charges us the current bank rates on overdrafts. It so happened that an overdraft occurred at a time when the bank rate stood remarkably high—higher than for the previous thirty years—the rate being 7 per cent. According to the letter of the understanding the bank might have required 7 per cent, but as the result of negotiations between the bank and myself the rate was fixed at 6 per cent for the short time during which the overdraft existed. The overdraft has since been paid off and it does not now form any part of our indebtedness.

I shall say a word now with regard to certain financial transactions between the government and the Quebec Bridge Company.

It will be remembered that last session the government took authority to advance money to the bridge company. The government had previously obtained from parliament authority to issue a guarantee of bonds to assist the bridge company. These bonds were prepared with a view to being sold in the money market, but the money market conditions proving unfavourable the bonds were not sold, but were used as a basis on which the company could raise money from the banks, and the money to carry on the bridge work for some considerable time was raised in that way.

It became apparent to the government that we would probably have to take over the bridge. Although no Act to that effect has ever passed we have the power in our legislation to take over the bridge provided parliament shall authorize it. That is to say, as between the government and the bridge company we have the right to take over the bridge, but we can only take it over when authorized by parliament. I think the general tendency of discussion has been towards the taking over of the bridge. Now, it appeared to us in that view, if these bonds had to be sold in an unfavourable money market at a sacrifice we might be obliged to buy them back in a few years at par, and we thought that in view of the shape the bridge question was taking it was better that these bonds should not be issued and that the company should arrange in some other way. Accordingly at the last session of parliament we obtained authority to advance to the bridge company the amount required in the same way that we advance it to the Montreal Harbour Commission, taking over the bonds of the corporation and holding them as against the loans. We were proceeding to take action under that authority with a view of advancing the money to the company, and thus enabling them to close their transactions with the bank, when just at that particular stage the bridge disaster occurred, and for the time being further action was suspended. However, the reasons which prompted the presenting of the legislation last session still continue. We all recognize the fact that the bridge has to be completed and the general indications are that the government will have to take the enterprise over. How they may manage it and handle it is a question that has yet to be dealt with. At all events, with the fair presumption that the government will have to take the bridge over, it seems to me that the reason still holds good that we should not allow these bonds to be sold in the market at a sacrifice. We have therefore, determined to carry out the legislation of last session. We have recently advanced $2,000,000 to the bridge company to enable it to pay a part of its indebtedness to the bank. We are arranging to carry out the Act of last year to the fullest extent by giving them as soon as it can be arranged the balance of the money required. The bonds will then be entirely released; the bank will not any longer have any claim upon them; they will rest in the vaults of the government and the debt will become a debt to the government just as the debt of the Montreal Harbour Commission.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the claim of the bank ?

Mr. FIELDING. The amount advanced by the bank was $5,016,453, to which some interest of course has to be added. We have recently advanced to the company $2,000,000 and we shall in a short time arrange to pay them the balance.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to say how much the country will have put into the bridge when that transaction will have been consummated in the way he has just mentioned ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid I cannot give a definite answer. We appropriated a subsidy, a part of which was paid, but when the Guarantee Act was passed, if I recollect aright, we cancelled the balance. The money actually paid in, as I have described the transaction, will be $5,016,000, with interest, plus that portion of the subsidy which was originally paid, but the amount of which I cannot state.

Mr. MILLER. $374,353.

Mr. FIELDING. I know there was $1,000,000 voted, a portion of which was paid, and the rest was cancelled by the guarantee. I think my hon. friend asked about the rate of interest. The rate of interest arranged by the bridge company with the bank, I understood, was 4½ per cent.

Mr. BRISTOL. Was there not some agreement between the Bank of Montreal, the government and the bridge company whereby 5 per cent was to be paid ?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think so. It may be that the bridge company agreed to pay that rate, and if so I do not think the government objected. I do not recollect any special agreement about it.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister know whether the bridge company has any outstanding debts other than the bank advances ?

Mr. FIELDING. I have not given the matter close attention lately and am not able to answer definitely, but I understand that all the funds for the purpose of the bridge have been obtained from the Bank of Montreal and are included in this debt. There may be amounts of which I have no knowledge.

Mr. AMES. In the amount of $30,000,000 which the minister says will be required for the Transcontinental Railway for the coming year, does he include the amount required for the bridge ?

Mr. FIELDING. No. The Quebec bridge, while it has a relation to the Transcontinental Railway, is for this purpose treated separately.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the government any estimate of the additional expenditure required to complete the Quebec bridge ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, that is a branch of the subject to which I have not given my attention. I am only explaining our financial transactions. That will come under the Department of Railways and Canals.

On one or two occasions in previous years I have presented to the House diagrams illustrative of the progress of Canada. I have had similar diagrams prepared for the current year, and they will be distributed in due course. I will present, however, figures which will show at a glance the great progress Canada has made in a comparatively few years. I take statistics illustrating thirty years of the progress of Canada :

Total Trade

| | |
|---|---|
| Year ended June 30, 1877.. .. .. .. | $175,203,355 |
| 1887.. .. .. .. .. | 202,408,047 |
| 1897.. .. .. .. .. | 257,168,862 |
| 1907.. .. .. .. .. | 617,964,952 |

Total Imports.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Year ended June 30, | 1877 | $ 99,327,962 |
| | 1887 | 112,892,236 |
| | 1897 | 119,218,609 |
| | 1907 | 359,793,278 |

Total Exports.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Year ended June 30, | 1877 | $ 75,875,393 |
| | 1887 | 89,515,811 |
| | 1897 | 137,950,253 |
| | 1907 | 258,171,674 |

Total Trade with Great Britain.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Year ended June 30, | 1877 | $ 74,823,292 |
| | 1887 | 83,455,681 |
| | 1897 | 98,935,040 |
| | 1907 | 208,745,193 |

Railway traffic—Tons carried.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Year ended June 30, | 1877 | 6,859,796 |
| | 1887 | 16,356,335 |
| | 1897 | 25,300,331 |
| | 1907 | 63,866,133 |

Bank discounts.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Year ended June 30, | 1877 | $126,222,470 |
| | 1887 | 169,357,326 |
| | 1897 | 226,960,482 |
| | 1907 | 639,970,696 |

Deposits by the people in the Chartered Banks.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Year ended June 30, | 1877 | $ 62,129,706 |
| | 1887 | 107,154,483 |
| | 1897 | 201,141,688 |
| | 1907 | 589,459,889 |

Deposits in the Post Office and Government Savings Banks.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Year ended June 30, | 1877 | $ 7,470,630 |
| | 1887 | 40,832,275 |
| | 1897 | 48,934,975 |
| | 1907 | 61,493,671 |

I think, Sir, I should avail myself of this opportunity to give to the House some explanation of the action of the government in connection with what is called the moving of the crops last autumn. I shall find it necessary to present to the House a Bill in a day or two, and before that Bill comes down I shall see that all the papers in connection with the matter shall be laid on the table, so that hon. gentlemen, before being asked to deal with the Bill, will have all the information before them. In the meantime, I may state briefly the history of the transaction. The money stringency, which was general, was particularly severe in our western country. That was natural, for the autumn is its period of greatest activity. At that season very much depends on the arrangements for the moving of the crops to the sea-board. At the beginning of November urgent representations were made to the government that the fiscal arrangements which could be made with the banks were insufficient to provide the means for handling the crops. We were informed that the ordinary lines of credit granted by the banks had either been exhausted or were too limited to meet the emergency. The condition of the crop was another feature to which our attention was called. Unfortunately, a considerable portion of the crop of last season was touched by frost, and its condition, we were advised, was such that it could hardly be carried over the winter with safety. For that and various reasons it seemed to be important that the crops should be moved and we were asked to devise some means of granting aid. Mr. Gladstone, or Lord Beaconsfield, on one occasion when told that something must be done said that evidently the party who said so did not know what ought to be done. I suppose that those who began this movement had no very clear idea of the form in which relief should be granted. I must do the banks the justice, if justice it be, to say that they were not the movers in the matter; they did not initiate the demand for aid. Indeed, it is fair to them to say that when the matter was first mooted, some of our best bankers were inclined to think that there was no need of further aid—that the banking facilities of the country were sufficient to meet all the requirements. However, representations continud to come to us in such form as demanded consideration. One of the first communications the government received on the subject was from one of our trusted officers in the Northwest, the warehouse commissioner, Mr. Castle, a gentleman in every way capable of advising what was the need of the situation. We summoned Mr. Castle to Ottawa and had the benefit of his knowledge and advice. The council of the Winnipeg Board of Trade urged upon us the necessity of taking action; the Manitoba Grain Growers' Association urged that we should take action; in many ways representations were made to us that it was really necessary that something should be done and done quickly. The season of navigation was about to close. Very much depends upon what may be done within the last two or three weeks in moving a crop when it has to be moved almost wholly by water—for only a limited quantity of this crop is moved all-rail. We came to the conclusion that the subject was one that we could not afford to set aside. Our bankers, who at first, were very dubious about it and thought it not necessary, modified their views, and advised the government that some such action as proposed should be taken. The conclusion of the whole matter was that we decided that we would aid such of the banks as were engaged in the grain trade, and might wish to avail themselves of the assistance, with loans not to exceed in the aggregate $10,000,000. When this matter was first announced, the banks, as I say, did not look upon it with too much favour, and were slow to take advantage of it. We had proposed that the rates of interest to be paid to the government for this loan should be 6 and 7 per cent. These are, undoubtedly, high rates of interest, but they were no higher than the Bank of England rate at that time, for it was then 7 per cent. So we decided to authorize the advance of this money to the banks on condition that they should repay it within a short time at the rates of interest stated, and should put up securities for the loan which were to be submitted to a committee of banking experts whom I named for that purpose. The gentlemen whom I named were: Mr. Clouston, of the Bank of Montreal: Mr. Thomas Fyshe, former manager of the Merchants' Bank; and Mr. J. M. Courtney, ex-deputy Minister of Finance.

In a short time, an intimation was given to us that the banks were hardly willing to utilize the order in council under the proposed conditions. They said that the rates of interest were so high as to give them no profit. Much of the explanation was given me in conversation, of course, because banks do not like to put themselves on record in these things. It was intimated also that they were unwilling to put up securities in the hands of the government, as it would expose their business affairs to the inspection of the government. Therefore, it seemed that there was some doubt whether the banks would avail themselves fully of the aid we desired to give. The movement we had in view could only be made successful through the co-operation of the banks, so when we found hesitation on their part, we thought we should try to meet their objection. Some, proud of the strength of our banking institutions, were inclined to think that if a bank accepted aid of this kind from the government it would be a reflection on that bank. That was a mistaken view, of course; but still I know that there was hesitation on that account. Therefore, we decided to modify our arrangement, and let the banks have the money, if they wished to take it, at a lower rate of interest. Under the new arrangement, we allowed the Bank of Montreal to deal directly with the banks, the Bank of Montreal acting as our agent. They were to arrange matters with the banks and collect a rate of interest not less than 4 per cent. That was ultimately agreed upon as meaning 4 per cent for sixty days; 5 per cent for a second sixty days, and 6 per cent if payment was delayed longer. The object was to get quick returns, as this was an exceptional transaction.

I am inclined to think that if we had done nothing more than announce the intention to grant this aid much help would have been given, by that simple act, to the west. I have the opinion of eminent bankers who have told me that, as soon as it was announced that the government intended to provide relief for the situation, confidence in the west was restored, that bankers who had been curtailing their credits took a more generous view of the situation, and things began to improve. It has been stated in the public press that nothing was done under this arrangement, that the government did not give any money to the banks, or the banks to the people; that the whole thing was a misunderstanding—and I am afraid that sometimes even harder words were used. But I am glad to be able to say to the House that much was done under the arrangement. We found, after we had reduced the rates of interest in the manner I have described that the banks did take the funds thus offered to them by the government to the extent of $5,315,000. Nearly all of this money has now been returned. At this moment about $965,000 remains outstanding, and there can be no question that the balance will be promptly paid. What threatened to be a serious crisis in the financial situation of the west was averted, confidence was restored, the situation was improved, and the interests of the government were protected at every point.

Now came the question how we could provide this money. We do not have $10,000,000 always lying idle in the treasury of Canada; and, at a moment when the Bank of England rate was 7 per cent, it was not easy to borrow money quickly—and this was a transaction which required prompt handling, if we could borrow at all.

Mr. FOSTER. When did the Bank of England raise its rate to 7?

Mr. FIELDING. Early in November. It was 7 per cent when this transaction occurred. I am sure of that, for it was the basis of our proceedings. It was raised to 7 in November, and continued until January, if my recollection serves me well. There had been no such banking rate for thirty-four years, that is, the last experience of such a rate had been in the year 1873. It was obvious that, if the government attempted to borrow this money hurriedly in England, it might not be able to borrow it at all, for, in the existing state of the market, it was not a question of credit but of being able to secure the money on any terms. And, even though we could borrow, the borrowing might have a bad effect upon the general credit of Canada for a long time It seemed a case where the government might be justified in impairing to a small extent the reserves held against the redemption of Dominion notes. Any part of the $10,000,000 required could be furnished in the shape of Dominion notes, which we should issue in the usual way: but the issue of that amount of notes would carry us to a figure beyond our gold reserve. Though I speak of our gold reserve, it is not, in Canada, entirely gold, but is in part imperial guaranteed debentures, but I treat the two as one. We found that it was necessary, if we would provide this money promptly, in some degree to affect the position of our reserve. We decided to accept from the borrowing banks the securities they were able to give us, plus the guarantee of the Bank of Montreal—that is, the Bank of Montreal not only acted as our agent, but we required them to guarantee the whole transaction—so as I say, we agreed to accept these securities, plus the guarantee of the Bank of Montreal as equivalent to the guaranteed debentures which we hold in our reserve fund and against which our notes are issued. It was a technical departure from our Dominion Notes Act which will require the ratification and approval of this parliament. But I think I will be justified in saying that if ever there was an occasion when the government might put a strain upon that question of their reserve, it was in the condition of affairs then existing and for the purpose which I have indicated. The highest point reached by the circulation was on December 31 when it was $62,623,628. This included the extra issue. But for this extra issue, the circulation would have been $57,500,000 and the reserve of gold and guaranteed debentures held against this would have been equal to 61 per cent. The effect of the issue was to reduce our percentage of reserve to 56 per cent, a difference of 5 per cent. For this 5 per cent reduction in our reserve we had the securities put up by all the banks to which the money was advanced, and we had, in addition to that, the guarantee of the Bank of Montreal. Thus I think it will be found that while there was a technical departure from the law governing our Dominion notes, which calls for ratification by the parliament of Canada if parliament shall so approve, still the occasion was a very exceptional one and one upon which we were justified in adopting exceptional methods. Even putting aside the securities to which I have referred, we still had, at the worst point, a reserve of 56 per cent of our total issue, which most financiers will say is a very strong position.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the date of these advances, when the loans were made?

Mr. FIELDING. The order in council was passed on November 12, and the advances followed on towards the latter part of November. I could not give the dates but I will see that, in the papers brought down, the dates are given.

The experience that we have had, the difficulties of the past season, must suggest to us all, particularly to those from the west, that there is some need of greater elasticity of our currency so that we will be able to meet a difficulty of this kind in the future, without even a technical violation of our currency laws. I think the best form in which we can do that is by extending the powers of the banks with respect to the issue of their circulation. I think it well to state at once my view in that matter and this statement will be followed in due course by a Bill amending the Bank Act. It seems to me to be the part of wisdom for the government to authorize the banks to issue what, for convenience, may be called an 'emergency currency,' (using an expression frequently employed in the United States) to allow the banks to issue for a limited time, during the crop movement, the season of emergency, currency to the extent of 15 per cent of their combined paid up capital and rest or reserve, these taken together measuring the strength and stability of a bank. I propose in a Bill which it is my intention to introduce to authorize the banks during the emergency period of crop movement which would be defined, beginning probably in October and ending after the turn of the year, to issue circulation to the extent of 15 per cent of their combined reserve and paid-up capital.

Mr. PRINGLE. Will the minister then increase the deposit which the bank will be required to put up to protect the note holder ?

Mr. FIELDING. Oh, yes, certainly. For every note a bank issues, it must put up proper deposit in the guarantee fund.

It may be thought that we would get the necessary additional currency by an increase of the bank capital That is a very desirable form of increase, and if we could rely upon the increase of the bank capital perhaps the other method would not be called for. Our bank capital has increased to a considerable extent, as will be seen by these figures for five year periods:

| Year. | Bank Capital. |
|---|---|
| 1895 | $61,701,007 |
| 1900 | 64,735,145 |
| 1905 | 82,199,900 |
| 1908 (January 31) | 93,057,255 |

This indicates a very considerable increase in the banking capital of the country; but in proportion to the increase in the trade of Canada the increase of the banking capital has not been large. Our home trade has largely increased as we know, but we have not statistics which will accurately measure that trade. Our foreign trade, for which we have accurate statistics, has enormously increased. In 1895 our foreign trade was $224,000,000 and in 1907 it was $617,000,000. Thus the trade of the country has enormously increased while the banking capital has, relatively, increased in a less degree.

The explanation of that of course is that the savings of the people in the way of deposits have furnished the money that has enabled the banks to handle this very large business. But the savings of the people, large and generous as they have been, are proving insufficient now to handle the business, and I think, in view of the fact that the banking capital has increased so slowly, we must look for help in the form which I have suggested. It is well to remember that the increase of bank capital may bring with it embarrassment as well as aid. Our banking capital is owned in Canada, very largely.

Mr. W F. MACLEAN. Why should it not be owned very largely abroad?

Mr. FIELDING. That is another question.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. That should be the object of legislation.

Mr. FIELDING. Our banking capital is largely owned in Canada, a small percentage being owned abroad. The people in Canada who own the banking capital will probably find their surplus moneys locked up at the present time in various forms, they may be in bank deposits or in business enterprises; to call upon them to put up new capital might simply mean the transferring of money from one form of investment to another and this might be a cause of embarrassment to the shareholders, who might not be able to comply with the demand for increased capital. Of course if we can sell the bank shares abroad, as has been done in some cases, and bring in new capital, that would be the better condition, but then we have no guarantee that that can be done. While we have something to hope from the enlargement of the bank capital, because some large banks have already made application for the necessary authority and will undoubtedly increase their capital, I do not think we are justified in the belief that even with this increased capital we shall get enough money to handle the immensly increasing business of Canada. We therefore propose as a reserve fund, if I may so call it, to allow the banks to have this power of issuing a special circulation to the extent and on the basis I have mentioned.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN How much would that be on the present capital of the banks ?

Mr. FIELDING. The total paid up capital is $93,057,255. The total rest or reserve is $71,071,984. These two items combined, the capital paid up and the rest or reserve, make $164,129,239. Fifteen per cent of this would amount to $24,619,385. It is fair to say, however, that all the banks would not avail themselves of that privilege. Some of the banks are engaged in lines of business which move regularly and smoothly and probably they would not desire to engage in this crop movement business which calls for expansion. However that may be, it will be seen that the addition to the circulation last autumn of five or six million dollars was a great help and enabled us to tide over what would otherwise have been perhaps a serious difficulty in the west. We think that if we give the banks the power to issue this circulation we shall be doing something to meet a difficulty which has existed and which we may expect to exist in a less degree in the future. I do not expect that such a severe condition as that of last fall will occur very soon again. Our object in this is not to give the banks additional privileges, but additional means of meeting the country's demands, and we propose that on this extra circulation which they are to be allowed to issue they shall pay a tax to the government not to exceed 5 per cent. If banks are to handle the business —banks as a rule are not benevolent enterprises, they will expect a reasonable profit— they could afford to pay the government 5 per cent, in some conditions 4 per cent, if the market is favourable, and then lend the money to their customers at ordinary business rates. However, we do not feel that we should grant them this privilege for nothing, and we require them to pay a tax to the government not to exceed 5 per cent upon the circulation which is thus to be issued.

We propose to make some important changes in the excise laws, but they are not intended to affect the revenue. We propose to readjust the taxation on tobacco. There is a well known expression : Readjustment without increase. This, I think, is entirely a case of that kind. At all events, we do not aim at increase ; we aim to so readjust the tobacco duties as to meet the conditions which have arisen, but without adding anything to the burden of taxation. The first object of the change will be to establish a uniform rate of licenses for tobacco manufacturers instead of the varying rates which now exist. The second object will be to carry a larger part of the burden of taxation on the raw leaf as it is introduced into the manufacture of tobacco; and the third purpose is to establish a uniform stamp for cigars. The resolutions bearing on that subject will be introduced by my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue, and I shall lay them on the table at the conclusion of my remarks. But I may present at once a summary of the changes proposed. It will be observed that some of them seem to be very important, but they work out so as to leave the burden of taxation substantially as it is to-day :

MEMORANDUM ON TOBACCO DUTIES.—EXCISE.

| | Present Rates. | Proposed Rates. |
|---|---|---|
| | $ cts. | $ cts. |
| Chewing and smoking tobacco from imported leaf....per lb. | 25 | 5 |
| Manufactured tobacco from native leaf.. .. .. .. ..per lb. | 5 | 5 |
| Snuff containing not more than 40 per cent of moisture..per lb | 25 | 5 |
| Moist snuff containing over 40 per cent moisture, in packages of less than five pounds. per lb | 25 | 5 |
| The same, in packages of five pounds and over.... ..per lb. | 18 | 5 |
| Cigars from imported leaf..per thousand. | 6 00 | 2 00 |
| Cigars from native tobacco..per thousand. | 3 00 | 2 00 |
| Cigars in packages of less than ten each.. .. ..per thousand. | 7 00 | 3 00 |
| Cigarettes from domestic leaf weighing not more than three pounds per thousand.. ..per thousand. | 1 50 | 2 40 |

| | Present Rates. | Proposed Rates |
|---|---|---|
| | $ cts. | $ cts. |
| Cigarettes from foreign leaf weighing not more than three pounds per thousand.. ..per thousand. | 3 00 | 2 40 |
| Cigarettes from either foreign or native leaf, weighing more than three pounds per thousand.. .. .. ..per thousand. | 8 00 | 7 00 |
| Foreign leaf tobacco, unstemmed.. .. .. .. ..per lb. | 10 | 28 |
| Foreign leaf tobacco, stemmed. per lb. | 14 | 42 |

It is not intended that this change of rates shall take effect immediately. It will be necessary for the department to equip itself with a quantity of new stamps to meet the new conditions, and in the resolutions I shall present it will be proposed that these rates shall take effect and go into operation by proclamation of the Governor in Council. As it is not intended that the burden of taxation shall be in any respect varied, it is thought that there will be no disadvantage in pursuing that course.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is there any change in the spirit duties?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister has read us what he proposes as the rates, but he has not given us any reason for the changes.

Mr. FIELDING. I said the reasons were, first, a desire to have a uniform license instead of a varying license; in the second place, a desire to have a uniform stamp rather than the varying stamps they now use in the cigar trade; in the third place, the desire is to have the tax on the raw leaf rather than on the manufactured article. The taxation will be collected on the raw leaf to a larger extent than it is at present. This, we think, will be a convenience to the department, and it is in accordance with the wish of a large proportion of the people interested in the tobacco trade. However, I will put the resolutions in full on the table, they will appear on the Order Paper, and my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue will deal with them at a later stage.

Coming now, in conclusion, to the question of the customs tariff, I have to say that we do not propose to make any changes in it at present. We made a revision of the tariff a year ago, and while I do not imagine that it is a perfect instrument, we think that on the whole it has worked well and is well adapted to the requirements of the country. Some industries have made representations that things are not quite as well in their line as they would like to have them, and they would be glad to have some change. I do not suppose that we shall ever reach a time when there will not be some persons who think that there should be a change, that present conditions are not all they wish. There is always a disposition to feel that when any business difficulty arises the proper remedy is to be found in a higher tariff. One would think that what is occurring across the line to the south of us would go far to dispel that old-time heresy. Over there they have the benefit, if it be a benefit, of a much higher tariff than we have in Canada. We know that the conditions of business over there during the past few months have been very much worse than they have been with us. However that may be, we think that the Canadian tariff is in a pretty fair condition, and we think that those who have made representations to us with a view to a change—in some respects, possibly not in all—will find that as general business improves, as we think it will in a short time, their disadvantages will disappear and their industry will have all the encouragement that it reasonably requires.

One deputation came to us at the eleventh hour. Yesterday we were waited upon by a deputation of quite a number of gentlemen largely interested in the production of pork, who complained to us that the peculiar conditions existing at the present time in relation to their trade placed them at a disadvantage. They seemed to think that to some extent at least that disadvantage arose from an evasion of the customs laws as respects the importation of foreign pork; and they seemed to think that if the customs laws were more rigidly carried out in respect to the dumping clause, they would get some measure of relief. Whether they are correct in their impression as to the cause of the evil is a matter to be inquired into. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs has taken that matter up with a view to looking into it very carefully, and if there has been any failure on the part of the customs to administer the law properly, I am sure the Minister of Customs will be glad to find a remedy. The production of pork, particularly of bacon and hams, has become in Canada a very large and important trade, and we should be very careful to see that everything possible is done to encourage it. I am hopeful that the result of the investigation by the Minister of Customs and of the application of the law, if necessary, in a stricter form, will give these gentlemen the relief that they desire.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Does the minister mean by that that the Chicago article is now flooding the Canadian market?

Mr. FIELDING. The complaint made is that a considerable quantity is coming in and sold at prices that they cannot fairly compete with; they suggested that there was something illegitimate in the prices.

Mr. BRODER. Was the deputation composed of people outside the trade?

Mr. FIELDING. They were chiefly representing the farming interests, I believe, and I think some of the gentlemen were more or less connected with the packing trade, too. However, these representations came to us only yesterday, and I do not now say more than they are receiving the careful consideration and attention of the government.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Does the new French treaty have any effect on this trade?

Mr. FIELDING. No; the new French treaty is not yet in operation. But if I had any occasion to mention it, I should recall the fact that my hon. friend condemned the treaty and voted for it.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the House to understand that this was a representation of the farmers or of the pork packers that met the hon. minister yesterday?

Mr. FIELDING. I understand that the deputation was chiefly representing the farming interest. Although there were one or two gentlemen having some interest in the packing trade the farmers' interest was the one most strongly represented to us.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Does the hon. the Minister think that Canadian packers would prefer to sell American products as Canadian products if they could bring them in here cheaply?

Mr. FIELDING. I think that the Canadian packers would not prefer to bring in American pork to sell as Canadian and to sends it across the water and get the benefit of the great reputation that Canadian pork has. If that has been done I trust that between my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) and my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) there is some machinery to prevent it.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the tendency in late years has been to let the House be content with a budget speech not so long as some of us have, in times past imposed upon it and I thought that I would be content with a somewhat concise statement of the financial position of the country and not having any tariff changes as respects customs to propose there is no reason why I should continue my remarks. I therefore beg to move:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and that the House resolve itself into a Committee of Ways and Means to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved that it is expedient that the Inland Revenue Act be amended as follows:

1. That section 275 of the said Act be repealed and the following substituted therefor:

275. The person in whose favour a license for manufacturing tobacco or cigars is granted, shall, upon receiving such license pay to the collector the sum of fifty dollars.

2. That section 279 of the said Act be repealed and the following substituted therefor:

279. There shall be imposed, levied and collected on tobacco and cigars manufactured in Canada, the following duties of excise, which shall be paid to the collector as by this Act provided, that is to say:

(a) on all chewing and smoking tobacco, fine-cut, cavendish, plug or twist, cut or granulated, of every description,—on tobacco twisted by hand or reduced into a condition to be consumed or, in any manner other than the ordinary mode of drying and curing, prepared for sale or consumption, even if prepared without the use of any machine or instrument and without being pressed or sweetened, —and on all fine-cut shorts and refuse scraps, cuttings and sweepings of tobacco made from raw leaf tobacco or the product in any form, other than in this Act otherwise provided, of raw leaf tobacco, five cents per pound actual weight;

(b) on common Canadian twist, when made solely from tobacco grown in Canada, and on the farm or premises where grown, by the cultivator duly licensed therefor or in a licensed tobacco manufactory, five cents per pound actual weight;

(c) on all snuff made from raw leaf tobacco, or the product in any form of raw leaf tobacco, or any substitute for tobacco, ground, dry, scented or otherwise, of all descriptions, when prepared for use, five cents per pound actual weight;

(d) snuff flour, when sold or removed for use or consumption, shall pay the same duty as snuff, and shall be put up in packages and stamped in the same manner as herein prescribed for snuff completely manufactured,—except that snuff flour not prepared for use, but which needs to be subjected to further processes, by sifting, pickling, scenting or otherwise, before it is in a condition fit for use or consumption, may be sold by one tobacco manufacturer directly to another tobacco manufacturer, and without the payment of the duty, under such regulations as are provided in that behalf by the department;

(e) on cigars of all descriptions, made from raw leaf tobacco, or any substitute therefor, two dollars per thousand;

(f) on all cigars, when put up in packages containing less than ten cigars each, three dollars per thousand;

(g) on cigarettes made from raw leaf tobacco or any substitute therefor, weighing not more than three pounds per thousand, two dollars and forty cents per thousand.

(h) on cigarettes made from raw leaf tobacco or any substitute therefor, weighing more than three pounds per thousand, seven dollars per thousand;

(i) on all foreign raw leaf tobacco, unstemmed, taken out of warehouse for manufacture in any cigar or tobacco manufactory, twenty-eight cents per pound, computed according to the standard of leaf tobacco as hereinbefore established;

(j) on all foreign raw leaf tobacco, stemmed, taken out of warehouse for manufacture in any cigar or tobacco manufactory, forty-two cents per pound computed according to the standard of leaf tobacco as hereinbefore established.

3. In all tobacco manufactories where less than fifty per cent of Canadian raw leaf tobacco is used and where ten per cent, or more of other materials is used, such materials shall be subject to a duty of sixteen cents per pound actual weight.

4. All stemmed and unstemmed raw leaf tobacco and all materials and articles the product in whole or in part of raw leaf tobacco which are in process of manufacture in any tobacco or cigar manufactory licensed to use foreign raw leaf tobacco shall, in addition to the duty already paid upon the raw leaf be subject to the difference between the rate so paid and that hereby imposed, and all other materials in stock in any factory at the time this Act comes into force shall under the conditions of subsection 2 of this section, be subject to the rate of duty therein mentioned, and the quantity upon which such additional duty shall be paid as well as the quantity upon which the percentage of such other materials shall be based shall be determined in such manner as the department directs.

All manufactured tobacco and cigars in bond at the time of the coming into force of this Act shall be subject to the rates of duty thereon now existing, and such rates of duty shall remain in effect so long as any goods in which they apply remain in the bonded warehouse of the manufacturer or any other person.

5. That sections 280 and 281 of the said Act be repealed.

6. That an amendment be made requiring manufacturers of wood alcohol to take out a license and to pay therefor an annual fee of one dollar.

7. That the rates of duty hereby imposed shall come into force and effect upon any such day or days as the Governor General by proclamation directs.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, the new matter which has been brought out by the hon. the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), during the course of his speech, will be taken up in order in the course of the remarks which I may make to the House. Some of it is quite new and it has been pretty difficult to grasp all the significance of it or even to get the facts down. As to the resolutions, for instance, affecting the excise, they are not very clear unless they have greater explanation, and it is quite impossible for me to take these up and follow them without knowing something more about the facts of the case. The minister's explanations were not very extended as to the reasons why these changes were proposed or as to the particular effects they would have. I propose therefore to address some more general remarks to the House taking up the various points made by the hon. the Minister of Finance during the course of his remarks.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that it has been a very favourite custom of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, in speaking in reference to their administrations in Canada, to do three things. In the first place, they have been very careful to depreciate the condition of affairs as they found it in Canada in 1896 when they came into administrative power; in the second place, they have been equally careful to keep as far as possible in the background the great truth that for the last ten years there has been an exceedingly progressive and prosperous condition as regards business matters, that there have been great activity and development among all the great nations of the world in which world wide progress all the principal countries, and Canada amongst the others, have had their share of the great blessing; in the third place, they have been equally careful to make it appear that what prosperity and progress have come to Canada have been due to the policy of the administration at present in power to which the government of the country changed in 1896. Perhaps I could not better illustrate this than by reading a remark made by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) in his place in the House of Commons, not a very long while ago. He proceeds, in the course of his speech, to say:

> From 1891 to 1895, when every one will admit that the national policy was in its decline, when these gentlemen opposite know that the country was not doing as well as it was during the five previous years——

He continues:

> It did not take five years of Liberal rule to make the country prosperous . . . . although the development of production in Canada came quickly and effectively under our policy. During the first few years after we put our policy in force the farmers of Canada began to produce more; the farmers of Canada began to be better off. . . . Then the full effect of our policy came into force; then the country began to feel the full tide of prosperity.

I propose to make that, which might be amplified by speeches from multitudes of partisans and by writings from a great many good party papers, the text of a few remarks by way of recalling to our minds the condition of things in 1896. I think I would be perfectly justified in saying that probably no government ever came into power in Canada at so favourable an opportunity as the government of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in 1896, or found the country in a condition of affairs more broad or stable in its foundations and in its opportunities for progress and development than they found it in 1896. In 1889 and in 1890 a world wide depression commenced and that world wide depression continued for some two, three, or four years striking every considerable country. We do not need to strain our memories to know what took place in the United States of America. Their banks were tumbling in every direction, great industries were putting up their gates, men who had found plenty of employment before were walking the streets asking for employment and finding none and in every grade of business and in every region of industry, there were depression and failure and there were all the consequences which resulted from such conditions. In the Dominion of Canada, to go no further, we felt the effects of the depression, as Canada always feels the effect of a world wide depression and particularly of a depression which takes place in the country to the south of us. But, it is indisputable that in the Dominion of Canada, during these five years of depression and of hard times, comparatively speaking, this country came through that period with probably better results and in a better condition than any other country in the world. I do not need to go far to give proof of that. I go to our own records. The government of that day helped the country to come through that period of depression with the least evil effects to itself. What did we do? The people were aided in the first place by relief from taxation. In 1890 when the first stress of hard times came the aim of the government was to lighten the load of taxation upon the people and in that year taxation was taken off the common necessaries of life to the amount of $521,755. In 1891, pursuing the same course the government struck the duty entirely off all raw sugar and reduced the duty on refined sugar, and in the years from 1891 to 1895 the relief given to the tax payers in that respect alone was $19,851,995, counting the decreased duties upon a nearly equal consumption.

In 1894 a general reduction of the tariff was made involving a saving to the taxpayers of $1,500,000. So that footing up the relief in the way of lessened taxation granted by the government in these years it amounted to $21,873,750. That was one way by which the people were enabled to retain in their pockets as their earnings and their savings a very large amount of money which might otherwise have been taken out of their pockets and spent in the general services of the country, and which enabled them to meet the stress of hard times in better fashion and to come out in better form.

But, Sir, there was another way in which the government aided in that time of trouble. It economized in expenditures. I think a government should always set an example to the country. I think a government ought to act very largely as a business man or as an individual having a business and a home would act, and economize in the matter of expenditures when depression is on. Well, Sir, in 1889 the total expenditures of this country were $43,518,198.

In 1890 we spent $41,770,332.

In 1891 we spent $40,793,208.

In the five years succeeding we spent on an average in round figures $42,000,000 a year. So that by this economy in expenditure we thereby saved to the country in money which we would have had to have borrowed and the burden of carrying which would have been laid upon the people. As showing the reduction in this respect, in 1891 $41,702,383 was expended as against $43,518,198 in 1889. In these two ways the country was helped to go through the period of stress and by that help it came out all the better.

Take some comparative statistics. The fall from 1890 to 1894 in the exports of Great Britain amounted to £47,000,000; in France, £19,000,000; in Germany, £8,000,000 in the United States, $140,000,000; in Australia, £19,000,000. The fall in the imports of Great Britain in that time amounted to £12,000,000; in France, £13,000,000; in Germany, £10,000,000; in the United States, $170,000,000, and in Australia, £19,000,000. But, Sir, in that period when trade was falling both in imports and exports in all these great countries of the world, Canada came through that period with an import trade just about stationary and with an increase of exports in that period of $17,000,000. Her savings increased in that period by $46,000,000; the mileage of her railways increased 2,700 miles; there was a largely increased business in passengers of 1,100,000; in freight of 750,000 tons; there was an increased shipping return in and out (excluding coasting) of 640,000 tons; an increased coasting trade of 2,700,000 tons. Industries were well sustained; the imports of raw material in their principal parts were very nearly doubled in that time. The exports of manufactured goods increased in that time 35 per cent; the exports of agricultural products were $22,000,000 in 1890 and $36,000,000 in 1895, an increase of 65 per cent, and in agricultural and animal products there was an increase in the exports in that time of 35 per cent.

All know how well our banks stood during all that stress; there was not a single failure. The upward movement was well under way in the latter half of 1895 and continued in 1896. May I give one or two statements with reference to that which may have weight. Probably one of the greatest writers on economic subjects, the Hon. Mr. Wells, of the United States, writing in the 'Forum' in 1894 with reference to the Dominion of Canada and the general depression of trade over the world said:

> In the Dominion of Canada separated from us on the north by an imaginary line there has been no panic, no unusual demand for money, no stoppage of industries, no restriction of trade, no increased rate of interest; in short nothing beyond the ordinary course of events except as far as these events may have been influenced by contiguity to what may be termed a financial cyclone whose pathway of destruction was contiguous to but not within Canadian territory.

I could duplicate that statement by the reports of bank managers, of boards of trade in our own country, and by publicists of equal repute with Mr. Wells in other countries and by copious illustrations from the financial papers of Great Britain, but I do not care to place these upon the records; they are within the knowledge of all.

So that in 1896 when these gentlemen came into power, Canada strengthened as well as chastened was on the upward grade in that great march of prosperity, that great outburst of progress and development which probably has had no equal in any period of the world's history. All through the world in every great country for the succeeding ten years, in increasing degree there has been this general record of the stimulation and extension of industries of the great employment of labour, of the immense productions of articles manufactured and grown in the soil and taken from the mine and from the sea; in fact, in all the characteristics of great development and of great commercial interchange between the countries. My hon. friends found when they came into power in 1896 a country united from sea to sea, a country united in sentiment. There was not a single question which really separated the people of this country, one part of it from the other. The only troublous question that was on the surface—it was not nearly as deep as it was made to appear—was the question which was largely fanned into life and kept fanned into life by hon. gentlemen opposite, namely, the famous school question which was debated at that time. But that went very little distance to disturb the good, straight, stable relations of this country. Talked a good deal about on the platform, made a hobby by party papers, given a greater value and a greater force than it intrinsically possessed, it would seem at one time to an outsider to have been a question of great disturbing moment. It was not a question that could not be solved by the good sense of the people; and at no time, in my belief, did it threaten a disturbance of the good feeling and unity which existed between the different sections of the people of this country. Our hon. friends found a Northwest, which had passed the stage of experiment, and which, after ten or twelve years of continuous temptation of the soil, so to speak, the learning to adapt methods of culture to the climate and the variations which existed, came out of that period of experimentation, and in 1896 stood as a great producing agricultural country free from any causes of universal or overpowering disaster. That period of experimentation had passed, and the Northwest in 1896 had made its record and its story as a great country promising immense profits to agriculturists. In 1896 the stream of immigration from the United States and from other countries of the world had begun to set towards that country. In 1896 it was traversed by a great trunk line of railway, with a network of parallel and intersecting lines, which afforded excellent means of ingress and egress for people going and coming and for the products that went in and came out. On the Pacific coast there stretched away to China and Japan and the Australian colonies well equipped lines of steam service, which by the way hon. gentlemen opposite always fought when votes were being asked by the government then in power for their establishment; and on the Atlantic side, stretching down towards the West Indies, and going across to the old country, were other well equipped lines of steamship communication. So that in matters of transportation there was a mechanism ready, abundant and well distributed, as a means for the development and growth of the country. The battle of industrial progress and industrial establishment had been fought out in the preceding eighteen years. Year after year it was fought out at the polls. Year after year the people supported the industrial policy, with protection as its principle, and in 1896, despite whatever may have been said or used in the canvass, the principle of industrial establishment and progress in this country was absolutely settled. The best proof of this fact was that when the gentleman who for eighteen years had fought it at the polls, came into power pledged to eliminate the whole principle of protection, they did not essay the task. They adopted the principle and went forward on the lines which had been laid down by the Liberal-Conservative party. In all these respects, the condition of this country in 1896 was not what my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture presented it as being, in the extract which I have read; nor was it anything else than sane and sound. The period of great industrial prosperity and progress had begun to be opened up. So much for that phase of the question.

That was the condition of things our hon. friends found. What was the task that was ready to their hand? It was a task which had not been imposed upon them by the country, but which had been set by themselves. I want to draw particular attention to this point. These gentlemen, during their eighteen years of profession and canvass, in their march towards the seats of power in this country, had outlined their task and had set it before them for accomplishment. What was it, Sir? The task that they had set for themselves was, in the first place, to lighten the burden of taxation, which they declared was grievous. The system of taxation and the amount of taxation was, to use the vivid language of some of the front benchers, bleeding the people of this country white. Another part of their task as set by themselves was to reduce the expenditure of this country. The right hon. gentleman who leads the government himself stood in the city of Toronto before the elections of 1896, and pledged his word that if the people would put him in power he would reduce the expenditure of this country by some millions of dollars, and would reduce the taxation as well. He was also, with his party, to diminish the public debt, to eliminate the principle of protection, to get for us reciprocity with the United States of America, to secure for us a mutual preference with Great Britain, to lop off over-expenditures in the civil government, to diminish the number of ministerial positions, to rid the people of the burden of superannuation, to cut down the gross expenditure at Rideau Hall, to take away the poison of the reptile press by destroying the newspaper and printing patronage given to friends of the party in power, to make the civil service more in consonance with the requirements of the country, to abolish bounties, to do away with subsidies to railways, to keep the lands for the settler and away from the speculator. The Senate was to be put upon a new and stable basis, the independence of parliament was to be assured, the purity of the electorate was to be guarded, and the standard of public life in this country was to be elevated. This, Sir, was the task, I say, not simply by the mandate of the country, but imposed upon themselves by the hon. gentleman and the party which he led. Eighteen years of profession had made this their certain task when they got into power, and the election of 1896 was in the nature of a contract, which sealed the bargain and the agreement and placed these men in the seats of the mighty in order that they might carry out their self-imposed task.

Now, Sir, that part of the world which takes a direct interest in Canadian affairs waited to see these gentlemen essay their task. Had they tested their theories and their policies and proven successful, they would have established themselves as able men and their policies as well conceived. But had they attempted this task and failed, that would have been proof positive either that their policies were wrongly conceived or that they were incapable of carrying even a well-conceived policy to success. Canada might well be vastly interested had these hon. gentlemen undertaken to administer the affairs of this great and growing country with $3,000,000 less of taxation than had been taken from the country by the party they succeeded. Canada might well be intensely interested to see these hon. gentlemen undertake to administer the country's affairs with millions lopped off from the expenditure which formed the standard in 1896. And equally interesting would it have been to note the effect had these hon. gentlemen carried out the task they set themselves and eliminated the principle of protection from the tariff, absolutely destroying every vestige of it as they promised to do.

But, Sir, when they came into power they dropped the task they had set themselves, they forgot the promises they had made, they repudiated the policies they had proffered to the people. They did not attempt the new work with new tools as they had promised. They found a workshop already built, with tools in place and fires burning bright. They entered that workshop, they used those tools, they employed the same system as their predecessors; and to-day, eleven or twelve years after they came into power, they are still at the old stand doing their work—not over efficiently—in the old way, so far as principles and policies are concerned, with some deviations which I propose to take up a little later.

Take first, for instance, their great policy of diminution of the taxation. Have they reduced taxation? Let me read a short table which places this matter in its proper light:

Comparison of taxation in 1896, 1906 and 1908:

| | 1896 Conservative. | 1906 Liberal. | 1908 Liberal. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Customs .. .. | $19,833,279 | $46,064,598 | |
| Excise .. .... | 7,926,006 | 14,010,220 | |
| Total.. | $27,759,285 | $60,074,818 | $73,359,108 |
| Tax per head.. | $ 5 46 | $ 10 00 | $ 11 00 |

Increase 1908 over 1896.$45,599,823 00 or 163 p.c.

Now, let us look at the total taxes collected in ten years under Conservative rule and under Liberal rule:

| | |
|---|---|
| Total taxes collected by Conservatives in ten years, 1887-96.. .. .. | $287,931,372 |
| Total taxes collected by Liberals in ten years, 1897-1906.. .. .. .. .. | 430,329,802 |
| Excess taxen by Liberals over Conservative government.. .. .. .. .. | 142,398,430 |

So, as regards the amount of taxes, there can be no doubt of the vast increase made by hon. gentlemen opposite. Why, Sir, it reads almost like a fairy tale. Looking at it one way, these hon. gentlemen opposite might proclaim this increase of taxation a great feat. The taxes in 1896 amounted to $27,700,000. Let me show how this amount has been exceeded under Liberal rule:

Amount by which taxation under Liberals exceeded taxation under last year of Conservative rule:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1896 | Taxation under | Conservatives.. | $27,756,000 |
| 1897 | This amount was | exceeded by.. | 948,000 |
| 1898 | " | " .. | 1,817,000 |
| 1899 | " | " .. | 7,199,000 |
| 1900 | " | " .. | 10,984,000 |
| 1901 | " | " .. | 10,984,000 |
| 1902 | " | " .. | 15,630,000 |
| 1903 | " | " .. | 21,256,000 |
| 1904 | " | " .. | 25,902,000 |
| 1905 | " | " .. | 26,261,000 |
| 1906 | " | " .. | 32,315,000 |
| 1908 | " | " .. | 45,590,000 |

What does that mean? Does that mean that the country is paying less than it was paying in 1896? No, Sir, but that the country has been bled, if white in 1896 so far as the amount of taxation is concerned, infinitely whiter by the taxation as it has developed in 1908. Hon. gentlemen will say: That is beside the question; we have reduced the taxation, that is, we have reduced the rate of taxation. No man can deny that the burden, the amount of taxation at least, has been vastly increased. Has the rate of taxation been increased or not? Hon. gentlemen opposite will say that the rate of taxation has not been increased. Let us go to the word and the testimony. I take from the Trade and Commerce Report these figures: The Liberal-Conservatives from 1879, when protection was introduced, until 1896, when these gentlemen came into power, had an average tax rate on dutiable goods of 28:35 per cent. In 1896 the rate of taxation was 29·74 per cent. These gentlemen then came into power and the rate of taxation from 1897 when it was 29·96 per cent went down gradually, but very slightly, until in 1906 it became 26:83 per cent. There was a possible reduction in rate of 3 per cent. But, Sir, there is another point to be taken into account, and that is that under these hon. gentlemen quite a large proportion of the amount of protection is imposed not by way of customs tariff, but by way of bounty and it is absolutely necessary that that should be taken into account if you wish the figures to rightly express the truth. What did these hon. gentlemen do? The rate of taxation is too high, so they say in and, we will reduce the customs taxes on various articles of iron, on twine and on oil brought into this country; we will reduce the rate per cent and the customs tax on the articles, but we will protect the makers by paying a bounty upon the articles they make and in this way make up to them the loss of protection. So I say it is absolutely necessary in order to be fair that you shall take the protective burden imposed by way of bounty as well as the protective burden imposed by the customs duties. I have added the bounties and the customs duties together and the result shows that in 1897 the average duty (including bounty) was 30·15 per cent; in 1906 it was 28·22 per cent and in 1907 about 27·40 per cent. Thus if you take the real test of the protection, the customs duty and the bounty protection together, you will find that whereas from 1897 to 1906 the rate was 28·62 per cent, the average from 1879 to 1896 was 28·35 per cent. Consequently the real incidence giving protection in this country by customs duty and bounty was from 1897-1907 just a little more than the incidence given from 1879 to 1896 under the national policy. So I say in actuality the duty for protection has not been diminished to any appreciable extent. I go still further, I say and will prove that the duty rate has practically been increased. In the first place the Finance Minister commenced by imposing duties upon spirits and tobacco of $1,783,000 in 1897. He increased the duties upon sugar in 1898, under a false pretense that by the preference on sugar he was going to help the sugar exporters of the West Indies, when in reality, the United States had a countervailing bounty which more than overtopped the preference that we were giving to the West Indian planters, but in spite of that being proved and known, the Finance Minister never gave up his added duties upon sugar.

But leaving that aside, everybody knows that there has been a very sharp increase in prices in the last ten years. In the United States the best authorities give the increase at from 50 per cent to 60 per cent. In Great Britain it is given from 35 per cent to 40 per cent. In Canada it is anywhere from 35 per cent to 50 per cent. We have not the same close system of statistics as they have, for instance, in the United States, and we therefore do not get it so correctly, but there has been this large increase in prices. You have your ad valorem duty, we will say, of 30 per cent. In 1896, $1,000 bought you a certain quantity and quality of goods. You brought these into this country, the ad valorem duty was 30 per cent and the importer paid $300 of duty. To-day the same quantity and quality of goods will cost you $1,500 owing to the increase in prices. When it comes to the Canadian border the ad valorem duty is still 30 per cent, but 30 per cent upon $1,500 is $450. This is the duty which the importer now has to pay, whereas he paid only $300 three years ago. Thus the increase in price with the maintenance of the same ad valorem duty has added very largely to the incidence of the taxation.

What I mean to say by that illustration is this, that the Finance Minister, in order to get the same amount of duty, namely, $450 upon the same amount and quality of goods ten years before, would have had to place a duty of 45 per cent upon them instead of a duty of 30 per cent; and therefore, by the increase in price the duty really is made, as compared with 1896, a 45 per cent rate instead of a 30 per cent rate. But that is not all that the ultimate consumer has to pay. The consumer not only pays the extra price and the extra duty, but he pays the extra profits of the wholesaler and retailer upon the extra cost of the goods, because the retailer and the wholesaler have their profits upon the cost of the goods. The cost of the goods now is $1,500, whereas ten years ago it was $1,000, therefore the profits of the retailer and of the wholesaler are made upon the invoice of $1,500 instead of the lessened invoice of $1,000. Therefore the consumer has to pay an extra price of $500 and also an extra $150 of duty and the extra profit of the wholesaler and the retailer; so the rate of duty under rising prices kept at the old ad valorem, becomes really higher and higher in proportion as the price advances from year to year. Now, Sir, take for a calculation the $173,000,000 worth of dutiable goods imported in 1906. If you take those at the values of 1896, it would be about $120,000,000, and take the rate of duty of 1896, 26·83 per cent, it would have yielded you only $32,800,000. But the Finance Minister gathered, not $32,800,000, but $46,400,000 as duty into his treasury on exactly the same ad valorem, because in 1906 the value of imports was $50,000,000 greater than in 1896. Now if you take either an increase price of 50 per cent or an increase of 35 per cent, just as you please, and work it out, you get this result, that to the extent of the rise in prices the Finance Minister has been able, with the same ad valorem duties, to take a largely increased taxation out of the pockets of the tax payers. Does the right hon. gentleman, who wisely does not often dabble in figures, take in the extent of the change in this taxation business ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, I am sorry to say that I cannot.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid that he does not. Let me give him an illustration. In 1896 the taxation was $27,700,000. Reduced down to weeks, it meant taking out of the people $530,000 weekly ; reduced to days, it meant $76,000 per day. But in 1908, with $73,000,000 of taxation, it means that you take out of the pockets of the people $1,400,000 weekly, or $200,000 each day. Does my right hon. friend deny the accuracy of the calculation ? It is a sum in simple arithmetic which I think he will not find it difficult to pencil out for himself.

Now, Sir, that being the fact with reference to taxation, let me ask my right hon. friend to listen to himself, which he sometimes is rather loath to do. I find this gem preserved from the platform speeches of 1893, in the city of Ottawa. The speaker is Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Pointing up to the hill he says :

You have seen those beautiful buildings on parliament hill. The government which has its headquarters in those buildings takes $36,000,000 or more in the form of taxation every year.

The ministers who spend that money you may be sure do not take it out of their own pockets; they take it from you, from me, from all the people of the country.

That money is taken from our pockets by an ingenious system of taxation. The government wields a magic wand the touch of which draws the money from your pocket without your understanding that the money is taken from you as taxation.

If our countrymen would but reflect on these matters, I am sure they would put an end to the policy which makes such things possible.

The tax is levied indirectly, the effect of it is none the less to take the money from you and to hand it over to the government.

Every one of you knows how much municipal taxes and how much taxes school you pay, and how much you pay for the support of the provincial government. But how many can tell how much they pay to the support of the Dominion government?

Take all the other taxes you have to pay and add them together and they do not amount to as much as you are required to pay to the Dominion government.

Every pound of nails, every axe, every yard of cloth you buy from your merchant is a medium through which you pay to the Dominion government.

And drawing himself up he says :

I hold that it is important that we should have a series of meetings in the province of Quebec and elsewhere to explain these things to the people, for the people do not pay as much attention to these things as they ought. If they were understood, the present government would be chased out of power, just as the robbers were chased out of the temple.

Now I commend that speech to my right hon. friend when the gentlemen on the hill are taking, not $36,000,000, but $73,000,000 out of the pockets of the people. I commend it to my right hon. friend when every pound of nails, every axe, every yard of cloth, is still taxed. I commend it all the more to my right hon. friend when, whereas in 1893, when he was making that speech $530,000 a week was taken out of the pockets of the people, under the present method, $1,400,000 per week is taken out of them by this government.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CANADA WEATHER INSURANCE COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 37) to incorporate the Canadian Weather Insurance Company.—Mr. M. S. Schell

On section 5—first general meeting and election of directors :

Mr. FIELDING. There is an error in section 5. The Bill is not as intended. It says that:

So soon as fifty thousand dollars of the capital stock of the company has been subscribed, &c.

It should be one hundred thousand dollars. I am advised that the solicitor so understood it. I would therefore beg to move :

That section 5 be amended by substituting for the word ' fifty ' the words ' one hundred.'

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUBSIDIARY HIGH COURT, ANCIENT ORDER OF FORESTERS.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 62) respecting the Subsidiary High Court of the Ancient Order of Foresters in the Dominion of Canada.—Mr. Guthrie.

On section 6—lapsed policies:

Mr. FIELDING moved:

That the words 'yearly or' in the third line of section 6 be struck out and that the words 'or quarterly' after the word 'half-yearly' in the third line be inserted.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 9—R. S. c. 79.

Mr. FIELDING. Section 9 appears to have been inserted by a misunderstanding as it refers to part II of the Companies Act. As this society is not a stock company, section 9 would not be appropriate. I think it is a pure error and I beg to move that section 9 be omitted.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. While these two Bills with respect to insurance are before the committee I would like to ask the hon. the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) whether it is his intention to afford better protection to Canadian policy-holders in American companies. There is one of those companies being wound up and another under investigation in New York in which a number of Canadians are interested and apparently the time has come when some further protection should be afforded to Canadian policy-holders by means of greater deposits being made by these American companies with the Canadian government. At the present time the Provident Savings Company is being investigated in New York and I do not think that the Canadian policy-holders are properly secured. After what has taken place in New York in connection with a number of insurance companies I think the attention of the government should be directed to this matter. Some day later on I intend to call the attention of the government to the condition of Canadian policy-holders in these companies and to the manner in which their interests are jeopardized. I think the minister ought to be prepared at an early stage to say whether he is satisfied that the deposits now in the hands of the Canadian government are sufficient for the protection of Canadian policy-holders.

Mr. FIELDING. The superintendent of insurance is of opinion that with respect to this particular company the deposit which has been hitherto required is a reasonable and effective one. However, the policies are being revalued and it may be that a further deposit will be called for.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

The order for private Bills having been exhausted the House again resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Fielding to go into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. FOSTER. Passing from the subject of taxation to that of expenditure, let us inquire further what has been the record of these gentlemen in reference to that very important feature in the administration of the government of Canada. When these gentlemen were in opposition they were equally strong in the matter of over-expenditure as they were with regard to the matter of taxation. In 1893 their platform held this well known plank:

> We cannot but view with alarm the large increase in the public debt and of the controllable annual expenditure of the Dominion and the consequent undue taxation of the people under the governments that have been continuously in power since 1878 and we demand the strictest economy in the administration of the government of the country.

But that is not so strong and so vivid as individual statements made by many of the leaders of the party. For instance, my right hon. friend, speaking in 1896, three years after the Liberal convention, declared:

> The expenditure of this country has grown until the people are unable to bear it. I promise you that if you put our party into power we will reduce that annual expenditure by $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 per annum.

Again he said:

> If we get into power we will follow the example of Mr. Mackenzie——

A long way off.

> And I say that although we may not be able to bring the expenditures to what they were under him we can reduce the amount $3,000,000 a year.

Then, Sir Richard Cartwright, the mild-mannered and sweet-tongued coadjutor of my right hon. friend, declared this among other things:

> I repeat it now that $38,000,000, let alone $40,000,000 is in my judgment a monstrous sum for the people to be called on to provide. When the United States mustered 20,000,000 strong its total expenditure for federal purposes was barely $22,000,000 of dollars.

And Sir William Mulock, who was also a co-worker with my right hon. friend in the political programme of the Liberal party, declared:

> There is nothing to warrant this enormous expenditure of nearly $38,000,000 except the fact that we are burdened down with debt and office holders great and small.

This same gentleman, I believe, is now an office holder. Mr. Charlton, a leading member of the Liberal party, declared:

> The Liberal party if in power could at once reduce the public expenditure and effect other savings to the extent of $5,000,000 per annum without impairing the efficiency of the service.

And I hold in my hand a very instructive little document with the imprint of the Liberal party upon it, prepared for their programme in 1895. It has some delicious decoration on its front page, in which I am represented as usual in a very fine drawing, mounted on a poor broken down farmer's back, with a monopolist pretty well up on my own back, but resting mainly upon the farmer, rolling along a ball to which the farmer is attached by a chain, and that is called : 'Unnecessary taxation and extravagance of expenditure.' And a policeman, with the name of the opposition on his club, is watching myself taking some money out for subsidy purposes from the Dominion treasury. The watchman on the premises is my good friend, now Sir Wilfrid Laurier. And one of the statements in this pamphlet—I preserve it for the sake of its historical connection — declares that the taxes have greatly increased and the annual expenditures, and it then gives a list of the expenditures for four years, and concludes :

And Mr. Foster's estimates for 1894-5 reached the appalling total of $39,225,156.

The word 'appalling' and the figures being in very prominent type. Now, Sir, let us see what this policeman and these guardians of the treasury and these denouncers of annual expenditures over $38,000,000 have done. Here is a comparison of expenditure :

COMPARISON OF EXPENDITURE.

| — | 1896. | 1906. | 1908. |
|---|---|---|---|
| On Consolidated account | $36,949,142 00 | $67,240,641 00 | $77,500.000 00 |
| On Capital account | 4,753,241 00 | 16,037,001 00 | 33,000,000 00 |
| Total expenditure | 41,702,383 00 | 83,277,641 00 | 110,000,000 00 |
| Expenditure per head | 8 14 | 13 50 | 18 00 |
| Increase, 1908 over 1896 | | | 68,797,617 00 or 165 per cent |
| 10 years' expenditure under Liberal-Conservative government, 1887-1896 | | | $423,358,830 |
| 10 years' expenditure under Liberal government, 1897-1907 | | | 655,335,633 |
| Excess, Liberal over Conservative period | | | 231,976,802 |

AVERAGE YEARLY EXPENDITURE.

| Years. | Administration. | Amount. | Yearly excess over Expenditure, 1892-96. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1887-1891 | Conservative | $ 42,530,000 | |
| 1892-1896 | " | 42,141,763 | |
| 1897-1901 | Liberals | 50,110,011 | $ 7,968,248 |
| 1902-1906 | " | 72,110,840 | 29,969,077 |
| 1908 | " | 110,500,000 | 68,358,237 |

| | Liberal-Conservatives, 1896. | Liberals, 1908. |
|---|---|---|
| Year | $41,702,383 | $110,500,000 |
| Per week | 800,000 | 2,120,000 |
| Per day | 114,000 | 303,000 |

Let us put it in this form : Under the Liberal-Conservatives in 1896 $800,000 weekly was spent in the general expenditures of the country ; under the Liberals in 1908, not $800,000, but $2,120,000 per week is the figure of the expenditures on the public services of the country. In 1896 the Liberal-Conservatives spent $114,000 a day ; the Liberals, in 1908, spent $303,000 for every day of twenty-four hours in this Dominion of Canada. Now, Sir, I call the attention of the House to that. But is this the end? Does the year 1908 show us the highest point of expenditure? The Minister of Finance did not say so. He did not say the exact opposite, but his acts carried the exact opposite, for what are the estimates? The estimates for the year 1908-9 already brought down are $119,250,000. The estimates for last year added after the main estimates were $16,000,000. This year the larger expenditure for the Grand Trunk Pacific will make that much more, and so the expenditure for 1908-9 must come pretty well up to $140,000,000. Just think of it—$140,000,000. In 1896 my right hon. friend, Sir William Mulock and Sir Richard Cartwright, declared that $38,000,000 was a monstrous sum to spend in a country like this.

Now, let us come to particulars, and let us see where these hon. gentlemen are. There were certain special expenditures which they were never tired of going around the side lines and concessions and commenting upon. Let us take a few of these. They declared that the press of this country was actually demoralized and made a hireling press because in 1896 $42,713 was distributed in advertising in the papers of the country. What must be the condition in 1906, when $181,911, an increase of 139,198, or 324 per cent, is spent in advertising in the press of the country, in 99 cases out of 100 in the Liberal press. Another source of complaint was the printing. The government Bureau, they said, was established to do the government printing, could do it better, more cheaply and without the idea of patronage; and they made the side lines reverberate with the statement that $189,320 was spent in 1896 in printing outside of the government bureau. What should be the reverberation now, in view of the fact that in 1906 $689,796, an increase of $500,476, or 263 per cent, was spent in printing outside of the Bureau, again in 99 cases out of 100 in Liberal printing offices, with the exception of the printing of Dominion notes and inland revenue and postage stamps, which is done, not by a Canadian concern, but by a concern which came from the United States and domiciled itself in Ottawa. Let me give you another fact. From July 1, 1896, to March 31, 1907, the government has spent in advertising $1,279,136 and in printing outside of the Printing Bureau $4,391,183, a total of $5,670,319; and ninety-nine one-hundredths of that is done in Liberal newspaper offices with the idea of patronage in view. Not many years ago Sir Richard Cartwright penned or spoke these words:

Poisoning the wells.—There is one act which even among savages and barbarians is looked upon as inhuman, not to be tolerated even under the extremest exigencies of war, and that is the poisoning of the wells from which friends and foes alike must quench their thirst. But here in Canada we have a government which does worse, which does not hesitate deliberately to poison and corrupt the very sources of information from which alone the ordinary voter can learn how public affairs are being administered, and whether he is well or ill served by those to whom he must per force entrust the guardianship of his interests; and I say that of all the corrupt acts of the government and all the signs of the degradation and debasement of public opinion which are everywhere manifest, there is not one act so fraught with evil consequences, not one sign so significant of degradation as the manner in which the public press has been openly and systematically debauched year after year, with the full knowledge and apparently the full approbation of almost every class of well to do supporters of the government, and with very few evidences of any great disapproval, even on the part of those who were not supporters.

If that was true in 1896, it is 324 per cent more true with regard to advertising and 263 per cent more true with regard to printing than it was in 1896. I commend this government and the party supporting it to the tender mercies and criticism of Sir Richard Cartwright, who, if he has a spark of his old spirit left, although he rests quietly on the cushioned seats in another chamber, will, I am sure, feel that if he spoke the truth then, he could speak it at the present time, if he were untrammelled, with a hundred-fold more effect and force. The following tables give a comparison of some of these expenditures mentioned above.

EXPENDITURE COMPARED.

SPECIAL ITEMS.

| | 1896. | 1906. | Liberal excess. | Increase |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | $ | $ | $ | per cent. |
| Advertising.... | 42,713 | 181,911 | 139,198 | 324 |
| Printing (outside Govt. Bureau) | 189,320 | 689,796 | 500,476 | 263 |
| Superannuations | 311,231 | 356,280 | 45,094 | 14 |
| Pensions..... | 86,080 | 179,023 | 92,943 | 108 |
| Civilgovernment (Salaries at Ottawa) ..... | 1,396,628 | 1,911,611 | 514,983 | 37 |
| Rideau Hall.... | 24,053 | 72,652 | 48,599 | 100 |
| Legislation..... | 904,687 | 1,351,916 | 447,229 | 48 |
| | (1881) | (1901) | | |
| Census ..... | 452,508 | 1,184,459 | 731,951 | 160 |

DEPARTMENTAL.

| | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Marine..... | 1,137,765 | 4,601,000 | 3,463,235 | 300 |
| Militia..... | 1,136,714 | 4,294,125 | 3,157,411 | 275 |
| Interior ..... | 1,255,368 | 3,182,081 | 1,926,713 | 150 |
| Public Works... | 1,299,709 | 7,484,716 | 6,185,007 | 475 |
| Mounted Police. | 533,014 | 1,004,079 | 471,065 | 90 |
| Justice..... | 1,143,497 | 1,699,242 | 555,745 | 49 |
| Agriculture, Arts and Statistics. | 333,042 | 1,365,643 | 1,032,601 | 310 |

Now, is the country thinking at all with reference to this enormous increase of expenditure? I believe it is. How could it be otherwise when it finds the expenditure going up by leaps and bounds. In the last year of Conservative rule, the expenditure was $41,700,000. See how it has increased since then:

Table showing amount by which expenditure under Liberal rule has increased over the last year of Conservative rule.

| | |
|---|---|
| In 1896 Lib. Cons. expendediture | $41,700,000 |
| 1897 this was exceeded by.. .. | 1,200,000 |
| 1898.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 3,600,000 |
| 1899.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 9,800,000 |
| 1900.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 12,000,000 |
| 1901.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 16,200,000 |
| 1902.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 22,200,000 |
| 1903.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 20,000,000 |
| 1904.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 30,500,000 |
| 1905.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 37,100,000 |
| 1906.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 41,500,000 |
| 1908.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 68,300,000 |

Leaving this for a moment—but I will return to it later—let me say a word with reference to the public debt. Did you notice how long and how lovingly the Minister of Finance lingered over the public debt ?—the fine explanation he gave, the details into which he travelled and among which he wandered. Did you notice the exceedingly great contrast when he came to talk about the expenditure ?—how quickly he slid over this part as though the ice were very thin indeed. In one sense it makes some difference, but for all practical purposes it makes little difference, whether the debt is increased or not, under present circumstances. Why has not the debt increased ? Mr. Speaker, I will give you a political recipe, so that, when you become leader of a government, you can make it absolutely certain that the public debt shall not increase while you are in power. All you have to do is to tax the people yearly enough to pay not only your current but your capital expenditure. That is what the Minister of Finance has been doing. This is the way the public debt stands :—

| | |
|---|---|
| In 1887 the public debt was.. .. .. | $227,000,000 |
| In 1896 the public debt was.. .. .. | 258,000,000 |
| In 1908, the public debt is.. .. .. .. | 275,000,000 |

Up to the present time, leaving out 1908, there has been, under this government, a comparatively small increase on the debt. But even the Minister of Finance will not have the heart to call on the people for a sufficient amount of taxes to pay all the capital expenditure and all the great increases in the expenditure on current account in future. The consequence is that he now faces an inevitable increase in the debt, added to the extraordinary increase in the taxation by which he has swollen the expenditure. So that, in the years immediately before us, besides keeping up the same mad, reckless looting of the public pocket, he will have to increase by tens of millions our national debt. There is nothing else before the minister. The net debt increased from 1887 to 1896 by $31,000,000. The Minister of Finance plumes himself on the statement that from 1896 to 1906, under the Liberals, the debt increased only $8,500,000. But read the footnote, if you please. From 1897 to 1906 the Minister of Finance collected from the people in taxes $142,000,000 more than the Liberal-Conservatives collected in their last ten years of power. If the Liberal-Conservatives from 1887 to 1896 had exacted a similar amount of taxation to that imposed by the Liberals in the last ten years, the Liberal-Conservatives would not have increased the debt by $31,000,000, but they would have reduced it by $110,000,000.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend laughs at that. But does he deny that it is true?

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE (Strathcona). Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, let me put it the other way. If the Liberals had reduced the taxation as they promised to do—no, I will not hold them to a redemption of their promise ; but if they had not increased the taxation, the debt, under their regime, would have increased not $8,500,000, but $150,000,000, if they had maintained the scale of expenditure which we know they have maintained. Sir, what happens when the banks of this country put $60,000,000 of their reserves out in New York and London in the great commercial centres ? Why, the cry is raised that the resources of the country are being used outside while our own business people are famishing for lack of capital. That may not be a fair criticism—it is not altogether fair, because a large part of the amount placed abroad by the banks is their reserve, which they could not loan out here even if they had it. But if they were to loan abroad a vast sum like this which they could loan here, there would be a well-founded complaint that business men were denied money to carry on their operations while the money which should be used in Canada was being used in a foreign country. But all the banks are merely subsidiary in our great system. The great money reserve of this country is in the earnings of the people ; the banks collect only a small portion of the earnings of the country and make use of it in their processes for the promotion of the business of the country. Yet what has taken place in the last ten years ? Hon. gentlemen opposite have taken $142,000,000 out of the earnings and savings of the people of this country more than we did, more than they then declared was necessary and right, more than they declared they would take. What have they done with that money ? Some unthinking person says they have given it all back to the people. Not at all, every dollar of that money that is put in fixed works, such as buildings and works of that kind, which return nothing to the people except use, and the money invested in hundreds of thousands of different constructions into which the people's money is put, is effectually barred out from the currency and from the producing power of the country. It is as if it were hoarded. Much employment has been given for the time being, but so far as returning any value is concerned, its usefulness has absolutely ceased. It is fixed in these constructions which may be of use but return nothing in a financial way to the people of the country. The Conservatives in their last years of office preferred to incur a debt of $31,000,000 and leave that extra taxation which they would have had to take from the people of the country with the people who needed it, and to do with that $31,000,000 of debt, what was necessary in the way of capital expenditure to be used and to be enjoyed not only by the people of those years but by the future generations. That is the proper way of financing. You have no right to take, especially from a young, and new striving and struggling country, any great amount more than is absolutely needed for the current expenditures of the country. When you are building the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, when you are putting up immense public works for the use of the country for hundreds of years, why call upon the poor toiling people of one year to put up these works which are to be enjoyed by all generations to come after us. The proper method of financing is to borrow the money for these capital expenditures and place the burden of interest equally on each generation which enjoys the use of these permanent works. Then those who come after us will pay their proportion of the cost of the works which they are using and, in good time, as the country becomes wealthy and able to do so, it can pay off its debt year by year as it pleases. The Finance Minister has made, to my mind, a radical mistake and has done an irreparable injury to this country in his mad race for taxation and his avoidance of borrowing capital for these capital constructions, consequently drawing from the people their savings and earnings in larger proportion than he should draw them and so crippling them to that extent. If this government remains in power much longer, as by the good will of the people, I hope it will not, it certainly has mapped out for itself exactly the same course. The Finance Minister is a little dubious as to whether he will get all the taxation next year that he got this year. During the first part of the year he fears he will not, but—and will you mark how even the proudest and most self-reliant of these hon. gentlemen some time or other must lean on Providence—the Finance Minister was gracious enough to say this afternoon that if we only were blessed with good crops, he thought the latter part of the year would probably bring us out of the deficiency met with in the first part of the year. Thank goodness that once in a while, in an unguarded moment, we have these hon. gentlemen relying a little on Providence. Speaking of Providence reminds me of an utterance made at Halifax when my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) and the right hon. gentleman who is his leader (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had a jollification, a sort of union meeting in that city. The right hon. gentleman spoke on that occasion and among other things he told a story which is not exactly true but is near enough to the truth to pass. He said that at a board of trade dinner in Toronto where he delivered an address after I had delivered one, I had been attempting to prove that at that time the people of Canada were happy and prosperous and that he said at that dinner:

Mr. FOSTER.

Gentlemen, we shall be in power before long and when in power I promise such an era of prosperity that it will not require statistics to prove it—you will have it in your pockets.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier proceeded:

We are told by our opponents that this prosperity is not due to our policy but that it is the work of Providence. I am ready to admit that; but Providence works by human instruments to chastise people and to bless them. The instruments to chastise the people were our good friends the Tories; but when it became time for a change Providence used her humble friends of the Liberal party to bless the people and to bring such an era of prosperity as they have had for the last ten years. I believe when the next appeal is made to the people of Nova Scotia they will be once more found on the side of Providence and on the side of Mr. Fielding also.

Well, some people are very familiar with Providence, but if we may fall into the same language and allow the picture to come up in our minds it would be an astonishing sight now if Providence and——

Mr. BENNETT. Pugsley.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) had been careering up and down the streets of the city of St. John putting up those posters asking the people whether they were going to vote for wharfs or primers. It would be astonishing also to see Providence and the hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) walking up and down the streets of the city in accord. In fact it would be somewhat astoninshing to see Providence and any one of the ministers actively conjoined in all the deeds of recklessness and extravagance and graft which have been but partially exploded and exposed to the country during the last few months. I should think Sir, that gentlemen ought to be a little careful as to how they put themselves on such a familiar footing with Providence and although the right hon. gentleman who leads the government might in the opinion of most of his friends be allowed to do that for himself, he ought to fight very shy of putting Providence and the hon. gentlemen who are connected with him in the same arm-and-arm fashion as he described them in the city of Halifax.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) went very rapidly over the matter of the money obligations which are weighing and pressing at the present time upon the government. If I am not mistaken, I think the matter assumes something like this form: On May 1, 1907, there was a due loan of $9,376,386, which has been renewed to May 1, 1911, at the same rate of interest; so we will transfer that down to May 1, 1911, and dispose of it at the top of the list. On April 1, 1908, $7,300,000 comes due; on November 1, 1908, $21,900,000 comes due; on August 17, 1908, $2,500,000, which was a loan made a short time ago at 4½ plus ⅛ per cent, becomes due. That makes $31,700,000. So far as I can see, the sinking funds applicable to these are about $10,000,000, which leaves $21,700,000; and an overdraft since that time of $1,500,000, bearing current Bank of England rates, has been due. Then in June, 1909, something over $24,000,000 becomes due; on October 1, 1910; January 1, 1910, something over $58,000,000 becomes due. There are sinking funds to a certain extent, but I think not very much attached to those loans, as I think we gave up the idea of attaching sinking funds to loans about the time these were made. On May 1, 1911, $9,376,386 comes due; then on October 1, 1913, there is $8,273,333 coming due. So that between the present time and October 1, 1913, some $131,700,000 falls due of loans now current. Subtract the ten or twelve millions of sinking funds from that, and taking account of some payments that have been made in the meantime, it is not much out of the way to say that about $100,000,000 or over is to be met in the way of renewing loans between this and October, 1913, and most of it between this and 1910, or a little less than two years.

Well, now, that is a tremendous obligation. And the fault I find with the Minister of Finance is this, that in these years of plenty and an overflowing treasury he has neither taken the precaution to reduce the obligations of the country, nor in those times when money could more easily have been got has he taken time by the forelock and made his dispositions so as to be ready to meet these obligations when they fall in. For the Minister of Finance is not all-seeing. He cannot tell what may happen, or what may be the conditions financially of the world in 1910; as he did not know two years ago of the stringency which has suddenly come upon the world in the year we are passing through. But in all that time, neither by economy nor by prudent foresight, has he taken a single step to diminish or provide for the obligations of the country.

On the other hand, he has been rushing with rapid pace into renewed and extended obligations which are to meet him during the next five, or six, or seven years. What are these? There is the obligation undertaken in behalf of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. My hon. friend was not as full as he should have been of explanations as to the amount of obligations to the Grand Trunk Pacific. Surely in this year, when, I think, 75 per cent, if not more, of the whole line between Winnipeg and Moncton is under contract, or is about going under contract, when estimates have been made, as I understand, for the whole of it the minister should have come down to the House with a full explanation of these estimates by the commission, the engineers, as to what would be the cost of the line between Moncton and the city of Winnipeg, some 1,850 miles. But, Sir, he has given us not a single figure with reference to that. We do not know, after his explanations how much this is costing per mile, how much the whole road between these two points will cost per mile. We have not the slightest information with reference to that. The minister has already expended so many millions, he is calling now for millions more, and he does not give in his financial exposition one single word to enlighten us as to the cost of this road. What is the reason? Is the minister putting off the evil day?

The right hon. gentleman who leads this House, in 1903, told the people of Canada that the total cost of the Grand Trunk Pacific to this country would be within $13,000,000; and he illustrated that by saying, not more than one year's surplus. The Minister of Customs, who faces me, in the contest of 1904 in the province of Ontario, used his leader's arguments over and over again, and I remember combatting them then and there. I took the trouble to read the whole speech of the leader of the government in 1903, and from the beginning of it to the end there is nothing that you can take as an indication of the cost of that road except that flat assertion that it would not cost the people of Canada more than $13,000,000. What other thing happened? In his argument for the line between Quebec and Moncton, he declared that the line between Quebec and Moncton could be shortened by 120 to 140 miles. On what basis did he say that? I do not know. On what basis did he make the strange assertion that it would not cost the people of this country more than $13,000,000? As soon as we begin to get the estimates and surveys we find that the road between Moncton and Quebec is not shortened by more than ten or twelve miles, if it is shortened by that much. We find that not merely does $13,000,000 not cover the whole cost to Canada, but that the cost to Canada in the interest alone on the construction account, and the interest we pay after seven years from the time it is constructed, will be some $30,000,000 or more, so that $13,000,000 would not pay half the interest.

Sir, it is a rather hard commentary on hon. gentlemen opposite that they will put through immense votes of this kind on scanty and wrong information. In 1903 the Prime Minister declared that they had mountains of information with reference to the country from Quebec to Winnipeg in that northern region. He declared that it was an absolute necessity to build that road in order to get a way to a Canadian seaport. He declared, as I have said, that the distance between Moncton and Quebec would be shortened by from 120 to 140 miles and he made the flat declaration that the whole cost to the country would not be more than $13,000,000. More than that, Sir, he kept back from the people and parliament of this country the offer that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway made for the building of a road west of the lakes, an offer which carried out the idea that they were willing to build it, hand over the traffic on this side to the Intercolonial Railway and take nothing but a simple subsidy for the western part from the lakes out to the Pacific coast. What happens? The government engineer goes out to the west, comes back again and says that the cost of that road in the west will be at least double, that it will be 100 per cent greater. But the lines that have been let, the miles that have been let and the figures that have come down to us show that the cost is going to be $30,000 and $40,000 and $50,000 a mile. I believe, Sir, that before you finish that line from Moncton to Winnipeg you will have seen the end of $130,000,000 of the money of this country. If it comes within that I would be surprised; if it goes a great deal beyond that I would not be very much surprised. The then Minister of Railways and Canals, who knew something at that time about railway building, told the Prime Minister to his face that it would cost $139,000,000. The Prime Minister set it aside with a wave of his hand and declared to the people of this country that $13,000,000 would measure the outside of the cost. And so, from Victoria and Vancouver to Sydney and Halifax the canvas made in the election of 1904 was that so good a bargain had been made by the government that the people of Canada would only be called upon to put their hands in their pockets for a paltry $13,000,000—one year's surplus. Well, Sir, there is confronting the Finance Minister $100,000,000 to be raised for renewing loans and $100,000,000 yet to be raised within the next five or six years to build and complete the road from Moncton to Winnipeg. These are astounding obligations of themselves, but added to these there is the wild pace that has been set for expenditures of every kind in every quarter of the land. There are subsidies to the provinces in the west which increase year by year as the population increases. There are subsidies to the old provinces which have been increased pretty nearly $3,000,000 per year and consequently in five, or six, or seven, or eight years will entail just five, or six or seven, or eight times that much more of an expenditure compared with a similar period of the past. All these things and this last obligation of the government to stand behind the Quebec bridge face the government. Two hundred million dollars—more than $200,000,000 of capital money has to be got somewhere within the next 6 years, and it is a problem which I am afraid the Finance Minister enters upon with too light a heart, with too free a mind and the importance of which and the difficulties surrounding which he does not himself to-day see. He says that the debt has not increased. Well, there are two points that I want to make reference to. By the way, about the Quebec bridge, is not the Finance Minister himself on record as declaring on his knowledge as Finance Minister that the bridge, the approaches, the substructure and the superstructure would not cost more than $4,500,000?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think I am.

Mr. FOSTER. I think I have seen that statement somewhere.

Mr. FIELDING. I am sure that if the hon. gentleman gets that statement anywhere he will get it on the authority of some engineer, because I certainly never on my own authority would make any such statement either as to that or any other amount.

Mr. FOSTER. I find here in a speech delivered by my hon. friend in 1903, at the same time that the Prime Minister declared that this whole Grand Trunk Pacific would only cost the country $13,000,000, that the Finance Minister said:

> Five or six companies will use this bridge, the Intercolonial Railway, Canadian Pacific Railway, the Quebec Central Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway and the Quebec and Lake St. John, and there are other railways . . . . . I understand that the bridge proper, the crossings and approaches, will cost about $4,500,000.

He then finds fault with the estimates of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and says the 'we are not very far apart,'

> But his estimates would probably include some of the terminal facilities in the city of Quebec, which may be important as part of the general scheme, but are not essential as part of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway scheme.

So I think that from whatever source my hon. friend got the information, that is the information that he imparted to this House, and that is the information that the representatives of the people and the people at large have to depend upon. Now, as I said before, it is extremely unfortunate that men like the leader of the government should declare that the Grand Trunk Pacific would not cost the people of this country more than $13,000,000 and that he would declare that it woulde be shortened between Quebes and Moncton over the present Intercolonial Railway by 120 to 140 miles, and that there should not, by lapse or lack of care, come to this House the Grand Trunk's offer made to him a year and a half before it was discovered and brought to the attention of this House. Why my hon. friend the Minister of Finance should give $4,500,000 as the cost of a bridge which at that time was contemplated to be taken up or backed by the government is something that I cannot understand. It is unfortunate that information of that misleading kind should be given, for it is upon information from the front benches that the people of the country would like to go and they must perforce go. In reference to the debt the point that I wish to draw the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance is this: At a certain period in his career, when he was forecasting the future, he declared that:

We shall float our new loans——

That is those that are now to be renewed.

—at a much lower rate than the old loans bear. We shall save say $1,000,000 on the renewal of those loans from 1903 to 1910, may be more.

The Finance Minister might have given us to-day just how much interest has been saved on the $31,000,000 that this government have obtained in London and Paris as over the old loans. It is a significant fact that during the last ten years a great deal of money borrowed by Canada at high rates of interest running up to 4½ per cent and 5 per cent, has been retired at exceedingly good rates, and yet the burden of interest on the debt in 1906 was $10,502,429 and in 1906 it was $10,814,697. So that though the debt has not increased up to 1906 except by a very small portion, the interest burden of the debt is a good deal more than it was in 1896, although between 1896 and 1906 a number of loans bearing a high rate of interst has been replaced by loans bearing a smaller rate of interest.

The Minister of Finance had another idea, and that was that he would bring about a reduction of the cost of capital to the people of this country. In one of the first years of his ministry he brought in a proposition to reduce the savings bank interest from 3½ to 3 per cent and then from 3 per cent to 2½ per cent by easy stages of half per cent reduction each time. He did that, he said, in order to bring about a reduction of the cost of capital to merchants, manufacturers and borrowers generally. He did make a reduction of a half per cent in the rate of interest. I would like to ask the bankers and the merchants and the capitalists and every poor borrower who goes to a bank, whether the device of the Minister of Finance has been very effectual in reducing the cost of capital. If my hon. friend has noticed that it has, there are few other people who have. But, the saving of a million and more dollars of interest that my hon. friend thought he would save has now vanished into thin air and if he has a reputation for great surpluses and a reputation for great expenditures, he has also achieved the reputation of being the Canadian Finance Minister who has paid the highest interest on a loan for Canada of any Finance Minister since 1867. Contrast with the conditions prevailing in the United States used to be thought right by hon. gentlemen opposite, but we do not hear so much of it now. Let us do a little contrasting with our great competitor to the south—the population of the United States is 84,000,000, the debt per head of that population is $11.46 and the debt per head of the people of Canada is about $45. In the United States the interest burden of the debt is 28 cents per head of the people, in Canada it is $1.50. The customs and excise taxation taken out of the people of the United States is $6.50 per head, in Canada it is $11 per head. The expenditure of the United States on ordinary expenditure account is $6.60 per head and in Canada it is $12 per head.

And so I might go on, but these are simply invitations to hon. gentlemen opposite to carry their minds back to the condition they were in before 1896, and to shake themselves clear of the idea that they have some God-given instrumentality that is going to see them through this career of extravagant expenditure and multiplied increases of obligations and debts and enable them to look upon it from a less interested point and therefore to gauge more properly what are their duties in respect thereto.

Now, Sir, I do not want to criticise harshly the Minister of Finance in his dealings with the banks—his peculiar dealings with the banks—with reference to the Northwest crop. It is always a perilous thing for a government to interfere with the general financial management of the business of the country. I think the United States president and cabinet found that out not many months ago, and although in their great extremity they came as they thought to the rescue, it is the opinion of some of the best bankers and publicists in the United States that the country would have been better if they had not interfered. The Minister of Finance has not brought down the papers and we do not know the representations that were made to him. He mentioned a few but I imagine there are many which he has not mentioned. However the Minister of Finance pretty nearly conceded the fact, that after all, the banks would have been able to deal with the situation themselves if they had been left alone. The banks were not behind this proposition; they were not in favour of it. One can easily see why the banking interests of this country thought themselves sufficient to do that work and to do it well. But the Minister of Finance was over persuaded and he came as he said to the rescue. Now I am not going to criticise his conclusions in that respect, but there is one thing I will criticise. In what way did the Minister of Finance come to the rescue? By absolutely breaking the law of this country to which he is as much bound to pay respect as the humblest citizen of Canada. Owing to mad extravagance of expenditure the government had nothing to give or to lend in order to relieve the situation. Owing to the same reasons they did not dare to go into the money market in London and ask for $5,000,0000 or $10,000,000, because, as the Minister of Finance said, they would have had to pay a very heavy rate for it and the credit of the country would thereby be damaged. And so the Minister of Finance by reason of his previous course having nothing to give and not being able to borrow, had no recourse than to enter the treasury of the country, locked by the law of the country for the security of the note holders and savings bank depositors, and take therefrom gold and the equivalent of gold which was the only and the legal reserve for the security of such depositors and note holders. I say that when the government undertook to do that with no more of a crisis than was on the country in November, they did what I believe was a rash thing. But if the government did think it was absolutely necessary, then when these loans were made in December, 1907, and this parliament was sitting in November, 1907, the Minister of Finance should not have lost a single day before coming to parliament and explaining what he had done and asking for a Bill of indemnity. What right has any member of the government to break the law, to break down the reserve of the people? It is the people's reserve and not the government's, and to continue to do that for three months and parliament in front of them all that time and never come to parliament with an explanation and ask for a Bill of indemnity, was something very extraordinary. It is pretty nearly enough, if a thing like that has to be done by a government during recess, to call parliament together in order to get a Bill of indemnity. But when parliament is assembled and ready to act, to go for three months and not give any sign and not ask for any Bill of indemnity is another of these peculiar and reckless and unwarranted acts that this government performs from time to time. Are we governed by law and the parliament or is a committee called the cabinet doing the whole business of Canada and making and breaking the laws of Canada. They broke the law in this case and for the time being they made a law for themselves. It may turn out all right, I have no doubt it will turn out all right. But it might have turned out all wrong. The Minister of Finance congratulated Canada because the people were not hoarding their money. There is not much chance for the people to hoard it; the government is too busy taking it out of their pockets at the rate of $50,000,000 a year more than the Conservative government took from the people. They have not much chance to hoard under such conditions.

But, Sir, the same wave of lack of confidence that swept with lightening rapidity over the United States, breaking fortunes, smashing credits and bringing banks down to the dust, might easily have spread to this country, and if it had, what would have been the position of the government breaking into the strong chest and taking the only reserve, and the insufficient reserve, which the people had for their savings and their notes? I think the position was a pretty grave one; but if the government did take the responsibility of that extreme measure, they should not have waited a single day in coming to parliament, giving the information and getting their Bill of indemnity; for if a government can do this on pressure from one section of the country, it may do it on pressure from another section of the country. Once done it is easy to do it a second time, and always they can say: Our men will carry us through. It is a dangerous precedent. It has not taken place in Great Britain, with one or two exceptions, since the Bank of England was formed; I hope it will not take place again in this country.

I said something with reference to the taxation and the expenditure and the debt. You will notice that this year the Finance Minister has not had so much to say about the surplus. He did roll out the surplus of nineteen millions or twelve millions, or whatever it was, but the roll of it was somewhat disturbed by the announcement which had immediately to follow, that the capital expenditure wiped it out and something better, so that in reality there was no surplus. The Minister of Finance has talked a great deal about that surplus in the country. In Halifax, with his audience before him, he said: Now, which would you prefer—Mr. Foster with his three millions of surplus in the last ten years of his administration, or myself with my seventy-seven millions of surplus? And every waiting man in the audience, I suppose, said: Give me Fielding and the seventy-seven millions of surplus. He asked also: What do the people prefer—do you prefer Mr. Foster, who sighs for the good old days, when thirty-eight millions was the maximum of revenue, or myself, who think I am going to have a hundred millions of revenue? And every waiting auditor agreed, and said: Give me Fielding and the hundred millions of revenue.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. I see that my hon. friend from British Columbia (Mr. Duncan Ross) applauds the idea. He was not in the audience at Halifax, but I have no doubt he is waiting, waiting, still waiting.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I do not blame them a bit.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, Sir, I do not evade the comparison. It is true, our net surplus from 1887 to 1896, ten years, was $3,000,000 or a little better; and it is true that the hon. gentleman's surplus from 1897 to 1908 is about $80,000,000. Where it is, is a different question. He has had it, and he has not had it; he boasts of it, and he cannot find it; it is all swallowed up, and more is swallowed up, and additions are made to the debt. But I think it is fair for me to say to him this: With your taxation during our ten years, we would have had a surplus of $110,000,000. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is surprised at that. He should be surprised that he declared that $13,000,000 would pay for the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. With our taxation, which my right hon. friend declared they should reduce, the Finance Minister's deficit would have been $150,000,000 in those ten years if he had gone on the same scale of expenditure; and yet my right hon. friend laughs. Does my right hon. friend dispute the accuracy of the figures? Will he not call together some of his friends in the province of Quebec and try to exemplify to them, not only how the robbers should be chased from the temple now, with their taxation of $73,000,000, as it is this year, but how this surplus that is talked about has been gained? By the simple but ingenious method of taxing the people—taking it out of the people. If you take it out of the people, why of course you will have it, and you will not have an increase of the debt. But that might be a reason for sober second thought as to whether or not it is proper to overtax the people and to draw from the earnings and savings of the people these immense sums of money. I have no doubt which will be the best for the people. The Minister of Finance was so eager for a surplus that he had to dock the savings bank depositors—the labourers, farmers, school children, widows, working girls, who put their dollars in there from month to month to lay up something for a rainy day—one-half of one per cent in order to add to his surplus. He has added about three and a quarter millions to his surplus by abstracting so much from the payment of interest to poor savings bank depositors. His anxiety for a surplus has led him into another rather dubious transaction. The bounties, which we paid out of revenue, the Finance Minister pays out of capital. In these last years of his administration he has transferred from revenue account to capital account some ten or eleven millions of bounties. If my hon. friend changes his system of book-keeping, and thereby adds millions to his surplus, I should think he ought not to vaunt it abroad and boast of it before this House. He has not given any valid reason why he changed the system; but that change causes a misrepresentation of comparisons before the people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a word or two with reference to some examples of reckless expenditures. They are found all over. The rapid pace that has been set and the recklessness with which expenditures have been undertaken have obliterated all the old rules and the old lines with reference to expenditure. In Mackenzie's time, and in our time, there was a pretty well defined line between federal and provincial expenditures. The rule was—and we stuck by the rule as fast as possible, though, I suppose, that like all such rules under any government it has its exceptions—that federal expenditure should be for federal purposes and that the provinces should be allowed to care for matters within their own scope. There should be a complete dementation of the line between public and private advantage and interest. Is it not a well understood rule that no public money should be spent by the federal government for private interests?—that the government should not spend money to build a house, a factory or a barn for any private individual. And yet example after example can be given in which that rule has been transgressed by the government and expenditures of public money have been made to assist private individuals in their business. To-day we find the Minister of Public Works declaring that he will put wharfs in any little lake or river because the people there ought to have such facilities as well as those on the sea-board. In Mackenzie's time, and in our time—though you might find exceptions—the rule was held to that wharfs and docks and breakwaters built by this government should be built on the highways of travel and on the sea-board, and not in little lakes and rivers here and there.

Then, consider such expenditures as that on the 'Arctic.' In all the flurry there was been about the 'Arctic' have or have we not lost sight of the real service supposed to be rendered? Why has the 'Arctic' made three voyages—starting now on a fourth—at a cost to the country of about $400,000? All she has to show for it is a few hundred dollars of customs collected, a few hundred dollars charged for whaling licenses, the flagging of a few unimportant islands and the looking up of cairns marking the position of those islands. But this cannot be given as justification for the expenditure of $400,000 of the people's money. What then is the justification? Has any foreign power claimed jurisdiction in those northern waters? And if a foreign power were to make such a claim would it be best to deal with that by sending Captain Bernier to these northern waters to license a whaler or two? Or would it be better to take up the matter diplomatically with the country that puts up that claim? Certainly there can be no doubt as to which would be the cheapest. But has any country put forward such a claim? Has Denmark? Has Norway or Sweden? Has the United States? Not the shade of a shadow of such claims has been put forward by any of these countries. Has Russia put forward such a claim or Japan? Neither. There is to-day no pretense that a claim has been made by any power to the sovereignty of those islands. What, then, is Captain Bernier, doing for the $400,000 spent on these expeditions? Is he seeking information of advantage of commerce, as to the passage of Hudson straits and the like of that? No; his duty is simply to flag islands, hunt up whalers to take out licenses and collect a few dollars of customs dues. How long is this mad expenditure of the people's money going on for such worthless purposes? Then take the North Atlantic Trading Company. Was there ever a more reckless bargain than this under which $370,000 of the people's money was paid out? To whom has that money been paid? Does anybody know? Yes, Mr. Preston knows. But he refused to tell what he knew to the people who had to pay the money. And the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) knows, for Mr. Preston told him. But the Prime Minister has not told parliament, though parliament gave him the money to spend on this North Atlantic Trading Company. This bargain was entered into without the authority of parliament, and all the information we have about it is that the people to whom the money was paid were so nervous about it that they said their names had to be kept secret, for if their names became known they would have to commit suicide

Then take the wharf at Grand Vallee. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had a supporter in this House who bought a lumber property far down the river St. Lawrence—I think for about $25,000. This supporter came to his friend and leader, and his friend and leader authorized the expenditure of about $80,000 to put a wharf on this man's private property, in a place where there was not even a post office and where there were no people except those employed in this man's works. And when the wharf was pretty well built, it was found to have served this gentleman's purpose of selling out his property for four times what he gave for it. That was the effect of this donation. Does the Prime Minister think this a proper expenditure of the hard earnings of the people? It is wrong, it is reprehensible, and no man should stand up in favour of the diversion of the public moneys in that way.

Then there is the Ross rifle concern—there is a pretty pickle of fish for an economical government. The government entered into a contract to get a rifle made in Canada, which is not made in Canada, and has not been from the beginning. They gave away 19⅓ acres of the people's domain—gave it away practically, although, in form, it is given under a 99 year's lease at $1 a year. But that is renewable at the end of 99 years and renewable again. And now these gentlemen are face to face with the difficulty that, if they want to get rid of the Ross rifle factory, they have to come to the people of this country and ask for $1,000,000 or more of their hard earnings to rectify the foolish thing that was done by this government. Was that lease ever ratified by parliament? Was there any enactment which provided for it? I can see that you may lease for a resonable time public property, but when you alienate it as you practically do by that kind of lease, is there any right to do that unless parliament authorizes it, and has parliament authorized it? I do not think so. And then the idea of paying for that Ross rifle, its absolute cost before the parts of the rifle are assembled, giving an amount for which you could buy as good a rifle for British or American use in advances alone, and then year after year finding them away behind in their contract wherever the trouble lies. It is no wonder the Auditor General asked where he was coming to if that kind of contract and financial arrangement was to be carried out.

Then there is the Quebec bridge. Here is the Minister of Finance and his colleagues actually taking hold of an immense undertaking which will cost millions of dollars, pledging their credit to it after giving a subsidy to a company which, however estimable and however substantial the members of the company in their private capacity may be, was absolutely unable, when its bonds were guaranteed by the government, to raise money to build that bridge and has been unable ever since, except by means of the government bonds, and the government bonds to-day mean as it is spelled outright in this House that the government itself is paying the 5 per cent interest on that money and the government itself has to pay the cost of that bridge.

Why, if a public work of a national character is to be built, should it be built by the middle man? My private opinion is that if it had not been for Mr. Parent, a close friend of the Prime Minister and some of the Prime Minister's associates we never would have had the government in a bargain like that, where the government stands to lose everything and the promoter to gain whatever is to be gained, and where, from the peculiar shiftlessness between the two, nobody seems to have been responsible, death in wholesale has come to many citizens of this country and a tremendous financial burden has been thrown upon the taxpayers of Canada.

Then there is the Ghicoutimi Pulp Company. What reason in the world was there why Canada through its Minister of Marine or its Minister of Public Works should build in the river for the Chicoutimi Pulp Company a series of piers and booms which the company should have built for themselves, which they were willing to build for themselves if they had not found the government so easy a mark, and in the building of which $50,000 of the people's money has been expended? These piers and booms have been used by that company and others and the government has not received any return for the expenditures made. Why should not every manufacturer come to the right hon. gentleman and ask him to build a factory or a portion of the concern in which he is carrying on his own business? That is the way private interests are served by the public moneys of the country. Why should it be done? Will the Prime Minister himself stand for such an example of expenditure as that?

Then we have the St. Joseph's wharf where $17,000 was spent against the protest of the sitting member, a supporter of the government, and against the protest of every man who knew anything about the matter. Yet the people's money was used to the extent of $17,000 and the wharf is rotting and overturning to-day, a wharf which no sane man would have put there, which the men who contemplated establishing a business at that time would not have put there.

Then there is the mint. Here is another example of misrepresentation or lack of information. The history of this mint is peculiar. It was mooted in my time and the government of which I was a member said: The time may come in the history of Canada when we should have a mint, but there are so many things that we need more than we do a mint that it will have to be put off to the distant future. It was again brought to the attention of parliament, I think by Mr. McInnis, in about 1900 and the Finance Minister himself made a reasoned speech against the establishment of a mint not only in Victoria, but anywhere in Canada. It was a well-reasoned speech, every argument that he advanced was, I believe, a good argument and each argument was sufficient to preclude the possibility of building a mint, at least for the present. Then what happened? An election was being run in British Columbia. Maxwell was the candidate for the right hon. gentleman. Maxwell wanted support in the election. My right hon. friend wanted to give it. He did not send him money out of his own pocket. Oh no. He mortgaged the public treasury and telegraphed to Mr. Maxwell: The Mint shall be built. Thereafter through the riding it was 'Maxwell and the mint, vote for Maxwell.' That is a matter of history. Then the Finance Minister had to swallow his argument and his reasons. He did it like a little man; he came down here and gave us the most detailed information, declaring that the mint would cost $300,000, maybe a little less, certainly no more, and after all the fixings and everything were installed, and the plans were detailed out, the mint was to cost not more than $350,000. The mint is not yet finished but when it is finished, having cost over $500,000 now, it will cost at least $550,000 to $575,000. You have taken that much of the peoples' money in a country where necessary expenditures are so much called for and you have solidified that and fixed it in the Royal Mint. To carry the mint on and to pay for the depreciation of the building and the interest on its cost, will necessitate from $120,000 to $130,000 annually for up-keep alone. This is just so much taken out of what otherwise would be the profits of the people. You get nothing upon the gold you coin here. You would have the same profit upon the silver if you coined it as you have received on silver coined in Great Britain. The only extra cost entailed by coining it in Great Britain would be the cost of bringing it across the ocean. My belief is that the minister could more economically and at a lower cost have the coinage made at home than we can make it here, so that this expenditure is an absolute loss. You say that the establishment of the mint is a matter of sentiment. It may be, but there are many things that are matters of sentiment which we can afford to do without for a certain time, and I think myself that making that enormous expenditure, almost twice as much as the original estimates after the plans had been prepared, is a fair example of the reckless and unnecessary expenditure of this government—and it is an expenditure that might very well have been saved for the present at least.

Then let me instance the Yukon. Sir Richard Cartwright and my hon. friend the Minister of Finance used to sing the praises of the Yukon. What did the Finance Minister tell us? He announced that there was a large increase in the Yukon in 1900, a new source of revenue, he says, in the last year or two. In 1901 he declared the receipts were largely over the expenditure. 'It is the policy of the government,' he said, 'to make the Yukon pay for the Yukon.' So we were led to believe that this hitherto undiscovered country would be made a great source of revenue under economical management. What is the story as it is told to-day? The revenue in 1901 was $1,794,000; the expenditure was $1,311,000; the surplus was $48,000. But against that there was a capital expenditure of $583,000. The revenue goes on decreasing and the expenditure increasing until, in 1906, you have a revenue that has dwindled down to $750,152, while the expenditure has gone up to $1,394,012 on consolidated revenue account alone. The total from 1900 to 1906 gives as revenue $12,852,000, and as expenditure on consolidated revenue account of $14,474,000, a deficit of $1,511,454, and a capital account expenditure of $2,133,445. There is a total deficit in the management of the Yukon in those years of $3,648,899. In 1901 the population of the Yukon was 28,000; in 1906 it was about 8,000; to-day it is probably not more than 5,000. In 1901 the cost per head of government was $46 a year; in 1906 the cost per head for government was $175. The revenue decreases and the expenditures go on, and the officials live, in numbers and in affluence and in point of salary, about as they lived before in the most prosperous times. The highest of them is out of the country for four or five months of the year, and they all draw salaries, without seemingly the least effort being made by the government to cut down expenses and to manage more economically. The gold output in 1900 was $22,275,000; the gold output in 1907 was $4,314,000.

There was another expenditure. The government built, by day's work and contract together, a telegraph line into the Yukon, and how does that pan out? Shortly after it was built the Canadian Pacific Railway made an offer to the minister to take over the line and to pay the government 4 per cent per year and operate it themselves. The government refused. To-day how does the account stand? From 1899 to 1906 the revenue has been $707,000 and the expenditure $1,326,000. The length in mileage is 2,256½. There has consequently been a deficit of about $620,000 in that line to the Yukon in those years. How is it going on now?

| Year. | Revenue. | Expenditure. |
|---|---|---|
| 1904 | $126,000 | $199,000 |
| 1905 | 115,000 | 229,000 |
| 1906 | 77,000 | 208,000 |
| 1907 (six months) | 38,000 | 122,000 |
| | $358,701 | $760,025 |
| Deficit | | $401,324 |

And still the work goes on, and the deficits go on.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have taken up the attention of the House longer than I had thought. There is another phase of the subject that I would like to discuss, and it will take me, I think, about three-quarters of an hour. But I am very tired of speaking, and if it be the pleasure of the right hon. gentleman, I would like to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Report of the Department of Trade and Commerce.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This debate will go on to-morrow, I suppose?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10 p.m.

Mr. FOSTER.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, March 18, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Blain—asked:

What is the total amount of customs duties paid to date upon the materials imported from the United States which entered into the construction of the Quebec bridge?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). The collector at Quebec reports the total amount of customs duties paid to date on materials imported from the United States for construction of the Quebec bridge to be $504,884.76.

BENJAMIN PACAUD.

Mr. CLEMENTS—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. Has one Benjamin Pacaud, recently of the town of Sandwich, been appointed to the customs staff at the port of Windsor?
2. If so, what are his duties and what salary does he receive?

Hon. WM PATERSON (Minister of Customs):

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.

MR. DONALD FRASER.

Mr. COCKSHUTT—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. Is one Donald Fraser still subcollector of customs for the port of Huntingdon, British Columbia? If not, when was he dismissed from the service?
2. What was the cause of his dismissal, and was a thorough investigation made as to his conduct?
3. What was the nature of the settlement arrived at in his case?
4. What was the total amount of his defalcation?
5. If any restitution was made on his behalf, what was the amount of money refunded?
6. Was any prosecution instituted against said Fraser? If not, for what cause?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). Upon inspection of the outport of Huntingdon, B.C., by Mr. Inspector Clute, in September, 1905, irregularities were discovered, and Mr. Donald Fraser, the subcollector, was thereupon placed under suspension by the inspector. A thorough investigation of the outport was then made, and deficiencies to the amount of $4,241.46 were found to exist, which amount was paid by Mr. Fraser to the inspector of customs at that time.

When the report of the inspector was received by the department, an order in council was passed dispensing with Mr. Fraser's services. No further action has yet been taken.

RAW WOOL.

Mr. STANFIELD—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. How many pounds of raw wool were imported into Canada in the years 1905, 1906 and 1907?

2. What duties were collected on same?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs):

1. The quantity of raw wool imported into Canada during the fiscal years ended June 30, 1905, 1906 and 1907 was as follows:—

| | |
|---|---|
| 1905 | 7,617,211 |
| 1906 | 6,311,837 |
| 1907 | 6,310,179 |

2. During the fiscal year 1905 there were 69 pounds of dutiable raw wool imported, and the duty paid thereon amounted to $1.58. All the balance of this article was imported free of duty.

MR. W. J. JOHNSTONE.

Mr. BENNETT—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. What amounts, if any, have been paid to W. J. Johnstone, a chief clerk in the Post Office Department, inside service, in the years 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, inclusive, in addition to his salary?

2. How many days leave of absence, if any, have been granted to said W. J. Johnstone in above years, showing year by year?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. The Post Office Department has paid nothing to Mr. Johnstone other than his regular salary, but the Department of Labour, as explained to parliament yearly when the vote has been asked for, has paid him at the rate of $500 per annum for performing the duties of accountant for that department, which payment began on the 1st of September, 1901, during which year he received $416.66. Since then, as stated above, he has been paid at the rate of $500 per annum.

2. During the year 1904 Mr. Johnstone was, owing to illness, absent between two and three months. Outside of this leave there has been no absence from duty other than the annual vacation to which every clerk is entitled.

POSTAL REGULATIONS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. What is the total amount of money claimed by the daily papers of Canada, as damag to their circulation owing to the action of the Postmaster General in connection with the changing of the postal regulations last May?

2. Has the government received any complaints from the Canadian Press Association in regard to the regulations governing weekly papers? If so, what is the nature of said complaints, and what action does the government intend to take in regard to same?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. The daily and weekly papers of Canada claimed, that as the treaty between Canada and the United States was abrogated in the middle of the calendar year, and that their obligations to subscribers had to be fulfilled regardless of the increased cost of postage for that period, the department should refund the difference in postage between the amount they were paying under the old treaty, viz.: (½ and ¼ cent per pound) and the amount they would have to pay under the amended treaty. The department compromised by returning to them 3 cents a pound.

2. No.

CHARLOTTE COUNTY WHARF.

Mr. GANONG—by Mr. BLAIN—asked:

1. Has a petition been received from the residents near Welch's cove in the parish of Lepreux, county of Charlotte, New Brunswick, for the erection of a wharf at that point?

2. Is it the intention of the government to place an amount in the estimates to build a wharf at Welch's cove?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). No information in the department.

NEGRO POINT SUBMARINE SIGNAL.

Mr. DANIEL—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. Has a submarine signal apparatus been recently installed off Negro point, bay of Fundy?

2. If so, what is the cost of same, showing expenditure in detail for submarine apparatus, cables, and electric wiring to Tiner's point, right of way, power station at Tiner's point, and plant therein, and anything else appertaining to cost of said submarine apparatus and station?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Yes.

2. Total cost, $23,811.60, divided as follows, viz.:

| | |
|---|---|
| Station building at Tiner's Point | $2,384 50 |
| Electric land line | 3,646 00 |
| Land at Negro Head | 215 00 |
| Installation of machinery | 599 44 |
| Machinery | 3,000 00 |
| Two bells (inc.) | 3,700 00 |
| Two tripods | 1,000 00 |
| Cables | 9,266 00 |
| | $23,811 60 |

QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. Has the government received any communications calling their attention to the need of raising the Quebec bridge, now in course of construction, so that it will not be a barrier to large steamships plying between Montreal and foreign ports?

2. If so, how many of such communications has the government received, and what are the names of the men and organizations who have forwarded such communications or petitions, giving a synopsis of each communication or petition?

3. Does the government intend to change the plans to meet the wishes of the petitioners, if any? If so, to what extent will said changes be made?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. Yes.

2. Two communications were received; one from the board of trade of the city of Montreal and from the Montreal Harbour Commissioners, asking that such action be taken by the government, as will insure that the Quebec bridge, when rebuilt, shall be at least 190 feet above tidewater.

3. The matter has not yet been disposed of.

CANADIAN NEWSPAPERS—REMISSION OF SURTAX.

Mr. BERGERON—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. Has the Post Office Department paid back to certain Canadian newspapers any money as drawback or otherwise to indemnify them for the American surtax in consequence of the last postal arrangements with that country?

2. If so, to which newspapers was it paid, and how much was paid in such a way?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. Yes.

2. Cheques have been issued to the undermentioned newspapers in settlement of their accounts.

| | |
|---|---|
| Acton 'Free Press' | $ 10 44 |
| Ailsa Craig 'Banner' | 7 74 |
| Alliston 'Herald' | 5 76 |
| Alvinston 'Free Press' | 11 22 |
| Amherst 'Gazette' | 1 30 |
| Amherst 'Telegram' | 1 39 |
| Amherst 'Templar' | 0 15 |
| Amherstburg 'Echo' | 25 83 |
| Antigonish 'Casket' | 44 49 |
| Arichat 'Richmond Record' | 2 85 |
| Athens 'Reporter' | 5 64 |
| Atwood 'Bee' | 3 15 |
| Aylmer West 'Sun' | 5 22 |
| Aylmer West 'Express' | 13 50 |
| Ayr 'News' | 3 18 |
| Ayton 'Advance' | 9 60 |
| Baie St. Paul 'L'Echo de Charlevoix. | 19 14 |
| Baldur 'Gazette' | 0 65 |
| Barrie 'Gazette' | 4 20 |
| Barrie 'Advance' | 8 28 |
| Barrie 'Examiner' | 6 06 |
| Battleford 'Herald' | 1 02 |
| Beamsville 'Express' | 2 85 |
| Beeton 'World' | 3 99 |
| Belleville 'Intelligencer' | 22 38 |
| Berlin 'Journal' | 31 97 |
| Berlin 'Canadian Colonist' | 0 69 |
| Berlin 'Glocke' | 0 81 |
| Berlin 'Gospel Banner' | 121 86 |
| Berlin 'Youth's Banner' | 16 62 |
| Berlin 'Missionary' | 21 51 |
| Berlin 'St. Jerome Schoolman' | 6 48 |
| Berwick 'Register' | 14 40 |
| Blenheim 'News-Tribune' | 14 58 |
| Bobcaygeon 'Independent' | 4 08 |
| Bowmanville 'News' | 3 51 |
| Bracebridge 'Muskoka Herald' | $ 2 79 |
| Bradford 'Witness & News' | 4 86 |
| Brantford 'Expositor' | 14 04 |
| Bridgetown 'Monitor' | 38 34 |
| Brighton 'Ensign' | 14 64 |
| Broadview 'Express' | 46 38 |
| Burks Falls 'Arrow' | 6 12 |
| Burlington 'Gazette' | 3 96 |
| Caledonia 'Grand River Sachem' | 4 95 |
| Caledonia 'Haldimand Banner' | 2 04 |
| Calgary 'Farm & Ranch' | 23 64 |
| Campbellton 'Events' | 12 60 |
| Candiac 'La Vérité' | 51 03 |
| Cannington 'Gleaner' | 2 79 |
| Cap Magdeleine 'Annales du Presse, St. R.' | 54 84 |
| Carberry 'Express' | 1 38 |
| Carleton Place 'Herald' | 5 67 |
| Carleton Place 'Central Canadian' | 10 20 |
| Carlyle 'Herald' | 1 92 |
| Cayuga 'Haldimand Advocate' | 22 80 |
| Montreal 'La Presse' | 20,652 75 |
| Montreal 'La Patrie' | 2,863 12 |
| Toronto 'News' | 185 25 |
| Toronto 'World' | 791 84 |
| Toronto 'Globe' | 1,093 40 |
| Toronto 'Mail' | 1,009 84 |

MR. REGINALD DALY.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. When did Reginald Daly enter the service of the Geological Survey Department, and at what salary?

2. Has he been continuously in the service ever since, and at what rate of salary from time to time?

3. What sums of money has Mr. Daly been paid by the government, specifying each financial year separately, and the number of months in each time paid for?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue):

1. July 1, 1901, $2,000 per annum.

2. Transferred to Department of Interior July 20, 1905, salary $2,000 per annum.

3. Sums paid to Dr. Daly for salary:

| | |
|---|---|
| 1901-02, 12 months | $2,000 00 |
| 1902-03, 12 months | 2,000 00 |
| 1903-04, 12 months | 2,000 00 |
| 1904-05, 12 months | 2,000 00 |
| 1905-06, 12 months | 2,000 00 |
| 1906-07, 12 months | 2,500 00 |
| 1907-08, 6 months | 1,249 98 |

MR. BROCK.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. What position does Mr. Brock occupy in connection with the Geological Survey Department, is he permanently appointed to this position, when was he appointed, and what is his salary?

2. Was Mr. Brock in the service of the department before being appointed to the position above referred to? If so, when, how often, for what periods, at what salaries and what sums of money has he been paid?

3. Did Mr. Brock on certain occasions sever his connection with the department? If so, when, during what periods, and for what cause?

4. Was Mr. Brock paid for any period or periods during which he was not in the actual service of the department? If so, upon what occasions, for what length of time, and why?

5. Is the government aware that during the absences of Mr. Brock from the service he was employed by private parties and firms?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue):

1. Acting Director Geological Survey Branch Department of Mines, November 28, 1907, salary $2,200 per annum.

2. Yes. Temporarily engaged on field work, seasons 91, 92, 93, 94 and 96. First permanent appointment May 1, 1897.

Salary 1896-97 $ 166 66
" 1897-98 1,000 00
" 1898-99 1,050 00
" 1899-1900 1,100 00
" 1900-01 1,200 00
" 1901-02 1,250 00
" 1902-03 541 66 (Leave of absence Oct. 1, '02, to May 1, '03, School of Science, Kingston, without pay.)
Salary 1903-04 $ 562 50 Ditto Oct. 1, '03—May 1, '04, without pay.
Salary 1904-05 $ 583 33 Ditto Oct. 1, '04—May 1, '05, without pay.
Salary 1905-06 $ 624 28 Ditto Oct. 1, '05—April 26, '06, without pay.
Salary 1906-07 $1,612 50 for 9 months.
" 1907-08 1,843 32 Leave of absence, June, '07, without pay.
Leave of absence, Nov. 1 to 28, '07, without pay.

3. No.
4. No.
5. Yes.

EMPLOYMENT OF DR. A. E. BARLOW.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. Was Doctor A. E. Barlow in the service of the Geological Survey Department prior to and in the year 1902?

2. Did Doctor A. E. Barlow leave this service in 1902 or 1903, or thereabouts? If so, when and for what cause?

3. What was the rate of salary paid to Doctor A. E. Barlow up to the time he severed his connection as above-mentioned?

4. Did Doctor A. E. Barlow again return to the service of the department? If so, when, at what salary, and has he since been continuously in the service of the department?

5. Is Doctor A. E. Barlow now in the service of the department? If so, at what salary?

6. What sums have been paid to Doctor A. E. Barlow as salary since 1896?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue):

1. Yes.

2. Six months leave of absence were given Dr. Barlow from July 1, 1901, to make an examination of the nickel deposits, Sudbury region, for Dr. Mond, the results of which were given to the Geological Survey as per agreement with Dr. Bell the then acting director.

3. Dr. Barlow did not sever his connection with the Geological Survey until the 31st July, 1907, his salary then was $2,000.

4. Dr. Barlow resumed his regular duties on the staff upon the completion of his work for Dr. Mond, and was continuously in the service until the 31st July, 1907.

5. No.

6.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1896-97 | $1,350 |
| 1897-98 | 1,350 |
| 1898-99 | 1,350 |
| 1899-1900 | 1,550 |
| 1900-01 | 1,650 |
| 1901-02 | 1,700 |
| 1902-03 | 1,750 |
| 1903-04 | 1,800 |
| 1904-05 | 1,850 |
| 1905-06 | 1,900 |
| 1906-07 | |
| 9 months | $1,462.50 |
| 1907-08 | |
| 4 months | $654.16 |

EMPLOYEES OF PARLIAMENT AND OF PRINTING BUREAU.

Mr. SPROULE—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. What are the names and salaries of the permanent and sessional employees of the Senate and House of Commons at this date?

2. To what religious denomination do they belong individually, Protestant or Roman Catholic?

3. What is the date of appointment of each?

4. What are the names and salaries of the employees of the Printing Bureau, including the King's Printer and staff, at this date?

5. The religion of each, specifying whether Roman Catholic or Protestant, and date of appointment?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). This question will stand as a notice of motion for a return.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as a notice of motion for a return.

EMPLOYMENT OF MR. D. B. DOWLING.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. Was Mr. D. B. Dowling in the service of the Geological Survey Department in January, 1907, and January, 1908; and if during a portion only, what portion of the year?

2. What position did he occupy and at what salary?

3. Is Mr. D. B. Dowling now in the service of the department, when did his present engagement of service begin, and at what salary?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Mines):

1. Yes. Leave of absence without pay from 1st May to 1st October, 1907.

2. Field geologist—technical class—$1,800.

3. Yes. No new engagement—Resumed duties 1st October, 1907, $1,850.

SUTHERLAND RIFLE SIGHTS.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. Who has the contract for manufacturing the Sutherland rifle back sights for the Department of Militia and Defence, and where are they being made?

2. What is the date of the original contract, the condition as to delivery, price of the sights, and how many have been delivered under the same?

3. Have any modifications been made in the original contract? If so, what and on what date?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. (a) The Sutherland Rifle Sight Company, Limited.

(b) At Westville, Nova Scotia.

2. (a) April 16, 1906.

(b) Deliveries to begin September 15, 1906, and to be completed March 15, 1908.

(c) $1.

(d) None.

3. An order in council dated March 7, 1908, authorized an increase of 20 cents in the contract price, and extended the time for commencement and completion of the contract to March 15, 1908, and September 15, 1909, respectively.

THE DREDGE 'SIR WILFRID LAURIER.'

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. When was the dredge 'Sir Wilfrid Laurier' completed, and what was the cost?

2. Did this cost include the scow necessary for carrying on its operations?

3. If not, was the construction of such scow asked for by public tender?

4. Is the scow now being built? If so, where, and at what cost?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING, (for Minister of Public Works):

1. (a) To be completed 1st June, 1908.

(b) $90,000.

2. No.

3. Tenders were not advertised for, but the following were asked to submit offers: The Collingwood Shipbuilding Company; The Polson Iron Works Company.

4. An order in council was passed March 9, 1908, awarding contract to the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company for $34,000.

RENT OF CANADIAN BUILDING.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. What portion of the Canadian building, so called, is rented by the government, and for what departments?

2. Who owns the building?

3. What is the total amount of space rented, the amount paid per square foot, the total annual rental so calculated, and the length of lease?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (for Minister of Public Works):

1. (a) The whole building, with the exception of a small office reserved by the Imperial Realty Company. (b) Interior, Agriculture, Railways and Canals, Marine and Fisheries, Auditor General.

2. The Imperial Realty Company.

3. 1st lease, 1906 to 1911: 66,660 sup. feet at 41 cents per sup. foot, $27,330.60. 2nd lease, 1907 to 1911: 37,090 sup. feet at 41 cents per sup. foot, $15,206.90. Totals, 103,750 sup. feet, $42,537.50.

HERD OF BUFFALO, ELK PARK.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. What is the present location of the herd of buffalo purchased by the government in Montana?

2. Has any area been set apart for their permanent location, and is that area a solid block, or does it include lands owned by other parties? If so, by whom?

3. What methods will be taken to keep the buffalo within the range?

4. If the area is to be fenced, what will be the mileage and the cost per mile of fencing?

5. Have tenders been ordered for the construction of the fence?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Those which have been brought into Canada are located in Elk Park, in townships 54, ranges 19 and 20, west of the 4th meridian.

2. Yes. It includes lands covered by the Hudson Bay Company grant, several sections belonging to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. These companies are being negotiated with for the surrender of these lands, and have expressed a willingness to do so. There are also two homestead entries in the names of W. Wojewidke and E. C. Bidette.

3. A fence will be erected around the tract.

4. About seventy miles. The cost has been estimated at about $1,000 per mile.

5. Yes.

CAPTAIN BERNIER'S WORK.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. What islands have been flagged by Captain Bernier as the result of his three cruises in the northern waters?

2. How many whalers have been licensed each year, and what amount of money has been collected therefor?

3. What customs ports have been established during their voyages, at what points, at what yearly cost for maintenance, and what customs dues have been collected each year?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I would ask to have the first two sections of the question stand.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). The answer to the third section of the question is:

3. The collection of customs duties in the northern waters of Canada has been looked after since 1902 by officers of the Northwest Mounted Police and by an acting officer of customs on board the government ships visiting various fishing stations in these waters. Superintendent J. D. Moodie, of the Northwest Mounted Police, was authorized in 1903 to act as customs officer in the northern waters without salary, except as a police officer. A customs office was opened at Fullerton, Hudson bay, 7th November, 1903, under Superintendent Moodie's directions, the officer in charge to receive 10 per cent of the collections. James Duncan, an officer of the preventive service, at salary of $800 a year, accompanied the expedition of 1906-7 for the customs. He secured orders for payment of customs duties to the amount of $985.21. The customs duties previously collected in these northern waters since 1902 amounted to $671.22.

RAMSLAND HOMESTEAD ENTRY.

Mr. LAKE—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked:

1. In respect of the N.W. ¼ section 35, township 31, range 6, W. 2nd meridian, what sum was paid by Mr. O. Ramsland in respect of entry fees, or in regard to any improvements there may have been on the land, and where are such payments accounted for in the Auditor General's Report?

2. Was a re-entry for another homestead granted to Dimitry Soochochen after his abandonment of the above homestead? If so, for what section, and on what terms?

3. Did he receive any consideration for abandoning his first homestead?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. $5 entry fee, being the usual fee for half of a quarter-section, and Mr. Ramsland only entered for the north half of the north-west quarter of section 35, township 31, range 6, west 2nd meridian. This payment is accounted for in the Auditor General's Report for 1905-1906, page L—93, Dominion lands revenue, Yorkton agency, and is included in the amount of $41,210 in column headed 'Homesteads.' Nothing was paid for improvements.

2. No.

3. No.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE —TERCENTENARY OF QUEBEC—VISIT OF THE PRINCE OF WALES.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE (Montmagny). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before we pass to the Orders of the Day, I want to draw the attention of the government upon a paragraph of the parliamentary letter of the newspaper 'La Patrie,' dated 12th March instant, relating to a conversation between Mr. Byron E. Walker, president of the Canadian Bank of Commerce and one of the members of the commission appointed to organize the celebration of the Quebec Tercentenary. This conversation was published in the Halifax 'Chronicle,' as follows:

The Prince of Wales and the fleet of men-of-war will not stop at Halifax. Owing to the shortness of the time allowed to His Royal Highness, the date of his visit was fixed to the end of July, though it would have been preferable to put it to a later date, during the fall. It is proposed to invite to the celebration representatives of all the English possessions and even representatives of Hindoo States, outside of the English and French fleets, and the Canada militia. It will not be a celebration exclusively Canadian, neither a Canadian celebration. It will have an Imperial meaning; during a whole week we will make of the Plains of Abraham the centre of the empire.

I would like to know, if this conversation of Mr. Walker was representing the views of the commission appointed by the government, and if he was authorized to make such a declaration?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER. (Translation.) In answer to my hon. friend, I must say that the commission has not yet been appointed; that Mr. Walker had no communication with the government, and consequently was not authorized to make such statement, for which the government is not responsible.

ROBBINS IRRIGATION COMPANY.

Mr. H. B. AMES (Montreal, St. Antoine) moved:

For a copy of all papers necessary to bring the information contained in sessional paper, No. 90, 1907, up to date.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) please explain?

Mr. AMES. The object is to have the balance of the papers in reference to the Robbins Irrigation Company's operations in Southern Alberta.

Motion agreed to.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and memoranda exchanged between the British government and the government of Canada relating to the establishment of the Royal Mint at Ottawa.—Mr. Caron.

For a copy of all correspondence, reports, communications and other papers and documents of every kind and description not already brought down, relative to the rifle known as the Ross rifle, or to the contract between the government and any person or corporation with respect to the said rifle, or to the value or efficiency thereof, or to any alleged defects therein. Also a copy of all letters, telegrams, despatches, reports, and other communications of every kind from the British government or any member or official thereof, or from the War Office, or Secretary of State for War, or any officer or official or person employed by or in the service of the British government, to the Governor General of Canada, or to the government of Canada, or to the Minister of Militia, or to any officer or official or person in the public service of Canada, relative to the said rifle, or to the value or efficiency of the said rifle or any defects therein, or any matter or thing connected therewith.—Mr. Worthington.

For a return showing: 1. The contracts between the Commissioners of the National Transcontinental Railway and S. D. McArthur, M. P. & J. T. Davis, and MacDonell & O'Brien, respectively, for construction of the said railway in districts B and F, and the plans and specifications relating thereto.

2. All classified progress estimates from the respective residencies, of work done in each month of the year 1907 under each of said contracts, as made by the resident division, district, and other agencies; and all reports upon, and changes, revisions, corrections, additions and deductions made in such estimates; and all correspondence in regard thereto between the said engineer, or with any inspector, or between them and the chief engineer, or the commissioners, or between the commissioners, or any of them, and any engineer or other official, and the contractors or sub-contractors.

3. The amounts of the moneys paid upon or in respect of such several progress estimates, and the dates of such payments.

4. All instructions from time to time to any engineer or inspector with regard to any work done or to be done under said several contracts, or as to the classification of such work.

5. All claims for extras or allowance upon work done during said period under each contract, whether allowed or disallowed, and the correspondence relating thereto.

6. All letters, communications, protests, objections, reports or statements, to or from the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company with regard to any work done during the aforesaid period under the said contracts, or with regard to the classified progress estimates aforesaid.—Mr. Barker.

For a return showing the amount paid for the property known as the hospital lot, Belleville, Ontario, the first site selected for drill hall in Belleville; the amount received for the same property on its re-sale by the government; the amount paid for passing the title and making the transfer to the government and from the government, to whom, and when; date the purchase was made, and when the property was re-sold; and upon whose recommendation the property was purchased, and resold.—Mr. Porter.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. H. A. WARD (Durham). I would like to ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) when I may expect the return asked for on February 19 regarding the case of one Blunden.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I shall be able to present that return to the House to-morrow or next day.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS.

On the order,

Second reading of Bill (No. 27) to amend the Government Railways Act.—Mr. Macdonald.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) will be here in a moment. I know that he desires to proceed with this Bill, and, in his absence, I move the second reading.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read second time.

WIRES AND WATER MAINS ACROSS RAILWAYS.

Mr. JOHN BARR (Dufferin). Moved the second reading of Bill (No. 43 to amend the Railway Act. He said: The object of this Bill is to facilitate the crossing of railway rights of way by telegraph and telephone wires, water mains and viaducts of different kinds. In effect, the Bill provides that in the event of any person desiring to cross the track of a railway with telephone, telegraph or electric light wires, water mains, &c., he must give the railway company notice through its agent in the municipality, or, in case there is no agent in the municipality, then through the nearest agent.

At the end of ten days they can go on and construct the line. If the railway authorities take exception to the crossing of the track, or to going under it, as the case may be, then the railway authorities must apply to the Railway Commission and the Railway Commission must notify the individual or corporation that they desire to cross the track. The Railway Commission must then notify the individuals or corporations, as the case may be, that they must send plans and specifications of the proposed work to the Railway Commission and it has to judge with respect to them. Those are the changes in connection with the law. There is also a provision in the Bill that no railway company may demand any payment in connection with the crossing of their line whether it is by a telephone, a telegraph or other electric wire, but in the event of a crossing under the track by a water main, a viaduct, or a sewer, &c., the parties must pay for an engineer, the cost of such engineer not to exceed $3 a day. Under the present law a person desiring to cross a railway track with a telephone, telegraph or other electric wire must apply to the railway authorities. In almost every case there is great delay. They have to make their application to be allowed to cross, usually a considerable interval elapses before they receive an answer, and when they do receive an answer it is generally to the effect that if they pay $5 they will be allowed to cross the railway. I submit that this is a great injustice. I submit that these railway corporations have no right to draw one cent from the country in this way. We have a right to expect that we can cross with our wires at any time without any cost. The result is that we find it necessary, in so far as telephones, telegraphs and electric wires are concerned, to make application to the Railway Commission and then we find very frequently that they are engaged, or that they have more work than they can overtake, or that they are taking their holidays and there are three or four weeks during which no business can be done. This happens to be about the time when telephone and other electric wires and water mains are constructed. The fall of the year is the most convenient time for farmers to undertake work of this kind. Thus we find that great expense is put upon individuals in connection with these lines. I submit that the railway companies have no right to claim any money for allowing people to string wires across their tracks. But that is the course they pursue and in order to prove that I need only read to you a letter which I received in my own riding. An application was made by a builder there to be allowed to cross the track with a telephone wire. He had obtained authority to do so from the municipal council. He made application and in a few weeks the company sent back word that he could cross by paying $5. He came to me and I wrote a letter to Mr. Murphy, superintendent of the railway, remonstrating with him and telling him that I did not think that they had the right to tax people for crossing their line. I received the following letter in reply:

Your letter of the 17th in connection with Mr. Cole's application to string wires across our tracks at Shelburne, duly reached me.

I note that Mr. Cole has applied to the Railway Commission for permission to put his wires over our tracks. You, of course, understand that in connection with such crossings this company is put to considerable expense, handling the application, preparing blue prints, &c., which the amount of $5 does not really cover.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) E. MURPHY.

I say there is no expense in connection with it and they have no right whatever to charge municipalities or individuals one cent. But we find that whilst that is their price in connection with telephones, telegraphs and other electric wires, they go one better, in fact you might say very much better, in connection with water mains or sewers. They have the form of a lease which they send out accompanied by a demand upon those who wish to cross with water mains for $4 and $1 per year for all time to come. I have a copy of one of these leases here. A lady came to our town and purchased a large house on the opposite side of the railway track from the public utilities, such as waterworks, electric light, telephone, telegraph, &c. She applied to the Bell Telephone Company asking that they install their service, which was immediately done. You will understand that the Bell Telephone Company have an agreement under which they do not require to delay and under which they can string their wires across the track. She also made application to the electric company to install their apparatus in her house. She then found that she had to make application to the railway company. I should say that before doing so she made application to the municipality, and the council very gladly granted the right to lay the water mains along the streets and to extend them across the railway. But when she made application to the railway company for permission to cross with electric wires they told her that she would have to pay $5 a year. They also told her she would have to sign an agreement by which she would have to pay $4 for the crossing and $1 a year for all time to come. This letter says:

I recommend that the application be granted at a rental of $1 per annum. In fixing rentals superintendents should take into consideration the company has to pay all taxes on premises and make sufficient allowance to cover same; Mrs. Witters to pay $4 for repairing.

I may say that the municipality of Shelburne made an application last fall to extend their water main across one of the streets over which the railway passed and the railway company sent a lease similar to this asking the municipality to sign it. Now, as to these crossings in connection with telegraphs, telephone and power wires, or the construction of water mains, in 99 cases out of 100 they are all on the streets or highways, and the railways do not pay any taxes in connection with their railroad so far as the highways are concerned. Of course they own the railway track and they do pay taxes on it, but in crossing public highways in rural districts or villages, towns, and cities they pay no taxes. And in endeavouring to obtain such a lease as this which I have referred to, seeing that they do not own the property they are endeavouring to get that lease by misrepresentation. They have no right to demand one cent from any municipality for such a purpose. The municipalities owned these streets and highways before these railroads were built and it is only because the charter parliament gives a railway that it has any right to cross any public highway. Quite a number of municipalities and individuals throughout the country have signed these leases in ignorance of their legal position and fearing there would be delay if they applied to the Railway Commission. and that they might be put to the expense of employing a lawyer. It is an imposition for the railways to force such a lease on the municipalities. The municipality of Shelburne handed the lease back to the representative of the company and told him it was an enormous amount of impudence for the company to ask the municipality to sign a lease for the privilege of crossing one of their own streets. Every such lease that is to-day in existence in the Dominion of Canada should be cancelled. I venture to say that when it is known, as it is pretty generally known now, that the railways have not the right to demand this lease, very few of them will be signed in the future. It is in the interests of the railways themselves that they should cease endeavouring to retard progress in the matter of telephone and telegraph communication. The use of the telephone is increasing rapidly and it is of the greatest importance to the people that every facility should be granted for its extension. The rural districts are building telephone lines in every direction to connect with the cities, towns and villages, and the farmers' sons being thus placed in communication with the populous centres, it makes them more contented on the farm. Then, the telephone is a source of wealth to the farmer. Numbers of progressive farmers have telephones in their own houses, and if they wish to market their cattle or grain on a certain day they can learn by telephone in the morning how the market stands and if it is unfavourable they can hold their stock for another day. Without the telephone they would have to take chances on bringing their produce in and selling it at a low price.

Many farmers communicate with cattle buyers and grain buyers in order to obtain from them information in regard to the city markets, and by this means hundreds of thousands of dollars have been saved to the farmers of this country. The use of the telephone makes people in every way more contented on the farm. So far as the Railway Commission is concerned, we have no complaint to make. They have done their work as well as possible, but I know from my own experience that during the summer months, not only in the province of Ontario, but in other provinces, business has been held up for weeks and months either because the members of the commission were on their holidays or were pressed with other work. But I am glad to know that the commission have not refused one single application of this kind that has been made to them, which proves beyond a doubt that not one of these applications was necessary, and that the only reason the railroads had refused them was that they might obtain the $5, or, in the case of water mains, that they might get a lease with $1 a year for all time to come. If the present law is not changed, we are going to throw an enormous amount of unnecessary work upon the Railway Commission, who are already very much overworked. I find from the return which has been brought down in answer to my request, that during the last two and a half years there were in the Dominion of Canada 1,386 applications for telephones, 215 applications for water mains and 65 applications for telegraphs, making a total of 1,666 applications. Every one of these applications has been granted by the Railway Commission, proving beyond a doubt, that there was no necessity for one of them being made. In some cases a length of time has elapsed before the application has been granted, for the reason I have already suggested. On one or two occasions I myself wrote to the commission, and received the reply that they were sorry they had not yet reached my application, but that it would be attended to as soon as possible. If a change is not made in the law, the applications will be more numerous than ever, for the people will no longer consent to pay to the railroads $5 which they have no right to pay, and will no longer consent to sign a lease which is a fraud on its face, which is obtained by misrepresentation. The railroads might just as well stop endeavouring to get them, for they will not be carried out. So far as the railroads under the control of the government are concerned, no such thing has been found necessary. I took occasion in Toronto to call on the commission controlling the Temiscamingue and other railroads under the Ontario commission and they told me that their custom was, when an application was sent in for permission to cross their railway, to immediately send word to their manager that such an application has been made, with a paper or a book giving him instructions as to what kind of wires should be used, the height at which they should be placed, and so on, and they said that in not one case had twenty-four hours elapsed before these instructions were sent out after the application was received. In no case was there a refusal. I have endeavoured to obtain some information in regard to the custom in connection with the Intercolonial Railway, and so far as I have been able to ascertain there has been no obstruction. After the application is made, the custom, I understand, is to send it to the manager of the section concerned, and he immediately gives instructions for the crossing to be made and how the crossing shall be accomplished. Now, if crossings can be made over the railroads under the control of the Ontario government and the Dominion government without any obstruction or delay, and without any charge, I think it must be apparent to every hon. gentleman in this House that it is a great injustice on the part of the railroad companies to endeavour to obstruct the progress of the country, or to extract from the free and independent electors or from the municipalities of the country one dollar of what belongs to them for a right which they ought to enjoy. I think it has been proved beyond a doubt that this obstruction on the part of the railroads is purely for the purpose of making money. If this Bill passes, and we make it a misdemeanour for the railroads to attempt to collect money from the people, and we make it necessary for them, if they desire to raise any objection, to notify the Railway Commission, I venture to say that these difficulties will be reduced to a minimum and there will not be a baker's dozen of applications of this kind to the Railway Commission in the next three years. In that way, by passing this Bill, we shall be taking a great deal of unnecessary work from the Railway Commission and shall be accomplishing a great good for the farmers and municipalities of the country. In regard to the crossing of railroads by water mains, I may say that in looking over the cases that have been before the Railway Commission, I find that it is their custom to cause the individual or corporation to pay the engineer a sum not exceeding $3 a day. In every case I find the board has awarded $3 a day. Hon. gentlemen may say that that is a small amount, but the work is one which does not tax the engineer to any extent. In the case of a water main, the custom is to run it up to the track on each side, and so far as small water mains are concerned the ground is not broken. They have apparatus for boring beneath the track, and in no case is the engineer there more than an hour. As regards sewers and different kinds of viaducts in cities that might be different, but it is contended that since the corporations have their own engineers they should not be called upon to pay a large amount. In the case of water mains I am governed by the decision of the Railway Commission in every case, and that is that $3 a day should be paid for the services of the engineer. The provision which I propose in this connection is as follows :

In no case shall any municipal corporation or telephone or telegraph company be required to pay to the railway company any fee for the supervision of the work that is so undertaken; but in every case where a water main, conduit or sewer is carried under the railway, the person or corporation so carrying it shall pay to the railway company a sum not exceeding $3 a day for the services of the railway company's engineer in supervising such work.

This will effectually prevent the railways from trying to complicate the work. This Bill has received the consideration of a very large number of municipalities. It has been before the country a number of weeks and has been well advertised. After I introduced it into this House, I found that the union of municipalities took up the question and published the Bill in their journal, in the December number. Hon. gentlemen are aware that the 'Canadian Municipal Journal' is an organ devoted specially to the interests of the municipalities and is the mouthpiece of the Municipal Union. As soon as I introduced this measure, I had a letter from the secretary of the Municipal Union asking me to send copies of the Bill to the newspaper, and I also had a letter from the secretary saying that the Union approved of the Bill but suggesting certain amendments in some minor details, which I shall deal with later on. Here is the reference in the 'Municipal Journal' :—

A very important amendment to the Railway Act has been introduced by Dr. Barr, which we give in full along with a letter from Dr. Barr.

Here is the letter which I wrote to the secretary of the Municipal Union :—

Dear Sir,—In reply to yours of the 17th, I herewith inclose a copy of my Bill which I introduced to the House yesterday. I am very much pleased to hear that the Union of Canadian Municipalities is taking an interest in the Bill. I think the municipalities have been put to very much unnecessary trouble in crossing railroad lines with their telephones, telegraphs and water mains, and an unnecessary amount of work is thrown on the railroad board, in settling those questions. My Bill gives the best solution of the question I can form, and if your organization approves of the Bill or the principle of the Bill, I would be pleased to have your assistance, as I am aware the railroads will oppose the Bill. Should you approve of the Bill and find any amendments you could suggest, I would be pleased to give them my careful consideration.

I remain,

Yours Truly,
JOHN BARR.

Immediately afterwards I received letters from almost every part of the Dominion. For instance, here is a telegram from Victoria, B.C., the riding of my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) :—

Victoria, B.C., January 14, 1908.

Dr. John Barr,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ont.

Railway Act amendment please include as subject matter in amendment 246 all municipal utilities, sewers, drains, culverts for wiring, also drainage by resolution of council.

W. J. DOWLER,
Clerk Municipal Council.

I endeavoured to meet those wishes as far as possible and did amend the Bill in that sense. I also have a letter from Gormley, the riding of the hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) North York :

Gormley, Ont., January 22, 1908.

Dear Sir,—A copy of the 'Canadian Municipal Journal,' with your proposed amendment to the Railway Act has been received and considered by the board of directors of our company, and I am instructed to inform you that we most heartily approve of your amendment. It is quite proper that there should be strict supervision of the crossing of all railway tracks by telephone lines, but there is no reason why a general order could not cover the matter and safeguard the public as efficiently as does the present annoying procedure. Trusting that you may be successful in this matter.

Yours Truly,
The Bethseda & Stouffville
Tel. Co., Limited.
Alex. D. Bruce, Pres.

As you are aware, Sir, this Bill has been published in almost every municipality in the Dominion. The Union of Municipalities is an organization that has the supervision of all matters connected with municipal affairs. The 'Canadian Municipal Journal' finds its way into almost every municipality. It is the custom for a municipality to take one for each council and one for the clerk at least. I know that the circulation of the 'Journal' is very great indeed. My Bill was published in the 'Journal,' with the result that not only have I had a large number of letters myself, a few of which I will read, but Mr. Lighthall, the honorary secretary of the Union of Municipalities, has sent me a large bundle of letters every one of which expresses approval of the Bill. A number of those who communicated with Mr. Lighthall took occasion to write a number of letters concerning the Bill, and part of the correspondence he has sent me resulted from these letters. I desire to read a number of the letters received. It will be seen that they are from widely separated parts of the Dominion.

The first of these is from Mr. T. G. Meredith, city solicitor of London, a gentleman who is very well known:

London, Ont., January 22, 1908.

W. D. Lighthall, Esq., K.C.,
Hon. Sec. Union of Canadian Municipalities,
Montreal, Que.

(Re Railway Crossings.)

Dear Sir,—I duly received your letter of the 23rd ultimo, inclosing copy of Dr. Barr's Bill respecting crossing of railways by municipal works. I have been instructed by the City Council of London to say that they are in favour of the amendments proposed by Dr. Barr, and will be glad to do what they can to assist in the passing of the Bill. I agree with you that the Bill should be extended so as to include conduits and sewers. Probably the Bill has been amended to meet these views, and to express more clearly the intention of the Act.

If such be the case I shall be obliged if you will let me have a copy of the Bill as amended. Will you please let me know when the Bill will likely be considered by the Railway Committee, and what assistance you think London can give to procure its legislation. An early reply by letter or telegram will oblige.

Yours truly,
T. G. MEREDITH.

City Clerk's Office,
Calgary, Canada, January 14, 1908.

W. D. Lighthall, Esq., K.C.,
Hon. Sec.-Treas. Union of Canadian Municipalities,
Montreal, Que.

Dear Sir,—Your letter of the 23rd ultimo was laid before the council at their meeting last evening and on motion it was resolved as follows:

That this council heartily endorse the principle of the Bill introduced into the House of parliament by Dr. Barr, M.P., re crossing railways by municipal works.

I am, yours very truly,
H. E. GILLIS,
City Clerk.

Regina, Sask., January 13, 1908.

W. D. Lighthall,
Russell House, Ottawa.

Regina council confirms my letter of 4th instant regarding Dr. Barr's Railway Bill.

J. KELSO HUNTER.

Victoria, B.C., January 14, 1908.

W. D. Lighthall,
Russell House, Ottawa, Ont.

Have wired Dr. Barr on lines your letter to city solicitor by resolution of council.

W. J. DOWLER,
Clerk, Municipal Council.

Montreal, December 30, 1907.

W. D. Lighthall, Esq.,
New York Life Building, Montreal.

Dear Sir,—Your letter of the 23rd December, 1907, has been duly received. I approved of the principle of the Bill of Mr. J. Barr, but I believe the words 'drains, conduits and other works' should be inserted in the Bill. We intend, in the town of St. Louis, to build a tunnel across the Canadian Pacific Railway and such a work should be included in the Bill. If there should be a fight, why not for the whole? I remain,

Yours very truly,
C. GILMOUR,
Mayor, town of St. Louis.

Fort William, Ont., December 31, 1907.

W. D. Lighthall, K.C.,
Hon. Sec. Union of Canadian Municipalities,
Montreal, Que.

Re an Act to amend the Railway Act.

My dear Sir,—I think Mr. Barr's Bill meets a need of municipalities who have to cross railways with wires and water mains. At present there is usually a long delay. In our own case it took me months as mayor to get an arrangement with Canadian Pacific Railway and then they wanted the municipality to be responsible in case of accident, &c.

Wishing you a Happy New Year,

I am, yours truly,
JOSHUA DYKE,
Office of Mayor.

Amherst, N.S., January 3, 1908.

W. D. Lighthall,
Hon. Sec. Treas. Union of Canadian Municipalities,
Montreal, Canada.

Dear Sir,—Your letter received re Act to amend Railway Act. I might say that I have placed this matter before the presidents of our local telephone companies, and they think that this Act covers the ground very well and could not suggest any amendments. I think, as you have mentioned, that it should include conduits and sewers.

I do not think the railway should be allowed anything for their engineer's inspection of work, when the town had in their employ a competent engineer, and the town would be held responsible for the work. If they chose to send their engineer, it would be at their own expense.

Please excuse short delay. Wishing you a Happy New Year, I remain,

Yours very truly,
THOMAS P. LOWTHER,
Mayor.

The next is dated from the mayor's office, in the city of Charlottetown, P.E.I. It is as follows :

W. D. Lighthall, Esq., Montreal.

Dear Sir,—In reply to your favour of December 23, which should have been answered before this date, I would suggest that the following be added to clause 2, on the fifth line after the second word: mains, conduits, sewers or any other kind of construction pertaining to municipal works.

I remain, yours truly,
(Sgd.) JAMES PATON.

The next letter is from Prince Albert, almost as far west as we could go, so it will be seen that this Bill has aroused interest from end to end of Canada ; every part of the Dominion has the same grievances, and not one letter has been received that is not in favour of the Bill. This letter reads as follows :

Dear Sir,—Replying to your letter of the 23rd ultimo respecting the Bill to be introduced by Dr. Barr, M.P., re crossing railways by municipal works, I beg to say that the principle of the Bill appears to be all right, and with the inclusion of sewers and conduits would appear to cover the ground unless some provision should be made to include municipal street railways. I have no doubt the wording will be whipped into shape in committee.

Sincerely yours,
R. S. COOK.
Mayor.

The next letter is from the city clerk's office, Moncton, N.B., and is as follows :

City of Moncton, New Brunswick,
City Clerk's Office,
J. S. Magee, city clerk,
January 9, 1908.

W. D. Lighthall, Esq.,
Secretary Union of Canadian Municipalities, Montreal, province of Quebec.

Dear Sir,—Your telegram to hand. Regarding the Bill introduced by Mr. John Barr, M.P., I fully endorse the conditions therein and would suggest that the Bill be amended providing that the same conditions shall apply to sewers passing under the railway track as to water mains.

. . . . . .

I have this day wired you as follows:

I find it will be impossible to attend meeting of executive at Russell House, January 14. Am writing.

Trusting that your meeting will be of much benefit, I remain,

Yours truly,
J. S. MAGEE.

The next is dated from the City Chambers, Regina, Saskatchewan, January 4, 1908, jumping again from the east to the west. It is as follows :

W. D. Lighthall, Esq.,
Secretary Union of Canadian Municipalities, Montreal.

Dear Sir,—Replying to your letter to Mayor Smith, calling attention to the Bill of Dr. Barr, M.P., regarding crossing of railways by municipal works, which his worship has handed to me to acknowledge, our new council meets on Monday when the several committees will be appointed, but in the meantime I might say that the city of Regina approves of the Bill with the addition of conduits and sewers, as this city is particularly interested in crossing the Canadian Pacific Railway with its sewers, having had to do so twice already, and should the corporation in the future decide to construct a municipal telephone system the conduits will also be necessary.

Yours truly,
J. KELSO HUNTER,
City Clerk.

The next letter is dated Law Department, city of Hamilton, F. R. Waddell, city solicitor, addressed to Mr. Lighthall, and reads :

Hamilton, Ontario, January 2, 1908.

Dear Sir,—Your letter of the 23rd of December last duly received. I am of the opinion that the Bill introduced by Dr. Barr, member for Dufferin county, to amend the Railway Act would be satisfactory to the municipalities and the Bill should also include conduits and sewers.

(Sgd.) F. R. WADDELL.

The next is from St. Boniface, Manitoba, and is as follows :

W. D. Lighthall, Esq.,
Secretary Union of Canadian Municipalities, Montreal.

Dear Sir,—

Re Dr. Barr's Bill.

I hasten to reply to your letter in this matter. The Bill is badly drafted in my opinion. No doubt, as you say, it should include sewers and conduits. I do not think that municipalities should in any case pay for the services of the railway company's engineer in supervising the work.

I might say, of course, that the Railway Commission have control of that matter, and therefore I think in this case this gentleman is wrong, but in all other respects they heartily approve of the Bill. The next letter is from the Bell Telephone Company of Montreal, dated March 4, 1908, and is addressed to myself. I was not certain whether I should have the approval of the Bell Telephone Company, but as I knew that they had at one time trouble in crossing the railroads, but I thought that they had so arranged matters that they were probably satisfied. I find, however, that this is not the case, and I received this letter :

Montreal, March 4, 1908.

John Barr, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—I have been handed a copy of Bill (No. 43) entitled 'An Act to amend the Railway Act,' introduced by you at the present session, asking for the replacement of section No. 246 of the Act, with the object of simplifying the procedure in obtaining authority to cross over or under railway lines b means of telegraph, telephone, or power wires, or water mains or conduits.

This company is naturally very much interested in the subject, and has found the present procedure most cumbersome. I feel sure that the members and officers of the board will bear me out in stating that the furnishing of a plan and profile of each proposed crossing and the making of a formal application with notice to the railways in each case, as called for by the present Act, involves much labour and expense which is quite unnecessary to properly protect the interest of the railway company and the public generally.

This company, since the coming into force of the Act, has had many hundred, and I think I am safe in saying, several thousand, applications of this nature covering solely crossings over or under railways at highways and while the board upon our application has settled standard specifications covering the manner of construction and conditions as to the responsibility of the telephone company and the railway company, which has simplified the procedure very much, the delay involved in obtaining an order before proceeding with the construction, and the cost and labour involved in furnishing a profile in each case, still renders the working of the Act unnecessarily troublesome.

I have frequently discussed with the late chairman of the board, and Mr. Mountain, the chief engineer, the question of obtaining an amendment to the section to do away with the necessity of furnishing a plan in each case, and I understand they both heartily concurred.

I will take the opportunity of calling upon you the next time I am in Ottawa——

I might say that this gentleman has called upon me; we have discussed it, and he highly approves of the Bill as it stands today. He goes on:

I will take the opportunity of calling upon you the next time I am in Ottawa, and if any information from the records of the company showing the unworkable nature of the present section will be of assistance, you might kindly let me know.

Yours faithfully,
LAWRENCE MACFARLANE,
General counsel.

I might say that I talked the question over with Mr. Macfarlane. He highly approves of the Bill and believes it is in the best interest of his company, and he thinks that the Bill in its present form will be most desirable.

I might say in explanation of passages in some of these letters, that the first Bill which I introduced did not include viaducts, sewers, &c. But, with the advice I have obtained and with the assistance of the law clerk of the House I have reconstructed the Bill to a certain extent, as you will find by reference to the reprint, and the result is that I have placed before the House a Bill which has met with the approval of the great mass of the people whom it has reached. I believe it is a Bill that is in the interest of the public. I think it is necessary that we should have this amendment to the law in order to diminish the work thrown upon the Railway Commission and to relieve the country of unnecessary expense. I believe it is necessary in order to facilitate the progress of the country and therefore I think it will meet with the approval of this House as I know it will meet with the approval of the country. It may not be perfect, but if it is not perfect, I invite this House, and particularly the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) and the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman), both of whose constituents have approved of the principle of the Bill, to give me their assistance in making any improvements that they think can be made in it. I also invite the cooperation of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) as this is a Bill largely designed to further the interests of rural communities. I say that an injustice is done in every case in which a five dollar bill is demanded by these railways for crossing over their lines, it is an insult to our intelligence and a fraud on this fair Dominion of ours and on every one of our municipal councils. Therefore, I say that the Bill is in the best interests of the country at large. The machinery of the Bill provides that after making application to the station master in the municipality, or to the nearest station master, they must give the railway company ten days notice and that if they string the wires across the railway it must be done in accordance with the plans and specifications of the Railway Commission. We know that the plans and specifications of the Railway Commission provide that the wire must be copper, it must be strung across on arms, it must be 24 feet above the track, and so on. Therefore, under this provision the railway corporation cannot suffer. It may be to their interest to have these lines cross their track. We do know that sometimes villages and towns are very much annoyed by the action of the railway companies. They cannot do without the railway, but sometimes the railway stops traffic much longer than the law allows and very frequently, if there is no particular friction, the municipal authorities do not object as they are anxious that the railways should have every facility possible to handle the traffic which is entrusted to them, but when they attempt to make a charge for carrying electric wires along streets that the people own and that they owned before the railways were constructed, I say it is time that we interfered in order to see that justice is done. With regard to water mains and conduits going under the track it is my opinion that the people constructing them should pay for the privilege and that the railways should be protected in this particular. In order to safeguard the interests of railways and to protect the travelling public I believe that any municipality placing water mains or sewers under railway tracks should not do so except under the guidance of an engineer and that the services of the engineer should be paid for by them. It may be that the compensation allowed with respect to the construction of sewers is altogether too small. I might also say that some objections have been taken to the fact that provision is made for ten days notice being given to railway companies. It has been said by some that this is altogether too short a time. Well, it is possible that it is too short a time. I do not think the country would suffer if we gave them fifteen or even twenty days notice. I do not think that if this House decided that they should have fifteen days notice the country would object, and I do not think that I would object. I have prepared this Bill with the greatest possible care. I have had the assistance of the law clerk, he has carefully gone over it and given me all the help he could, but if there is any other amendment which the House may desire to make to the Bill in committee I will be ready to approve of it. I hope I will have the assistance of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) and of the other ministers who are interested in it. I have understood that there will be no objection to it going to the Railway Committee. I would probably have preferred to have had a committee of the whole House but if the government desire that it shall go to the Railway Committee then I am satisfied. Having given this explanation of the purpose of the Bill I hope it will receive the approval of the House. I therefore beg to move that the Bill be now read the second time.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER. (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal that the government can accept in the Bill proposed by my hon. friend (Mr. Barr); in fact, if my hon. friend will refer to the Bill which has been introduced by my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) he will find that many of the most important provisions of the Bill are already provided for in the Bill which has been introduced by my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals. Under such circumstances the government has no objection to the second reading of the Bill affirming the principle of it, and my hon. friend will have an opportunity of discussing the provisions of it when the Bill of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals is called up.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

INSPECTION AND SALE ACT AMENDMENT.

On the order :

Second reading of Bill (No. 64) to amend the Inspection and Sale Act.—Mr. Porter.

Mr. PORTER. While I am prepared to move the second reading of the Bill I have been informed by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) that general amendments are likely to be introduced in a few days to the Inspection and Sale Act and he has requested me to allow this Bill to stand.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands.

HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 66) to amend the House of Commons Act. He said : Mr. Speaker, the object of this Bill is to provide that writs to fill vacancies in the House of Commons shall be issued within a certain period, and in that way to avoid the prolonged disfranchisement of constituencies which has sometimes occurred. The Bill is framed on practically the same line as that which has been in force in Ontario since the year 1904.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) if he thinks, in view of the invariable practice that has been followed in this House since confederation, there is any necessity for such a Bill as this. If any vacancies have taken place during the recess these vacancies have always been filled before the ensuing session, and so far as I can remember no constituency has been left unrepresented, certainly not within the last ten or twelve years. The provisions of this Bill are very drastic and if they became law they might involve results which my hon. friend has perhaps not considered. I will mention two instances. In the session of 1896 which was the last of that parliament, Mr. Bryson, member for Pontiac died in January and Mr. Amyot, member for Bellechasse died later. It was known that parliament must end on the 24th of April and nobody moved to have the writs issued, and it was the desire of both sides, and properly so, that elections should not be held in these constituencies to fill these vacancies for the very short time before parila- would dissolve. Now, were the Bill of my hon. friend law the writs would have had to be issued mechanically quite independent of any action by parliament, and elections would have been brought on in these constituencies notwithstanding that every one knew there would be general elections about the month of June in that year. Such a contingency may arise at any time. We may come to the last session of a parliament and we might be forced under such a Bill as this to bring on elections which neither political party desired and which the public interest did not require. I know that in certain cases injustice may be done, but I do not think any serious injustice has been done in the past in this respect. I would ask my hon. friend not to press his Bill to-day but to leave it for consideration when the Bill of the Minister of Justice comes up later.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have no objection to accept the Prime Minister's suggestion but I would like to add something in reply to what he has said. It may be open to very serious debate as to whether even in the cases he cited in 1896, new writs should not have issued forthwith. Even if we should know that parliament were coming to an end in three or four months why should a constituency remain unrepresented when very important questions are before the people, as was the case in the session of 1896. The expense of an election is trifling as compared with the whole cost of government; and while the expense may be regarded on the one hand, there is on the other the very important question of having every constituency in the Dominion represented in parliament. It would be very easy to provide for any such case by amending this Bill so as to say that the House itself should have control; and if parliament were to expire in a month or a few weeks, the House could be given power to direct that the clerk of the Crown in Chancery should not in a particular instance carry this provision into effect. My recollection as to what has taken place is a little different from that of the right hon. gentleman, because I think the constituency of St. James, Montreal, was unrepresented for a whole session.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Do you say St. James ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am speaking from recollection, but I remember there was at least one constituency in which the writs should have been issued much earlier than they were. In the legislature of Ontario, under a law similar to our present law, the riding of North Renfrew remained unrepresented for about 18 months thus showing the possibility of abuse under the present statute. This Bill is framed entirely on the Ontario Act of 1904, chapter 10, and I believe the Act has worked well in that province. As a result of it the by-elections have been brought on within a month or two at the outside, though the statute permits a delay of three months. I am willing to accept the suggestion of the right hon. gentleman and I understand we shall have an opportunity of discussing the question further if we desire to do so.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read a second time.

DOMIONION ELECTIONS ACT—AMENDMENT.

Mr. G. O. ALCORN (Prince Edward) moved second reading of Bill (No. 80) to amend the Dominion Elections Act. He said: I made a pretty full explanation of this Bill when it was before the House for its first reading, and as the Minister of Justice has introduced a Bill bearing on the same subject, and as there are one or two other Bills standing for second reading also dealing with the same matter and it will be convenient that all should be considered together in Committee, to which I understand the Government has no objection, I beg to move the second reading now.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

GEORGIAN BAY CANAL.

The House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. McCool for a copy of all the plans and reports in the possession of the government in connection with the building of the Georgian Bay canal.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT (South Renfrew). Mr. Speaker, I do not make any excuse for bringing this subject before the House again, and advocating the construction of the Georgian bay water route because of all the great questions which are agitating the country to-day that of transportation is the most important. I may say in the first place that of all the great countries in the world that have natural waterways and canals, Canada stands first, Russia second, and the United States third.

The question now is, shall we close our creditable position and go to the rear ? I for one trust that we shall continue to advance and not recede. We have already spent $90,000,000 on our canals, and we have spent on the Georgian bay survey no less a sum than $640,000. We are told by some that the days of canals are over. I cannot agree with that. Let our neighbours to the south give an answer to that contention. The state of New York alone voted $101,000,000 to deepen the Erie canal from seven feet to twelve feet, to enable it to float boats carrying 1,000 tons, or 30,000 bushels of grain. Take the case of the Sault canals. In 1870, or 38 years ago, the Weitzel canal was started, and it was completed twenty-seven years ago. It is 515 feet long, 80 feet wide and 17 feet deep. But this canal was no sooner constructed than it was found it was entirely inadequate to the wants of the traffic, and the Poe canal was started. It has a length of 800 feet, is 100 feet wide, and has 22 feet of water on the mitre sills. It was completed in 1896, only twelve years ago. The Canadian canal was under construction at the same time. It is 900 feet long and 60 feet wide and has 22 feet of water on the mitre sills.. It was completed in 1895, or nearly 13 years ago. These two canals will accommodate vessels carrying 10,000 tons, or from 300,000 to 400,000 bushels of grain ; and one of these boats can be locked through in from 11 to 15 minutes. It is interesting to note that our Canadian lock, which is worked by electricity, has passed a boat through in 8 minutes, thus making the record for rapidity of work. But notwithstanding that we have these three large canals at the Sault, they are entirely inadequate to the tonnage passing through, and the Americans are now constructing another, which is to be 1,350 feet long and 80 feet wide and is to have 24½ feet of water on the mitre sills. It is to cost no less a sum than $3,500,000, and the canal which is to approach it will cost $2,000,000, making a total of $5,500,000. That shows the imperative necessity of a canal there. It is interesting to note that last year, when the water was low, certain vessels were unable to go through the American canal, and they had to back out and go through the Canadian canal, which had three inches more depth than the American canal. Although these locks were only completed twelve years ago, they are all too small, and something must be done to meet the difficulty. The question is sometimes asked why it is that so many more vessels go through the American locks than through our own. The Americans have a much better system in many respects than we have. They have a fine post office erected between the Weitzel lock and the Poe lock, and when a captain leaves the port from which he starts, he does not always take his orders with him, but his instructions are forwarded to him through the post office at the Sault, and when he arrives there he goes to the post office and gets them. We have not such facilities on our side. That is one of the reasons why so many more vessels go through the American canal than through ours. It is also interesting to note that the Americans have spent $14,000,000 on their locks, while we have spent only $5,000,000 on ours.

Let us note also the rapid increase in traffic through these canals. In 1900 it amounted to 25,000,000 tons, in 1905 to 44,000,000, and in 1907 to 58,000,000. Thus it more than doubled in seven years ; and had it not been for the commercial depression which took place just at the close of last season, it would have amounted to at least 60,000,000 tons. Let us compare this with the traffic through the Suez canal, which in 1904 amounted to 13,401,000 tons, in 1905 to 13,134,000, and in 1906 to 13,445,000. That is to say, the tonnage that passes through the Sault canals in seven months of the year is more than four times the tonnage which passes through the Suez canal in the entire year. That shows the necessity we have for a canal in our own territory. The International Waterways Commission state, on page 4 of their report, that there was an aggregate saving in 1905 on through Lake Superior freight alone of $116,000,000 owing to the construction and operation of these canals. Surely that is an abundant reason why we should go on and construct our own canal. But what other evidence have we from the American side ? In addition to these canals, they are constructing the Panama canal at a cost of $300,000,000, notwithstanding the fact that the American government laid itself open to a war by purchasing and undertaking the completion of this canal. The Panama canal was originally intended to be 100 feet wide ; but they are now widening it to 110 feet at an additional cost of $5,000,000. That shows you what the American people think of canals and the canal system.

What has been the history of our own Canadian canals ? Take, for example, the amount of freight passing through the St. Lawrence canals. In 1902, 12,000 tons of coal passed through ; but in 1905 the amount had grown to 344,000 tons, or an increase of nearly forty-fold. Of corn 13,000 tons passed through in 1902, but in 1905 the amount had grown to 77,000 tons, an increase of nearly six-fold. Of miscellaneous goods 8,000 tons passed through in 1902, but the amount had grown in 1905 to 63,000 tons, an increase of nearly eight-fold. The total freight that passed through was 611,000 tons in 1902, but in 1905 it had grown to 2,368,000 tons, an increase of nearly four-fold. The number of vessels that passed through was 566 in 1902 which had increased in 1905 to 1,000, or an increase of 434 vessels. But I wish particularly to draw attention to this. On page LVI of the report of the Department of Railways and Canals for 1907, I find the following :

> In connection with the question canal versus railway transport of grain from the west, it may be noted that whereas grain and peas passed down to Montreal through the Welland and St. Lawrence canals to the extent of 404,935 tons, an increase of 63,504 tons, compared with the previous year, the quantity carried to Montreal via the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk Railways amounted to 386,963 tons, a decrease of 238,586 tons.

Showing that the traffic on our canals is increasing while on the railways, which compete with the canals, it is decreasing. From what I have said, it must be apparent that the days of canals are by no means over.

What about our sources of freight supply ? Will there be sufficient tonnage to supply these waterways when constructed ? It is important to note, and perhaps some members of this House will be astonished to learn, that Chicago has 45 miles of lake front, that its foreign traffic amounted last year to almost as much as the foreign trade of the city of New York, and that the tonnage of Duluth exceeds that of the foreign trade of Liverpool and almost equals that of Liverpool and Glasgow combined. The question is: Should we not take advantage of this enormous tonnage and see that it goes to our own territory and has an exit in our own territory. These are things we should undoubtedly consider. We have many railways but we have only one grand system of through canals. We have only one Ottawa and French river water route, and that should be preserved to our people for all time to come. I do not believe in handing that over to any corporation to own and to run, but I believe it should be owned by our own government and people and run in the interests of our own people. Water competition is the most powerful possible regulator of railway rates which can be conceived far exceeding in that respect the power of any legislative bodies, even though they be the highest and most powerful in the land. We cannot bring our prairie provinces any nearer to the great lakes, but we can bring our waterways and seaports nearer to them. In constructing this canal we will bring the head of navigation a thousand miles inland and almost to the very heart of our Dominion, thus bringing the great wheat fields of the west that much nearer to the outside world, and, by reducing the price of transportation to the lowest possible point, add materially to the value of their products. It will bring Chicago, Duluth, Port Arthur and Fort William as near to Montreal as they are now to Buffalo. We have on this continent a great trinity of transportation. We have the wagon ways, the railways, and the canals. The wagon roads take everything to the canals and the railroads, and the railroads and canals are competitors but not so severely as some would think. For example, you must bear in mind that canals carry heavy freight, such as raw material, on which there is no profit and leave the other traffic to the railways. They carry such freight as coal, ore, lumber, stone, lime and all kinds of heavy goods, in respect of which time is not an important factor, and on which the freight must be very low in order to make the shipment profitable. They leave to the railways the great revenue producing goods, such as passenger traffic, express traffic and live stock. Thus they relieve the railways of the unprofitable portion of their traffic and leave them that portion which is most productive and remunerative, so that instead of being the opponents of the railways they are a great help to them.

This enterprise, when completed, will be a tremendous force in the interest of peace, concord and good will. Of all the great forces that undoubtedly tend to peace, the most effective is that of trade and commerce. That applies not only to the individual but also to nations. We have to the south of us, and extending along our border for 2,300 miles, one of the greatest nations this world has ever seen. Along this distance there is not a single military post, not a single gun mounted, threatening to make war upon us. For nearly a century we have lived in the enjoyment of unbroken peace with our American neighbours. Shall this continue or shall it be broken? I for one hope that the goddess of peace may smile on these two nations for all time to come. Construct this waterway, and another bond of union will then exist, binding these two great nations together in such a way as to make war between them almost impossible.

We should hardly call this waterway a canal for this reason, that there are really only twenty-seven and a half miles of locks and only fifty-five and a half miles of broken channel. The remaining three hundred and fifty-seven miles will be uninterrupted waterway. This will be a short route. The distance from Fort William to Liverpool will be 806 miles shorter than by the Erie canal.

I wish to call attention to the fact that in addition to being a short route in mileage it has this further advantage that vessels will be able to move at a rapid rate as there are no obstacles and the sides of the canal will be entirely different from an ordinary canal with earth banks. The canal portions of this route will be rock and through the greater portion of the route it will be open lake and river navigation, so there will be nothing to prevent the rapid movement of vessels. There will be no delay from adverse winds, since this is a sheltered route and the insurance rates will be low. Then to, the vessels can proceed at the same rapid rate night and day.

It must be remembered also that as this route is entirely within our own territory, there will be no foreign navigation laws to interfere with the transportation of freight. It will be a great water-power producer, and will unquestionably aid in the development of manufacturing industries.

Please bear in mind also that in the construction of this canal there will be developed one of the finest and most valuable water-powers to be found anywhere in the world. It will be far better than Niagara Falls because while the water-power will be about as great this power will be distributed over a distance of about 400 miles, which will be a great advantage. It is difficult to state just how many horse-power will be developed by the construction of this water way, but many capable engineers have placed it at at least 1,000,000 horse-power. This is exclusive of the vast amount of power that will available on the numerous great rivers that are tributary to this route from the north and the south. Furthermore it has been stated by so able and experienced an engineer as Mr. Wickstead, of Montreal, that the revenue which will be derived from these valuable water-powers will be ample to pay the interest on the entire amount required to complete this important work. It will create power for manufacturing purposes of all kinds, making Ontario and Quebec the great manufacturing centres for the west, giving return freight to the trains and vessels which come east laden with grain, cattle and other products of our great fertile plains. We have in the country through which the waterways pass all the requisites to build up a great manufacturing and industrial centre. Three things are necessary to establish successfully great manufacturing enterprises: first, an unlimited supply of good and cheap raw material; second, an abundant and cheap supply of power and, third, efficient shipping and transportation facilities. In this district there remains only the question of the supply of raw material. Two of the chief requisites in this respect are wood and iron. In this northern country we have an abundance of wood of the best quality for structural purposes only awaiting the power and skill of the manufacturer to put it into shape.

We have here also immense deposits of iron ore. Many of them are known as refractory ores, which can be commercially refined only by electrical process. This process requires an abundance of cheap water-power which happily this waterway would give us.

The question naturally arises in this connection whether what is known as the hydro-electric process for smelting will ever be a complete and unqualified success. I wish to read to the House the summary of the results of the experiments made by Dr. Haanel, at the Sault:

1. Magnitite can be as economically smelted by the electrothermic process as hematite.
2. Ores of high sulphur content not containing manganese can be made into pig iron containing only a few thousands of a per cent of sulphur.
3. The silicon content can be varied as required for the class of pig to be produced.
4. Charcoal which can be cheaply produced from mill refuse or wood which could not otherwise be utilized, can be substituted for coke as a reducing agent, without being briquetted with the ore.
5. A ferro-nickel pig can be produced practically free from sulphur and of fine quality from roasted nickeliferous pyrrohtite.
6. The experiment made with a titaniferous iron ore containing 17.82 per cent of titanic acid, permits the conclusion that titaniferous iron ores up to perhaps 5 per cent titanic acid, can be successfully treated by the electric process.

This process is to-day being carried on commercially at Welland. The parties who have spent so much time in making the successful experiments at the Sault, have now undertaken to demonstrate that they can carry on the process commercially at Welland and we have no doubt that they will be successful in doing it.

There are still other advantages in this route. As it is far removed from our frontier, it would be a safe route in time of war. We all hope that difficulties of this kind are far away, but if such an event as war should unfortunately happen, this inland water-way would be of great advantage to Canada. It would undoubtedly help to build up our maritime trade and would furnish us with an abundance of hardy seamen with whom, should occasion arise, we could equip our men of war.

Nor must it be overlooked that this will be a cool route, admirably adapted to the shipping of flour, corn, rye and such products as are liable to be injured in warm climates.

I have here a clipping from the 'Free Press' of March 7, which I wish to place before the House. It contains an extract from an address by Mr. M. J. Butler, Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, who advised caution with regard to the Georgian bay canal. He was speaking in regard to the Georgian bay canal before the May Court Club in the Queen's Hall, and this is what he said:

I am fully convinced that if the largest lake vessels will be able to navigate upon it a solution of our transportation will be reached.

The speaker said that there were some enthusiasts who dreamed that the time would come when ships would be able to go from Liverpool to Port Arthur and vice versa, but that he was afraid it was only a dream.

Mr. KEMP. What is the date of that?

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. March 7, 1908. Now, I am one of those dreamers for I believe it can be done. I know that vessels are continually going through the Suez canal. They leave the great ports of Europe, go through that canal safely and successfully and so on out to Asia and the different ports in the east. If it can be done there why can it not be done here? But, I did not wish to set myself up as an authority in this respect and so I wrote to a gentleman in Montreal, Mr. Reford, inclosing this clipping and asked him to give his opinion on the subject. Will you allow me to read what he says?

March 13, 1908.

A. A. Wright, Esq., M.P.,
South Renfrew,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of yours of the 11th instant and contents of same, with newspaper cutting inclosed re Mr. M. J. Butler's, Deputy Minister of Public Works, speech at the May Court Club, have had my best attention, and I quite agree with him in thinking that a work of such magnitude as the Georgian bay canal should not be gone into without the most careful consideration as to route, cost and mode of construction, and from what information I have been able to get I have reason to suppose that such is being properly attended to.

I am pleased to note that Mr. Butler understands the immense assistance that the Georgian bay canal would be of to the transportation of trade of Canada, and that he is supported in his views by the opinion of Mr. Collingwood Schreiber, who presided at the meeting. When, however, Mr. Butler speaks of those who think that the time may come when ships may be able to go from Liverpool to Port Arthur and vice versa, as dreamers and enthusiasts, I do not agree with him for the following reasons :

Steamers and sailing vessels have, in the past, made this voyage via the Welland and St. Lawrence canals, with immense drawbacks and expenses in shape of small carrying capacity, and expense and delay in having to unload a large portion of their cargoes at Port Colborne before passing through the Welland canal, and reload same at Dalhousie, and repeat this operation at Kingston or Prescott and Montreal. All of which, of course, killed the business, but which would be avoided if the Georgian bay canal were constructed of a size to permit the passage of the largest lake steamers through it without unloading or disturbance of cargo, as I understand is what is proposed.

I consider the construction of the Georgian bay canal a work which the Canadian government should undertake, and will be forced to undertake sooner or later in the interests of the country for the following reasons :

The future of Canada, as I see it, must be largly influenced by the right development of her great interior territory lying between the great lakes and the Rocky mountains, a territory half as large as Europe, and capable of supporting a population of one hundred millions of people, whose chief business will be agriculture, for which the country is specially fitted by soil and climate, and to make agriculture profitable and popular the agriculturist must have cheap transportation for all he wishes to export and import, which is just what would be achieved by the construction of the Georgian bay canal, as you will see by the following statement of facts, which you can easily verify.

Fort William and Port Arthur on Lake Superior, are now the outlets and inlets for the trade of Canada's great northwest, and likely, with other ports on Lake Superior 'yet to be opened,' to remain so, because at these points land and water carriage meet on good natural lines and the problem to be further solved is how to cheapen transportation between these ports and Europe, Great Britain especially, to which the great bulk of our western exports go, and from which much of the west's imports must come.

At present the average rate of freight from Port Arthur and Fort William to Georgian bay ports, and thence by rail to Montreal, Canada's nearest ocean port, or by all water via the Welland and St. Lawrence canals, may be said to be 6½ cents per bushel, and about 7 cents via Buffalo to New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and other nearest United States ocean ports, so giving the Canadian route a slight advantage, which is, however, counterbalanced and lost by cheaper lake carriage via United States steamers owing to their larger size and their being able to get better westbound cargoes.

Now, here is an important point which I wish to draw your attention to particularly and it has reference to the rates which will prevail when this canal is constructed. Mr. Reford takes a very optimistic view, much more so than I had taken myself, but he is certainly an authority on this point and I am pleased to have an opportunity of presenting it to the House.

Of the 6½ cents of through-freight from Superior ports to Montreal, and 7 cents to New York, the lake craft running to Georgian bay ports get about one-third of same, or from 1½ cents to 2 cents per bushel, the other two-thirds, or 4 cents to 4½ cents going to the Canadian railways from Georgian bay to Montreal, or to the United States railways from Buffalo to New York, Boston, &c., and this division of freight is, I think, a fair one as things now stand, considering the way the grain has to be unloaded from one conveyance to another in transit, and the long and expensive rail carriage. But all this would be changed by the construction of the Georgian bay canal of a size allowing the largest lake steamer to bring full cargoes, without breaking bulk, from Port Arthur or Fort William to Montreal, and there getting return cargoes which would put them on an equality with the large United States steamers on the lakes, with which the Canadian boats have to compete.

It has been clearly shown that grain could be profitably handled for 1½ cents to 2 cents per bushel between Port Arthur, Fort William, and even Duluth and Buffalo, and still more cheaply between these ports and where the entrance would be of the Georgian bay canal on the Georgian bay, and as the building of the Georgian bay canal would shorten the distance between Port Arthur, Fort William and Duluth and Montreal to almost the same mileage as to Buffalo, or say 865 miles, I see no good reason why vessels using the Georgian bay canal should not be built to carry cargoes of grain as cheaply to 'Montreal as is now done to Buffalo,' thus making a saving in freight of 4½ cents to 5 cents per bushel, all of which, or at least the bulk of it, should find its way into the pockets of the western farmer, and be of enormous help to him and the country.

Some will say a steamer cannot run as quickly and as cheaply on a canal as on an open lake, which is, of course, correct to a certain extent, but allowing an extra cent per bushel for such delays, there is still a saving of about 4 cents per bushel in the freight, equal on a hundred million bushel crop to four millions of dollars a year, or about enough to pay the interest on the cost of the canal, and do great things for Canada and the northwest, how great it is difficult to estimate, but I will mention a few of the possibilities.

I have shown above the possibility of saving four millions of dollars a year in freights on Northwest exports on a basis of one hundred millions of bushels, about the crop of 1906, but as the country grows, the crop and the exports should immensely increase, probably to two or three times this extent, with a similar gain to the farmers, the country, and the canal, with also an immense gain in saving of freight on all which the west imports. In other words, through cheaper transportation the interior of Canada would be brought so close to the markets of Europe and the world as to make our great Northwest a favourite place of residence, and consequently enormously increase the value of every acre of land in it, also drawing towards it crowds of settlers.

Next, I would point out, that the Georgian bay canal would not only do great things for Canada's Northwest, 'but for Canada as a whole,' because the cheap and superior transit by it would be so much superior to anything that the United States have, or can construct in the future, as to force the bulk of the exports and imports of not only the northwestern states adjacent to the Canadian boundary, but of all the states bordering on Lake Huron, Michigan, and Superior, to use the Georgian bay canal, with enormous advantage to Canada, not only in the way of increased business, but in prestige as a country to live in, a thing of much consequence, and worthy of consideration.

By the canal United States ports on the above mentioned lakes would be brought nearly 500 miles nearer to the ocean 'at Montreal,' than is possible via Buffalo and the Atlantic ports of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, or Portland, Montreal and Canada's chief ocean port competitors, and this fact, coupled with the saving of freight would, I think, secure to Canada the carrying trade of the Northwest of both Canada and the United States.

Lastly, this letter being already longer than I intended, I may say that I think it would not be long, after the facilities of the canal became known, before an immense trade would develop via the canal, not only with Europe, but also with the maritime provinces, which have much that the west wants in the shape of coal, lumber, fish oil, and other produce, and require much that the west has to sell in the shape of food stuffs, thereby drawing the eastern portion of our country, and the western portion, together, in a way that nothing else will do, and which is very desirable. And back of all this is the benefit that would accrue to the great country now a wilderness, but known to be wonderfully rich in minerals, timber, farming lands, &c., also water-powers that would soon open up on all sides of the proposed Georgian bay canal route, but especially in the territory lying between the canal and the Hudson bay, which before long may be proved to be the richest portion of our Dominion.

I may seem to you optimistic in what I have written but I do not think I am, and I inclose you further a pamphlet on this matter, also on the Red Line Steamship scheme, which I prepared for, and which was read before the Mining Society of Nova Scotia last year, which may interest you, and give you information on some points not touched in this letter.

Everything that advertises Canada to the world and makes her known, is going to help not only the northwest, but every part of the Dominion, and it seems to me that the welfare of Ontario and Quebec, also the maritime provinces, is virtually bound up in the welfare of the northwest, and that we should consequently do our best in the building up of the same.

Any further information I can give you on this important matter will afford me great pleasure.

I am,

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) ROBERT REFORD.

To give a resumé. This is the shortest route from our great western lake ports to the sea. A deep-water through route, for large vessels. Hence a cheap freight route. A safe route, protected from winds. Hence securing a low insurance rate. A safe route in time of war, being far inland. Will build up our merchant marine, thus supplying us with hardy seamen with which to supply our men of war in time of trouble. Will be a great stimulus to international trade, hence a great peace promoter and preventative of war. A great water-power producer and an incalculable aid in developing manufacturing industries. The greatest known aid in the developing of our mines by supplying the electric current for smelting purposes. It is all under our own flag, hence no conflicting navigation laws. Will be a great regulator of railway freights, more potent than the edicts of the highest legislative bodies in the land. Will bring the head of navigation 1,000 miles inland, bringing Port Arthur, Fort William and all our western cities that much nearer the outside world. This is a cool route and will admit of carrying perishable goods that could not be taken by a southern route. An invaluable route, since the necessary water supply is entirely in our own territory and consequently completely independent of any neighbouring power. It is the cheapest possible known route and when constructed will put millions of dollars annually into the pockets of the farmers of the Northwest. As this will be a route of enormous capacity, it will be an unrivalled aid in relieving the freight congestion in the Northwest since it will be capable of carrying concurrently all the grain that half a dozen first-class railways could possibly bring to Fort William and Port Arthur. It will bring to the very heart of our country the great and inexhaustible coal fields of Nova Scotia and thus effectually relieve us for all time to come from being dependent for our supply upon the coal fields of the United States. That the natural tributary tonnage that even now lies waiting to pass through this unrivalled system of waterways is away and beyond in magnitude and value, that, that is tributary to any artifically constructed waterway in the world. This waterway is an absolute necessity because the railways are entirely inadequate to take care of the traffic that is now offering them and this class of work is increasing faster than railway facilities can possibly be provided. This route when completed will serve the interest of twenty-five millions of people covering an area of two million square miles all tributary to the great lakes. A territory producing two and a half billion bushels of grain annually and which is increasing by leaps and bounds. It also produces two-thirds of the iron ore mined in America. It is furthermore the chief centre of growth of commerce, of population, of wealth and of universal productive force in the world. It is a much needed outlet for our already intensely congested traffic.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I can only hope that when the entire report of the engineers who have been engaged on this work has been presented to this House, the estimated cost will be such as to guarantee the government in commencing it at a very early date and of pushing it on to an early completion. It will bring to the very heart of our country the great and inexhaustible coal fields of Nova Scotia and thus effectually relieve us for all time to come from being dependent for our supply upon the coal fields of the United States. I may say that in a conversation with Mr. Ross, of the Dominion Coal Company, he informed me that he could undoubtedly compete with American coal on the great lakes should this canal be constructed. Let me give you one or two practical illustrations of what cheaper coal will do. For, construct this waterway and cheaper coal will come both from Nova Scotia and the United States. Freight from the American mines would be at once cut in two. Now note the results. At Sturgeon Falls, a thriving town on Lake Nipissing, there is a paper mill producing 50 tons per day. This new route would so cheapen the price of coal for this mill that they would immediately double their output. At Copper Cliff, near Sudbury, are located the richest nickel mines in the world and furnish employment to 1,500 men. These works represent an outlay of $2,000,000 and they produce more than half of the world's supply of nickel. They use annually 30,000 tons of coal, all of which is brought by rail from Buffalo. Half this freight would be saved and refining works would be at once commenced and carried on here instead of in the United States. The same thing applies to the Cobalt mines. Why should all this wealth which rivals even the wealth of Ormus and of Ind go to the United States ?

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln). I wish to say a word or two with regard to this question. Every hon. gentleman who has spoken so far seems to be convinced of the propriety of building this supposed waterway. I am not saying that I would not be of that opinion if I had more information, but as at present advised I am not sure that it would be a wise thing or at least the best thing to do in the interest of the country. I am heartily in favour of the motion, of course, because it is a motion for papers, and we desire all the information on this subject that we can get. But there is a splendid system of canals now in operation in the country, perfect in every sense except in depth and in size of the locks. I do not know whether many hon. gentlemen are very fully informed of the exact capabilities of the Welland canal. I apprehend that a good many have received from the secretary of the board of trade of St. Catharines a printed memorandum on the subject, but, as I am not certain that all have received that memo, and as it is very instructive, I think that I shall be doing a service to the country by reading it and so putting it on 'Hansard.'

Before reading this memorandum I would like to point out that between $30,000,000 and $40,000,000 has been spent on the Welland canal alone, which is the largest canal we have, but which is only part of the Welland-St. Lawrence system. Bearing this fact in mind, we should consider very carefully whether we should go into a new work at enormous expense instead of improving the work we have, which, if improved, would probably accomplish as much as the new work. It is with a view to bringing these advantages to the attention of the House and helping hon. members to form an opinion on the subject that I address myself to the matter for a few minutes this afternoon. I am not convinced that we cannot make the Welland canal do all that it is claimed the Georgian bay canal will do. Therefore, at present I am not in favour, from an economical standpoint, of the proposal which has been made and supported with apparent unanimity in this House. It seems to me that we can improve the Welland-St. Lawrence system to yield at least equal advantages at a very great saving as compared with the cost of the Georgian bay canal. The facts submitted in the memo. of the board of trade of St. Catharines have been very carefully gathered and very carefully compiled by able men. The work has not been done casually or hastily. The men who present these facts spent months in investigating the matter in order that they might be in a position to give the House solid information with regard to it. This memo. is not a mere argument, but is a complete, sincere and accurate statement of the facts. It is not designed to prevent the building of the Georgian bay canal, should that be found to the interest of the country, but it is only submitted in order that the people generally may consider the whole matter carefully before committing the country to a scheme of such enormous expenditure as this Geogian bay canal. Mr. Secord, who signs this circular as secretary of the board of trade, is manager of the Imperial Bank at St. Catharines. He has used every possible effort to get accurate information. There is no surplusage in the memorandum; it is like a statute in that every word in it has its meaning and is there because it needs to be there:

Board of Trade, St. Catharines, Ontario.
John C. Notman, President.
S. W. Secord, Secretary.

February, 1908.

Dear Sir,—Proposed Georgian bay canal. I beg to call your attention to the proposition that is about to be brought before the House of Commons at Ottawa, and to ask your co-operation for the continuance of and enlargement of the present system of the St. Lawrence-Welland canal route, as being the most feasible, economical and desirable for the country at large, and much to be preferred to the proposed Georgian bay canal, and wish to draw your attention to a few of the advantages in favour of the St. Lawrence system. I also wish to call your attention to the fact that there are already boats on the upper lakes that could not pass through the locks on the proposed canal, and that it is absurd to start an enterprise of this nature that could not be completed for at least twelve years, and to have locks unable to accommodate the vessels at present on the lakes, shows that the estimate of cost as represented, if correct for the proposed design, is much too low for a modern canal. Our contention is that locks to meet future requirements should be 700 feet long, 75 feet wide, and have 25 feet of water on the sills, and that estimates should be based on these dimensions. In other words, the design of the proposed Georgian bay canal would be barely up to date.

The lockage on the proposed Georgian bay canal will be 200 feet more than on the present St. Lawrence system; a vessel would have to lock up 100 feet to the summit level, and then lock down 100 feet again to the Georgian bay level. The lockage on the proposed canal would be about one-half more than on the St. Lawrence-Welland route. The proposed canal would be a restricted channel for all vessels of 10,000 tons, and very little attempt at speed could be made.

The lighting of the proposed channel, the rock formation through which the canal will pass, the dangerous entrance to the French river, and the fact that the season will be much shorter, as the proposed canal will be frozen at North Bay before navigation closes at Montreal, are all instances in favour of the St. Lawrence route. There will be no return cargoes via the Georgian bay route, except such as can be obtained in Montreal, and these are common to both routes, whereas by the St. Lawrence-Welland route vessels can very often obtain return cargoes at Oswego, Buffalo, Erie, Cleveland, &c. Last year of the 12,673,000 tons of west-bound freight through the Sault canals 93½ per cent came from Lake Erie ports, showing conclusively that the return cargo route is by the Welland canal.

During the past several seasons the rate of freight to Georgian bay ports has been exactly the same as to the foot of Lake Erie, no doubt on account of there being return cargoes, and when at the foot of Lake Erie vessels are 70 miles nearer Montreal than when they are at the mouth of the French river, so for all practical purposes the St. Lawrence-Welland route is nearly 70 miles shorter than the Georgian bay route.

The proposed Georgian bay canal might be an improvement on the present canal system in some ways, as the latter was out of date some time ago, but with an enlarged St. Lawrence-Welland route we would have 200 feet less lockage than the Georgian bay and less than 20 locks, as against 27 on the latter. For a considerable distance vessels can run through Lakes Erie and Ontario and a large portion of the St. Lawrence river at full speed regardless of the weather, so there would be no saving of time by the Georgian bay route.

The cost of maintenance and operation should also be taken into consideration, and this we have every reason to believe would be reduced if our present system were enlarged, as the number of locks would be much smaller, but if the proposed Georgian bay canal were to go through it is safe to estimate that the cost to the people of the country would amount to about $1,000,000 per annum, an item that should be taken into consideration.

Yours truly,
S. W. SECORD,
Secretary.

I have thought it my duty to put this letter on record in order that all the facts might be before the House. On consideration of all the facts I am sure the House will be able to come to a better conclusion as to the wisdom of this proposed expenditure. For the present I am not in favour of involving the country in such an enormous expenditure in view of what can be done with the St. Lawrence and Welland canal route. I have at all times endeavoured to keep an open mind in reference to matters which may require consideration in this House, and of course, in this matter I am open to conviction. I am in favour of the present motion for papers because it will give us some of the information which is so much needed.

Motion (Mr. McCool) agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny) moved second reading of Bill (No. 85) to amend the Railway Act. He said: When this Bill was introduced I made full explanations with regard to it and I am sure the House will have no objection to its passage. It embodies a principle which is the very essence of confederation. It is proposed to remedy certain grievances which the people of the province of Quebec labour under. The Bill, only applies to the province of Quebec. It purposes to compel railway companies, telephone companies, telegraph companies, or other public utilities to use in their transactions with the public in the province of Quebec the French language the same as they do the English language. The principle contained in this Bill is already found in the Railway Act in sections 243, 279 and 312, and my Bill simply proposes to extend that principle. For instance, in the province of Quebec railway companies are now compelled to print the crossing signs in French and English, and likewise the regulations and by-laws of the companies have to be printed in French as well as in English. This Bill goes a little further and it compels the railway companies to have the Bills of lading in two languages, and their tickets, and the badges of their employees, and in the case of telegraph companies their contract or message form. I think the House will have no objection to the passage of this Bill. I may say that in the United States where the French language is not official, in the New England States, Rhode Island, Vermont and Maine, the French language receives from the public utilities there greater recognition than it does in the province of Quebec, It seems to me that the contrary should be the case. These railway companies are subsidized by this parliament and a portion of these subsidies are borne by the people of Quebec who now suffer the serious inconvenience of having to transact business with these companies in a language which is not the mother tongue of the greater portion of the inhabitants. I trust fully in the English majority of this House and in their sense of fair play that they will be the first to support the Bill and I am sure the members from the province of Quebec will offer no objection.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. On the whole I believe this Bill is well founded, but it seems to me that my hon. friend in some respects carries the principle to a considerable length. The object my hon. friend has in view is that the public shall have every facility possible to transact business, and I suppose all will agree that it is only right that those who are not conversant with the English language should have an opportunity to transact business in the language which they know. For instance, in the case of bills of lading, in the province of Quebec it would be of great advantage if they were printed in French and English so that shippers who are not conversant with the English language should know what the contract is and what obligations both parties undertake. But when my hon. friend requires baggage checks to be in French and English it seems to me he goes very far, because if I remember aright a baggage check contains simply the name of the station and the number of the check, and there is no French or English in figures.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. They have a contract at the back of the baggage checks which is generally in English.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That may be, but my experience is that these are metal checks which contain only a number and the name of the station. I have no objection at all that this Bill should be read a second time subject to what amendments may be made later.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. When shall the House go into committee on the Bill ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Next sitting of the House.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. The opportunities to discuss this Bill in committee are getting very few, and if it does not go into committee to-day it may not go into committee at all.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is an important question for the railway companies, and I am sure my hon. friend understands that they should be notified to see if there is any objection to it. There is some good in the Bill, but I would not like to commit the government to the passage of such a measure without the railway companies being heard from.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. They have offered no objection so far.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If the railway companies have no objection I certainly have none.

SALE OF RAILWAY PASSENGER TICKETS.

Mr. J. D. REID (Grenville) moved second reading of Bill (No. 90) to amend the Passenger Ticket Act. He said : The first provision in this Bill is that the railway companies shall be compelled to issue books of tickets of 500 and 1,000 miles each at a rate not exceeding two cents per mile. I believe the railway companies do now issue mileage books but I think the rate is two and a half cents per mile. In the United States mileage books are good on any train, the conductor tearing out of the book the number of miles which the passenger intends to travel ; but Canadian mileage books are not good on the trains. The passenger who buys a mileage book must go to a ticket office and obtain a ticket from one point to another, for which the agent tears from the mileage book the requisite number of miles. This way causes inconvenience to the passenger. He may not know this distinction between the law in Canada and the law in the United States, and if he goes upon a train with only his mileage book, but without sufficient money to pay his fare, he may suffer a great deal of inconvenience. I think mileage books issued in this country should be on the same basis as those issued in the United States ; that is, a mileage book should be regarded as practically a ticket, which may be used on the trains. Then, I think the rate for mileage books should be two cents a mile.

There has been a reduction in passenger rates on our railways from three and one-third or three and one-half cents a mile to three cents a mile, but there has been no reduction whatever in the rate for mileage books. I think there should be a proportionate reduction. I also think that people travelling long distances should be given a little lower rate than those who travel short distances. There is an impression in the country—I have seen it mentioned in the newspapers—that I am attempting to make mileage books interchangeable on the different railways, but that is not my intention. My intention is that a mileage book for any particular railway shall be good only on that railway; but the second clause provides that a ticket purchased at a union station shall be good on any passenger train leaving that station. For instance, a person travelling from Toronto to Montreal who perhaps does not travel very often, and who has a ticket for the Canadian Pacific Railway, may by mistake get on the Grand Trunk train, which leaves at about the same time. It may be a case of sickness. It has been shown to me that persons who had made mistakes of that kind had not had the means to pay for a ticket through to Montreal, where the amount paid would be refunded. I fail to see that this would be doing any injustice to the railway companies. I would like to have this Bill sent to the Railway Committee, where it could be discussed thoroughly. I would be prepared to go into the matter more fully before the committee, with the hope of convincing it that the Bill should be adopted.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry that the Minister of Railways is not here to give his views to my hon. friend on this question. For my part, I am not prepared to express an opinion upon it, and moreover my hon. friend has expressed his wish to have the Bill referred to the Committee on Railways. I will agree to the second reading on the understanding that the Bill be not now referred to the Committee on Railways, but be allowed to stand until the Minister of Railways can be present.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am agreeable to that.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF CIGARETTES.

On the order:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the proposed resolution of Mr. Blain, that the object of good government is to promote the general welfare of the people by a careful encouragement and protection of whatever makes for the public good; and by an equally careful discouragement and suppression of whatever tends to the public disadvantage.

That the smoking of cigarettes has been proved by overwhelming testimony to be productive of serious physical and moral injury to young people; impairing health, arresting development, weakening intellectual power, and thus constituting a social and national evil.

That the legislation licensing and restricting the sale of cigarettes has not proven sufficient to prevent these evils, which will continue while the public sale of the cause of the mischief is permitted to go on.

That this House is of the opinion, for the reasons heretofore set forth, that the right and most effectual remedy for these evils is to be found in the enactment and enforcement of a law prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes; and that it is expedient to bring in a Bill at this session to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes.

Mr. BLAIN. I am ready to go on.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would ask my hon. friend to let this stand as there are some Bills on the paper which we can put through. I would ask Mr. Speaker to call order No. 8.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS.

House went into committee on Bill (No. 27) to amend the government Railways Act —Mr. Macdonald.

On section 1,

1. Section 29 of the Government Railways Act, chapter 36 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

29. When any cattle or other animals at large upon the highway or otherwise get upon the railway and are killed or injured by a train, the owner of any such animal so killed or injured shall be entitled to recover the amount of such loss or injury unless His Majesty, in the opinion of the court trying the case, establishes that the animal got at large through the negligence or wilful act or omission of the owner or his agent, or of the custodian of the animal, or his agent; but the fact that the animal was not in charge of some competent person shall not, for the purpose of this section, deprive the owner of his right to recover.

Mr. MACDONALD. This does not involve any new principle. It is simply applying to government railways, the provision of the Railway Act which applies to other railways.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the law with regard to private companies?

Mr. MACDONALD. This is practically a reproduction of subsection 4 of section 294 of the Railway Act, which applies to private companies.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is an application to the government railways of the principle already established with regard to private railways by the legislation originally introduced by my hon. friend from Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster).

Mr. MACDONALD. Yes.

On section 2,

2. Section 61 of the said Act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor :

61. The cleared land or ground adjoining the railway and belonging to the railway shall at all times be maintained and kept free from dead or dry grass, weeds, thistles and other unnecessary combustible material.

2. Whenever damage is caused to crops, lands, fences, plantations or buildings and their contents by a fire started by a railway locomotive working on the railway, His Majesty, whether his officers or servants have been guilty of negligence or not, shall be liable for such damages: Provided that, if it is shown that modern and efficient appliances have been used and that the officers or servants of His Majesty have not otherwise been guilty of any negligence, the total amount of compensation recoverable under this subsection shall not exceed five thousand dollars, and it shall be apportioned among the parties who suffered the loss as the court or judge determines.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would move that the word 'property' be inserted in lieu of 'crops, lands, fences, plantations or buildings and their contents.' The corresponding section of the Railway Act was amended this session in like manner, and this will make the two exactly similar.

Mr. MACDONALD. I was going to suggest that it should be amended in that respect so as to make it agree with the amendment by the Railway Committee to the Railway Act this session. This Bill was drafted before that amendment was suggested.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT—AMENDMENT.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL (South Toronto) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 29) to amend the Dominion Elections Act.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is a very important Bill, and I must say at once to my hon. friend that I would not be willing to accept it in its entirety. But I would have no objection to its being read a second time, the right of discussion being reserved.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read second time.

FISHERIES ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. JOHN H. SINCLAIR (Guysborough) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 31) to amend the Fisheries Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

On section 1,

Mr. SINCLAIR. The object of this Bill is to take away from fishery officers the jurisdiction to try cases of offences against the Fisheries Act. I submit that that jurisdiction should never have been imposed on these officers. They should never have been given the power to act as justices of the peace. I am informed that there are about 180 of these officers appointed along the coast of Canada, each of whom has jurisdiction, by virtue of his appointment as a fishery officer, to try cases in the same way as a justice of the peace. I stated on the first reading of the Bill that I considered this practice inadvisable because the fishery officer is, to a certain extent, an interested party. He has to make an investigation in the first place, to find out whether a man is guilty or not, his duties being, in this respect, the same as those of a constable. He satisfies himself, from his investigation or from the reports he hears, that an offence has been committed. He summons the party to appear before himself, acting as justice of the peace, he tries the case, and, if he finds the man guilty, he imposes a fine. The defendant generally has the feeling that he does not get a fair trial before the fishery officer, and that it would be fairer to go before a justice of the peace and have the case tried in the usual way. There are many other statutes under which we appoint officers to enforce the law. For example, there is the Canada Temperance Act which is in force in a number of the counties in the maritime provinces. Under that Act an insepector is appointed whose duty it is to find out if an offence has been committed against the Act. If he finds that an offence has been committed, he does not try the case himself—such a system would not be tolerated. The officer must lay his information before a justice of the peace, a stipendiary magistrate or court of competent jurisdiction, and prove his case. The same principle should apply in the case of fisheries regulations. I asked a few days ago to what extent these fishery officers were exercising jurisdiction. The information I obtained is to the effect that, during the past year, there were 249 convictions for offences against the fisheries law, of which 176 were tried before the fishery officers. The fines imposed have been as follows for the years given :

| | |
|---|---|
| 1903.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $ 2,811 92 |
| 1904.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 1,934 10 |
| 1905.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 2,612 62 |
| 1906.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 2,227 43 |
| 1907.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 2,602 25 |
| Total for five years.. .. .. .. | 12,188 35 |

I asked as to how the fishery officers participated in these fines, and the information given me is that $6,083 of the amount was paid to the fishery officers themselves. I believe that the amount is not paid directly to the officer who tries the case. It is done in this way: Some other fishery officer lays the information at the request of the officer before whom the case is to be tried, and the money is paid to the other fishery officer. Nevertheless, $6,083 has been received by the fishery officers from the fines that have been paid by defendants throughout Canada during the past few years, showing that these officers have too great an interest in these fines to justify us in allowing this system to continue. And there is not the slightest need for it. I have already instanced the Canada Temperance Act to show how these things are done in one case. I might point out the case of an Act passed last year to provide for the inspection of meats. In that case we appoint inspectors and officers. If one of these officers find that an offence has been committed he must satisfy two justices of the peace that an offence has been committed before he can fine the defendant. It is this principle I seek to apply in the case of these fishery officers. The section that confers jurisdiction on these officers is section 6 of chapter 45 of the Revised Statutes:

The Governor in Council may appoint fishery officers whose powers and duties shall be as defined by this Act and the regulations made under it, and by instructions from the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

2. Every such officer, who is authorized by the Governor in Council to exercise the powers of a justice of the peace, and for all purposes of this Act and the regulations made under it, be ex officio a justice of the peace, within the district for which he is appointed to act as such fishery officer.

A number of the other sections contain the words 'fishery officer and justice of the peace.' What I have done is to pick out these sections and provide by this Bill for their amendment by striking out 'fishery officer' so that the officer should not have jurisdiction to try cases.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is subsection 2 of section 6 ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. That section is where the jurisdiction is conferred.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not familar with the Act but I would suppose the Governor in Council is authorized to give such jurisdiction to the officer, and would it not go directly to the root if you take away the power of the Governor in Council to give such jurisdiction.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The first part of the section gives the Governor in Council power to appoint fishery officers whose powers and duties shall be as defined by this Act. I do not wish to take that power away from the Governor in Council because we must have fishery officers, and they must have certain defined powers. The subsection says :

Every such officer who is so appointed shall for all the purposes of this Act and the regulations made under it be ex officio a justice of the peace.

I propose to strike that out and he will still be a fishery officer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Under what statute did the Governor in Council acquire power to appoint a fishery officer to be a justice of the peace ?

Mr. SINCLAIR. Under this subsection 2.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN Is that the only authority?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The drafting of the present Act seems to be very poor, and it seems to be questionable whether there is the power to give a fishery officer jurisdiction as a justice of the peace. I cannot see in the Act where the Governor in Council derives his power to give the power of a justice of the peace to fishery officers, and if they have not got it perhaps the courts could decide on a quo warranto. I would suggest to let the matter stand because for my part I see no objection here.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. member (Mr Sinclair) may be right that the only authority to appoint is to be found in the subsection of section 6, and that you must read that section as if it were couched in some such terms as this : Whenever the Governor in Council shall authorize a fishery officer to act as justice of the peace then such fishery officer shall have the powers of a justice of a peace for the purposes of this Act. If it means that, then the hon. member (Mr. Sinclair) is quite right.

Mr. SINCLAIR. That is what I understand.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If it means something else, then his amendment to the Fisheries Act would need to go further It is hard to tell from the drafting of the statute what is meant.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will go on with it and not take it out of the committee to-day.

On section 2,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We are taking all this on faith. As I understand it only in connection with the prosecution of offences that any amendment is made.

Mr. SINCLAIR. That is all.

On section 4,

Mr. SINCLAIR. Under the section as it stands a fishery officer can grant a warrant, and I am proposing that the fishery officer may search, but a justice of the peace must grant a warrant.

Progress reported.

MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF CIGARETTES.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The only item on the programme is the motion of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain). Does he suppose he could dispose of this weighty subject in the twenty minutes before six o'clock.

Mr. BLAIN. So far as I am concerned I am prepared to ask the committee of the House to vote upon the question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As I understood the discussion which took place the other day the opinion of the House seemed very much divided. Of course if my hon. friend wants to take up the matter now he is perfectly within his rights, but I do not think it can be disposed of before six o'clock.

Mr. BLAIN. My right hon. friend was not present and I think he does not fully understand the expression of opinion in the House. As far as I can judge the House was almost unanimously in favour of the motion and I presume that the position is the same to-day. Speaking for myself as the mover of the motion I may say that I think it was pretty fully discussed. It may be that some representatives wish to say something upon it and of course I do not wish to press my case too strongly, but I was prepared and am now to ask the House to vote upon the question because I think it was fully discussed. I would like, myself, to know the real expression of the members upon this question.

Mr. J. B. BLACK (Hants). Mr. Speaker, I regret that I was not here when this question was up before as it is a question in which I feel very greatly interested and have for many years. I think there is no man who wishes the welfare of Canada—and the welfare of any country depends on the health and morals of its citizens—but must deplore the wretched habit of cigarette smoking among the children of this country. There is to my mind no more pitiable sight than the pale faced, round shouldered boy going around the streets sucking cigarettes. The poor fellow, of course, is imitating his elders and in that thinks he is doing a manly act. He is not sufficiently matured, he has not sufficient judgment to know that he is undermining his health, that he is destroying his intellect, that he is injuring his morals and that he is wrecking his future manhood. There is no doubt as to the results of cigarette smoking among children; there can be no question that it blunts the intellect, impairs the general health and demoralizes the individual.

Mr. SINCLAIR.

While we admit all this I think we must be consistent and I do not see how a full grown man, especially if he is the father of boys, can vote on this question while he is using tobacco himself. If a man will smoke the boy will follow. There is no such hero in the mind of the boy as the father. There is no doubt about that and while fathers smoke boys will imitate them. The cigarette, having less nicotine than the long used tobacco pipe, affects the boy less, nauseates him less quickly, he runs less risk of his personal feelings in the matter while he is satisfying his own desire to do a manly act and therefore he smokes the cigarette. That it is any more injurious than the pipe I do not believe. I never have believed it, but tobacco in any shape to the boy is a most injurious thing. I think that probably none of us have thought as much as we should have of laying the foundations of good health, good constitution and good morals in the boys of Canada. You cannot have healthy men, you cannot have vigorous men out of badly built, badly constitutioned boys. You cannot expect a vigorous nation, you cannot expect a manly nation to grow up from boys who have ruined their health, who have depleted their energies by cigarette smoking or using tobacco in any form. The cigarette may be less injurious than the pipe. It is less injurious than the pipe, I am sure, but as I said a moment ago, it nauseates the child so little that he prefers it to the pipe. There comes up a very puzzling question in this connection and I wish I knew how we could settle it. I think there is nobody who will hesitate about voting against boys or young people smoking cigarettes. I think we will all admit the injurious effect on body, mind and morals, but the great difficulty is to differentiate as to when you shall take away the right of smoking a cigarette. If my friend uses a pipe, if he uses a cigar, if he grows nastier still and chews tobacco, am I to deny him the right of smoking a cigarette as one of the forms in which he may indulge in tobacco? If a man smokes a pipe, if he smokes a cigar, have we the right to say that he shall not smoke a cigarette? I would like to see somebody differentiate between the justice of allowing a man to smoke a pipe and preventing him from smoking a cigarette. I think the great question lies in how to deprive our boys of the opportunity of smoking cigarettes. A law can be enacted and there is no trouble in enacting any law, but if that law can be carried out that will prevent boys or minors from smoking cigarettes we will have gone a long way in stopping the tobacco habit. I suppose that ninety-nine men out of a hundred learned to smoke when they were boys and some of them fortunately got sense when they were old enough to quit the habit. But few men began using tobacco after reaching years of maturity. It has all been with the manly intention of trying to be a man.

I would go any length to save the boys from the habit of cigarette smoking and I want to support this proposition, but the thing that puzzles me is: How are we going to allow a man to use tobacco at all and then say that he shall not use it in a certain form? If a man smokes a pipe I presume he has a perfect right to smoke a cigarette. If we have the right for the man's good to deprive him of the opportunity of smoking cigarettes, ergo, we have the right to deprive him of the opportunity of using tobacco at all. I do not think anybody will claim that the cigarette is worse than the pipe. I do not think it is more injurious. My whole sympathies are with any proposition that will stop our boys and minors from using cigarettes or tobacco in any form. It leads to vice, it leads to crime, it leads to bad health and it leads to bad morals.

Mr. D. A. GORDON (East Kent). Mr. Speaker, I rise to put myself on record on this very important question. I think sufficient, however, has been said to convince this House and also the country that drastic legislation is not only desirable but necessary. I believe in prohibiting the manufacture and sale of cigarettes and the enactment of such legislation as will prohibit the use of tobacco in this form by minors. I have had a considerable experience among boys and I must say with deep regret that I have seen the habit grow on those boys at an alarming rate, and I am satisfied that the most disastrous results will follow them through life. I fully realize that such legislation may mean a sacrifice on the part of adults, but I must confess myself as being decidedly in favour of doing whatever may be necessary to protect the boys until they reach mature years and are able to judge for themselves. I desire to put myself on record as being in favour of any measure that will bring about that result.

Mr. W. S. LOGGIE (Northumberland, N.B.). Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the debate when this subject was under discussion a few days ago. I wish to put myself on record in support of the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain). I am sure that every father here will admit that it is easy for boys to become addicted to the habit of smoking cigarettes, much more easy than in the case of cigars or the pipe. It will be admitted I am sure by all fathers that the smoking of cigarettes is a very undesirable habit. Dr. Black informs the House that the boys' body is impaired by the use of cigarettes. He will be to some extent an authority in that regard, and I am sure that no father would like to have the health of his boy impaired by the smoking of cigarettes. The habit itself is filthy. It is expensive and leads on many occasions I am sure to other habits which do not tend towards the boy's good.

If it be a fact that all fathers would prefer that their boys should not acquire the habit of smoking cigarettes, is it too much to ask the fathers who are representatives in this House of Commons of the Canadian fathers to place a law on the statute-book that will prevent the importation, manufacture and sale of the article which is doing so much harm to the young boys of this growing nation. I think that every father present ought to take upon himself the responsibility of dealing with this matter in a frank manner. I quite realize the difficulty referred to by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Mr. Gordon), who spoke of the limitation as to the age of the boy. For my part, I think the fathers ought to forego the pleasure of cigarette smoking. If they will smoke let them smoke the pipe or the cigar. They ought to forego that pleasure and the fathers who are the representatives of the fathers of Canada in this House may very well support this resolution unanimously.

I realize that it is a difficult question to deal with as a party matter, and as far as I am personally concerned I would favour the idea of some gentleman introducing a Bill, not as a party question, but letting each gentleman on either side of the House vote on the matter as he considered in the interests of the boys of this country. I cannot support the amendment moved by my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) because I think it is unfair to punish the boy who is a month under 18 years of age and let the boy who happens to be a month over 18 go scot free. It seems to me that is not the class of legislation that will advance the interests we all have at heart. The resolution that we require is for the fathers to undertake so far as they are concerned themselves, and as the representatives of other fathers, to say that they will banish the cigarette trade from Canada altogether. I realize that there will be some hardship. The manufacturers of this article will without question have a grievance, but we cannot in framing the laws of this country avoid occasionally striking somebody; in the endeavour to right a wrong injury may be done to some individuals. I have very great pleasure in endorsing the resolution moved by Mr. Blain and if a Bill is introduced with that end in view I shall have very much pleasure in supporting it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Loggie) point out to the House with more clearness and detail the difference between the smoking of a cigarette and a pipe or a cigar in relation to its injurious effects upon the health of boys?

Mr. LOGGIE. As a matter of fact, if you buy a dozen cigars they cost quite a sum of money, but a boy can go into a store and buy a dozen cigarettes for a very small sum. They seem an innocent kind of thing and it is an easy way to be led into temptation.

Mr. P. H. MACKENZIE (South Bruce). Mr. Speaker, in common with many others who have spoken I would like to put myself on record in this matter. I feel very strong sympathy with the movement that has been inaugurated and carried on by many good women, professors, teachers and medical men in this country for the putting down of the smoking of cigarettes. I welcome the solution proposed at this time; it has my full sympathy. I think that the time has come when some action should be taken to put a stop to the ravages of the cigarette habit among our young people. I do not wish to detain the House at this late stage of the debate, but simply to say that I am strongly in favour of some measure of legislation to stop the smoking of cigarettes by the youth of this country. I realize that the solution of the question seems difficult but its importance calls for an earnest effort being made by the government.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I am not quite clear—

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman spoke before.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman says that on this question I have already spoken. I direct your attention to the fact that this is not correct.

Mr. HENDERSON. A few moments ago.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I simply asked a question of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Loggie) who was speaking. That question was in my opinion necessary.

At six o'clock, the House adjourned.

---

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, March 19, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 125) respecting the Western Alberta Railway Company.—Mr. Macpherson.

Bill (No. 128) respecting the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company.—Mr. Michaud.

Bill (No. 129) to incorporate the London and Lancashire Guarantee and Accident Company.—Mr. Pringle.

Bill (No. 127) respecting the Dominion Guarantee Company, Limited.—Mr. Gervais.

Bill (No. 126) to change the name and head office of the Anglo-Canadian Insurance Company.—Mr. Gervais.

Bill (No. 130) to amend the Naturalization Act.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

QUESTIONS.

IMMIGRANTS AND BONUSES.

Mr. BLAIN asked:

1. How many immigrants of every kind arrived in Canada each year since 1896?
2. On how many immigrants has a bonus of any kind been paid in each year since 1896?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | 1896 | 16,835 |
| | 1897 | 21,716 |
| | 1898 | 31,900 |
| | 1899 | 44,543 |
| | 1900 to June 30 | 23,895 |
| | 1900-1 | 49,149 |
| | 1901-2 | 67,379 |
| | 1902-3 | 128,364 |
| | 1903-4 | 130,331 |
| | 1904-5 | 146,266 |
| | 1905-6 | 189,064 |
| | 1906-7 (9 months) | 124,667 |
| | 1907-8 (9 months) | 235,328 |
| 2. | 1895-96 | 4,484 |
| | 1896-97 | 2,432 |
| | 1897-98 | 8,664 |
| | 1898-99 | 4,588 |
| | 1899-1900 | 19,700 |
| | 1900-1 | 16,309 |
| | 1901-2 | 15,294 |
| | 1902-3 | 27,945 |
| | 1903-4 | 47,973 |
| | 1904-5 | 32,604 |
| | 1905-6 | 33,680 |
| | 1906-7 (9 months) | 14,070 |
| | 1907-8 (9 months) | 20,516 |

FORT WILLIAM RESERVE.

Mr. BOYCE—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. What portion of the Fort William or Mission reserve was acquired by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company?
2. When, in what manner, for what purpose, and on what terms were the said lands acquired by the railway company?
3. What was the total acreage acquired, and the price per acre paid by the company?
4. By whom was the land valued, when and by whom was such valuator appointed, and what is the date of his report?
5. What sum was paid the valuator for his services?
6. What was the amount of the valuation as found by the valuator?
7. Has the land been granted to the company? If so, when?
8. When and on what terms were these lands surrendered by the Indians, and who negotiated the surrender?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. A tract along the north part of the reserve.

2. On the 27th of January, 1906 ; by purchase ; for railway and especially terminal purposes ; cash payment.

3. 1,600 acres : 150 acres at $320 ; 250 acres at $160 ; 300 acres at $80 ; 700 acres at $40 ; 200 acres at $20.

4. Mr. S. Bray, chief surveyor of the Department of Indian Affairs ; on the 7th of January, 1905 ; by the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs ; 13th of March, 1905.

5. No other remuneration than his regular salary.

6. The total valuation of land and improvements amounted to $244,574.

7. Yes. On the 27th January, 1906.

8. The lands were not surrendered ; they were acquired under the provisions of section 46 of the Indian Act, chapter 81, R.S. C.

MAIL SERVICE—EGYPTE AND ST. EPHREM D'UPTON.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. Has the government renewed the contract for the mail service between Egypte and St. Ephrem d'Upton?

2. For how many years has such contract been renewed?

3. Is the contract renewed at the same price or at a different price? If the present price differs, what is it according to the terms of the new contract?

4. Has the contract for the mail service between Egypte and St. Ephrem d'Upton been renewed without public tenders being called for?

5. Is it the custom of the department to renew the contracts for mail service without calling for new tenders?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) :

1. A renewal has been offered the contractor.

2. Four years from 1st April, 1908.

3. The same price.

4. Yes.

5. As provided by statute, contracts are renewed without tenders when in the opinion of the Postmaster General a satisfactory service has been performed under the expiring contracts and conditions are advantageous in the public interest, and the contract price has been previously fixed by public tender.

SUTHERLAND RIFLE SIGHT COMPANY.

Mr. WORTHINGTON—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. Has the government entered into a contract with the Sutherland Rifle Sight Company for the purchase of additional sights?

2. If so, what is the number of sights to be purchased, and at what price?

3. When will these sights be delivered?

4. Was there a previous contract between the government and the Sutherland Rifle Sight Company?

5. If so, for what number of sights, the price and time of delivery?

6. Was this contract carried out?

7. On what rifles are these sights to be placed?

8. When will this change be made?

9. Is it the intention of the government to make an advance payment on the purchase price of these sights to the company remanufacturing the same? If so, what will be the percentage advanced?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) :

1, 2, 3, 4 and 5. There has only been one contract entered into by the government with the Sutherland Rifle Sight Company for the purchase of 36,000 sights at $1 each, to be delivered between September 15, 1906, and March 15, 1908.

6. Not yet. The price has lately been increased to $1.20 each, and the time of delivery extended to the period between March 15, 1908 and September 15, 1909, by order in council, dated March 7, 1908.

7. The Lee-Enfield.

8. As soon as the sights are received from the manufacturer.

9. It is not the intention to make advance payments. There is no provision in the contract for advances.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES AT RANCHVALE, MANITOBA.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. How many entries for homesteads were made at the subland agency at Ranchvale, Manitoba, each year since the opening of the agency?

2. What were the total receipts of the office during each year?

3. How many applications for patent were received each year?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. Homestead entries :

| | |
|---|---|
| 1st July, 1904—30th June, 1905 | 13. |
| 1st July, 1905—30th June, 1906 | 38. |
| 1st July, 1906—30th June, 1907 | 31. |
| 1st July, 1907—29th Feby., 1908 | 46. |

2. Total receipts :

| | |
|---|---|
| 1st July, 1904—30th June, 1905 | $187 60 |
| 1st July, 1905—30th June, 1906 | 399 25 |
| 1st July, 1906—30th June, 1907 | 455 00 |
| 1st July, 1907—29th Feby., 1908 | 645 50 |

3. Applications for patents :

| | |
|---|---|
| 1st July, 1904—30th June, 1905 | 35 |
| 1st July, 1905—30th June, 1906 | 28 |
| 1st July, 1906—30th June, 1907 | 29 |
| 1st July, 1907—29th Feby., 1908 | 47 |

ICE FOR THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. STANFIELD asked:

1. Who has the contract for supplying ice to the Intercolonial Railway Department at Truro?
2. What is the contract price of same?
3. What quantity was supplied for the year 1907?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. J. A. McDonald, has the contract for supplying ice at Truro for season of 1908.
2. 39 cents per ton loaded on cars at Piedmont Siding.
3. 385 tons—1,450 pounds was supplied in 1907.

ROSS RIFLES AND NORTHWEST MOUNTED POLICE.

Mr. WORTHINGTON—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. Where, when, and by whom, was the first consignment of Ross rifles manufactured that were issued to the Royal Northwest Mounted Police?
2. If not manufactured by the Ross Rifle Company at its factory in Quebec, were the component parts assembled and put together there?
3. Where were the component parts of the rifles made that were furnished by Eley Brothers of England, for the Royal Northwest Mounted Police?

Rt. hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. 60 rifles were shipped from Quebec to Regina on the 30th of June, 1905, and 929 on the 5th of August.
2. The Department of the Mounted Police understood and assumed that they had been manufactured at Quebec.
3. The Department of the Mounted Police purchased no rifles and no parts of rifles from Eley Brothers.

COST OF EASTERN DIVISION OF NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

Mr. TAYLOR asked:

1. Has the government, and especially the right hon. the Prime Minister, and the Minister of Finance, made any recent estimates of the cost of the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway?
2. If so, what are such estimates, and on what are they based?
3. If no such estimates have been recently made, when will the government be prepared to furnish them?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I cannot answer for the Finance Minister, as to myself, I have not recently revised my figures.

Mr. OLIVER.

BOOK-KEEPING SYSTEM ON INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to refer to a matter of privilege. The press gallery seldom makes any mistakes so far as I am concerned, particularly on the wrong side. But on this occasion, by some inadvertence, a despatch has been sent to the 'Daily Telegraph' of St. John, New Brunswick, adding the sum of $300,000 to the answer given by me in regard to the cost of reorganizing the auditing and book-keeping system of the Intercolonial. The despatch says:

> They not only reorganized the system of accounting, but spent a year and a half instructing and assisting the railway staff in the proper carrying out of the system in question so that the results expected might be obtained. The work was done at scheduled prices, and totalled $343,084.

The real figures I gave were $43,084. The head-lines also say 'Nearly $350,000 cost of reorganizing book-keeping system of railway.' I have given the right figures.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding, that the Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Any one who listened on Tuesday to the plain unvarnished tale that I had the honour to expose in this House with reference to the increase of taxation and expenditure in this country, might very well have been led to ask, whither are we rushing? To find taxation raised from $27,700,000 in 1896 to about $73,000,000 in 1908, to find the expenditure raised from $42,000,000 from the first mentioned date to $110,000,000 in the year just ending, with a probable and almost certain extension to $130,000,000 or more in the year upon which we shall soon enter,—this I say might well have led an interested listener to ask the question I have stated.

But, Sir, if the question may be asked with reference to the taxation and expenditure of the country, another question, equally as important, may be asked with reference to the trade and fiscal arrangements of the country. If the word 'rushing' were not used in the latter case the word 'drifting' might very well be used. You will have noticed with what modesty the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) touched upon the question of the trade conditions of the country. Generally he devotes a good deal of time, or has in past years, to that subject. Never in the history of Canada was it more necessary that the country should sit down and, through its business men in parliament and out of it, take stock of the conditions of the country, its obligations, its dealings, its payments now due or nearly due and of the complex questions which enter into the business and trade operations of a country as great as is the Dominion of Canada. I say that if ever there was a time when this should be done it is now. Yet, in this day of laissez faire, the business men of the country and the generality of the thinking men of the country seem unfortunately to have left it in the hands of a committee of the country, called the cabinet or ministry, and to have busied themselves with their own work, thinking it was the sole duty of these fourteen gentlemen to deal with the complex question of the trade and business of the Dominion of Canada. Just one thought to show that the people of this or any other country should never sit down and let the great affairs of the country with reference to its business be so disposed of. Taking the fourteen gentlemen who occupy the front benches of this House, or who are the ministers of the present cabinet, how many amongst these are bankers of great repute, or have had a large and varied experience in the business of the country so as to understand its currents, to know something of its sources and to mark out the channels in which it may run if left to itself, and in which it may be directed by happy and prudent guidance? How many have had great experience, or would have commended themselves in a private capacity in that respect to the country at large? If that is true of the present administration, it may be said to be almost equally true of every administration that we have had in this country. I am not imputing it as a weakness particularly of this government, but I am only pointing out the fact that it does come so to be that in the general rush and hurry of affairs at the present time it is left to a committee and a very small committee of the country, to look after these matters. These gentlemen, if you will think of it, have nothing to guide them but their own small experience in business matters, or the advice of friends who may be more or less interested in having a particular drift or tendency given to the trade development of the country, or the disinterested advice that they sometimes get from papers in opposition to themselves, or at least independent papers who advise them from time to time as to what seems to them, in their different areas of observation to be necessary for the well-being of the country. And yet, when you take this all into account, we find that the business of the country, so important and varied as it is, comes, in the end, to be looked after and to be directed in the main currents, in so far as legislation can do it, by such a body of men not in our country, at least, the best fitted to at any time or in any government to undertake such very large and varied interests and conduct them prudently and well. So I desire to make this remark simply that it might call, if possible, the attention of the business men of the country to the desirability of their being constantly on the alert and on the watch and of taking up every question that is likely to come to the front, so that, after having given it their best consideration and come to their wisest conclusions, they may give their advice to public men generally, to the ministry, to members of parliament, to all concerned, in any mode of communication that may be chosen in order that the wisest judgment and the best conclusions may be reached. Just at the present moment, and I come back to that particular thought, it is a very opportune time for this country to sit down and take stock of the general conditions, and to ask whither we are drifting.

Now, I propose, in the first place, very briefly, to advert to the policies, if we may call them such—the principles we can scarcely call them—which have dominated the government since they came into power in 1896. We all know the tortuous course of the members of the government and of the party that supported them in the long period of twenty or twenty-five years when they were seeking to change their status and to come into a ruling and governing position in this country. There is no necessity at all for me to bestow very much time upon this. Suffice it to say that almost every year they sought, wooed and successfully won some new and resplendent policy. Just as quickly in a year or two they threw it overboard and went in quest of another, and so it went on from absolute free trade to continental free trade, to revenue tariff only, to unrestricted reciprocity with discrimination against Great Britain and British countries, to anti-protection, to mutual preference with Great Britain, to reciprocity, especially with the United States of America, but in the last and final result it seemed to settle down into three phases of policy: First, reciprocity in any case with the United States of America; secondly, as promised by the right hon. Prime Minister himself, a mutual preference between Great Britain and Canada if it could possibly be brought about by the efforts of himself and party; and, thirdly, the stern and unwavering determination to eliminate the principle of protection from the whole fiscal policy of the country. Am I right or wrong in stating this as the conclusion of the whole matter? I do not propose to read many statements in proof thereof. Let me, however, recall to the mind of my right hon. friend the plank in the 1893 platform, where the party pledged itself that:

The tariff should be reduced to the needs of honest, economical and efficient government, that it should be so adjusted as to make free or bear as lightly as possible upon the necessaries of life and should be so arranged as to promote freer trade with the whole world.

And closing with these words:

We denounce the principle of protection as radically unsound, unjust to the masses of the people and we declare our conviction that any tariff changes based on that principle must fail to afford any satisfactory relief to the trouble under which this country labours.

Afterwards Sir Wilfrid Laurier declared:

If the Liberals are successful they will cut off the head of protection absolutely and trample on its body.

Sir Richard Cartwright declared:

Our policy is death to protection; our policy from first to last has been to destroy this villianous system of protection which had been grinding out the vitals of the country.

Sir Louis Davis, then a trusted lieutenant of my right hon. friend then declared:

We are attacking this policy year after year. This is an accursed system, a system accursed by God and man.

And the Hon. Wm. Paterson whose genial face I see directly in front of me, at the Ottawa convention he declared not only to that convention, but in tones which reached the whole country:

You declare for freedom of trade against restrictions of trade.

In 1893 on that platform in Ottawa Mr. Laurier said:

We will tax for revenue but not one cent for protection. When we are in power we will free the people from protection which is a fraud, and a delusion, and a robbery.

There is not much necessity for me to amplify statements of this kind; I could give them to this House in quantity and take up a vast expanse of 'Hansard' in recording them but I spare the feelings of gentlemen opposite.

Nor is it necessary for me to say that reciprocity with the United States and preferential trade with Great Britain were also incorporated in the Liberal platform, and in the discussions of the questions by the leaders of the party and more particularly by the present Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Sir Charles Tupper advocated a mutual preference with Great Britain; and, Sir Wilfrid Laurier leading the forces of the opposition, not to be behind hand, declared that he was just as good a friend of mutual preference as was Sir Charles Tupper. In May, before the elections he said:

My hope is, nay my conviction is that on the 23rd of June the Liberal party will be at the head of the poll and then it will be the Liberal party with its policy of a revenue tariff that will send commissioners to London to arrange for a basis of preferential trade.

On what basis? Taking up Joseph Chamberlain's discussion of the question in the old country he said:

Under this policy we would have for our goods a preference which would not be given to the goods of other nations.

It was not to be a one-sided preference, it was to be a mutual preference, and he declared:

What would be the possibility of such a step if it were taken? We sell our goods in England; we send our wheat, our butter, our cheese, all our natural products to England, but there we have to compete with similar products from the United States, from Russia, from other nations. Just see what a great advantage it would be to Canada if the wheat, the butter, the cheese which we send to England could be met in England with a preference over similar products of other nations. The possibilities are immense.

Can there be any doubt as to what that meant to the people who listened to him or his words? Again he declared:

We would be in a far better position to obtain this boon (a preference for Canadian goods in the British markets) for Canada, than Sir Charles Tupper because he has a protective tariff whereas mine is a revenue tariff pure and simple, and Mr. Chamberlain says that that is all that is needed in order to obtain it. England does not expect that we should take her own system of free trade such as she has it, but I lay it before you that what the English people would expect in return is that instead of the principle of protection we would adopt a revenue form of tariff pure and simple. These are the conditions on which we can have that boon.

There was first the reciprocity plank of the platform of 1893 and there are the promises made by the leader of the party in words which are absolutely explicit and plain.

Well, how was it with reference to reciprocity? With reference to reciprocity the present Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) leading in the Eastern Townships declared:

If my leader comes into power it would not be a rash prediction to say that within six months from that day by a scratch of the pen a treaty of reciprocity would be put in force between Canada and the United States.

And the Hon. David Mills said:

If the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House cross to the treasury benches I can promise there will be no difficulty in obtaining trade with the neighbouring republic.

And so, in similar expressions all through this country they declared their determination and their ability to get reciprocity with the United States and they used that as a very strong and powerful canvass. Well, Sir, these gentlemen came into power and what happened ? They had not been in power six months before Sir Wilfrid Laurier went to England, and instead of sending a commission or making a single move towards getting a mutual preferential tariff, he declared to the Cobden Club, and he declared to the Duke of Devonshire, and he declared to the people of England : We are going to give you, yea we have given you a tariff by which you get a preference ; we do not ask you for anything in return ; that is a free gift ; I would not have you abandon your free trade principles, protection is a bane and a curse and it has been such to Canada. And, Sir, to-day that right hon. gentleman posesses, whether he wears it or not, the Cobden medal for that act of his in giving up his promises to the people of Canada and going back upon his pledged word.

Well, what happened with reference to reciprocity with the United States. These cock-sure gentlemen went down to Washington, took their strongest men, put on their sweetest smile, used their most honeyed arguments and they came back without a shred of a treaty, without the promise of a treaty, having expended some $35,000 of the people's money and having had a very good time. And they came back to parliament and declared that after all they did not think the people of Canada wanted reciprocity with the United States. That was what took place with reference to these two planks of their platform.

What took place with reference to the elimination of protection? They brought down their tariff in 1897. Was it or was it not—I ask my right hon. friend—was it or was it not based on the principle of protection ? Had it protection in it or was it a simple revenue tariff ? Well, Sir, the proof of the pudding is in the eating of it, and the written and printed tariff which stands on record shows that it bears all the marks of a protective tariff. There were your specific duties against which they had argued ; there were the ad valorem duties running up to thirty-five per cent ; there were the rebates against which they had thundered ; there were the bounties against which they had declared, and there as the result of the working out of that tariff in the succeeding year was an average duty of 29·90 per cent upon all goods that came into this country. Is there any proof necessary after that ? That these gentlemen swallowed their principles if they had any, went back on their promises and went to work and put up a tariff on the principle of protection, and have kept it to this date upon the principle of protection and on no other. Then they thought they would do a world stroke of business. These gentlemen of talent in their first tariff inserted a clause not even a one-sided preference with Great Britain; they themselves disclaimed it, the Minister of Finance disclaimed it, the Minister of Trade and Commerce at that time disclaimed it—what they brought in was a world reciprocity tariff.

They said to any country in the world that went a certain length in its tariff with reference to the importation of goods from Canada, that they would put it on a preferential basis. They did it. Great Britain took advantage of it. Thirty-eight other countries had an equal advantage with Great Britain. That condition of things remained in force for one year, and at the end of that year these gentlemen had to pay back the duties which they had presumed to put on the imports from all those countries—paid them back with Canada's hard cash. They had received a notice from the British government saying : If you want to give Great Britain a preference, you can do it by special legislation, naming Great Britain; but if you keep this kind of a clause in your tariff, you have to let in at the same rate every country in the world that has the most favoured nation clause. There is where they came to the impasse; they had to repeal the legislation they had boasted about, or give a preference to Great Britain and to Great Britain only. These gentlemen saved their face by doing at the end of the year what they declared in the beginning they would not do—they gave a preference to Great Britain alone. First, they gave a preference of 25 per cent; afterwards, in a fit of loyalty, about the time of the Boer war, they raised that to 33⅓ per cent; but lately their ardour has cooled off, and the British preference has been diminished by special legislation by the intermediate tariff, and now by the French treaty, until to-day there is very little life in it if it is not alogether dead, and other countries come in on the same favoured basis that Great Britain does on very important articles.

That is the course of these hon. gentlemen with reference to their policy. What has it been ? Simply a matter of expediency, of opportunism. Their tariff is full of contradictions. On the one hand, they try to have a low duty for iron, and on the other hand they put their hands into the peoples' pockets and pay out a bounty to help the manufacturers of iron. They abolish or lower the duties on binder twine, on oil and on other things, and then they pay a bounty to the producer so as to be on terms of expediency with each—saying to the consumer, we have reduced the customs duty; saying to the producer, we are protecting you by bounty. It is wrong, they said, to tax a cent which would be taken from one man's pocket and put into another; and yet with their bounty system, running up now to $3,000,000 or more a year, they are doing the very thing they denounced all over this country. They say, we want to encourage the manufacturers of agricultural implements—they are dear to us. Then they turn round and say: The farmers want their agricultural implements cheaper; so we will make it easy for both; we will give to the farmer 2½ per cent reduction in the customs duty, and we will give to the manufacturer a rebate which amounts to more than the 2½ per cent. Thus their tariff goes from change to change and from absurdity to absurdity. When once the intermediate tariff was put on the statute-book, all certainty with reference to British capital and British trade with this country changed into uncertainty. Your man in Great Britain who wanted to lay the basis of enlarged preferential trade with Canada knew in 1906 that he had a certain basis on which to go. The intermediate tariff came on in 1907. Now what does he know? He knows simply this, that though at any present time he may have a certain preference, within forty-eight hours an order in council may go out from the Canadian government which would let countries which compete with Great Britain into the Canadian market on terms which would destroy all trade which he might attempt to build up on that preference. And what has happened with reference to the French treaty? You have it; we have discussed it; it is now the law of the land; and we will see what comes out of it. But let me tell my hon. friend what he has had to pay for it. You have a small list of articles on which you get the minimum treatment in France; but in that list you find very few articles with reference to which you have to-day any entrance into the French market at all. I think half-a-dozen will almost exhaust the list, and the rest for the most part are articles on which the protection is so high that it will be impossible for Canada to overleap the barrier when free trade countries like England, asking more than we can produce, open their ports without any barrier of customs duty at all. What more? You have opened a destructive competition with some of the producing interests of this country having a very low rate of protection, and it remains to be seen how that will work out. You have sacrificed $400,000 or $500,000 of revenue; you have pledged yourselves to a subsidy to keep up the direct service, without any co-operation from France in the matter at all; you have lowered the British preference; and, worse than all, you have let twelve countries of the world into the Canadian market on the same reduced terms you have given to France, which proposed to pay something at least for it, and you have not got from one of these countries a cent's worth of advantage in their markets. That is what you pay for the French treaty; we will see how it works out. My own opinion is that it will not be found to work out as satisfactorily as my hon. friend the Minister of Finance thought it would.

Mr. FOSTER.

So much with reference to general policy. Now, let me come to the trade returns, and what is the first thing we notice as we scan them? The first thing is this, that a great deal of the boasting about the figures of trade is absolutely foundationless; it is misleading in this way, that the values as they are given in the trade returns are not an indication of the volume of trade which is carried on by this country. I call attention to this fact. The Liberal Conservative party is liable to criticism and gets criticism between two conditions. In 1890 the prices of commodities were the highest they had been for a long series of years. In 1896 the prices of commodities had gone down to the lowest figure they had ever touched in a still longer series of years. From 1896 to 1906 or 1907 there has been a rise in prices to a point which overtops the prices in 1890, and which is the highest point that prices have reached in a long cycle of years in this and other countries. Now, what happens? You take the trade returns, which are based upon values, not upon volume—in 1890, so many millions; in 1896, so many more millions. But in the meantime the prices of commodities have fallen 22 to 30 per cent, and the disadvantage is shown in the values; but the volume of business is a very different matter. When you take the returns for 1906-7, and show an export of so many millions, and contrast that with the value of the exports in 1896, there again the basis is fictitious, so far as the volume of trade and the development of the country are concerned.

For instance, a bushel of wheat sold for 55 cents in 1896 and for $1 in the fall of 1907. It cost just as much capital, labour and energy to produce a bushel of wheat in 1896 as in 1906, but if 30,000,000 bushels of wheat had been exported from Canada in 1896 at 50 to 55 cents a bushel, and if the same quantity had been exported in 1907 at $1 a bushel, you would have had in 1907 from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 more in value, figuring in your trade and navigation report, and that without any more business development or energy. Thus it is evident that when you take the values as an index and not the quantities you are not stating the whole case. Let me show how this works out. In 1896, according to the Bureau of Statistics in the United States, the values of all commodities had fallen compared with 1890 an average of 22 per cent. But in 1905 the values had risen 28 per cent as compared with 1896. There was, therefore, a difference of 50 per cent between 1890 and 1905 in values. See what variation that would make when you figure out your trade by dollars instead of by quantities.

In 1896 our imports were $105,300,000 and our exports $112,900,000, making in all $218,- 200,000. But if you take exactly the same trade and estimate it according to the values of 1905, the imports become $134,-800,000, the exports $144,500,000 and the total trade $279,300,000 instead of $218,200,000. Exactly the same volume of business, exactly the same development, energy, enterprise and labour, and yet there is that difference simply because the values have risen by that amount in the meantime.

Apply the same calculation to 1905. In 1905 the tables show the merchandise imports $251,600,000 and the merchandise exports $201,600,000, making altogether $453,-100,000, and they point to that as showing the expansion of Canadian trade. See what our policy has done, they exclaim. But translate that into the values of 1896 and your imports become $181,200,000 and your exports $145,000,000, and your total trade $326,300,000 instead of $453,100,000. Thus there is a difference of $126,800,000, which these gentlemen take credit for as the result of their policy and administration, when it is simply due to the world wide rise in prices and nothing more.

I have had with some care the exports of 1896 and the exports of 1906 of this country carefully analysed. Take a part of the exports in 1906, $165,263,000, and apply the values of 1896, and you will find a difference of $38,300,000. If you apply the same rule to the whole exports of $235,-483,000—calculate them at the values of 1896, you would find that they would be only $182,000,000 instead of $235,000,000. That is not due to a difference in the quantity exported and imported. It is a difference due solely to the increase in values.

There are some very significant items which show the rise in prices. What are the sources of our large exports? They are the forest, the field and the mine. We export more largely from the field than from any other source, and our exports from the mines are large and increasing. Take copper, in 1896 it was worth 5½ cents a pound and in 1906 16 cents a pound. The gain in copper alone, taking the same quantity in 1896 as in 1906, would, at the rise in values, amount to $4,700,000. In 1906 we exported $7,148,000 worth of copper. Apply to that export the prices of 1896, and instead of an export of $7,148,000 you would only have an export of $2,136,000. Take lead ore, the price went up from 2 cents to 3½ cents. The price of mica increased from 10 cents to 15 cents. Nickel increased from 7 cents to 9 cents, and the gain on nickel alone would be half a million dollars. Take codfish, and the gain would be a million dollars owing to the rise in price. In lobsters alone the gain is $1,300,000, due solely to the increased price, because the fishers are receiving 27 cents per can when formerly they received only 15 to 25 cents. Take the great staple of lumber. I have grouped together a large part of the exports of lumber, and I find, if you take the export of 1906 and apply to it the prices of 1896, your trade returns would show $5,500,000 less than they do. That is on exactly the same amount of lumber as exported in 1896. Take agricultural products, butter has gone up from 17·9 to 20·9, so that you make a gain in butter of $1,000,000. There would be $1,000,000 less in your trade and navigation returns if you figured out the exports in 1906 at the price of 1896. Then cheese has gone up in price from 11 cents to 18 cents, making a gain of $6,000,000, due solely to the rise in price.

Mr. PATERSON. That is $6,000,000 more cash in the pockets of the cheese producers.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, we will take that argument. It does not affect the argument I am making, and my right hon. friend must meet the argument fairly, for what I have stated is a matter of common reason and common knowledge as he himself is aware. But I might as well deal with this other side of it now. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) says that there is so much more in the pockets of the producer. But there has not been a rise on one side of the account alone. All commodities have risen together. If the people get more for what they sell, they have to pay more for what they buy, and it is the balance that decides the thing. I challenge my hon. friend to take the prices that make up the cost of living in 1896 and put them side by side with similar prices for 1907-8 and see whether the consumer gets any benefit. Bacon and hams, for instance, counted on the basis of the prices of 1896 diminished by $3,700,000 the values of 1906. And so all the way through, nearly all these articles show appreciation in that way. Before we can say whether or not Canada is making the progress that she appears to be making, we must get behind the values and understand the actual volumes in the business which is being transacted.

Now, leaving that point, I wish to take up another phase of the matter. I have here a table which shows the imports and exports of merchandise for home consumption. I think this is a very important table. It may be that I think it more important than it really is. We know that the preacher, even though he has to take a text a hundred and four times a year, yet is very apt to think the actual text on which he may be preaching the most important that can be found in scripture, so strongly is it impressed upon his mind. That may be my case in the present instance. The following gives a comparison of our total imports of merchandise for home consumption :—

IMPORTS OF MERCHANDISE FOR HOME CONSUMPTION.

| —— | 1896. | 1906. | Increase. | Increase |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | $ | $ | $ | p.c. |
| Total | 105,300,000 | 283,200,000 | 177,900,000 | 169 |
| From Great Britain | 32,800,000 | 69,100,000 | 36,300,000 | 110 |
| From United States | 53,500,000 | 168,700,000 | 115,200,000 | 209 |
| From other countries | 18,900,000 | 45,200,000 | 26,300,000 | 149 |

EXPORTS OF MERCHANDISE.

| | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Total | 112,900,000 | 246,600,000 | 133,700,000 | 118 |
| To Great Britain | 66,600,000 | 133,000,000 | 66,400,000 | 100 |
| To United States | 36,400,000 | 88,000,000 | 51,600,000 | 141 |
| To other countries | 9,200,000 | 24,400,000 | 15,200,000 | 165 |

These are figures that we may well ponder. What are the lessons they teach? In the first place, there is the preponderating rate of increase in imports over exports—169 per cent increase in imports and only 118 per cent increase in exports. Then there is the preponderating increase of our trade with the United States as compared with our trade with Great Britain—increase in our imports from the United States, 209 per cent, compared with an increase of our 110 per cent in our imports from Great Britain, an increase in our exports to the United States of 141 per cent as compared with an increase of only 100 per cent in our exports to Great Britain. In 1896, the balance of trade against us in our business with the United States was $17,100,000; in 1906, the balance of trade against us in our trade with the United States was $80,700,000, an increase of 392 per cent. Another lesson is the moderate increase of the favourable balance of trade with Great Britain—$33,800,000 in 1896 and $63,900,000 in 1906, an increase of only 89 per cent, while the adverse balance of trade with the United States increased in the same time by 392 per cent and is still going up. Another lesson is the rapid increase in trade with all other countries—for, though small, it is rapidly increasing, being $28,100,000 in 1896 and $69,600,000 in 1906, an increase of 149 per cent. But note also the increasing adverse balance of trade therein, which was $9,700,000 against us in 1896 and was $20,800,000 against us in 1906, an increase of 114 per cent and the proportionate decreasing power of production in Canada in relation to the wants of Canada, as is shown by the figures which I have given to the House. Following out that subject, I have prepared three tables, one, the trade between Canada and Great Britain in merchandise which is as follows:—

Mr. FOSTER.

TRADE IN MERCHANDISE BETWEEN CANADA AND GREAT BRITAIN.

| Year. | Imports from Great Britain. | Exports to Great Britain. | Favourable balance. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Under Conservatives. | $ | $ | $ |
| 1890 | 43,277,009 | 48,353,694 | 5,076,685 |
| 1896 | 32,824,505 | 66,689,253 | 33,854,748 |
| Under Liberals. | | | |
| 1897–1906 (Average yearly). | 48,452,949 | 109,553,700 | 61,100,751 |

That shows the condition with reference to Canada and Great Britain. Now take the trade in merchandise between Canada and the United States, and it is a startling table:

TRADE IN MERCHANDISE CANADA AND UNITED STATES.

(UNDER CONSERVATIVES.)

| Year. | Imports from United States. | Exports to United States (Canadian products.) | Adverse balance of trade. |
|---|---|---|---|
| | $ | $ | $ |
| 1890 | 51,365,661 | 33,291,207 | 18,074,454 |
| 1896 | 53,529,390 | 34,460,428 | 19,068,962 |
| Average of 1890–1896 | 51,705,080 | 32,773,471 | 18,931,609 |

(UNDER LIBERALS)

| Year. | Imports from United States. | Exports to UnitedStates (Canadian products.) | Adverse balance of trade. |
|---|---|---|---|
| | $ | $ | $ |
| 1897.. ..... | 57,023,347 | 39,717,057 | 17,306,285 |
| 1898..... | 74,824,923 | 34,361,795 | 40,463,128 |
| 1899..... | 88,467,173 | 34,766,955 | 53,700,218 |
| 1900..... | 102,080,177 | 52,534,977 | 49,545,200 |
| 1901..... | 107,149,325 | 67,983,673 | 39,165,652 |
| 1902..... | 114,744,696 | 66,567,784 | 48,176,912 |
| 1903..... | 128,790,237 | 67,766,367 | 61,023,870 |
| 1904..... | 143,010,578 | 66,856,885 | 76,153,693 |
| 1905 ..... | 152,431,676 | 70,426,765 | 82,004,961 |
| 1906..... | 168,798,376 | 83,546,306 | 85,252,070 |
| Total..... | 1,137,320,453 | 584,528,464 | 552,791,989 |
| 1887–1896... 10 y'rs Conservative. | 503,201,174 | 335,359,783 | 167,841,393 |
| Increase in Liberal 10 years.... | 634,119,279 | 249,168,681 | 384,950,596 |

In 12 months ending June 30, 1907, the imports from United States were $206,715,-914, the exports to the United States, $82,-194.661, and the adverse balance of trade reached the enormous sum of $124,521,253.

Now I think that is a somewhat startling showing. This adverse balance of trade has to be met, it has to be met every month, every three months, every year. You cannot run credit for that adverse balance of trade, it has to be adjusted through the banks and through the business of the country. Now let me point out that in this statement I have simply taken the exports of home products, because I wanted to show the exact relation of trade as regards the export of Canada's own produce, to the foreign produce we were importing. Now if you deduct the foreign produce also exported to the United States in that period of ten years, it amounts to $30,000,000. Subtracting that, taking both the home and foreign products, the adverse balance of trade against us in those ten years, with the United States, was $522,000,000.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. If we have lost that money in the last ten years, where do the people get their accumulated savings ?

Mr. FOSTER. I will tell my hon. friend in a little while. Now let us take the trade between Canada and the world in relation to merchandise, and here another striking fact presents itself.

TRADE IN MERCHANDISE, CANADA AND THE WORLD.

| Year. | Imports. | Exports. | Balance of Trade. |
|---|---|---|---|
| | $ | $ | $ |
| 1890. | 112,000,000 | 91,000,000 | 21,000 000 Minus. |
| 1896. | 105,000,000 | 113,000,000 | 8,000,000 Plus. |
| 1902. | 197,000,000 | 210,000,000 | 13,000,000 " |
| 1903. | 225,000,000 | 225,000,000 | |
| 1904. | 244,000,000 | 211,000,000 | 33,000,000 Minus. |
| 1905. | 252,000,000 | 202,000,000 | 50,000,000 " |
| 1906. | 283,000,000 | 247,000,000 | 36,000,000 " |
| *1907. | 345,000,000 | 241,000,000 | 104,000,000 " |

*12 months.

Here another striking fact presents itself. In 1890 our total imports were $112,000,000 and our exports $91,000,000, leaving a balance of trade against us of $21,000,000. In 1896, still under Conservative administration, and after hard times, our imports were $105,000,000, our exports $113,000,000 with a favourable balance of trade of $8,000,000. Now, how was that done ? By exporting more and importing less, we brought about a change of $29,000,000 in that period. Now whether we all have the same theory and the same explanation or not, these are figures which strike one, and they deserve something better than a laugh, something better than trotting forward an old and exploded theory, something better than calling up Russia or calling up Switzerland. You have to judge every country absolutely by its own conditions and its own connections. There is no rule which will suffice for all countries. Take Switzerland, for instance ; Switzerland will be handed out as a country that has an adverse balance of trade and yet prosperous. When you take the statistican's work and find that in Switzerland there is every year expended by tourists from different parts of the world, and chiefly from Europe and the United States, for natural scenery, attraction and enjoyment, an amount which comes up to about $9 per head, for every man, woman and child in Switzerland, you see that Switzerland is in a very different position from Canada. Scenery, travel, attractions, natural beauty are all exportable products and are paid for by tourists of the United States and other countries in millions of dollars which is spent in Switzerland upon its scenery and attractions. So much then in reference to these figures.

Now, before going any further with that I will revert to the point I made that the producing power of Canada seems to have failed to keep up the ratio of increase as regards the call upon it by the consuming necessities of the country and consequently the imports have very largely increased. That may be due to two reasons. If the producing power in Canada is not able to satisfy increasing demand, or if conditions are prevailing to-day which favour this great import from abroad, each of these influences keeps down the production which would otherwise call for the employment of the labour of the people of this country. One or other or both of these may hold in reference to this. But here are the figures and they are important:

PRINCIPAL IMPORTS IN 1896 AND 1906.

| Imports. | 1896 | 1906 |
|---|---|---|
| Breadstuffs.. .. .. .. .. | $ 6,417,767 | $10,955,499 |
| Brick, clays and tiles.... | 261,000 | 1,220,913 |
| Carriages.. .. .. .. .. .. | 1,410,473 | 2,525,177 |
| Cement.. .. .. .. .. .. | 252,882 | 1,003,022 |
| Cocoa, chocolate and preparations thereof... ... | 1,049,433 | 4,462,095 |
| Twine of all kinds.... .. | 261,032 | 2,013,091 |
| Cottons.. .. .. .. .. .. | 5,229,059 | 10,745,206 |
| Earthenware.. .. .... .. | 568,393 | 1,674,817 |
| Fish and its products.. | 947,088 | 1,996,527 |
| Flax, hemp, jute and manufactures thereof.. | 2,745,582 | 5,212,231 |
| Gloves and mitts.. .. .. | 636,618 | 1,167,094 |
| Hats, caps and bonnets.. | 1,485,742 | 2,690,839 |
| Leather and manufactures.. .. .. .. .. .. | 1,243,113 | 3,031,569 |
| Brass and manufactures. | 542,874 | 1,938,169 |
| Copper and manufactures.. .. .. .. .. .. | 295,054 | 3,102,736 |
| Agricultural implements. | 469,875 | 1,615,123 |
| Iron and steel manufactures.. .. .. .. .. .. | 10,203,052 | 44,975,607 |
| Metals, minerals and manufactures thereof.. | 14,550,251 | 59,839,930 |
| Paper and manufactures | 1,002,434 | 3,176,955 |
| Provisions.. .. .. .. .. | 1,228,041 | 3,189,704 |
| Vegetables.. .. .. .. .. | 298,861 | 936,154 |
| Wood and manufactures of wood.. .. .... .. .. | 2,904,196 | 8,656,370 |
| Manufactures of wool.. | 8,773,857 | 17,892,398 |

With regard to breadstuffs here in Canada, a country rich in its soil, intelligent in its agriculture and producing power and yet there is an increase of from $6,000,000 to $10,000,000 in this period from 1896 to 1906. Gloves and mitts will shortly come under the most favoured nation clause of the French treaty and then the foreign manufacturers will get in their work. The duty will be reduced and competing countries in Europe will bring in these articles at a lower rate. With reference to agricultural implements, during nine months of 1907 the importation was $1,845,648 while in the preceding year it was $1,615,125. From 1896 to 1907, $19,907,105 worth of agricultural implements have been imported into this country. What is the reason that Canada cannot make her agricultural implements of all kinds? What is the reason that foreign labour should, to such an extent as this, monopolize Canada with reference to these always used implements? Then take iron and steel manufactures; we imported $10,203,052 worth in 1896 and $44,975,607 worth in 1906. There you have the direct result of the lowering of the tariff to the United States on certain kinds of steel and iron and manufactures thereof. Go to great expense, boast of our unrivalled deposits of iron, put on a tariff to cause manufacture in this country, work it out for twenty years and then give it up and allow in one single period an immense influx of iron and steel manufactures to come in as indicated by the figures I have given. Now, these are the figures which are taken from our returns and which explain the immense percentage in the increase of our imports. Is it best that that kind of thing should continue? Is it best, with reference to the mere financial part of it, that our ratio of exports should fall and our ratio of imports should be continually rising? Where will come the balance to pay the bill for the bill must be paid? Is it better as regards the development of the country? The cry that is made is that this government shall not import labourers or skilled mechanics to be put in competition with our union men. The cry is listened to and the government trembles in its boots every time it sees a protest of the labour unions against the importation or the immigration into this country of skilled mechanics. What does it matter whether you bring in a skilled mechanic to compete and take the labour away from the skilled mechanic here, or whether you hire the skilled mechanic over in Europe, pay him his wages there and let his goods come into this market to take the place of the product of the labouring man in Canada? In the one instance you would have the money spent in this country, the families founded in this country, the prosperity built up in this country; in the other case you are building up families and towns and prosperity in foreign countries. Now, these things are vital to this country. They demand more attention than they have received at the hands of the Finance Minister and the government. We are fast coming to a condition of things when the people will wake suddenly at the point to which we are inevitably tending if this sort of thing goes on. Why, it is simply astounding that the balance of trade—Canada against the world—should run up in four short years from nothing to $104,000,000 in the last calendar year. You commenced in 1904 with $33,000,000; it went up to $50,000,000, then it went up to $36,000,000 and in 1907 to $104,000,000. Every one of these balances is against Canada. Each one of them has had to be met. To find out the bite you have to add them all together and say that in four years the adverse balance of trade has been close up to $225,000,000 against Canada. Well, Sir, what has happened? One of the most diffused and one of the most important manufacturing industries of this country, the woollen industry, has been reduced to its last legs. The woollen industry is a vanishing quantity in Canada. Did you notice the twine that was brought from abroad—$200,000 worth of twine that might be manufactured in this country and now it is not. But we take our money and pay the labourers of the United States and of Scotland who manufacture that twine for us and bring it in at the increased price of the material and the labour and the profits that are put upon it. Is it best for us to have the labour, the profits and the employment within our own country or not? These are points which we must consider if we do not wish to carry on a laissez faire policy. But there will be a day of reckoning as sure as fate, and what I say is that these gentlemen opposite have not lifted a hand and not tried a single experiment to mitigate that kind of thing, but have gone on in a haphazard way and they are face to face now with these startling conditions and facts with regard to the trade of this country.

Mr. FOSTER.

I hesitate to attack the question of the balance of trade. If I were going to approach it I would want a great deal of time to treat it, but even though fools may rush in where angels fear to tread I am going to state a few of my views with reference to that. The balance of trade—why, says the member supporting the government from Prince Edward Island, I will dispose of that balance of trade business for you. How? Why, here is a Canadian vessel lying in the port of Montreal; she loads up with Canadian material, crosses the Atlantic and sells out her load in Liverpool, making 50 per cent profit; she buys another stock of goods, puts it on board, goes to South Africa, sells it at 50 per cent profit; she loads up again with goods from South Africa and goes to Bombay and sells out again at 50 per cent profit; she loads up again there, takes it over to Yokohama, sells it out there again at a profit; she loads up at Yokohama and comes back to Victoria, B.C., and sells out again at a large profit. That is what is going on—yes, in the imagination of my hon. friend, but nowhere else. Business is not done that way by Canada. Watch the ports of this country from the opening of navigation to the close and name me the Canadian vessels that are doing that. That is what was written in the books long ago, that is what the old theorists of free trade England have written volumes and volumes about, and these gentlemen take up these worn out old theories, which may be true with reference to England, the great carrying nation of the world, but are not at all true with reference to Canada.

Now, what I think about the balance of trade is this: That the balance of trade in the first place must be settled presently. It is not as if I could go to my friend here and borrow $100 from him and give him a note for three years and pay him interest. These international balances are not arranged in that way. They have to be adjusted every month, every three months, every six months at the longest and they are so adjusted, and the banks are the mechanism which we use for that adjustment. That is the first point I make. We have got to pay our balances; we cannot run credit from year to year on them. Now, they can only be paid either in goods or in gold, and whichever it is it is our export trade which in the final analysis has to pay our bills and we have nothing else to pay them with. Well, so far as trade and navigation figures go you may call that a trade balance if you like. That is the visible trade of the country. You might so far as that goes balance one by the other, or be in debt, or have a profit. But it may be said: That is not all that is coming and going between the countries; there are invisible exports and imports. And that is true. But yet it is absolutely true that in the end, even the actual international balance has got to be settled by exports from the country that owes and it can be paid in no other way.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Export of scenery, for instance.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly, the export of scenery measured by the expenditure of tourists. Now, in four years the figures I have given work out in this way: In four years $223,000,000 is our adverse balance of trade, but you have got to add to that the charges on the imports. If I mistake not, we have a different plan from that pursued in Great Britain. Here in Canada I think our import value is the fair market value in the country where these goods were bought. Am I right in that?

Mr. PATERSON. Well, the invoice. That is the invoice value and it may be adjusted.

Mr. FOSTER. I know, but that is the basis of it. That being the case, the invoice value does not show us the cost that importers have to pay. They have to bring these goods from the place of origin to the port of entry into Canada and you have to add to all the imports that come into this country the freight charges and insurance from the place they are bought until they land in the port of entry. That will wipe off a good deal of the profits we get from our exports, but that has to be borne in mind with reference to our imports. And how much is that? Australia has in her tariff an enactment that a level charge of 10 per cent will be made for charges, insurance and freight, and added to the invoice for custom purposes. I have not taken that here; I do not know whether that is too much or too little.

But if you take only 7 per cent—and I imagine that it will take 7 per cent to carry them—then on the four years' importation of $1,124,000,000 from which that adverse balance comes you get $78,000,000 which has to be added to the price of those imports as the cost to the importer who takes them out in entry here. How are we to meet that? We are to meet it by the profits on our exports. In that period our exports were $901,000,000. What will a business man on the other side give me as the probable average profit on our exports?

I suppose it is almost impossible to get the figures, but here are some facts. In the first place, all exports are not profitable. Your lumberman sometimes makes a bad loss; your cheese buyer sometimes makes a bad loss; your apple buyer sometimes makes a bad loss. Every large dealer in this country has to make his losses as well as his profits; and I imagine that when profits and losses are tallied up together, if he makes 10 per cent net profit on all that he exports, he is doing a pretty good business. If Canada did the whole business of this country through one man I think he would be content to make 10 per cent profit upon it, and I doubt whether the export business of this country makes that. The profits pay for the adverse balance of trade? Take a profit of 10 per cent on $901,000,000 and what does it come to? $90,000,000. But your adverse balance of trade was $223,000,000. Your profits are all swallowed up, and you have still an adverse balance of trade of $130,000,000. Your profits evidently will not pay it. But here is another point in the profit business. A great many people in the old country have their agents in Canada who buy large quantities of Canadian goods. They sell them in Great Britain, and they make the profits, not the Canadian producer. How much of that is done I do not know, but a great deal of it is done, so business men have told me. There are a great many of these British agents in this country. Another source consists of carrying profits. How does Canada stand with reference to that? Great Britain carries from 70 to 80 per cent of the whole trade of the world. That is where she makes her invisible exports—where she gets in money as a return, and helps to tidy up the balance of trade against her. To what extent is Canada a carrying power? How many Canadian vessels cross the Atlantic, and how much of the capital in these vessels is Canadian capital? Study the facts from the best sources you have, and you will find that the bulk of the capital in these vessels is British or foreign capital, and the bulk of the profits earned by them go to the capitalists who furnish the money. So that where we do a carrying trade, our own men do not get the return to a very great extent.

These are some of the thoughts which have been running through my mind in reference to this matter. Let us come to what are called the invisible exports—instruments of credit, Canadian lendings, stock, bonds and debentures. Is that a large item in Canada? It has been very small. The amount of lending we do in foreign countries is very little. We are a borrowing country, not a lending country. The amount of money we invest in foreign stocks is very small. These investments do not pay sufficiently to induce us to put our money into them, if we had the money to put in; so that we are not investors abroad in stocks, debentures, instruments of creidt, &c., from which dividends and interest might flow invisibly towards this country, helping to set off our adverse balance of trade. Take the scenic and travelling attractions. Some hon. gentlemen may think that is worth laughing at; but it is a most important element in modern adjustments of balance of trade. I have not exact figures, but I have gone pretty thoroughly into them, so far as one can get them, and it simply astonishes one to see what an immense amount of money from America is spent in France in Germany and its woodland mountain regions, in Switzerland and in Italy. Millions on millions of dollars every year from the earnings of the people on this American continent are spent in paying for scenery and attractions in European countries. This is as valuable and real an export for Switzerland as though she had sent out so many dollars' worth of cheese and got in so many dollars in return. The travel from France, from Great Britain and from Germany in the little country of Switzerland and the summer country of Italy is a most important factor in rectifying the balances of trade and adding to the prosperity of those countries. What have we in Canada? Great scenery, but very moderately exported at the present time. I take it that Canadians spend more money in travel abroad than people from abroad spend in travelling in Canada up to this time. Some time we hope it will be different. Some time we hope that people from abroad may know what a magnificent country for scenery and sport and travel we have, and may spend their millions here. But to-day, I think I am right in saying, the balance is against us in that respect. London has up to the present time made a rectification of the balance of trade against her by her brokerage commission and transit business. London has been the mart of the world. At one time mercantile transactions absolutely centered in London, and they do to a large extent yet. Millions of pounds have been made in Great Britain in that branch of industry. To-day this is being distributed among other financial centres, and England is not making to-day out of her commission and transit business what she used to make. With Canada that business is almost a negligible quantity. In the last analysis we get borrowings from abroad. When driven from every other resource, hon. gentlemen will say, but we are bringing money from the old country. The Finance Minister has not been doing that lately. He has been taking it out of the earnings of the people of Canada to the extent this current year of $73,000,000 in taxes alone.

He has not been getting that money for capital expenditures in the old country. He told us yesterday he had spent $129,000,000 out of our taxation for capital expenditure in this country. He got that out of the yearly earnings of the people and did not bring it from abroad. He was afraid to go abroad during the troublesome times we have passed through; and only by working in a little from Paris and London at a very high rate of interest has he been able to keep himself afloat at all. But the Canadian Pacific Railway have been bringing in capital and the Grand Trunk Pacific and the other corporations. If they had not, the government, having collected all it could and spent all it could, would not have been a factor in keeping up the credit of this country. It was not due to any action of the government but to the importation of capital from abroad by the corporations that we managed to pass safely through the late crisis.

Let me say a word regarding borrowing. Two things follow on the heels of the borrower. In the first place, the moment the money comes in, the interest begins; and in the second place, the debt remains and ultimately has to be paid. So far as you invest your borrowings in unproductive works there is no return to enable you to meet the interest and still the interest has to be met. Of course you have the use of these unproductive works; you have the beauty of them. But what would you think of this proposition? Suppose we were to borrow about $20,000,000 from some great financial firm in London and spend that money beautifying our parks, building a Grand Trunk Pacific hotel for that company, constructing armouries and other public buildings and improving our wharfs and harbours, and then when your lender asks you for his interest, you simply say to him: Look on those beautiful buildings; gaze on them as you please; satiate yourself with the beauties of these parks, and pay yourself in that way.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is exporting scenery.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but it is paying mighty dear for it. Where will you find any one who will buy it from you at that rate? You may be soft enough to take that kind of a bargain but you will find no one else who will do it. Let us now consider the other side of the question. We must remember that Canada is a borrowing and not a lending country, and that on the capital she borrows, she has to keep continually repaying interest and instalments on the principal. Where does that borrowed capital go? Some of it into very useful and necessary work, which may not give a direct return, but which will ultimately prove profitable. But a good deal is put into works which will not give any returns for a long time to come. And while the interest runs on, the capital has to be paid some time or other. What information do we get from our government statistics in this matter? We have statistics in the Customs Department and in the Trade and Commerce Department and we have an independent statistical branch, and what do you find in every one of them? Chiefly duplication and multiplication. Take the large volume of Trade and Commerce and it gives you almost exactly what you find in the trade and navigation reports, only in a little different shape. Then you have your statistical yearbook which is simply a culling, and a very indifferent and unsatisfactory culling, of the figures from the different departmental reports. Would not my right hon. friend be doing something really valuable if he would organize a statistical branch whose duty it would be, in the first place, to take hold of that great question, which every statesman ought to be informed about, namely, the amounts and the currents of home trade. We spend hours talking about the infinitesimal portion of our trade which is shown in the exports and the imports whilst that trade is overtopped a hundred times and more by the immense and diversified home trade of our country. How much do we know about that? The United States has a most elaborate system of statistics. It knows its home trade and is able to put before its publicists statements which cannot be got elsewhere. Take the indebtedness of this country abroad, its investments abroad, and the different kinds of foreign investments in this country. I hope that some time some government will shake off its lethargy in this matter and give us an adequate statistical department. We need that in Canada more than anything else. I have to sweat almost drops of blood in trying to get scraps of information. I write to Montreal to the biggest business men and strongest brokers there and I say: Please give me the amount of capital which Great Britain has invested in industries in your city. And I have been constantly met with this reply: There is nothing we know that will give that information; here is a scrap to which you are welcome. But what is a scrap, compared with the immense amount of information we have not got?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. How long would you talk if you got it?

Mr. FOSTER. That interruption is cheap enough and one I never heard coming from a statesman. And I beg leave to say it has not been made by a statesman now. Take the Canadian Pacific Railway, which in the course of this year will have paid out more than $20,000,000 in dividends and interest. To whom is that paid? The Canadian Pacific Railway is our own pet organization. We look up to it as a wonder and we are proud of it as a national asset. How much of that $20,000,000 remains in Canada? How much of the stock of that company is owned in Canada and how much abroad? How many of its bonds are owned in Canada and how many abroad ? I do not know its business, but I venture to say that seventy-five per cent and more of its capital stock is owned outside of Canada, and seventy-five per cent to eighty per cent of all its profits are disbursed to people outside of Canada. There are our own borrowings for which the minister has to send out to London, in one shape or other, $8,000,000 a year to pay interest on the debt we owe there. Our exports must pay this, though that does not appear in the trade returns. Then, take the provinces—how much do they owe in Great Britain ? Take the municipal corporations, take the mining and industrial companies—how much of our exports has to go to meet the demands of the investors in these securities ? Though it does not appear in the trade returns, as I have said, yet it is sure that this must be paid, and the only way it can be paid is out of our exports. As I have said, I cannot give more solid ground for my argument because of the lack of statistical information. But let me point out how we are to deal with this rapid, this galloping increase in our unfavourable balance of trade. It seems to me there are only four ways by which it can be met. We must import less into this country. In order to import less while keeping up the business activity and development of the country, we must produce more of our own products. If, instead of importing $100,000,000 of products which can be made in Canada either out of Canadian material or out of material partly or wholly imported, we produce these goods in Canada that would mean $100,000,000 less of imports and a diminution of the adverse balance of trade. Then we must make greater exports. And larger exports come from larger populations. If there are 100,000 farmers busily engaged in producing things for the market, and you can add 100,000 more farmers, you will produce twice as much and perhaps more than twice as much. You will never find a country that is a great exporter of home products that is not a great consumer of home products. Then, we must have greater economy in expenditure. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) used to think about that; he thinks nothing about it now. No matter what the industrial weather portents may be ; whether there is only a cloud as large as a man's hand or whether the whole sky is obscured, he seems to think of nothing but adding a little more to the construction of this or that work, listening with ready ear to supporter or lieutenant, and to party supporter as well, and holding out promises which afterwards come to fulfilment. That is a course which the right hon. gentleman started out to avoid, but to which he seems to have abandoned himself. And the same is true of the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding). The Finance Minister of any country must be a self-denying man. It is impossible for him to do his duty to the country on any other basis. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) threw away the key of the position when he launched into extraordinary expenditures in his own county and his own province. He gave it to his supporters to say : You do not deny yourself anything, why should you deny us ? There is the history of it. Instead of having a check upon every spending department, the hon. gentleman seems to have had no influence at all—even if he ever tried to hold any of the departments in check. If the present vast expenditure exists in spite of a check put upon the outgo by the Minister of Finance, the demands made must have passed imagination. Once more, I say, Canada must improve her balance, for that balance must be met either in goods or gold, and this trend of the last five years ought to set us seriously seeking how this condition of things is to be remedied.

But hon. gentlemen opposite meet all this by saying : Oh, well, this is a government that does things. That is the word that is thrown from tongue to tongue—'our government is a government that does things'. It does things—with a vengeance. Look at your own county, Mr. Speaker (Mr. Marcil), if you do not believe it. Take your own pronunciamento to your constituents in the general election which took place not long ago ; look over the arithmetic then deployed in most ingenious and convincing manner before the people, and see whether or not what I have said is true. And what is true in your case, Mr. Speaker, is true of every one who has sufficient pull.

Let us take just a few examples of what this government has done and see whether these things reflect great credit upon it or not. The first that comes to my mind is the old attempted Yukon Railway deal. This was unconstitutional from the very start. Parliament was about to meet, and the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and his ministers were to face the representatives of the people. But, just before parliament met, the government made a contract with certain parties, made it behind closed doors, without tenders and without publicity, for the construction of a railway from the Stikine river to Teslin lake, a distance of 150 miles, for 25,000 acres of land per mile to be selected by the builders almost without restriction from the gold area of that country. This meant a total of 3,750,000 acres of land, to be given on one quarter the regular royalty. And not only was this bargain made just as parliament was about to meet, but the contractors got their orders to go ahead with the construction. Then the government came before parliament and because of the opposition in this and the other House they were saved from this mad scheme.

But what happened afterward? Why, $294,000, or thereabouts, of the people's money had to be paid out for this useless attempt. Was that good statesmanship on the part of the Finance Minister? Would it not have been better for him to wait not only until he knew that it was a good scheme, but until parliament had authorized it, before he allowed the work to go on in a fashion to incur this enormous sum of damages. For, though, shortly afterwards, the government got a majority in the Red Chamber, as they have it here, they have never made the semblance of a move to put through what they had talked about so much as a 'national necessity'.

There was the Crow's Nest Pass business. The Liberal-Conservatives were about to have the Crow's Nest Pass Railway built for a loan of $20,000 a mile to the Canadian Pacific Railway, that would amount to $6,600,000, secured by a lien on all their property and for a subsidy of $5,000 per mile, which would have been $1,650,000. The Canadian Pacific Railway was to pay 3½ per cent, we got money then for less, and would have made on that loan during its pendancy at least ½ per cent on the investment, and the security was as good as the Bank of England, to quote a familiar phrase. They didn't choose to do things that way. They went to work and gave a subsidy of $11,000 a mile equal to $3,630,000, which was an absolute loss to this country of $2,000,000. What did they get for themselves and the people? They got a promise that rates would be lowered at two distinct times, rates which would have been lowered if there had been no undertaking at all, and were actually lowered many months before the agreement called for it, and are to-day lower. But they made money for somebody else. Their well known friends and strong financial supporters got hold of a charter with 3,500,000 acres of coal lands attached to it, sold out the charter, as I am informed, for a tidy sum of money to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, gave the Canadian Pacific Railway 250,000 acres of those coal lands or thereabouts, and saved all the rest of the coal lands for themselves, which they valued on the first report, then just beginning to be developed, at a very large sum of money. I have not the prospectus here, but I think it was estimated by them as worth, according to their first statement, about $13,000,000 as an asset. Though Liberal members in this House rose and protested, Mr. McInnes especially, and I think the present Minister of the Interior, strong then in his sturdy independence; they were bowled down and thrown out by the 'Globe' and by the interests it represented, and it passed through this House and became an accomplished fact. What has British Columbia lost as a result of the haste and of the lack of prudence in making the subsidy? My right hon. friend was asked to disallow that Bill. Sometimes he is very keen on disallowance, he was not keen on disallowance then, his friends did not want disallowance, and that is where the matter stands to-day. But that aside, $2,000,000 were lost to this country, and all that the government has is 50,000 acres of coal lands which they have not developed, and which I suppose they never will develop. Well, that is one thing they have done which I think it would have been better if they had not done in that way.

There was another thing they did in the purchase of the Drummond County Railway —$64,000 a year for 99 years, present worth of that, as calculated by the Finance Minister, $2,094,192, a great profit to the sellers, as was shown by the amount they had paid for depreciated stock and the large amount for which they sold it. That was done by this government. They came to this House, and Her Majesty's loyal opposition opposed the scheme, fought it tooth and nail. It went to the Senate and it was opposed. Mr. Blair, the Minister of Railways, came back the next year with a modified bargain by which this country saved, between it and the former Grand Trunk arrangement, over $750,000. That sum would have been an absolute loss if these gentlemen had carried out their first scheme, which the strength of the opposition in this House and in the Senate prevented them from carrying out.

Next, there is an old property called the Intercolonial. These gentlemen have had charge of that since they came into power, and what have they done with it? First let me premise this fact. On every other point they are very strong. They say: See the good times we have had since we came into power. But when we talk about the Intercolonial, they do not press that argument. What is the fact? They have had charge of the Intercolonial during the ten most prosperous years in the history of Canada. They have had charge of it when your Canadian Pacific Railway has shown its immense progress, your Grand Trunk has made its great appreciation, when every great road in the United States has had its period of prosperity and of large and paying dividends. Yet what have you in this Dominion railway during that period of prosperity? These gentlemen have managed the road in such a way that it has come out with an absolute deficit, despite the fact that they charge to capital what we formerly charged to revenue, despite the fact that they have used eight times as much money in capital upon that road during the period they have had it over an equal period when we had charge of it. With all that favourable area, favouring traffic, prosperous times, increased passenger travel and everything of that kind, and all the multiplied improvements in trade they are for ever talking about, still they have come out with a deficit. Let me point you to the record:

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY DEFICITS.

| Years. | Minister. | Net Deficits. | Average Yearly Deficit. |
|---|---|---|---|
| | | $ | $ |
| 1893–1896 (4 years) | Haggart (Con.). .... | 25,354 | 6,438 |
| 1896–7... | Blair (Lib.)..... . | 59,940 | 59,940 |
| 1898–1903 (6 years) | " ..... | 350,000 | 58,040 |
| 1903–4... | Blair and Emmerson (Lib.) | 900,751 | 900,751 |
| 1904–5... | Emmerson (Lib.).... | 1,725,303 | 1,725,303 |
| 1905–6... | " ..... | *61,951 | *61,915 |
| 1906–7... | " ..... | *218,139 | *218,139 |

*Surplus.

You see there that in 1903-4 Mr. Blair and Mr. Emmerson had a deficit of $900,751, though it was one of the most promising and prosperous years in the history of Canada. It was a promising year because it was an election year, and that may account somewhat for the deficit. In 1904-5 it was in charge of Mr. Emmerson, the Napoleon of the Intercolonial and of railway management, slated, it is said, for the Railway Commission. He had it all to himself, and he rolled up a deficit of $1,725,303. Then followed two years of apparent small surpluses. Now, I challenge these hon. gentlemen to name the appropriate committee and to go into an examination of the way the accounts have been kept under the Liberal-Conservatives and under this government in reference to charges to revenue and capital accounts, and they will find that these surpluses that they claim are surpluses they have obtained by changing the methods of keeping accounts. In the last four years of the Conservative administration the net deficit was $25,354; in the last four years of Liberal administration the net deficit was $2,755,940. In the ten years preceding 1897 the Conservatives earned, in the gross, $29,500,000, they had a deficit of $3,000,000, and spent only $3,815,266 on capital account.

In the ten years succeeding 1897 the Liberals earned $52,000,000, they had a net deficit of $2,974,000 and they also spent on capital account $23,269,000. This is the government that does things. This is what it did with the Intercolonial Railway. Why? The right hon. Prime Minister told the reason why. He told the people of Toronto in 1904 what the reason was. In combatting the proposal to place the Intercolonial Railway under a commission his argument was this: Mr. Haggart had charge of it and Mr. Blair had charge of it and both of them were competent men; it is not the fault in either case of the man who had charge of it; the fault is to be found in the vicious system which had been carried on in reference to the Intercolonial Railway. Yet, he sat all these years and he sits there to-day and the same vicious system is kept in operation and with the same damaging effect.

Then, there was the Grand Trunk Pacific. I have spoken a little in reference to it and I do not care to take up very much time, but let me say this that I think this House deserved a little more of the explanations of the Finance Minister in reference to that great work with its increasing obligations than he gave us. What were we told? The Prime Minister, I do not think, will deny what I was going to say, but it is better to quote 'Hansard' and then you have it exactly. He spoke during the debate of 1903 on the Grand Trunk Pacific. I have read that speech through and I have notes of it here. I have collated every financial argument in it and the only thing I can get to tie to is this one statement:

> The sum total of the money paid by the government for the construction of the line of railway from Moncton to the Pacific ocean will be in the neighbourhood of $12,000,000 or $13,000,000. Now, Sir, what is $12,000,000 in the year 1903? It is about the surplus of our revenue over our expenditure. The surplus of this year will pay for the construction of this road.

That was an absolutely explicit and unqualified statement. Any one else may go to work and give an explanation out of his imagination, but the man in the country who had that quoted to him took no other idea than that they were making such a favourable bargain with this company that we would get out of it with an expenditure of simply $13,000,000 for construction account—one year's surplus. That was the argument used and that was the argument which told. He made another calculation. He declared, against the argument that they were going to compete with the Intercolonial Railway, that this was to shorten the route by from 120 to 140 miles. Here are his words:

> We have to follow the line of the state of Maine, and following that line, we believe we can abridge the distance between Moncton and Lévis by from 120 miles to 140 miles.

What was the next calculation?—$13,000 a mile for the prairie section. Mr. Schreiber came back from the west a few months ago and the first statement he made was that this road was going to cost from $24,000 to $26,000 a mile. What was the cost as stated between Moncton and Winnipeg?—somewhere about $28,000 a mile. The opposition declared at that time that it would be $40,000 but $28,000 was their contention. What has happened? This has happened in reference to both of those sections: On the eastern section west of Winnipeg, 245 miles have been let and it figures out at a cost of $54,000 per mile, and west from Quebec, 150 miles at $35,310 per mile. Between Winnipeg and Moncton 862 are under contract according to the last answer given in the other House to Senator Ferguson. It figures out at $45,000 per mile and that does not take in the terminals, the rolling stock, the stations, the sidings, the right of way or the general expenses. At that rate the eastern line will cost altogether $84,000,000 for an incompleted road with very much still to be done to it for the carrying on of the business of the road. Add to that $84,000,000 the interest for five or six years during which it will be under construction. Interest at what percentage ?—what you are paying for money now; that is 3½, 4 and 4½ per cent and you may have to pay that right along for some time. You will have to pay interest for eight or nine years, and that means at least $12,000,000. Then it is to be handed over to the Grand Trunk Pacific and the country has to bear the interest burden for an additional term of years and then, if everything works out as you expect, you will get three per cent upon your investment. The total cost will not fall short of $120,000,000. It has been gone into, the people have approved of it, the country must now stand under it and see it through as the country proposes to do. The government did it but there was a very different thing and a better thing that they might have done. The Prime Minister had the offer of the Grand Trunk Pacific in his pocket and he did not bring it down to parliament for nearly a year and a half. That offer was to absolutely build from the great lakes west at a moderate subsidy of about $15,000,000 and enter into an argreement with the government to hand over all their eastern freight to the Intercolonial Railway in the city of Montreal. But, the government did it.

Mr. TAYLOR. How many miles did they save between Moncton and Quebec ?

Mr. FOSTER. If there is any saving between Moncton and Quebec it may be five or six miles. I think that is the maximum of the saving.

Now, Sir, I have not time to mention certain other things and I come to one simple point.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. FOSTER. I had intended to mention another thing that the government has done. It has created an absolute paradise for middlemen. You cannot turn a corner without running into one. You cannot analyse a public transaction without finding one. You cannot take up any large business that the government is carrying on but you have got the middleman either as an individual or company or corporation. Let me give you some examples. The minister is the trustee of the funds of this country. We remember that when the Kentville property had to be bought a boon companion and supporter of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) got a happy inspiration as to the exact area and place in which it was. Another companion of the minister, having also got an inspiration, got busy, bought some land, sold it at an advance of $1,500 to the first one whom I have mentioned and the first one unloaded it on the minister. The price he asked was how much ? He paid $7,000 for it and the modest price he asked was $23,684. He did not expend a cent on it ; I doubt if he put up a dollar on it ; I think if it were looked into it would be found that notes carried the thing in the meantime. He had the audacity, presuming on the good nature of the Minister of Militia and Defence, to ask $23,684. The department offered him—knowing that he had bought it at $6—$20 an acre. That ought to have been pretty good. It never should have been paid. The minister should have had that land for the cost price paid for it to the original sellers and a fair commission for the purchase. That is the proper method to pursue. But this gentleman asked him $23,684 and it was sent to a referee kind hearted to the party, and before that referee, the party and the sellers arranged their own matters, and that referee allowed them, how much do you think ? He allowed them $38,408.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It was not referred to a referee ; it was referred to the judge of the Exchequer Court.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, suppose I say that the next step was that the judge referred it to a referee. Who recommended the referee to him ; who recommended the lawyer that did not prosecute the case for the government, and that lawyer a mere boy, compared with the able men employed by Dodge ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is a base insinuation against a judge of high standing who has now passed away and is not here to defend himself.

Mr. FOSTER. Who ever recommended the referee—I tell you it was either the minister or the government that put McIlreith to condition their case.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It was not.

Mr. FOSTER. McIlreith was your own agent there.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. McIlreith was not the man employed by the judge.

Mr. FOSTER. McIlreith was not the man employed by the judge—who said he was ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. You are talking about the referee.

Mr. FOSTER. I am talking about the referee and I am talking about the lawyer who did not carry out the case properly before the referee.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not at all. The hon. gentleman said the referee had been appointed and recommended by the government or by me. I say that the referee was appointed by the judge, and the hon. gentleman has no right to make insinuations of that kind against the character of one of the best judges we ever had in this country and who has now passed away.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not the slightest hesitation in saying two things: first, that I spoke about the referee; then, I spoke about the lawyer.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, you got into the wrong box when you spoke about the referee.

Mr. FOSTER. I said with reference to the referee that he was a man who had a soft side towards the party. Will the minister deny it?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Had the judge a soft side?

Mr. FOSTER. No, I do not think so.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. FOSTER. But a judge and every one else likes to know pretty well what is the mind of the government and the party——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not a bit of hesitation in saying, that. Well, Sir, the referee with this stripling lawyer who did not defend the government case awarded $38,000. But the opposition got busy and it was brought before this House and some of the colleagues of the Minister of Militia got busy and it was sent then to the courts to fight it out, and in the end—

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It was appealed before the hon. gentleman ever mentioned it in this House.

Mr. FOSTER. What is that?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The case was appealed from the first judgment before the hon. gentleman ever mentioned it in the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I doubt that very much.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I know.

Mr. FOSTER. I doubt that very much, but I will look into that. I think my memory is nearly as good as that of my hon. friend, but if I am wrong I will fix that part of it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. All right.

Mr. FOSTER. And in the end he got $12,462 or $20 an acre for land that he only paid $6.60 an acre for or thereabouts.

Well, Sir, there is Mr. Pearson and the Minister of Finance knows Mr. Pearson. Where was the Minister of Finance, where was he, the guardian of the treasury, when the Intercolonial wanted some land. When the Intercolonial wanted some land from Mr. Pearson of Halifax; when two warnings had been given to the Minister of Finance in the Lodge cases in Moncton previously; when the inspiration got down to Mr. Pearson in some wonderful way as to the very tract and quantity of land that was required by the Intercolonial, and under cover of a Conservative he carried through a deal and he bought for $18,588 what he turned over within three months to the government for $45,400; and he himself pocketed a cheque for $14,600 odd dollars. What explanation is there from the Finance Minister after the warnings he got. What explanation is there in the first place that the Minister of Railways should do a thing of that kind, and in the second place that the Minister of Finance could not have had some check with reference to it. In the third place, after it was brought up, from that day to this we have not heard the Minister of Finance apologize for that transaction yet. And yet there was $28,392 of the people's money that went to the middlemen of whom Mr. Pearson, a very strong supporter of the government, was one. Then there was the Lodge transaction in Moncton. The Intercolonial wanted some land. It got to a companion and friend of the Minister of Railways that such was the case, and he immediately optioned it for $5,075 and within three months he turned it over to the government for $13,000, taking a profit of $8,805 or 170 per cent. Where was the Minister of Finance when that transaction went through? Warned by that, why did he let a second transaction go through in which this same Mr. Lodge got for $8,300 just what the minister wanted and turned it over to the minister for $10,490, making $1,940 on the transaction or 27 per cent; making on these two little transactions $10,445 or 70 per cent of a profit. Am I not right in saying that there has been a paradise formed for the middleman.

Let us take Merwin—picked up on the street, the minister met him on the street, he had no business, he had no financial affiliations of any kind, he had no manufacturing processes at all, and yet before a year was out $404,000 had been paid to Merwin without a tender or a contract or anything of the kind.

Mr. BERGERON. And an American citizen.

Mr. FOSTER. After a great deal of trouble and a great deal of fighting in the Public Accounts Committee we found fifteen articles which he sold to the government for $18,000 and which he simply ordered for $11,838 and told the men from whom he ordered them simply to send them to the government, and on that purchase of $11,000 he made $6,173 out of the government, or 52 per cent. And yet $404,000 was paid to that man during that fiscal year, or very nearly that fiscal year, without tender Am I right in saying they formed a paradise for middlemen? And Merwin is there yet, and he is supplying the government yet. These articles were certified to the government as at fair and reasonable values and the men who certified them are still in the employ of the government. Not one step has been taken by the Minister of Justice or by any one else to make these men disgorge their ill-gotten gains which were taken out from the public treasury through the laxness or connivance of men who ought to have known enough to have prevented transactions of that kind. And so I might go on step after step. Take the Falconer case, developed partially in the Marine Department and yet to be developed in the Railway Department—$95,000 given to Falconer for expert book-keeping work.

Who is the middleman who does the work? To-day we are trying in the Public-lic Accounts Committee to get to the bottom of it, and we have got this far, that whereas accountants' wages in the city of Montreal, for men infinitely superior in every way to Mr. Falconer, are at the schedule rate of from $20 to $25 a day, he charged $75, $30, $40, $50 or $15 per day, and according to his evidence paid to those he employed a mere moiety of the amount he charged to the department. And so I am right in saying that this has been a paradise for the middleman.

But I leave this point and come to another. There are two duties of a Finance Minister. One is to carefully collect the people's taxes and earnings, and to see that they are honestly and economically expended. The Chancellor of the Exchequer is not simply to look after his own department. He ought also to hold some check over the other departments; it is his duty to do it, and he can do it if he wishes. Maybe the minister does it more than we know, but if so, the effect is not very apparent as the years go by. But the Minister of Finance has another duty, he is the guardian of the public franchises and properties, and it is his duty to see that these are administered for the benefit of the country just as much as the public finances. Now, let us see what has been done with reference to the public franchises and properties. First; there is the Saskatchewan Land Valley sale of 250,000 acres of land stretching along a running line of railway for 115 miles, after a government report that it was good land, when other land not as good or certainly no better was selling for $5 per acre—sold to this favoured company for $1 per acre, one-half payable in scrip. To make a long story short, these gentlemen sold those lands for about $2,000,000, paid the government $250,000 in scrip and cash, and pocketed $1,750,000 gain on the transaction. Contrast that with Mr. Whitney's conservation of the public franchises in Cobalt. Under Cobalt Lake lay what was supposed to be good mineral ground. Previously there had been a mere parcelling out of mineral lands for very small fees. Mr. Whitney said: This belongs to the people; if there be value there, I will put it up to public tender, he did so, and in three months he received and put into the public treasury $1,087,000 for the mineral rights under Cobalt lake. Whether it be with timber leases, grazing leases or coal lands you will find the same thing has been going on. More than that, wherever you scratch a company you will find a member of parliament behind it. You have the Imperial Pulp Company dealing with the government with fictitious names, and when the bubble is burst, who is inside the globule? Theodore Burrows, M.P., who sits behind hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Let me ask my hon. friend one question. Does he not know that that company was formed before Mr. Burrows became a member of parliament?

Mr. FOSTER. There are lots of things we do not know. We do not know much more about that than we do about the North Atlantic Trading Company, to which the Minister of Finance paid out about $400,000 of the country's money. To this day we do not know, if he does, who that company is, but we all know the little service we got from it.

But it seems that this government is not content with giving away agricultural lands, timber leases, grazing leases, coal lands and other mineral lands, but it has now put a blanket, exclusive right on the largest and best fishing areas in the great Northwest. I hold in my hand a statement with reference to these. Coffee & Merritt have an area comprising Cumberland lake, 166 square miles; Cedar lake, 285 square miles; Namew lake, 66 square miles; Moore lake, 552 square miles; Antikang lake, 90 miles, and Cormorant lake, 141 square miles. They get the exclusive fishing rights for all this vast area for the magnificent sum of $300 a year. F. W. Markey has Nelson river and tributaries from West river to its mouth on Hudson bay, Nelson river, 100 miles by 3 miles; Hays and Pigeon rivers in Keewatin, two large tidal rivers entering Hudson bay, and Great Slave lake, with an area of 10,719 square miles; all for 21 years, absolutely exclusive, and for the magnificent sum of $10 a year. J. K. McKenzie gets Lake Athabasca with an area of 2,842 square miles, and Lesser Slake lake, with an area of 480 square miles, gets the exclusive right of fishing in these lakes for five years for the magnificent sum of $10 per year. With reference to that I have a copy of a paper from Edmonton which goes over these leases and says this:

We are informed that the people who control the 3,322 square miles of fishing rights on the Athabasca and Lesser Slave lakes, and for which they paid the pittance of the sum of $10, disposed of their rights for about a quarter of a million dollars.

Mr. Archibald McNee, a newspaper man has James bay from North Bluff to Moor's island, 100 miles of shore line three miles out, including all tidal rivers entering James bay, and gets the exclusive fishing right for sixteen years for the magnificent sum of $10 a year. The Capital City Canning Company gets net fishing for salmon in tidal waters of Cowichan river and bay, inside a line from Serpentine point to Cowichan head, and gets exclusive fishing rights for nine years for the magnificent sum of $50 a year. These favoured four or five have thus tied up to them for the magnificent sum of $380 a year nine fishing lakes, with an area of 15,000 square miles, hundreds of miles of seacoast extending out three miles from the shore, thousands of miles of rivers, and some 2,000 miles of lake coast—in fact, have bagged the main fishing resources of the great northern country for their exclusive use or sale.

In closing up these remarks, I think I may be allowed to give the words of an eminent statesman, who has had a long and varied career in this country, Sir Richard Cartwright, taking the liberty to substitute a few words here and add a few words there, and address them to the Finance Minister as follows :—

So long as the till is full, that is all the hon. gentleman (the Finance Minister) feels bound to regard. It is no concern of his, it is no concern of his colleagues, it is no concern of his colleagues' paymasters and bottle holders, how the mass of the people fare. This policy of excessive taxation and expenditure, ——of graft and timber limits——

I grant you suits certain interested parties and suits them well. These persons control the government of Canada, these sustain the government of Canada; the thing is a fair equation, as the hon. gentleman would say; the government gives these interested parties the power to plunder the people, and in return they are always ready—and why should they not be?—to tithe the plunder for the purpose of keeping the hon. gentleman and his friends in power. And so, Sir, with cash in hand, plus graft and gerrymander Acts, plus Franchise Acts.

——plus public lands——

railway subsidies, harbour works and all that depends thereon, everything goes merrily as a marriage bell, in the hon. gentleman's opinion. And to quote Mr. Lowell:

"Each sturdy protectionist (New Liberal) gets what he axes,
And the people, their annual soft sawder and taxes.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

Mr. FOSTER.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). Mr. Speaker, before considering the statements made and arguments used by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) who, for the last two days—with a day intervening—has been addressing the House, I desire to express some thoughts that have passed through my mind with reference to the length of the hon. gentleman's speech, and which I think it would not be improper at this time to mention. Suppose that we had a session of this House lasting, in leap year, for 366 days, and if the House sat on every one of those days except the 52 Sundays, and worked from three until six and from eight until twelve every day, that would be seven hours' work a day. One hour of that time, on the average, would necessarily, be taken up with routine business, such as reading and receiving petitions, asking and answering questions, reading reports of committees, and so on. In a session of that kind, there would be an average of nine hours of the time of the House for each member. Of course, all members of the House are on an equal footing, each with his perfect right to his full share of the time. We know that it would be inconvenient to have a session lasting the whole year, or to have a session when the House would work every day. If you were to have a six month's session—and that seems to be pretty long—during which, the House sat every day except Sunday, there would be, on the average, something less than 4½ hours of the time for each member. But if you had a six months' session, with the House sitting, as we do now, five days in the week and working for the hours I have mentioned, this, with committee work in the morning, I think would be regarded by the country as giving full value. In such a session, the time for the members on the average would be three hours and forty minutes. I do not think I am at all uncharitable then, when I say that the hon member (Mr. Foster) who last spoke would have recognized only what is due to the House had he endeavoured to curtail his remarks more than he did. The hon. gentleman spoke five hours and twenty minutes on this subject, thus using up in this one speech almost the whole time of two members for the session. I am not going to deny that it is possible there are gentlemen on the other side who might be willing to give their time, or a portion of their time, to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) considering the position he occupies in this House. That is a courtesy that is often extended by one member to another where there is a limit set to the length of speeches. It is quite possible that some hon. members opposite might be willing to yield a share of their time. But we must remember that it is not only during the last two days of this discussion that the hon. gentleman has been on his feet. I have not gone into it carefully, but I should think that at least the time of six members of the opposition has been occupied by that hon. gentleman. I do not know who the six may be. I trust that the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) is not one of them. For we on this side think that the leader of the opposition has ideas as good as those of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster); and we think it is a little more pleasant to listen to him than it is to listen to the hon. member for North Toronto. The hon. leader of the opposition has not the inveterate habit of our friend from North Toronto of speaking for the sake of speaking, repeating and repeating, and repeating until the repetition becomes tiresome to members on this side of the House—I think I detected signs of weariness on the countenances of some hon. gentlemen opposite. And I do trust that my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) may not have given his time to the hon. member for North Toronto. For it is very evident concerning my hon. friend from East Grey that thoughts within him burn at times and seek expression in words—and he is generally kind in gratifying those thoughts with words for their expression. We do not want the hon. gentleman's time curtailed. And I hope that my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) has not given up any of his time. We should like that hon. gentleman to throw the limelight on the canvas, and give us a picture of the timber limits of the northwest. And our friends from Prince Edward Island too —I do not know that they have not a perfect right to tunnel in and take a part in debate. What conception, then, has this hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) of his importance and standing in this House when he coolly uses that time, if it is not courteously given him—of course, if the time has been given him, by members on that side, I humbly bow to their will. But if they have given the time, I hope they will not try to recoup themselves by taking from the time of hon. members on this side. I have noticed in the debates in this House, especially when we are in Committee of Supply, that hon. gentlemen opposite seemed to resent it if any member on this side ventured to make a remark or even ask a question. I beg to remind such hon. members—if such there be, and I think there are—that every member on this side has just the same right, the same duty is incumbent upon him, to have a thorough understanding of the estimates and of the votes he is called upon to give as hon. gentlemen opposite; and, when he seeks information, he ought to have it. The reason why they do not take up more time in this part of their parliamentary work is because, having asked a question, and received a full answer, they are satisfied, and do not repeat, and repeat, and repeat the same question only to receive the same answer. Now, this question of the occupation of the House, I think, is worthy of consideration.

But let me go on now to glance at some of the statements made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). He led off by saying that he would take as his text a quotation from a speech made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) which he read. It seemed to me a text that took him an awfully long time to explain, for he was working at it for over an hour, and, when he got through, the text stood in all its strength just the same as before. The Minister of Agriculture gave that hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) several nuts to crack, and the hon. gentleman does not seem to have made much of a success of the cracking. I suppose he has been pondering over that speech ever since he was down at Stanstead. No doubt he wrestled with it there and he wrestled with it here for an hour or more, and with what result?

Why, simply that when this government came into power it applied business methods to the administration of its affairs, and times mended and have gone on mending ever since. That is a patent truth to every man, and to explain that away cannot be done in an hour, if there is any excuse for the five hours' speech of the hon. gentleman trying to do the impossible task that he set himself to do. Now, I do not often read extracts or make campaign speeches in the House, but I will give you one gem of the hon. member for North Toronto—who, by the by, would, I think, have been as courteous to me as I was to him, if he had not wearied himself quite so much, and would have been present to hear me after addressing so many of his remarks to myself. But when I am quoting what he has said at a meeting, I would rather he were here so that if there is any mistake about it he could put me right. This was at a meeting at Mimico. I was not at the meeting, but I arrived there within a night or two, and I took up the 'Mail and Empire,' which, of course, might not be an authority on all matters, but would be accepted as an authority by the gentlemen who spoke in the Conservative interest on that occasion. Here was the gem of the speech that struck me:

> The people of the country had seen the exposures made against the Laurier government, the reckless and extravagant expenditure with which they had afflicted the country, and as was shown by the recent by-elections, the people were tired of such administration, and were everywhere sending Conservatives to parliament to support Mr. Borden and his friends, and to eradicate the evils that had been brought on by the Laurier administration.

Well, there have been thirty-nine of those by-elections, and thirty Liberals were returned and nine Conservatives. Now, here is the dilemma we are in. If the hon. member for North Toronto spoke the truth—and we are not at liberty to impugn his statement—we have this other difficulty staring us in the face, that in this House are thirty Liberal members that were sent here as Conservatives to turn out Laurier and put in Borden, and they don't seem to know it. Now, which horn of the dilemma shall we take? Are those men in a right position now in supporting the government? If they are, how will they characterize the statement of the hon. member for North Toronto? Of course, I am not at liberty to doubt him, because if he said it was so, Mr. Speaker, we have to accept his word.

Now, coming down to the argument he made, attempting to explain away that patent truth that he read as his text from the speech of the Minister of Agriculture. He said that we kept in the background the fact that we came in when times were good, and that there had been some years of depression before they went out. Well, if that be true, our Conservative friends came in in a favourable time, for from 1874 to 1878, when the Liberal government were in power, there was a period of depression throughout the whole world which Canada did not escape far more intense than any depression there was during the latter years of the Conservative administration. They came in then when times were mending, when times became good. He says we are not willing to admit the progress that was made under them. I am more than willing to admit all the progress they can justly claim, and I do admit there was some progress, and the more progress than he proves was made under Conservative administration the better it will please me, because I intend to institute a comparison between the record of this government with the high standard obtained by these hon. gentlemen opposite. Progress was made, as shown by the trade of the country, progress was made during their last eleven years, when the foreign trade of this country increased by $50,000,000. Compare then the eleven years of the Laurier administration. Have we not made progress in foreign trade, when during the same length of time in which trade increased $50,000,000 under Conservative rule, it increased $350,000,000 under Liberal rule? These are facts that cannot be denied, and a man may speak five hours and twenty minutes if he likes trying to disprove them, and they still remain facts. During the eighteen years they were in power their progress was $80,000,000 against the $350,000,000 during the eleven years of Liberal rule. How can you account for it? Have we been favoured more than they were with natural resources waiting for development? No, Sir; the wealth was in the ocean, the lakes and the rivers when the Tories were in power; the forest wealth existed then as it does now; the farm lands, rich treasure of a favoured people, were here in all their length and breadth and fertility under Tory as well as under Liberal rule; the mountains and the hills were filled with mineral wealth when the Tories were in power as they are now. Where are the natural advantages we have which they did not have? Things are equal as far as that goes. The hon. gentleman, in one sentence in his speech, I think, gave the only solution that can be given to such a record as this when he said: Providence helps those that help themselves. Under precisely the same advantages enjoyed by Tory and Liberal, if you find seven times the progress under one administration that you do under the other, what is the irresistible conclusion? That the Liberal party have known better how to avail themselves of the bounties of a kind Providence than the Conservatives did.

To glance now at the expenditure, to which he devoted so much time, I will dispose of about thirty or forty minutes of his specious remarks in which he engaged in reading what was said by prominent Liberals about expenditures away back in the years that have gone—happily gone in so far as mis-government is concerned. I dismiss those things and for these reasons; not that I object to have them repeated, not that I object to have them read that the former leader of the opposition, Sir Richard Cartwright, and others had said that they were spending money too fast, that $38,000,000 was too much for them to spend. I do not object to that because that gives you a picture of the country under Tory rule at that time. We said it was too much to expend simply because they were not able to raise revenue enough to pay the ordinary expenses of government and any capital expenditure they made they had to borrow in foreign countries and add to the debt. I do not object to them reading it. It gives to the younger generation an idea of what it was possible to come to under Tory rule. The statement then made was that if the revenue is not to exceed $38,000,000 you must keep beneath that for the country is on the highway to ruin when it cannot pay its ordinary running expenses, using all the taxes that the people pay, and when, for any improvements that have to be made, the money has to be brought from abroad. These were the circumstances under which these statements were made and they were well made. But, I dismiss them, because, where is there a man possessed of an ounce of brains or intelligence who, when that question is brought before him, and weighed and reasoned, will not say: Are the circumstances the same now, are this government able to raise revenue enough for the ordinary running expenses of the government? Yes, raise it and have $16,000,000 or $19,000,000 a year of a surplus. Well, then, any man of ordinary intelligence will say: What is the use of bringing up questions of that kind? The expenditures by this government have been large.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. PATERSON. 'Hear, hear,' an hon. gentleman says, and if he thinks he taunts me by an expression of that kind I can only tell him I glory in it.

Mr. BENNETT. And the steals too?

Mr. PATERSON. What is that?

Mr. BENNETT. The steals of public money as well.

Mr. PATERSON. I glory in the expenditure——

Mr. BENNETT. And the steals.

Mr. PATERSON—having been large. I have not found any steals yet. I do not know what the hon. gentleman means. Does he mean that they have been giving things away on easy terms to their friends?

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. gentleman asks me I will answer his question now.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. He wants to know about the steals?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. I will commend him to the case the other day of the man who was assigned to the duty of locating immigrants in one of the ridings of Kent and who admitted that he had defrauded the government out of $500.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. BENNETT. I will direct the hon. gentleman to another case.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. BENNETT. If hon. gentlemen do not want to hear about it——

Mr. PATERSON. I had no objection at all to the hon. gentleman going on. In administering nearly $100,000,000 with a great many officials I am not going to say that there have not been any errors or mistakes made. But, I am going to say that there have been very few that have been even suspected, much less proved in reference to this administration. You do right to call attention to them and it will be our duty to attend to them. I suppose there were things of that kind even with an expenditure of only $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 by our friends opposite. While I glory in the expenditure being large I would not glory in it if we had raised the rate of taxation upon the people in order to get that money to expend. I would not have gloried in that expenditure if we had had to go abroad and borrow that money and add to our debt, but when, during the past ten years, we have carried on improvements and developments in all directions and in every province, when we have expended millions and tens of millions on capital account, when we have enlarged our canals, when we have developed our railway system through the aid of bonuses, when we have deepened our harbours, improved our St. Lawrence channel and cheapened transport in every direction and when we have done all this with a lowered rate of taxation and without borrowing a dollar, I glory in the expenditure. My hon. friend says that the expenditures have been very large. He was seized with a fit of depression as he thought upon them. Maturing loans! Loans that have had to be renewed! Loans, I fancy that were contracted when our friends opposite were in power; some of them at least.

Mr. FIELDING. All of them.

Mr. PATERSON. A fit of depression seemed to have seized him. He seemed to have been afraid; did not know what was to become of the country at all. He spoke of the enormous expenditure, the additions to the debt and all that. What will be the addition to the debt of this country when hon. gentleman opposite carry out the Halifax platform and buy up all the railways? That is something to talk about. What will be the annual expenditure when they are charged with the working of all the railways, telegraphs and telephones? How much will that be a year? Would it come up to about a thousand millions? What are you going to do about it? Are you going to back out of it? We have not heard much about the Halifax platform lately. We have seen them rather trying to get back and say: We will not go on with it. Well, yes; that is all very well. You, Mr. Speaker, I dare say have noticed on the streets of a city a mother going along with her little boy. She wants to go in a certain direction, he does not want to go and he shouts lustily that he won't go, but he is going all the time. His mother has got him by the hand, and I very much fear that William of the 'World' has got these gentlemen by the hand. Bleeding the people white with your taxation, he says. Taking all this money out of them! Marvellous people, the Canadian people! Bled in the direction of taxation, as the hon. gentleman has pictured, and yet they are adding by tens of millions to the deposits in the savings banks and in every home there is increasing comfort. They are a remarkable, strange, fortunate people; bled, borne down under this burden of taxation and I do not know what; yet, all happy, all doing well and adding, adding by the millions and the millions and the tens of millions to the savings in the banks of this country. Let us look at the rate of taxation about which he talked.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Where is it ?

Mr. PATERSON. I wish the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) were here because I would like to say this to his face—it is possible that he may in the future be appointed Minister of Finance in a Conservative government; when it comes in. But if he wants to have his chance made good for that, I would ask him to modify his views and his expressions. When a man who may be called upon to administer the finances of this country solemnly tells the people that because there is an increase of revenue it is proof positive there has been an increase in the rate of taxation, that man is an unsafe man to trust with anybody's business. Surely he ought to know better than that when he undertakes to reply to the Minister of Finance and takes five hours and a half to answer a speech of an hour and a half. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has the evidence before his eyes in the Post Office Department. No better illustration than that could be had of the fallacy of the hon. gentleman's statement. In 1896, under the Conservatives, the tax that was imposed on the people for carrying their letters gave a revenue of $3,000,000 but to-day the post office revenue is $6,000,000 or double what it was in 1896. And according to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) this increase of revenue is proof positive that the rate of taxation for carrying a letter has been increased. But the fact is that the postal rate has been reduced from 3 cents to 2 cents in one case and from 5 cents to 2 cents in another case and yet we have doubled the amount of revenue. And so it is with the customs. We have lowered the rate of customs duty but more goods come in, the people are better off and can buy more goods, and so the customs revenue has increased while the rate of taxation has diminished, and the revenue has increased in a measure because of the very fact that the rate of taxation has been reduced. Any man should be able to comprehend that, and the man who does not comprehend it has fiscal follies in his head so great that no nation should entrust him with the administration of its finances. And yet, these gentlemen opposite get up on the platforms and they say to the people: look at this government; when we were in power we only took $20,000,000 in customs taxes but these men are taking $60,000,000 that they have wrung out of the pockets of the people, and they twist their arms and distort their gestures when they use the word 'wrung.' Did we wring the extra $3,000,000 out of the pockets of the people in the increased revenue of the post office? No. The postage rate has been reduced. Did this government make any man, woman or child write two letters when they only wrote one letter before ? No. Does this government make any man, woman or child go into a store and buy $2 worth of goods when they only bought $1 worth before? There is only one thing the government does in standing between the people and the purchases they make, and that is when they say how many cents on the dollar shall be paid by the importing merchant into the treasury before he can get his goods to sell. For that the government are absolutely responsible and for that they must be judged, and if this government imposed a higher rate than was imposed before, then we have to answer for it. But what are the facts ? The average tax that was paid under these gentlemen opposite in 1896 was $18.28 on every $100 worth of dutiable and free imports for consumption that came into this country, but in 1906, ten years later, it was only $15.73 or a reduction of $2.55 which is equal to a reduction of 14 per cent in the rate of taxation. An yet, money flows into the treasury of the country. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) spoke about the debt, and in doing so he laid down another maxim that I think would not be approved by the people of Canada and that was that all our capital expenditure we should borrow abroad, add it to the debt and pay the interest upon it. We do not think so. We have had surpluses under my hon. friend the Minister of Finance in varying amounts running up to many millions of dollars. These surpluses could have been applied to the reduction of the public debt if it were thought wise. But it was deemed more prudent to take this money, raised under a lower rate of taxation, and to use it in developing the resources of the country and thus make it a means of reproducing wealth itself. Now, in this connection I might mention one of the things that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) charged as a scandal against this government, and that is the Crow's Nest Pass Railway and the bonus we gave to have that railway constructed. That is rather amusing in the light of the fact that those of us who were in the House at the time know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) himself voted for that scandal.

An hon. MEMBER. Did he ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, but that does not prevent him shouting 'scandal,' and it has just about as good a foundation as all their other scandals so far as we can see. Now, what did we do in connection with the Crow's Nest Pass Railway ? We took $3,300,000 and we gave it to the Canadian Pacific Railway and said : Open up that boundary country, there is mineral wealth there, develop it. The Canadian Pacific Railway took the money, and they opened up that country. But what more ? We said to the Canadian Pacific Railway : in giving you this bounty which is larger than we give to many, you have to agree to reduce your freight rates, not on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway alone but over your entire system, to the extent of 3 cents on every 100 pounds of wheat you carry out of that country, and more than that, you have got to give us 50,000 acres of coal land that you got which we will keep to be the property of the people of this country and if you raise the price of coal above $2 per ton we will open up these mines and work them ourselves for the benefit of the people. And that is what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) calls a scandal. I call it good business and a sample of the business methods of this government. Why, that 3 cents reduction on the wheat freight rate and the reduction on the price of coal, has in five years placed back in the pockets of the people of this country more than the total amount that was given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that is a benefit that is to go on for all time to come.

What more? A country opened up; towns and cities built up; representatives in this House, grand men, like the men who worked the mines there. These are consuming centres for the manufactures of the east and are producing wealth in the country. The hon. gentleman ventured to call that a scandal. I wish we had more of them. He spoke about the Yukon—a desparate thing, he said. If there is anything hon. gentlemen opposite ought to be ashamed of it is their conduct with reference to that Yukon railway. What did we do? We made a bargain with a responsible firm that they would build 150 miles of railway in order that we might reach that distant part of our country over Canadian territory—for what? How many millions of dollars? Not one cent of the public money, but for alternate grants of land—gold-bearing, possibly. If it had been, all the better for the government; the richer the gold the better—why? Because we would get a royalty on it when it was taken out. Hon. gentlemen fought that measure in this House. They had influence enough in another House to defeat it. From that day to this we have had to reach that portion of our territory by passing through the territory of another nation—friendly, no doubt, but with a customs barrier, and giving advantages to Seattle, Tacoma and San Francisco in the trade of that country which might have been secured for our own cities. That is the history of the Yukon, and these hon. gentlemen say it is a scandal. The hon. member for North Toronto said tonight that though the upper chamber threw out that measure, there was now a majority in the upper House favourable to the government, and we would never venture such a proposition again. No, we never have done so. Where can a syndicate be found in Canada to-day to undertake what that syndicate agreed to do, even if we offered them everything we agreed to give the other syndicate, and a million dollars besides? I do not believe a syndicate could be got in Canada that would do it. The hon. gentleman the other night, when speaking about sending the 'Arctic to the northern waters to raise our flag and assert our sovereignty, said he did not believe in that kind of thing—he would trust to diplomacy. I believe in trusting to occupancy. The Americans took advantage of occupancy at Skagway. What might have been the result of the Alaska boundary arbitration if we had had an independent highway into the Yukon territory I will not venture to say; but our chance is gone, and the loss has been ours. The land is there yet, every foot of it, which we agreed to give; is there a man opposite who will give $100 for the whole of it? Why don't they form themselves into a syndicate and try to get it under the same terms and conditions? The hon. member for North Toronto was kind enough to give his advice to the hon. the Finance Minister, who was averse to increasing the public debt beyond what was necessary for the purpose of a great undertaking like the Grand Trunk Pacific, which of course we undertook with our eyes open. He knew that money would have to be borrowed for that; but all other great capital improvements he has faith in being able to provide for out of the revenues of the country. Here it is worth while to note that while our Conservative friends during their last eleven years spent $80,000,000 on capital account, they had to borrow $62,000,000 of that and add it to the debt, and we are paying the interest on it now. My hon. friend the Finance Minister in the same length of time has spent $127,000,000 on capital account, and has to borrow only $5,000,000, and if it had not been for what has already gone towards the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific he would have absolutely reduced the debt below what it was when we came into power. The hon. member for North Toronto said: You seem to be anxious not to increase the public debt; that is your idea of Finance; my idea is that we should spend none of the revenues in the construction of capital works, such as enlargements of canals, bonuses to railways, &c., but you should borrow abroad. Tax the people enough for ordinary expenditure and borrow what you want over and above that. Well, my hon. friend the Finance Minister says he has a more excellent way than that. He says he will build out of the surpluses he has, and will get these surpluses by reducing the rate of taxation instead of increasing it. That is the difference between the two policies. The political economy of my hon. friend from North Toronto is this: You have great revenues coming in; they come through increased imports; increased imports are a sign of the decay of the country; a revenue of $60,000,000 is an indication of a higher rate of taxation. Then logically his remedy would be to put the rate up to 100 per cent, which my hon.

friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) advocates, and shut out imports altogether, and thus get no revenue. The Finance Minister says: No, we lower the rates as far as we can, consistent with raising the revenue and having regard to the established industries of the country, and by doing this promote the welfare of the people; if there is more than enough to provide for the ordinary expenditures of government, we will spend it on capital account in developing avenues of transportation by which to reduce the cost of transportation, and thus every dollar we spend will go directly back into the pockets of the consumers of this country. There is the difference between the two systems.

Now, I am not going to speak five hours and a half, although I might be expected to take a longer time in answering a speech of that length. I sat for two and a half mortal hours this afternoon ready to jot down any new matter that was brought up by the hon. member, but I found that his speech was but a repetition of what he had said before. The importation and exportation of scenery and the invisible profits he talked about, and I was lost in wonder what manner of man he was who could see into the invisible.

Then he reiterated that absurd statement that the Prime Minister had said that the Grand Trunk Pacific would be built for $13,000,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. He did say so, and his words are on Hansard.

Mr. PATERSON. Any man who believes that must be devoid of common sense. You take a sentence out of the context and then say that is what the speaker meant, when the whole context shows the contrary.

Mr. TAYLOR. Read his speech.

Mr. PATERSON. I think the hon. gentleman needs to read it. No man in the House who heard that speech, ever so understood it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Everybody so understood it.

Mr. PATERSON. Then why was it not taken up on the spot? Why did not the leader of the opposition at once emphasize the fact by pointing out that the First Minister had said the cost of construction would be only $13,000,000? Is it possible for any one to sink so low as did the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) when he made such a statement? That hon. gentleman does not care what he says, but no member of parliament ought to venture on an assertion so absolutely contrary to the facts. Why, if he would not give credit to my right hon. leader for honesty of purpose, surely he would not say that the leader of this government ever committed himself, to the proposition that 1,800 miles of railroad and the guaranty of the bonds and the hundreds of miles of the prairie section could be all built for that amount. The hon. gentleman knows very well what the First Minister was talking about. He knows that my right hon. leader detailed the bargain that was made, showed how we were to build the 1,800 miles of railroad ourselves and guarantee the bonds on the mountain section, and how, for seven years after its construction, we were to pay the interest on these bonds, and how after that the Grand Trunk Pacific were to take the road over and pay us an amount annually equal to the interest on the money that was borrowed to build the road, so that after the seven years we would no longer have to find the money to pay the interest out of the pockets of the people because the Grand Trunk Pacific would pay it. And he estimated that the accumulated interest during the seven years might possibly amount to the sum of $13,000,000. That is what he said.

Mr. WARD. Does my hon. friend believe that that $13,000,000 will cover the cost, even as he has stated it?

Mr. PATERSON. I think that the First Minister and the Finance Minister both were very good judges, and I was inclined to believe at that time that that amount invested would cover the cost. If there has been extra cost, that may increase the amount. Will my hon. friend allow me to put him a question since I have answeed his frankly? How much more than the $13,000,000 does he think it will cost the country?

Mr. WARD. If my hon. friend will calculate it, he will find that it will cost more than double that amount.

Mr. CONMEE. Have you calculated it?

Mr. WARD. It is impossible to calculate it until the railway is finished.

Mr. PATERSON. How then do you know?

Mr. WARD. If you will take the expenditure up to the present, you will find even now the expenditure will more than double that amount.

Mr. PATERSON. I should not like to agree with the hon. gentleman off-hand; but if he has worked it out, and if I had his figures and could corroborate them, I would not object. But he will not forget this point, that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) seeks to create the impression that what he estimates is going to cost $129,000,000, the leader of the government said could be built for $13,000,000.

Mr. WARD. No.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, and I say such a statement is not to the credit of any public man. It is only worthy of a newspaper—

if one such could be found—that has sunk so low it does not care what it says. It is certainly not worthy any public man. But that is what they seek to fasten on the Prime Minister, namely that a road which they estimate will cost $129,000,000 he said could be built for $13,000,000.

Mr. WARD. What did Mr. Blair say about it ?

Mr. PATERSON. Mr. Blair talked of the cost of construction, but the Prime Minister never talked about the cost of the construction of the road.

Mr. WARD. I am quite well aware of that.

Mr. PATERSON. That is quite an honest admission and one I like to hear, and I trust the press will take note of that and contrast it with what the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has stated.

As far as I am aware, I have noted all the points made by the hon. gentleman who preceded me (Mr. Foster). I took them down at the time. You may say that I did so in a very short time, but the hon. gentleman kept repeating the same thing over and over again. That is what spun his speech out so long. It would have been better for him if he had been content to make the one speech for in my opinion —and if the hon. gentleman were present I would like to tell him so to his face rather than have to do it behind his back—he did not treat the House with proper courtesy. The other night, at ten o'clock, after he had spoken for two hours, he asked the First Minister, as a matter of courtesy, to allow him to adjourn the debate as he wished to speak on another branch of the subject which would take three quarters of an hour longer. The hour was not very late and we were anxious to get on with business, but my right hon. friend, thinking after all that the hon. gentleman would not take up much time when the debate was resumed, consented. We adjourned then at ten o'clock, and to-day my hon. friend took up the subject again and occupied the time of the House the whole afternoon. Occupied it in doing what ? In repeating the same old slanders and the same old statements he had made on the previous occasion. He talked of the Yukon Railway, he talked of the North Atlantic Trading Company, he talked about the Ross rifle—he talked about all these things on Tuesday, and he is back at them again to-day. He made a statement which was contradicted by a minister of the Crown who was in a position, as minister, to know the facts ; and, instead of accepting the correction which was made, and which was true, instead of accepting it and manfully apologizing, he tried to persist in his statement, even to the length of stating that an honoured judge of this country was susceptible to influence. That is not the way to conduct debates in this House. Any man may make a mistake, any man may be misinformed ; but when the mistake is pointed out, a frank acknowledgment of the mistake and an apology will carry with any body of gentlemen. But don't, when you have made a statement that is wrong, and that has been pointed out as wrong,—don't persist in ignoring a statement of an hon. member of this House, and especially do not carry it beyond these walls.

Now, if the House is not tired, I want to refer to something in the platform of the Liberal party which was spoken of by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). I refer to the party plank on the trade question, which, the hon. gentleman said, we had departed from. In fact, hon. gentlemen opposite have so often repeated the statement—even the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), I am afraid, has so far forgotten himself as to repeat it—that there is not a single plank of the Liberal platform that has not been broken by this government since it came into power, that so often that they really seem to believe it. My view is entirely different. We have carried into effect every plank of that platform except one, and discussion in this House and in the other chamber show that that plank, the reform of the Senate, has not been abandoned but that, in spite of the difficulties involved, we seek to carry it into effect also. Now, what about this trade policy plank of the platform ? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) did not read it all. But I will read it all, and I will give you my reasons for believing that that plank of the platform has been carried into effect by this government. I was the one who seconded that plank in the platform when my honoured leader (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved it, and I spoke on that occasion. The hon. member for North Toronto quoted some words—I do not know where he got them. He can get the book in the library and read what I said on that occasion; and what I said on that occasion, I say now and stand by. The hon. gentleman says that we advocated free trade as it is in England. But that is not a plank in our platform—they cannot find it anywhere. They say, and it is true, that the leader of the Liberal party expressed admiration of free trade as it is in England and said that he would be glad if we could have the same here. I do not know but that that is the opinion of the Prime Minister to-day, and that he would like to have free trade as they have it in England if our circumstances were the same as those existing in England. But these hon. gentlemen do not tell us that the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said at the same time that there was no hope of having that policy in Canada for years and years to come, for our revenue would have to be raised by customs and excise in the future as in the past. The views of Liberals on this question seem to have varied, just as, I observe, the views of hon. members opposite vary. Some of them, for instance, thought the French treaty all right; so, after speaking against it, they voted for it; while others thought it was wrong and actually voted against it. But at least this is true: The Liberal party did not recognize any one man as the man to lay down a platform for them. They summoned a convention of representatives of all sections of the Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific. And those representatives came, thousands of them, and they adopted a platform. And the bounden duty of the Liberal government, whatever may have been the previous opinion of its individual members, was to give effect to that platform when it had been endorsed by the vote of the people. Here is the trade plank of the platform :

That the customs tariff of the Dominion should be based, not as it is now, upon the protective principle, but upon the requirements of the public service; that the existing tariff, founded upon an unsound principle, and used, as it has been by the government, as a corrupting agency wherewith to keep themselves in office, has developed monopolies, trusts and combinations. It has decreased the value of farm and other landed property it has oppressed the masses to the enrichment of the few; it has checked immigration; it has caused great loss of population; it has impeded commerce; it has discriminated against Great Britain.

In these and in many other ways it has occasioned great public and private injury, all of which evils must continue to grow in intensity as long as the present tariff system remains in force.

That was declaratory. Now we come to the operative part.

That the highest interests of Canada demand a removal of this obstacle to our country's progress, by the adoption of a sound fiscal policy, which, while not doing injustice to any class, will promote domestic and foreign trade, and hasten the return of prosperity to our people; that to that end the tariff should be reduced——

That recognizes a tariff. It does not say that there shall be free trade, which would mean that there was to be no tariff at all.

—to the needs of honest, economical and efficient government; that it should be so adjusted as to make free, or to bear as lightly as possible upon the necessaries of life, and should be so arranged as to promote freer trade with the whole world, more particularly with Great Britain and the United States. We believe that the results of the protective system have grievously disappointed thousands of persons who honestly supported it, and that the country, in the light of experience, is now prepared to declare for a sound fiscal policy.

The issue between the two political parties on this question is now clearly defined. The government themselves admit the failure of their fiscal policy, and now profess their willingness to make some changes; but they say that such changes must be based only on the principle of protection. We denounce the principle of protection as radically unsound, and unjust to the masses of the people, and we declare our conviction that any tariff changes based on that principle must fail to afford any substantial relief from the burdens under which the country labours. This issue we unhesitatingly accept, and upon it we await with the fullest confidence the verdict of the electors of Canada.

Now, I have read it all. This is appended to the campaign literature of hon. gentlemen opposite. It is very shortsighted on their part, because the very reading of this gives the denial to statements the hon. gentlemen are making on the platform. The people will read this and see that the Liberal party declared for a tariff, but a tariff without the protective principle and reduced to the needs of the country. I hope that that plank has been carried into effect. I was a party to putting that plank in the platform, and I believe that, the party having been returned to power on that platform, it was the duty of the government to carry it into effect. I was a party to moving the resolution, and I was a party to framing the tariff to carry it into effect. We recognize that the revenue must be raised by customs and excise as before, but we were to put the tariff on a revenue and not on a protective basis. What is the principle of protection ? Here you have imports increased from $100,000,000 to $300,000,000. Hon. gentlemen opposite, if they had their way would increase the tariff—make it 100 per cent, as the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) says, if necessary—in order to shut these goods out. But we say, No; so arrange your tariff so as to secure the necessary revenue, and you will then have, of necessity, protection to the extent of the tariff for the local market, but do no injustice to any class and recognize the conditions of the country. And so the tariff was lowered.

What result has it accomplished, judged by its fruits? $249,000,000 of trade with all the other nations of the world under their protective tariff, and under our revised tariff, $640,000,000. Has not trade been made freer ? Has the tariff not been reduced ? In all the hundreds of items that were in their general tariff, scores of them were reduced in rate, and only, I think, four articles were raised in a slight degree in the general tariff. One-third of that amount was deducted from all the tens of millions of imports that came from the mother country into this country. Sir, what has been the result ? Trade from England has doubled, enriching the producers of this country. Freer trade? Yes, three times the trade that we had before. If based on the protective principle you would not have had it, if the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite had been carried out. These imports are increasing, they are an injury to the country, they say, pass a law, raise your tariff and shut them out. We did what the platform told us to do, we lowered the tariff. We had consideration for the different industries of the country, we promoted freer trade, we have accomplished it with Great Britain to a marvellous extent We tried to get reciprocity with the United States, they were not ready to concede it, and it takes two to make a bargain We are not dependent upon them, we might have benefited by reciprocity, and so might they. But when it came to the point that we had to agree to their proposition with reference to the Alaska boundary before we could negotiate on trade matters, we were unable to go further, and the negotiations were broken off. So trade remains as it was before, with this exception, that in common with the imports from all other countries, there has been a proportionate reduction on many goods coming from the United States, a reduction in the interest of the people of Canada. Trade has been made freer with them than it was before, and to the benefit of the people of this country.

So I go through the different planks of the platform. Hon. gentlemen remind us that we 'viewed with alarm the increase in the public debt, and in the annual expenditure.' So we did at the time the platform was adopted, when the government were not getting revenue enough to pay the ordinary expenses of administration, to say nothing of the interest account that had to be met. We put an end to that by reducing the rate of taxation and making trade freer, with all its enriching consequences. The imports increased, money flowed into the treasury to such an extent that we were able to expend $127,000,000 on public works. Another plank was the liquor question. But we did not get prohibition into effect they say, it was not in the platform that it should be put into effect. The minds of the people had to be ascertained first, and the question then considered. Land for the settler was another plank. Hon. gentlemen opposite say, Ah, there is another of your planks gone. The land for the settler? Yes, sneer as they like and jibe as they like in an endeavour to make people believe that is not the case. They talk about the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. But you know that the cardinal principle of that sale was that these men were bound to put settlers on the land. Did they? They could not have got it otherwise. So the land was for the settler, even in that case. Land for the settler—how has that plank been carried out? Hear the record for ten years:

Statement re homestead entries granted since July 1, 1895, to June 30, 1905, together with the total area of same.

| | |
|---|---|
| July 1, 1895 (to December 31, 1895) | 962 |
| December 31, 1896 | 1,857 |
| " 31, 1897 | 2,384 |
| " 31, 1898 | 4,848 |
| " 31, 1899 | 6,689 |
| June 30, 1900 | 7,426 |
| " 30, 1901 | 8,167 |
| " 30, 1902 | 14,673 |
| " 30, 1903 | 31,383 |
| " 30, 1904 | 26,073 |
| " 30, 1905 | 30,819 |
| Total | 135,281 |

Note the increase. I want to say here that the settler has been brought to the land and the land has been given to the settler, because a statesman was chosen to administer the affairs of that country who has done more than any other man to promote the prosperity and development of the Northwest. This marvellous increase took place after Clifford Sifton was made Minister of the Interior, and bent his energies to the peopling of the fertile plains of our Northwest. I have given the homestead entries to 1905 inclusive. The record of the next year will show 40,000 more settled upon the land. And yet, Mr. Speaker, you have heard what these men opposite have said. They ought to know better, they ought to think of the estimate that people will put upon their intelligence when they talk about the Saskatchewan land. Why, its fundamental clause was to put settlers on the land, that was its basic principle, and in one year alone 40,000 men have taken out homestead entries on other lands in the Northwest. How can these venture hereafter to make the statement that we have not carried out that plank in the Liberal platform? It was our duty when we came into power to stand upon the platform that the Liberal party had laid down for us. I was a party to that platform, and I have tried to carry out its principles. I stand here to say that so far as the fiscal policy of this government is concerned, I believe we have carried out that platform in its entirety, and the results that have been achieved furnish abundant proof of the fact.

Mr. WM. F. COCKSHUTT (Brantford). I have listened with a good deal of pleasure to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) who has just taken his seat. He has delivered quite a vicious attack upon my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) on account of the length of his speech. Well, I am not here to deliver a five hours' speech. But if the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has not spoken long, we must admit that he has spoken loudly. However, there are a few questions he has alluded to which I propose to devote a few moment's attention. About fifteen minutes ago the hon. member for Simcoe called the attention of the minister to the steals, and the minister said he did not know of any; I think that is what he said. What did he say in answering a question yesterday in regard to his own department? He apparently does not remember it, so I will read it. This question was asked by myself:

1. Is one Donald Fraser still subcollector of customs for the port of Huntingdon, British Columbia? If not, when was he dismissed from the service?
2. What was the cause of his dismissal, and was a thorough investigation made as to his conduct?
3. What was the nature of the settlement arrived at in his case?
4. What was the total amount of his defalcation?
5. If any restitution was made on his behalf, what was the amount of money refunded?
6. Was any prosecution instituted against said Fraser? If not, for what cause?

The hon. gentleman answered that yesterday and I will give his answer:

Hon. WM. PATERSON. Upon inspection of the outport of Huntingdon, British Columbia, by Mr. Inspector Clute, in September, 1905, irregularities were discovered——

Note the word 'irregularities.'

—and Mr. Donald Fraser, the subcollector, was thereupon placed under suspension by the inspector. A thorough investigation of the outport was then made, and deficiencies to the amount of $4,241.46 were found to exist, which amount was paid by Mr. Fraser to the inspector of customs at that time.

When the report of the inspector was received by the department, an order in council was passed dispensing with Mr. Fraser's services. No further action has yet been taken.

An hon. MEMBER. That is a big thing.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It may not be considered big by those hon. gentlemen who are accustomed to taking hundreds of thousands of dollars, but here is the case of an individual taking $4,000 odd and his rebuke is that he has been asked to send in his check and no further action has been taken. Yet the hon. gentleman knows of no steals. He cannot remember from yesterday until to-day.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, I can remember that there were a great many cases of stealing under the late government.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. You can remember 18 years, but you cannot remember 24 hours. We could give the hon. gentleman a good many cases along that line, but I am not proposing to take any five hours to answer the arguments of the hon. gentleman, but I am proposing to take him to task with reference to this $13,000,000. I am proposing to read the statements in the House and I will take 'Hansard' for it. It is very nice for these gentlemen to endeavour to forget these statements which have misled the country, but there can be no denying the fact that the words were used. We do not say that we believed these statements and we never did believe them. The hon. gentleman denies that we believed them; that is not the point. The statements were made. At page 7691 of 'Hansard' of 1903, the following words appear as having been uttered by the right hon. First Minister:

The sum total of the money to be paid by the government for the construction of that line of railway from Moncton to the Pacific ocean will be in the neighbourhood of $12,000,000 or $13,000,000, and not a cent more.

Are these or are they not the words of the right hon. gentleman? Further he says:

Now, Sir, what is $13,000,000 in the year 1903? It is about the surplus of our revenue over the expenditure. The surplus for this year will pay for the construction of this road.

The hon. gentleman says they did not believe it; that they never used it, that they never tried to use it, and that they never deceived the people in that way. Let me show him a pamphlet which I have here. Does he recognize that as a pamphlet which was used in the election of 1904? It is entitled 'A Progressive Policy,' 'Record of Liberal Government,' 'Conservative Fallacies Exposed.' And when you turn to the statements with reference to the Transcontinental Railway what do you find? Right at the top of the page, the main heading of the page, you find this: 'A transcontinental railway for $13,000,000,' issued by yourselves and you say you never used it, Mr. Minister of Customs. I would not trust the hon. gentlemen across there by sending it over because I might not get it back, but if any of them will step across here I will be pleased to show it to them. I will now read from the body of the pamphlet.

Mr. BUREAU. An original document?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Yes, this is an original document issued by the Liberal party.

Just now they are indulging not only in fanciful criticisms but positive misrepresentations and falsifications. The feature of the bargain in regard to which most of this is done is the financial arrangement. It is an actual fact, an indisputable fact, that $13,000,000 will cover every cent of the country's expenditure in connection with the railway and that if $8,853,502 cash were invested today with an insurance or investment company it would have grown enough by the time the railway is completed to actually pay all the expenditure that the country will have to make.

The Finance Minister has asked us for $41,000,000 for that road. You may make all the explanations you like to the country, you are welcome to it, but you made the statement that this road could be built for $13,000,000, you have asked for $41,000,000, and before you are through you will be obliged to accept the estimate made by the former Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) who went out of this government rather than stand for such a fraud. His statement was that it would cost $120,000,000, and that was a fair, square honest estimate. We never believed in your statement. We never claimed that we believed your statement, but we say that you misled the country and I have read to you your own literature showing that you did it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is that the opinion, may I ask, of the Minister of Customs ?

Mr. PATERSON. I do not think the country is as easily misled as the hon. gentleman.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I was not misled ; don't you believe it. I estimated it at $150,000,000, and Mr. Heyd, who was running against me, admitted in a joint debate that it would cost $81,000,000. So much for the argument of the hon. Minister of Customs. I do not think that he has told anything new in regard to that. His own department, it has generally been supposed, is purity itself, but I have given the hon. gentleman one case, we know of a few others and we may be able to bring them to his attention before the session closes. I have been informed that in his department there are fraudulent entries and under valuations. I believe that favours are granted to certain ones. We would like to find out why it is in connection with that immense tunnel crossing from Windsor to Detroit everything being brought in from the United States to be used on the Canadian end of it is coming in free of duty under an order in council. Was that done in order to benefit some friends of the government ? If so, who are they ?

Mr. PATERSON. That privilege was given because this parliament, the hon. gentleman included, passed an Act saying that it should be done and that Act is in force.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It was done by Act of parliament ?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. My information is that it was done by order in council.

Mr. PATERSON. That would show that it would be safer for the hon. gentleman, especially before he throws out the insinuations that he does, to learn the facts. If he will look at the tariff he will find an item to which he agreed directing that what has been done in this case should be done, and what the department has done has been to carry out the law as passed by parliament.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The hon. gentleman does not say what or where the Act is.

Mr. PATERSON. In the tariff.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. This particular case was not mentioned in the tariff.

Mr. PATERSON. Certainly it is mentioned in the tariff.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. This particular tunnel ?

Mr. PATERSON. Any tunnel.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Any tunnel, but not this one. I am speaking of a special tunnel. The hon. minister may squirm but he cannot prove his case. I said I believed other matters had been done irregularly in the department. I am told there is a very large amount of stoves—and stoves should be manufactured in Canada if anything is—that have been entered in the city of Winnipeg a long way below what they should be entered at. It is not an easy matter to get at the information about that because I have moved for returns which I have not obtained, and so I cannot speak definitely at the present time. But in turning up the trade report I find that half a million dollars worth of stoves have been brought into Winnipeg. I think the stove is called the 'Majestic' which is a very high sounding title but I do not think that they paid a majestic duty; I am told they were very much underestimated. At any rate half a million dollars worth of stoves were brought in by one firm I believe, and the matter may be investigated before very long, but until I get definite information I am not prepared to say positively to what extent if any that entry was made. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) drew attention to the absence of the prominent members on this side of the House, notably the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and the leader of the opposition, and when the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) entered the House he directed his finger at him and said: here comes another. Let me direct his attention to his own side of the House now. When he was speaking the Liberal benches were all filled but now not ten per cent of the members are present and of course the hon. gentleman will say I have talked them out of the House. Well, I am quite ready to believe that, for they cannot stand very much of the truth at a time and as soon as they begin to hear the truth they desert the House and leave the benches empty. The other day the hon. gentleman taunted me with not being able to convert the government on the French treaty, and the Finance Minister repeated, with what I considered a great deal of acidity that was quite uncalled for, a certain remark with reference to myself. When he was referring to the deputation that waited on him the day before I asked hom:

Does the new French treaty have any effect on the trade.

That is not just exactly as I put it but it is near enough, and he replied :

No, the new French treaty is not yet in operation, but if I had any occasion to mention it I should recall the fact that my hon. friend condemned the treaty and voted for it.

Was I not in fairly good company in voting for the French treaty ? It is the first time in four years I have been so foolish as to vote with this government. I admit it may have been a foolish thing to do, but what does the Finance Minister think of these men who sit behind him and vote with the government when graft and greed and all manner of filching from the public treasury has to be defended. There was no graft in the French treaty and I voted for it; no graft except what the two ministers got who went across to Paris, and if the reports are correct they certainly lived fairly high; one of them drew over $8,000 I believe and the other $4,000 to negotiate this beautiful treaty. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) accuses me of being foolish enough to vote for the government.

Mr. FIELDING. Wise enough.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Foolish enough. The hon. gentleman has never criticised any other vote I have given in the House and I assume he thought I did a foolish thing.

Mr. FIELDING. No, a wise thing.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I admit that if I did vote with the government on any of these great questions I would be doing a foolish thing, but I have only done it once and I will promise that I will try and not do it again.

Mr. FIELDING. Oh, yes, you will.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I will try not to. The Minister of Customs dwelt at great length upon the question of the balance of trade and he pointed out that we have now reached a volume of $640,000,000 of trade in the twelve months. These are large figures, but I may point out now as I have pointed out before that a large part of that is the buying of this country and not the selling. Hon. gentlemen opposite have endeavoured to take the edge off the fact by saying that the balance of trade to the extent of $120,000,000 against us is a matter of very small moment. In fact the member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. J. J. Hughes) stated that the difference between the imports and the exports was the measure of our profit, and that consequently we have made $120,000,000 out of the deal this year. If that logic is sound would it not be better that the whole trade of the country should be a purchaser and that we should have purchased $644,000,000 and exported nothing. According to the reasoning of the hon. member we would then have made $644,000,000 out of the transaction. There is no country in the world situated as Canada is that is pursuing such a foolhardy course as to have a balance of $120,000,000 a year against it on its trade. In the United States for the last ten years their exports have exceeded their imports by an average of $500,000,000 per annum, the excess of exports over imports being $517,000,000 for 1906. That is a country that knows how to do business. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) told us that the United States felt the financial pressure worse than we have felt it. I am not so sure of that. It is true that the United States answers to the financial barometer a little quicker than we do and their crises are more acute but they are not so prolonged, and the hon. gentleman knows that well in spite of his announcement to-night that Canada is as prosperous as she ever has been. He knows right down in his heart that that is not a fact. Has he read the newspapers this winter ; has he read his newspaper, the Toronto 'Globe.' Has he seen upon the front page appeal after appeal, day after day and week after week, for the starving people of the city of Toronto. Did he see it stated only this week that 2,000 men had marched to the parliament buildings and that 1,000 had marched to the city hall in Toronto demanding work. And yet he has the hardihood to get up here to-night and tell us that the prosperity of the country is as great if not greater than it ever has been. Does he think anybody will believe that statement. What has happened in Toronto has happened in every other city and town in Ontario; his own town of Brantford had 700 men out of work and 200 of them appealed at the Brantford city hall the other day for work or relief. Every town and city in Ontario has had its charitable institutions taxed to the utmost this winter, and I say it now and I say it without fear of contradiction that there has been more intense suffering in the province of Ontario this winter than has ever occurred since it was a province. And that is under your great prosperity as you call it. The Minister of the Interior is largely responsible for that because he has poured into the province of Ontario distressed immigrants who are knocking at the door of Toronto and saying: Food or we starve, give us work or we will die; and there are hundreds and thousands of the people every day that are suffering from the policy of this government. The hon. gentleman may say to me : Oh, you are a blue ruin artist. I have been accused of that before and I am not afraid of being accused of it, but I have 'Hansard' here for 1893, 1894 and 1895 and I find some fairly good reading from that standpoint in these books. I have read some of the speeches of Sir Richard Cartwright who, if there ever was a blue ruin artist in Canada, was the man. But this government seized upon and kept him in office long past the time when his usefulness was gone. The Minister of Customs and the Finance Minister are both on record as well. They were content in those days to put the public debt, as it was, at about $200,000,000 or $225,000,000. How did Sir Richard Cartwright figure up the public debt? By taking the public debt of Canada, and adding to it all the bonds of railways that had been sold in England, all the money borrowed for industrial purposes in Canada, and then saying: In round figures your indebtedness is from $800,000,000 to $1,000,000,000.

The hon. Minister of Customs has told us that this government has reduced the taxation of the people. That is an old cry of his; we have heard it many times. I am going to quote to him an eminent authority on that point. I would ask his attention to these remarks, in 'Hansard' of 1894, at page 356:

> I would ask those hon. gentlemen to turn to page 11 of the Trade and Navigation returns, prepared, not by Mr. Laurier or by the member for South Oxford, but prepared by the government themselves, and what is that statement? One of the columns shows the amount of customs duties paid per head of the population. That is the way to measure your taxation. Take the taxes of 1878 and see how much was paid by the population then. You will find it was $3.13 per head. Take the sum this last year, and it was $4.26 per head. That only gives an idea of the taxation levied that went into the revenue.

Who do you think was the eminent authority I am quoting? The Hon. Wm. Paterson, Minister of Customs. But tonight he repudiates the per head basis altogether; he says the proper basis is the percentage on goods. He dilated at length on this miserable little $4.26 per head; but now he excuses the $11 per head which is being taken from every man, woman and child in Canada by this government. Surely the hon. gentleman must have forgotten that he uttered these words.

Mr. TAYLOR. Get up and apologize.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. This government is taking double per head from the people of this country what was taken in 1896 when the Conservatives were in power; and yet the hon. gentleman has the hardihood to get up and assert that the taxation to-day is less than it was then. Surely the hon. gentleman has gone a little wide of the mark in endeavouring to prove that estimates amounting to $119,000,000, according to the government's first estimate, is less than $46,000,000 which we spent in 1896. In addition we have been asked for $3,000,000 for seed wheat, and the other day supplementary estimates to the amount of $5,000,000 odd were placed on our desks; so that up to the present time the government estimate for an expenditure of about $127,000,000; and the hon. Minister of Customs glories in it, after vowing that they would reduce taxation by several million dollars. They have never reduced it one cent, but they have been steadily increasing it until it has become a load under which this country is staggering, and the Finance Minister admits that we are face to face this year with a deficit of $12,000,000 and another next year of probably $19,000,000; and still the hon. gentleman tells us that we are more prosperous than ever.

With regard to the loan which the Finance Minister made to the banks of this country in order to move the grain of the Northwest, he explained to us that he had found it necessary to break into the strong chest of this country and take out some $5,000,000 of the reserve, contrary to the Currency Act; but he said that it was a crisis, and he thought he was justified in thus doing what he knew to be wrong, and he said that all the money had now been returned except about $900,000. Whatever others may think, in my opinion this is a strange example for a government to set the financial institutions of this country. Many a banker has had to go behind the bars for no greater offence. The Finance Minister according to his own statement, has taken $5,000,000 out of the reserve of this country which by law should not be touched, and for doing that he has to obtain a special Act of indemnity from this parliament. The crisis to which he refers was brought largely by the government themselves. Last year they claimed to have a surplus of $15,000,000. If they had, why could they not have invested a portion of that, instead of taking $5,000,000 from the reserve? It is a deplorable example set to the leaders of our financial institutions, and it is not to be wondered at if the commercial moral tone of the country falls in the face of an Act of that kind committed by the government of the country. The Quebec bridge bargain is another beautiful item. Of all the bargains made by this government, there is none, for the size of it, more deplorable than that they made with regard to the Quebec bridge, and, as might be expected, the results were even more deplorable than the bargain itself. The history of the whole thing is one of the most disgraceful of any we have had since confederation. The company was started with a capital of $65,000 and that company got a contract from this government—for how much, do you suppose?

Mr. MACDONALD. In what year was that company incorporated?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It does not matter when it was incorporated. Its capital stock only amounted to $65,000 and whether that was all paid up or not, I am not aware. The date of its incorporation makes no difference.

Mr. MACDONALD. Do you know when it was incorporated ?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The hon. member for Pictou has a habit of butting in when things are getting rather warm. It was incorporated under this government. They got a subsidy from this government, another from the province of Quebec and another from Quebec city, the whole amounting, in round figures, to about $800,000. Then they got a guaranty of their bonds from this government for $6,800,000. The company may have respectable names on its directorate, but when a company with a capital stock of only $65,000 undertakes to make a contract for over $6,000,000, I say it is a fake company. No company with only $65,000 capital is capable of taking up a contract involving an expenditure of $6,000,000 to $10,000,000. Still this government made a bargain with this company involving $10,000,000. Why did they do it ?

Mr. BENNETT. Graft.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It was expected that there would be a big graft, and they formed a side company to take the graft. But as it turned out the bridge collapsed and the graft disappeared, and the company have not the money to bear the loss, nor can they be called to bear it under their bargain. Their bargain with the government was : Heads we win ; tails you lose. The bridge went down, eighty live were lost, and now the Minister of Finance tells us that the government may find it necessary to take over the bridge. But the bridge is in the bottom of the river, so that it is a pretty good stretch of the imagination for the hon. gentleman to say that the government will take it over. To have been exact, as a Finance Minister should be, he should have said that the government will have to take over the wreck. Who is going to provide for the widows of these eighty men whose lives were lost ? Who is going to bear this loss of nearly $5,000,000 on the bridge ? and who is going to construct the bridge because we have to begin over again ? As was pointed out by the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) the other day, this Quebec bridge alone, with its span about two miles long, will cost as much as these gentlemen told us it would cost to build the Transcontinental, namely, about $13,000,000. And the contract for a bridge of that kind was given to a company with a capital of about $65,000 ! Yet these men have the assurance to tell us that they have never heard of deals. Why, this contract between the Quebec Bridge Company and this government was one of the biggest preparations for a gigantic graft that will be found on record in any country. There was just but one hitch to prevent the success of the scheme and the enrichment of the schemers, and that hitch was, the bridge went down, a lot of lives were lost, and now the Finance Minister has to take over the whole concern. And these gentlemen will still tell us that they have never known of any wrong doing by the government since it has taken office.

Mr. MACDONALD. What about the French treaty ?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I have been twitted because I voted with the government on the French treaty. I will tell you why.

Mr. MACDONALD. Yes, explain that.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) is known as one of the two Macs who are leaders of the obstructionist club on the government side. He has asked me to give an account of that vote. Well, I did give an account of it but the hon. gentleman was not here. I have no objection, however, to stating the grounds for voting as I did. Besides I had the example of the right hon. the First Minister as a precedent. When the French treaty, which had been negotiated by Sir Charles Tupper in 1893, was brought before the House, the right hon. gentleman criticised it, as I did the treaty this session, but he nevertheless voted for it. I did not think the treaty submitted to us this session was beyond criticism. There were many items in it which should not have been there, but the First Minister told us that we had to take it as it was or not at all, and I accepted it on the principle that half a loaf is better than no bread. I can cite also the precedent set by Sir Richard Cartwright in 1893. He likewise criticised the treaty introduced by Sir Charles Tupper, but that did not prevent his voting for it.

I am now going to tell the hon. gentleman about two or three votes I did not give for the government. Let me remind him of the famous Autonomy Bills introduced in this House during the first year when I had the honour to be a member. These Bills were to give self-government to the great Northwest provinces. We had a debate lasting for two months on this question. When the debate was over I certainly did not vote for these Autonomy Bills. And I believe that a great many members on that side of the House, if they had to do it again, would not vote for these Bills. Let them consider what has happened in the Northwest. The effect of these Bills was to take the lands of these provinces away from the people to whom they properly belonged. And our leader has declared that, if he is returned to power, he will restore those lands to the people to whom they belong. Those Bills professed to give a constitution to the new provinces. And with what result ? Elections were held under the constitution as provided for by these Bills. After the election it was found that fraud had been practised in a number of cases, and thirteen protests were entered against men who had been returned. But when the complainants came into court the judges who sat upon the cases declared that there was no machinery in the Autonomy Bills by which political rascality could be punished, and so these thirteen protests were thrown out. That constitution was good enough to destroy the election laws that had existed, but it was not good enough to give the people new election laws. A vote in favour of these Autonomy Bills was one vote that I certainly did not give. Nor did I vote to justify the bargain made with the North Atlantic Trading Company, which took between $300,000 and $400,000 out of the pockets of the people for which no value was given. Nor did I vote in favour of the expeditions of the 'Arctic.' That vessel was sent out, loaded with delicacies, to discover the north pole. She was sent out for three years and returned in one, bringing back very few of the goods. The people aboard had a jolly time. They enjoyed their visit with the Eskimo. They smoked their cigars and drank their spirits and had a good time. The government sought for justification of this expenditure of between $200,000 and $300,000 for a jaunt of this kind. I certainly did not vote for that. Nor did I vote for the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, with its deals, nor for the Imperial Pulp Company with its deals, nor for the Merwin enterprise, nor in favour of any of these things that hon. gentleman opposite put through in this House and put through in a way that should bring the blush of shame to the faces of those who have voted for these expenditures.

Now, I propose to deal for a few moments with something connected more especially with the budget speech itself. We have had a statement concerning the financial stringency that has existed in this country. We know that the stringency has been very severe and that the effects of it have not by any means passed away, nor are they likely to pass away in the near future. We know that the outlook, in spite of the prophecy of the Minister of Finance, is not any too good; that industrial conditions in our main centres are not bright; that many factories are running on short time, or with short staff, that labour is very largely unemployed in all the business centres of Canada, and that imports of goods from the United States and from Europe are displacing the products of our own factories. We know this last has been going on steadily and that the future outlook of this country is not good. Take, for instance, agricultural implements, which we can manufacture for outside markets. Yet, as shown by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), we have imported one and three quarter million dollars worth. Stoves I have already mentioned—an import of three-quarters of a million dollars. So I might enumerate other articles, for the manufacture of which Canada is supposed to be headquarters, in the production of which we are up to date in every respect and are able to produce goods as good and as cheap as any country in the world. And yet we are importing large quantities of these goods which should be manufactured in this country, employing the hands that are now walking the streets and that are being brought in from outside countries. Throughout our western provinces a large quantity of agricultural implements are being imported. We are also importing great quantities of woollens that are displacing the products of our own mills to the great detriment of this industry. Only two days ago we read of a large factory in Montreal closing down. I was told by a gentleman in the corridors of this House only yesterday that since this government came into power 108 large factories had been closed. In the woollen industry there is as dismal an outlook as faces any manufacturing enterprise. Hardly a factory is left of the great array that we had a few years ago; that is doing a profitable business.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. How would the hon. gentleman (Mr Cockshutt) prevent the people of Canada from buying the manufacturing implements and woollen goods that he speaks of as being brought in from foreign countries?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. My policy is to have these goods made in Canada and sold in Canada, and to readjust the tariff to bring about that result. The woollen business has been pulled down very largely by the preferential tariff—and I shall come to that subject presently—the Minister of Finance did not seem to find time to deal with it in his speech, but I intended to take it up. I was pointing out that there were many industries in this country that are not in a thrifty condition and that the tariff changes the minister proposes this session are not going to help any of them as I understand the situation. Many of our industries today should have additional protection of some kind or other in order that we may keep Canadian business in Canadian factories. Besides the items that I have already mentioned, take, for instance, cement. This is an article which, our Liberal friends admit, can be made as good in Canada as in any country in the world. Still we are importing large quantities of American cement into Canada. We desire to see the Canadian industry extend and to see our own plants employ our own people. This government was given a golden opportunity last year, and I pointed out at the time, when there was a balance of trade against us of $63,000,000, which should have been a warning to the Finance Minister. But the hon. gentleman did not see it. To-day we are importing $120,000,000 from foreign countries, a large part of which should be made in this country by Canadian workmen. If this were done, we would not have these men walking our streets and coming to our city halls and parliament buildings asking for work.

These men could all be provided with work if these vast imports the Minister of Customs has encouraged were not taking place. This $120,000,000 worth of goods in excess should nearly all be made in Canada. We used to have the balance of trade in our favour, why have not we got it now? In 1903 we had a balance of trade in our favour of some millions, since then it has been going the other way, by leaps and bounds until now it is $120,000,000 against us in twelve months. Now I say that if the tariff was as it should be a large portion of these goods would be made in Canada, we would be employing our workingmen, and they would not be on charity to-day. It is a shame and a disgrace to this country that a state of things should be allowed to exist that has existed in the province of Ontario during this winter.

Under the beautiful system we have in this country we have become importers of almost everything in the list. These gentlemen rejoice in it; as the Minister of Customs says, I rejoice in these vast imports. Why, we are supposed to be a great agricultural country, under the aegis of our friend the Minister of Agriculture and what have we been doing this year? What do you think we have imported this year, among other things? Butter. Under the cold storage business of the Minister of Agriculture, and under the encouragement he has given to agriculture, we have been importing butter. You will say, surely that was a very exceptional case; where did it come from? I took the precaution of asking the minister some weeks ago and I got an answer. We imported $35,000 worth of butter this last fall. And where do you think the most of it came from? Great Britain, 160,000 pounds in one shipment, valued in all at about $35,000. So under the beautiful policy of the Minister of Agriculture that has done so much for the farmer, he has had to send to Great Britain and bring out butter to put on our tables to save us from butter famine.

I might give another item which was mentioned the other night. An hon. gentleman says: What about clover seed? Now, I want to give the Minister of Agriculture another pointer about his beautiful seed Bill. I want him to refer back to the last two or three years and see what has happened in the seed trade. Four or five years ago we were large exporters of clover seed. This gentleman came in with his beautiful Seeds Inspection Act, which made it a crime to have seed with a few weed seeds in it, and what has happened? He has made Canada to-day the dearest country on earth for clover seed, and instead of being exporters we are importers. And are we getting a better article? No, we are getting a worse article. We have not seed here to-day for our home trade. Right in the province of Ontario which used to export tens of thousands of bushels, we have not seed for the home trade. The minister's policy is largely responsible for that, as I pointed out to him that it would be. I pointed out to the minister at the time that he had a Bill there that was going to do the farmer the greatest possible injury, that it was going to make clover seed dear. Clover seed is silage to the land, it gives fertility to the land. It is selling in Ontario to-day at from $12, $14 and $15 a bushel, and very scarce at that, and much of it imported seed; whereas three or four years ago we had about a million dollars worth to spare, according to trade returns, in one year. But now we have to send abroad to bring in the very seed that the minister has legislated against by his seed Bill. And what was the cause of it? There is a certain weed called rib grass, which is in itself a harmless thing, and is considered one of the best seed manures that grows; in fact in the old country it is sown clear as feed for sheep. Seed with this rib grass, or plantein, as it is called, five seeds to the thousand, is condemned and not accounted a first class article under the seed Bill. He does not make any more difference between this plantein or rib grass than he does between mustard or rag weed, which are in themselves far more dangerous weeds; and it would be worse to use one rag weed to the thousand than it would be to sow 100 plantein or rib grass to the thousand. And because the hon. gentleman insisted on putting that through, in spite of my protest, he has made Canada the dearest country under the sun for clover seed. Instead of exporting it to other countries we are importing it from France, from Great Britain and from the United States, and in many instances it is not nearly up to the old standard that we had before the Inspection Act. It is just as I pointed out to him at the time that the Bill was being discussed, and it is because he could not discriminate between what is really a harmless weed and one that is very noxious. He made one the same as the other, and put it five to the thousand in spite of my protest. That should be immediately rectified, because it is doing this country immense damage, and the farmers to-day are not able to buy enough clover seed to keep their lands in a proper state of fertility. I have pointed out these two items where we are importers instead of exporters, as we should be. I might go down the list and show that out of this $120,000,000 balance of trade, many of these items could be saved to Canada if the tariff was as it should be, and we should be manufacturing and producing these at home instead of sending abroad for them. That cannot be denied, Mr. Speaker, and it is to be regretted that when all has been said and done, the hon. gentleman has not found time to tell us what he proposes to do with regard to righting the things that are wrong. There certainly should be an adjustment at the present time in accordance with changed conditions, in order that we might have employment for our unemployed and adequate protection for all lines of industry for which Canada is fitted. If that had been done, we would have no men today walking our streets.

Now then a word with regard to the preference with Great Britain. As I pointed out, the Finance Minister did not find time to deal with that. That used to be considered a very important subject by the Finance Minister. To-day he has not found time to speak a single word with regard to it. He has not shown in his diagram here that trade with Great Britain is developing anything like as it should. It is true, we are selling to Great Britain more goods than to any other country, and it is the only country in the whole list to which we are selling more than we are buying from. But not at all satisfactory is the present state of the preference with Great Britain. He has been taking away from it a little at a time, very much like the boy that cut off the dog's tail, he took off an inch at a time in order that the dog might not be hurt so much. And so the minister has been taking away a little each season from the British preference in order that the people over there might not realize the fact that they were being robbed of what had been given to them a few years ago.

Then we had the imperial conference. These gentlemen went over there and were lavishly entertained in London. They had a long conference with the British authorities on matters concerning trade with Canada, and they came back and they have not shown us that we have got a single advantage with regard to trade with Great Britain. Did they make any earnest effort to remove the cattle embargo? We used to do an immense trade with Great Britain before our cattle were unjustly treated. This is a question that the Minister of Agriculture took under his care, and what has he done to remove the difficulty? I did not hear that a single word was said at that conference with regard to the removal of the embargo upon our cattle, which is a most unjust enactment. Several million dollars worth of trade of this country have been taken away from us by the wrongful enforcement of the Diseases Act upon these cattle and sheep that have been kept out of Great Britain. Not one single honest effort was made by these gentlemen at that conference to open the door for trade in this respect with Great Britain. The matter of mutual preference, that calls for every attention at the hands of this government, has been entirely slighted. These gentlemen have gone to England, they have returned again and they have not brought us anything to show for their negotiations with the mother country or that our trade relations are to be improved in any respect whatever. There have been a great many discussions upon this question for a great many years, but I want to place on 'Hansard' the view which I hold upon this question and it is contained in a resolution which I am about to present to the House and which I think expressed it better than anything that has ever been written on this important question of a mutual preference. This is a resolution that was moved in the city of Montreal during the great congress of the chambers of commerce of the empire in 1903. I am reading from the official report of the congress, dated at Montreal, August 17, 1903. I find that this resolution was one which embraced the views of all Canadians at that great discussion upon the imperial preference question.

It is resolved, 'that in the opinion of this Congress the bonds of the British empire would be materially strengthened, and the union of the various parts of His Majesty's Dominion greatly consolidated by the adoption of a commercial policy based upon the principles of mutual benefit, whereby each component part of the empire would receive a substantial advantage in trade as a result of its national relationship, due consideration being given to the fiscal needs of the component parts of the empire.'

There is a brief and concise statement of what a mutual preference should be. We find that these gentlemen went to London and that they made no effort to induce the mother country to reciprocate with us in the matter of trade. Yet, they present this statement which has been issued by the Minister of Finance in showing that our trade with Great Britain has been improving to a certain extent during the past few years but they do not say that it is anything like the volume that it should have attained, and instead of there being an increase in this trade during the past year the trade has actually diminished and our exports to Great Britain are falling off at the present time rather than increasing. A few items that I have mentioned, such as butter and clover seed, that we have been exporting, we are now importing from them. Imagine an agricultural country such as this is importing these things from Great Britain. Surely there must be something wrong when we are sending to outside countries for the products of the farm. Hon. gentlemen opposite have given us a pamphlet showing that our trade has increased with Great Britain. It is true that during the past ten for fifteen years we are doing more trade with Great Britain than we once did, but it is nothing in comparison with what it should be and what it would be if a mutual preference were afforded us. This is the logical conclusion of the existing condition of affairs. If we got something from them for giving them something we might have an interchange of products between the various members of the family of the empire. That is the best policy for Canada to pursue and if these hon. gentlemen, when they visited London, had given the same attention that they apparently did to negotiate the French treaty to effecting an arrangement with the mother country they would have had a great deal more to show as a result of their efforts abroad. That French treaty will give us $10,000,000 of imports from European countries and about $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 of exports whereas Great Britain is the one country in the world that is taking more from us than we are taking from it. Still, they did not think it worth while to enter into negotiations with the British government to induce them to reciprocate in this matter and to give better terms to the colonies than to foreign countries. I believe they are ready for a change, the tariff reform movement is going on there and I believe that we will live to see the day when the idea of a mutual trade preference within the empire will be carried out. It will never be carried out by this government. They have been hostile to it from the start and they will be hostile to it to the finish. There is no imperialism about them in that respect. They stumbled into this preference as was pointed out this afternoon by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster). They had no intention of going on with it, but when they found that they could not give the preference to anybody else they gave it to the mother country. If you read the argument put up by the hon. Minister of Finance when he first presented his policy to the House you will see that he had no intention of giving the preference to Great Britain alone but that he proposed to give it to all other countries that were ready to go into the bargain. When they found out that no other country would go into it he gave it to Great Britain alone. We were led to insist upon the abrogation of the treaties between Germany and Belgium. That is a large question that I am not going to enter into. My hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) is an authority on that question and he may find time to take hold of it during this present debate. But, we know that instead of getting any advantages out of these various negotiations we have tumbled into first one difficulty and then another until we are to-day in such a state of financial depression that we are importing $120,000,000 worth more than we are selling, whereas the United States, with no greater possibilities than we have, had exports beyond their imports last year of $550,000,000. If we had exports and imports in the same ratio, if we were twelve times as large as we are, we would have $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 of a balance of trade in our favour instead of $120,000,000 of a balance against us. That is nothing but what we should have in a country like Canada. Still these gentlemen go on and say: What are you going to do about it? How are you going to right this? Well, we will have to right it because these gentlemen are incapable of righting it. Everything they touch goes wrong. Their whole business policy brings us to the verge of ruin. I pointed out in the remarks which I made in debate on the address in reply to the speech from the Throne that we were going to have suffering and hardship, soup kitchens and distributions of food. That has all come to pass within the last three or four months and these gentlemen are to-day at the old business they were at from 1874 to 1878—soup kitchens and the distribution of food by charitable institutions. The trouble is that the government is not paying for it. People connected with private charitable institutions have to put their hands in their pockets this winter and have to pay out money to the amount of thousands and tens of thousands of dollars in the province of Ontario alone to feed people who otherwise would have starved as you can read not in Conservative papers but in such papers as the Toronto 'Globe' and the Ottawa 'Free Press.' Men are marching upon public buildings demanding work or bread. This government have not done anything to meet the situation at all, but they put up the Minister of Customs to tell us that the country is as prosperous as it ever was and that taxation is not as great as it used to be. They glory in this sort of thing. They have asked for $119,000,000 in their main estimates, $3,000,000 for seed wheat and $5,000,000 odd in the supplementary estimates and before we get through we will have further supplementary estimates of $5,00,000 or $10,000,000 put before the House, the result of which will be that we will have further supplementary estimates when this country ought to be run for one-third or one half of that amount. Then, they say: We are doing great things; we are building great public works. They tell us that they are building the Transcontinental Railway. We have heard of the Quebec bridge but that is the only part we have heard of yet. There is not a mile of their railway running yet.

Mr. JOHNSTON. That is not right.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. How much is running?

Mr JOHNSTON. About 250 miles.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It may be open for traffic but it is not running. No time tables have been issued. There is no doubt that the hon. gentleman is correct in saying that the road is practically finished but it is not running, or carrying the products of the country or passengers in the regular way. That has been built by the Grand Trunk and not by this government. The hon. gentleman is probably referring to the west. I am speaking of the part from Winnipeg to Moncton that the government is building, and I am speaking by the book when I say that there is not a mile of that road in a position to be operated yet. I believe the statement made here the other day by the minister that there was not a mile of that road running from Winnipeg to Moncton. It is going to cost a vast amount of money and for years we will not be realizing upon that work. This is a case which illustrates the extravagant expenditures of this government leading to financial loss and presenting an example of extravagance and graft that has been unequalled by any government since we were a country. There is no doubt about that.

These gentlemen may talk as they like in this House but they cannot deny the fact that under this government there have existed corrupting influences the like of which we have never seen before, and that there have been unearthed in this House scandals the like of which we have never before heard of either in quantity or in quality. The conscience of the hon. minister, in the words of Scripture, seems to have become seared like as with a hot iron. He knows in his heart that this graft has been going on in every department of the government and that in one session there were fifty disclosures of graft on the floor of this House, every one of which was as big as the great Pacific scandal on which Sir John Macdonald was turned out of power. And still the Minister of Customs says he has not heard of any steals. The hon. gentleman comes from the same county as I do and in the coming campaign I would like to meet him on the platform in Brantford and hear him tell the people that he has discovered no steals since he has been in office. We will have a good tempered debate among the people who know us both ; we will debate the question fore and aft and up and down and then the people can judge whether there has not been any stealing and graft about this government. I will have a few figures to show him that he will not be able to explain away. I was found fault with for one vote I gave on the French treaty and there are several votes that the Minister of Customs will have to give an account for. He will have to explain his vote in regard to all these land deals and these timber deals and this Merwin business and it will be pretty hard for him to answer for his conduct. I gave him one instance in his own department yesterday, and if we discovered that much by asking a single question, is it not likely that there are others to be discovered. The minister told us that he had investigated this matter, but if my information is correct he did not get at the bottom of it. My information is that this particular party who had to make $4,200 of a refund and who has not been prosecuted, has made a public boast that he is ahead of the game.

Mr. PATERSON. Are you accusing me of taking the money ?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I am not accusing you of taking the money but I am accusing one of your servants, and I am pointing out that you have not administered any punishment to him, and although you have asked him to disgorge $4,200, I do not think you got all the money back. Do you hear that ?

Mr. PATERSON. I did not hear that.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Well, listen to it again. I am told that this man who refunded the $4,200 has made public boast that he is $10,000 ahead.

Mr. BENNETT. Send Falconer to look after him.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. We will have to get Bowser after him. The government is very liberal in getting American experts up here at a cost of $50,000 to the people to straighten out the books of one department to cover up the graft as some one has said. They want some one to cook their accounts. The accounts are pretty rank and won't keep without cooking. I am not surprised that they need cooking and frying and boiling to take the unsavory smell away. They smell very strongly of graft in many departments of the government and so the government had to send to the United States for expert bookkeepers and pay them $50,000. And yet the Minister of Customs says he knows nothing about graft. Had we not Canadians in this country who could do that bookkeeping work without sending to the United States and paying these men $75 a day and travelling expenses? The Minister of Marine deplored the crookedness on the other side of the line and he gloried that Canadians were not like the people there, but still when the government want their affairs straightened out they send to New York to get the men to do it.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Is the hon. gentleman aware that Mr. Falconer has audited the books of the Cockshutt Plough Company of Brantford, Ont.?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The hon. gentleman may think he has asked a smart question. I am not a member of the board of directors of that company and I do not know whom they have employed. It is only the other day the Minister of Customs stated I had nothing to do with the management of that company. It is nearly twenty years ago since I was president of the company, and I do not know whether Falconer or anybody else was employed by the company, but surely the government is not going to flatter the Cockshutt Company by saying that because it has employed Falconer the government must employ him also. At all events I think I will leave my hon. friend (Mr. Duncan Ross) to Bowser who has invited him out to Vancouver, and who will deal with him when he gets him there. I cannot tell whether the Cockshutt Plough Company employed Falconer or whether they did not.

Mr. BENNETT. Did they pay him $75 a day ?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I do not think they would pay him $75 a day and I do not think they would pay him his expenses from New York, and I do not think they would pay $5 a day hotel bill when he only paid $2. Anyway, I think we have men in Canada competent to do any work of that kind for the government if it is necessary to have it done. I do not like these importations from the United States. If my hon. friend from Belleville (Mr. Porter) were here I think he could tell of one importation made by this government from the United States in the shape of a trick ballot box.

I remember very well the time when it was on exhibition in this House. The First Minister was here that day and he was not wearing his usual sunny smile. My hon. friend brought here two of those imported trick ballot boxes. We do not manufacture such things in this country, but they were brought in to carry one or more elections in the particular district from which my hon. friend comes. Therefore, when hon. gentlemen opposite import anything from across the line we are apt to be suspicious of them.

The axiom this government act upon is not how little they can spend, but how much they can spend. Since they have come into power the expenditure of this country has gone up by leaps and bounds, until it has reached a point beyond which it cannot go. The Finance Minister has admitted that the limit of taxation has been reached, and that he expects that next year about $6,000,000 less of revenue will be raised than was raised this year. During the past year this government have been borrowing money at 6 and 7 per cent and have been spreading more sail when every other institution in the country has been warned by the banks to draw in sail. Setting a pace, which, if followed by any business organization, would bring upon it ruin and disaster, they have decided that this is no time to cut down expenses, and we have to-night the spectacle of the Minister of Customs saying : We have spent immense sums; we are going to spend immense sums, and we glory in that expenditure. It would not be so bad if all this expenditure had been for works that were profitable and that were going to bring a revenue back to the country, but when we find a large portion of it going for purposes which are illegitimate and which are going to bring back nothing to the country, it is time we called a halt and asked these gentlemen to confine their expenditure within reasonable bounds. I find that the words that I speak on that subject are almost identical with the words spoken by Sir iRchard Cartwright with regard to an expenditure of only about one-third the size ten or twelve years ago.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to trespass upon the time of the House any further. I have endeavoured to make a plain, straightforward statement with regard to the points brought up by hon. gentlemen opposite. I give them not as the views of any party or individual other than myself. I have endeavoured to set forth what I believe to be the true policy for this government to pursue, and that is, that they should immediately set about facing the present conditions by large retrenchments in public expenditure and by readjustment of the tariff to suit the needs of those industries that are languishing or dying out in this country, and that from now on the motto should be that every one who undertakes to furnish a dollar's worth of goods to this government is to give a hundred cents of value. If that is done, I am not a pessimist in regard to this country, but an optimist. But I do say that this country cannot and I think will not afford very much longer to pay $3 for one dollar's worth of goods as we have been doing in the last few years. Hon. gentlemen know that that has been the case, as instance after instance of it has been given. I believe that this government has now gone so far in that direction that the people have their eye upon it and have decided that the next time an appeal is made to them, the hon. leader of the opposition, R. L. Borden, is the man they will select to form the next government of this country, and then we shall have a clean, pure and honest administration.

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and the debate adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Fisher, House adjourned at 10.57 p.m.

---

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, March 20, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No 124) for the relief of Andrew Walker—Mr. Clarke.

Bill (No. 131) respecting the Occidental Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Duncan Ross.

Bill (No. 132) to incorporate the Standard Accident and Guarantee Company.—Mr. Macdonell.

Bill (No. 123) to amend the Gold and Silver Marking Act.—Mr. Fisher.

Bill (No. 133) to amend the Boards of Trade Act.—Mr. Fielding.

DEPORTATION OF HINDUS FROM VANCOUVER.

Mr. R. G. MACPHERSON (Vancouver). Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of the Interior, in consequence of an article which appears in this morning's 'Citizen,' which I will read :

122 Hindus detained—Chief justice induced to sign habeas corpus order.

Vancouver, March 19.—Developments in connection with the ordered deportation of Hindus who arrived by the steamer 'Monteagle' are expected to-day. Late yesterday afternoon the 'Empress of Japan' cleared for Yokohama with only 35 of the 183 men ordered to be deported, on board. The 35 were deported because they are either ill or penniless, and no one attempted to keep them in the country.

The chief justice yesterday gave to counsel for the Canadian Pacific Railway an order for bringing into court to-day of the bodies of 142 Hindus on habeas corpus proceedings. This order was obtained without consultation with the officers or the counsel for the Dominion government. These officers now claim that the affidavits which induced the chief justice to give the order purported to be signed by the Hindus in custody of the government, who have never signed anything since arriving in Vancouver.

Dr. Munro, immigration inspector, on Tuesday ordered the deportation of all the Hindus by the 'Empress,' and yesterday gave no permission for her leaving port without taking them. Government officials therefore declare that the Canadian Pacific Railway is liable for $14,000.

I would like to ask the hon. the Minister of the Interior if he has any information in relation to this matter, if this despatch is true, and if there has been such a high handed proceeding on the part of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I would like to ask him also if the government have taken any action, or purpose taking any action, in face of their own well defined orders, which were evidently not carried out by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The matter has been brought to the attention of the Department of the Interior, and has been the subject of considerable communication, by reason of a telegram from Dr. Munro, which I will read :

Vancouver, British Columbia, March 18.
W. D. Scott,
Superintendent of Immigration, Ottawa.

Canadian Pacific Railway refused to obey deportation order for 142 Hindus ex 'Monteagle' claiming they obtained order from Chief Justice Hunter to detain until to-morrow. Order obtained illegally, as I or no one else connected with government was served with writ or anything else, thereby giving no opportunity to oppose: would recommend action at once to hold 'Empress' at Victoria. Have notified company that penalty will be exacted.

(Sgd.) A. S. MUNRO.

Dr. Munro has been instructed to hold these people until the legal proceedings have been decided. The Department of Justice have been communicated with in order to ensure proceedings being taken to exact the penalty, if this can be done by process of law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What policy has been adopted in connection with the entrance into Canada of Japanese and Hindoos respectively ?

Mr. OLIVER. The same policy is being followed in each case, both Japanese and Hindus are subject to the same provision of exclusion or deportation. The provisions of the Act or the regulations which apply to Japanese and Hindus, I may say, apply equally to all other people.

PASSAGE OF UNITED STATES WARSHIPS THROUGH CANALS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would ask the Prime Minister whether any permission has recently been asked in connection with the passage of United States war vessels through the canals to the Great Lakes or whether any negotiations are now pending in connection with obtaining such permission.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No negotiations are pending upon any such subject. Occasionally permission has been asked by the American authorities to pass not a war vessel but a training ship through the canals and permission has been granted.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding, that the Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Brandon). Mr. Speaker, I desire at the outset to congratulate the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) upon the most excellent address which he has given us in his presentation of the financial affairs of the country during the last financial year. I have read his speech with great care and I think the members on both sides will agree that the hon. gentleman's presentation was as nearly a model of what a budget speech ought to be as it would be possible to have. We have the advantage of having in that address a most lucid and satisfactory explanation of the financial affairs of the country in a very small compass and therefore in such shape that it is not difficult for any person to secure a clear and definite idea of the many and complicated financial transactions of the country during the period to which it refers.

My hon. friend who followed him (Mr. Foster) has given us, as usual, a lengthy and able disquisition upon the affairs of the country for the last 20 or 25 years, and while I do not desire in the slightest degree to detract from the value of the hon. gentleman's utterances, I may say that I do not think the requirements of debate necessitate a continued discussion of subjects which have long since passed or should have passed into the limbo of forgotten things. I do not believe that either the House or the country takes more than a languid interest in the question whether the rate of taxation from 1878 to 1896 was 31·45 per cent or 31·42 per cent. I believe that while those comparisons might have been of some use during the period which immediately followed the accession of the right hon. gentleman who now leads the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to office, their usefulness has long since passed away. and with all deference might I suggest that while hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are no doubt quite justified in exercising their own judgment as to what they should put before the country when they appeal to the electors for support in political addresses outside of this House, in this House at least it would be to our own advantage and to the advantage of the country if we should debate rather what we are doing and propose to do than what we have done during a long period of years.

There is one point of real importance in connection with the presentation of the budget by the Minister of Finance, that is as to the question of the raising of revenue. It is the most important question perhaps with which the Finance Minister deals in his budget speech. While most of the information given is before the House and the country in one form or another in the books that are furnished to us, the principles adopted in the raising of the revenue are properly a subject of debate when the Finance Minister makes his financial statement in the House, and it is of interest then for us to know what are the differences between the gentlemen on this side of the House and their political opponents in connection with this question. We have adopted a tariff which has now been in force for a good many years in Canada; it is a tariff based upon certain principles, inaugurated some years ago under the financial administration of the present Minister of Finance. That tariff has been avowedly based upon the idea of a moderately protective tariff with certain features such as the preference and the commercial treaties, &c., introduced for the purpose of giving elasticity to our commercial system. That has been the general line of our tariff legislation and it is interesting for us now, after it has been in operation for a good many years, when it is subjected to criticism by gentlemen on the other side of the House, to note just in what respects they attack the method of raising the revenue, the general financial system and how they would alter it if they had the opportunity of doing so. We have listened to the hon. gentleman from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) who gave a disquisition upon the finances of the country, but we have not found anything in that lengthy address which indicates that gentlemen on the other side of the House are able to find fault successfully with the financial system which has been inaugurated and is now being carried out by the Minister of Finance. That is to say, we do not find in any definite expression of opinion or any resolution proposed by hon. gentlemen opposite that they are able to find a distinct and definite fault with the system of raising the revenue or would change that system if they had the opportunity of doing so to-morrow. If, therefore, that system is capable of sustaining the criticism of gentlemen on the other side of the House, and they are not able to suggest an improvement, we may fairly conclude that the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that he thought the tariff to be fairly well adjusted to the needs of Canada at the present time, is a statement well justified by the facts.

The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) spoke as to the financial necessities of the country during the next few years and of the possible difficulty that the Minister of Finance would find in conducting the financial affairs of the country owing to the fact that he would require to renew a certain number of loans; and upon this point it may not be out of place to give an expression of opinion. The financial condition of the world is a subject that it is important for us to understand and to take advantage of in dealing with our own finances. There are a few features in connection with the financial situation which I think might give to the Minister of Finance and the government and the House a certain amount of confidence in coming to the conclusion that no immediate difficulty awaits us.

The fact of the matter is that the late panic in the United States, and that which approached a panic in other countries, was due very largely to an excess of speculation in certain quarters. We all know that for some time previous to that panic it was difficult to secure proper attention to investments in what might be called gilt-edged securities, such as the bonds and debentures of Canada are. It was found that those who had money to invest were rather inclined to invest it in securities of a somewhat speculative character, and it will, I fancy, be found in the light of the result that has followed in the European money market that it will be less difficult to float government loans during the next two or three or four years than it has been in the last two, three or four years, and that, owing to the fact that investors have ceased to have confidence in speculative investments, there will be an accumulation of money which will be available for investment in government bonds, so that the Minister of Finance, in all probability, will find it much easier during the next few years than he has found it in the past to place his loans upon the market. I do not doubt, from what little knowledge I have of the circumstances, that that will be the result. Therefore, while I do not minimize the necessity for caution and care in connection with the management of our finances, I do not think the Finance Minister need have any fear that the credit of Canada will not stand the very slight strain which will be put upon it.

It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to detain the House at great length, and I propose to devote the little time I intend to take up to suggesting what I think ought to be done in the future rather than to discussing these things which have been done in the past.

The first thing to which I wish to direct attention is the desirability of taking action in a direction which has been suggested in the public press at various times and which has received consideration in some quarters, but which, I think, has never been discussed in the House. I refer to the establishment of a thoroughly organized department, or rather the changing or reorganization of a department for the purpose of dealing thoroughly and completely with the question of foreign trade in this country. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) had a few grains of wheat in the volume of —I will not call it chaff—but the volume of oratory which he presented to us, and one of the grains of wheat I detected was his suggestion that some department of government ought to be organized in such a way as to collect carefully and systematically information in regard to the internal business of the country. But my hon. friend might have gone further, because, while that information is of value, it is of value largely for statistical purposes unless it be utilized in another way, and it ought to be utilized by a complementary system of Canadian consular trade agents in other countries, who should be thoroughly qualified to deal with the questions which would come before them. I shall simply bring this matter before the House so that it may be discussed, and so that in the future—I hope the near future—some action may be taken. Nor do I intend to reflect in the slightest degree upon the Department of Trade and Commerce as it exists at present. It was organized for a certain purpose, and when it was organized, as I understand, it was largely supposed to be a statistical department for the purpose of putting in form the statistics which were practically prepared by other departments of the government. From time to time it has enlarged its scope under the pressure of circumstances, but it has never been decided by the government or by parliament, as a matter of policy, that that department should be organized for the purpose of collecting and furnishing the necessary information respecting trade matters and organizing a thorough and complete system of trade agencies in other countries. I believe the time has come when such a system of trade agencies ought to be established. If hon. gentlemen will look at the reports and papers which are available with regard to trade at the present time, in the case of our trade with Japan, to take it as an illustration, they will find that at present we are not getting our share of the trade with that country. They will find also that we are actually furnishing the goods to the United States merchants who are selling them to Japan and getting a considerable portion of the profit in that trade, all of which ought to come to Canada. That is because the proper means are not furnished for bringing Canadian merchants and manufacturers into communication with the would-be purchasers in Japan. I believe also that we could largely increase our trade with Great Britain; that we could, owing to the French treaty, largely increase our trade with France; and that we could greatly increase our trade with South Africa, South America, the land of political revolutions, is at present going through an industrial revolution; South America, populated as it is by a people who have not the capacity that northern peoples have for commerce and manufacturing industry, is going to furnish a great market for the manufacturing and industrial nations of the world. Canada ought to get a share of that trade, and we ought to have the question looked into thoroughly and properly by competent men. But unless we have a proper system and have men properly trained for the purpose, it is impossible we should get the advantages that otherwise would accrue. Now, it is perfectly true that we have not got any men in Canada at the present time qualified to act in this capacity, but in the process of organization we should take the best men we could get. If the Minister of Trade and Commerce went out to-day to look for a commercial agent to send to South America, I do not suppose that in the whole Dominion of Canada he could get a man thoroughly qualified for the post. In the first place, that man would have to speak Spanish; and, in the next place, he would have to be thoroughly acquainted with the commercial relations of this country, and have at his finger's end the commercial statistics. We could not get such a man as that to-day. But if we can train scientists and geologists to go into the field; if we can train men for other pursuits in life, surely we can go to the trouble of training men to deal with that most important subject in connection with the commerce of Canada. Our universities are turning out graduates by the hundreds every year, men of the best qualification, the best blood and the best brains of the country. Many of these young men would be glad to take a special course to qualify themselves for positions such as I speak of if they only had the assurance that after they had gone through the necessary preparation they would get employment. I do not desire to enlarge upon this subject; I simply desire to put it before the House in the hope that its importance may be recognized, and in order that the government may give the matter full and careful consideration, and if possible take some action.

Connected with that is another subject on which I wish to touch briefly. In doing so it may bring me into slight conflict with the rules of the House, because this matter is mentioned in resolutions which are on the Order Paper, but as I do not expect to be here when these resolutions are discussed, I may be permitted to trespass on the courtesy of the House to express my opinion. Closely connected with the subject to which I have referred is another subject which has been discussed in this country during the last year, and which will probably be discussed at still greater length in this House before the session is over. I refer to the question of reform of the civil service. This, I think, is a question of great importance. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham), while leader of the opposition in the Ontario legislature, declared himself in favour of the reform of the civil service of his province. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), greatly to his credit, I think, has, for the first time in Canada, put in the forefront of his platform a plank in favour of civil service reform.

For my part I would be delighted if the right hon. leader of the government could join with the hon. leader of the opposition and perform for the public of Canada the very great service of removing the public service entirely from political patronage and putting it on a higher plane. We are all members of parliament, we have all been through this business ourselves and we know all about it. I am not going to discuss it at length, but every member of parliament knows that the greatest nuisance in connection with public life concerns the dealing with questions of patronage. Every minister knows the same thing. It is an entire mistake if anybody supposes that dealing with these questions is a political advantage to the government in power. It is not a political advantage to the government in power, and it is no political advantage to any member of parliament. Take the case, for instance, of appointing a collector of customs or a postmaster; how many members of this House have ever got any advantage by the exercise of patronage in a case of that kind? Take the case of appointing a clerk to the customs office in Vancouver, or in Montreal or in Halifax; how is he appointed? The minister asks the member to make a recommendation, and the member writes to some one in one of these cities, he gets back the name of a person, whom he does not know and as to whose qualifications he knows nothing, and the man is appointed without the minister knowing anything about him or his qualifications. There is no other way to do it under the present system. It was done by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House when they were in power; it is done by us when we are in power. Possibly owing to the natural virtue of Canadian citizens the results have uot been as bad as they might have been, yet, obviously, this is not the best system under which the public service of the country can be carried on. There is a better system, and, Mr. Speaker, I want to say this, that while I know the feelings of many members of parliament upon the subject, I am sure that Canada will outgrow this system pretty soon, that the people of Canada will demand that it be changed, and it is the duty of a progressive parliament to anticipate the enlightened sentiment of the country and put these reforms into practical shape before they are forced to do so by the abuses which the people will no longer stand. I want to say another word on this subject. In England they tell me that the graduates of Oxford, of Cambridge and of the great public educational institutions are constantly appointed in large numbers to the public service and a distinguished graduate of Oxford told me a few months ago in London that the greatest blow that could be given to the great universities in Great Britain would be for the government to withdraw that patronage from them because the fact that large numbers of these graduates are going into the public service sustains the work of the universities and enables them to understand the work for which they are preparing their young men and to keep it steadily in view. What have we in Canada? From one end of Canada to the other we have universities. In my judgment they are most creditable to the people of Canada. In the face of great difficulties these institutions of learnings have been established, they are turning young men out by the hundreds every year and every person who is familiar with college life in Canada knows that perhaps there are not more than half of the men who are trained by our universities, which are carried on at great expense by the country either directly or indirectly, who want to go into professional or business life on their own account. They prefer for one reason or another to have some clerical occupation and we all know perfectly well that thousands of these young men have left Canada and gone elsewhere for the purpose of getting the occupation that they could not get here. All those graduates of Canadian universities, instead of seeking occupations elsewhere, should go into the public service of Canada. It would be a good thing for the public service and it would establish a connection between the educational institutions and the public service of Canada, which would be of the greatest possible benefit, on the one hand to the universities, and on the other, to the public service because there would not be that divorce between our educational institutions and our public service which exists at the present time. Our educational institutions now have many men who are thoroughly up in connection with the study of sociological questions and questions of that kind. We are now passing from the condition of a simply pastoral community, and we have questions arising of the most complicated character in connection with our affairs, we have to call in from time to time the services of men who have made a special study of these questions and it is in the highest degree desirable that between the educational institutions and the government there should be a close and intimate relationship established. I believe that the development of this idea in connection with civil service reform would be of the greatest benefit to the public service as well as to our educational institutions.

There are a couple of questions in regard to the western part of our country which I desire to direct attention for a few moments. I need not, I think, apologize in this House for directing attention to western affairs because I think we have all arrived at the conclusion that the prosperity of the whole of Canada depends very largely upon the prosperity of that section of the community and we look for the continued growth and development of eastern Canada to the advantages which shall be derived directly and indirectly from western growth. There has been a great deal said in connection with the subject of immigration. I am not going to discuss that subject at length but only one phase of it. While there may be some questions in regard to the character of the immigrants, I think there is nobody who is familar with the facts of the case will say that there is any doubt that the immigrants we have received from the western states have been, in almost every case, of the most unexceptionable character and have contributed very greatly to the development of our western country. Further than that I desire to say that I do not think that any country could possibly get a better class of settlers than the western American settlers who have come into our Northwest provinces. They are vigorous, resourceful, law-abiding, they become citizens the day they arrive in the country and at the earliest possible moment they become producers. For the last year or two there has been some falling off in connection with the movement from the western states, but I am glad to say that the movement has set in again and that the prospects for the coming season with regard to immigration from the western states are remarkably bright. In connection with that matter I desire to make a suggestion which I trust the government will see its way clear to carry out, and that is in regard to the railway grant lands which are now in the hands of the government for disposal. I find that of the railway land grant lands, that is to say the odd numbered sections reserved by the government in former years for satisfying land grants to railway companies, there has been left over after the complete satisfaction of all railway land grants, something like 30,000,000 acres and that, permit me to say, is not land which lies in what we may call the northern part of the territory but is in a portion of the prairie provinces which has been surveyed and is therefore regarded as being available for immediate settlement. What I suggest in connection with this matter is that this land should be thrown open for homestead entry. I am satisfied that nothing would do more to promote the prosperity of Canada or to increase the stream of settlers from the western states, a most desirable class of settlers, than to throw these lands open for homestead entry and let them be homesteaded by these western settlers at the earliest possible moment, with certain exceptions to which I desire to refer in a moment or two.

Speaking generally I am satisfied that the experience of Canada in the last twelve or fifteen years has shown that the foundation of the success of her colonization policy has been the offering of free lands and that the putting of a small price on these lands would not be a benefit to the country because that would to some extent cripple the settlers and to the same extent retard production. I am satisfied that the result of throwing these lands open for homestead entry would be at once to double the stream of immigration from the United States, and I venture the suggestion that if that were done we should not hear, after six months from the opening of these lands to settlement, any more about dull times or lack of confidence in that western country. But I would make certain reserves in connection with these lands. I would not open for homestead entry the whole of the 30,000,000 acres, but would reserve one-tenth or about 3,000,000 acres in order that they might be held unsold until a later day, some ten or twelve years from now, under the same plan as is followed with regard to the school lands. If you reserve 3,000,000, in ten or twelve years from now that will be worth from $10 to $12 an acre at the least, and you will have provided a fund of some $30,000,000 out of which the government will recoup itself for a certain outlay it will have to incur at a very early day. I refer to the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway. The people of western Canada are set in their view that the construction of that railway at a very early date is an essential to the prosperity and proper development of our country, and we will all agree that it ought not to be constructed in such a way as to impose a burden on the exchequer of Canada. I am not going to anticipate the debate that will probably take place on that subject in a few days, but it is clear, from the information which has been placed before us, that the navigation of the bay is practicable three and a half to four months in the year, and that the navigation of the straits can be rendered safe by our taking the proper means. It is perfectly clear also that there are great resources in the bay and the territory surrounding it. Instead of the land from the present terminus of the Canadian Northern, some 500 miles to the bay, being barren, it has great resources which, if properly developed, will prove of untold value. Added to those facts, there is this, that north of the surveyed land in Alberta and Saskatchewan, north of the 30,000,000 acres to which I have referred as being surveyed and now in the territory immediately eligible for settlement, there are 100,000,000 acres of land which will be available for disposal by the government and for settlement as soon as closer communication is afforded. The opening of that northern territory by the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway is what will bring that 100,000,000 acres into communication with the rest of the world and give it a value that will far exceed any possible expenditure on the construction of the railway itself. If the plan I suggest should be followed, there would be absolutely no burden imposed on the exchequer of the country. This question of the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway has been before parliament for some twenty years, but so far no government has submitted to parliament any proposition of a definite character. The question is surrounded with difficulties. One of these difficulties is that, under any arrangement which might be suggested or proposed by a government to a company to assist the company in building the railway, the government would have to provide sufficent money to build the railroad, and probably more, in order to induce any company to assume the burdens they would have to assume in connection with its construction. So that there has been extreme difficulty in any government facing the question and devising a proposition likely to receive the approval of the people. I am not an advocate of the construction and operation of railways by the government. I have no faith whatever in the idea that when a public utility is being properly carried on by a corporation there is any sense in the government taking it out of the hands of the individuals or corporations and driving them out of business on the plea that the government can do the work better. Everybody knows it cannot. For my part I have not the slightest faith in that idea, and I would like that other gentlemen who likewise do not believe in it in the slightest degree would say they do not. Too many of us are inclined to hedge on questions of this kind because we think public opinion may be strong upon them. But of course public opinion is apt to be strong on a question in an improper direction if the men who take a healthy view of it are afraid to say what they think. I am not in favour of the government acquiring public utilities when these utilities are well carried on by individuals or corporations, simply on the idea that the government will do better. But there are cases in which a company cannot be got to undertake an enterprise on a commercial basis. A case of that kind was the construction of the Temiskaming and Northern Railway. I think the Ontario government were perfectly justified in building that railway because the value of that northern country was at the time unknown and this enterprise was taken up simply as a colonization proposition. In like manner the Dominion government would be justified in building the 500 miles of railway to Hudson bay as a government work provided it first took the precaution to protect itself by making a reservation of land which would be ample to pay the exchequer every dollar of the money expended. Such a reservation would pay the cost of the railway, the wharfs, the elevators and everything connected with it, besides the lighting and buoying of the bay, the surveying of the channel and all kindred expenses—all of which would be recouped entirely to the government out of the proceeds of the land reserves, and thus the whole thing would not cost the people a copper.

I am taking up, I think, the time of the House longer than I ought, but I am going to ask the House to listen to me while I say a few words upon a subject which has been somewhat discussed in the press and which is known, whether rightly or wrongly, as the All Red Route. I may say at the outset that I have not the slightest intention of offering to the House an exhaustive discussion of the subject because that would involve going into details and figures which would be wearisome and would not add anything in the long run to an intelligent appreciation of the subject. If the government should bring this matter before the House, they will no doubt furnish all the figures and details and hon. members will have then an opportunity of studying them better than they would if I were to give them at present. When the conference, which took place last spring between the various colonies of the empire, met in Great Britain, they passed a resolution which no doubt hon. members are quite familiar with, but which, for the purpose of forming a basis for discussion, I shall take the liberty of reading. The resolution of the conference is asfollows :

That, in the opinion of this conference, the interests of the empire demand that, in so far as practicable, its different portions should be connected by the best possible means of mail communcation, travel and transportation, and that, to this end, it is advisable that Great Britain should be connected with Canada, and, through Canada, with Australia and New Zealand by the best service available within reasonable cost;

That for the purpose of carrying the above project into effect, such financial support as may be necessary should be contributed to Britain, Canada, Australia and New Zealand in equitable proportions.

Now, some of the members of the press in Canada have asked : What is the scheme known as the 'All-red Route' ?—how did it originate ?—where did it come from ? Well, this is the scheme and this is where it originated—in the passing of this resolution by the conference. All the parties to the conference agreed to the resolution, so that this resolution is the unanimous expression of opinion of all the participants in that conference. Therefore, we may take it as fairly and definitely settled that Great Britain, Canada, New Zealand and Australia have committed themselves to the principle of an improvement in their means of communication, the greatest and the best improvement that can be made at reasonable expense.

My business took me to England last fall. Before going I had some conversation with my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) upon this subject; and, as I had taken a great interest in the matter, it was arranged that I should, informally and unofficially, do what I could to promote the movement in favour of carrying out this resolution. I think the House will readily understand that there are a great many things to be done before a formal resolution of this kind will result in anything practical. There are diverse interests to conciliate or overcome, there is a vast amount of ignorance upon the various departments of the subject to dissipate, and there are difficulties of an internal character in regard to negotiations to be surmounted. Then, there was the question—a very serious question in Great Britain—whether public opinion would justify the government of that country in undertaking a large financial support for this scheme. While all the different governments were united in their declaration of a desire to carry out this proposition, it would be a different thing, as we all can understand, before they could be asked to agree upon a definite proposition as to how much should be devoted to the work. I think the position of things in England improved somewhat during last year, and I did what I could to bring about an improvement during the short visit I made to London. I had the opportunity of discussing the subject, unofficially and informally, with the President of the Board of Trade, Mr. Lloyd-George, on several occasions, and with the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The conversation we had, of course, may not be repeated, and, in any event, as they were not official or formal, they could not be made the basis of an engagement. But I may say without indiscretion that I feel satisfied, as a result of what I saw and heard, that, when Canada, Australia and New Zealand go to the government of Great Britain with a definite proposition upon the subject, they can count upon not only serious but sympathetic consideration for that proposition. That is as far as one can go in connection with the subject, and as far as we would expect anybody to go even though we did bring it formally before them at an earlier stage of the negotiations.

Now, what, in reality was the scheme which the delegates of the Imperial Conference had in mind when they brought this subject forward ? They had something definite in mind, though it was not set out in the resolution. What they had in mind was a service from Great Britain to Canada of steamships equal in equipment and service to the best upon the Atlantic and giving an average speed of 24 knots. They had in mind also the idea of the fastest possible service across Canada, and a service from Vancouver to New Zealand, and thence to Australia, by ships of about 9,000 tons burden, making an average speed of 18 knots on the Pacific. The discussions that have been held have been based upon the idea that the service would be of this class.

As matters stand at present, New Zealand is very badly served in regard to her mail service. The service by way of San Francisco has broken down entirely, and, at present, New Zealand gets her mail by way of Australia, the service taking 38 days from London, England, to New Zealand. The service by the plan proposed would take mail from London to the Canadian port in less than 5 days, to Vancouver in 9 days and from London to New Zealand in not more than 25 days. Thus, New Zealand would gain 13 days in her mail service.

Australia would not gain anything in time, because her service goes the other way; but she would have an alternative route which would be of considerable value to her. I may say while on that point, that it is admitted by all parties that the route for this Pacific service must be by way of New Zealand to Australia. There are technical steamship reasons for that; but the fact is admitted that if you are to have a fast service from Vancouver, it must go to New Zealand first and then to Australia. There are no difficulties upon the Pacific in regard to this service—that is, no natural difficulties; the natural difficulties are all upon the Atlantic side.

There are a number of things that have to be considered in connection with the service. The first series of questions which we have to consider—which I do not desire to discuss at length, but only briefly to mention—relate to the physical side. Calculations have been made and discussions have been carried on on the basis of the service being from Liverpool to Halifax in winter and from Liverpool to Quebec in the summer. I have no desire to express any opinion as to the subject where the terminal points should be. If I were to express an opinion on that subject, that opinion would be the one I have already expressed—that the winter port should be Halifax and the summer port Quebec. But, obviously, no one can be committed to that at the present time. The governments of Great Britain and Canada have to agree upon the subject, and then they have to agree with the company that is to carry the scheme into effect, and then will be the time for the question of ports to be settled. Meantime, we can only discuss it hypothetically on the basis of these ports, and consider how we are to meet any difficulties that may be raised in regard to the physical questions of the case. The distances may be compared as follows:

Liverpool to Halifax, 2,485 knots.
Liverpool to Quebec, south of Cape Race, 2,801 knots.
Liverpool to Quebec, via Belle Isle, 2,633 knots.
Liverpool to New York by the shortest actual route is 3,026 knots.

Thus, Halifax has an advantage of 541 knots over New York; Quebec, by the southern route, has an advantage of 225 knots, and by the Belle Isle route of 393 knots over New York. Now, the computation of time for the best steamers is generally made from Daunt's Rock, just outside of Queenstown, to Sandy Hook. While this affords a mode of comparing the performance of different vessels, it does not give us much information as to what the actual length of the voyage is in time. As a matter of fact a 24-knot boat going from Liverpool to Halifax, and allowing four hours for loss of time and for delays in getting away, would go in four days and twelve hours; from Liverpool to Quebec via Belle Isle, allowing six hours for delay, it would go in four days and twenty hours, from Liverpool to Quebec via Cape Race it would go in five days and six hours. The actual time of the 'Lusitania' when she first broke the record on the Atlantic, was five days, eighteen hours and fourteen minutes, and I think she has clipped an hour or two off that since. So the time saved as between Liverpool and New York and Halifax would be one whole day and six hours, via Cape Race, twelve hours, via Belle Isle, 22 hours. That gives the actual saving in time, taking it for granted that you have a boat of the same class as regards speed as the 'Lusitania' or the 'Mauretania.'

Now as to the possibility of getting a boat of that kind, there can be no serious question, because I have in my possession, for the purpose of getting information on the subject, a definite offer from a company whose ability to construct a vessel like that is beyond question. The mere mention of the name would be quite sufficient to satisfy everybody. I have a definite offer for the construction of a vessel of 20,000 tons, equipped in every respect as the 'Lusitania' or 'Mauretania,' and capable of making 24 knots in ordinary weather, or a 25 knot boat. So it would not be necessary to have a boat constructed of the size of the 'Mauretania' or 'Lusitania' in order to get a speed of 24 knots. That is a most important point, because we could not put a boat of that size upon the Canadian route, there would not be sufficient traffic for it. I may say upon the question of the cost of ships, that an estimate was got from a responsible firm at the request of one of the officers of the Canadian government, so that there might be definite information on the subject.

There has been a good deal of discussion regarding the physical difficulties of the route. I had occasion to make some remarks in London on that phase of the question, and at once a very serious discussion arose as to the accuracy of the statements I had made, and the hostility of a certain portion of the press became distinctly manifest. And when it is remembered that the insurance underwriters have a distinct interest in maintaining a certain position in regard to Canadian traffic, it will be evident what the source of some at least of the hostility is. I took the trouble to go very carefully through the press criticisms of the remarks I made, and revise and examine again the source of the information, and I did not see that any successful attempt had been made to controvert the substantial accuracy of what I had said. What I said was substantially this, that so far as the question of fogs is concerned upon the route between Halifax and Liverpool, that had been fully and thoroughly investigated by the American Hydrographic Survey, and we were in a position to know—not to surmise, but to know—by actual observation of the most careful and scientific character, what was the prevalence of fog upon the Canadian route, and what was the prevalence of fog upon the American route, and what the relative percentage of fog is. The Hydrographic Survey have fog charts prepared in which they show the percentage of days during which fog is met with. You can draw a line upon these charts from Halifax to New York and from Halifax to Quebec, and the line will run through a series of squares which are marked showing the percentage of fog upon those particular days, and you can average out the exact percentage of fogs which any vessel will meet in certain months in the year by going along that line. As a result of the comparison, I think those members of the House who have not given special attention to the subject will be gratified to know that the tabulated result of the comparison shows that the average fog on the Canadian route is three and a half per cent, and the average on the New York route is eight per cent. As a matter of fact the heaviest fog is just outside New York for a short distance eastward. On the New York route the maximum fog averaged on a quarter of a voyage—dividing the voyage into quarters so as to get as large a scope of comparison as possible—the New York maximum fog average is twenty-seven and a half per cent, and the Canadian maximum is twenty-three per cent; the New York maximum on the whole voyage is sixteen per cent and the Canadian maximum eleven per cent. So the idea that the course followed by vessels on the Canadian route is seriously impeded by fog from Halifax eastward is an entire mistake. As a matter of fact, there is twice as much fog on the American route as on the Canadian route.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask my hon. friend how long a period these averages are based upon?

Mr. SIFTON. I cannot answer my hon. friend exactly. I will get him the chart, so that he may acquire definite information. But it goes back for a considerable length of time, and the percentage is worked out very carefully by the hydrographic office at Washington.

Mr. SAM HUGHES Has the hon. gentleman any record of the distance from the shore of the fog banks on the United States route and those on the Canadian route?

Mr. SIFTON. The chart is a map of the ocean, and the percentage of fog is shown in little square units upon the surface of the water, so that you can see exactly what the fog is and what is the percentage.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are the dense fog banks nearer the Canadian or the American shore?

Mr. SIFTON. The American chart does not extend further than just inside the gulf of the St. Lawrence, or in that neighbourhood. I was going to refer to the fact to which my hon. friend has called attention. After you get out of the region which has been charted by the American Hydrographic Survey, the geographer of this government is making a further chart. He has not yet got the whole information, but from a conversation I had with him a little while ago I think the result will show that there is not a large percentage of fog even in the gulf, and that we shall be agreeably disappointed when the results of that inquiry are carefully tabulated. I have referred to that matter because I found in London a most determined stand taken by everybody with whom I discussed the question of fogs. They seem to have the idea, which it is almost impossible to eradicate, that on the Canadian route the further north you go the worse you find the fog, whereas as a matter of fact the further north you go the less fog you find upon the ocean.

Then there is the question of ice. I discussed that very fully and had others discuss that with Canadian Pacific captains. As a matter of fact there is no serious difficulty on the subject of ice at all. The captain of the 'Empress of Ireland,' who is a most experienced and competent man, told me that the ice did not give him any embarrassment at all, that it merely had the effect, from December to May, of requiring a slight deviation to the south. The ice comes down by the coast of Newfoundland, and from December to May there is necessarily a slight deviation to the south, growing a little more each month until the month of May, and then they are able to take a more northerly route again. So all the navigators agree that there is no serious danger to be apprehended from the subject of ice.

On the subject of losses on the St. Lawrence, we had considerable discussion on that question in London. An attempt was made to show that the statistics that were furnished by those who advocate this route were not reliable. I sent to the office of the Board of Trade Mr. White, the Canadian geographer, and he went carefully through all the statistics furnished by the Board of Trade, with the result that it was shown that the figures we had given were substantially accurate.

The difficulty is that when they are talking about losses upon the St. Lawrence route they count in against you every little coasting vessel that happens to run against a rock, everything in the shape of a vessel of more than a few hundred tons is counted a vessel lost on the St. Lawrence. You do not find this on any other route in the world. A vessel going out of New York harbour and perhaps running into the coast 100 miles north of New York is not counted against New York, but they follow some such system on the St. Lawrence route and it takes a careful examination to show the real facts in connection with the St. Lawrence route.

The truth of the matter is that from 1880 to 1907 between Quebec and Liverpool and between Halifax and Liverpool, which are the routes of which we are talking, only five passenger vessels, properly so called, were lost, and passenger vessels are of course all we have to consider. That is not a bad record. Upon investigation three of these were shown to have been lost on account of lack of experience or lack of care on the part of the navigators. One was lost in such a way that we may fairly consider the loss was due to the dangers of the route. One other was lost in such a way that investigation showed that if proper soundings had been taken the vessel could not have been lost. Thus from 1880 to 1907 on this route only one passenger vessel, properly so called, has been lost owing to the dangers of the route. Obviously the question of the dangers of the route has been exaggerated by the opponents of the scheme.

Careful investigation has been made for the purpose of ascertaining the cost of such a service as I have been speaking of, and while it is very difficult to arrive at anything very clear and definite upon the subject, an effort has been made to make the calculation as definite as possible and I think the conclusion which has been arrived at and which I am about to state is a safe and reasonable conclusion and will be found to be justified by the facts, if an attempt is made to verify them.

It is estimated that a 24 knot weekly service between Great Britain and Canada of the character I have spoken of and a fortnightly service between Vancouver and New Zealand and Sydney, Australia, would, in the whole, cost for subsidy £1,000,000 per annum. It has been suggested that a reasonable allocation of the proportions of that million pounds sterling to the various contracting parties would be:

| | |
|---|---|
| Australia.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | £ 75,000 |
| New Zealand.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 100,000 |
| Canada .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 325,000 |
| Great Britain.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 500,000 |

Thus the three colonies concerned would contribute about one-half the total amount of subsidy and Great Britain the other half. I think it might safely be said that New Zealand is willing to give the £100,000. As to Australia it is not so clear what her present position is. Great Britain awaits a definite proposal on the part of the colonies concerned, Australia, New Zealand and Canada, and we may therefore say that the present position of the project is that it awaits definite action on the part of the government and parliament of Canada looking to the co-operation of New Zealand and Australia and then to a definite proposition being presented to the government of Great Britain.

At the present time, judging from the payments of last year, we pay about $680,000 a year for the Canadian-Australian service and for the Atlantic mail service, so that by the proposed distribution we would have to pay in addition to what we are paying now for these services from $900,000 to $950,000. That, therefore, would represent the amount of money which Canada would have to pay in order to bring about this very greatly improved service.

When you come to consider the various arguments that may be advanced in favour of this proposal, you enter at once upon a very large field, a field that I do not propose to enter this afternoon. Briefly I think it may be conceded that the growth of Great Britain, of Canada, of Australia and of New Zealand has now arrived at that stage which justifies the people of those countries in coming to the conclusion that they are entitled to have the best service, the best method of communication that modern skill and modern science will enable them to have. They are all great, all wealthy, all increasing in prosperity, and, having united themselves together in an imperial organization—because at the imperial conference they did unite themselves into an imperial organization, the significance of which it is hardly possible to overestimate—and it is not less significant because the organization is more or less loose in its character; they at the same time declared that it was in the best interests of the organization that the best possible means of communication should prevail between these countries. It is now the question for the different component parts of the empire concerned to consider whether they are willing to pay the price. So far as Canada is concerned, what may be said to be the argument in favour of it from a commercial standpoint? You can put it in two or three words. At the present time, mail, passenger and freight service of the best and quickest character from here to Great Britain goes through the United States, and from Australia and New Zealand goes across the continent of Europe, it does not go by our own ports or our own territory. In other words, so far as travel and transportation are concerned, Canada is on the side street instead of on the main thoroughfare. What this proposition means is that Canada shall be put upon the thoroughfare instead of upon the side street. If I argued for a month I could not make it any plainer than that. All the great social, political and commercial advantages which come from being on the main avenue for this traffic would come to Canada if this scheme were carried into effect. There have been and there will be objections of a serious and difficult character to overcome. It has been said that certain corporations of an influential character are opposed to the project. That is so to some extent in Great Britain as in Canada. I have seen statements made, for instance, by men connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway that indicated in some degree hostility to the project. To what extent their hostility goes I am not in a position to say. But railway companies have been opposed to things in Canada before, and these things have nevertheless, come to pass. The Grand Trunk Railway was not in the early days very much enamoured of the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but the Canadian Pacific Railway was built, and in later days perhaps the Canadian Pacific Railway was not very much enamoured of the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific, but yet the Grand Trunk Pacific will be built. Thus, you cannot always look for guidance to the gentlemen who control the destinies of these great companies, and I for my part should feel very hopeful, nay sanguine, that if the matter is approached in a proper way we shall not have hostility on the part of these gentlemen or of the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other railway company in Canada. On the contrary, I would hope that if the governments of the colonies concerned met with the government of Great Britain, agreed upon a proper basis and decided upon this service being inaugurated, some means could be devised whereby the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canadian Northern Railway and the Intercolonial Railway would all join together for the purpose of making this scheme the great success it ought to be, and if they do this with the influences that will be placed behind it, I have no doubt there will be very little difficulty in making it that success. I shall not attempt to discuss the project in detail, or to give other reasons, many of which will occur to every one in support of the project, but I have thought that the time had come to make a few remarks upon the subject and generally to state the position as it is to-day in the hope that interest may thereby be further excited in the subject and that the government may feel itself justified at an early date in taking a decided position in connection with this project.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to detain the House long and I hope I shall be more successful in the fulfilment of that hope than the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Sifton) who has spoken for an hour and ten minutes, when I am sure he desired to speak only about 40 or 50 minutes. I have listened to many budget speeches and to many other speeches on the same subject during many years past but it seems to me that the budget this year is a little different from those of other years. This year the budget speech of the Finance Minister is different from what it has been in the past. It sounded like a valedictory; it was not so buoyant nor so hopeful as usual. True we were promised a little less expenditure, and also a great deal less revenue, and we were told to be prudent and to look out for the rocks ahead. Well, in troubled waters like these the man at the helm needs to be careful, and cautious, and far-seeing and I think it is just as well that the ship of state should change its pilot. To-day we were treated to a very able speech from the member from Brandon (Mr. Sifton) and that also partook of the characteristic of a valedictory. It was a moderate speech in a sense, and it would seem as if during the time he has been out of office he has somewhat mellowed his former ideas. Always interesting to listen to, the hon. gentleman was particularly interesting to-day, and he was not at all chary about giving his former colleagues in the government a great deal of advice on varied subjects. He seems to think that the government is not quite up to the mark; he feels they have not done as much for the Hudson bay route which has been before the country for twenty years as they might have done, and he certainly believes they have not taken sufficient interest in that famous all-red route about which we heard so much up to the opening of the present session but which since then seems to have vanished into thin air. It is quite possible that the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) having found it impossible to convince his colleagues privately, thinks he may now get the support of the House to force them to action in the direction which he desires. It is quite evident also that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) is not satisfied with the fiscal policy of the government. When he came here from the narrower sphere of political activity in the west in the year 1897, I do not think he expected to be a minister in a government which had a protective policy. It is certainly not what he had been preaching in the west and it was not in accordance with the advice which he had given to the premier when he visited Manitoba. But anyway, the hon. gentleman admitted to-day that the fiscal policy of Canada is a protective policy and he suggests that the opposition cannot criticise it because their policy is also a policy of protection. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that we do criticise the kind of protective policy which this government has put in force; let me tell him that we do think that a protective policy can not be properly nurtured by avowed enemies of protection. The hon. gentleman was frank enough to admit that the policy of the present government was a protective policy, but his fellow Liberals in this House and on the platform prefer to describe it as the 'Fielding Tariff.' Be that as it may, it is a tariff under which $15,000,000 worth of woollen goods have been imported into Canada to the destruction of the woollen industry of this country and to the great loss of the working men who are employed in that industry.

Let me say further that the Fielding tariff is a tariff by which millions of dollars worth of cotton, which should be made in Canada, have been imported here from foreign countries to the great detriment of the Canadian cotton industry. We shall therefore continue to criticise this policy inside the House and outside the House, and I hope we will be able to criticise it to such good effect that the people of Canada will realize that it is not a policy which conduces to the welfare of this country. My good friend the Minister of Customs, with that stentorian voice of his which shakes the walls of parliament, declared last night that he was perfectly satisfied that the policy in force to-day was the policy which the Liberal party promised before the elections of 1896 they would give effect to if returned to power.

Mr. PATERSON. I don't believe you were here at all last night.

Mr. BERGERON. Oh, yes, I was, and I never miss hearing my hon. friend, the Minister of Customs, when it is possible for me to do so. But let me remind him that I was here also when he used to thunder from these opposition benches in the good old days before 1896 and I remember him declaring—with an even louder voice in those days because he was younger—that an expenditure of $38,000,000 on the public service was driving this country to bankruptcy and ruin. But to-day the Minister of Customs is smiling and happy when his government is spending $120,000,000 a year in the same country and with practically the same population. However, hon. gentlemen opposite are more subdued than they were in former years; perhaps they see the handwriting on the wall, and perhaps it is that some of them like the member for Brandon, are putting their house in order and telling the people of Canada what they would have done had they been allowed to remain in power longer. Referring again to the member for Brandon, rumour had it last fall that there was a desire on the part of the Prime Minister to get him back into the cabinet. We were told that a minister of the Crown was despatched to the shores of the St. Lawrence where the hon. gentleman was peacefully residing, with a request that he should again become a minister of the Crown, and the same rumour had it that the member for Brandon imposed certain conditions, amongst others the side-tracking of two old ministers of the Crown who do not sit in this House and of another cabinet minister who is sitting very near the right hon. gentleman at the present moment. Of course the right hon. gentleman, out of that goodness of heart which every one knows he possesses, refused to let his two old colleagues in the Senate and the gentleman who is sitting beside him to-day, disappear from public life. And so, the negotiations between the member for Brandon and the ambassador of the Prime Minister were broken off, and the present Minister of Railways got his portfolio. But the hon. gentleman from Brandon wants to show that his usefulness is not gone and that if a new Department of Trade and Commerce is organized (not a little department such as we have now but a large and important one) he is the very man to preside over that department and to extend the trade and commerce of Canada all through the nations of the world. The hon. gentleman has been travelling all summer, he has acquired a knowledge of the conditions in Europe, and he now hints, and his colleagues may probably consider it before the elections, that he is the man to fill the bill. How is it that the present government, possessing all the talents, according to the Liberal press, have never thought about that yet, as they have never thought about the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway? I was going to say that they had never thought about the all-red route but that would probably not be quite correct. They have thought about it but they have not been able to carry out the scheme. These are the things which the hon. member for Brandon advises them to do before he goes away. The principal reason for the speech which he has delivered was that he desired to bring to the attention of the government the all-red route, but he seems to have failed to impress hon. gentlemen opposite very much if we may judge by the applause which came from the other side of the House and therefore, I suppose, that the subject will be dropped.

To come back to the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), it will be remembered that last night he put the question to the House: How is it that to-day we are having such a revenue; how is it that we are spending so much money? The minister said that when the Conservatives were in power their revenue was not as high as our revenue, and consequently their expenditure was not as high as ours is. But my hon. friend will remember that the country has grown older. He will remember also that Canada was larger when the Conservatives were in power than it is to-day. Not only did we own more land in the Northwest, but we owned Alaska, of which we have been deprived since this government has been in power. It is not a bad thing to remember that everything which has been obtained by Canada, every addition that we have made to this country, has been obtained by the Conservative party, while every bit of territory that we have lost has been lost during the incumbency in office of the Liberal party. I just wish to remind the hon. Minister of Customs of this fact, because when he makes one of those wonderful speeches, he requires the application of a little cold water to his overheated imagination. These hon. gentlemen are at last becoming a little more grateful than they have been in times past. We never heard before of Providence.

In the olden times the present government were responsible for every blessing that came to this country and for everything for which they thought they were entitled to claim credit. It was well known that any one who dared to say that any benefit came from anywhere else would be called to account by these hon. gentlemen, but last night the hon. Minister of Customs did speak of a bountiful Providence. This may contribute to the remission of the many sins of my hon. friend. He admits at last that Providence has really had something to do with whatever blessings this country has enjoyed during the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite. Probably he found out that Providence is getting a little tired of it. Providence was not as good as He had hitherto been last summer. He may not be as good next summer, and perhaps the hon. gentleman was making amends. He said that the government raises enough revenue. He said they had a different way of administering the affairs of the country from that which was adopted by the Tories, and, of course, it will be left to the people to find out which is the better way. The former Minister of Finance, my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), when we were passing through a crisis, about eleven or twelve years ago, took from the people a certain amount of taxation that was weighing upon their shoulders. It may be that the debt was increased, but that has to be paid by future generations. The people who lived in Canada at that time had a remission of over $20,000,000 of taxation. The minister says : We administered the public affairs differently ; we did not increase the public debt. I have heard that contention very often. I heard the same thing on the hustings in Stanstead and Nicolet. I find that the public debt in 1896, the last year in which we were in power, was $258,000,000, in round figures. In 1906, under this administration, the public debt was $267,000,000. That is a big difference, and when hon. gentlemen opposite say that they have not increased the debt they are not talking according to the book, because the book which I am quoting is published by the government. They have increased the public debt and they have taken from the people over $129,000,000 in taxes. Still they persist in saying they have not increased the taxation of the people. I find also in this book, page 20, that in 1896 we took altogether from the people of this country in taxation $36,000,000 ; that is to say, $27,000,000 in customs and $8,000,000 in excise. If I take the return for 1906-7 and add what was taken during the three months for which we have no figures, I find that they have taken over $90,000,000 in taxes from the people of Canada. If you subtract what we took in 1896 from what they have taken in straight taxes which cannot be remitted, you will find that they took $52,000,000 more than we took. I call the attention of the hon. Minister of Customs to these figures showing the taxation imposed upon the people of Canada by this government and by the government which preceded them. In 1896 the taxes amounted to $5.46 for every man, woman and child in the Dominion. What is the per capita tax to-day? It is over $11 for every man, woman and child. Still my hon. friend will say again, as I have heard him say two or three times, that the taxation has not been increased. They have increased the debt, they have increased the taxation, they have lost the territory of Canada, and a large area of our lands in the Northwest has gone into the hands of private persons, and the money which has been received from the sale of lands has been squandered in the scandals which we have brought to light in the Public Accounts Committee since the commencement of this session.

The hon. Minister of Customs has an extraordinary way of explaining certain transactions of this government. With reference to the Crows Nest Railway, he says that the bargain they made with the Canadian Pacific Railway was better than the one that we made. I admit that it was better for the Canadian Pacific Railway, but it was worse for the country. We were ready to subsidize that railway to the tune of $1,600,000 and lend $20,000 a mile to a company which was responsible and which would have paid us back, as they paid us the $30,000,000 loaned in 1884. The present government did not give the subsidy to the Canadian Pacific Railway directly, but to a company formed of their friends they gave $3,600,000 for the construction of the Crows Nest Pass Railway. My hon. friend says that the bargain was a better one than that which we submitted to parliament before we lost power in 1896. When my hon. friend was speaking last night, for a while I thought that he wanted to show that he was ripe for the other House, except that at the end of his speech he was dancing from the platform of 1893 to the Halifax platform, and he showed such an amount of agility as to intimate that he was not going to the other House yet. But, I repeat, my hon. friend has an extraordinary way of explaining matters. He talked about the Yukon Railway. I do not believe that since I have been in parliament I have ever remembered a transaction which deserved the condemnation of the people of Canada so much as that one.

How is that ? About a week or ten days before parliament met, a minister of the crown, a sworn trustee of the people, made a bargain with a railway company to build 150 miles of railway. In return for building that railway, he agreed to give them four million acres of mineral land, to be chosen within six years out of the whole province of the Yukon. That mineral land might prove to be worth $200,000,000, but that evidently was not taken into consideration by this minister of the Crown or his government at all. Well, Mr. Speaker, the deal was so thoroughly bad that it was rejected by the Senate. Even their own friends in that body could not swallow it. And after its rejection by the Senate, we heard no more of it. There was nothing to prevent this government resuscitating that measure the following year and forcing it through this House and probably the other, but they were afraid of public opinion and they let the scheme rest in oblivion.

What did they do afterwards? After they had made this contract, which might have involved an expenditure of $200,000,000, without the assent or the authority of parliament, and after the Senate had rejected it, they paid an indemnity of $300,000 to these gentlemen with whom they had thus illegally made that bargain, and yet the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) is perfectly satisfied with that transaction.

My hon. friend spoke about the Halifax platform. That is a platform which hon. gentlemen opposite particularly dislike. My right hon. friend, at the opening of the House, spent most of his time discussing it instead of discussing the speech from the Throne. Well, I hope that that Halifax platform will be carried out much more effectively than has been the platform which was adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite in 1893, but which they conveniently lost as soon as they got into office and have never since been able to find.

The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) defended last night the Arctic expedition. Well, my hon. friend was not so easily satisfied when he was on this side. I would not like to say that he was more honest then than he is now but he was certainly more sincere and more frank. He certainly would not have defended such an expedition as the Arctic when he sat on this side. I have never yet heard any one who could seriously explain what really was its object and its raison d'etre. All we know is that it has cost us half a million dollars. But the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) says he is proud of that expedition. He rejoices because we were able to plant the British flag on Hudson bay. Where could the hon. gentleman have derived his notions of the extent of the British possessions on this continent? Surely he must have known that the British flag was planted on Hudson bay long before he was born.

I should like to refer my hon. friend to the speeches made by himself and his friends when in opposition against the expenditure of the late Conservative administration. Take, for instance, the speeches by Sir Richard Cartwright on the budget. Sir Richard Cartwright used to complain that this was a dear country to live in and he called on Heaven to witness that if the Grits ever got into office, they would have a fiscal policy which would make this a cheap country to live in—so cheap that we would not have to spend any money bringing in immigrants because people would flock into this country from all over the world. But what is the case to-day? It is quite the reverse. I do not think there is any other country under the sun where living is so dear to-day as it is in Canada. It is even dearer than in the United States which has always been held up as the most expensive country to live in. And instead of immigration pouring in of its own accord, we have to spend an immense amount of our money to induce it to come here, and a good deal is spent on bringing in a class of immigrants who are a disgrace to any country.

My hon. friend, the Minister of Customs, is apparently delighted with everything, but the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) sings a somewhat different song. I never heard him make so modest a speech as he did the other day. It appeared to be rather a valedictory as if the hon. gentleman saw the hand-writing on the wall. For eleven years we have had the present government in office and we all know how they have managed to stay there. We all know the combination which has kept them there. There is the party press to which they have paid over $1,000,000 since 1896 for sounding their praises. They have had their friends all over the country forming themselves into great corporations to which government contracts are given without any call for tenders, except to the favoured few, and which in return help the government at election time. Then there is the whiskey lavished in different counties even by ministers who pretend to be teetotallers. These are the influences which have kept these hon. gentlemen in office even though they have been false to every one of their ante-election pledges.

But there must be an end to everything and there are many signs that the end of these hon. gentlemen's administration is fast approaching. The people are beginning to realize keenly that they have been deceived. They showed it in Ontario three or four years ago, they have shown it in British Columbia and Manitoba, and only the other day in New Brunswick they declared, by an overwhelming majority, that they had enough of Gritism in this country, and I have no doubt the people as a whole will give forcible expression to that opinion when they have the opportunity.

Mr. F. F. PARDEE (West Lambton). My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) started out by telling us that the budget speech of the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) sounded like a valedictory. Well, let me pay the hon. gentleman the compliment of saying he is one of the most unconscious humorists in this or any other House. As far as I could judge, the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) appeared just as confident this year as in former years—in fact even more confident—that his annual statement would be perfectly welcome to the people. Why any one should think the contrary, I cannot imagine. Had the prosperity of the country decreased, had our financial condition been impaired, there would have been some ground for depression, but instead our Finance Minister presents us with the largest surplus we have ever had in any one year. He has shown great increase in trade and every indication of continuous prosperity; and if for the needs of the years to come, we shall have to add about $12,000,000 to our national debt, what is that in comparison with what has been accomplished? What does that mean? It means simply this:

In 1907, as I understand it, our national debt amounted to $263,000,000. If $12,000,000 is to be added to that debt, as we are told is to be the case, largely on account of the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific, that will make the debt $275,000,000. Now, the debt in 1896 was $258,000,000. In other words, from 1896 down to 1908, the total increase in our national debt will have been $17,000,000. Compare that with the previous regime. In 1878, the debt was $140,000,000; and in 1896 it had increased to $258,000,000. That is, in 18 years of Conservative administration, the debt increased by $118,000,000, whereas, in 11 years of Reform administration, the debt had increased only $17,000,000. In other words, in each year of the Conservative regime, the debt increased $6,055,000 on the average, whereas under the Liberal regime, it has increased only $1,550,000 a year on the average. Speaking for myself, I do not regard this increase in the debt as anything to be particularly perturbed about. As a young Canadian, it does not seem to me that we should merely hoard our resources, so that, at the end of the year, we may show some decrease in our national debt. True, it would be a good thing, if even with our need of public works, with our need of improved systems of communication, with all the demands of a new and growing country, we could still reduce our national debt. If this could be done without unduly increasing taxation, no one would rejoice more than I. But we must recognize the fact that this is a growing country, a country whose resources must be developed, and whose facilities for the living of a true national life must be increased; and any government that wishes to hold the confidence of the Dominion of Canada must show it is a progressive government, willing to meet the needs of the country in order that the country may prosper and progress. The truth here is that expressed by the old adage: You cannot have your cake and eat it too—that is you cannot meet the progressive claims of a growing country, you cannot build up that country as it should be built up, without large expenditures and additions to the public debt. The Finance Minister has told us that we must approach the ensuing term with care, caution and courage. But we must remember that even though our expenditure, as our friends across the way so often remind us, be larger than when they left power, yet, we must go ahead with caution and courage, not leaving undone the things that ought to be done, even though we have to spend more money than we have heretofore spent. I repeat that Canada is in a transition stage and is moving on to greater and better things; and any government that fails to provide the means by which the resources of the country shall be developed is not doing its duty to the people and is not carrying out its trust. Therefore, even though our friends opposite find fault with us for spending more money than was spent when they left office, I contend, as has been so often said before, that we had a right to find fault with the Conservative government for the way they spent money, because they did not keep the business of the country going as business men should do, and spent money which they did not possess; but there is a difference between that position and the position of the Liberal party. Our expenditure is absolutely justifiable. So far as that expenditure has been increased by the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific, I believe that any person who would go to the people of Canada to-day and say that these expenditures should stop, he would find the country directly and strongly opposed to that opinion. We have heard it said to-day, as we have heard it said before, and said truly, that we are dependent upon the west in great degree for the prosperity of Canada. The east and the west are absolutely bound together; in the first place, because the west is the place of our future breadstuffs production, while the east is the seat of our manufactures. Without either, the other is of no use. Therefore, any government that would, for a moment, stop such expenditures as are made wisely to increase our transportation facilities, and so improve the position of manufacturers and farmers alike, would be absolutely betraying its trust and would not be governing the country in a statesmanlike way. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) grew extremely eloquent on the subject of expenditure, and wound up one of his sentences by saying:—

> They placed this government in the Seats of the Mighty to carry out tasks, and all Canada waited to see them prove their power and their policy if they dared to put it into effect.

The country did place this government in the seats of the mighty in 1896. And they waited and watched for four years; and when the government appealed to the country in 1900 the country confirmed them in their places. And again they went back to the country in 1904, and the country, having waited and watched, again approved their policy and confirmed them in their occupancy of the seats of the mighty. What was that policy? The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) said he did not know what the government's policy in regard to the tariff was. Well, we might ask hon. gentlemen opposite what their policy is. When have they brought in a resolution relating to the question of the tariff? Where do they stand on that question? No later than last session we saw these hon. gentlemen very much mixed up in their tariff policy, one wishing to go one way and another a different way. In fact, that has been the case ever since the present tariff policy was declared by the Minister of Finance in 1897. Sir Charles Tupper denounced that policy as iniquitous. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) said that it was of few lines but absolutely no principle. The hon. gentleman repeated that in his speech yesterday, and many others on that side have taken the same view. These hon. gentlemen say we have absolutely no principle, and the hon. member for Beauharnois says we have no policy. The hon. member for North Toronto tells us that the Liberals came into power in 1896, found everything in good order and took advantage of the tariff policy that was then in force, and that to that is due the great prosperity this country has enjoyed for eleven years.

On that subject let me read a few remarks that were made from time to time by hon. members opposite. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) said:

I hold that the tariff should be so arranged that every institution in this conutry which is manufacturing goods to be consumed by the Canadian people, should have sufficient protection to keep out the same class of goods made in any other foreign country and I have no hesitation in saying that if that country should be England, the policy of Canada should be framed in the interests of the Canadian taxpayer as against the people who are producing the same class of goods even in the old country under the same flag.

That was an extremely loyal proposition from the hon. member for Peel. He seemed to think then that this tariff, which they now claim as their own, did not amount to much. Then, what did the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) say, as found in 'Hansard,' page 2384, of 1902?

It was said in the early days of the present tariff, that the Liberals had stolen our clothes. I have never said so, but of course, when the preferential duty was only 12½ per cent and when on coloured cotton goods and many other goods the duties were practically the same as under the Conservative regime, here was some reason for, perhaps, coming to the conclusion without due consideration that the Liberals had stolen our clothes. But I do not consider they have done anything of the kind. I am only sorry that they did not, for it would have been better for the country if they had. Their tariff is instead just the antipodes of ours.

So, according to hon. gentlemen opposite, the claim of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) must be absolutely dismissed. It is not their tariff, it never was their tariff; it is a tariff that was framed on the resolutions that were adopted by the great Reform convention held in 1893. I claim that that tariff has done all it was expected to do, that it is a tariff which is beneficial to every one. In this connection let me read a short extract from the Toronto 'News' of November 30, 1907. It is headed 'The Tariff':

Before closing some reference must be made to Mr. Borden's attitude towards the tariff. It is a fair way of putting it to say that he himself abstained from mentioning it with equal sedulousness everywhere. He was challenged once in the west, and confined himself to the one case of agricultural implements, and to a demand for an investigation into their cost which would show authoritatively whether they need protection or can dispense with it. It has been pointed out in this correspondence that a conflict is going on between low-tariff and high-tariff wings of the Conservative party, and while it is in progress Mr. Borden is keeping quiet on the issue. The frankness with which both sides of the shield were presented to the west was accidental and not particularly welcome. Mr. Cockshutt, who argued for protection, was a volunteer, a somewhat aggressive volunteer, for the platform.

So it would appear that when the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) gets up and argues in this fashion, it would be well for him and his associates to bring down some alternative policy in the shape of a resolution, and let us know exactly what their views are on this question.

I was struck by one thing in the speech of the hon. member for North Toronto when he was declaiming against the extravagance of this government and mentioning a number of things in which they had been extravagant. What struck me as remarkable was that he should have charged the government with extravagance in the expenditures upon agriculture and art. It is very true that this government has spent much more in that direction than the Conservative government did. In 1895-6 the Conservative government spent, under these heads, $383,432, whereas this government in 1905-6 spent $1,365,860. Now, there can be no greater truism than that there is no industry, however great—and you may apply the remark to every province in the Dominion of Canada—that forms more absolutely the basis of all other businesses, the basis upon which the country depends for good or ill, than the agricultural interests. In 1901 the capital invested in agriculture was $1,787,102,000, and the value of the products was $363,126,000. In dairying the capital invested was $6,315,000, and the value of the products was $29.721,000. Since that time we know that the investment, as well as the value of the products in these lines, have very largely increased. Now, in view of the amount of capital invested and the enormous income derived from that capital, I would like the hon. member for North Toronto to go into some rural constituency like my own, or that of many other members of this House, and tell the farmers that this government is giving too much aid to their industry and that it ought to be curtailed. It is true we are spending more, as these figures show. Without desiring to weary the House, let me read the figures with regard to a number of items in which this government has spent more than the Conservative government did :

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Experimental farms— | | |
| Conservatives.. .. .. .. | 1895-6 | $ 77,500 00 |
| Liberals.. .. .. .. .. | 1905-6 | 110,452 00 |
| Exhibition grants— | | |
| Conservatives.. .. .. .. | 1895-6 | $ 1,243 00 |
| Liberals .. .. .. .. .. | 1905-6 | 219,500 00 |
| Dairying interests, live stock and fruit industries— | | |
| Conservatives.. .. .. .. | 1895-6 | $ 75,000 00 |
| Liberals .. .. .. .. .. | 1905-6 | 167,000 00 |
| Printing and distributing bulletins— | | |
| Conservatives.. .. .. .. | 1895-6 | ..... |
| Liberals .. .. .. .. .. | 1905-6 | $ 7,000 00 |
| Quarantine— | | |
| Conservatives.. .. .. .. | 1895-6 | $ 95,247 00 |
| Liberals .. .. .. .. .. | 1905-6 | 624,758 00 |
| Cattle quarantine— | | |
| Conservatives.. .. .. .. | 1895-6 | $ 63,827 49 |
| Liberals .. .. .. .. .. | 1905-6 | 202,764 82 |
| Health of animals— | | |
| Conservatives.. .. .. .. | 1895-6 | $ 31,419 00 |
| Liberals .. .. .. .. .. | 1905-6 | 421,933 00 |

The expenditures have increased, but I claim they have been made for the welfare and for the betterment of the agricultural classes. Every dollar that has been expended there, has been expended, I believe, with absolute honesty ; if it has not been, if there had been any doubt of improper expenditures, our friends opposite would have been quick to appeal either to the Agricultural Committee or to the Public Accounts Committee. But so far as these expenditures go, I am sure I am right in saying that every dollar has been expended properly, every dollar has been expended for the benefit of the great agricultural classes, with whom the hon. member for North Toronto seems to find some fault. Now, what have been some of the results?

The results of these expenditures.

| | |
|---|---|
| Butter— | |
| From 1887-1896.. .. .. .. .. .. | $ 14,456,272 |
| From 1897-1906.. .. .. .. .. .. | 46,599,783 |
| Cheese— | |
| From 1887-1896.. .. .. .. .. .. | $112,591,562 |
| From 1896-1906.. .. .. .. .. .. | 202,896,511 |
| Ham and bacon— | |
| From 1887-1896.. .. .. .. .. .. | $ 17,456,821 |
| From 1896-1906.. .. .. .. .. .. | 114,772,561 |
| 16 years of Liberal rule, agriculture exports.. .. .. .. .. .. | 953,981,000 |
| The prior ten years.. .. .. .. .. | 451,938,000 |
| Increase.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 502,000,000 |

In other words, in ten years of Liberal rule, agricultural exports have been $953,000,000, while for the preceding ten years they were $451,000,000. We have thus increased our agricultural exports for ten years by $502,000,000. When this government can say to the people of Canada and to the class of whom I am speaking, there are some of our expenditures and some of the results, I cannot but think that the people will say that this particular expenditure has been well and properly made; it has been made in a sane manner, in a manner which does good and redounds to the benefit of the whole people, and that in so far as that branch of the government is concerned they have no fault, but rather commend the government for their course.

I am free to admit that I did not grasp the logic of the argument of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), who in rebutting the statement that had been made by the Minister of Finance said : It is perfectly true that you are exporting very much more than you ever did before, but let me go back to 1896 and I can show you by a compilation of figures that although our exports were then millions of dollars less, as a matter of fact we were exporting much more in 1896 than is being exported in 1908, because the prices have gone up. There is an old saying that money talks, and it appears to me that the people of Canada cannot be led to believe that while they are exporting hundreds of millions to-day and were exporting but a very few millions in 1896 their trade was as great in 1896 as in 1908. If a merchant to-day has twice the turnover that he had a year ago, I do not believe that he puts it down to an increase in price, but to the fact that a dollar this year buys more than a dollar did last year; where he received $1 last year he receives $1.75 to-day, and hence the turnover has been larger than it was the year before. Surely these principles which can be applied to a private business can be applied as well to the business of a country.

I beg to call your attention to the increases in foreign trade for the years ending 1897 and 1907. They were in round numbers as follows :

| Year. | Total trade. | Imports. | Total exports. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1897 .. .. | $257,000,000 | $119,000,000 | $137,000,000 |
| 1907 .. .. | 617,000,000 | 359,000,000 | 258,000,000 |

But, Sir, leaving all that out of the question, I think that one set of figures that has been given by the Minister of Finance absolutely refutes the argument of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), that is, the increase in railway traffic. The tonnage carried by the railways of Canada in 1897 and 1907 was as follows :

| Year. | Tonnage. |
|---|---|
| 1897.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 25,300,000 |
| 1907.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 63,866,000 |

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Was that all exported?

Mr. PARDEE. Not necessarily, and I am not arguing that it was. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) said that the imports and exports are greater because the prices are greater and consequently the actual quantities were no better than in 1896. I asked the hon. member if the tremendous increase in the railway traffic does not support the contention of the Minister of Finance, because surely the railways are carrying the actual goods, they have not been carrying air.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. I ask the hon. member if these are all for exports? It would not show anything unless they were for export.

Mr. PARDEE. Why not? The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) says that our total trade is no better than it was in 1896; he says it appears to be better because the prices are better. I say that the total trade must be better if the railways are carrying more. Surely it is a self-evident fact, and I therefore commend that simple argument to the attention of the House. I could not pretend to follow the hon. member through the ramifications of the figures he presented to the House, and the conclusions he arrived at from them.

I wish to dwell for a few moments on the important increase in what I might call our domestic or home trade, that is actual manufactures within the Dominion of Canada. The interim census respecting manufacturing development from 1901 to 1906 show the following facts with reference to manufacturing establishments at the end of that period :

| | |
|---|---|
| Total manufacturing establishments in Canada.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 15,796 |
| Persons employed.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 392,000 |
| Aggregate capital.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $846,000,000 |
| Salaries and wages paid.. .. .. .. .. | $165,000,000 |
| Output valued at.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 718,000,000 |
| Aggregate investment in Ontario alone.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $397,000,000 |

The other provinces followed in the order, Quebec, New Brunswick, &c. During that period there was a notable decrease in the number of establishments employing about five hands. The number of establishments employing five hands or more has decreased from 14,000 in 1900 to 12,000 in 1905. This is of course entirely due to amalgamation, the larger ones absorbing the smaller and taking them out of the road so that there are now fewer manufacturing establishments in Canada than there were in 1901. Although the number of manufacturing establishments has decreased during that period, yet the aggregate capital increased during the same period from $446,000,000 to $833,000,000, a gain of $386,000,000 or 86 per cent. This statement shows very excellent natural conditions. It shows energy and ability on the part of the people of Canada, and a tremendous development of manufacturing during that five year period. In other branches of industry the results have been just as good.

The wage record shows that diffusion of results has been general, and employees have a full share of the increased activity. The average salary and wage per employee in 1900, $334 per annum; in 1905, $422 per annum, or about 27 per cent increase. The increase has been general throughout the provinces, and has been Canada's defence against commercial depression, maintaining a high standard of living, keeping markets active, and saving the industrial establishments from accumulating unsaleable goods. In establishments having five or more employees, the total number of employees in 1905, 383,920 ; in 1900, 339,173 ; increase, 44,747. The salaries and wages paid employees in these :

| | |
|---|---|
| 1900.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $113,249,350 |
| 1905.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 162,155,578 |
| Increase.. .. .. .. .. .. | 48,906,228 |
| Increase of wages.. .. | 43 p.c. |
| Increase of employees... | 13 p.c. |

This proves conclusively that the workers obtained a full and fair share of the benefits of industrial expansion. All goes to show that the government are keeping a careful supervision of the manufacturing development, and are in that way able to decide wisely in regard to such legislation as may arise from time to time, and it further goes to show that the manufacturers and leaders of industrial development have full faith in the development of the country, and have full faith in the tariff legislation of the government.

Now, Sir, there are two things which have happened from this prosperous state of affairs which I have endeavoured to point out to the House. There is no question about it that you have constantly increasing employment for our people and when you have the rate of wages increasing year after year, it is the best defence against commercial depression ; it means a higher standard of living for the people, it means more active markets and it saves industrial establishments from the accumulation of unsaleable goods. It further shows that the people of Canada have energy, ability, and faith in the country. And, moreover, it shows to my mind absolutely conclusively that the people have faith in the sane and wise tariff legislation of the government, and are therefore not afraid to invest their money in manufacturing enterprises. With that growth and that prosperity going on among all classes and all industries even though there may be larger sums expended in the public service to-day than in 1896, and even though the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) may say that to-day our taxation is $27.05 while last year it was $27.06 and consequently the country is going to the dogs ; the great test is that the revenue of the country is sufficient to permit of that money being spent and that the money is spent for the benefit of the country as a whole. And when you see your farmers, your manufacturers, your wage earners, in a happy and contented mood and with $1.50 to spend to-day when they only had one dollar ten years ago, you may take it as a sure sign that the country is prosperous. True, my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) is continually crying out: hard times and soup kitchens, but I can tell him sincerely and honestly that I do not think such language from him does the country any good. I do not think he is helping the cause for which he is working—if he is working for the welfare of the country. I do not think it helps anybody much to have a leading man in his community come to this parliament and continually decry the country which he represents; even if times were hard, and they are not, I think it would be better if the hon. gentleman took a roseate view, and say that although we were a little pinched yesterday we are on the high road towards success to-day. Surely, if he took that course, it would be better for him, for his constituents who would like him better, and it would be better for the country. And, my hon. friend from Toronto declared that after all the things the opposition have pointed out during this and previous sessions, he would like to see Providence and any of the ministers walking up and down together. Well, these allegations of the opposition were inquired into and they have long since been exploded, but still these gentlemen opposite roll them under their tongues as sweet morsels. Although the country long since has forgotten them our hon. friends opposite like to try and remember them as the only consolation they think they have. But, as to Providence walking up and down with any of the ministers, I would remind my hon. friends opposite that were they in Centre York they could have seen Providence taking a short walk with the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Railways and Canals, and they seemed to be pretty good friends. If these hon. gentlemen opposite had gone to South Huron they would have seen Providence walking around on most absolutely intimate terms with the same gentlemen, and if they had gone down to Stanstead they would have seen the Minister of Agriculture in his happiest mood, and Providence walking with him in its happiest mood too. It does not seem to me that we on this side of the House need fear to trust to the people. We have appealed to the country under similar circumstances several times. We have had by-elections and a good many of them since the last general election, and if I remember aright our net majority in this Chamber has increased since 1894 by two members. It does not look altogether as if these doleful stories were true, that come from hon. gentlemen opposite who seek the fruits of office but who do not put forward any platform on which to step into power. They have no alternative policy to offer to the people. They roll the word 'graft' under their tongues until the people are sick and tired of it. If hon. gentlemen opposite would take some advice free, I think the people of Canada would like to see them offer some alternative policy, although I do not believe they can find any policy under which the condition of the people of Canada would be better than it is under the policy which the present government has carried out so successfully. I do not agree with the hon. member for North Toronto when he says that the government seem to think there is some God-given instrumentality which will see them through. The government thinks nothing of the kind. The government know absolutely well that it is not any God-given instrumentality which has returned them to power on several occasions and which will return them to power again, but it is the faith of the people in the ministers and in the wise policy of the government which has made the country prosperous. It is the policy of the government which has put it in power and which keeps them in power and which will keep it in power. It is because the people of Canada believe that the present government is a good government and a wise government and promulgates the best possible policy for the country, that they will have nothing to do with the Conservative party which they have tried and found wanting.

I want to refer, in closing, to one of the remarks which the hon. gentleman made, and which was this: He wanted to know by what right the Minister of Finance could in any way whatever bring himself to give help to the banks in order that some of the wheat crop of the west might be moved. He said that the minister had gone out of his way to do it, that he had no right to do it, and that he had actually broken the law in so doing. A few weeks prior to the time when that same arrangement was come to, I do not believe there were many Conservative politicians, and I am quite sure, from the Conservative newspapers that I read, there were very, very few of them that did not unanimously say that in this stringency which had arisen regarding the removal of the wheat crop of the west, some 30,000,000 bushels, I believe, there was no reason why the government should not formulate some scheme in order that it might come to the help of the grain-growers in that district, in order that the banks might be provided with funds and in order that these funds which were necessary might be used for the removal of the wheat crop. There was hardly a Conservative politician or newspaper but held up both hands in favour of this policy and declared that it ought to be carried out, and that the government would not be doing its duty unless it did carry it out. The government did, in the sanest way that any government could, come to the relief of the west to the extent of five million and some odd thousands of dollars by guaranteeing the banks, and the government in turn were absolutely secured against that guarantee; the moneys were advanced, the wheat crop was moved, and there can be no doubt about it that by the removal of the wheat crop benefit inured to every person in that portion of Canada. Then these hon. gentlemen come here and find fault with my hon. friend the Minister of Finance for doing that which he was in duty bound to do. I say that, in view of all these things, the government have amply carried out all that they ought to have carried out. I do not say that the government are perfect, but I do say that taking them as human beings, and taking them as having large and intricate departments to administer, taking them with the large and diversified interests in all the different provinces of the Dominion to legislate for, although they may not have been perfect, although there may have been sins of omission and commission, I say, and I say it in all honesty, that, as far as governments go and as far as human beings go, I do think that since the year 1896 the government are entitled to credit, and to very, very large credit, for the way they have carried on the affairs of this country. I say that if they are no more recreant to their duty in the future than they have been in the past the people of Canada will be absolutely content to entrust their affairs to their hands.

Mr. E. D. SMITH (Wentworth). Mr. Speaker, I am sure that hon. members on this side of the House will be very grateful for the free advice that the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Pardee) has given us, and I think that the government ought to be grateful to the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) for the advice that he gave them in his speech to the House. I think the House ought to be congratulated upon the moderate tone of the hon. gentleman's remarks and upon the position which he took in criticising the government, for that is what his speech practically amounted to. The first portion of his address was devoted to the suggestion of a new department of the government—a department of foreign commerce. It seemed to me that that was about as strong a criticism as he could make in regard to the present Department of Trade and Commerce. What is that department for? If that department is not for the purpose of taking care of, strengthening and enlarging the foreign trade of Canada, what is its object? That department has to-day, in different parts of the world, almost as many representatives and agents as the hon. member for Brandon would suggest, I am sure, if we had a new department. I find in looking at the weekly report of that department that we have agents in Sydney, Melbourne, British Guiana, Japan, France, Birmingham, Leeds, Manchester, Bristol, Mexico, Newfoundland and South Africa. These are trade commissioners, and in addition to that we have agents in Jamaica, Antigua, St. Kitts, Trinidad and Norway, besides the Canadian High Commissioner in London. I imagine that the criticism of the hon. member for Brandon would not have been so severe, and he would not have urged the organization of a new department along the same lines as the Department of Trade and Commerce, if these gentlemen were doing what they are being paid to do—that is, to look after the commerce of Canada.

The next criticism that the hon. member made in regard to this government had reference to the civil service. The hon. gentleman practically took up the platform of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) in regard to reforming the civil service, and, of course, in doing so, we on this side of the House must agree that he stood upon solid ground. We have thought that for a long time. It has been the common thought of this country for a great many years, as it was a subject for public discussion for a great many years in the United States before they inaugurated civil service reform there. I well remember that in the United States the system that prevailed in regard to the civil service of that country was a reproach, but that has been reformed of late, and I believe the time has come when we should advocate the appointment of men to the civil service on account of their qualifications rather than on account of their politics. I believe that our civil service can be conducted, not only in a very much more economical manner, but very much more efficiently under such a system as that which we propose.

The next topic of discussion taken up by the hon. member for Brandon was immigration, and, judging by the remarks of the hon. gentleman in suggesting strong encouragement of immigration from the western states to Canada, I concluded that he has no very strong words of commendation to utter with regard to the immigration that we have been getting to a large extent from Europe of late. I do not know exactly what other conclusion could be arrived at from the hon. gentleman's remarks. We have been spending large sums of money in encouraging immigration from the western states, and I think that both sides of the House will agree that the settlers from the western states make very good settlers in Canada and that we cannot have too many of them. But there was this insinuation, as I understand—and I cannot look at it in any other way—that the immigration that has been brought into this country from across the water has not been what it should have been. I am sure we will all agree with that. We have in Canada to-day, in our cities and towns, a very considerable number of men who are out of employment. These men who are out of employment are largely the very worst of the class of immigration that has been brought in during the past year. We had approximately about 250,000 people last year who came to Canada. If that immigration had been sifted in some way and 25,000 had been left at home—and that is about the number on which a bonus was paid to the agents for bringing them here—we should not have had in Canada the number of men out of employment which we have to-day. 25,000 will probably cover the number who are really suffering in Canada from want of employment. It is certainly the duty of the government to provide some means, whether by abolishing the bonus system or making more stringent regulations at our ports on this side or at the ports on the other side, of preventing this large proportion of undesirable immigrants coming to our shores who must always be a great detriment to the country.

The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) suggested that in the near future we should be able to borrow money on easier terms. Well, I would draw his attention to the fact, as stated in the newspapers, that the bond issue of the Grand Trunk Pacific has been a total failure, and that the syndicate have only been able to float a small quantity of them. That certainly does not indicate any increased easiness in the money market for Canadian loans in the immediate future.

The chief topic of hon. gentlemen opposite has been the condition of the country, which they describe as extremely prosperous, and they have all dwelt at length upon the increase in our imports and our exports. For this increase, they gave exclusive credit to the government. They have not explained in what manner the government has brought about this condition, and it would be rather difficult for them to do so. I would ask: Has this government, during the past ten years, opened up any new markets? The only new market I have heard hon. gentlemen opposite suggest as having been opened up by this government is the market of the United States for our store cattle and some calves, the entry of which into that country has been made easier by the relaxing of the American regulations. But this is due to the relaxing of the American quarantine regulations which followed the relaxing of our quarantine regulations against their cattle. But what about the British market? Has this government succeeded in getting the embargo removed there which was imposed on our live stock on the pretense of guarding against contagious diseases? Not at all, we are just in the same position to-day as we were years ago, and the fact that we have relaxed our quarantine regulations against the American cattle is not calculated to strengthen our claim to have that embargo removed. Are the conditions in other respects in the British market better to-day than they were eleven years ago? No one will say they are. We had free entry to the British market then and we have it still. Have we been able to get our products into France or the United States on better terms? Not at all. When they were in opposition these hon. gentlemen opposite promised that if they were returned into power they would get our calves and sheep and horses in free to the United States. They even figured out how much profit our farmers would make on each head shipped. The former member for Lincoln, now in the Senate (Mr. Gibson), scattered throughout his county a pamphlet showing that each farmer would make $30 on every horse and $25 on every cow he sent to the United States; yet to-day these animals go to the United States subject to exactly the same duties as they were then. The United States market has not been opened to us nor has the French market, but the German market is closed to us altogether. From Germany, the second best market in the world, our products have been completely shut out, and that is due solely to the action of this government. Here is a case where these gentlemen did great injury to this country. And they did it for what purpose? In order that they might allow goods to come into Canada from the British islands at reduced rates. Are we benefited by that preference? Is it any great advantage to our people that we can get our goods at one-third less duty? Are the manufacturers satisfied? Are the woollen mills satisfied? Are any of our manufacturers satisfied that the British preference is of any advantage? It would have been some advantage if we could have got our goods into Britain on better terms than are given other countries. If we could have got a mutual preference we would have been willing to pay a big price. Well, we did pay a big price, and all we got is exclusion from the German market.

The Finance Minister talks of great increase in imports and exports, and to hear him you would think that that increase is due to the policy of this government, that the conditions of this country are different from those of any other, and that these large increases are due to the genius of the present administration. I have here a little comparative table showing the increase of imports and exports in some countries which occupy a position analagous to that of Canada. Canada is a young country with enormous resources, with great areas of fertile land ready for the plough, occupying, in this respect, much the position that the United States did forty years ago, when it made enormous strides in development just as Canada is making to-day. Let us take countries that occupy somewhat similar positions to Canada, and see whether it is the doing of this government or the conditions of the time that cause these increases in exports and imports. Argentine occupies a position almost exactly the same, and ten years ago its trade and commerce was about the same as ours. Japan is a country which, though not young in years like Canada, yet enjoys a very similar position in that the activities of the country have only lately been aroused, making it, for all practical purposes a young country among the nations of the world. Mexico is another country which is close at hand and, in many respects, affecting trade and commerce has a position similar to that of Canada. Let us make a comparison of Canada with these countries in order that we may know where Canada stands.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTS OF CANADA.

House in committee on Bill (No. 88) to incorporate the Institute of Architects of Canada.—Mr. J. C. Walsh.

Mr. LENNOX. So far as I can see this Bill seems to deal with an educational question, as those to be admitted into this institute have to come up to a certain educational standard and to pass certain examinations. It does not seem to be proper legislation for the federal parliament to pass.

Mr. GERVAIS. The Bill has been reprinted a number of times before it passed the committee and its most objectionable features have been eliminated from it.

Mr. LENNOX. I have not a copy of the reprinted Bill.

Mr. GERVAIS. My hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) would be right if the Bill now before the House were similar to the Bill introduced, but as the Bill stands at present it merely amounts to the incorporation of a club. I fought the Bill for four sittings in the Private Bills Committee, and I might tell my hon. friend that all the clauses with reference to education and public instruction have been stricken out.

Mr. SPROULE. Even admitting such is the case, the Bill still provides for the admission of certain architects to the exclusion of all others and this gives those who are excluded a lower status. Some years ago we tried to get a Bill through this House which provided that all medical men in the Dominion should come under the same standard, but that Bill, which was introduced by Dr. Roddick, was opposed by the province of Quebec which absolutely refused to come under its provisions. The Bill only passed when there was a provision inserted that until every province in the Dominion elected to come under the Bill by provincial legislation it should not become operative.

Mr. GERVAIS. I would ask my hon. friend to look at clause 11 of this Bill which says :

Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to encroach upon the rights and privileges conferred upon any association of architects having a charter from any province of Canada.

I think I may say that at my suggestion all the objectionable clauses were stricken out in the committee.

Mr. SPROULE. My own opinion is that a Dominion standard for the learned professions would be better, but this parliament should not provide it for one profession and refuse it to another. If we are competent to pass this Bill for the architects we certainly should be competent to pass a similar Bill for the medical and legal professions. But it was claimed that the Roddick Bill, which was somewhat similar to this, was ultra vires of the federal parliament. If you extend the principle to all professions I would be very glad, but we should not grant it to one profession and deny it to another.

Mr. MACPHERSON. This is a pretty broad Bill, and I do not see that the amendments made to it in committee have been reprinted.

Mr. GERVAIS. They are. While the Bill, as originally presented to the committee, provided for a close corporation, the clauses to which Dr. Sproule has referred were eliminated, and there is now absolutely nothing that will exclude any one from or force any one to join this body; it becomes purely and simply a scientific club for purposes of scientific research, and each province will govern its own body of architects. The Quebec association has power from the legislature to control examinations and the admission of students, and nobody should intend to encroach on them.

Mr. SPROULE. I see that in the Bill, as reprinted, a good many of the objectionable features have been omitted.

Mr. J. C. WALSH. The chartered accountants have a similar institution, and they are incorporated, I understand, in some of the provinces. They asked for the formation of a Dominion association in order that they might come in closer contact and be better able to assist one another in the studying of all that would aid in their advancement as a profession. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) would have been perfectly right in objecting to the Bill as it was first presented, and in comparing it to Dr. Roddick's Bill, but all of the objectionable features have been eliminated, and it now provides simply for the incorporation of a scientific body. The architects are in a peculiar position. The province of Quebec alone has an association of architects, having absolute control of their profession in that province. Lately a similar association has been incorporated in Alberta, but there is no such institution in any other province. The purpose of this Bill is to form a wider association and to better their position as a profession.

Mr. LENNOX. From subsection (a) of section 4 it would appear that there are associations in other provinces than Quebec. I observe that many objectionable features have been eliminated. I note, however, that section 11 in the new Bill is no improvement on section 18 of the old Bill. I would say generally that the distribution of these reprinted Bills is not satisfactory. I do not know whether to place the blame on the person who attends to my file or on some one else, but it is impossible for any one who wants to conscientiously study these Bills to do it in this hurried way. I could see by the Order Paper that there were amendments, but I could not ascertain in advance what they were.

Mr. FIELDING. What is the effect of section 6 of the present Bill?

Mr. LENNOX. I noticed that, and I was wondering whether under the provisions as they can make rules necessary for the maintenance of the honour and dignity of the institute, they would be able to interfere with the rights of other people, but I thought that this would be construed more as applying to rules for their own guidance and governance. The clause as to the admission of candidates for membership in that institute is important, but I do not know whether it concerns the public very much whether they make the rules very stringent or very easy.

Mr. FIELDING. If they are confined to their own members ?

Mr. LENNOX. I think they are confined to their own members.

The institute may, by by-law, make regulations governing the admission of candidates for membership in the institute.

They may make that very difficult. If they like, probably they could make an educational test.

Mr. SPROULE. The 11th clause reads :

Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to encroach upon the rights and privileges conferred upon any association of architects having a charter from the legislature of any province of Canada.

That might be worked so as to discredit any other architects who are not members of this institute. They might claim for it that it was of a higher standing than those who received their powers from a provincial university or other educational body.

Mr. GERVAIS. Let me remind my hon. friend that the title of the corporation has been changed. It will not be called 'The Institute of Architects of Canada,' as was at first proposed, but it will be called 'The Architectural Institute of Canada.' We did not want to give to this new corporation the right to style its members architects, and that would have been unconstitutional and inexpedient and they will be purely and simply members of that architectural institute. It was pointed out before the Private Bills Committee that this was supposed to be an institute without any staff of professors, without any school organization or curriculum, without any teaching, and I objected to create such a corporation without any proper mechanism for teaching the art of architecture. It is now rather of the nature of a club. Is it within the province of the parliament of Canada to organize a social club, creating simply civil not commercial relations between its members and the main body ? I have very serious doubt on that point.

Mr. SPROULE. This is a professional club. Now here is another thing that strikes me. The membership of the institute may establish classes and determine the right, and terms, and privileges and conditions of the said classes. Would they not have the right also to determine the standard of the curriculum ? They might pass a by-law saying that no person can become a member unless he has attained a certain professional standard. That would enable you to determine a standard which would exclude the members of some provincial body.

Mr. J. C. WALSH. I am willing to accept any modification. I may inform the hon. gentleman that clause 11 was added because the association of the province of Quebec allege that they had certain rights, and they naturally ask that those rights be protected. Now in case there might be anything in this Bill which encroached on their rights, we put in this clause to protect them. We say to them, Whatever rights you have will remain to you, they are vested in you. Now the province of Ontario may incorporate their architects or they may not, but whatever they choose to do, this Act cannot affect any of their rights or privileges. That is why clause 11 has been inserted.

Mr. BLAIN. This Bill was before the committee for some time, and as it comes to us to-night it is almost a new Bill. I think it deserves a good deal of consideration. For example clause 5 says :

No member of the institute shall be a building contractor or manufacturer, or a dealer in building material or supplies, nor be in partnership with any building contractor or manufacturer or dealer in building materials or supplies.

Now there are a large number of contractors in the province of Ontario who are pretty fair architects, and if this Bill were passed these men would be barred out, they could not become members. I do not think that clause ought to be adopted. In the province of Ontario there are a large number of contractors who draw plans. For instance, in a country town the local architect is generally the leading builder in the place, and farmers come in and consult him.

Mr. GERVAIS. I would remind the hon. gentleman that this corporation is not a close corporation, it is an open corporation; it is, if I may so speak, an optional corporation. You may come into it or you may not. If you come in, you are subject to all the by-laws and conditions of admission, but you are not bound to come in. The new corporation cannot interfere in any way with the rights of any architect.

Mr. SPROULE. The one thing that appeals to me is this, when you have a Dominion standard the association will be apt to say that its membership occupies a higher position than those of any provincial association.

Mr. GERVAIS. The members of this association cannot style themselves architects. I objected to that, because in the province of Quebec we have a provincial association of architects. We have established two schools of architecture. One was started at McGill some years ago and another one at the polytechnic school. Great architects from the other side have been brought to Montreal and the proper teaching of architecture is now being carried on there. Such a brilliant artist as Mr. Max Doumic, of Paris, holding a diploma from the French government is the director of the school of architecture of the polytechnic school of the applied sciences faculty of Laval University at Montreal. As a matter of fact I objected to all the clauses of the original Bill, but as we have the reprint before us to-night there is not much in it. I think that the purpose of what remains of the Bill is to make of forty so-called architects a social club. I have still some doubt whether this Bill should be passed for the purpose of organizing a social club.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The objection that the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) takes is not well founded The reason that the architects themselves are desirous of seeing a clause like that in the Bill is this : If you are putting up a building, whether it is great or small, to have the architect you are employing interested in the supplying of any of the material must be of necessity a bad affair. You wish to have your architect entirely free from any association with the contractor or manufacturer of supplies for the building. The architects themselves are the people who are desirous of seeing that clause go in and it should be remembered that this organization is voluntary and that any man who is qualified may become a member of it. It will not interfere at all with the man that my hon. friend speaks of in the country town who is a contractor and builder. He is not an architect at all though he may call himself one. For an architect to be associated with the supplying of the material that goes into a building is something that we must look upon as being very unfair to the owner of the building. That is the reason why the architects take this stand.

Mr. BLAIN. I agree at once with a portion of the remarks of the hon. gentleman, but from another portion I wish to dissent. I could not support that Bill under any consideration because I think it creates a monopoly. Take an instance from a country town; there are two men, one is an architect pure and simple and he would have the right to become a member of this institution. The other man is an architect equally as good but he is a contractor as well. In the one case the architect may receive a membership while the other man would be barred out because he is a contractor, and the public are more interested in the architect and contractor than they are in the architect for the reason there is in almost every town in Ontario men who are contractors and architects. They have studied ; perhaps they are not full fledged architects, as my hon friend points out, but they are sufficiently full fledged to be able to construct the average house in any town in Ontario. I do not think it would be well to legislate against that class of people.

Mr. MACPHERSON. This does not legislate against that class at all, but what it says is this : If I am going to put up a building into the construction of which 10,000 bricks enter I have an architect who recommends that John Jones' brick be used, and I find afterwards that the architect is associated with John Jones in the manufacture of this brick and that I have possibly had to pay from $2 to $4 a thousand more for it than I would for other brick. That man then would be struck off the rolls if he were a member of this association and rightly so. That is the very point in relation to which the architects themselves wish to protect the public.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand at once that the architects are quite anxious to protect themselves, but I am not talking about the public.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I am talking about the protection of the public. I am the public in this instance and I am talking about an architect and a manufacturer using his position to recommed these particulars bricks to be put into this building. They will probably cost from $2 to $4 a thousand more, but I find out afterwards that the architect is interested in the manufacture of the material. This Bill protects the public in this way that a man will be obliged to be a good clean member of the association or he cannot enjoy the rights and privileges of the association. I fancy that membership in the association is very much like the possession of an honorary degree in any other profession. He is not obliged to be a member of this association, but it is entirely voluntary and honorary. If the architects of this country can get together in such an association as this it will raise the standard of architecture and of architects.

Mr. BLAIN. I cannot see any advantage to the public in this Bill. It is for the purpose of giving a number of architects an opportunity to raise their fee against the public. It cannot have any other object. The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) shakes his head. Perhaps he will give us some explanation of it.

Mr. FISHER. I see no objection to the Bill and I very much doubt if there is any. As I understand it this Bill is for the purpose of permitting the formation of a society of architects which will extend over the whole Dominion and which is designed to elevate the practice and profession of architecture and the study of the art. My hon. friend (Mr. Blain), a few minutes ago, spoke as if the builder and contractor, whom he calls an architect but who is at the same time a contractor, in a small country place, would not be allowed to take a job from him to build a house. There is nothing of the kind in this Bill.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend misunderstood me. The first line of section 5 says that 'no member of the institute shall be a building contractor.' That is my point; the meaning of that is that no man who is a contractor, no matter how good an architect he may be, may become a member of this association.

Mr. FISHER. Quite so; and I think quite rightly for this reason. Even although he might be an architect, if he were a member of the institute he would have an advantage as a contractor over other contractors in reference to his associates in the institute and even although he might not himself have, as an architect, a contract from my hon. friend or anybody else who was putting up a building he would have the advantage by being a member of this association over other contractors and the architects in it would be, perhaps, to a certain extent, by employing him as a contractor, giving a preference to him over other contractors. I think it is absolutely essential for the benefit of the employer that architects and contractors should be separate as far as possible and that the architect should be the watchdog to guard over the work of the contractor for the benefit of the man who is erecting the building. I think it would be a misfortune and a lowering of the profession of architecture if the architects themselves were interested in contracts for buildings, not only the buildings for which they themselves are the architects but for other buildings. I have no hesitation in saying that I would gladly support any organization which will improve the architecture of the country. Our architecture needs improvement very much indeed. There is no intention, I understand, to prevent other people from practising the profession of architecture in Canada; and that being the case, I do not see why we should not allow a certain number of architects to organize themselves into an association for the improvement of their profession and for their mutual benefit.

Mr. LENNOX. With the consent of the promoter of the Bill, I move that the committee rise and report progress. This Bill has been reprinted and subsequently very much altered, and we have not had the second reprint. Although I see no great objection to the Bill, yet, as its promoter is consenting, and as many of us want to consider it as reprinted in its final form, I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. GERVAIS. Is it possible to have a certain day fixed next week?

Mr. LENNOX. It will come up on Monday.

Mr. GERVAIS. Some of us may not be here on Monday afternoon.

Mr. LENNOX. It may come up any time on Monday as all day Monday is for private Bills.

Progress reported.

TRANS-CANADA RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 107) respecting the Trans-Canada Railway Company.—Mr. Girard.

Mr. FISHER. This is simply an extension of the time for beginning and completing this road.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this another company apart from the Grand Trunk Pacific?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In point of time, it precedes the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. FISHER. The route of this railway is far north of the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. BERGERON. It may be that this company want the time extended so as to give them opportunity to make some arrangements with the Grand Trunk Pacific, and I do not know that that would be in the public interest.

Mr. LENNOX. This Bill comes to us in an entirely new form from the Bill as first printed.

Mr. SPROULE. All that is left of it by the Senate is the preamble.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think it is advisable we should go on with it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is simply giving the company a certain length of time within which to commence and complete the road. This is a proposal that was undertaken by some gentlemen in the province of Quebec. They proposed to build a railroad somewhat further north than the route eventually adopted by the Grand Trunk Pacific. It was understood that they were going to apply for some assistance, but the adherance of the government to another route prevented this enterprise being gone on with. They are simply asking a reasonable time within which to commence and go on with the work and are not interfering with the rights of any one else.

Mr. GRAHAM. The amendment is simply substituting for the clause in the original Bill the regular clause allowing two years to begin and five years to complete.

Mr. LENNOX. When more than half the Bill is changed, it had better be reprinted.

Mr. GRAHAM. There is nothing in the change only this that we thought it better to put in the usual clause. It makes the time a little shorter. They asked eight years and we make it the regular five.

Mr. BERGERON. This company got its charter in 1895 and there have been several extensions since. They do not seem to have any intention of building the road, and it is just possible that when the Grand Trunk Pacific come to locate their line this company may be in the way and require some compensation.

Mr. FISHER. This road is located about 100 miles north of the Grand Trunk Pacific and cannot possibly interfere with it.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 108) respecting the Windsor, Chatham and London Railway Company—Mr. Clarke.

Bill (No. 86) to incorporate the Northern Empire Railway Company.—Mr. Parent.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

The hour for private Bills having expired, House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding: 'That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into committee to consider of the ways and means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty.'

Mr. LENNOX.

Mr. E. D. SMITH (Wentworth). When the House rose at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I was about to read a table showing the state of trade of Canada as compared with that of three other countries situated as nearly like Canada as any others in the world. My object is to reply to the main argument advanced by speakers on the other side and the greatly increased trade of Canada during the past ten or eleven years is the result of the wisdom and prudence of the administration, my contention being that, so far as the exports are concerned, the ministry are in no wise responsible for the increase, while, as regards the imports, they are, unfortunately, responsible to a very large extent. The figures I have are for 1895 and 1905, this latter being the last year for which I could get statistics in regard to these foreign countries:

COMPARATIVE TABLE.
INCREASE IN TRADE IN TEN YEARS,
1895 TO 1905.

| | 1895. | 1905. | Increase |
|---|---|---|---|
| | £ | £ | Per cent. |
| Imports, Japan ... | 27,233,000 | 101,891,000 | 274 |
| Exports, Japan.... | 28,527,000 | 67,486,000 | 136 |
| Total trade.. | 55,760,000 | 169,377,000 | 201 |
| | $ | $ | |
| Imports, Argentine | 95,095,000 | 205,154,000 | 115 |
| Exports, Argentine | 120,070,000 | 322,844,000 | 168 |
| Total trade.. | 215,165,000 | 527,998,000 | 145 |
| Imports, Mexico... | 6,801,000 | 17,224,000 | 153 |
| Exports, Mexico... | 9,729,000 | 19,459,000 | 100 |
| Total trade.. | 16,530,000 | 36,683,000 | 122 |
| Imports, Canada .. | 110,781,682 | 266,834,417 | 140 |
| Exports, Canada .. | 113,638,803 | 203,316,872 | 79 |
| Total trade.. | 224,420,485 | 470,151,289 | 109 |

It will be observed that, if the total trade of a country is an index of the progress of that country, Canada is the lowest in this list of four, having an increase of only 109 per cent as against 201 per cent for Japan, 145 per cent for Argentine and 122 per cent for Mexico. But a much more significant point is the relation of imports and exports in these several countries. For, I submit, the total trade indicates very little. Let us compare these countries in regard to their imports, and the ministers may take as much comfort as they like out of the fact that our imports have grown excessive in this period. Japan shows an increase of imports of 274 per cent as compared with 140 per cent for Canada. What is the reason for this? Japan, at the present time, is borrowing heavily, mortgaging everything in sight in order to increase her powers of manufacture, transportation and general industry.

She hopes at some future day to be able to pay that back, I presume. Canada is doing something along that same line. She comes after Japan in imports, buying a great deal more than she sells, especially this last year, when I believe her imports were something like $120,000,000 more than her exports. Compare Canada's condition with that of the Argentine republic. Ten years ago Canada and the Argentine were almost in the same position, the total trades of the two countries was within $9,000,000 of each other. The trade of the Argentine republic was $215,000,000 and that of Canada $224,000,000. These countries have almost exactly the same population, the tide of immigration has been flowing in to them at the same rate, the tillable area and conditions are very similar. What are the conditions to-day in the Argentine republic and in Canada? In the Argentine republic, in the years 1905, her imports were $205,000,000 and her exports $322,000,000, or nearly $120,000,000 more than her imports; while Canada, in 1906, had nearly $120,000,000 more of imports than of exports. Now, I submit, whatever antiquarians may say who have their noses buried in musty old books printed fifty or sixty years ago, I leave it to hon. gentlemen opposite, even to my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Hughes) whether he would not like to have conditions in Canada the same as they are in the Argentine republic, whether he would not like Canada to have $120,000,000 more of exports than of imports? I do not think there is an hon. gentleman in this House who would really prefer to have an excess of imports over exports.

Let us look at the position in the neighbouring republic. The United States have had an excess of exports over imports of something like $500,000,000 a year for a great many years. Will any hon. gentleman say that the United States is going backwards? If we are to judge from arguments of hon. gentlemen opposite who are so proud of the excess of imports over exports, we must conclude that the United States is in a bad way, that she must be going backwards, because her exports have exceeded her imports by $500,000,000 a year for many years. But what are the facts? Are not the United States growing richer, perhaps, faster than any other nation on earth? $500,000,000 of gold coming into that country every year in excess of what they pay out. Her industries are so active to-day that her manufacturers are pouring over the boundaries with their gold into Canada and Mexico to find an outlet for the investment of the money they have received from the excess of exports over imports. And yet hon. gentlemen talk about the advantages of an excess of imports over exports, showing that they derive their theories from old books printed a great many years ago. One of the cardinal principles of these theories is that a nation cannot sell unless it buys. What is the United States doing? Selling $500,000,000 more yearly for many years past than she buys. And is not the United States able to pay for everything she buys? The fact is that the old theory has been exploded by the actual facts of to-day staring us in the face. It is a fallacy of the worst kind, and I am sorry to know that it is indulged in by some hon. gentlemen opposite.

I presume that some hon. gentlemen who will follow me will refer to the case of England. They will say: There is a country that imports more than she exports. And England is not going to the dogs. The case of England, as was explained by the hon. member for North Toronto, is entirely different from that of most other nations. She does not get money enough from her exports to pay for her imports, but she gets vast sums of money from other sources. Her enormous fleets on every ocean are making vast sums of money which come silently into the coffers of the country. More than that, English capitalists have money invested in almost every country in the world—in Canada, the United States, Japan, China, the South American republics, Africa; all over the world English capitalists have enormous sums of money on interest, that interest is coming in every day, and it is with that interest that England pays the excess of imports over exports. It may be asked: But where did she make the money? If she is importing more than she exports, she must be going behind. I would recommend hon. gentlemen to look at the trade and navigation returns of England for the past one hundred and fifty years. Between 1750 and 1850 they will find that England, almost every year, had an enormous excess of exports over imports, to such an extent that in that period of one hundred years the total excess of exports amounted to no less than $4,500,000,000. That money alone, if put out at interest at 4 per cent, would, I suppose, pay several times over all her present excess of imports over exports. Money put out at 4 per cent doubles in twenty years. So in 1860 this money would amount to $9,000,000,000, in 1880 it would amount to $18,000,000, in 1900 it would be $36,000,000,000, and at the present time approximately $50,000,000,000. In my judgment, that is one of the sources from which England gets her money to pay her excess of imports. It does not seem to me that any argument has been advanced, either in this debate or in any other, to show that a condition of trade where imports exceed exports is a healthy condition, and that, if permanent, it can be any other than an unhealthy condition for Canada. I say the ministry are responsible for this excess of imports. Their fiscal policy admits large quantities of goods from abroad that ought to be made at home.

This treaty with France, it is expected, will increase our imports from that country. If the duties were reduced to a minimum the imports would be very much larger, and these gentlemen would be able to show in the trade and navigation returns an enormous total of trade with France, and they would go before the people and claim applause for an enormous increase in the total trade. By this French treaty we have reduced the duty on wine to such an extent that those who are engaged in the manufacture of native wines believe that the French wines will cheapen the price of Canadian wines and render their business unprofitable. Instead of the two or three hundred thousand dollars' worth of French wines at present coming in, we will probably have five or six hundred thousand dollars' worth soon coming in, and probably if the duty was still further reduced sufficient French wines would come in to supplant totally the sale of our still wines in Canada, the manufacture of which to-day amounts to something over a million dollars. Our wine manufacturers will be put out of business, our fruit-growers will be put out of business. Instead of making a reasonable profit upon their investment, the wine industry will be a dead industry. That is a natural result of an excess of imports, particularly if brought about by lowering the duties.

I might point out scores of other articles. A few years ago we were importing into this country less than $10,000,000 worth of woollen goods; we were manufacturing most of the woollen goods used in Canada, What is the condition to-day? Year by year our imports of woollens have increased and the home production has decreased, until to-day the woollen mills are nearly out of existence and we are buying nearly $15,000,000 worth of woollens in Great Britain annually. This shows largely in our imports, but is it for the benefit of this country, of the woollen mills, of the people who wish to have woollen mills operate in order that there may be a better market for what they themselves produce? Is it to the advantage of the farmers that several thousand workmen should be thrown out of employment? I submit not, and the ministry should receive no credit, no applause, for having increased the imports into Canada while they are not able to point to a single market which they have opened up or a single thing they have done to increase our exports.

Our exports increased in ten years 79 per cent, while those of the other countries increased as follows: Argentine, 168 per cent; Japan, 136 per cent; Mexico, 100 per cent. If the ministry claim credit for this increase I would suggest that next year instead of going to France to negotiate such a treaty as they did last year, they should take a trip to the Argentine Republic and ascertain how the ministry of that country managed to swell the exports more than twice as rapidly as ours have increased in ten years. Or let them go to Mexico, that old state, and ascertain how the Mexicans have been able to increase their exports in ten years at a more rapid rate than we have done. Let them take Japan, that country which was sneered at a few years ago as being half civilized. These gentlemen come here proud of having increased their exports, but Japan has increased her exports in a much greater degree.

The Minister of Agriculture is held up as having done much to increase our export trade. I was surprised on turning to the exports of some of our agricultural products in the official returns. The minister has been for a number of years making a great boast of the expenditure of $100,000 to equip almost a fleet of steamers crossing the Atlantic with cold storage, and it is claimed that we have been able to send large quantities of butter and fruit in this way. I have said frequently in the House and it is still true, that the export of fruit in cold storage is a dead industry. We are not exporting any. A few years ago, when the cold storage system was first installed, it was tried, a number of experiments were made. There is no earthly reason why we should not export fruit in this way. We could even export peaches if we had cold storage that was any good; that could be relied on. We tried it with pears, which will stand shipment almost without cold storage, but we were unsuccessful, and to-day the industry is absolutely dead. Last summer, with a mechanical cold storage, we kept 20,000 baskets of peaches, the tenderest fruit we have, not selected fruit, for over three weeks, and then used them in the canning industry, and we did not lose five baskets out of the 20,000 baskets, but we cannot send hard, sound, selected peaches to Great Britain in cold storage ships because the temperature varies What is the argument of the minister? That these ships were not constructed to be operated as a cold storage plant is on land and to maintain a stable, equitable temperature; that they are only a sort of make-shift to keep the temperature somewhere near the proper point, a sort of aids to navigation, if I might so express it. There is no reason why the cold storage plants on the ships should not be made as perfect as on land, and why we should not carry the products of our orchards to Great Britain. There is a boundless market for our fruits there if we can convey them safely across the Atlantic, but peaches, the best fruit we have, have been selling for two seasons out of the last ten years as low as 10 cents a basket. There is no reason for not laying them down in Great Britain if we had good cold storage facilities. Money was voted willingly for this purpose. No member in the House opposed the grants, no man on this side has raised his voice against the granting of money for the assistance of the agricultural industry in this or any other way, but here we have $100,000 paid out and no control over the temperatures has been retained, the consequence being that we cannot export fruit to the old country with any degree of safety and the growers have given up trying.

Then take butter. Butter does not require a very efficient cold storage system; it may be kept at any temperature below freezing point, and one would have expected a large trade in this commodity. We have heard it trumpeted abroad throughout the land what wonderful things have been done in exporting butter in cold storage. The figures for the last three years are as follows :

Exports of butter in cold storage.

| Year. | |
|---|---|
| 1905 | $6,914,000 |
| 1906 | 4,581,000 |
| 1907 | 996,000 |

Thus, notwithstanding the enormous exertions of the Minister of Agriculture and all his coadjutors, the exports of butter in cold storage for 1907 fell to one-seventh of what they were two years before.

I wonder if there has not been something in addition to the hand of the minister that has caused this prosperity, this increase in our exports. If the minister claims credit for these increased exports during all these years, he must take the bitter with the sweet, and if he is responsible for any of this increase he must be responsible for this enormous decrease, the falling away of this trade until we are exporting practically no butter at all, notwithstanding what has been said of cold storage.

So with cold air; there was a time when it was not possible to ship apples to the old country in any condition at all. All that was required was the ventilation of the ships, the maintaining of the compartments in which the winter apples were stowed, at ocean temperature. Ventilation was all that was required, but the minister thought that was not good enough; he had not originated it, and so he instituted another system and arranged for the installation of cool air plants on the steamers, a hybrid between cold storage and ventilation. What has been the consequence? Very little fruit was sent in these cool chambers because it is an expensixe method of shipping, owing to the room taken up by the plant and because the same results can be achieved by ventilation. An examination of thermograph records show that the ocean temperature for practically every day in the summer is sufficiently cool and that in the ships without expensive plants for the production of cool air satisfactory average temperature could be maintained at very little expense by mechanical ventilation. No extra charge is made for shipment in ventilated chambers, it is an inexpensive method and people avail themselves of it. Many of our ships are now ventilated in this way, although some are not. There is no rule or law governing the matter, the government simply writes occasionally to the steamship companies asking them to be good enough to put in these plants. Some companies have done so and are well equipped but, as I have said, many are not, there is no certainty, there is no rule governing the installation of ventilation.

Another thing for which the minister has claimed credit is the Fruit Marks Act. I have several times pointed out that whatever there is of good in the Fruit Marks Act, and I think it is a good Act, is the result of the deliberations of the fruit growers of this country who met on two different occasions and practically framed this Act. The last time they met was a couple of years ago when the minister called a delegation of fruit growers here, paid their fares, and, I think, their time, in order to consult together on various matters in connection with the fruit industry. We have not had any more of these conferences. We hoped at that time that we should have further conferences of that sort; they would be productive of good I am sure. I wonder if the reason is that although the gentlemen were the guests of the minister and he was practically their host, they met him in his own house practically in Ottawa, they still had the hardihood to condemn the minister in a resolution and therefore have not been again called together.

At present the fruit industry is under the dairy branch of the department and the fruit growers of this country thought the time had arrived when the industry had become important enough to have a branch of its own and not be subservient to the dairy branch, and so a resolution was passed condemning the minister for not taking heed of the representations made to him in this respect. The minister has not called these gentlemen together since, and I wonder if there is any connection between the two things. At that conference, what was considered certain improvements to the Fruit Marks Act were suggested, but I think it was a mistake to provide for a third grade. The minister cannot be blamed for that as he merely took the suggestion of the fruit growers. However, the minister has had all to do with the administration of the Act, and I am sorry to say that his administration of it has been disastrous, and Canadian apples have this year received such a bad reputation in the English market that it will take them years to live it down. Surely when the minister took this Fruit Marks Act entirely under his control not only in Canada but in England, and when he appointed government inspectors to carry it into effect, surely we had a right to expect that our apples would be honestly packed and that their high grade would reflect credit on the country. But such has been the result, that even the very servants of the government have been loudest in their condemnation. I do not need to express my own opinion or the opinion of those in the apple business, I need only quote what Mr. Jackson, Manchester, Eng., says, and Mr. Jackson is a representative of the Trade and Commerce Department which the member for Brandon wants to abolish. I would not be surprised if the Minister of Agriculture would look for its abolition too. Mr. Jackson says :

Canadian apples on the British market.

The closing weeks of the apple season are now at hand, and it is with much regret that I have to report that Canadian apples have not maintained their well-known reputation on the British market this season. Indeed, speaking from a knowledge of the principal markets in this district which include such important distributing centres as Leeds, Hull, Newcastle-on-Tyne and Sheffield, very many complaints have been against the packing and grading; in fact, the shipments this season are looked upon by the best judges in the trade as not only inferior in quality to those received for many years, but that the grading and packing has scarcely ever been worse.

Faulty packing and grading.

Various complaints have reached this office from the leading houses in the trade, which, after being fully investigated, all point to the one regrettable fact, viz.: that the Fruit Marks Act has not been complied with. Different kinds of apples appear to have been indiscriminately packed together without any due regard to the grading. Especially does this apply to No. 2s., which has caused the merchants here to go to the trouble and expense of having the apples repacked before they could be successfully disposed of to the retail trade. It must be remembered that packing of this kind is equally as disastrous in its effects to the merchant on this side as it is to the exporter in Canada. When the customers purchase a barrel of apples, which judging from the surface appearance, are of good sound quality throughout, but find, on investigation further, that this applies to the top layers only, then not only does this seriously injure the trade of the merchant, but, in the same way, materially lowers the reputation of Canadian fruit in his own estimation.

The 'British Fruit Grower' of January 9, 1908, says :

Nova Scotian and Canadian apples.

During the present season for Canadian and Nova Scotian apples our market representative has on two or three occasions called attention in his notes to the grading of these apples, the marks on the barrels (owing to the small size of the fruit in the crop) not representing the character of apples which had come to be associated with No. 1 and No 2 grades in previous seasons. As the season has been accentuated by a distinct falling off in the actual grading of the apples, the first grade varying considerably in size of fruit, and in some cases the contents of the barrels should, in the opinion of some of the best judges in the trade, have been marked No. 3 instead of No. 1, and in a few instances No. 2 were found to be superior to the best mark.

It seems to us that, following the excessively dry season and the consequent all-round smaller size of the fruits, the Nova Scotia growers have failed to realize that the No. 1 grade of other seasons was not to be found and that, in fact, there should have been none or very few of No. 1 marked. The 'large' apples of 1907 should have been packed as second grade. This explanation will, of course, not cover the instances where No. 2 and No. 1 have come mixed indiscriminately in one barrel. Some of the Nova Scotia fruit growers are as blind to their own interests as are their brothers on this side, and nothing short of coercion will ever make them pack fair and square. Nova Scotia has had a good name for square dealing in the past, but we would remind our friends on the other side that to be 'ill deemed is to be half hanged.'

Redeeming features.

The only redeeming feature to the whole disagreeable business is that the shipments sent into this district by some of the reputable apple shippers of Ontario have been all right in packing and grading, taking into account the average size of the Canadian apple of this year—but even these did not realize the prices which should have been obtained owing to the false, fraudulent and slipshod methods of those who were responsible for the actual packing of the majority of the fruit.

American apples.

Canadian apples are to-day a poor second in this market to American apples, which have this year been better packed and graded than ever before.

Is not that a sorry condition of affairs. A few years ago when everybody packed their own apples and shipped them without government inspection to the old country, Canadian apples ranked high in the British market, but after some years experience of this Fruit Marks Act which was passed in the hope of making our apples vastly superior to the American apples—and the soil and climate of Ontario and Nova Scotia grow better apples than the Americans can produce—and yet notwithstanding the fact that a large number of inspectors are scattered throughout the country, Canadian apples have gone from bad to worse until the American apples outrank them. We do not complain of the amount of the expenditure in this country so much as we do of the useless manner in which the money is expended. And here is an instance of it. No one will deny that the fruit industry deserves every encouragement and that money may be spent almost lavishly if wisely spent on its improvement, but after the expenditure of thousands of dollars for fruit inspectors we find that no good results have been obtained. The Fruit Marks Act is a good Act if it is properly administered, and I urge the Minister of Agriculture to make a stronger effort towards giving effect to it. Whether his inspectors are incapable or not I do not know, if they are political appointees the chances are that they are no good, but at all events the result is deplorable. Let the minister appoint more inspectors and better inspectors; let him if necessary spend a little more money and try if he cannot restore the good name of Canadian apples. The Fruit Marks Act applies to other fruits than those packed in close packages such as apples; it requires all fruits to be packed honestly but so far as I know there has been no one in the Niagara district since the Act came into force, to see that it is properly administered. We want an inspector or two in that district to see that the Act is carried out better than it is, but I warn the minister that his inspectors will have to show better results than they did in other directions last year. Then, again, the penalties provided in the Act are too small. The fine is 25 cents a barrel and it was imposed only in the case of ten barrels or so that were examined, and so people began to think that the Act was practically a dead letter. Probably that is one of the reasons why this year the packing all over the country was so defective. What I suggest is that he increase the fine and that instead of fining for a few barrels he should collect that fine for a carload. It is no great deterrent for a man to pay 25 cents a barrel for half a dozen barrels but it is if he has to pay 25 or 50 cents a barrel on a carload he will be more careful to observe the Act.

I intended to devote a few remarks this evening to a criticism of the Department of Militia and Defence, but as the minister (Sir Frederick Borden) is not here I will reserve them until a future time. I had some remarks in regard to several of the ministers, but as they are all away I am rather afraid that if I have to wait until they all come back I shall have to cut my speech rather short.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How many ministers are there present now?

Mr. E. D. SMITH. The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) seems to occupy the seats of all the other ministers for the time being. We had a good deal of criticism the other night because my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was absent from his seat for a short time. A large part of the speech of the hon. Minister of Customs was devoted to a criticism of the hon. member for North Toronto because he was not in his seat. Whatever is the reason we find that the seats of hon. gentlemen opposite are largely vacant at the present time and especially those of the ministry. However, I must say a word or two in regard to the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) or in regard to his department. The minister was here during a large portion of the afternoon and I had hoped he would remain a little longer That department has under it the carrying out of a very important Act, the Adulteration of Foods Act. The Adulteration of Foods Act is an Act which has been on the statute-books a great many years, it has been amended at various times until to-day, if it were enforced, it would be of very great benefit and it would bring about a better condition of affairs in regard to the purity of food in this country. There is no doubt that something is needed in that regard. We know that in the United States the condition got so bad that a wave of indignation swept over the country, the consequence of which was that very severe laws were passed. I am very glad to see that the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue is now in his seat. Very stringent laws were passed in the United States, and I believe it is generally conceded that an injustice has been done in some cases. We have on our statute-books a law that might be improved. Even as it is, if it were enforced, it would be of very great use. It provides that foods that are not pure must be marked with the word 'compound.' That does not signify enough, in my humble judgment, but even if it were marked in plain letters on all foods that are compounds and which come under this Act there would be a vast difference in the conditions that prevail in this country at the present time. But that law is practically a dead letter. What do we find? We find that the minister has a number of inspectors all over this country. They get salaries, and what do they do? They gather together some samples, they send these down to Ottawa and they are analysed. The analysis is published in a bulletin, that bulletin is in the distribution office or in the Department of Inland Revenue and anybody can get it who applies for it, but the public know nothing about it. There is no punishment for the manufacturer. I asked the other day in the House how many had been fined in the last two years. How many do you think have been fined in the last two years? Eight. How many cases of adulteration did the government find by this extremely flimsy method of having a man go around Toronto, and other cities, take samples from stores once or twice in the year and send them down to Ottawa? We have in Bulletin 119, fifteen cases of adulteration; Bulletin 115, 4·4 per cent of the cases marked adulterated; Bulletin 120, maple sugar, 65·58 per cent; Bulletin 22, nine cases; Bulletin 123, 51 cases; Bulletin 124, 11 cases; Bulletin 121, 18 cases; Bulletin 13, 7 cases; Bulletin 140, 87 cases; Bulletin 141, 130 cases, making in all several hundred cases that the minister found by this extremely flimsy method, and still he tells me that among all those cases there are eight fines imposed. That is the way the Act is carried out. He says that there were sixty or seventy cases in which they had to pay the cost of the analysis. That was the extent of the fine. How much of a deterrent does the minister think it would be to a manufacturer to have to pay $5 or $6 for the analysis of a pot of jam once a year, or whatever the article might be? The fact of the matter is that the Act is absolutely a dead letter, whereas it is a good Act if it is enforced. If in all these cases the offenders were punished and if the minister had his inspectors go around where he found these cases to ascertain if there were more adulterated goods in the same store or in other stores some good might be accomplished. One manufacturer puts up the genuine article, it costs him a good deal and he sells it at a high price, but it is genuine food for the people. Another manufacturer puts up an adulterated article compounded of various mixtures and it is cheap. But, it is marked the same as the pure article, it goes on the shelves of the dealer, the consumer is told that it is pure because it does not say that it is compound as the law requires, the householder is not an expert, he is not able to detect the adulteration, he takes it home and consumes it and it proves to be an extremely unsatisfactory article for the price. I have no objection to anybody making any mixture he likes if he marks it 'compound,' but if it is not marked 'compound' it is an injustice to the manufacturer of pure goods and to the consumer as well. It is one of the duties of the Minister of Inland Revenue to see that the Act is more strictly enforced. I am told that the Minister of Agriculture proposes to strengthen the hands of the Minister of Inland Revenue by doing something along that line. I hope he will bring in a Bill on this line that it will be more stringent in its provisions and that it will be strictly enforced.

I was going to have a word to say in regard to the Department of Public Works. Our expenditures have grown very largely in that department. We are expending very large sums of money on public works and if these moneys were expended judiciously, economically and to the advantage of the country, if the bridges, wharfs, post offices, and other public buildings that are built were absolutely required in the interest of the country nobody would find any fault with it. But, we find that the men who are put in charge of these different public works are of such poor ability, the natural inference being that it is because they are political appointments and that they have not been selected on their own merits, that a great many of these works are not only extravagantly built but they fall down when they are built. You can pick out scores of expensive works of various kinds that have fallen down. Why? We have an example right here in parliament square, and we have other examples all over the country. In my own constituency there was a lighthouse built not long ago, and shortly after it was built it fell over into the water. Several hundred thousand dollars were spent in improving the piers in Burlington canal, and a large portion has slid into the water. It is not a difficult matter to build a pier there, but the man who was appointed to look after that particular public work was a man who had been a farmer all his life and had never built lighthouses. He had a fifty-acre farm, and for the last few years was appointed to a post office at $50 a year, which he ran in connection with his little farm. Well, this is the man who was appointed to look after this great public work and a large portion of it fell into the water. What else could you expect? If the minister had put this work in charge of somebody who understood building and could be relied on as an expert, this structure would not have fallen down a year or two after it was built.

Mr. McKENZIE. Did not that occur during a great storm?

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Why, my dear friend from the county of Bruce (Mr. McKenzie), could you conceive of a storm so severe that it would cause a pier built in still water, in the channel of a canal, about 150 feet wide, to slide into the water, or does my hon. friend think a lighthouse should only be built for fair weather? Yet that is the condition which existed there, and that is only on a par with the piers and works built up in the county of Huron. Why, the hon. gentleman who then represented the county of Huron in this House, had not the hardihood to stand up here and defend these works. He left the House when the discussion was going on because he could not support the expenditure. In fact, the following year he condemned it. That is a sample of the way the people's money is spent on public works, and then they ask us: Do we object to the expenditure of these large sums, over $94,000,000 taken from the consolidated fund during the past eleven years and spent on capital account.

Speaking of these expenditures on capital account, what is our position? The Minister of Finance pointed out some time ago—and it semed to me, when he pointed that out, that he was preparing for an election at a very short date—that the public debt of this country had only increased some $5,000,000 while the present government was in office. Further on he pointed out that the increase in the public debt this year would be $12,000,000. A little further on, he admitted that next year the expenditures out of consolidated fund would probably about equal the revenue. In other words, the total amount next year spent upon capital account will have to be borrowed. What is the amount? $42,961,220 is the amount, according to the estimate of the Finance Minister, which next year we will have to add to our public debt on that head. So that a year from the end of this month we will be in this position that we will have added $60,135,000 to the public debt of this country since the Liberal party came into power, and we will only have partially constructed the Grand Trunk Pacific. I mention that particularly as it has a bearing on his statement that the public debt per head has been decreasing under Liberal rule. The Finance Minister pointed out that the debt per head in the year the present government came into power was $49, and that to-day it is only $43. But a year from now we shall have increased our public debt $60,000,000. Taking our population of 6,000,000 people, that is $10 per head. Add that to the $43. and you have $53 a head a year from now as against $49 when the Conservatives left office in 1896. That will put a considerably different complexion on the argument that the capital debt per head has decreased under the present administration. What will it be a year after when we spend another $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 on the Grand Trunk Pacific and what will it be the year following that?

And speaking of the Grand Trunk Pacific reminds me that we have very large expenditures in this country to meet. Well, I do not object to large expenditures if they are in the interests of the people. But here is an enormous expenditure which is absolutely unjustifiable. The Grand Trunk Railway would have built that road from North Bay to Winnipeg for a very small sum—a sum not very much exceeding the amount which the right hon. the leader of this House said the Grand Trunk Pacific would cost, namely, $13,000,000. For $15,000,000 we could have had all we can get out of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and that is another competitive line through the Northwest. That line would open up the same country that the Grand Trunk Pacific will and would give us connection at North Bay with the great railway companies, and besides would not have given us a competitor to the Intercolonial Railway. It would have increased instead of decreased the traffic on the Intercolonial Railway, and we would have had nearly $150,000,000 to spend on other purposes, if it were wise to spend it.

There are other purposes on which we could have spent it, which we see staring us in the face, some of which at least we ought to engage in at an early date. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) to-night spoke of one of them, namely, the construction of a railway to Hudson bay. I believe that is something we shall have to undertake at an early date. I agree largely with the hon. member for Brandon in his statement regarding that enterprise. And if we had not squandered our $150,000,000 in the construction of this totally unneeded road from North Bay east, we would have sufficient to construct a railway of 600 miles long to connect Hudson Bay with the terminus of the Canadian Northern and build wharfs, elevators and other harbour facilities. That would require, according to the estimate of the hon. member, some $30,000,000. We would also have enough to build the Georgian Bay ship canal, if we thought it wise to build it, and it is a question whether that would be a wise undertaking. But if not, we could spend a portion of the $150,000,000 in deepening the Welland canal, in building locks large enough to allow vessels drawing twenty-five feet to bring down the grain from Chicago, Duluth and Port Arthur to Kingston and unload it there into barges, and it is just as easily unloaded into barges and vessels as it is into and out of elevators. For a moiety of the amount squandered on the Grand Trunk Pacific, these great undertakings could be carried out, and you could have absolutely the cheapest means of transportation from the Northwest to the sea-board that can possibly be devised.

What is the position we are in to-day? We have enlarged the Welland canal within the memory of the youngest man in this House to 14 feet. We have an advantage in that respect over the old Erie canal—a very small advantage. But that advantage, small in itself, is practically offset by the cost of ocean carriage on our products from Montreal to Liverpool, as compared with the charge from New York to Liverpool. In the near future the authorities in the United States will have the Erie canal deepened to such an extent that the advantage we now have to the Welland canal will be entirely wiped out, with the result of doing away with the trade which we now carry by the Welland canal. Practically the whole trade will then go by way of Buffalo and the Erie canal to the sea-board unless we do something to retain this trade. So that we can see that in the near future there will be a demand for large expenditures. This being so, it was the bounden duty of this government to have conserved the large sums of money that have been raised from the taxes of the people. If we must go into the money markets of the world, it would be better to do it for these really valuable undertakings than to have wasted our money on this Grand Trunk Pacific scheme. Of course, now we must build the Grand Trunk Pacific. Hon. gentlemen opposite ask us: If you get into power, are you going to throw up the work on the Grand Trunk Pacific? We cannot do that. We have assumed the obligation, and the work must be gone on with. But we have before us the prospect of enormous expenditure for the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway, including the necessary expenditure at Fort Churchill, and also either the enlargement of the Welland canal or the construction of the Georgian bay canal. Our expenditures might have been much more moderate but for this wildcat scheme, as I call it, of the Grand Trunk Pacific, which is a political scheme and forced upon the government under political pressure. The government brought it forward simply as opportunists, men who, for the sake of remaining in office, were willing to sacrifice the best interests of the country. What were millions to them if they could retain office? What were tens of millions if they could placate their followers in Quebec and, going a step further, could placate their followers in the maritime provinces?

Now, I had intended to take up a number of subjects, but the hour is growing late, and I will not weary the House with many further remarks. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) made a declamatory speech the other evening. He replied to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), criticising that hon. gentleman for the length of his speech, figuring out that each gentleman was entitled to three hours and forty minutes, and as the hon. member for North Toronto had exceeded that time, he had to borrow from other hon. members on this side. I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) that if the hon. member for North Toronto had required further time for the discussion of these important questions, there is not a member on this side of the House but that would have given up every minute of his time. The Minister of Customs indulged in certain criticisms of the hon. member for North Toronto—I was going to say puerile criticisms. There is not a man in this chamber, though we have some able men here, there is not a man in politics in the Dominion of Canada, I believe, who could have crowded into five hours and a-half the unanswerable arguments, the keen criticisms of the government, which have not yet been met, that the hon. member for North Toronto crowded into that speech. Feeling himself utterly unable to answer, the hon. Minister of Customs devoted a large portion of his time to such statements as that I have referred to, that the hon. gentleman was taking up the time of hon. members on this side.

I would like to deal with such arguments as the Minister of Customs did use. He read from the platform of the Liberal party, as adopted in 1893, and said that all but one plank had been carried out. He did admit that one plank had not been carried out—the renovation of the Senate. But he seemed to excuse that on the ground that some Liberal members of the House were still discussing it, and he appeared to hope at some time in the future that there would be an amendment of the constitution of the Senate. The hon. member tried—it was only a try, because not a member behind him would agree with his statement—to make the House believe that these planks have been carried into effect, one of the most important being the plank on the fiscal policy. He read that plank of the platform, which declares in favour of eliminating the principle of protection from the tariff, and he had the hardihood to say that that plank had been carried out, and that the principle of protection had been eliminated from the tariff. Only a year ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), who would be one of the last men in the House to make the admission if he could have avoided it, admitted that the principle of protection was in the tariff. Behind the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) are many strong protectionists who would hardly agree with him in saying that the principle of protection did not appear in the tariff. I wondered, when the hon. member was speaking, why it was that he had raised the tariff on woollens from 23½ per cent to 30 per cent. Was it to produce revenue or was it to give some small protection to the woollen industry, which he knew was being smothered in this country? Was that a revenue tariff? I wonder if the hon. minister would actually have the hardihood to take up the various items of the tariff and say that the principle of protection has been eliminated from the tariff?

Prohibition was another of the planks of the platform. They declared that if, on a plebiscite being taken, the people declared in favour of prohibition, they would give prohibition. The plebiscite was taken and the vote was favourable, but the promise made in the platform was not carried out. Another plank was reciprocity with the United States. I mentioned that this afternoon, showing that it had not been carried out. Purity of administration was another of these planks—and practically the whole session thus far has had to be devoted to exposing the continuous, day by day, corruption and extravagance of this administration. The platform declared for the strictest economy and decreased expenditure. And our expenditure has reached $110,000,000 where it was only $40,000,000 in 1896. Another plank was the land for the settler—and a great part of this session has been devoted to showing the enormous grants of lands in the Northwest that were taken away from settlers and given to favourites. Enormous areas of timber limits have been almost given away. I have not time to dwell upon these matters. But just a word with regard to fishing limits. It seems to me that is the greatest outrage that has ever been perpetrated, and it is one that ought to condemn this government in the eyes of every man in the Northwest and throughout Canada—the outrage of handing over for sixteen and twenty-five years, fishing rights in almost all the great lakes and rivers of that great north land, for practically nothing. These fishing rights will be worth hundreds of thousands of dollars in the near future. They will be worth tens of thousands annually, and they could be sold for that to-day if they were properly put up to tender. Yet these fishing rights over that vast area have been almost given away to friends. I think that act alone ought to condemn this government in the eyes of the people of this country to such an extent that they will be driven from power the first time that the people have occasion to express their opinion.

Mr. ALFRED THOMPSON (Yukon Territory). I shall not detain the House at any length at this hour. I would like to make a few observations upon the interesting budget which was presented the other day by the Minister of Finance. It is a budget that to my mind will set the people of Canada thinking. I have been looking over the yearly expenditures since 1896, and I find that in that year the expenditure amounted to $44,000,000, when we had about 5,500,000 people. In the present year the expenditure is estimated at $110,000,000, and I am informed we have about 6,800,000 people. That was the statement made the other day before the Agriculture Committee by a gentleman who had inquired from the census bureau. Now this is an enormous sum of money for 6,800,000 people to raise. Roughly speaking, it is $16 per head, or $80 per family. It may be all right for the people of Canada to contribute yearly to the public treasury that amount of money in fat years. We have had several fat years recently. But I do not know that Canada to-day is greatly different from Egypt in ancient times when they had their fat and their lean years. You probably, Mr. Speaker (Mr. Galliher)—for I know you are a Bible student—will recollect the vision of the fat and lean kine, and the interpretation thereof. You will remember that while they had their fat years they also had their lean years. Now I am not one of those who look forward with fear that Canada will have seven lean years, or any other number of lean years; but the part of wisdom for every Canadian is to prepare his financial accounts so as to anticipate any lean years that may come, when, if they do come, he will be in a position to balance his accounts as they have been in the past.

There is one item mentioned in that budget which I strenuously object to, and that is the amount of money that has been paid for bonusing immigrants coming into this country. The history of immigration into this continent is rather an interesting subject. It is not necessary to recall the settlement of the New England states with English people or the province of Quebec by French people, or to recall the fact that the people in the New England states crossed the Alleghanies and invaded the valleys of the Mississippi and the middle west. It has been a question why the United States during these years have succeeded in getting a larger number of immigrants from the old land than we in Canada have done. Personally I think the great attraction were the cheap lands that were then given away by the United States to people who came from Europe, where the remains of the old feudal system were still in existence. There were other causes, however. The climatic conditions have had something to do with it; they have a better climate than we have and they have a different form of government. A republican form of government no doubt attracted some people from countries where the monarchical system was still in existence. We then saw the tide of immigration rolling across the Alleghany mountains, across the middle plains, and away out to the west. That was not arrested even by the Rocky mountains, but it crossed to the Pacific slope. You remember that about the year 1849 the gold rush to California was across the plains instead of going by way of Panama. Well, what was the result? The cheap lands of the United States have been occupied; they are now no longer cheap. Lands that a few years ago could be bought at $5 or $10 an acre are to-day worth $100 per acre in the middle west. The consequence is that those people are turning north. We have two tides of immigration into this country to-day, one from the east and one from the middle and western states. Why are they going north? Because we have the last and the only west. We have in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan a territory of 100,000,000 acres of fertile soil capable of raising wheat and other grains and supporting an enormous population. Why then is it necessary for us to pay $5 per head, or any other sum, to induce immigrants to settle that land when we know that we have on this continent the last great region of arable land open to settlement? It is, to my mind, not only not necessary, but it is a bad advertisement for Canada. What is the situation in the republic to the south of us to-day? Are they bonusing immigrants to come to their shores? Not at all; they charged them $2 per head some time ago, and to-day they are charging them $4 per head for the privilege of coming into that country. It strikes me that the time has now come when we might very well abolish this bonus system for immigrants, and personally I would abolish it for all immigrants. I think our status in this world is so high to-day that the tide of immigration has permanently set in toward our shores, and there is no doubt that the time is not far distant when those sections of our western country will be very popular indeed. The east, of course, will always be the manufacturing centre, but the great wheat raising centre will be in the west.

Another thing I would like to refer to in passing, is the manner in which the government have been parcelling out the great natural resources of the west. The great asset of this country is its people, the people who have developed Canada from what it was to what it is, and who will carry on the development until they make this country a great nation. But there are other resources that should be fostered, I refer to the timber lands and the fishing wealth of the west. Now I come from a country where the policy of recent times was adopted some ten years ago in the Yukon, where large tracts of the public domain were alienated to people who were not residents of the country in many cases, but still held them purely for speculative purposes, and did not develop them until they were either forced to do so or to relinquish their title. Judging from the evidence that has been adduced, I have no doubt that the lands which have been alienated from the public domain in the west are alienated to men who, while they may develop them in time, will not develop them with the haste which is necessary for a growing country like Canada. So it is with this and with many other great natural resources of Canada.

I have little further to say, except to state from my place in this House that I consider the bond which bound me to the independent party which I represented when I came here is now dissolved and from now on I shall support the Conservative party and the principles laid down by the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden).

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, as it is now nearly half past ten on Friday night, I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 10.18 p.m.

---

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 23, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRINTING OF ORDER PAPER IN FRENCH LANGUAGE.

On the orders of the day being called :

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the government to the fact that 'the orders of the day' have not been printed in French, as I supposed they were to be after the discussion which took place in the House the other day. The King's Printer is required to print them in French, and I desire to know what rule is to be observed in future.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I am pretty sure that the orders of the day have been printed in French. If they have not been it must be an error of some kind. The deputy clerk has just handed me a copy printed in the French language.

Mr. THOMPSON.

DISTRIBUTION OF SEED GRAIN IN THE NORTHWEST.

Mr. BOYCE. I would like to ask the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether it is the intention of the government to extend the provisions of the Seed Grain Act to the unorganized districts of Ontario or any portion of Ontario, or if any promise has been made in that connection directly or indirectly ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have received no representations from any of the provincial governments upon this matter and it has not been taken into consideration.

ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES AT SOREL, &c.

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) if the report of Mr. Gaudet, appointed a commissioner to inquire into the padding of pay-lists at Sorel, the non-delivery of stone and some other matters, has yet been made to the department, whether Mr. Gaudet has been paid and if so, what fees have been paid to him ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). An interim report has been made. I had it with me the other day and I think I brought it down, but I will make inquiries.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I inquire if there is any news as to the date at which the Civil Service Commission report will be brought down.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). A report has been received from the Civil Service Commissioners but it is incomplete. No doubt it will be completed shortly and will be brought down.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You mean that the commissioners presented it in an incomplete state ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think there are some portions that were accidentally omitted ; no doubt they will be supplied.

PRIVATE BILLS.

INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTS.

House in committee on Bill (No. 88) to incorporate the Institute of Architects of Canada—Mr. J. C. Walsh.

On section 4 : Membership.

Mr. GERVAIS. I move that the section be struck out.

Mr. BLAIN. I would ask if this section is not an infringement of provincial rights ? It occurs to me that this is a matter that ought to be dealt with by the provincial government, and while I do not wish to criticise it too closely, I think it requires some explanation and I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the Bill whether that point has been considered ?

Mr. GERVAIS. I may tell the hon. gentleman that I am in charge of the Bill and have been opposed to it all through. I have moved that this clause be struck out and would wish to have the whole preamble and the Bill defeated because it is an infringement on the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature, for this parliament has no power to legislate on matters affecting education. This contention was granted by the Private Bills Committee ; so much so good. It is now the duty of this House to say that this parliament is powerless to incorporate social clubs, as the present architectural institute.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As the promoter of the Bill is not here I would ask to have the Bill stand.

Progress reported.

SHUSWAP AND THOMPSON RIVER BOOM COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 49) to incorporate the Shuswap and Thompson River Boom Company—Mr. Duncan Ross.

Mr. LENNOX. I would like information from the gentleman in charge of this Bill as to the exact extent to which it has been amended. I understand that when it was before the committee there was a good deal of objection to it.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. This is a Bill introduced for the purpose of authorizing the lumbering industries in that particular locality to make such improvements along the streams as will enable them to float their logs to the various mills. When the Bill came before the Private Bills Committee as it was an important measure it was thought better to refer it to a sub-committee. The sub-committee, in conjunction with the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) discussed the various clauses and introduced such amendments as they thought were necessary to protect the interests not only of the public along those streams but also of other smaller industries that might not be included among the applicants for this measure.

The chief amendments will be found in subsection 3 of clause 9 of the Bill as reprinted, authorizing the Governor in Council to make such orders and regulations as are necessary for the expeditious handling of lumber, pulpwood, &c., in clause 10, which provides that the works are to be open to the public and that in case of dispute the Minister of Public Works will have the right to settle the dispute and in clause 11 which provides that all tolls, dues and charges are to be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. Then it is provided by clause 14 that if the company does not carry out whatever regulations the Minister of Public Works or the Governor in Council decides to impose upon the company such portions of the works of the company as are not observing those rules and regulations shall be confiscated. These amendments leave the Bill in this position that these various lumber companies are combined together for the purpose of making the necessary improvements in these streams. They cannot begin to make any of these improvements without the consent of the Minister of Public Works, and after the works are constructed the Minister of Public Works makes the regulations as to how they are to be run, what tolls are to be charged, and unless the company carry out these regulations the works are confiscated. The subcommittee and the Minister of Public Works, I think did everything possible to protect the interests of the public in the preparation of this Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. If I recollect aright, there was before this House last year a Bill to give similar powers to what are given here, to a company that had been operating on the Thompson river for several years. I am not sure whether that Bill passed this House, but it did not become law; and it would appear that the company which is asking for this Bill is the same company which raised serious objections to the Bill of last year. I believe that one of these rivers, the Shuswap, and may be also the Thompson, was worked earlier by the company promoting last year's legislation than by the company which is promoting this legislation. Certainly it was operated for four or five years, and improvements were made by the former owners of the lumber there, and I believe they found no great difficulty in bringing down their lumber. I understand that representatives of that company were here this year when the matter was before the Private Bills Committee. I would like to ask whether this Bill is framed so as to protect the rights of the former operators, and the present operators under a different name, on that river, and whether the consent of those who applied for the Bill of last year is given to the provisions of this Bill as amended ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. What the hon. gentleman says is in a measure correct; but since the former company secured legislation from this parliament in 1904 authorizing it to carry on booming works in the North Thompson river, the ownership of these mills has passed into the hands of other people, and when these people bought the mills they bought the booming rights at the same time. Last year, when this company asked for legislation, the milling companies that controlled all the large mills took very strong exception to it, claiming that if any booming legislation were to be granted, it ought to go to the active mill operators, and not to anybody who, though having had large interests previously, had no very large interests in the country now. The Bill did pass here under representations that the mill-men were interested in it; but when the mill-men came down and made representations to the Senate, the Senate advised the lumber interests to get together and ask for such legislation as would enable them to carry on the improvements subject to regulations of the government. The old company this year renewed their application for a charter, and the mill-men, in order to protect themselves, asked for the legislation suggested by the Senate last year. The sub-committee believed that if any legislation of this kind were granted—and I am perfectly willing to concede that it is rather dangerous legislation to be granted at any time—it should be granted to the men actively engaged in the lumber business, subject to such regulations as would protect the interests of the public. The sub-committee believe that we have such regulations, and that the company, when incorporated, can do absolutely nothing without the express will and under the control and regulation of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to have the matter a little further explained. The hon. member intimates that the company which formerly operated on this river is not now an active company. That is not the fact. The company that owned large interests on that river operated there and was the old Kamloops Lumber Company, which had its mill at Kamloops. They operated for a considerable length of time, I do not know exactly how long. Then their mill at Kamloops was burned down; but they immediately replaced it with a large and better one, and they have never ceased to operate that since, as the Kamloops Lumber Company, or as their successors. At that time there was no question of any other parties operating on that river. During these years they were the sole operators, operating both in shingles and in large lumber, having their shingle mill at Shuswap and their large lumber mill at Kamloops. The successors of that company came to this parliament last year and asked for certain rights as the original operators and the active present operators, claiming that these rights, if granted at all, should be granted to them; but they were denied legislation last year. This year, other operators on the Thompson and Shuswap rivers come here and ask for the very legislation which they opposed last year, and it does not seem to me to be quite fair that the original operators and the constantly continuing operators should be denied legislation which is given to others.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I do not understand the hon. gentleman. To whom does he refer as the Kamloops Lumber Company ?

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that there is only one Kamloops Lumber Company.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The assets of that company were sold, as I understand, to the Lamb & Watson Company, who are operating there, and are now applying for this legislation.

Mr. FOSTER Who were the applicants for the incorporation last year ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Mr. J. C. Shields was the principal applicant, as being interested in the Monarch Lumber Company, which has a small mill at Savona at Kamloops lake. The Lamb & Watson Company who were the opponents of the legislation of last year, and who ask for the legislation of this year, have bought all the assets of the Kamloops Lumber Company.

Mr. FOSTER. If that be true it puts a different face on the question.

Mr. COPP. The promoters of this Bill are the Lamb & Watson Lumber Company. There are four companies operating on these waters. I am speaking on behalf of three of these companies, and have been trying before the Private Bills Committee and before the sub-committee to get this Bill into shape to protect the operators on these waters. I am on behalf of the Thompson River Lumber Company, which two years ago had a Bill before this House. But what happened was this : Under that Bill they had to commence their operations in two years.

Mr. FOSTER. Did that Bill become law?

Mr. COPP. That Bill became law. But they had to get from the engineer in British Columbia the approval of their plans, but he did not approve of them for some six months. They were filed here at Ottawa, but as there was no Minister of Public Works at any time up to the time of the expiration of the Act they could not have their plans approved in order to begin their work.

Mr. FOSTER. Your plans?

Mr. COPP. The moment the two years expired and they were unable to get their plans approved on account of their not being any Minister of Public Works at the time, this company, which had opposed them in every shape and form when they were trying to secure their Bill, came to this parliament and got its application for a private Bill in first. Their Bill came before the Private Bills Committee, it was reported by that committee and is now before the House.

Mr. LENNOX. The other Bill is still before the Private Bills Committee for consideration.

Mr. COPP. Yes; the parties who had the first Bill are asking for a renewal of it before that committee.

Mr. FOSTER. What party?

Mr. COPP. The Thompson River Lumber Company. They have a saw-mill at the city of Kamloops. There is the Monarch Lumber Company, which has a paid-up capital of $140,000; and the Sovereign Lumber Company, which has a paid-up capital of $50,000. These three are opposing this Bill. There is only one company to-day before this House asking for this charter in opposition to the other three. Therefore, I cannot understand how the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Ross) can say that this Bill is joined in by all the lumber proprietors on that river. No one company should have the power this is asking for. This is an American company entirely who have bought the mills of the Kamloops Company. They came over to operate a mill, and they even asked that clause 127 of the Company's Act should not apply to them, that is the clause requiring that the majority of the directors should be British subjects. The committee, after it was fought out for days, finally conceded that, and it was struck out.

Mr. GALLIHER. Try and be fair. When you say that the question of their being British subjects was fought for days, it was not fought for a minute, but settled without argument.

Mr. COPP. It went from the Private Bills Committee to a sub-committee, and there it remained. It came back to the Private Bills Committee, and it was there struck out after it had passed the sub-committee. I have given notice of two amendments to this Act. I have done everything I could to get this Act into some shape to protect the interests of the other operators on these rivers and also the public. I am opposed to the Bill in principle as unfair to the other operators and the public. If there is any company which should be protected by the House, it is the one which first got its Bill through and could not take advantage of it because there was no Minister of Public Works to approve of its plans. The renewal of that Bill is before the Priviate Bills Committee, but it will remain there.

Mr. FOSTER. Why is it not here?

Mr. COPP. Because the committee have not acted on it. They have taken up this Bill, a Bill from a company which two years ago fought the other company tooth and nail in opposition to their securing the very rights they claim now for themselves.

Mr. MORIN. Is there another dam on the Thompson river below this dam we are now talking about?

Mr. COPP. I think not.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. There is no dam on the Thompson river below Kamloops.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no interest one way or the other, except to see the interest of all parties fairly protected; but I do think, after the two statements made by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Mr. Copp). we should hesitate before proceeding further. There are different parties applying for legislation on these streams, one of which was precedent to the other to the extent the hon. member for Digby has said. That Bill is still before the Private Bills Committee and ought to be reported, so that we might consider the two measures together. The other statement is this, and it is a pretty strong allegation to make, that one company got certain standing ground. It went to work, it got a proper engineer in British Columbia to do his preliminary work, and it sent down to the Minister of Public Works here for a formal act of approval. But the approval could not be got because there was then no Minister of Public Works. Then, time having expired, the second company comes in and obtains the rights of the other. If both those statements are true, we should move a little carefully. We ought to have the other Bill, we ought to have the case of each party before us so as to come to a proper decision. The first applicant, against whom there seems to have been no objection, performed his part, he furnished his engineer's report, and then came for the formal work but could find no minister. The time expired and then the other company came in. That is rather an act of injustice, and we should carefully inquire into the status and circumstances of all the parties looking for this legislation. I have had several letters in reference to this, but they have escaped my mind, and I am at a loss with regard to information.

Mr. LENNOX. We are told that the only reason why this charter expired, after the company had expended large sums of money on the undertaking and were in a position to submit their case for the approval of the Minister of Public Works, was because there was no Minister of Public Works to attend to the matter. That being the case, the government should insist, before we proceed any further, that the equitable rights of these parties who got a charter two or three years ago should not be lost sight of. Further than that, it seems to me that when two parties are seeking to control this river, it is important that their actions and applications should be reported before we deal with this matter in this House. It is an every day occurrence that we renew charters where the parties cannot give one single ground of excuse for not having proceeded with and carried out their Act of incorporation. Parties come back year after year, after five, ten, or even twenty years have elapsed from the time of their incorporation, and, on the most flimsy excuses, or, sometimes, even without even the most flimsy excuses, they get their time extended. Notably, this session, we are extending charters almost on sight. Because, of course, we recognize the financial stringency that, perhaps, prevents the parties from putting their charters in operation at this time even more than under ordinary conditions. At all events, we have the fact that, only two years ago, we incorporated a company, and they immediately put their engineer at work, who devoted his time, and, within six months completed his surveys, so that they were in a position to lay before the Minister of Public Works their plans. Before these could be considered by the Public Works Department, the charter limit expired. I submit that we ought not, at this time, to proceed against the interests of that company, without having their rights, at all events, considered by the Private Bills Committee and ultimately by the House. I have no interest in this matter. Or, if I have any interest at all, it is that I got some instructions from the other side, from those who are promoting this Bill, stating reasons why it should pass. In that sense I have no interest against the passing of this Bill, but I have a feeling that if there was a prior company incorporated only two years ago, and if they have been delayed by reason of the fact that the government or the Public Works Department were not in a position to consider their plans and so on, and even if it should turn out that there was a possibility of them getting them to consider before the expiry of the two years, I would be inclined rather to consider the rights of the prior company than those of the subsequent company, and this more emphatically when I find that it is not denied, in fact, it is admitted I think, that the very people who are promoting this legislation at this time were among the people who, two years ago were alleging reasons why this legislation should not be passed. I think that the right hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) should take this matter in hand and declare that it should not be proceeded with until we have the report of the Private Bills Committee upon the application for renewal of the charter of the prior company.

Mr. GALLIHER. As a member of the Private Bills Committee, also a member of the subcommittee appointed to deal with this matter, and further, a member of the subcommittee of the subcommittee appointed to deal with it, I think I am entitled to conclude that I have some knowledge of what took place on this Bill.

Mr. LENNOX.

Mr. FOSTER. How big was the subcommittee of the subcommittee ?

Mr. GALLIHER. The subcommittee had seven members ; the subcommittee of the subcommittee consisted of myself and Mr. Pringle, our report to be submitted to the Minister of Public Works, which was done. My hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Copp) has made the statement that, two years ago, the company now known as the Western Rivers Improvement Company, who are applying for the second Bill, which has not been dealt with, are the same as the company incorporatel in 1904. Now, I had charge of the Thompson River Bill in 1904. Names of the incorporators of that company are as follows :

George W. Fowler, of the town of Sussex, in the province of New Brunswick; George McCormick, of the town of Orillia, in the province of Ontario; William Irwin, of the city of Peterborough, in the said province; Peter Ryan, of the city of Toronto, in the said province; John Shields, of the city of Kamloops, in the province of British Columbia, and James C. Shields, of Sicamous, in the province of British Columbia.

Now, let me read the names of the incorporators of the present Western Rivers Company, that we may see whether they are or are not the same. The parties applying for incorporation as the Western Rivers Improvement Company are as follows :

James C. Shields, of the city of Regina, in the province of Saskatchewan; George L. Ormsby and Alfred Bauman, of the city of Kamloops; Hubert T. Warne, of the town of Annis, and Denis Murphy, of the town of Ashcroft.

Thus we see that J. C. Shields is the only name that is mentioned in both concerns.

Mr. SPROULE. Did these people buy out the rights of the original company ?

Mr. GALLIHER. The Lamb-Watson Company bought out the rights of the Kamloops Lumber Company——

Mr. FOSTER. The Bill of 1904 was the Kamloops ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes. Those rights were bought out by the Lamb-Watson Company——

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. Galliher) will allow me to explain. The Lamb-Watson Company bought out the rights of the Kamloops Lumber Company, and the people who applied for the Act of incorporation in 1904 were the people who owned the Kamloops Lumber Company and were using this legislation in connection with their undertaking of lumbering. The Lamb-Watson Company paid their money for everything that the Kamloops Company had, and they understood they were getting the booming rights along with the mills, limits and everything else connected with the industry. But, after they went in and took possession, this Western Rivers Bill was resurrected, changed hands, and they tried to revive it here as against the people actively engaged in the lumber industry. It was all right in 1904, when the same people had the lumber mill and the booming legislation, but it was all wrong in 1906 when they attempted to revive the booming legislation as against the people who bought the mills.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who did ?

Mr. GALLIHER. The Western Rivers Improvement Company.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When you use the word 'they' meaning two or three different bodies of people, it is a little difficult to follow.

Mr. GALLIHER. The explanation given by my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Duncan Ross) is a little more extended than the one I gave, but it is still the same.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And I cannot understand either of them.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. GALLIHER. If some hon. members behind me who are so clever will take the opportunity of speaking later, I will endeavour to make myself clear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) please state it clearly.

Mr. FOSTER. How many companies are in the Bill, as opponents or otherwise—four or three ?

Mr. GALLIHER. In the Bill that is before the House now, there are several lumber companies.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Five.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Which Bill before the House ?

Mr. GALLIHER. The one we are now considering, the Shuswap and Thompson Rivers Boom Company.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the Western Rivers Improvement Company ?

Mr. GALLIHER. No, that is the Bill that still remains in the Committee on Private Bills.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this the Lamb-Watson Company ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes—now named the Shuswap and Thompson River Boom Company. In 1904, these men whose names I have just given here, under the name of the Thompson River Improvement Company obtained a charter. That is practically the Kamloops Lumber Company with some others. Now the Kamloops Lumber Company sold out to the Lamb-Watson Company, as my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Duncan Ross), has said, their whole outfit, including, as they believed their booming privileges. The Lamb-Watson Company, the Bowman Lumber Company, and some others, five companies in all, now come to parliament asking for the Shuswap and Thompson Rivers Bill, the one now before the House. The Western Rivers Company came last year, their Bill is the second Bill, the one that has not been disposed of by the committee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to understand the hon. gentleman before he goes further The Kamloops Lumber Company sold out to the Lamb-Watson Company?

Mr GALLIHER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN Then the Lamb-Watson Company came here for booming purposes?

Mr. GALLIHER. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, it comes here with four other lumber companies.

Mr. GALLIHER. That is what I say. But last year the Western River Company came for a Bill that did not go through the House, and they are coming again this year with a renewal of that Bill, No. 55.

Mr. COPP. Is not that the same company that was here in 1904 and got its Bill through?

Mr. GALLIHER. No, it is not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask just one question? I gather that some company came here in 1904 and got legislation.

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes, that was the Thompson River Company?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then the Kamloops Company, under some other name, came in 1904 and afterwards sold out to the Lamb-Watson Company, and the Lamb-Watson Company now comes with four other companies?

Mr. GALLIHER. Exactly, for this particular Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. What did the Thompson River Company get in 1904?

Mr. GALLIHER. They got a charter, and this charter they have not carried out or acted upon. Now, two Bills come before the committee for consideration and were represented by parties who were heard both for and against. On account of the difference of opinion, the committee deemed it advisable to appoint a sub-committee to look into the whole matter and report back to the committee. The sub-committee agreed that it was useless to give charters to two companies over practically the same ground, and decided that they would grant to the Shuswap and Thompson River Company the right to do those works on certain specified waters. They decided at the same time that the Bill as it was originally drafted was not stringent enough, and they suggested certain amendments. The hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Pringle) and myself were appointed the special committee to put those amendments in shape, and we drafted some amendments which were submitted to the Minister of Public Works. The Minister of Public Works was not satisfied with one of the sections and struck it out and substituted a section of his own, to which we agreed. This was all reported to the sub-committee, the sub-committee reported to the committee and the report of the committee was adopted, with certain amendments with regard to British subjects being directors. Now I may say that I have read this Bill from end to end; I have discussed it on many occasions in the sub-committee and in the general committee, and the only freedom or privilege that this parliament seems to be granting to these people that they can exercise of their own free will is the privilege of spending their own money, and that is all. If any hon. gentleman in this House will read that Bill from end to end and will not admit that it is practically a government Bill, giving the government all possible control over the company, then I have nothing further to say.

Mr. SPROULE. Does not section 8 interfere with the rights of other people to fish and to navigate?

Mr. GALLIHER. If you give to a company the privilege of erecting works of this nature, you cannot give to other companies the privilege of erecting works that will interfere with their works. All you can do is to protect the public with regard to receiving their logs and with regard to tolls.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that we only gave them the privilege to spend their money and not to interfere with the rights of others. I claim that this Bill does give the right to interfere with the rights of navigation and with the right of fish to go up and down.

Mr. GALLIHER. To make a Bill of this kind operative at all, you must give the company the right to construct the works and to maintain them.

Mr. SPROULE. But not to stop every one else on the river.

Mr. GALLIHER. It does not stop every one else on the river.

Mr. SPROULE. Cannot this company, with its booming privilege, take control of every log or stick above that river and charge a toll on it?

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes, but is not that the case in all booming Bills of this kind? I did not say they did not interfere with the rights of others. I say that practically all you gave these men was the right to spend their own money. But read clause 14. After we have placed everything in the hands of the Minister of Public Works with regard to how these works should be located, where they should be located and the discretion of approving the plans and with regard to tolls that should be charged, giving him the right to exempt anybody from tolls that he wishes —with all these safeguards for the public, we go still further, and in section 14 we say:

In the event of the company not complying with the orders and regulations which may be made with respect to it by the Governor in Council, or in the event of the company not conforming in all respects to the provisions of this Act, the Governor in Council may, if he deems it in the public interest to do so, after notice to the company and giving it a reasonable opportunity of being heard, declare the works with respect to which orders and regulations have not been complied with, to be vested in the Crown, and thereupon all the rights, powers and privileges conferred upon the company by this Act in so far as such portions of the company's works are concerned shall cease and be void.

What is the effect of it ? Not only have the Governor in Council and the Minister of Public Works the power to regulate the tolls, the power to say where these works shall be and how they shall be placed, but they have the power, if at any time the provisions of this Act and the regulations are not carried out, to declare that the works of this company are forfeited and that their charter is null and void. What more protection is it possible to place around the company ?

Mr. SPROULE. It gives the Governor in Council the right to approve of their tolls, but once they are approved I see no provision whereby they may be revised or reduced.

Mr. GALLIHER. Let me read that section.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, that is section 11.

The company levy and collect tolls, dues and charges upon all saw logs, &c.——

Mr. GALLIHER. (reading) :

—such tolls, dues and charges to be fixed by the company in accordance with a tariff, which shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, and when so approved, the said tariff, together with any alterations or amendments thereto, shall be published in the 'Canada Gazette' and the British Columbia 'Gazette,' &c.

Mr. SPROULE. Does not the hon. gentleman see that this is just exactly in the same shape as the tolls in regard to railways ? It has been claimed and, I believe successfully held, that once a toll was approved of by the Governor in Council the Governor in Council had no right to reduce that toll and could not touch it unless the railway company submitted another tariff.

Mr. GALLIHER. If my hon. friend does not think that is sufficient protection, after his remarks, I am quite sure that this company will be willing to accept any amendment that will, from year to year, give the Governor in Council the right to alter these tolls.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it would be much better.

Mr. GALLIHER. I do not think the company will have any objection to accepting a provision that the Governor in Council shall have the right to revise the tolls. All we can do in parliament is to give the Governor in Council the power and he will exercise that power if he thinks it right. I wish to refer particularly now to what was said by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). If he will take the Western Rivers Improvement Bill for 1906 that did not go through this House and compare it with this Bill as amended, I think he will agree that the two Bills are absolutely on a different footing. There has been attempted to place around this Bill every possible safeguard that will secure the interests of everybody who is seeking to do business on these waters.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose there were no boom at all would not all the timber run through all right as it has done for many years ?

Mr. GALLIHER. I will tell you the difficulty. Take the mill at Kamloops ; that mill had a boom some distance up the North Thompson. The North Thompson flows into the South Thompson a short distance, probably a mile, from the town of Kamloops. This mill at Kamloops, which is a large mill, and has a big cut, has big interests on the North Thompson river. If there is no boom a short distance up the North Thompson, or at its confluence with the South Thompson, all these logs will run down and out into the lake and there is no means of collecting and holding them for the mill at Kamloops. They will either have to build a mill to saw them there or tow the logs back.

Mr. FOSTER. The old company had its own piers and booms.

Mr. GALLIHER. Let me tell you what happened to these piers and booms. They brought action in the courts of British Columbia and they were compelled to take them out.

Mr. FOSTER. When was that ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Last year. The committee looked into that very thoroughly and decided that it was absolutely necessary that the mill at Kamloops and the interests there should have the privilege of putting on the North Thompson river a boom for retaining logs. I might say to my hon. friend that the Bill as it is now and the Bill as it originally came before the Committee on Private Bills are very different in effect indeed. It was not the intention of the committee to favour one company more that the other. The committee felt that it was desirable to give to only one company operating on these waters the right to control this boom, surrounding it at the same time, with all safeguards in so far as the public or other operators were concerned. That question was carefully considered and the committee did not grant everything that the present company were asking for. This Bill has been fought in the committee just as hard as it is possible to fight any Bill and the committee bent its efforts to securing the rights of the public. Once we made up our minds that we would give these rights to the Shuswap Company then the efforts of the sub-committee were applied to making this Bill as stringent in protecting the interests of the public as possible and the recommendations of the sub-committee were adopted by the committee. If there is anything that any hon. gentleman thinks should be done further in that direction which is reasonable—and I think that the suggestion of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is—I am sure that the company will have no objection, but we thought that we had spent a lot of time and that we had brought down a pretty perfect Bill.

Mr. COPP. If we have a perfect Bill it is not through any efforts of the promoters to make it so. The question which I submit to this committee is : Which company has priority of rights in this matter ? The Western Rivers Bill which is before the committee now is the old Thompson River Bill that was passed two years ago and that was before parliament last year again.

Mr. GALLIHER. That is not so.

Mr. COPP. This is an entirely new Bill, but when we found that the committee was in favour of passing this Bill and that we had no chance whatever of having our Bill renewed, we set ourselves to work to make this Bill as perfect as we could possibly make it. If you will compare the Bill which is now before the House with the Bill that was first before the committee you will see that a number of changes have been made in it. But I still submit that the old company have rights that should be protected by this parliament. They are the largest operators and have the greatest interests on this river. They own sixty square miles or more of timber while the company represented in this Bill only own about twelve square miles.

Mr. FOSTER. On what river ?

Mr. COPP. On the Thompson river.

Mr. GALLIHER. That is absolutely wrong.

Mr. COPP. I have it here.

Mr. GALLIHER. You may have it there but it is absolutely wrong.

Mr. COPP (reading),

The Thompson River Lumber Company has a saw mill at the city of Kamloops, and supplies practically all the lumber required for local use at that point. The timber holdings of the Monarch Lumber Company comprise 44 square miles of timber held under provincial license on the North Thompson river, and six different Dominion government licenses, approximating about 20 square miles in area also on the same river. It is thus entirely limited to the North Thompson river for its supply of saw logs. The Thompson River Lumber Company owns considerable timber along the north Thompson river and secures a certain amount of logs from the South Thompson river. The Shuswap and Thompson Rivers Improvement Company's application is supposed to represent a number of companies doing business over the waters in question The Lamb-Watson Lumber Company is the only concern interested in this charter who have any timber holdings on the North Thompson river or who operate on that river to any extent whatsoever. Their only timber holdings up this river are some ten or twelve miles.

Mr. GALLIHER. You do not cut half as much lumber as one mill owned by this company cuts.

Mr. COPP. The Bill before the House only represents twelve square miles. Some of the incorporators of this company do not own or operate a foot of land tributary to these waters. I refer to Samuel H. Bowman, James P. McGoldrick, and Thomas Kilpatrick ; they are not interested in any sawmills operating in that district or on these waters whatever. Still they are represented here as operating and having interests on these waters. I fully agree with the suggestion made that the other Bill should be here and should be considered together with the Bill which is now before the committee. If we had the two Bills and the parties who are interested in them before the committee we could get a great deal more information probably for this committee than we have at the present time. That Bill is still before the committee and is likely to remain there unless some action is taken in order to get it before the House. As I have said, the Bill as it now appears before the committee is not at all in bad shape. It is beyond question that we have succeeded in having the rights of the operators and the public along that river guaranteed to some extent, but there is one thing to which I object, that is the placing of the authority to make regulations and cancel the charter itself in the hands of the Minister of Public Works or of the Governor General in Council. I think that this parliament has a duty to perform and whatever we do should be placed in the Bill itself, and then the public would know exactly what rights they have under the Bill and govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is left out ?

Mr. COPP. The free right of way of the river should be certainly protected to the individual operator, to the individual citizen and to the public at large. That is not guaranteed by the Bill in any respect. That will come up later in my amendment, of which I have given notice and which I certainly think should be inserted in this Bill.

Mr. GALLIHER. Read section 8.

Mr. COPP. I have read it and there is nothing in it.

Mr. GALLIHER. That section reads :

Nothing in this Act shall authorize the exercise of any power of the company so as to interfere with the free navigation of the said rivers, streams or bodies of water, or any of their branches or tributaries, or so as to impede the free passage of fish.

Mr. COPP. That is only free navigation.

Mr. SPROULE. And the right to fish.

Mr. GALLIHER. What else do you want ?

Mr. COPP. We want the right to use it in any way, in the rafting of logs, &c.

Mr. SPROULE. Does that deny the right of any other member of the community who may be operating along the river above it, to take lumber or supplies up or down the river ?

Mr. COPP. Yes, they have to pay tolls.

Mr. SPROULE. Then it interferes with the right of the individual.

Mr. COPP. If it is possible for any booming company to protect its rights and not interfere with the rights of others——

Mr. GALLIHER. If my hon. friend knew the nature of the Thompson river, its swift current, he would know that it would not be possible to send logs down the river for one operator and not for the others ; they must be sorted.

Mr. SPROULE. I am seeking information. How long are the two branches of the river, the South Thompson and the North Thompson ? Are they not several hundred miles long ?

Mr. COPP. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Are these companies to control the rivers to the exclusion of every one else ?

Mr. GALLIHER. The North Thompson is only navigable for 70 miles north of Kamloops and that is all we have jurisdiction over.

Mr. SPROULE. And the South Thompson ?

Mr. GALLIHER. We have only two miles of the South Thompson west of Kamloops.

Mr. COPP. And 300 or 400 miles in the other direction, covering nearly 1,000 miles.

Mr. SPROULE. I take it to be almost absolute control over the river to the detriment of others and if this could be drafted without granting that privilege it would be most desirable to do so. That other company had prior rights. Through no act of their own they were prevented from keeping within the provision of the law in respect to commencing operations. I understand it was by an act of the government in not having a Minister of Public Works to approve their plans——

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Perfectly absurd

Mr. SPROULE. They were making a reasonable effort and if they had succeeded they would have been in possession of vested rights, and why should we take away their rights of equity if not of law, owing to an act of the government over which they had no control. They were making a reasonable effort to keep their Bill still operative by commencing operations, but there was not a Minister of Public Works to consider their plans and specifications and approve of them ; if there had been I apprehend they would have commenced work.

Mr. GALLIHER. But they are not the same people.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It appeared before the committee that the charter of the Thompson River Company granted in 1904 was considered so drastic that the company decided not to operate under it and the committee were certainly not given to understand that that company was in any way opposing this Bill ; that was a company incorporated under a different name altogether and it had no connection with the Western Streams Improvement Company, it was composed as the committee was informed of different people altogether.

Mr. SPROULE. What prevented the company of 1904 from starting operations on these streams ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They were of the opinion that the terms of the charter were so drastic that they could not operate under it and they abandoned that charter altogether.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Two important statements of fact have been made, both of which have been controverted. One is that those who represent the competing company, the Western Company I think it is called, own 44 square miles on the river, whereas those behind this company have only 12 square miles. The other statement is that the company whose Bill is now before the committee really represent the interests of the Thompson River Company as incorporated in 1904. Both those statements have been made and controverted. If possible it would be well for the gentlemen to come to some conclusion as to what the facts really are in regard to these matters.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. This is the unfortunate part of having a discussion of this kind in the House after all the merits of the case have been discussed in the committee where we had the maps, the materials, and everything of that nature. It is rather difficult to answer statements made by an hon. gentleman who knows nothing whatever of what he is talking about.

Mr. COPP. I know what I am talking about better than you do.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. If the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Copp) made similar statements before the committee we could answer whatever we thought necessary. This Bill was before the committee for two or three weeks. Representatives of both parties were before the committee, the merits of both Bills were fully discussed, not only before the general Private Bills Committee but before the sub-committee and mountains of information were given to the committee with reference to this matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have seen mountains of information that did not amount to much.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. As is known to some hon. gentlemen in this House that certain lumbering interests in the district of Yale-Cariboo were acquired about 1903 or 1904. The same parties who acquired those lumbering interests came before parliament in 1904, having as incorporators, G. W. Fowler, George McCormick, Wm. Irwin, Peter Ryan, John Shields and James C. Shields, to ask for booming legislation that was to be ostensibly used in connection with their lumbering operations. Anybody who knows anything about that country knows that it is absolutely impossible to carry on a profitable lumbering industry there unless you improve the streams to expedite the floating of logs. These were the people interested in this lumbering enterprise at that time, and parliament in its wisdom gave them that legislation. What happened? The Lamb-Watson Company, an American concern acquired their interests.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the hon. gentleman tell just what the Kamloops people got in 1904?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. They got very little. At that time, I think about the time the sale was occurring, the settlers on the North Thompson river sent a representative down here to protect what they considered their interests. And there is a clause in the Act of 1904 which practically wipes out any thing that this paraliament gave the company and section 8 was inserted instead of it. The clause was to the effect that the booms were not to interfere with the rights of anybody else to drive logs down the stream, so they could not have done anything under the Act they obtained in 1904. All the teeth were drawn out of the Bill by the Senate.

Mr. COPP. We are willing to put the same clause in our new Bill.

Mr. GALLIHER. Wait till you get your Bill down. The Lamb-Watson people and the A. R. Rogers people bought these mills and these timber limits.

Mr. FOSTER. And bought that legislation.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. They did not buy the legislation.

Mr. FOSTER. They bought all they had.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Do not misunderstand me. Although I say that the people who were interested in the mill at Kamloops at that time incorporated themselves by an Act of this parliament into a booming company, it was an entirely different company, and the Lamb-Watson Company did not buy the charter of the Thompson River Improvement Company. Well, what happened? In 1906, Mr. Shields, who was associated with the original promoters of the Thompson River Lumber Company in 1904, and some other incorporators, came to this parliament, and gave assurances to the Private Bills Committee that they were acting in the interest of the lumber industries in that country, and were getting this legislation solely for the purpose for which the legislation of 1904 was got, and that their only object was to carry on the works that were authorized by the legislation of 1904. Mr. Shields and young Mr. McCormick, who was acting manager of the Kamloops Lumber Company at that time, went before the Kamloops Board of Trade, and assured that body that their company was so much interested in that legislation that if it were not put through they could not carry on their business, and the result was that the Kamloops Board of Trade endorsed the legislation of the Western Rivers Lumber Company. What happened? The Lamb, Watson Lumber Company, the Rogers Lumber Company, the Bowman Lumber Company, the Adams River Lumber Company, and the Shuswap Lumber Company, having timber limits with 11,000,000,000 feet of lumber on those streams, mills with a capacity of 230,000,000 feet a year, and an invested capital of nearly $6,000,000, found that people who had a very slight interest in the lumber industry had come to parliament in the year 1906 and had asked for legislation which would give them a right to control all the areas of the north and south Thompson rivers and all their tributaries. They did not ask for power to exact tolls imposed by the Governor in Council, but put the tariff in the Bill. These lumber people became alarmed.

Mr. FOSTER. Were they all on the two rivers mentioned?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Yes. They found that people who had but very little interest in the lumber industry in that country, people who had sold out to them in 1904 or 1905, had come here and applied for a blanket charter for booming privileges all over that country. The Bill went through this House. I had charge of the Bill and carried out the instructions of the Kamloops Board of Trade, who were vitally interested in the matter, and acted on the representations made by the local manager at Kamloops; but when Mr. Lamb came down here and told me the particulars, we stopped the Bill in the Senate, and the Senate Committee took the position that booming legislation of any kind is always dangerous and has to be very closely guarded, and that if it was absolutely necessary to have these improvements on these rivers, either the government would have to undertake them, or, if legislation were granted at all, it should be granted to the bona fide lumbermen in that country, who had their timber limits and were operating their mills, and that it should be subject to such regulations as parliament might impose, in order that the interests of everybody should be protected. The Western Rivers people renewed their application this year, and their Bill (No. 55) is now before the Private Bills Committee. My hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Copp) talks about his improving our Bill. Why, Sir, there was not a single reasonable suggestion made by the Minister of Public Works, the hon. member for Digby or anybody else, to improve this Bill, or to protect the interests of everybody, that we did not cheerfully accept, because our instructions from the lumber companies were: We have not asked for any legislation of this kind, but we have been forced into this position by the people who were asking for it; they went to the courts last year and got an order to tear out our boom, which had been put into the river without the authority of parliament, but which we thought was legally put there, and allowed four million feet of our logs to float down to the Kamloops lake; we have been held up and persecuted by the very people whom we bought out, and we are asking for this legislation in self protection, so as to be enabled to carry on our lumber industry; we do not ask for special privileges, but only to be left alone to carry on our business; and you can impose any restrictions you choose so long as you put us in that position. These people have amalgamated in order to get this legislation; and hon. gentlemen can readily understand that an industry with mills turning out 230,000,000 feet per annum is an industry which ought to receive fair treatment from this House. When the lumber companies saw that the people who were here last year asking for legislation were renewing their application this year, what were they to do? All they could do was to act on the suggestion made by the Senate last year, and unite together to ask parliament that if any legislation should be granted at all, it should be granted to the lumber companies and not to outsiders.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do you include all the lumber companies?

Mr. GALLIHER. It is open to anybody to buy stock in these companies.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. We include all the big lumber companies operating in that country. A letter was sent to Mr. Shields, who represents the Monarch Lumber Company, which operates a small mill at Savona, stating that that company would be permitted to come in on a pro rata basis if it wished to do so. These two Bills came before the Private Bills Committee; all these companies were represented to the committee; Mr. Shields and his solicitor were before the committee, and Mr. Warren, one of the directors of the Western Rivers Lumber Company, was before the committee. They were given every possible opportunity of presenting their views, the discussion was a long one and the committee decided to refer the whole matter to a sub-committee of eight members. The sub-committee had half a dozen sittings before they got the Bill into its present shape. The representatives of the Western Rivers Company went before the sub-committee and were given every opportunity to make every possible suggestion to protect their interests. The Bill was reported to the sub-committee and afterwards by the Private Bills Committee. The sub-committee unanimously decided that legislation should be granted only to one company, and that was the company representing the lumbering interests. And that it should be granted this company only under the most strict supervision and rigid regulations. As I have stated, settlers on the North Thompson river petitioned in 1904 against the Thompson River Improvement Company people and got an amendment into the Bill which practically killed it. Since then the Lamb-Watson Lumber Company, who own the Kamloops mill, have been purchasing logs from the settlers from 40 to 80 miles up the river. In order that these logs might be got for the mill, it is necessary to have a boom a few miles above the Kamloops, and nearly every settler on the North Thompson signed a petition asking that this legislation be granted the Lamb-Watson Company in order that they might be able to sort their logs. The hon. member for Digby (Mr. Copp) made some reference to the amount of lumber which the Monarch Company have up there. I have a telegram from Mr. L. B. Gibb, president of the Savona Land and Lumber Company, a Portland concern, saying they have twenty-three miles up there.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the aggregate mileage?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. They have twenty-three square miles. W. B. Tyson has eight miles of timber on the North Thompson. McArthur and Harper have ten miles. The Lamb-Watson Company have a large number of limits, the people who are interested in this Bill having eighty-three miles of good timber up the North Thompson as against sixty-three or sixty-five these other claim. I want the House to understand that while the North Thompson river is the important portion to be operated under this Bill, this Bill is in the interests of all the mill men within a radius of 100 miles. Some of the waters are 200 or 300 miles away from Kamloops. The booming privileges are not in one particular spot. They have to go to different places in order that the logs may be brought down the different streams. All the lumbermen within a radius of 100 or 150 miles of Kamloops have combined to ask parliament to allow them to make the necessary improvements on those rivers, subject to any regulations parliament may see fit to impose.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know whether the question of priority is of much importance, but there was a company known as the Kamloops Lumber Company which got a charter in 1904 and operated on Thompson river in virtue of that charter. Afterwards the Lamb-Watson people bought the mills of the Kamloops Lumber Company.

On section 8,

Mr. SPROULE. Does not the law provide that you cannot interfere with the fish?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Mr. Venning asked that a clause of that kind be put in and we put it in. It will not hurt anybody.

Mr. LENNOX. Section 8 of the Act of 1904 provides that there shall be no interruption of navigation and that the channel shall be kept clear. Hon. gentlemen who have discussed this so far have said that there is sufficient protection in this clause No. 8 of this Bill. I am not sure whether there is or not. The Act of 1904 says that whenever a boom is so situated as to interfere in any way with the channel the company shall keep a sufficient number of men stationed at the boom for the purpose of opening and closing the dam. In other words, anybody can pass his logs down without being interfered with by this boom and need not subject himself to the tolls. It is now proposed to incorporate the Western Rivers Improvement Company, and section 9 provides that the works shall be open to the use of the public at all reasonable times on equal terms, and the logs, &c., shall not be subject to toll without the consent of the person using the works. I understand that to mean that if a person does not want to use the improvements he need not do so. He can insist on the dams being open so as to allow him to navigate his logs as he thinks fit without his having to pay any toll. This carries out the idea referred to by the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) when he called attention to the fact that this gave very large powers to this company. As late as 1904 our policy seemed to be to allow parties to incorporate themselves only for the purpose of constructing booms to facilitate their own work and not to interfere with the navigation of these rivers. I call attention to the fact that we are going a great deal further.

There is one other point which I might mention before sitting down. I find in this Western Rivers Improvement Company the following section:

7. Nothing in this Act shall authorize the company to acquire or take possession of, or in any way injure or interfere with any mill site upon which there exist any mills or machinery or hydraulic works, other than those intended to facilitate the passage of timber.

There is nothing of that kind in this Bill.

Mr. COPP. That is the amendment I propose to make. That same section exactly is in the Edmonton Power Company's Bill passed in 1905

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) pointed out that this clause was in the Bill of 1904. Well, that is the very reason why they did not go ahead with the work. Under the advice given us by the hon. member for Nipissing, who is an old lumberman, the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Caldwell) and Mr. Green of the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company, which company has similar legislation for the driving of logs down the Ottawa river, the committee decided that the only possible thing we could do to have the works built, and, at the same time, to protect the interests of the public, was to have the works properly regulated. The House will understand that the logs start coming down at any point along seventy or eighty miles of the river, and logs from all sources come down together, for they are not going to sort logs up the stream. They all come down to the sorting boom. If the minister chooses to say that farmers' logs or any one else's logs shall be exempt from toll, no objection is raised to that. But the committee decided, under the advice of experienced lumbermen, that it was not wise to put any restrictions in this Bill such as were put in the Bill of 1904, unless, of course, you wish to make the Bill quite inoperative.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not a fact that in the old McLaren Streams Bill case, it was finally decided by the Privy Council that McLaren had no right to obstruct the stream?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I am not a lawyer. I decline to be drawn on that subject.

Mr. GALLIHER. To put the clause of the Bill of 1904 in this Bill would render the measure useless to the people, as any hon. member can see who will study the matter. The North Thompson river is a very swift-running stream. There are fifty or sixty settlers at different points from ten to a hundred miles sending logs to the Kamloops mill. There are also the logs of the company themselves that have to be sawn in the same mill. These logs are run down all mixed together. If you have to swing your boom open to let out logs not only the logs owned by certain men will go through, but those of others as well.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not possible to run them down in rafts?

Mr GALLIHER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. They must go down in single logs?

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes.

Mr. CARVELL. After you get below the sorting works, is there water at any time throughout the year to allow the logs to go through to their destination, or is there a time when they are hung up?

Mr. GALLIHER. No. After they get through the sorting works they come down the river and out into the lake. The Kamloops mill want to saw the farmers' logs as well as their own, but the trouble would be that, instead of stopping their logs where they want them, at the mill, the logs would all go down to the lake. Either they would have to build a mill on the lake or tow the logs back again. We all know that that proposition could not be carried out.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. member (Mr. Duncan Ross) who has charge of the Bill tells us that great care was taken to safeguard the interests of the public in every way. Here is a provision that might well have been introduced in the Bill in the interests of the public. I find, in the Bill of 1904, there is provision as follows:

The company shall make full compensation for lands, works or improvements occupied or injuriously affected, and for any loss or damage, caused by the construction, existence, maintenance or operation of any of the company's works or improvements.

There is no such provision in this Bill and I do not see why there should not be.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Section 12 will cover that. It provides :

Nothing in this section shall authorize the company to acquire or take possession of, or in any way injure or interfere with, any mill site on which there exists any mill or machinery or hydraulic works other than those intended to facilitate the passage of timber.

Mr. FOSTER. That is only for a mill site.

Mr. GALLIHER. It is provided also :

All the provisions of the Railway Act which are applicable to such taking and acquisition of lands, so far as they are applicable thereto, shall apply with the same force and effect as if they were included in this Act, and all the provisions of the Railway Act which are applicable hereto shall in like manner apply to the ascertainment and payment of compensation for or damages to lands arising out of such taking or acquisition, or out of the construction or maintenance of such works or improvements of the company, or out of the exercise of any of the powers of the company under this Act.

Mr. LENNOX. That applies to expropriations. But there are cases of injury to property

Mr. GALLIHER. The owners have the common law right.

Mr. LENNOX. But we give a statutory right to do certain things, and, in such cases, the railway companies often plead that they have a statutory right and that there is no provision for compensation. It should be provided that the company shall make full compensation for injury caused by their works.

Mr. GALLIHER. It was decided by the committee that, instead of putting in subsection 3 of clause 8, it would be better, for the protection of the interests of the public, to put in the usual expropriation clause. In the Bill of 1904 there is no expropriation clause except 3. The sub-committee thought it better to put in the usual expropriation clause.

Mr. FOSTER. What is there on these rivers to be compensated for ? Is there danger of flooding the land ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS It is farming land. And it is necessary, at times, to tie a boom to a man's farm. Of course, there are incorporated cities and town whose interests come in. But the committee decided that they were best covered by the usual expropriation clause.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is intended by the expression :

Nothing in this Act shall authorize the exercise of any power of the company so as to interfere with the free navigation of the said rivers, streams or bodies of water, or any of their branches or tributaries.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The intention is that the company may not put in any works on any of those streams that will interfere in any way with navigation. There are boats running up and down the rivers all the time. I know of an application that was made two days ago before the Department of Public Works to put in works near there, and they have to drive their piles outside the regular channel; they have to put in their works in such a way as not to interfere with navigation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As it stands at present, it does not exactly express that idea. I would suggest to put in another word in line 45, so that it shall read :

Nothing in this Act shall authorize the exercise of any power of this company so as to interfere with the free navigation of the said rivers, streams or bodies of water for any purpose by the public.

Mr. GALLIHER. That would practically cut us off and leave us as we were before.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. When a man's logs float down the stream, do you call that navigation?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood the member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Duncan Ross) to say that the booms were to extend across the river at certain places, therefore I wanted to know what was the meaning of the words 'free navigation.' He says that it is not intended to interfere with steamers, for example, which go up and down the river. In that case, the booms cannot extend all the way across the river.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. They have to provide a gate in the boom.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is no use to say 'free navigation' without understanding what the words will mean when the court comes to construe them. If it means that the river is to be open so that steamers can go down, then it must necessarily mean that it shall be open for logs to go down, for a log is smaller than a steamer. What is intended in that regard?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. We are willing to take our chances.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not.

Mr. GALLIHER. The effect of my hon. friend's amendment would be to leave everything open. I think what is intended by this is that it shall not interfere with navigation by steamers. Now, it is a question as to what constitutes navigation on a stream; that is an arguable point. What is intended by this is that where a steamer is passing they have to swing their boom and let her through. But it is not our understanding of this clause that every man who may come along with logs or something of that kind shall have a right to demand that the boom be opened and let him through, because, if we did that, we would have to let our own logs through.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand that it is the intention of the promoters of the Bill to have what are known as sorting works on one side of the river, and on the other side there will be sheer booms to swing out. These sheer booms do not in any way obstruct navigation, but they have the effect, as the logs come down, to swing them over to the other side of the river where they come into the sorting works, and then the logs will be passed on without interruption.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not this give them power to stretch across the river?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would say not, because that would obstruct navigation. As I understand the way lumbering operations are carried on now, they have their sorting works on one side of the river and they have their sheer booms on the other side, on all the large lumber streams now. Modern operations are carried on by the use of these sheer booms. They simply throw the logs over into the sorting works, and if they are properly handled there is very little delay. Logs intended for people down below are passed on, while those intended for the mill where the sorting works are are detained by the men who are in charge.

Mr. COPP. Suppose I bring logs down that river and want them to go right down through, am I then to pay tolls on those logs?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not see how it would be possible to get them by if the sheer booms are swung out, because they necessarily throw all the logs over into the sorting works. At that particular point they would command the stream. When the Bill was before the committee, a largely attended committee, all the parties were heard. The matter was fully threshed out, and we came to the conclusion that in order that lumbering operations might be successfully carried on we must give the right either to one company or to the other. Mr. Shields, on the one hand, was claiming those rights for his company, the Lamb-Watson Company, and made it appear to the committee that they had invested very large sums of money in lumbering operations, that they must have sorting works at all events. The committee decided to give the power to this company, and at the same time proceeded to guard the interests of the other company as best it could. Hon. gentlemen will see that the interest of the other company, and of all other people operating there, are about as well guarded as they can be. We provide that the Governor in Council shall have the fullest power to make all regulations for floating down properly all logs with the least possible delay. Then when Mr. Shields represented that possibly, by reason of there being other sorting works up the river, they might make the tolls too heavy, we provided that in a case of that kind the Governor in Council might exempt altogether logs of any other person from tolls. The next question that arose was as to how we could ensure the carrying out of the regulations of the Governor in Council. We felt that to impose penalties would not be sufficient, and we therefore provided that if the regulations were not carried out the Governor in Council might declare their works forfeited; we thought that would be a good safeguard. I may say that there is one thing that struck me very forcibly when the subject was before the committee, and that was that there ought to be power somewhere to appoint a boom master, one who could take charge of the sorting of the logs. But the majority of the committee thought that the power given to the Governor in Council to make regulations carried with it the power to appoint a boom master, but I was not entirely satisfied myself to leave it so. Upon the whole, I am inclined to think that this committee, however, will be safe in acting upon the report of the Private Bills Committee, where the matter was carefully gone into and all parties were heard.

Mr. LENNOX. According to the way it has been presented this afternoon they intend to command the whole river.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not see how they can. The Minister of Public Works must approve of the proposed works before they are undertaken.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman has just said that the boom would be constructed, he apprehended, in such a way that it would catch all the logs that came down?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. Well, if it would catch all the logs that would come down, so that no logs could pass except by the opening of the boom, the conclusion is that no vessel could pass.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That does not flollow. It is a sheer boom which only runs out a certain distance. Vessels may pass up and down without being interfered with.

Mr. LENNOX. I quite apprehend that, but suppose that a sheer boom extends half way across the river and the other half it does not touch at all; a vessel can navigate on the other side of the river. If a vessel can navigate that part of the river, surely logs can be floated.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. If they were under regulations, or if they were being controlled, but the log follows the sheer boom.

Mr. LENNOX. If the log is uncontrolled it will naturally run into the sheer boom.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Exactly.

Mr. LENNOX. But I am speaking of the case where a person does not want his logs to go into the boom ; can they pass by ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. No.

Mr. LENNOX. Then we come back to section 7 which provides that the company can make any kind of boom they like and collect tolls and they will construct all booms in such a way as to extend across the river completely, I should think. I understand the drift of the hon. gentleman's whole argument this afternoon to be in that direction, that they expect to command the river and my hon. friend has pointed out that by reason of the Act of 1904 providing for the opening of the boom from time to time it did away with the whole benefit of the Act. The whole argument of the promoter of the Bill has been that the boom that is to be placed there under this Bill will be different from the boom that could be placed there under the Act of 1904 in that it will command the whole river, that because the Act of 1904 provided that the company shall open the boom from time to time as navigation requires it is no good and that if we put a similar provision in this Bill it will be no good. They want, I apprehend, to command the whole river and they intend to command the whole river.

Mr. FOSTER. This allows booming to go on through the length of two miles below the confluence of the two Thompson rivers ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it a fact that above that two miles there is navigation, that it is possible for steamers to go up or down for any distance either the South Thompson or the North Thompson ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. All these waters are navigable for 40 or 50 miles up the North Thompson to Sicamous. We first asked for a booming privilege below Kamloops, but as Mr. Shield's mills is there and we had no interest there we cut it off. But all these waters up the North and South Thompson are navigable.

Mr. FOSTER. If they do stretch booms to command the whole river there it will be a distinct interference with navigation and it will destroy any idea of there being free navigation on these rivers.

Mr. GALLIHER. Section 8 protects navigation, and the company will have to take their chances under that provision.

Mr. McCOOL. You may put in a boom to intercept logs without having the boom across the river. There is a gap for the passage of boats left in the boom. Free navigation means that the company will have to provide means for opening and closing this gap without interfering with the boats in passing. Sometimes one boom overlaps the other. There is one boom set out from the shore and another a little lower down but it does not interfere with navigation. As I understand it, that is the provision that is made for non-interference with the navigation of the river. It means the adoption of either one method or the other. They cannot stop steamers from either going up or down the river.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Must it be a continuous boom right across the river ?

Mr. McCOOL. It may or it may not be. It is sometimes done with a sheer boom and sometimes with a narrow gap, and provision is made for opening and closing the gap so as not to delay boats. I was on the sub-committee and I have some knowledge of what is necessary for the driving of logs and of works of this kind. I had no interest in the Bill further than to assist in putting it into such shape that the company would be allowed to carry on its business and that the rights of other companies and of the public generally would be protected. We took the greatest care in that connection. I do not think that there was anything left unconsidered in regard to all the interests affected.

Mr. LENNOX. The provision contained in the Act of 1904, section 8, subsection 2, is as follows :—

> Whenever a boom is so situated as in any way to interfere with the channel, the company shall provide at their own cost and expense a sufficient number of men and stationmen at the boom for the purpose of opening and closing the boom.

And then it provides that the opening shall be of a sufficient width. Whether it is necessary or not to put in that specific provision, the argument that I have been endeavouring to refute is refuted by what has been said by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. If the boom is so situated that vessels cannot pass then the company are bound to open the boom or do something that will enable vessels to pass up and down without interruption ; I am inclined to think that this provision which was incorporated deliberately and clearly in the Act of 1904 is a necessary provision to have in this Bill—a distinct provision that whenever a boom is so constructed as to interfere with the navigation of the river there must be men put in charge who shall open the boom to a sufficient width to enable a vessel to pass up and down without delay.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. We admit that, but we say that the Minister of Public Works and the Governor General in Council have absolute power, under another section, to make such regulations. There is no question about that and before any boom can be operated these regulations have to be in force.

Mr. COPP. That is exactly the amendment of which I have notice, and the necessity for which these hon. gentlemen have disputed.

Mr. LENNOX. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will read it.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. We have not reached that point yet.

Mr. LENNOX. We are at section 8.

Mr. COPP. You will find the same clause in the Act of 1904 and you will find the same clause in the Edmonton Boom Company Act of 1905. I have given notice of my intention to move this amendment, but I was going to move it as a new clause at the end of this Bill.

Mr. LENNOX. There would be no harm in reading the amendment.

Mr. COPP. The amendment reads :

Wherever a boom is permitted to be placed in such a position as to in any way interfere with the channel, the company shall provide at its own cost and expense a sufficient number of men, and there station them for the purpose of opening and closing the trip of the boom, which said trip shall be of such width as is determined from time to time by the Minister of Public Works, and the same shall be opened promptly so as to cause no delay, and the necessary steps shall be taken for keeping the channel clear for the passage of vessels, sawlogs and rafts; and, in addition to any claim againt the company for damages, any officer or servant of the company in charge of such boom who neglects to carry out the provision of this section shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding thirty dollars, which may be recovered before any justice of the peace in a summary manner.

Mr. GALLIHER. You ought to go a little further and send them to gaol without the option of a fine.

Mr. COPP. What reason have the gentlemen promoting the Bill for objecting to placing this in it if it is in the public interest?

Mr. FOSTER. Would not the boom company be bound to do that anyway?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Of course they would.

Mr. FOSTER. Then what is the objection to putting it in?

Mr. LENNOX.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. We have threshed this out in the Private Bills Committee. It was agreed that the Governor in Council should have power to frame regulations to govern this. Under this amendment, instead of having the proper operation of the booms so that the logs can be taken to their proper destination, some cantankerous fellow like the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Copp) would order us to open our boom and permit everything to go through. We are bound to see that the boom does not interfere with the free navigation of the river, that boats can pass up and down, and if it is necessary for us to have twenty men on the works to do this we must have them. The object of the amendment is to make the Bill nugatory. It is very cleverly drawn, but we have looked into it and if it is to be inserted in the Bill we might as well move the rising of the committee, because we will have no Bill. We are willing to submit to any regulations imposed by the Governor in Council, and surely hon. gentlemen have sufficient confidence in the Governor in Council to believe that the public interest will be properly protected.

Mr. GALLIHER. This would be all right with regard to vessels, but this covers the rafting of logs, &c., and it is impossible to comply with it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why can you not raft on a river where vessels can ply?

Mr. GALLIHER. On part of the river you can, but not where a great many of these logs are taken from; you would have to build another boom higher up to hold them to form a raft. If the company had to open the booms every time saw logs came down then its own logs would be permitted to go down and the company could not operate unless they built another boom farther down to catch their logs.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What about the Edmonton Company?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. They never operated under their Bill.

Mr. BLAIN. Personally I think it is the duty of this committee to insert in this Bill whatever protection is necessary in the interest of the public.

Mr. GALLIHER. Is it right for this parliament to insert a clause in this Bill rendering it absolutely unworkable with regard to the people who are sawing most lumber in the district?

Mr. BLAIN. This question has received great attention in Ontario in connection with the lumbering industry. There is great complaint that in the northern part of Ontario the former administration of that province granted timber limits and operating rights all in the interests of corporations, and that the interest of the public and of the small dealer was not protected. Whatever regulations are necessary to protect the interests of the public against this corporation ought to be placed in the Bill rather than having it left in the hands of the Governor in Council. Then there would be no doubt about it. For my part, I want to enter my protest mildly but emphatically and to say that I think this is wrong legislation and legislation that will bring difficulty to this government and will not satisfy the people. It is time that the public interests were taken care of in connection with these matters. The government have had fair warning of this. Case after case has been brought to their attention where private individuals have received concessions from them and are acting under legislation received here from this government in which the public interest has not been taken care of. The government should step in in this case and say to the company that they shall not have absolute control of this river.

Mr. GALLIHER. Why should you put this clause in this Bill making it absolutely useless to this company for the purpose of getting their logs down?

Mr. BLAIN. Will they cease doing business altogether?

Mr. GALLIHER. No, but they will have to build mills farther down to saw their logs. They are a part of the public and when you talk of protecting the rights of the public you have to exercise fair play towards the people who are getting the Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. Did the Edmonton Company operate under their charter?

Mr. GALLIHER. I do not know anything about that, but I do say that if you place that clause in this Bill you practically prevent this company from retaining their logs above their mill. To say that the boom should be thrown open every time logs come down would not be fair legislation. Protect the public, including the settlers along the river, who are asking for this legislation, by every possible means, but in protecting the public do not go so far as to nullify the privilege which you are granting to the company. If you put into this Bill a clause compelling this company to open its booms every time logs came down the river, the Bill will be rendered absolutely useless.

Mr. CARVELL. I am not a member of the Private Bills Committee, but I have listened carefully to this discussion. It seems to me that we might as well admit at once that this Bill is for the purpose of creating a monopoly, in the sense of giving this company the right to stop everybody's logs going down the river, and unless it is given that right, the Bill will be of no use to them. I submit that there is a point in every river on which any large lumbering operations are carried on, where it is necessary to give to some corporation or to the government such a right as is asked for in this Bill. The difficulty here is that there is a difference of opinion as to where this point is on this river. I asked whether there was plenty of water below the point at which these works are placed, and I was told that there was. I assume that the locus in quo is practically at the end of the river navigation, for a short distance below that you come to the lake. If that be so, there is every difference in placing the booms at this point, and placing them, for instance, in the Saskatchewan river at Edmonton. In this case, if the logs are allowed to float further down, they float out into the lake, and the works are practically useless. Therefore in every river on which there is a large quantity of lumber cut, it is necessary to have a point where some power shall have the right to stop the logs in order to have them sorted. If you turn logs loose in a river a hundred miles above that point, it is a physicial impossibility for anybody to take out his logs and keep them together. It is necessary to have some point where they can be collected. That point ought to be at the head of tide water in a tidal river, or at the entrance to a lake in such a river as the one in question. If this be so, there can be no objection to closing navigation so far as logs are concerned. In fact, you are compelled to close the navigation in order to sort the logs. I think there is a misapprehension in the mind of the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), as to how these logs are stopped. It is not by swinging a boom across the river, but by placing a number of sheer booms, one on each side of the river, and another on the other side, and placing one boom below another, so that if a log is not caught in one boom, it is caught in another. The hon. member for North Toronto knows that there are several booms placed in this way in the St. John river between St. John and Fredericton, by which every log is caught; and yet the navigation of the river for steamers is uninterrupted; they ply between St. John and Fredericton every day, both up and down the river, without any trouble.

Mr. FOSTER. That is because the navigation is outside of the booms.

Mr. CARVELL. No, it is because one sheer boom goes part of the way across the river on one side, and the next boom below it goes part of the way across on the other side; and a man coming down the river in a canoe or a vessel of any kind, can guide it through the booms without any trouble, by making several twists or tacks. These booms are absolutely useless unless they are placed in such a position that they can capture every log as it comes down. Section 8 of the Bill protects the navigation, and section 7 gives the company the right to place the booms in such a position that they will capture all the logs, and it is left to the Minister of Public Works to provide the necessary regulations.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no difficulty with a system of sheer booms.

Mr. CARVELL. I assume that the Governor in Council will exercise ordinary precautions in detailing what kind of works there shall be. My hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Copp), with whom I am sorry to disagree, has given notice of a proposed amendment; but the difficulty with his amendment is that it says that there shall be no interference with the navigation of the logs. That would render the whole Bill nugatory. We have exactly the same kind of law as this in New Brunswick. We have a law which gives the right to capture every log that comes down ; and yet lumbermen bring rafts down through the booms from 150 miles up the river.

Mr. COPP. Do they pay tolls ?

Mr. CARVELL. They do not pay tolls, and in this case the Governor in Council has the right to say that these logs shall not be subject to tolls. It seems to me that if this Bill is to be of any good at all, the company must be given the right to capture every log that comes down, and the Governor in Council can say whether certain logs shall be exempt from tolls and how these booms shall be placed.

Mr. LENNOX. What the hon. gentleman has said may be quite correct, but what I was pointing out is that section 8 provides that the company shall not interfere with the free navigation of the river, and we ought to have a guaranty in this Bill that these booms shall be constructed in such a way that boats may navigate the river without interruption. The hon. gentleman who is promoting this Bill says that the Act of 1904 was a gold brick given the company and was not intended to be of any use. Well, in 1905 there was an Act to incorporate the Edmonton Boom Company, and although provision is there made for the collection of tolls and the exercise of powers by the Governor General in Council, just as in this Act, all the same we find there a provision obliging the company to open the booms when required, so as not to interfere with navigation. That Act also provides that everybody can float their logs down independent of the booms of the company, and the company are obliged to have a sufficient number of men on hand at their own expense for the purpose of opening and closing the boom. We should have in this Bill a provision for the free passage of vessels, at all events, without the necessity for any resort to the Governor in Council or anybody else.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I have not the slightest objection, but that is fully covered by section 8.

Mr. CARVELL.

Mr. GALLIHER. I am sure the company will be perfectly satisfied to accept an amendment providing that nothing in this Bill shall interfere with the free navigation by vessels.

Mr. LENNOX. We should have a provision such as is found in the Act of 1904 and the Act of 1905. That is large enough to cover the case of logs as well as of vessels.

Mr. CARVELL. How would the hon. gentleman amend the section ?

Mr. LENNOX. I would amend it by providing that whenever a boom is so situated as in any way to interfere with the channel, in so far as vessels are concerned, the company shall provide at its own expense a sufficient number of men stationed at the boom for the purpose of opening and closing it for the free passage of these vessels.

On section 11,

Mr. LENNOX. What does the promoter mean by the expression 'and the products thereof' in line 48 ? We have here the expression 'and the products thereof' following the words 'saw-logs, poles, pulp wood, ties, timber, lumber.' What is meant by 'products thereof'? It would cover almost everything that could be made of wood—even a table, a dresser or a rocking chair. As you have the word 'pulp wood,' even a roll of paper intended for a printer would be included.

Mr. CARVELL. If it were floated down the river, that would be all right.

Mr. LENNOX. It might be floated down in a vessel.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I think the idea is to cover square timber, planks, boards or anything of that kind. But surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) would not seriously say that the words would cover furniture and that kind of thing—that these would be floated down the stream.

Mr. LENNOX. Then, what is the necessity of having these words in the Bill ?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I fancy it is because a lawyer drew up the Bill and a lawyer always sticks in a lot of things the need for which is not very plain to other people.

Mr. LENNOX. But we have all these other expressions here which seem to cover everything that is necessary. We are trying to get this Bill in as good shape as possible. The question whether it is drawn up by a lawyer or any body else has nothing to do with the case.

Mr. CARVELL. I could point out one instance in which this expression would be necessary. On many lumbering rivers, lumber is rafted in large rafts, after it is sawed and floated down the river. If the company were compelled to perform service in getting these rafts through the booms under the direction of the Governor in Council, their right to charge toll should be made clear.

Mr. LENNOX. But it should not have a right to collect toll because it assisted in the navigation through its works of a vessel carrying any of these products. This expression 'products thereof' complicates the matter in such a way that, possibly, they might be able to make a charge that we do not contemplate. I move that this expression 'and the products thereof' be struck out, as no good reason for it has been shown.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No notice of that amendment has been given.

Mr. LENNOX. I move it at the suggestion of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The rule is that no important amendment can be moved without notice.

Mr. LENNOX. It is a question, then, whether this is important or not.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I consider it important enough to have notice. But, with unanimous consent of the committee, we can go beyond the rule.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I have no objection to the question being put.

Mr. BLAIN. I think the promoter of the Bill should give an explanation of the scope of these words. The words seem unnecessary and should be struck out. They seem to me to involve, possibly, an extension of the monopoly I have already referred to, which may be greatly to the disadvantage of the small dealer.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I think we have endeavoured to meet hon. gentlemen opposite and give them all possible information. Surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) does not suggest that striking out the words 'products thereof' is of sufficient importance to be presented as an amendment at five minutes to six. I do not think it makes any difference whether the words are in the Bill or not. It is evident that the hon. gentleman jumps at this merely to delay the Bill further after three hours of discussion.

Mr. BLAIN. I take exception to the hon. member (Mr. Duncan Ross) suggesting that this question is brought forward at five minutes to six in order to delay the Bill. I can say for myself that I have no such thought. If, as the hon. gentleman says, it makes practically no difference whether these words are in the Bill or not, then, I take it, they are unnecessary words and ought to be struck out.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I am not enough of a lawyer to know, but I do not think it makes any difference whether the words are there or not.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, the hon. gentleman will not object to their being struck out. I see danger in these words if they are retained, as they may extend this monopoly. I can see very little in this Bill except an effort on the part of the promoters to secure a monopoly of the timber in that section of the country, and, in fact, of the river, so that the smaller dealers would have no opportunity to carry on work except by arranging with these monopolists. I enter my protest against such a monopoly being granted by this parliament. We have had examples of this before, as I pointed out earlier in this discussion. Whatever may be said, I do not wish to put myself in a position to be taunted afterwards for allowing this to pass unnoticed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend laughs but we understand that. He may think that he has his duty to perform in this matter. But I have my own rights here, and I say that when the hon. gentleman cannot give a reasonable explanation to the committee why these words should be in the Bill, the objection of the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) is well taken, and his suggestion should be acceded to.

Mr. CALDWELL. I was a member of one of the sub-committees appointed to consider this Bill. The men appointed on that committee were men having some knowledge of the lumber business, and they went carefully over the Bill. More than that, a sub-committee was appointed to draft a Bill, and this draft was submitted to the first sub-committee who again went over it very carefully, and afterwards submitted to the general committee and passed.

Mr. BLAIN. Was it passed unanimously?

Mr. CALDWELL. Except on one or two points. One was the question whether it should be terminated after a certain number of years, and a proposition to that effect was defeated by the chairman's vote. Now, after the Bill has been considered with such great care by men who have experience in the lumber business, and who had no interest except to protect the rights of the public, I think the opposition this afternoon is not treating that committee fairly. Surely all the consideration that was given to that Bill in the committee should not be lightly thrown aside.

Mr. BLAIN. For my part, I consider it a very dangerous practice to submit legislation to sub-committees to the extent it has been done during the last few years. I regard this practice as affording greater facilities for getting monopolistic legislation through this House. The custom that has grown up of delegating important questions to sub-committees is, in my opinion, a dangerous one. I accept the suggestion of my hon. friend that possibly gentlemen who understand the lumber business looked into this matter carefully, and while I bow to their superior knowledge, I feel it my duty to enter my protest, because I see nothing in this Bill but an attempt to acquire a monopoly in that district, not only a monopoly against the smaller dealers, but a monopoly of the products of the whole section of country.

Mr. CALDWELL. Would the hon. gentleman have no respect for the opinion of the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle), who was on the sub-committee and who recommended the Bill?

Mr. BLAIN. I have nothing to say about the opinions of other hon. gentlemen, I have only to discharge my own duty in the course I take upon this Bill. I think the government will be brought to task in the future in consequence of their action on this Bill, and I may suggest to the Minister of Public Works, who wants to see this Bill pass, that he will be brought to task for sanctioning this kind of legislation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is in no sense a government measure.

Mr. BLAIN. It has received the sanction of the hon. gentleman, who is Minister of Public Works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. A member of the committee.

Mr. BLAIN. And who was selected for a place on the sub-committee to take care of it. What these gentlemen had in view in selecting the Minister of Public Works is not for me to discuss.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

On section 11,

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of Mr. Lennox to strike out the words 'and the products thereof' in the forty-eight line.

Mr. LENNOX. I wanted to point out before six o'clock that the only cases that have come to my hand show that we have no such expression as this. There has been no one as yet who has given any reason why those words should be there and they appear to open too wide a field. I point out that in the Act of 1905 the expression used in the corresponding section is 'on timber, saw logs, pulp wood and other lumber.' In the Act of 1904 the language employed is 'on timber, saw logs, pulp wood and other lumber,' exactly the same. In the Bill that was referred to this afternoon and that is now before the Private Bills Committee, the expression is the same, while in the Bill that we are now considering we have a more ample expression as regards the particular class of things upon which tolls may be levied, 'saw logs, poles, pulp wood, ties, timber, lumber,' so that the necessity is less even that in the other cases of having these words which are of very doubtful import 'and the products thereof.' Therefore, I think that these words should be struck out.

Mr. MORIN. It appears to me that there are some things with regard to this clause that ought to be determined now. Clause 11 says that:

> The company may levy and collect tolls, dues and charges upon all saw logs, poles, &c.

What will be the charge? I do not see anything in this Bill saying that the company may charge so much. Why not settle this now and say what the company may charge? If we do not, there will be trouble about it. The boom company may say they want so much per thousand feet board measure, and the owner of the logs may say that is too much. Then the result will be that they will have to come down to see the Minister of Public Works or Governor in Council and probably neither of them will be able to tell what the right charge is per thousand feet. I may say to the committee that the general charge by boom companies for saw logs is from 60 to 75 cents per thousand feet board measure. There is another question to be determined and it should be settled now. A man, we will suppose, has a lot of timber standing. He gives a contract to another man to cut, we will say, a million feet. This man goes to the woods and cuts the logs and the government scales them. Then the government scaler gives a statement that he has scaled a million feet. These logs go down to the boom and the boom company have a scaler on the boom to scale the logs. The scaler who scales the logs in the woods and the scaler who scales the logs at the boom never agree. There is always a dispute. This should be settled. The man goes to the woods and puts in a million feet. There are cases in which the contract is given on the condition that you take the boom scale whatever it may be. The parties agree in that way. But in this case the government send a scaler to the woods who scales the logs and he reports that he has scaled a million feet. The logs go down to the boom and there is a difference of 40,000, 50,000 or 60,000 feet between the results arrived at by the two scalers. Who is going to settle that part of it? Then there is nothing in the Bill to say who shall be the scaler at the boom. The boom company have a scaler of their own. The scalers should be appointed by the government in the woods and on the boom. The parties will come before the Minister of Public Works or the Governor in Council and the boom company will say: We have so many thousand feet board measure. The man who cut the logs will say: I have so many thousand feet. How will the Minister of Public Works or the Governor in Council know who is right or who is wrong? Both parties cannot be right and one must surely be wrong. Why not settle this now and settle the price that the company shall charge? If this is left open the company may say: We will charge $1 per thousand feet. The man who owns the logs will protest that this is too much and how will the Governor in Council be in a position to determine what the charge should be?

Mr. GALLIHER. That is all provided for by the fact that the charges proposed to be levied have to be submitted to and approved by the Governor in Council before they can charge a cent.

Mr. MORIN. Very well; now, I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Galliher) what the Governor in Council knows as to what is right and what is wrong?

Mr. GALLIHER. He will hear both sides. He can only judge from what he hears from both sides.

Mr. MORIN. Yes, but he will hear so much that he will get mixed up and know nothing whatever about it. Settle that question now; say that they will not have the right to charge not less than 60 and not more than 75 cents per thousand feet.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. That no doubt would be the proper way if there were only one boom to be considered, but there are three or four different streams and the mills are in three or four different places. One mill may be a hundred miles away from the others, so that if you try to fix arbitrarily the price in your Bill that would be applied to all booms, it might be an exorbitant price in one case and too little in another. I can understand my hon. friend's position. If all the logs were going to be gathered at some particular point my hon. friend's argument would apply. But that is not the case there. The streams are like feeders and a boom will be required at each stream for the particular logs coming down that stream. Possibly 25 or 50 miles away there is another stream with a sorting boom for another set of mills. Thus a set of fees fixed here might be altogether outrageous. Last year a tariff of fees were inserted in a similar Bill and the lumbermen said that they were outrageously high.

Mr. MORIN. The proper way to do this is to have scalers scale the logs as they are sorted out and rafted. This requires the services of men of experience and knowledge of the trade. If lumbermen have to come to the Minister of Public Works or the Governor in Council to have every little dispute settled it will be a constant source of annoyance.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of Mr. Lennox; I understand the committee is unanimous on that point.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Oh, no.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Then as there is no notice of the amendment and this is a private Bill, I cannot accept it.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to move an amendment to section 11 providing that the Governor in Council may have the power to revise the dues from time to time.

Mr. GALLIHER. We will have no objection to that. I would move that after the word 'Governor in Council' in the last line on page 3, we should insert:

Who may from time to time revise the same.

And then later on it should read:

And when so approved the said tariff together with any alterations or amendments thereto or any revision thereof shall be published in the 'Canada Gazette.'

That makes the revision subject to the same conditions of publication as the tariff.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the trouble about fixing the tolls? In Ontario a boom company before it can charge for slidage or boomage must come to an agreement with the county council as to the prices to be charged for passing the logs. The Governor in Council here has no means of knowing what would be a fair charge for pilotage or passage of logs down the slide.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. As I explained the greatest possible objection was raised to a Bill last year in which we inserted such a clause. The committee will understand that few people know anything about the details of the cost of boomage on these rivers. It would seem to be reasonable to permit the company to make about 4 or 5 per cent on the moneys invested in each boom. It is an innovation in that province and it is necessary that the Governor in Council should receive information from the people interested to enable a proper judgment to be formed of what would be a reasonable charge. The people asking for this legislation are the lumbermen themselves, they simply want to expedite their lumbering operations. We might fix unreasonable tolls.

Mr. HAGGART. This might be used for the purpose of controlling the whole timber business on the river unless a reasonable rate is fixed.

Mr. GALLIHER. They could not fix an unreasonable rate as it is subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

Mr. McCOOL. The custom regarding the fixing of these tolls at all booms is that it is done by regulation of the Public Works Department. They have to publish these tolls in newspapers indicated by the department for a certain length of time before they are approved. This is not a question of a company organized for the purpose of making money. It is merely for the purpose of expediting the separating of logs on this river. The same thing is done on the Ottawa river, where there are five different booms in a distance of 100 miles, where logs have to be sorted in the same way that this Bill provides for. The Bill was most carefully gone into by the subcommittee, on which there were men who had some acquaintance with the lumber business, some of them having spent their whole lifetime in it.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that merely a portion of the Thompson river is navigable, while a great deal if it, and many of the streams running into it, are not navigable. The company is handling timber belonging to the province and the province is interested in the streams that are not navigable.

Mr. McCOOL. This Bill does not deal with streams or portions of streams that are not navigable. This House has no authority to legislate in regard to these.

Mr. GALLIHER. It is specifically stated in section 7 that the Bill deals only with the navigable portions of the rivers and streams named.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood a gentleman explaining the Bill to say that it dealt with several small streams, which are not navigable, emptying into the Thompson river.

Mr. MORIN. The promoter of the Bill said this was a new country and a new company. Well, I do not endorse that. The country may be a new country, but the company are too old, and too wise, and too sharp. The Bill has too many details. The company have a right to do as they please on land and water. I have worked on booms that boomed 600 million feet of lumber, and I never knew of a boom where machinery was used; but this company have the right to use machinery to put up buildings, and to operate roads, tramways, docks, wharfs and telegraph, telephone and electric lines. These people are from Minneapolis, and they are too old and sharp. They have a boom at Coon creek, eighteen miles above Minneapolis, built in 1845. I know some of the men from Minneapolis, and if the country is a new country, the men are old men, and sharp enough to blindfold most of us.

We ought to hear from the Minister of Public Works. These things may all come before him later on and he will then say that he did not know anything about them.

Mr. GALLIHER. While we are discussing this Bill, the minister ought to give us the benefit of his views.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The minister is not given to talking unnecessarily.

Mr. MORIN. You will be wakened up badly after a while.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There has been a good deal of discussion about fixing the tolls? Under section 11, the Governor General in Council is to approve or revise the tolls. Under section 9 he has to approve the plans and the plans are to be advertised in certain newspapers, and any one who desires to object to them shall have the right to do so. But it seems to me there is quite as much reason for advertising the tariff of fees. Obviously this is a matter as to which the minister will not have any official knowledge nor will any officer in his department. Where will he get his information?

Mr. GALLIHER. He could make it a regulation that before he is asked to approve the tariff, the tariff must be advertised.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where has he any power to make a regulation of that kind?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not see why the tariff of tolls should not be advertised in the Canada 'Gazette' and a British Columbia newspaper, say at Kamloops or some other point, before application is made for approval.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I have no objection.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would my hon. friend the leader of the opposition draft an amendment to that effect?

Mr. COPP. The first amendment I propose to move is one I have taken from the French River Boom Company Act passed in 1894, and which is also included in the Edmonton Boom Company's Act of 1905:

Wherever a boom is permitted to be placed in such a position as to in any way interfere with the channel, the company shall provide at its own cost and expense a sufficient number of men, and there station them for the purpose of opening and closing the trip of the boom, which said trip shall be of such width as is determined from time to time by the Minister of Public Works, and the same shall be opened promptly so as to cause no delay, and the necessary steps shall be taken for keeping the channel clear for the passage of vessels, saw logs and rafts; and, in addition to any claim against the company for damages, any officer or servant of the company in charge of such boom who neglects to carry out the provision of this section shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding thirty dollars, which may be recovered before any justice of the peace in a summary manner.

I cannot see any good reason why a clause of this kind should not be inserted in this Bill. The promoter is willing that this section should apply but wants all the articles struck out except vessels. He knows that they could not prevent a vessel going down a navigable river, but the intention is to prevent rafts of timber or saw logs unless they pay toll. But if I want to bring a raft down that navigable river, this company should have no right to place a boom across it and thus prevent my raft going down unless I pay toll. I move that the clause I have just read be added to the Bill.

Mr. HAGGART. Do any rafts go down ?

Mr. GALLIHER. They never have.

Mr. COPP. There may be some. I am speaking on behalf of the operators on that river and I do not see why they and others who do not use the booms put on by this company should be liable to a toll.

Mr. HAGGART. You would render their powers useless altogether if you gave every individual the right to take down his logs independent of the boom.

Mr. COPP. I do not see that.

Mr. HAGGART. Better regulate them in some manner.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. COPP. I beg to move a second amendment :

The existence of the company shall be limited to a term of fifteen years from the 1st January, 1909.

In the Act we passed in 1904, incorporating the High River Lumber and Development Company, the limitation of existence was fixed at fifteen years. In the charter of the French River Boom Company, the limit is fixed at ten years. I have put the limit at fifteeen years.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The difficulty is this. We can only carry on those works under regulations fixed by the Governor in Council. All we are permitted to do is spend our money in quasi public works and the government fix the tolls and tell us how to run them. If it is a monopoly and the government regulates the monopoly in the public interest, then these works will serve the public, and the longer they continue to serve the public under government regulation, the better. My hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Copp) wants us to put in cheap, temporary works, having no longer life than the term he seeks to impose upon us. As they fall into disrepair in ten or twelve years, we shall have no further interest in them and are not likely to maintain them in the condition to be most useful to the public. We are not likely to keep them in as good state of repair as would be the case if we had permanent tenure in those works. If the public is duly protected, then, it is more in the interest of the public that the works should be carried on by us for thirty, fifty or a hundred years than that the company's operation of them should be terminated within a short period.

Mr. COPP. There is nothing to prevent them coming back and having their charter renewed.

Mr. LENNOX. It seems to me there is a great deal in the motion of the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Copp). The hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Duncan Ross) speaks of government regulation. But I do not see anything in the Bill about regulations that would assist us in this matter. Plans of alterations have to be submitted to the Governor in Council, but the Governor in Council cannot inaugurate any alterations.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Yes. I would refer to subsection 3 of section 9.

Mr. LENNOX. That provides that the Governor in Council may make orders and regulations for the expeditious rafting, driving, and so on, of these saw logs and other things. But this is a different matter. In fifteen or twenty years the conditions along these rivers may have greatly changed. A city may spring up where some of these boom works are to be located. Though it may be quite proper at this time to have these booms placed there, in fifteen years it may be they will be a hindrance to some rising community. We are conferring a perpetual franchise, and the government is divesting itself of power in this matter. The object of the amendment, as I understand it, is to provide that in fifteen years this company shall come back to parliament, when, if the conditions justify it, their rights can be renewed ; whereas, if the conditions are not favourable to the continuance of the franchise, the company's rights will have expired. I understand that this matter was the subject of keen debate in the committee, and that it was carried by a majority of only one.

Mr. COPP. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. In all matters of legislation we exercise important functions, but in nothing do we run greater risk of going wrong than in dealing with navigable rivers. We can construct railways in many places, but the highway by water is a limited thing, and if we hamper the rights of the public by legislation we shall do injustice to the people of the future. In all such cases parliament should limit the franchise given to people who propose to interfere, to a certain extent—for it cannot be denied they will interfere—with the ordinary rights of navigation. Speaking for myself, I think we are unwise in granting this monopoly, but, if we must grant it, then we take a wise precaution in limiting it to a certain time. Let us keep it, say, at fifteen years.

Mr. GALLIHER. I would point out that the lumber interest of British Columbia is one of its greatest interests and will so remain. It is absolutely necessary to the lumber industry that some company or combination of companies shall provide these works. In granting this permission we necessarily create a monopoly if we are going to make our grant effective. I dare say that for the next fifty or sixty years their timber will be coming down from the rivers tributary to those upon which these works are to be made. These works should benefit, not only the men applying for this legislation, but all the parties who are driving timber down that river. Our care should be to grant only such rights to this company as will meet the interests of these parties and of the public generally. And so long as these works are operated absolutely under the control of the Dominion, I do not see that it makes any difference whether this charter is for ten or for fifty years. Some consideration must be given to the people who come into our country and spend six or seven million dollars in getting out the wealth that grows there. Of course, the public interest must be protected. But we cannot compare the North Thompson river with such a river as the St. Lawrence, with great cities on its banks.

Mr. LENNOX. What does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) mean by speaking of investments of six or seven millions of dollars?

Mr. GALLIHER. I say they have invested that in the country.

Mr. LENNOX. I see that the capital of the company is only $100,000.

Mr. GALLIHER. My hon. friend does not know, but I do, that the companies interested in this matter have millions and millions invested in British Columbia. It does not matter whether they are Canadian, British or American companies. I tell my hon. friend what I know—that these concerns have millions invested in British Columbia, not only in limits, but in mills as well. There is no danger of what my hon. friend mentions occurring, that this will interfere with the growing up of any big city where they propose to put this dam. The main object, after all, is obtained, looking at the thing fairly from the point of view of the public and of the people who invest millions of money in this country, if we induce them to improve that river, to put in more permanent works, to establish works beneficial to all who use that river, then I think we are doing a better thing than by confining them to any particular time, when they will not know whether, at the end of that period, they may get their rights renewed. We have an absolute safeguard in our own hands. In section 14 we provide that whatever regulations, whatever impositions are put upon this company by the Governor in Council, should they not live up to these regulations, or should they treat the public unfairly, all their works and all their rights with respect to which they do not observe those rules and regulations are absolutely forfeited, without a dollar of compensation, and their charter as regards those works becomes null and void. Now, have we not there the whip in our own hand? The Governor in Council can exercise that power, not only in ten years, but in two years.

Mr. LENNOX. They can only make limited regulations.

Mr. GALLIHER. There is nothing that limits the regulation, the Governor in Council can make in regard either to rafting, towing booming or anything else.

Mr. MORIN. I would like to tell the promoter of this Bill that he has too many details. Here we read:

> The Governor in Council may make such orders and regulations for the expeditious rafting, driving, towing, collecting, carrying, booming, storing, holding, protecting, sorting, and delivering.

Well, you are going to charge so much per log when you look at it, so much when you drive it, so much when you sort it? In all the booms I know anything about, people pay sixty, seventy or seventy-five cents per thousand feet board measure, and that includes everything. The boom company takes the logs in the boom and sorts them out and raft them, then the owners of the logs come and take them away. But in this Bill who is going to regulate these matters? We cannot get the Minister of Public Works to speak one word now. What will he say hereafter when all these questions come before him? He will have to get a Dutchman to tell him what is what.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I quite agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Morin) that there is too much verbiage in the Bill. That is following the lawyers, and we laymen have to put up with it.

Mr. MORIN. Are you a lawyer?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. No, I am not.

Mr. MORIN. Thank God.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a growing feeling in the country against giving perpetual franchises of this nature, the trend of the age is to limit them to reasonable time, I should say twenty to twenty-five years at the outside. If there is any urgent need for a renewal of the rights, and the company are carrying on the business properly without detriment to the country, there will be no difficulty in getting a renewal from parliament. Parliament has never refused, so far as I know, the renewal of any franchise that is in the public interest and that was carried on properly. But if the reverse should be the case, then it is important that the time should be limited. We give them the right to maintain and operate roads, tramways, docks, wharfs, piers, and all similar works and we give this right perpetually. As soon as they build these docks and piers they may charge for every bag of potatoes or bushel of wheat that goes over them. I take it the government would have no control over these.

Mr. GALLIHER. It is only in connection with the carrying on of the undertakings of the company that they have a right to do these things. It is not a part of their undertakings to become freighters, or wharfingers, or anything of that kind.

Mr. SPROULE. But boats coming there could not land at their docks without permission. Take for instance Kamloops, where this company is operating at present. Does the hon. member not know that in the future there will be a great deal of produce carried into Kamloops from the farms in that rich valley, and in all likelihood this produce will be carried on boats navigating those rivers.

Mr. GALLIHER. Kamloops is some miles from where it is proposed to put these works.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. This is a boom company. Read the clause:

In connection with and in carrying on its undertakings, the company may acquire, hold, maintain and operate lands, buildings, water-powers.

And so on. They may put up wharfs where they have boom works. That is all they have authority to do under this Act, they have no authority to put up a wharf at Kamloops where they have no booms. If it is necessary to have a steamboat to hold the logs at the boom, they are allowed to do so under this Act.

Mr. HAGGART. Are all these things necessary for the accomplishment of the work?

Mr. GALLIHER. It is so stated in the Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. If they have a sawmill at Kamloops are they not carrying on operations there, do they not handle saw logs at that mill.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. This company is not allowed to run a sawmill under the Act. This company is not the sawmill company, it is made up of all the sawmill companies for the purpose of expediting logs. Therefore this company could not have a sawmill, but the people who are interested in this company will have a sawmill.

Mr. GALLIHER. This company, while incorporated as a boom company, is made up of men who have a very large sum of money invested in the company, and we should give some consideration to the rights of men who have invested their millions of money.

Mr. SPROULE. Did not the hon. gentleman tell us that there were five companies interested in timber, and they all wanted to use these booms and to build sawmills because they have timber there? What are they going to do with the timber if they do not cut it? But, before six o'clock the hon. gentleman contended that when the Lamb Company purchased the other company they believed they had purchased the rights of the boom company as well, as part and parcel of the lumbering business that they had contracted to purchase. This company, composed of five different companies, as sawmill and timber limit owners, intend to operate their mills, and if so are they not going to use these rivers, booms and piers? Will they not have boats on these rivers as well?

Mr. GALLIHER. If you will look at section 11 you will not find any wharfs mentioned as being among the things upon which these people can charge tolls.

Mr. SPROULE. I have seen wharfs built before by individuals and it is very rarely in our country that an individual owning a wharf does not charge tolls. If you go up to the Soo or to Port Arthur you will find it and I presume you will find the same thing at Kamloops. The hon. gentleman says that there are no thriving towns and cities on these waters. What will there be in future? Will there not be towns, cities and great interests along these streams that do not exist to-day and which will make it necessary to the people using these streams to have ingress and egress over these wharfs. All these are public interests and will you lock up these waterways for ever by giving into the hands of one company a perpetual right? The sentiment of the age is against giving perpetual franchises and I do not see any reason why you should give it in this case for more than twenty or twenty-five years.

Mr. J. D. REID. Are the British Columbia government agreeable to this Bill? In clause 7 the company is given the right to carry on its business on the following streams and bodies of water:

The Thompson river for a distance of two miles west of the confluence of the north and south Thompson rivers, the north Thompson river, the south Thompson river, Shuswap lake and its several arms, the lower Spallumcheen river and the navigable tributaries of each thereof, and the navigable bodies of water connecting therewith and their respective navigable tributaries.

Would that take in lakes like the Arrow lakes ?

Mr. GALLIHER. No. As to the first question, we have specifically excluded any thing in which the British Columbia government could be interested. We are confining our works to the navigable waters of British Columbia. In answer to the second question the Arrow lakes are merely expansions of the Columbia river and are not included in this section.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you any charter for non-navigable waters from the local government ?

Mr. GALLIHER. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. Are there not large lakes that empty into these rivers that would be included ?

Mr. GALLIHER. There is Shuswap lake, of course, that is mentioned here.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does not that include the whole of these rivers.

Mr. GALLIHER. As far as Kamloops lake is concerned and on which is the mill of one of the companies opposing this Bill, it is an expansion of the Thompson river practically. The south Thompson river and the north Thompson river join a short distance west of Kamloops. These works that the company is authorized to construct do not go any farther west than two miles west of the confluence of these rivers. This Bill does not interfere in any way with Kamloops lake and after the logs are sorted in this boom on the north Thompson they can pass down to the lake and to the mill without obstruction whatever.

Mr. J. D. REID. These are long rivers that are mentioned and you include the navigable tributaries of them. That might extend for hundreds and hundreds of miles.

Mr. GALLIHER. It certainly takes in a good deal of territory but my hon. friend will understand that very often you do not find right on the shores of the lakes good timber areas. You probably have to go some miles up small streams for the timber and these areas may be scattered over fifteen or twenty different streams that enter into these rivers or lakes. Most of these streams are not navigable and we are not asking to be allowed to do anything on these streams except on the portions that may be navigable.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why would not this include lakes thousands of miles away up north in British Columbia ? The Grand Trunk Pacific is hundreds of miles north of the Canadian Pacific Railway. These lakes will become navigable within a few years. Will not this clause take in all these lakes?

Mr. GALLIHER. There are mountain divides in that country. On one side of the mountain divides the streams run in one way into lakes and on the other side they run the other way. It is impossible to connect them for thousands of miles. I know the topography of that country fairly well and I can assure my hon. friend that there is no fear of what he suggests.

Mr. J. D. REID. This is a very wide clause.

Mr. GALLIHER. It sounds more formidable than it is. It is worded in that way in order to avoid missing out a link which might shut off your timber berth from access to a river or your mill.

Mr. HAGGART. In Ontario these works are generally constructed by the government. British Columbia does not seem to be getting its full share in this matter. It would be a legitimate enterprise to press upon the government the building of these booms.

Mr. GALLIHER. We did so.

Amendment (Mr. Copp) negatived, nays, 25; ayes, 15.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Reference was made to section 11. I would move to insert at the bottom of page 3, after the words 'Governor in Council' on the last line of the page, the following :

> Who, before approving thereof, shall require the company to give public notice of the application for such approval in such newspapers, for such time and in such manner as the Governor in Council shall direct and shall give an opportunity for all interested persons to be heard on such application.
>
> The Governor in Council may also revise the said tariff from time to time.

The last few words to take the place of an amendment already introduced.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I accept the amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would call attention to the peculiar wording of subsection 2 of section 10. The words 'navigation' and 'navigable' are used in this Bill without any definition, so in the end their construction will have to be determined by the courts and I foresee a rich harvest for the legal profession in determining just what meaning the words have. Do the hon. members promoting this Bill imagine that this parliament can overturn the British North America Act by saying that the Minister of Public Works shall be the judge as to whether or not the water is navigable or not ?

Mr. D. ROSS. I think the intention is that for the purpose of carrying on this company the Minister of Public Works can judge upon this point. It is a matter of regulation not of law, as I understand it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is a matter of law. If the government or some citizen of British Columbia should contend that certain waters are not navigable and deny the exercise of this jurisdiction, then the question would arise as to whether it is navigable water within the meaning of the British North America Act. Does any one suppose that this parliament can change the British North America Act in that regard ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Certainly not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then why put anything like this in the statute?

Mr. GALLIHER. If a dispute arose upon this point between the company and some one else, the Minister of Public Works could decide as to whether it was navigable or not as between these two, and he would be given power by this Act to do so, because the company only have the power we choose to grant them by this Act. I quite agree that as to anything between the government of British Columbia or any individual and the company, we could not interfere.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The language is not confined to this company. This company is bound to construct booms on any particular piece of water if it is navigable; at all events section 10 seems to contemplate that. An individual who desires this service to be rendered makes his demand upon the company and the Minister of Public Works is empowered by this statute to say that it is not navigable and so you are not bound to erect booms. This section declares that the decision of the minister as to whether the water is navigable or non-navigable shall be binding and final upon the disputants.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The word 'company' would do instead of 'disputants.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The present language will have no effect except the effect of making this parliament ridiculous by enacting it.

Mr. GALLIHER. I can see no reason why this clause should be put in unless it is that if the company wants to build on a particular stream and the minister says : No, that is not navigable, then the company would be bound by his decision. If it is for any other purpose I quite agree that the clause can have no effect.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I think if the word 'company' was put in instead of the word 'disputants' it would probably convey the meaning intended.

Mr. GALLIHER. I think it would have its use as between the minister and the company. If the company wanted to infringe on what was not navigable water, they might come up against the provincial authority, but it should be in the power of the minister to say : That is not navigable water, and you cannot put your works there. To that extent it would have some use.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You might argue that the company, having accepted a charter, would be bound by the terms of the charter, and therefore would be bound by the decision of the Minister of Public Works. I would suggest that in the last line the word 'disputants' be struck out, and the word 'company' be inserted in its place.

Section 10 amended accordingly.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not see in the Bill any provision giving the government the right to take over this property at any time.

Mr. GALLIHER. The government do not seem anxious to take it over, or at least the Minister of Public Works does not. The hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) and myself drafted a clause giving the government the right to take over the works on paying the company a reasonable compensation ; but the minister thought the provision was not drastic enough, and he had one inserted providing that if the company did not carry on the work in the public interest the government would have the right to confiscate their plant.

Mr. HAGGART. The government should have the right to assume the works at any time on payment of a fair compensation, which should be fixed in the Act.

Mr. REID (Grenville). My idea was that the government should have the right to take it over at any time on payment of the amount expended.

Mr. GALLIHER. We have no objection to that. It was proposed by the sub-committee and struck out by the committee, and section 14 was inserted instead.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What position is the government in with regard to taking over the works ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It has no power to take over the works, but the public interest seems to be sufficiently safeguarded. In the first place the Governor in Council has absolute power to decide where the works shall be situated, and what their character shall be. In the second place, the Governor in Council has control of the tariff of tolls and may revise it from time to time. In the third place, if the company fail to comply with any regulation of the Governor in Council, in the operation of the works, the works may be confiscated. So, on the whole, the public interest is pretty well safeguarded. At the same time, I would have been very glad to have seen a clause in the Bill empowering the Governor in Council on fair and reasonable terms to take over the works. In Great Britain the general rule in such cases is to add ten per cent to the actual value of the property when taken over.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. To show the attitude of the mill men who are interested, I will read an extract from one of their letters :

We would much prefer to have the matter of transport of timber by flotation wholly in the hands of the government, but inasmuch as that would be somewhat of a task for the government to undertake at this time, we have outlined what we believe to be the best measure possible. . . . We stand ready, at any time the government decides to make the matter of booms a government affair, to turn the works over to the government.

As stated by the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Galliher), they were perfectly willing to have such a clause in the Bill ; but we cannot have a clause providing for the government expropriating the works, and another clause providing for the government confiscating them. The Minister of Public Works, in order to have the whip hand over the company, preferred to have a clause providing for the government confiscating the works if the company did not operate them in the public interest.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The two clauses are not inconsistent with each other.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I can see the distinction. The people interested have not the slightest objection to the government taking over these works. On the contrary, they would rather see the government do the work now, if they could be induced to do it. But as this is not practicable, these men are willing to do it under government regulation. They are perfectly willing to have a clause inserted providing that the government may at any time take over the works on payment of fair compensation.

Mr. LENNOX. I think it would be well to have such a clause in the Bill. It would not conflict with the provision about forfeiting the works in the event of the company not carrying out the regulations. But they may be carrying out the regulations satisfactorily, and yet something might arise that would make it in the public interest to take over the works on reasonable terms.

Mr. SPROULE. Such a clause could be put in on the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. GALLIHER. We have spent a good deal of time in committee on this Bill, and for my part, though not in charge of it, I am very much interested in supporting it, because a number of the people interested in it have mills in my section of the country, and I would like to see it proceeded with and if possible passed to-night.

Mr. LENNOX. If we agree that there should be such a clause properly framed and inserted, no time need be lost in adding it before the third reading.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I have no objection to that clause being added on the third reading. This company have several applications for improvement absolutely necessary to be carried out immediately. These applications are before the Department of Public Works. This Bill has been in the Private Bills Committee nearly two months, and the company are anxious it should become law so that these applications will be dealt with. We have only one day for private members now, and it will be two weeks before the amendment can be added.

Mr. J. D. REID. No one wants to injure the people at British Columbia, but I think it would be better to have that clause in.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Agree to add it in the Senate.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Third reading to-morrow night.

Bill reported.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 125) respecting the Western Alberta Railway Company.—Mr. Macpherson.

Bill (No. 128) respecting the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company.—Mr. Michaud.

Bill (No. 129) to incorporate the London and Lancashire Guarantee and Accident Company.—Mr. Macdonell.

Bill (No. 127) respecting the Dominion Guarantee Company, Limited.—Mr. Pringle.

Bill (No. 126) to change the name and head office of the Anglo-Canadian Insurance Company.—Mr. Gervais.

Bill (No. 124) for the relief of Andrew Walker.—Mr. Guthrie.

Bill (No. 131) respecting the Occidental Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Duncan Ross.

Bill (No. 132) to incorporate the Standard Accident and Guarantee Company.—Mr. Macdonell.

QUESTIONS.

WHARF AT DESCHAMBAULT.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Bergeron—asked :

1. How many tenders had the Public Works Department received in 1904 for the construction of the wharf at Deschambault, in the county of Portneuf?
2. What was the name of each tenderer and the amount asked by each of them?
3. To whom was the contract awarded?
4. Were there any extras paid to the contractor? If so, what amount?
5. Apart from the amount expended on the construction of the wharf, what amount did the Public Works Department spend at Deschambault, county of Portneuf, from the 1st

May, 1904, to the present date, and what was the nature of the works that it had done in that locality?

6. What are the names and residences of the engineer and the inspector or inspectors who had the superintendence of such works?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). I would ask my hon. friend to put this in the form of a motion for a return.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Stands as a notice of motion for a return.

GEORGIAN BAY CANAL SURVEY.

Mr. WHITE asked:

1. Has the final report of the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian bay canal survey been completed?

2. When will said report be presented to parliament?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). The plans are very nearly ready. They are being lithographed. But the report will not be ready for some few weeks. I thought probably I would submit the plans and then the report just as soon as ready.

NEW BRUNSWICK INLAND WATERS—WHARFS.

Mr. WILMOT—by Mr. Bergeron—asked:

1. Will the Department of Public Works continue the existing policy of requiring a joint appropriation from the provincial government for constructing wharfs on the inland waters of New Brunswick?

2. Has the attention of the Minister of Public Works been directed to the dilapidated condition of the wharf at Douglas harbour, Queens county, New Brunswick?

3. Does the minister know that the traffic at the above point is one of the largest on the Grand lake?

4. What is the policy of the department regarding the repair of such wharfs?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). The Department of Public Works has not pursued the policy indicated in the first paragraph of the question. For some years past appropriations have been made by parliament to pay one-half of the cost of wharfs constructed by the government of New Brunswick in the tidal waters of the St. John river and its tributaries. Apart from this, the Department of Public Works has borne the whole expense of constructing several wharfs upon the inland waters of the province. The question as to whether or not this policy will be departed from has not been considered by the government.

To the second part of the question: No.

To the third and fourth: The minister has not had occasion to inquire into the amount of traffic at Douglas harbour, the wharf there being constructed and owned by the provincial government, and the view of the department would be that any necessary repairs should be made by that government.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY ASPHALT.

Mr. GANONG—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. How many station platforms of the Intercolonial Railway have been built or rebuilt of asphalt during the years 1905, 1906, 1907, and at what stations?

2. Was all this work let by public tender and contract? If not, were tenders asked from particular companies or parties? If so, what are the names of the parties asked to tender in each case, to whom the work was awarded, and the price paid per square yard?

3. Did the Department of Railways and Canals supply any gravel or other material free of charge to any of the contractors? If so, what material was supplied in the several cases?

4. Was the work referred to guaranteed for any term of years? If so, for what term?

5. Has the work proved satisfactory in each instance? If not, at what stations has the work proved unsatisfactory?

6. Did the Barber Asphalt Company, of Philadelphia, do any of this work? If so, at what points, how many square yards at each place, and at what price per square yard at each place?

7. Did P. S. Low do any of this work? If so, at what points, how many square yards at each place, and at what price per square yard at each place?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. The department accepted an offer from Mr. R. S. Low to build part of a tar macadam platform at Sydney at $1.50 per square yard, including 4½ inches of concrete foundation. 2,474 yards were built at $1.50, equal to $3,711. There is a percentage of asphalt and bitumen in the composition, and it is sometimes called 'mastic.' It has so far proved an excellent platform. The price was very low, for the reason that the builder wanted to introduce this particular kind of platform, and it was especially made as a sample.

2. Public tenders were not called for.

3. No.

4. Yes, for three years.

5. Yes.

6. No.

7. Yes; all particulars answered by No. 1.

ISLANDS FLAGGED BY CAPTAIN BERNIER—ARCTIC EXPEDITIONS.

Mr. FOSTER—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. What islands have been flagged by Captain Bernier as the result of his three cruises in the northern waters?

2. How many whalers have been licensed each year, and what amount of money has been collected therefor?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Baffin, Bylot, Russell, Louther, Griffith's, Cornwallis, Bathurst, Byam Martin, Melville, Cone, North Lincoln and adjacent islands were flagged during Captain Bernier's only trip to northern waters.

2. Licenses issued 1906: 'Eclipse,' 'Albert,' 'Diana,' 'Beleana,' 'Morning.' Licenses issued 1907: 'Diana,' 'Morning,' 'Beleana,' 'Eclipse' and 'Albert.' Amount collected, $500.

IMPROVEMENTS AT RIDEAU HALL.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

What is covered by the capital of $26,900 for providing or improving grounds in connection with Rideau Hall?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). The principal portion of the amount, namely $25,409.09 for the construction of a conservatory. The balance of $1,491 is for minor constructions in the grounds.

BURLINGTON CHANNEL LIGHTHOUSE.

Mr. E. D. SMITH—by Mr. Cockshutt—asked:

1. When did the lighthouse at Burlington Channel fall over?
2. When was the lighthouse erected?
3. What did it cost?
4. When is it proposed to re-erect it?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. The extremity of the Burlington breakwater on which the front range light stood was carried away by storm on the afternoon of the 4th of December, 1907, and the lighthouse was carried away at the same time.

2. The light was erected and put in operation in November, 1905.

3. The total cost of the tower including the preparation of the foundation was $1,949.65.

In May and June, 1906, the tower was moved to a new position at a cost of $544.84, as the breakwater was being destroyed and the tower was in danger.

4. The lighthouse cannot be re-erected until the new headblock, now in course of construction, is completed. In the meantime temporary lights are being placed on the northern side of the entrance.

A. BEAUCHEMIN, SOREL.

Mr. TAYLOR asked:

Is A. Beauchemin, of Sorel, an inspector of machinery on the St. Lawrence Ship Channel? If so, what salary is he paid, and what are his duties?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). No. Mr. Beauchemin is local superintendent of dredging below Quebec. His salary is $1,500 per annum.

TRIPS ON GOVERNMENT STEAMERS.

Mr. TAYLOR asked:

1. How many trips did Mr. Cowie take on government steamers during the season of navigation in 1907, for the purpose of pleasure or for inspection, respectively?

2. On what steamers did he make such trips?

3. On how many of those trips did Mr. A. Beauchemin, of Sorel, accompany him?

4. How many other persons did accompany him on these trips, and what are the names of such persons?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. 33. They were all on trips of inspection.

2. 'Lady Grey" and 'Frontenac.'

3. None.

4. From 1 to 12. Minister, acting minister, deputy minister, members of Shipping Federation, board of trade, chamber of commerce, party of English engineers, English journalists, presidents of pilots, members of the engineering staff.

REJECTED PASSAGES TO CANADA.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—by Mr. Cockshutt—asked:

How many passages to Canada were rejected at the agencies of the several steamship companies in European cities during the twelve months previous to August, 1907?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The government has no information.

RAILWAY STATION AT RIVIERE DU LOUP.

Mr. GAUVREAU—by Mr. Talbot—asked:

1. Has the Department of Railways been informed of the reported deplorable condition of the approaches to the Intercolonial Railway station at Rivière du Loup?

2. If so, does the Minister of Railways intend to macadamize, or cover with asphalt or with any other material the land around the said station? If so, when?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Some complaints have been made against the bad state of the roads behind the station.

2. Repairs will be made in due course, when the weather permits.

GRANTS OF COAL AREAS—AGENTS FOR APPLICANTS.

Mr. LAKE—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked:

In respect of each of the under-mentioned coal areas,

(a) What was the name and address of the party who acted as agent in making application on behalf of the original grantee; and

(b) What is the name and address of the present holder:

1. South half of section 18, township 5, range 1, west of 5th meridian.

2. North half of section 5, township 5, range 1, west of 5th meridian.

3. West half of section 32, township 6, range 3, west of 5th meridian.

4. West half of section 15, township 6, range 4, west of 5th meridian;
5. South half of section 24, township 7, range 6, west of 5th meridian;
6. East half of section 19, township 8, range 3, west of 5th meridian.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. (a) Application not made through an agent.
(b) Patented to A. A. Klaver, Pincher Creek, Alta., 5th July, 1902. The department has no information as to present owner.
2. (a) Application not made through an agent.
(b) Patented to C. B. Snider, Pincher Creek, Alta., 1st June, 1903.
3. (a) C. Remy, Frank, Alberta.
(b) Jules Justin Fleutot, Blairmore, Alberta.
4. (a) C. St. Barbe, Nelson, B.C.
(b) Hastings Exploration Syndicate and Brock, Marshall and Cockburn. Address: Care Messrs. McGiverin & Haydon, barristers, Ottawa.
5. (a) Application not made through an agent.
(b) Legal subdivisions 4 and 5 only. British American Coal Company. Address: Care Messrs. Kingsmill, Hellmuth, Torrance and Saunders, barristers, Toronto.
6. (a) Application not made through an agent.
(b) West Canadian Collieries, Limited, Blairmore, Alberta.

Mr. AMES asked:

In respect of each of the under-mentioned coal areas:
(a) What was the name and address of the party who acted as agent in making application on behalf of the original grantee; and
(b) What is the name and address of the present holder:
1. West half of section 14, township 8, range 4, west of 5th meridian;
2. East half of section 21, township 10, range 3, west of 5th meridian;
3. East half of section 22, township 10, range 4, west of 5th meridian;
4. East half of section 7, township 11, range 3, west of 5th meridian;
5. East half of section 3, township 11, range 3, west of 5th meridian;
6. East half of section 28, township 12, range 3, west of 5th meridian.
7. East half of section 4, township 13, range 3, west of 5th meridian.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. (a) A. W. McVittie, Cranbrook, B.C.
(b) Patented 25th April, 1907, to The West Canadian Collieries, Limited, Blairmore, Alberta.
2. (a) M. McKenzie, Macleod, Alberta.
(b) Wesley Bick, Ottawa.
3. (a) McGiverin and Haydon, Ottawa.
(b) F. E. Kenaston (Minneapolis, Minn.), Care Messrs. McGiverin and Haydon, Ottawa.
4. (a) McGiverin and Haydon, Ottawa.
(b) Western Canada Development Company, Limited, care of Messrs, McGiverin and Haydon, Ottawa.
5. (a) McGiverin and Haydon, Ottawa.
(b) F. E. Kenaston (Minneapolis, Minn.). Care of Messrs. McGiverin and Haydon, Ottawa.
6. (a) Hough, Campbell and Ferguson, Winnipeg, Manitoba.
(b) F. E. Kenaston (Minneapolis, Minn.). Care of Messrs. McGiverin and Haydon, Ottawa.
7. (a) Hough, Campbell and Ferguson, Winnipeg, Manitoba.
(b) F. E. Kenaston (Minneapolis, Min.). Care of Messrs. McGiverin and Haydon, Ottawa.

COAL SHIPMENTS FROM NOVA SCOTIA AND CAPE BRETON.

Mr. A. MARTIN asked:

1. Has the government received a copy of the following resolutions passed by the Charlottetown Board of Trade on the fifth instant?
2. If so, what action does the government propose in order to give them effect?

Charlottetown Board of Trade.
Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island,
March 7, 1908.

At a meeting of the council of this board, held on the fifth instant, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas the system of the coal mining companies in Nova Scotia and Cape Breton give a loading preference to steamers over sailing vessels at their respective piers, and said discrimination mitigates against the owners and charterers of sailing vessels;

And whereas the greater part of the coal imported to this province is freighted in sailing vessels, and owing to the condition of our harbours, must continue to be freighted by vessels of shallow draught;

And whereas such system may compel sailing vessels to abandon the coal carrying trade to the great detriment of this city and province;

Therefore, resolved that the Charlottetown Board of Trade respectfully request the federal government to pass such legislation as will give to sailing and steam tonnage equal rights in their proper loading turns at the coal ports in Nova Scotia and Cape Breton, steamers when taking in bunker coal to have preference only.

Resolved, that the council of the Charlottetown Board of Trade respectfully and urgently request that the federal government give at once a definite reply to the representation made regarding freight and passenger rates by the delegates of the Board of Trade of Prince Edward Island at a meeting held in Charlottetown last June, at which the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals and the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries were present, so that the concessions that the board of trade confidently expect may be made known at the opening of navigation.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Yes.
2. Under consideration.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—REVENUE FOR USE OF TERMINALS.

Mr. STANFIELD—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

What revenue is the Intercolonial Railway receiving for the use of terminals by (a) the Canadian Pacific Railway at St. John, New Brunswick; (b) the Canadian Pacific Railway at Fredericton, New Brunswick; (c) the Halifax and South Western Railway at Halifax, Nova Scotia; (d) the Sydney and Louisburg Railway at Sydney, Nova Scotia?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. (a) For wear and tear of tracks, buildings, &c., $1,200 a year, and a share of the station expenses in proportion to the use the Canadian Pacific Railway makes of the station.

(b) The Canadian Pacific Railway do not use the Intercolonial terminals at Fredericton.

(c) A proportion of the interest at 4 per cent on the value of the premises, used jointly by the Intercolonial Railway, Dominion Atlantic Railway and the Halifax and Southwestern Railway. The proportion being in accordance with the use made of the premises by the Halifax and Southwestern from time to time. A share of the station expenses in proportion to the use the Halifax and Southwestern Railway makes of the station and premises.

(d) The Intercolonial Railway receives from the Sydney and Louisburg Railway at Sydney $65 per month.

OTONABEE POWER COMPANY, PETERBOROUGH.

Mr. BENNETT—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

What amount of horse-power was paid for by the Otonabee Power Company, of Peterborough, in last fiscal year?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The lease to the Otonabee Power Company of Peterborough, was for the right to use all the surplus water, estimated at the time at 625 horse-power.

DREDGING AT VERNON RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN—by Mr. A. Martin—asked:

1. Is it the intention of the government to dredge the river at the end near the pier built at Vernon river bridge, Prince Edward Island?
2. Is the government aware that in order to give the necessary shipping accommodation at the pier, dredging is necessary?

Hon. Wm. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. Matter under consideration.
2. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.)

BREAKWATER AT TRACADIE HARBOUR.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN—by Mr. A. Martin—asked:

1. Have petitions been received from the inhabitants of Tracadie and Blooming Point, Prince Edward Island, for the construction of a breakwater at Tracadie harbour?
2. Has any survey been made with a view to the construction of said work?
3. Was an estimate made of the cost of the work? If so, by whom and what is the amount of such estimate?
4. Is it the intention of the government to place an amount in the estimates this session for the construction, and to proceed with the work?

Hon. Wm. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1 and 2. Yes.
3. (a) Yes. (b) J. B. Hagan, resident engineer. (c) $27,000.
4. Matter under consideration.

POST OFFICE, PARISH OF THE SACRED HEART.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. For what reason did the government establish six post offices in the parish of the Sacred Heart, county of Saguenay, where the population comprises only 640 souls?
2. Instead of establishing six post offices in the parish of the Sacred Heart, where the mail is only received four times per week, why did not the government establish in that locality, according to the request of those interested, a six mails per week service?
3. Who recommended the establishment of the six post offices in the said parish?

Hon. R. LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). The hon. gentleman is misinformed. There is only one post office in the parish of Sacred Heart, county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay.

PRINTING FOR OUTSIDE POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—by Mr. Cockshutt—asked:

1. What is the nature of the printing for outside postal service, and is it let by tender, what is the name of the firms doing the printing, what was the amount paid for such printing in the years 1905 and 1906?
2. Is the stationery in the Postal Department, outside service, purchased by tender? If so, what is the name of the firm supplying the department?
3. Where are stamps and stamp paper manufactured, what is the name of the firm manufacturing same, and is the work done by tender?

Hon. R. LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1 and 2. As regards questions 1 and 2 all printing and stationery is furnished to the Department by the King's Printer, who allots all work without consulting the Post Office Department.

3. As regards question 3, all stamps are manufactured for the Post Office Department under a contract passed between the Finance Department and the American Bank Note Company who supply, without reference to the Post Office Department, the paper.

MR. R. DALY, GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—by Mr. Cockshutt—asked :

1. Was Mr. Reginald Daly, employed in the Geological Survey and Interior Department, paid for full time for the financial years 1903-4, 1904-5 and 1905-6?
2. Was Mr. Daly acting in the service of the government during the whole of those three years, or if absent, during what time was he absent, and for what cause?
3. Was he absent during any part of this time as a paid lecturer in California? If so, when and for how long?
4. When was his salary increased from $2,000 to $2,500, and why was it so increased?

Hon. Wm. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue) :

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. Dr. Daly lectured during six weeks in California. He had leave of absence from the minister of the department in which he was employed. Dr. Daly spent four months of that season in the field. Do not know if he was paid for the time he lectured.
4. From the 1st July, 1906. For ability and good service.

DR. A. E. BARLOW.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—by Mr. Cockshutt—asked :

1. Did Doctor A. E. Barlow, while in the service of the Geological Survey Department, investigate a belt in Lake Temagami district, the property of the Honourable Sir William Mulock and Mr. Daniel O'Cannor, and run lines and trenches across the property?
2. Did Doctor A. E. Barlow make a report of this investigation or survey?
3. Did he make a map of the property, and is it available?
4. What was the total cost of the work, including Doctor Barlow's salary?
5. Was Doctor Barlow, while engaged in making examination of nickel deposits in Sudbury region for Doctor Mond, paid a salary and allowance for expenses by Doctor Mond, in addition to the salary paid by the government?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Mines). This involves an inquiry of Dr. Barlow, who is not now in the service of the government, and must stand until he can be communicated with.

MR. DONALD FRASER, HUNTINGDON, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Was Donald Fraser, customs officer at Huntingdon, British Columbia, dismissed? If so, for what reason was he dismissed?
2. Was any investigation held in the matter? If so, what was the finding?

Hon. WM. PATTERSON. Minister of Customs). If the hon. gentleman will consult 'Hansard' of March 18, he will find the answer to these questions, as given to the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt).

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—RUNNING TRAINS—OFFICIAL CARS.

Mr. FORGET—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Is the Minister of Railways aware that the regular passenger trains between Halifax and Montreal on the Intercolonial Railway very seldom reach Montreal on schedule time and run late on a great portion of the line? If so, what reasons have been given by the officials for allowing this?
2. Does the minister intend taking any action to see that in future this is not to be a constant occurrence, thus inconveniencing the public?
3. Does the government allow private or official cars to be attached to the Ocean Limited train and other very fast schedule trains?
4. Is the government aware that this delays said trains and prevents them running on time?
5. Is the government aware that other railways in Canada do not allow private or official cars to be attached to limited trains?
6. Does the Minister of Railways intend to allow official and private cars to be continued to be attached to fast through limited trains?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. The trains on the Intercolonial Railway, between Halifax and Montreal, are run as regularly on time, as any other railway in the country, considering the length of road and the exigencies connected therewith.
2. Answered by No. 1.
3. No private official cars are attached to the Ocean Limited.
4. Answered by No. 3.
5. Yes, it is learned that the Grand Trunk Railway do not attach private or official cars to their international limited train, or on the 8.30 a.m. train leaving Montreal for Ottawa, or the 4.45 p.m. train leaving Ottawa for Montreal.
6. Answered by No. 3.

TREADGOLD COMMISSION—SERVICES OF MR. JUSTICE BRITTON.

Mr. LENNOX asked :

1. Has Hon. Mr. Justice Britton been paid in full for his services and expenses on the Treadgold Commission?
2. What amount has been paid him for services as commissioner?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. Yes.
2. $3,000.

MR. P. HOLLIDAY.

Mr. LENNOX asked :

1. Was Mr. P. Holliday, during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1907, a single or a married man?

2. What was the ground upon which he was paid additional living allowance of $538.71, as stated on page L—36 of the Auditor General's Report, 1906-7?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. A single man.

2. The mining recorders located at Duncan Creek, Glacier Creek and Conrad, in the Yukon Territory, were in receipt of an allowance of $125 per month because of the additional cost of living in these remote portions of the territory, and as the mining recorder at Kluane seemed to be in the same position, the comptroller recommended that Mr. Holliday, the mining recorder at that place, which is the most isolated of all, be paid a living allowance at the same rate, his predecessors in office having received an allowance of $175 per month. This recommendation was duly approved, and on the 31st of March, 1907, a cheque for $538.71 was issued in favour of Mr. Holliday, being payment of the extra living allowance at the rate of $25 per month, from the 15th of June, 1905, to the 31st of March, 1907.

FOREIGN PURCHASES.

Mr. LENNOX asked :

Referring to an item 'Collector of Customs, Ottawa, duty on foreign purchases, $1,543.27,' page L—39, Auditor General's Report, 1906-7, what are the purchases referred to in this item, and what were the purchase amounts paid?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Mathematical instruments, clocks, photo plates, dry batteries, mirrors, &c., purchase amounts, $5,099.45.

LOBSTER FISHING AND PACKING LICENSES IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens) moved :

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, petitions, orders in council, applications for licenses, in possession of the government or any member or official thereof, respecting the granting of lobster fishing and packing licenses in Prince Edward Island for the years 1904, 1905, 1906 and 1907-8 and the report of the inspectors thereon.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). This will be a very voluminous return, for there has been an extensive correspondence in reference to the matters covered by the motion. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. Martin) will be kind enough to let me know particulars of what he would like especially, it will facilitate the work. Otherwise, the return must take some time.

Motion agreed to.

EXPENDITURE ON WHARFS, PIERS AND HARBOURS.

Mr. BLAIN—by Mr. Taylor—moved :

For a return showing what amount has been expended on wharfs, piers and harbours each year since 1895, and the amount expended in each province.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). Motions have already been passed for returns covering information very similar to this. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow it to stand ; and I will look up the previous motions.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a return showing how much has been paid to C. Boone or the Boone Company since 1896, and the amount paid for work in each year at each point where same was performed by said party, firm or company.—Mr. Bennett.

For a return showing the expenditure of the government for food, clothing and other maintenance for immigrants after landing in Canada for the years 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, 1908, to March 1st.—Mr. Schaffner.

For a copy of all contracts, papers and other documents between the government or the Department of Militia and Defence, or any member thereof, or any one acting for or on its behalf, and the Sutherland Rifle Sight Company or any one acting for or on its behalf, relating to the purchase of rifle sights or any other materials.—Mr. Worthington.

For a copy of all contracts, papers or documents between the government or the Department of Militia and Defence, or any member thereof, or any one acting for or on its behalf and the Ross Rifle Company or any other company, or any one acting for or on their behalf, regarding the manufacture of bayonets for the militia of Canada, or any other materials other than the rifle itself.—Mr. Worthington.

For a copy of all correspondence, applications and all other papers and documents relating in any way to any and all applications for or in connection with or relating to the southeast quarter of section 14, township 12, range 6, west 4th meridian.—Mr. Herron.

For a return showing what coal areas are held by F. E. Keniston, of Minneapolis; said return to include a copy of all letters, documents and correspondence relating to the application, sale, lease or cancellation of the same, from the general file for each group of claims, and not the special file of each section. —Mr. Ames.

For a return showing what coal areas were obtained through the agency of Malcolm McKenzie on behalf of clients; and a copy of all letters, documents and correspondence relating to the application, sale, lease or cancellation of the same. Also the same information in regard to J. H. Moss, of Toronto. All from the general file for each group of claims, and not the special file for each section.—Mr. Ames.

For a copy of all orders in council, reports, surveys, contracts, tenders, agreements, books, memoranda, documents, and papers of every kind, showing, relating to, or concerning the length of the National Transcontinental Railway from (a) Winnipeg to Quebec, (b) Quebec to Moncton, and the estimated or probable average cost per mile of the same, and all other information relating to the total cost or the cost per mile of the said railway.—Mr. Borden.

For a copy of all orders in council and regulations made by the Governor in Council, or prescribed by the Minister of Customs under the provisions of chapter eleven (11) of the Acts of 1907, (6 and 7 Edward VII.), relating to materials to be used in Canada for the construction of bridges or tunnels crossing the boundary between the United States and Canada, and all similar regulations or legislative or administrative provisions of the United States customs laws relating to such materials. —Mr. Clements.

ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES AT SOREL.

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Speaker, I was asked by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) to produce before parliament the report of the commissioner appointed to investigate alleged irregularities at Sorel in connection with the building of piers on Lake St. Peter. I beg to move:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the interim report of the commissioner appointed to investigate alleged irregularities at Sorel in connection with the construction of piers on Lake St. Peter.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BRODEUR. I beg to lay the report on the table of the House.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will this report be printed in English?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

METLAKATLA AND SONGHEES INDIAN RESERVE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN moved:

For a copy of all opinions of the Minister of Justice or Deputy Minister of Justice or any official of the Department of Justice, to the Minister of the Interior or any official of the Department of the Interior, with respect to the Metlakatla and Songhees Indian reserves, or either of the said reserves, since the 1st day of January, 1906.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). Mr. Speaker, this notice of motion has been on the paper for some time and it was indicated when originally called that it was not a matter that would go as an unopposed motion. It is a matter in which perhaps the Department of the Interior is more directly interested as the part which the Department of Justice has had in the business is indicated by the terms of the proposed resolution—simply the giving of advice and of opinions upon this question of law to the Department of the Interior. These opinions, however, and that advice, as the hon. gentleman must see, have been necessarily of a confidential character and it would be, as it seems to me, most certainly opposed diametrically to the public interest that, at this stage of the matter at any rate, these opinions and that advice should become public property. The question which is indicated in this resolution is, even at the present time, in course of negotiation with the provincial government in the expectation that it will be referred to the courts for decision and in the advice which the Department of Justice has given to the Department of the Interior and in the opinions expressed by the Department of Justice as to the legal rights involved there are many things said which, certainly it would not be judicious and which it would not be the course of any ordinary business man in the conduct of his own business, if he were in controversy with an adversary, to lay before that adversary or to give to the public. I must express the hope that my hon. friend who has moved this resolution will not press it. It would be, in my judgment, certainly highly detrimental to the public interest that these opinions of the Department of Justice should be made public at the present time. It is very likely that the negotiations which are pending for an amicable reference of the matters in difference to the courts for decision, will, before long, result in such reference being directed. If so the question of law involved will be for argument before the courts to which that reference is made and in that event it would be altogether an extraordinary proceeding that we should present beforehand to the adversary the arguments upon which we rely, stating our case and handing over our brief to the opponent. In these circumstances, it seeems to me that this is an order which it would not be right that the House should now make.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) was the very first one last session, or the session before, to give the House the benefit of his professional opinion upon the exact interests of the Dominion and the provinces with regard to one of these reserves unless I am very much mistaken. If he is at liberty to do that on the floor of this House one finds it a little difficult to appreciate the confidential nature of the more mature opinions or advice that he may have given later on. However, I would not be anxious, notwithstanding the somewhat curious change of attitude on the part of the Minister of Justice, to call for any documents which might affect the interests of the Dominion as contrasted with those of provinces. As far as I am concerned I did not know that there was anything in litigation. It is news to me to know that there is anything in litigation or in prospective litigation between the province and the Dominion in regard to either one of these reserves. In so far as one of them is concerned the Minister of the Interior has already brought down the opinion of the Department of Justice and laid it on the table of the House and I have had perusal of it during this session. I included these reserves because I was not sure if everything had been embraced. Therefore, the objection of the Minister of Justice comes a little late if he is making it on behalf of the Department of the Interior because the written opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice in regard to one of these reserves has already been brought down and laid on the table of the House. I am quite sure that it has reference to one of these very reserves. I do not want any document laid on the table of this House which relates to litigation or prospective litigation betweeen the Dominion and a province if there is any possible suggestion that the litigation is likely to take place. But, apart from that we have a perfect right to know what the view of the government is in reference to the title of this country to the public domain which it claims. Apart from the confidential considerations which the Minister of Justice has put forward, this House has an absolute right to know what view the trustees of the people take in regard to the title to the public domain. There is nothing confidential in such information and nothing in the nature of such information which has ever been held as a reasonable justification for withholding it from the House. I would suggest that the motion ought to pass and that the government, in the exercise of the discretion which always rests with the government under such circumstances, will withhold from the return it brings down any of these opinions which the public interest requires to be withheld. That is the course which I think is usually pursued in such cases.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Motion can pass with this reservation.

Motion agreed to.

RELIGION OF EMPLOYEES OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey) moved :

For a return showing: 1. The names and salaries of the permanent and sessional employees of the Senate and House of Commons at this date.

2. The religious denomination they belong to individually, Protestant or Roman Catholic.

3. The date of appointment of each.

4. The names and salaries of the employees of the Printing Bureau, including the King's Printer and staff, at this date.

5. The religion of each, specifying whether Roman Catholic or Protestant, and date of appointment.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT (Bellechasse). I beg to move a couple of amendments to this motion. In paragraph 1 I would move to add after the word 'names' the word 'nationalities,' and after the word 'Commons' the words 'and of the various public departments.'

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I would like to suggest to both these hon. gentlemen that they withdraw from these motions so much of the language as calls for a return on religious lines. I think it is much to be regretted that we should attempt to classify our public service on religious lines. I do not see any good purpose that can possibly be served in the matter. I would call the attention of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) to the fact that if we wish to classify them some of us would have to take exception to his manner of separating the people into two branches, simply calling them Protestants and Catholics. There is no Christian denomination which is known as Protestant. That class of people commonly and generally spoken of as Protestants are subdivided into many classes, and if it is important to show—I do not think it is—how many persons of a particular faith are to be found in the public service, then we would require to have a fair deal all around, and to have the returns show, not how many Protestants and how many Catholics there are, but how many Presbyterians, how many Methodists, how many Baptists, how many Lutherans, how many Christian Brethren and how many of each of all the various branches of the Christian faith—and for that matter, the number of those who may not claim to belong to the Christian faith.

Mr. TALBOT. What about the Atheists of the province of Quebec to which my hon. friend referred?

Mr. FIELDING. One part of the motion calling for the names, salaries, etc., is quite proper, but I think it is a pity to attempt a classification on religious grounds. I ask the hon. member if he has not been prompted in this motion by a little incident of the other day, and if his purpose would not be served by withdrawing the motion, or that portion of it which calls for the religion of the employees of parliament?

Mr. SPROULE. I was moved to this course by emphatic denials of my statement in regard to the House of Commons, which I believed to be absolutely correct. I therefore took the only means at my disposal of verifying my statement so that it could not be contradicted. The question I raised was with regard to the number of Roman Catholics and Protestants employed in connection with the service of this House. It was afterwards extended to the Senate improperly by newspapers who attributed that statement to me, and I was offensively and insolently called to task by the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) and by a senator in the other chamber, who did not know whether the report of what I had said was correct or not.

With regard to the question of the propriety or the expediency of this motion, I may say that this is not the first time this course has been taken during my time in the House and on other occasions no objection was taken. I forget who moved the resolution for that return, but it was moved, and when the return came down I noticed that it was difficult, almost impossible to say to what nationality the employees belonged and attention was drawn to that fact. I would be glad to have all the information of which the Minister of Finance spoke if it is available. I noticed as well in that return that in many cases no religion was put down. My object was to verify the correctness of my statement. I have been in the House a comparatively long time and I never made a statement either in or out of the House with regard to proceedings in parliament that I did not believe to be absolutely correct, and I may say that very seldom have I been obliged to correct or withdraw any statement because of it being inaccurate. When I make a statement I am prepared to stand by it, believing it to be correct; but no one would more readily or more quickly withdraw a statement if I found it to be incorrect.

It has been repeatedly said to me as a prominent Orangeman, that the Orangemen do not want to do justice to the Roman Catholics. I have had to combat that statement I was going to say a thousand times over. It is said that we hold that the Catholics are not entitled to the same rights in the country as we are. I say: yes, they are in every respect. We are accused of holding that the Catholics are not entitled to their full share of office. I say: Yes, to the fullest extent, we have not the slightest desire or inclination to deny that right, none in the world. It has been said to me by Catholics: We have not our fair share. That statement was made only a short time ago in connection with the House of Commons that there is not a fair proportion of Roman Catholics employed in the House. I obtained a statement for my own information and I found that there are nearly three Roman Catholics to one Protestant employed in the House. Was I justified in saying so, or was I mistaken? According to the census, about 40 per cent of the population of Canada are Roman Catholics and about 60 per cent Protestants. If that is a fair proportion they are entitled to their proportionate share of all the offices of emolument under the Crown, and we do not desire to deny them that right; but when you come to examine into it, it is found that right in the House they have had more than their share, and when it was said to me that they had not their share and I contradicted this statement, then I wanted to be able to verify what I had said. I am doing nothing wrong in vindicating my own reputation for honesty and truthfulness and my own character in reference to what I have said. I do not desire to do anything improper but simply to show the people that we are not trying to deprive the Roman Catholics of what they are entitled to and of their just rights in full proportion.

Mr. TALBOT. The hon. member said that in this House and out of it he never said anything but what was correct. I would ask him if he recalled his statement of three or four years ago in the House that the Catholic clergy of the province of Quebec had organized a fund in order to lend money to the French Canadians at a low rate of interest so that they might drive away Protestant farmers from the eastern townships?

Mr. SPROULE. That is not the statement I made at all. I said I was credibly informed that through some——

Mr. TALBOT. The old story.

Mr. SPROULE. Let me make my explanation. That I was credibly informed and believed that through some means or other throughout the church there was a fund available whereby whenever an intimation was given that a Protestant farmer desired or was willing to sell out, means were found to buy his farm, and for this reason, that as soon as a Roman Catholic become possessed of it, he paid to the church either tithe or other church dues in support of that church, while if it was owned by a Protestant there was no payment to the church. I give the Huntingdon 'Gleaner' as my authority for it.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh.

Mr. SPROULE. Whether it is right or not, the hon. member knows the editor of that paper better than I do. I have always been told that he is a very respectable, reliable and truthful man and I notice that others have said the same thing. Believing that the information was from a reliable source, was I very far astray in saying what I did? I do not think I was.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE (South Perth). Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word or two on this matter. I do not think it is a matter of first-class importance, but like many other questions that are small in themselves, it might, if unwisely handled, lead to a good deal of feeling. I listened with interest to the remarks of the Minister of Finance. I think he has taken the right stand. It is exceedingly desirable that we should not bring up matters of this kind in a House like this without grave cause. The hon. member for East Grey has stated why he has brought up this question. Evidently it is not as a matter of principle at all, but simply because somebody doubted the exact truth or certitude of certain statements which he had made. The hon. member has and will have many opportunities of showing the correctness of the statements he makes, if he desires to do so, without bringing the matter before this House.

Mr. SPROULE. How can I do so unless I get information that is official ?

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. But there are certain other features which enter into the employment of officials about this House which I think should be borne in mind or otherwise the return asked for may be misleading. Ottawa is not representative of certain other portions of the Dominion. In certain large cities, such as Toronto, you will not find the same distribution of population, the same variety in race or religion. It naturally follows then, that if you choose sessional employees in this neighbourhood you will have a greater-variety in these respects or even a greater number of certain races or religions than you would if they were drawn from other portions of the Dominion. This also should be carefully borne in mind, that owing to the fact that the two languages have equal claims in this House, it is certainly useful that every employee should have a certain knowledge of both. It is true that the English-speaking employee seldom has any knowledge of French, while the French-speaking employee has a knowledge of both languages. For that reason he is the more valuable man, and, therefore, naturally a greater number of French-speaking employees will be found in employment about this House. This arises not from any favouritism of that class, but from the actual usefulness to the service of those who speak the two languages. This fact also, from the very circumstances of the case, would give a predominance to the adherents of a certain religion, owing to the fact that religion and race frequently accompany one another.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not object at all to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Bellechasse, except in so far as it may delay the return being brought down.

Mr. FIELDING. I think both hon. member had better withdraw their motions. They have made their speeches.

Mr. SPROULE. No I do not intend to withdraw.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). I do not think we had better go any further with either the motion or the amendment. The necessity of the hon. member for East Grey verifying his statement would not have arisen if he had not made the statement.

Mr. SPROULE. I made the statement in answer to objections that were raised in regard to myself and the society to which I belong.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend had a perfect right to make the statement, but I am just pointing out the coincidence.

Mr. SPROULE. But the hon. member ought to be fair enough to point out the reason why I was compelled to make it.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not know that the hon. member was compelled. He did make the statement, but I think it is unwise for a prominent man in Canada in this age to make a statement which will lead to such a result as we see to-night. We are talking about civil service reform, and the hon. member for North Toronto has a motion on the Order Paper on that subject. Now, civil service reform will be impossible if we have to line up every person and ask him where he goes to church—not, have you passed the civil service examination or are you fit to perform the duties assigned to you, but where do you worship ?

Mr. HAGGART. Don't they ask it now of every civil servant?

Mr. GRAHAM. Not as a qualification, but as an incident.

Mr. HAGGART. I am stating the fact.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is no more necessary, I say, to know where a civil servant or any other person worships, so far as the performance of his work is concerned, than it is to know where he buys his boots and shoes. If I have to be confined to any particular church in the selection of the employees in my department, then you do away with any idea of efficiency. This country is big enough for all classes, and in public affairs we have come to a time when we ought to cease to make a dividing line between people as to either their nationality or their creed. In Canada, while we are descendants of French, Irish, Scotch, English and other nationalities, we are above everything else citizens of Canada, and we are going back into the past ages when for any purpose whatever we try to make capital out of the fact that any nationality or creed has a preponderance over another in the public service.

Mr. SPROULE. Might I ask the hon. minister this question ? Is it any more improper to bring this matter up here than it was to pass a resolution in this city the Sunday before last to the effect that the Roman Catholics had not their proper representation in this cabinet ?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend will see that it was not a leading man of a political party that passed that resolution. I am speaking of men who are prominent in the affairs of the Dominion endeavouring to make capital one way or the other in regard to the denominations or creeds of public officials. This Dominion of Canada is big enough to contain us all, and I think it would be better for the public life of Canada, better for both parties, and to the credit of the House of Commons if, after having had our little discussion, this motion were dropped and not placed on the records of the House in the way of a return at all.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the yeas and nays on the motion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It would be a misfortune if we had a division on a motion of this kind. My hon. friend is entitled to some of the information he asks for: he has a right to have the names and salaries of the permanent and sessional employees of the Senate and House of Commons, The discussion that has arisen has simply been in regard to having a statement of the religious denominations of these employees. If my hon. friend would permit me, I will move the adjournment of the debate, and then perhaps we can come to some conclusion as to what course to take.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Just one word. I think my hon. friend the Minister of Railways is not quite fair in his imputation of motives to my hon. friend from East Grey. It was not exactly a speech that I would have expected from the hon. gentleman, so far as some parts of it are concerned.

Mr. GRAHAM. Neither expected nor wanted, I suppose.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, I do not know that there was any thing very crushing in it, if that is what the hon. gentleman desires to suggest; and I would tell him, so far as some of these matters are concerned, that, if he desires to cast imputations against this side of the House, he might look at some newspapers under the direct control of leading members of this government and find out whether or not they have engaged in warfare of this kind. Let him consider that for a moment, and I will give him illustrations later on if he wants them. I can give him illustrations directly to the contrary from newspapers under the control and inspiration of leading members of this government, and I can produce expressions and direct suggestions from them which do not harmonize very well with the statement of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham). My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) said he was taunted with a certain circumstance, that he denied that circumstance, and that he put this motion upon the order paper for the purpose of setting himself right as to the facts. While we may perhaps doubt sometimes the wisdom of introducing topics of this kind into this House, still the hon. gentleman had some reason for the course he took. So far as the imputation of motive is concerned, the Minister of Railways and Canals will remember that in the census taken by the government, questions with regard to the religious belief of every man in this country are put, as a matter of form, and under the law of this country. That surely is not done with any idea of creating religious dissensions or making party capital, and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) simply adopted this course in order to put himself right with regard to a particular statement of fact as to which he had been contradicted. For my part there is one portion of the remarks of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals with which I heartily agree and it is that in connection with appointments to the public service, we should put absolutely aside questions of this character and look only to fitness without regard to religious belief. That would no doubt be the best course in the interests of the people, but we know that there are certain susceptibilities and feeling in the minds of certain persons in this matter and that these will probably continue for many years to come. We have therefore to reckon with considerations of that kind to a certain extent. I would not have said a word on this matter except for the rather unfair way in which I thought the Minister of Railways was inclined to treat my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule).

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). Enough has occurred in the few minutes this subject has been under discussion to demonstrate to every one how dangerous it is to introduce any such subject into this or any other deliberative assembly. Whoever does so is simply playing with coals of fire. I object very strongly to this resolution, and if it be put to vote I shall oppose it, and I could not content myself with giving a silent vote. We know that in our census returns the adherents of the respective religions are given, so that we may have an idea of the relative numbers of the congregations of the different churches; but as regards representation in this House or qualifications for any public position or office, it has been for years past judged wise, not only by our Canadian parliament, but by the parliament in the old country, which we look to as our model, to abolish all distinctions of this character and every form of religious test. Is it then to any purpose that statistics should be asked for by any member of this House which can have no other possible object—at all events, no other possible result—than to afford means to those so disposed to institute comparisons to the detriment of one or an other class in this country? If this resolution is to pass, and if every one in the public service is to be asked to what church he belongs, why not go still further? If it be the object to see whether this, that or the other denomination has its share of public offices, why seek to divide the whole country into two races or creeds? Why assume that every person who is not a Roman Catholic is of necessity a Protestant, or that every one who is not a Protestant is of necessity a Roman Catholic? Why not go further and set about getting statistical information to show whether or not the Methodists, or the Presbyterians, or the Salvation Army, have their fair representation in any department of this government? It is a new and an improper thing to endeavour to introduce anything of this nature.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not a new thing, because we had such a return years ago, and it is in the library now.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I stand corrected if the hon. gentleman says it is no new thing. Then it is unfortunately an old thing. It is an old inheritance that has come to us from the old-time feuds of that old world 3,000 miles away, which ought to have been buried in the old world and never imported into this. I certainly feel strongly on this subject, and I suppose I speak strongly. I am, as every one knows, not a Roman Catholic, at all events, but I have a good many Roman Catholic friends.

Mr. SPROULE. I have letters asking if you are not a Roman Catholic.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I went to school with many a barefooted Roman Catholic boy, just as I went myself, and these boys that I met at school I have found always the best neighbours in after life. I would urge therefore that this motion is absolutely uncalled for and unnecessary. But if we are to order statistics, to obtain which will necessitate calling on every one in the civil service to make his choice between those two creeds and say to which he adheres, we should, on the same principle, go further and endeavour to ascertain whether or not each particular denomination of the Protestant Church has its share of the offices of this country or whether one, by some inadvertence, has got ahead of an other. It would be a sorry day if we were to call upon any applicant for government office to state whether or not he belonged to the class or sect which happened to be in the majority. We might as well, for exactly the same reason—and with more reason—ask every applicant for office what his nationality was and whether, instead of being Roman Catholic or Protestant, he was orange or green.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Mr. AYLESWORTH.

ADJOURNMENT—INTERIM SUPPLY BILL.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business tomorrow ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. A couple of government Bills not of a controversial nature.

Hon. W. S FIELDING (Minister of Finance). There was an understanding, I think, with hon. gentlemen opposite, that we might take what is commonly called a vote on account, of one-quarter the Supply for the coming year. With a view to carrying that out, after one or two non-contentious Bills have been disposed of, we will move for a Committee of Supply taking first in Supply the one-fourth vote.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not know that an arrangement was made as to the amount.

Mr. FIELDING. I mentioned to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) one-fourth, to which he took no exception. I cannot say more than that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) mentioned the matter to me, I told him that we would agree to a vote on account in order that the public business might be carried on. But I had not considered the question of what proportion should be provided, and I would confer with him later.

Mr. FIELDING. I mentioned it. I will not say that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) agreed to the proportion. But I took it that that would be agreed to, and the clerks have prepared the resolutions accordingly.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.50 p.m.

---

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, March 24, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

HINDUS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to call the attention of the Prime Minister to the following despatch appeared in the 'Citizen' this morning and which says :

(Special to the 'Citizen.')

Vancouver, March 23.—Five hundred Hindus met yesterday in the Sikh temple, and after many exciting speeches, protesting against their exclusion and deportation from Canada, and emphasizing the fact that this would be a strong weapon in the hands of those preaching secession in India, sent the followng cable to John Morley, Secretary for India :

We protest against deportation and exclusion from Canada. As British subjects we claim protection throughout the empire. If our interests are overlooked by others, those in India must necessarily resent your government's negligence.

The cablegram is signed by Uday Ram, who is nephew of Dr. Davis Chadd, a Hindu of high caste.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister either now or at a convenient date to give the House a statement as to what is really occurring with reference to the Hindus who come to our country and who are British subjects. The matter is arousing a great deal of interest in other countries as well as in Canada and a plain frank statement of the situation as it really is would be of very great service.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The situation with regard to the Hindus at the present time can be easily explained. The regulations of the Department of the Interior provide that all undesirables, idiots, insane or incapables, for instance, can be and ought to be excluded. But it was found that certain parties were coming in not from the country of their origin but from other countries, and therefore they could not be sent back to the country of their origin. For instance, if a man should come from any part of Europe, from Germany, Russia or any other country, unless he came on a through ticket, the companies that brought him would not take him back from the country from which he sailed. If he had a ticket from Great Britain he could be sent back to Great Britain, but he could not be sent back to the country of his origin. Therefore the Minister of the Interior, in order to have the machinery under his hand to send back to the country of origin any man who did not come up to our regulations physically, mentally or otherwise, passed a regulation whereby no one would be admitted unless he came on a through ticket from the country of his origin. This applies to Hindus, to British subjects and to foreigners of all nationalities. A Hindu, for instance, coming from Hong Kong could not be sent back to Hong Kong if he was physically or mentally unfit, or otherwise would not come up to the regulations because the authorities at Hong Kong would not receive him there. We could send such men to the country of their origin and therefore these regulations were adopted in order to have absolute control of the steamship companies bringing immigrants to Canada so that we could compel them to take them back to the country of origin. The Hindus are in that condition, they are not in any different condition from any one else. The regulations applying to them apply to all other immigrants from whatever country they may come in Asia, or Europe or anywhere else.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does it make any difference how long the immigrant has been in the country from which he comes ? For instance, if a German has resided for three or four years in England before coming to Canada, would you refuse him admission on that account ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This question has not been looked into and I do not think it is likely to arise. If a German were coming from Great Britain after being there some years, I do not know what we should do as the situation has never arisen ; but we are looking to what has actually arisen. Steamship companies, in their anxiety to bring people here, might take them from all over the globe and we should not be able to send the undesirables to the countries of their nationality Therefore, to make sure, we passed regulations whereby no one would be permitted to land unless he came from the country of his origin. The Hindus who have been deported or excluded come under that regulation. The regulation is not directed against the Hindus or any other nationality but it is a regulation that applies to all nationalities, and was deemed essential in order to control the character of the immigrants who were admitted to this country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How long had they been residing at Hong Kong, just a short time or a long time ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that this question has been considered.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the Prime Minister aware that a German landed only a few days ago in Vancouver and was refused admittance because he came from New Zealand ? He was obliged to go to the United States.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I thought that was carrying a good principle a little too far.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is the meaning of the regulation that the Hindu must come from India ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He could come from Hong Kong provided he comes on a through ticket so that we can compel that company that brings him to take him back to India.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to ask the Postmaster General when I may expect a return for which I asked on March 9 with reference to a post office at North Grove in the county of Grenville.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). I shall inquire.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would also like to ask the Minister of the Interior when I may expect a return for which I asked on February 26 in connection with the Kananaski Falls at Banff.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I shall be able to give the information to-morrow.

Mr. A. MARTIN. I would like to ask the Postmaster General for some returns ordered in the early part of the session, some of them I think in December last.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The returns are ready; they have been sent to the Department of the Secretary of State and will be brought here in a day or so.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION REPORT.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) yesterday asked a question with regard to the report of the Civil Service Commission. I said that we had received the report but that there were some additional papers to be received. These papers have just come to me and are under consideration. I anticipate that we will be able to bring down the whole report to-morrow.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Before the orders of the day are called I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the following despatch which appears in the Montreal 'Gazette' to-day:

(Canadian Associated Press.)

London, March 23.—The 'Daily Telegraph' publishes Mr. Bruce Walker's 'remarkable' report on emigration societies verbatim and says that such criticism of the foremost English emigration societies will be received with considerable surprise. The facts do not justify the condemnation or point to the necessity of restriction of emigration.

Mr. Obed Smith, interviewed by the 'Standard,' deprecates the anxiety: 'We do not intend to accept only the best people. We are prepared to accept any but the very worst.' The emigrants should, however, be assured of work.

I wish to ask the Minister of the Interior if Mr. Smith has instructions from the government that the agents of the department in the old country are prepared to accept any but the very worst immigrants.

Mr. OLIVER. I think I shall have to assume that Mr. Smith has been misquoted as certainly such a statement does not represent either the policy or the practice of the government in that connection.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the Minister state in what capacity Mr. J. Obed Smith is in London at the present time?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Smith is in London as assistant superintendent of immigration for Great Britain and the continent, in the place of Mr. J. Bruce Walker who is now in Winnipeg as Commissioner of Immigration in the place of Mr. Smith.

COMPANIES ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 104), to amend the Companies' Act—Mr. Fielding—read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 2,

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The chief purpose of this Bill is to provide that companies issuing certificates and desiring to sell them in foreign countries may issue them in the currency of such countries, coming as closely as possible to the equivalent of a given sum in the currency of Canada. The main feature of the Bill is in section 2 which provides:

Subsection 1 of section 69 of the said chapter is hereby amended by adding at the end of paragraph (c) thereof the following words:

Provided that such bonds, debentures or other securities may be for sums not less than twenty pounds sterling, five hundred francs, or four hundred marks, or for sums not less than the nearest equivalent in round figures of other money to one hundred dollars in Canadian currency; and provided further that certificates of debenture stock, transferable on a register only, may be issued for such amounts in Canadian currency, sterling, or other money, as the directors may determine.

There is a tendency in these days to place our securities in foreign markets; and in Berlin they would naturally prefer to have these securities expressed in the currency of Germany and in Paris in the French currency. This is simply to allow the company to issue bonds expressed in the security of the country in which they are sold. I propose also to strike out the last paragraph, namely:

And provided further that certificates of debenture stock, transferable on a register only, may be issued for such amounts in Canadian currency, sterling, or other money, as the directors may determine.

That might lead to some confusion as the status of debenture stock is not clearly defined in the Companies Act. I have asked the parties interested and they are agreed to strike out that part of the clause. Section 2 will therefore be confined entirely to the purpose of allowing the securities to be expressed in foreign currency. I propose to add, however, these words:

And this provision shall take effect from 1st March, 1908.

There are some transactions of importance now pending in the European markets, and it is desired that, should these transactions be completed before this Bill becomes law, the Bill may have a retroactive effect and date from March 1.

On section 1,

1. It is hereby declared that Part I. of the Companies Act, chapter 79 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, applies and was intended to apply to all companies incorporated under the Companies Act, 1902; and there is hereby added at the end of section 2 of the said chapter the following paragraph:

(c) all companies incorporated under the Companies Act, 1902.

Mr. FIELDING. The Companies' Act, in the revised statutes, appears to be open to the interpretation that it may not apply to companies previously incorporated under the similar Act. That was not the intention, and the Department of Justice asked that this clause be inserted to make it clear that the Act applies not only to companies hereafter incorporated but the companies incorporated under the corresponding Act in past years.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It does not purport to correct the revised statutes in respect of all companies previously incorporated but in respect of all companies incorporated under the Companies' Act, 1902. Those incorporated before that were sufficiently provided for.

Mr. FIELDING. I would imagine so. That is the view of the Department of Justice.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I would suggest that my hon. friend the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) should, on the first opportunity, suggest to the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the old country the advisability of legalizing in that country the system of money as represented by dollars and cents. I do not suggest that Great Britain should wipe out pounds, shillings and pence but that it should legalize dollars and cents, and allow its people to keep their accounts in whatever system they preferred. That might interfere with the profits of the banks and the exchange of money, but surely in this civilized age some effort should be made to unify the coinage and the system of keeping accounts as between America and Europe. If Great Britain would legalize the dollars and cents, without doing away with the pounds, shillings and pence, there would be a struggle between the two systems and the fittest would survive.

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid my hon. friend has not taken sufficiently into account the strong conservatism of the English people in matters of that sort. However I shall not fail to bear his suggestion in mind.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. They are not quite so conservative as we think. They are keeping accounts in their navy in the decimal system, and the leadership of the movement for the adoption of that system is in England.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend should not lose sight of his movement for reform in spelling.

On section 2,

Subsection 1 of section 69 of the said chapter is hereby amended by adding at the end of paragraph (c) thereof the following words:

Provided that such bonds, debentures or other securities may be for sums not less than twenty pounds sterling, five hundred francs, or four hundred marks, or for sums not less than the nearest equivalent in round figures of other money to one hundred dollars in Canadian currency; and provided further that certificates of debenture stock, transferable on a register only, may be issued for such amounts in Canadian currency, sterling, or other money, as the directors may determine.

Mr. FIELDING. I move that the words at the end of the section beginning with the words 'and provided' be struck out. And also that the following be added: 'and this provision shall take effect as from the 1st day of March, 1908.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose that the expression 'francs' and 'marks' are sufficiently intelligible expressions in the Canadian statutes. There might be some question hereafter as to their meaning.

Mr. FIELDING. We know that what is intended is the currency of Germany and France. The legal gentlemen who have asked for this amendment must have considered that point.

On section 3,

Section 76 of the said chapter is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:

76. The company may, by by-law, increase to not more than fifteen, or decrease to not less than three, the number of its directors, or may change the company's chief place of business in Canada: provided that no by-law for either of the said purposes shall be valid or acted upon unless it is approved by a vote represented by the shareholders present at a special general meeting duly called for considering the by-law; nor until a copy of such by-law, certified under the seal of the company, has been deposited in the Department of the Secretary of State and published in the 'Canada Gazette.'

Mr. FIELDING. The words 'nor until a copy of such by-law, certified under the seal of the company, has been deposited in the Department of the Secretary of State and has been published in the 'Canada Gazette,' appear to have been omitted in the existing statutes, and we desire to insert them. The effect is that bylaws must be filed with the Secretary of State before they become valid.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In this section 76 the words 'has been deposited in the Department of the Secretary of State and' seem to have been omitted in this revised statute.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the substance of the difference between the two. The intention was to require the by-laws to be filed with the Secretary of State.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is one point which, no doubt, has been considered. If any such by-law has been passed in the interval, apparently it is not required to be deposited in the Department of the Secretary of State.

Mr. FIELDING. That, I suppose, would be the result, and I take it that my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) suggests that this should be made retroactive.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It may be that the point would have no practical application. I do not know about that.

Mr. FIELDING. This is intended to affect the general Act. If it did not affect past cases, it should affect the future.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is here is quite proper, but what I was——

Mr. FIELDING. The Secretary of State, who had the Bill in charge, may possibly not have thought of this point. The parties interested are so anxious to have the Bill enacted at an early date that, unless the objection is a strong one, I would prefer that the Bill be proceeded with.

Bill, as amended, reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It might be well to call the attention of the Secretary of State to the point I have just mentioned. It is required that these by-laws be published in the 'Canada Gazette,' and, by consulting the files of the 'Gazette,' he could ascertain whether there are any such by-laws, and provision might be made perhaps without the passing of an additional statute to have them deposited.

Mr. FIELDING. I will call his attention to it.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read third time and passed.

GOLD AND SILVER MARKING ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 123) to amend the Gold and Silver Marking Act.—Mr. Fisher—and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). This Bill was passed two years ago, and last year its coming into operation was postponed until March 13th instant. In the early part of March representations of the most earnest character were made to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that the Act would create hardships to the trade if amendments were not made. The Minister of Finance had requested the Department of Agriculture, which has charge of the Trade Marks and Designs Act, to take charge of this Act. The requests of those interested in the gold and silver trade were examined and were referred to the Department of Justice to consider the effect of the statute. The officer of the Department of Justice to whom they were referred said that they were so complicated and so numerous that it would be best to repeal the old Act and introduce a new one. This came to us within a day or two of the coming into force of the Act. We felt that we had not time or opportunity to discuss the matter and lay the propositions before the several interests concerned, and so we suggested that it would be better to postpone the coming into operation of the Act until the matter could be gone into thoroughly and the various interests allowed an opportunity to present their views before the new Act should be drawn up. A period of a year was taken to given ample opportunity, but, if the session is at all prolonged, I hope the matter will be taken up, and it is possible that, before the end of the session, the views of the several interests may be harmonized, so that we may introduce another Bill this year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems a rather long delay in the operation of a statute. When was it passed?

Mr. FISHER. In the session of 1906-7. The first Act was arranged to come into force on July 1, 1907. Then, by Act passed in the session of 1907, it was postponed to March 13th instant.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I understood that an arrangement had been made among the manufacturers, the wholesale men and the retailers, and that they had agreed upon a Bill to be passed this session.

Mr. FISHER. That representation was made to us within a few days of the time when the Act was to come into force. But almost at the same time we received protests against the new proposition. We had not time to consider these protests or to give the different interests an opportunity of presenting their views. It would also seem rather unusual, if not extraordinary, that so many changes would be asked for in an Act which had never been in operation, and consequently we could hardly see how it would work. Yet the very interests which asked originally for the passage of this law two years ago, came to us at the last moment before the Act came into operation, asking for considerable and numerous changes in it.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I was told that all parties interested and all sections of the trade were represented at a meeting, and they had agreed upon a measure of which every part had been settled. But rather than have the Bill come into force, I prefer letting it stand over.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Uriah Wilson) has stated the case correctly. But when the operation of this Act was put off until the 13th of March this year, it was for the purpose of giving those interested an opportunity of getting together and drafting some measure that would be acceptable to all. Unfortunately many of those interested were in the old country during the summer and fall, and it was late before they could get together. They had twenty-four meetings in all, and finally drafted a measure that they thought would be acceptable; but as it was rather intricate, they thought it advisable to lay it over for further consideration.

On section 2,

Mr. LENNOX. As a matter of fact the last part of that section is not correct, because the Act has gone into operation on the 13th of this month.

Mr. FISHER. It is true those words are not absolutely accurate, and are unnecessary. But as the Bill had passed the Senate and it was desirable that it should go into force as soon as possible, I thought it hardly worth the while to amend it and send it back to the Senate.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPREME COURT ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 121) to amend the Supreme Court Act—Mr. Aylesworth—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Any explanation of this?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I explained on the first reading of this Bill when introducing change in the order of hearing appeals, and was made on the suggestion of the chief justice of the court as being desired by the bar of the province of Quebec. Under the present arrangement the sittings almost always conflict with the engagements of legal gentlemen from that province in their own courts of appeal and other tribunals. This new arrangement it is hoped will obviate that difficulty, and by lessening inconvenience to counsel cheapen the cost of litigation to their clients.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. At the present time, I understand, the cases from the different provinces are divided in a somewhat similar manner, although the division is not so elaborate as that now proposed. Is it the intention of this Act to fix the order of hearing just as it is set down here, that is, that part No. 1 shall always be heard before part No. 2, No. 2 before No. 3, No. 3 before No. 4, and No. 4 before No. 5?

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. It is the intention, the minister tells me, that each sitting shall be held as laid down here, and not be changeable as the practice is now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Have the bars of the provinces been consulted on the subject?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am not aware that the bars of the other provinces have been consulted. The change in the first place is in increasing the number of the divisions of the list from three to five parts. That is plainly an improvement and will be for the convenience of everybody, because it will separate election appeals from all ordinary appeals. This arrangement will also divide into separate lists the appeals which heretofore have been grouped together as coming from the portion of the Dominion west of the province of Quebec, and be a convenience to the bar both of Ontario and of the western provinces, enabling gentlemen from the western provinces to know more accurately when their particular cases will be reached than if they were mingled with the cases from the province of Ontario proper. With regard to the order in which the appeals are to be heard, under the present system there was a special order made for the October sittings, under which the maritime cases were placed last, whereas they were the first at each of the other two sittings of the court. What exactly was the reason for that I have never understood, but it is said that the reason, whatever it was does not now exist, and that it would be more convenient that the same order should obtain for each of these parts at each sitting of the court, that is, the order here provided, by which the election cases are first, the cases from the far west next, then the cases from the maritime provinces, and last of all the cases from Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That arrangement may be perfectly convenient for the bars of the respective provinces; but in Nova Scotia, with which I am most familiar, I think the autumn circuits were arranged some years ago with a view to the time at which appeals were usually heard by the Supreme Court of Canada. If it is not urgently required to pass this Bill at once, it might be worth while to consult with the bars of the different provinces and find whether there is any substantial objection to that arrangement or whether some more convenient arrangement might be made. I am not suggesting that there is any inconvenience.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. As the minister has said, the request for this legislation comes from the chief justice of the court, who states that the change in the October list was made at the request of the maritime bar. Then he goes on to say that the registrar informs him that the reason for the change with respect to the maritime list no longer applies. It is quite evident from the file that the chief justice has investigated the matter, and he reports to the minister that no inconvenience will be caused, but rather the convenience of all interested would be served by this legislation.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Mr. FIELDING. We have approached very nearly the beginning of a new fiscal year, and it is desirable that some portion of the supplies necessary for the public service for the coming year should be made available as early as possible. In due course the Supply Bill will be passed ; but in the meantime, were no special vote taken, there might be some embarrassment of the public service. I have had a conversation with hon. gentlemen opposite, and an understanding has been reached to pass a portion of the Supply pro forma now. What I propose, therefore, is that the items on which the committee have already passed shall go into a Supply Bill, and that as respects the balance we shall take a vote of one-eighth or twelve and a half per cent. I imagine that this will not cause any discussion of any particular item, because on each of these items there will be ample opportunity for discussion later.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This is similar to the understanding we have always had, that the discussion on the various items shall be quite as free as it would be if no portion of them had been voted.

Mr. FIELDING. Exactly. I would suggest that we need not detain the House by going into the details, but that one-eighth of each item shall be reported, and that the clerks shall make the necessary calculations.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it proper, as a matter of procedure, to take one-eighth of the whole estimate without regard to the resolution for each particular department ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. The journals of the House will contain the record that the committee have passed one-eighth, and the clerks will have to make the calculations. I do not know whether the House would desire to wait until the calculations are made.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What I understand from the Minister of Finance is this. Certain items have already been reported in full, and he proposes to embody these in a Supply Bill ; and as to the remainder, the record will be that the House in Committee of Supply has passed one-eighth of each individual item, and these individual items shall be set out to the extent of one-eighth, just as if we had taken the necessary time to go over them.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, that is exactly correct.

Resolution reported.

House concurred in the resolution.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING. I think we may well leave the remaining stages until tomorrow.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Mr. FIELDING. It is desired to take up the supplementary estimates for the current year which is about to expire.

Department of Agriculture—seed branch—further amount required to encourage the production and use of superior seeds of farm crops and for the enforcement of the Seed Control Act, $15,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is due to two things; one is the large edition of the 'Bulletin on Farm Weeds' which has been so much in demand that I have decided to order 10,000 more copies, and the other is the work we have had to do in the office in consequence of the much larger demand by farmers for the testing of seeds owing to their fear that their seeds this year, not only in the west, but in other portions of Canada, may not have the vitality which they would wish them to have and also the testing of the seed purchased in connection with the seed distribution in the Northwest. There has been a demand for the book on farm weeds all over the world, and as the book costs almost a dollar a copy this addition 10,000 copies will absorb most of this vote.

Mr. J. D. REID. How are they distributed?

Mr. FISHER. A copy was sent to every member of the House and Senate. Copies were sent to the Departments of Agriculture of the provinces and to all public libraries. A considerable number have been sent abroad to Departments of Agriculture and educational institutions in other countries. Copies have been sent to all public schools in Canada that have libraries and there has been a small distribution to applicants whose business or position seemed to indicate that they had an interest in that class of information.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has the minister not found that the largest proportion of the application for examination or testing of seeds come from the wholesale men and a very small proportion from farmers?

Mr. FISHER. I would not say a small proportion in numbers; a much larger number come from the farmers than from the seedsmen. Still the wholesale men send a great many. The large wholesale seedsmen in Canada have established seed-testing laboratories in their own warehouses, but the smaller ones send in their samples to us.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Is any part of this vote for the enforcement of the Seed Act, for the payment of inspectors who visit warehouses, &c.?

Mr. FISHER. No, we have not added to that this year.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How many convictions have been made as a result of the inspection of seed in the different parts of the country?

Mr. FISHER. I could not give that offhand.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Has the minister considered the advisability of being a little more lenient with regard to what is known as rib grass or plantain in clover seed? The tendency of the Seed Inspection Act has been to create a great scarcity of clover seed. Many farmers have pastured their lands rather than cut them for seed. They fear not being able to find a sale, after the seed is grown owing to the strictness of the measure the hon. gentleman has enforced. Has the department taken into consideration the advisability of allowing rather a larger percentage of what is known as plantain or rib grass in ordinary red clover seed?

Mr. FISHER. I would hesitate a good deal before I would in any way weaken the provision of seed control. Our dealers who wish to buy good seed for the farmers have found that they can live up to the provisions of the Act; and if any dealer does not want to buy good seed for the farmers, I would be disposed to try and make him do so.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. That does not answer the question. Plantain or rib grass is a harmless weed. In Great Britain it is used for sheep pasturage, and I think the minister should make some distinction between that and such noxious seeds as mustard and rag weed. But the sheep are very fond of plantain and it is considered a good fodder plant. After a season such as we have got through, clover seed is almost unattainable. The supply is not at all adequate in the section of country I come from, and the result is that it sells at $12 to $15 a bushel where three or four years ago it sold at $5 to $7 a bushel. The hon. minister will understand that our farmers are not able to seed as much land under these conditions, and until the supply is cheaper he should seriously consider the amending of that part of the law which deals specially with rib grass. I do not refer to the other weeds because the law cannot be too stringent with regard to bad weeds, but with regard to plantain or rib grass the department should be a little more lax.

Mr. FISHER. I quite agree that there is a great difference as regards obnoxiousness among different weeds. I shall look into the matter. Last year was a very dry year and a very short crop of clover, and I appreciate the situation in that respect.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice in the newspapers that a consignment of 300,000 bushels of oats has reached Port Arthur. Were any tests made of these oats? I understand they came from England and Scotland.

Mr. FISHER. All the oats purchased have been tested. We obtained the services of experts and had these oats tested before they were shipped. I was shown some samples out of that consignment, taken after it had arrived, and they were very fine samples of oats. They are slightly different in character from the oats of Ontario and the Northwest. They are grown in a moister climate and are a little plumper. They are almost exactly the character of the oats grown in Prince Edward Island and other parts of the maritime provinces. My seed commissioner said before the Committee on Agriculture that oats of that character were very good to introduce for seed in the Northwest. While the first year's crop might not be quite so large, the infusion of new grain would benefit the crops in succeeding years to a great extent.

Mr. SPROULE. Were they recleaned on arrival?

Mr. FISHER. They were found so clean that that was not necessary. They were thoroughly cleaned in England.

Mr. SPROULE. No danger of noxious weeds in them?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. What grades of oats were they?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot tell the variety.

Mr. SPROULE. Can you give information as to what this will cost the farmers laid down in the Northwest?

Mr. FISHER. I could not off hand.

Mr. J. D. REID. As regards the distribution of this book, I think one should be placed in the hands of the clerk of every municipality. In my section, the school trustees have often asked for these books, and I think that in such cases the department should supply them, so that the farmers might meet together in the evening in the schoolhouse and discuss matters of that kind. I do not think the department should bind itself down to a hard and fast rule of only giving the books to public libraries.

Mr. FISHER. We do not wish to hinder the right people getting the book. We make the rule as to libraries because many school teachers apply for the book and then look upon it as their own personal property. But our object is to make it the property of the school. Every book sent to a school has pasted in it 'Presented by the Department of Agriculture to such and such a school.' The teachers look upon these books as their own and carry them away with them. I do not know about sending to the secretaries of municipalities. There are about 8,000 municipalities in the Dominion, and if I were sending to all these, I should have to ask for another ten thousand or so.

Mr. SPROULE. Is any provision made for sending it to libraries not connected with a school? In many villages there are independent libraries.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, they are sent to all these.

Mr. J. D. REID. It is in these municipalities that they have the farmers' institute. Everywhere the younger farmers are anxious to discuss matters and secure information.

Mr. FISHER. I think that every farmers' organization has been furnished with a copy.

Mr. J. D. REID. So long as there is a book in the municipality, even in a school, it will do good. It can be borrowed to be used for discussions in the farmers' institute.

Mr. FISHER. That is what we aimed at.

Mr. SPROULE. Do I understand that the minister sent one to each school, or only to those schools which had libraries?

Mr. FISHER. We asked inspectors all over the country to supply the names of schools who have a library or any means of keeping the book properly. We have not insisted on a regular library, but we wanted to send the books only to places where they could be kept and would be of use. It is distinctly understood that the book is the property of the school and not of the teacher. That is the only point that we have been rather insistent upon. I have had at least a thousand applications from individual teachers saying that they had seen the book and wished a copy for their personal use. Of course, I would give it to all if I could, but the distribution had to be limited.

Mr. SPROULE. I am sure that every school will find it useful and there is hardly any school, I apprehend, but would take proper care of such a work.

Mr. STAPLES. I think the suggestion of the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) that a copy of this book should be laid upon the table of every municipal council is an excellent one, for the municipal council is the body that has in charge the enforcement of the noxious weeds laws everywhere.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. FISHER. That is a very good suggestion and one that I had not thought of. I will see if it can be managed. I may come to the House and ask for means to provide a new edition.

Mr. STAPLES. We do not want to encourage expenditure beyond what is absolutely needed, but I think that the circulation of the book would work out to better advantage if placed with the municipalities than in any other way.

Mr. J. D. REID. Nobody objects to expenditure that will be of real benefit to the farmers.

Mr. BARR. This is a matter of importance to the farmers, and one that I know they will appreciate. I know a number of libraries where this book is kept and is highly valued. I think if the minister came back for money for so useful a purpose as further distribution of this work he would find that the House would raise no objection. The farming community are our most important class, and I do not think that they get more than their just due.

Mr. BLAIN. Do I understand the minister to say that the Department of Agriculture is giving a thorough inspection to all the grain being distributed for seed in western Canada? I hope the hon. gentleman is taking full responsibility. I am sure that the House will be ready to vote any money necessary to have this seed grain thoroughly inspected.

Mr. FISHER. The Department of Agriculture is inspecting this grain for purity and vitality, but not grading it under the inspection law.

Mr. BLAIN. Why not?

Mr. FISHER. Because the Trade and Commerce Department has control of that.

Mr. BLAIN. Are they doing the work?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, all the grain is inspected and graded by the officers of the Trade and Commerce Department under Mr. Horne, who is chief inspector at Winnipeg. That is not the business of the Department of Agriculture, and we do not interfere with the officers whose business it is.

Quarantine—further amount required for salaries and contingencies of organized districts, and public health in other districts, $35,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is in addition to $100,000 which I asked for the current year. However, this year, we have had to make special provision against the introduction of the bubonic plague into our country by the Pacific coast or across the American line. Unfortunately, some cases of the bubonic plague appeared in San Francisco, and, if I remember well, one in Seattle. We had to put on a large number of guards so as to carry on a more careful inspection. This cost a very considerable amount. Also we made a little miscalculation. We failed to remember that the fiscal year began in April instead of July, and the consequence was that we had, in the first three months of the fiscal year, all the heavy expenditures connected with the Grosse Isle station, which opens the middle of April. Had the fiscal year remained unchanged, this expense would have come out of the appropriation of the year before. The vote of that year lapsed, not being needed. We are asking now practically, for a revote of the amount.

Mr. SPROULE. Is any portion of this money spent in quarantine against the diseases of animals?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Department of Justice—to provide salary of G. Turcotte, private secretary to the Solicitor General, as second-class clerk from October 21, 1907, to March 31, 1908, at $1,300 per annum, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $580.10.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the meaning of 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act'?

Mr. BUREAU. The law requires clerks to pass a certain examination before they are admitted. It is generally conceded that a private secretary is left to the choice of the minister himself, and if the person selected has not passed his examination this provision is put in to relieve him from that necessity.

Mr. HAGGART. Is this for another second-class clerk ?

Mr. BUREAU. When the ex-solicitor general went to the Post Office Department his private secretary went with him. That left a vacancy in the office of the solicitor general, and this man is taking the place.

Exchequer Court of Canada—to provide salary of Romeo Roy as temporary messenger at $500 per annum, from January 16, 1908, to March 31, 1908, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $104.82.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This man has taken the place of the former messenger who was removed to another department. He has not yet passed the Civil Service examination, and is receiving a smaller amount of pay than the former messenger. The former messenger was getting $700, while this man begins at a lower figure.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not necessary for this man to pass the preliminary examination ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. He has to pass the examination, certainly, before his appointmetn is made permanent. But in the meantime he has been taken on with the expectation that he will pass the examination in November next.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood a couple of years ago that we were to abandon this habit of making appointments notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This man was selected by the registrar of the court out of several applicants, because it was almost essential that there should be some one in the department besides the registrar himself who had an acquaintance with the French language, and a man possessing an acquaintance with that language is able to assist the registrar in certain kinds of work. Besides, there is occasionally some typewriting to be done, and this man was able to do that work. For these reasons he was selected, although he has not yet passed the examination, but is, I am told, quite competent to do so. I am sure that in every respect this man is not only a capable messenger but has superior qualifications for that position.

Mr. SPROULE. My objection is this, that some time ago we provided for doing away with a system that was declared to be an improper one, namely, the system of keeping on hand a large number of temporary clerks who had not passed the examination. We were promised that in the future this habit would no longer be indulged in, but now it appears we are going back to the system which we discarded. The Minister of Justice says that this man was capable and eligible particularly because he was able to speak French. But were there no other young Frenchmen available who had passed the examination ? If there were, then the minister must be doing an injustice to them, inasmuch as he did not take one of those men who was eligible as having passed the examination. The other objection is this, that we voted, I understand, a sum of money for a clerk who filled this office before, and that money is still available. Why then do we vote an additional amount here? I do not imagine that this money already voted would apply to any other individual but the clerk who occupied the position which was vacated.

Mr. BUREAU. The difficulty with regard to a private secretary is this : We cannot appoint an officer by order in council unless he has passed the Civil Service examination, and consequently the man who has vacated the place being appointed by order in council, his successor would have to hold the same status in order to draw the salary. The previous official had complied with the requirements of the law and was apointed by the Governor in Council.

Mr. SPROULE. Then will that item lapse ?

Mr. BUREAU. Not necessarily. This is to allow the official who has stepped into the shoes of one who has left the privilege of drawing a salary by putting him in the same status as the man who has left. In the case of the Solicitor General's office, the private secretary of the former Solicitor General went with him to the Post Office Department, and a balance of the salary was left there which we wish to pay to his successor. The first private secretary was appointed by order in council and was drawing this salary by virtue of his appointment to the Solicitor General's department.

Mr. SPROULE. This is not for a private secretary, but for a temporary messenger.

Mr. BUREAU. But it is the same case exactly. The private secretary of the Solicitor General has not been able to draw any salary until the House consented, as it has just done.

Mr. SPROULE. Who is now drawing the salary that was voted?

Mr. BUREAU. Nobody. The money remains unexpended.

Mr. HAGGART. My objection is this, that you have at your disposal a vote for a messenger, and you are now asking for another vote for another messenger; so that instead of transferring the vote which was formerly taken, you have a double vote. You ought to have struck out the former vote when you got this.

Mr. BUREAU. It was practically stricken out the moment the messenger, who passed the civil service examination, left.

Mr. FIELDING. The money voted for an officer who was qualified under the Civil Service Act could not be applied to this man, who has not a certificate.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the name of the former messenger?

Mr. BUREAU. Labelle.

Mr. LENNOX. Was he qualified?

Mr. BUREAU. I presume he was, because he was a messenger there for a number of years.

Mr. OWEN. I notice that the expenses of this department are increasing very fast. I would like some information about an item in the Auditor General's Report of $150 for a uniform for the registrar of the Supreme Court, and I would like to know what salary is paid to the registrar.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The item to which the hon. gentleman has called attention is one that attracted my notice on the first occasion that I opened the Auditor General's Report. It was news to me, and I made inquiries at once. I ascertained from the Department of the Auditor General that this particular disbursement had been expressly authorized by my predecessor in the department, and that the view on which he acted was that as the officials of this House, or some of them, were supplied with uniforms which they were required by the rules or the usages of the House to wear, at public expense, it was proper that the registrar of the Supreme Court should be put in the same position. That is the whole explanation I have to give. It was something that struck me as being unusual, to say the least of it, and something that I thought called for explanation. The salary of the registrar is $4,000.

Mr. OWEN. I notice another item regarding the registrar: Travelling expenses to Montreal and Blue Sea Lake. I would like to know what called the registrar to Blue Sea lake at the expense of this country.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am afraid I am not able, without inquiry, to give any explanation of the items of travelling expenses of the registrar of the Supreme Court. Of course, it must be very seldom that that official requires to travel, because his duties are at Ottawa.

Mr. OWEN. What I would like to know is whether he was at Blue Sea lake on business for the department. I am told he had a summer resort there, and I would like to know if this government is paying his expenses to and from Blue Sea lake when he sees fit to visit his summer resort.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I will have the explanation when the item comes before the House again.

Mr. OWEN. I would like the minister to give us a short description of that uniform that cost $150.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Perhaps the fullest description might be obtained from the tradesman who furnished it.

Additional amount required for contingencies, including printing and binding Exchequer Court reports, $4,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Why this extra amount?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This is an unusual amount and the explanation is that there were some unusual and comparatively heavy expenditures on the part of the registrar of the court during the year. A sitting of the court was held in Dawson and the judge was so unwell that it necessitated a member of his family accompanying him and an arrangement was made by which his son who is a practising barrister in the city went with the judge in an official capacity. There were also sittings of the court in Charlottetown and Halifax and the registrar tells me that these caused a few hundred dollars more expense than he anticipated when preparing his estimates. Then there was additional expenditure in the cost of shorthand writing which is a disbursement in the first instance and which is paid for out of this vote, but is not an expense to the country because it is charged back upon the litigants. Provision had also to be made for the binding and printing of a volume of the court reports which it was not anticipated would have fallen within the current year.

Dominion Police—to provide gratuity to retired constable, M. J. Kelly, $483.24.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Kelly was on the force between 7 and 8 years. This winter he was seized with 'locomotor ataxia' and he had to resign. In such circumstances it is customary to pay a gratuity to the retiring officer at the rate of one month's pay for each year's service.

Penitentiaries—additional amount required—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Kingston.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $15,000 | |
| St. Vincent de Paul.. .. .. | 2,000 | |
| Dorchester.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 13,000 | |
| British Columbia.. .. .. .. .. | 10,000 | |
| Alberta.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 10,000 | |
| | | $50,000 |

Mr. BUREAU. This amount is made up as follows: Kingston, increased cost of maintenance of convicts owing to increase in cost of supplies and decrease in farm products $3,500; steel for cell barriers, $5,000; increase in working expenses owing to increased cost of coal, $600; increase in cost of maintenance of building on account of repairs of roofs and alterations of windows of south wing, $2,000; retiring allowance to officers, $2,100; St. Vincent de Paul; increase in working expenses owing to increase in cost of coal, $600; steel for cell barrier doors, &c., $1,400; Dorchester, increased cost of maintenance of convicts owing to increased cost of supplies and decrease in farm products, $1,000; increase in working expenses, $1,400; increase in cost of maintenance of buildings on account of new roof in main building to replace roof 23 years old and blown off in a storm, $1,700; machinery for workshops, $600; steam heating supplies, shafting, cement, glass, iron, lumber, and other material for new shops, $4,500; payment of accounts held over from previous year, $3,000. British Columbia, payment of statutory gratuity to officers on retirement, Niven, $1,033.73; McKee, $1,577.34; White, $1,529.82; Atkins, $1,666.66; Bourke, $279.23; Burr, $1,254.44. The balance was for machinery for new shops which had been erected to replace wooden structures which were the first erected in British Columbia. Alberta: increase in number of guards necessitated by increased number of convicts on account of increase in population, two extra guards at $700 each; increased cost of maintenance of convicts (increase from 24 to 76 the present number) $3,000; increase in working expenses on account of larger number of lights required $650; purchase of machinery, $3,400; materials for new building, $1,700.

Mr. SPROULE. Were these employees superannuated, or dismissed or what?

Mr. BUREAU. They resigned and under the statute they are paid half a month's pay for the first five years and one month's pay for each subsequent year of service.

Mr. SPROULE. Did they voluntarily retire or were they dismissed on account of dereliction of duty?

Mr. BUREAU. In each case the retirement was on account of physical inability on the part of the officer.

Mr. SPROULE. How long did they remain there under physical disability? It would not overtake the whole of them all of a sudden?

Mr. BUREAU. Warden White was ill about seven months before he resigned and died a month after his resignation. Mr. Niven, after examination by a physician, was declared to be unfit for further service and resigned. Mr. McKee resigned on account of age; he was between 64 and 65. Mr. Atkins resigned after an examination by a physician and under his advice. Mr. Bourke retired on account of age; he was 62. Mr. Burr was ill 6 or 7 months before he tendered his resignation.

Mr. SPROULE. Do none of them draw pensions on retirement on account of age?

Mr. BUREAU. No, they are paid the gratuity that is provided by the statute except in the case of Mr. Bourke, who was appointed deputy warden, and received a gratuity for the time he served before appointment. He was deputy warden for 15 years, and draws a superannuation of $450 a year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How was it that you estimated for 24 convicts and now have 76? Was the sudden outbreak of crime due to the government?

Mr. BUREAU. Previous to August 1906, convicts who were sentenced to penitentiary in the Northwest, were sent to Stony Mountain, but since that date they have been sent over to Edmonton, to the Alberta penitentiary.

Mr. BLAIN. At page M—26 of the Auditor General's Report I find an item:

Campbell Brothers, Kingston, mitts, 86 pairs at $1; Persian lamb caps, three at $12; Persian lamb collars, cuffs and trimmings, two sets at $36 each, four sets at $35, a total of $334.

Are these for the convicts?

Mr. BUREAU. They are officers' uniforms. It is customary to pay for them.

Mr. BLAIN. Are they bought on tender?

Mr. BUREAU. They are bought after a circular has been sent to dealers in the particular lines.

Mr. BLAIN. To receive a circular the dealer would have to be on the government's lists ?

Mr. BUREAU. I did not qualify it, I only stated how it was done.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it the old story of purchase from the political friends of the government ?

Mr. BARR. Do they require the earmark ?

Mr. BUREAU. Oh they must belong to the faith, of course ; we cannot have heathens as contractors.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose a large supply house in Kingston not belonging to the faith would not receive a circular ?

Mr. BUREAU. There is no reason why they should not receive a circular.

Mr. BLAIN. I understood the qualification was that they must belong to the faith, I suppose that is the political faith.

Mr. BUREAU. I made no qualification of the faith.

Mr. BLAIN. I observe here also.

Campbell Milling Company, Toronto Junction, flour 'strong baker's,' 408½ barrels at $3.84, $1,568.64.

Is this the company of which Senator Campbell is president and were these goods supplied after tender ?

Mr. BUREAU. I do not know who are the members of the company, the contract was awarded after tenders were called by public notice in the newspapers. This was given after what my hon. friend from Peel would call public competition.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice Higham & Ramsay, Stonewall, 1,030 bags of flour at $1.80. Was this supplied after public tender?

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed yes, by public advertisement in the newspapers.

Mr. BLAIN. Do the newspapers that get these advertisements have to belong to the faith too?

Mr. BUREAU. Generally we publish them in the newspapers supposed to be the most important.

Mr. BLAIN. I have been unable to find any newspaper accounts for advertising except newspapers that religiously support the government. What I want to know is whether you seek out the newspapers having the largest circulation or only those that belong to the fold?

Mr. BUREAU. It would be very difficult to decide which newspaper has the largest circulation, because they all make contradictory claims. But if we advertise in the Liberal newspapers, those must be the papers that reach the majority of people, since the majority are Liberals.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will bring down a list of the newspapers in which he advertised for the supply of flour.

Mr. BUREAU. Yes, I shall bring down that information.

Mr. BENNETT. On page M—17 I find W. C. Edwards & Co., Ottawa, were paid $803.64 for lumber. Were tenders asked for?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes, tenders were asked for from the largest firms in Ottawa and Kingston.

Mr. BENNETT. It seems extraordinary that the supply did not go to a Kingston firm, as there must be a good many lumber yards in that city. It is really too bad to find senators giving their attention to the Department of Justice. It may be expected that members of the Commons will follow their example and see what profit they can make out of this department too. Is the W. C. Edwards of this company Senator Edwards?

Mr. BUREAU. I could not say, but the initials are the same. We had four tenders altogether—from the Ottawa Lumber Company, the W. C. Edwards Company, the Rathburn Lumber Company and the Frontenac Lumber Company of Kingston, and the lowest tenderer got the contract.

Mr. TAYLOR. On M—16 I find that Campbell Bros., of Kingston, supplied 86 pairs of mitts at $1; Persian lamb caps, three at $12; Persian lamb collars, cuffs and trimmings, two sets at $36, four sets at $35. Were tenders called for?

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed that these were bought by specification. We have to give the sizes, and it would not do to call for tenders.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see Caldwell, Boyd & Co., Lanark, were paid for thirty-ounce frieze, 184¼ yards at $1.36; was that supplied by tender?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes, public competition after advertisements in the newspapers.

Mr. TAYLOR. On page M—20, Caldwell, Boyd & Co. were paid $178 for frieze, on page M—23, Boyd, Caldwell & Co. were paid $202 for frieze ; on page M—24, Boyd, Caldwell & Co. were paid $172 for frieze. In this last item the charge was $1.60 per yard and in the others $1.36. On page M—27, Boyd, Caldwell & Co. were paid $490 for blankets. Is Boyd, Caldwell & Co. the same firm as Caldwell, Boyd & Co., and how is it that the one firm got $1.60 a yard and the other $1,36?

Mr. BUREAU. They are the same firm.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why was the price to Boyd, Caldwell & Co. $1.60 and the Caldwell, Boyd & Co. $1.36?

Mr. BUREAU. They must be for different penitentiaries. I am informed by the inspector that we have to pay freight on these goods.

Mr. TAYLOR. Do you pay 24 cents a yard for freight to Manitoba ?

Mr. BUREAU. The inspector informs me that it may be a supply under different contracts. The inspector will inquire into the matter and find out how the discrepancy, if any, arises.

Mr. TAYLOR. And whether this is an incorporated company or a private business concern.

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed that it is an incorporated company.

Mr. TAYLOR. A limited liability company ?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is the Caldwell whose name figures in this company the hon. member for North Lanark ?

Mr. BUREAU. I do not know. This is the first time I have heard about the company.

Mr. BENNETT. Now, I want to call the attention of the Solicitor General (Mr Bureau) to another item, and I call attention to it because of its contemptibility—if I may use that word. Here, at page M—24 of the Auditor General's Report, I find an item :—

Bole Drug Company, Limited, sundry drug supplies, $142.01.

May I ask if that is the firm with which the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) is connected ?

Mr. BUREAU. I suppose it must be, but I have no information on the subject.

Mr. BENNETT. What does the inspector say ? He knows whether the Caldwell in one case is the member for Lanark or not, and whether the Bole in the other case is the member for Winnipeg or not. We will get through these items all the quicker with a 'yes or no' answer.

Mr. BUREAU. The inspector says that there have been changes made in these companies and that he does not know whether these people are interested in them or not.

Mr. BENNETT. I think the public generally will understand the matter. And this is the depth to which we have got. In a city of the size of Winnipeg, where there must be druggists belonging to the Liberal party, when a petty bill of $142 worth of drugs is to be bought, the department must purchase from the company of the member for the city. As to the Caldwell case, I know nothing about it. I have always understood that the member for North Lanark is associated with the company for selling these things, and the inspector knows it or he does not know it.

Mr. BUREAU. I think the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) is mistaken when he says he is well informed about the Winnipeg transaction. The inspector informs me that the drugs are bought by contract and that tenders are publicly called for and the contract given to the lowest tenderer. Even supposing that the hon. member for Winnipeg should happen to be a member of the company that tenders successfully, I do not see that there is any harm in it under these circumstances.

Mr. BENNETT. It is simply a matter of taste. If the member of parliament thinks that he should be associated with the company that gets a contract for $140—well, as I say, it is a matter of taste.

Mr. BUREAU. The hon. gentleman does not truly represent the facts. This is not a private contract, but is a contract given after a public call for tenders, and awarded to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. BARR. What were these drugs for and how were they purchased before ?

Mr. BUREAU. They are general drugs required for the penitentiary hospital.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bureau) does not ask for a tender for a contract of $142.

Mr. TAYLOR. In what papers were the tenders advertised ?

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed that tenders supplies are called for all the penitentiaries and they are advertised simultaneously all over the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. It strikes me as very odd that the lowest tenderer in these cases is a company in which a senator or member of parliament is interested. The Campbell Milling Company is the lowest tenderer for flour. The W. C. Edwards Company is the lowest tenderer for lumber. No doubt, Senator Edwards is a member of that company. The Bole Drug Company is the lowest tenderer in its line, and we know that the Bole in this case is the member for Winnipeg. Then, we have the Caldwell Company, the head of which is a member of this House, also the lowest tenderer in its line. Does it not strike the Solicitor General (Mr. Bureau) as being peculiar ? It may be all right ; I am not saying it is not But the people of this country will regard it as peculiar.

Mr. FIELDING. Would they not regard it as more peculiar if the department, having these low tenders, should pass them over and give the contract to a higher tenderer ?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not suggest that. But is it not remarkable that in all these cases the lowest tenderer should be a company in which a member of this House or a senator is interested ? It would look as if there was something unfair about it. I do not say that there is anything unfair. But it has a peculiar look about it. The inference which many people will draw is that because these companies have a member or senator in their membership, they have some means of knowing just how low to tender.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Does not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) think that the considerations to which he has just called the attention of the committee are rather for the member or senator sending in a tender, or for this House, if this House thinks the law in that respect should be amended ? We have declared upon the face of our legislation that there is no objection to a contract being entered into by a member of this House or a senator with the government of Canada provided that the only interest which that senator or member has is in his capacity as a shareholder in an incorporated company. That is the law of the land, and has been for years, and that being so, every member and every senator knows that the company in which he is a shareholder is in no way precluded from having a contract with the government of the country. As long as the law so stands, it is impossible for any department to do otherwise than to follow the law and accept tenders for the public service from parties who are members of incorporated companies.

Mr. HENDERSON. I believe that the Minister of Justice is correct in law, in fact I have understod in recent years that that is the law. A man may convert his business into a joint stock company in order that he may deal with the government, that no doubt has frequently been done. But what I draw attention to—because it is in the interest of this department and of people tendering—is that there should be some explanation given how it is that in every instance we have brought before us there chances to be in the list of tenderers —I will say chances—there chances to be a firm which has associated with it the name of a senator or a member of parliament. It seems to me that the country will draw the inference that there is something, I might say that is not quite square, in the transaction. That would be the inference if it only occurred in one case, but where it occurs in case ofter case, certainly there is some suspicion.

Mr. FIELDING. Any wrong could only occur through gross misconduct on the part of the official of the department and of the party tendering. Does the hon. gentleman think there is sufficient ground to suggest anything of the sort in this case ? Does he imagine that Senator Edwards, for the sake of a few dollars in that lumber contract, could be a party to a conspiracy of that nature ? Does he think that Senator Archie Campbell—though he may have differed with that gentleman when he was a member of this House—has he so low an opinion of him as to suppose that for the sake of a few paltry dollars he would be a party to a conspiracy of that nature ? He does'nt believe it, his own good sense would tell him at once that these inferences are very unfair and unjust. As long as the law remains what it is, you cannot preclude a company of which a senator or a member of parliament is a shareholder from tendering, and if the tender is sent in in good faith and the contract is taken in a fair way, why should the hon. gentleman rush to the conclusion that there must be something wrong in it ?

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman is quite right, but we want to have it on the table of the House, so that every member may see it, the tenders for these different articles. If we saw for ourselves that these contracts were given to the lowest tenderers there would be nothing to criticise. I ask him to put those tenders on the table of the House so that we can all see them.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not for a moment insinuate that there was any collusion between these men. I am not charging Senator Edwards with any wrong-doing, or charging the member for North Lanark (Mr. Caldwell) or the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) with any wrong-doing. But I remark that in almost every case there is a coincidence, something we cannot explain, though it may be accounted for in some way or other. Now is it not possible that only a few of these men were notified that tenders were wanted, so that they would have an opportunity of tendering ? I drew attention to the fact of this peculiar coincidence, hoping that the Solicitor General might possibly explain the circumstances and remove suspicion from those gentlemen, for whom I have the greatest respect. I threw out the idea hoping he might explain it away, and if any wrong impression is likely to go abroad on account of the peculiar coincidence, I think it is the place of the Solicitor General to give an explanation and remove the unjust suspicion.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am very sorry that these suspicions should be present in the mind of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), of all gentlemen; because I am speaking, I think, not only my own personal sentiments but the sentiments of every member on this side of the House, when I say that there is no member of this House, certainly no member who sits opposite, for whom we have a more sincere respect than for that hon. gentleman. I cannot undertake to say anything for the other departments of the public service, but so far as the administration of the penitentiaries is concerned, having now had an experience of two years, I think I can speak with authority. I can assure my hon. friend that so far as I am aware, and in my belief, there has not been, in connection with advertising in the Department of Justice for tenders, or acting upon tenders when they have been received, the slightest attention paid to the political complexion of any man who was tendering for furnishing supplies. Within the last few days tenders have been opened in response to advertisements for general supplies for the current year; the tenders were opened by the inspectors. I have never seen one of them. I do not know how many there were, but I should judge, speaking from memory of the list put before me, that there were three or four hundred, for the different lines of supplies. A list is made out of the names of the tenderers and of the amounts, and going through that list which was presented to me by the inspectors as the result of the tendering, the contract has been awarded in every single instance to the lowest tenderer, and I suppose in number to at least a hundred. Except in one instance where I happened to recognize the name of a firm with which I had some acquaintance, there was not one case where I had, or have, the least idea of the political sympathies of the men who were tendering. Now with regard to the case of the companies in which members of parliament or of the Senate are shareholders, in most instances the name of the company carries with it the identification of the member who is interested. Take the case that has been mentioned here, the Edwards Lumber Company. Lumber is wanted for some penitentiary purpose, and there are not many lumbering firms in a position to supply the quantity and description of lumber that is wanted, they might not have the size on hand that is required; and it would be a poor business operation to advertise extensively in the papers and circulars are sent out. I can only say that I am very sorry if the coincidence that in several instances firms or companies in which members of parliament or senators are shareholders have been the lowest tenderers, should have seemed to give hon. gentlemen a cause of suspicion. Is it in any way an unnatural thing that a large concern like the Edwards Lumber Company should be in a position to offer its wares at a lower price than its competitors?

I think a business man would find exactly the same thing, and if the price is lower and the goods are unexceptionable, it would certainly be contrary to the public interest to refuse an offer because the principal shareholder in the concern is a member of another House. The matter is not put in that way now by my hon. friend, but because he finds the name of this company in the returns as having contracts with the government and because in other lines of goods there are other companies, he says this circumstance is suspicious. Answering for myself, I can only say that since I have been in charge of the Department of Justice there has never been a single instance in which I have been spoken to or written to by any tenderer, whether a political friend or an opponent, and the awarding of the contracts has in every instance proceeded on the principle of accepting the lowest tender.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Minister of Justice, with his logical mind, has come to the rescue of the Solicitor General and has advanced a reason, especially in the case of the Edwards Company, and it may be applicable to others, why that firm may have been able to tender at a lower figure than others, that is, on account of the largeness of its business. This is just the point I wanted to bring out. I did not say that the case was suspicious; I said it was curious. I thought it was a peculiar coincidence that these firms in every instance should have been the lowest tenderers. What has been said may tend to remove what might be a suspicion but at any rate some explanation has now been given for what appeared to my mind to be a very peculiar coincidence.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask my hon. friend what the policy of the department is in respect to the opening of these tenders?

Mr. BUREAU. The tenders are always opened by two inspectors, and the extensions are made by them.

Mr. BLAIN. I want to draw my hon. friend's attention to another item—7 dozen of silk handkerchiefs at $12 a dozen. I would like to know whether these are for the prisoners?

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed that these are for the Indian chiefs. The penitentiaries, on the order of the Department of the Interior, make clothing for the Indians. These silk handkerchiefs were to conclude an order which had been given by that department, and the price of the handkerchiefs is charged to the Department of the Interior.

Mr. BLAIN. On page M—60 I notice another item—$7,784.79 for coal supplied by W. G. Craig & Co., of Kingston. Was this after public tender?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes, by public tender advertised in the newspapers.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend, when bringing down the other information, might bring a list of the newspapers in which this advertisement appeared.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Solicitor General if he will kindly lay on the table the tenders which have been received in connection with the supplying of meats, coal, meal and bran for the cattle on the farm of St. Vincent de Paul pentitentiary.

Hon. Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) In what year?

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) In 1907. I refer to the contract given to Mr. Avila Chartrand for the sum of $2,692.

Hon. Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) All right, I do not object to that.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SHUSWAP AND THOMPSON RIVER BOOM COMPANY.

On the order for Third reading of Bill (No. 49) to incorporate the Shuswap and Thompson River Boom Company.—Mr. Duncan Ross.

Mr. GALLIHER moved that the order be discharged and the Bill be referred back to a Committee of the whole.

Mr. COPP. It was understood last night that this Bill should stand for third reading in order that an amendment might be inserted authorizing the government of Canada to take over the works and property of the company at any time it was thought proper.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. LENNOX. I have here an amendment on the lines of the one inserted in the Bill of the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Ship Canal Company.

This amendment reads:

His Majesty, his heirs and successors, may at any time assume and take exclusive possession and control of and property in all the rivers, lakes, streams and waters mentioned and dealt with in this Act and of and in all the improvements, undertakings, works, properties, easements, privileges and rights authorized, or vested in or conferred upon the company by this Act or obtained, constructed or acquired by reason thereof, upon giving notice of intention to do so, and thereupon all the said improvements, undertakings, works, properties, easements, privileges, rights and advantages and all things enjoyed by the company in connection therewith shall become, and thenceforward shall be vested in His Majesty, his heirs and successors; and by way of compensation His Majesty shall pay to the company the value of the improvements actually made and of the works and tangible property of the company of which possession is so taken—such values to be fixed by three valuators, or the majority of them, one valuator to be chosen by His Majesty, another by the company and the third by the two so chosen.

Mr. FIELDING. The criticism might be offered that this would authorize the government to do this not simply as between the company and itself, but as between the government and parliament; it authorizes the government without coming to parliament to take over the works. There should be a provision that this power should not be exercised except after authority had been obtained from parliament to do so. This really becomes an appropriation Bill.

Mr. LENNOX. In the case of the ship canal scheme, which is much larger than this one, we gave them that power.

Mr. FIELDING. I remember in the case of the Quebec Bridge Company we took power to take over the bridge as between the government and the company; the company could not resist us; but we put in a proviso that that right should not be exercised by the government until sufficient authority had been obtained from parliament and it appears to me that the same thing should apply here.

Mr. GALLIHER. I think I can overcome the objection in an amendment which I am about to propose as follows:

His Majesty, his heirs and successors may at any time assume the possession of and the property in the company's works and undertakings, and of and in all the rights, privileges and advantages of the company on giving to the company three months' notice of intention to do so, and thereupon all property in the said works and undertakings, rights, privileges and advantages shall become and thenceforward shall be vested in His Majesty his heirs and successors. And the amount to be paid to the company by way of compensation shall be the value of the works and undertakings actually carried out or in course of completion by the company up to the time of the giving of such notice, together with the value of all tangible property of the company of which possession may be so taken, such value to be decided by arbitrators, one of whom shall be appointed by the Minister of Public Works, and one by the company, and if they do not agree on the award, the judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada shall appoint a third arbitrator.

Mr. LENNOX. I have no objection to that, but it is open to the objection raised by the minister.

Mr. GALLIHER. No, it says.

The amount to be paid shall be.

They cannot do it until they get an appropriation from parliament. I have consulted the Minister of Justice and he says that amendment will be satisfactory.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was not present when the amendment was suggested but I would be glad to be informed of the reasons for it. Personally I am very much opposed to inserting provisions in the case of the incorporation of these minor companies looking towards the acquiring of the property by the Crown. I do not see why it should be done in the case of a company to build booms. If it is done in this case it will be a precedent for other cases and the result will be that the Governor in Council will be authorized without coming to parliament, to take over all companies such as this. I think the clause might well be omitted altogether.

Mr. LENNOX. It could hardly be at this stage of the proceedings as it was agreed yesterday that this should be done. The hon. gentleman will recognize that the government are not bound to take it over and will not do so unless they think it desirable.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This amendment vests in the Governor in Council the power to do this without coming to parliament at all, simply on giving one month's notice to the company; then the property of the company is vested in the Crown and parliament will be obliged to appropriate the money if the Governor in Council takes over the property. I would strongly object to the clause being passed in its present form.

Mr. LENNOX. I understood that the Minister of Finance intended to insert a proviso that the Governor in Council could only do this upon obtaining the authority of parliament. I think it advisable that parliament should be consulted but I also think it very necessary that we should have the privilege of taking the company over if it becomes in the interest of the country to do so.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not offer any opinion as to whether this clause should go or not. My point is that if it is desirable to insert a clause it should be so framed as to establish the right of the government to take possession against the wish of the company. As it is worded this amendment makes this unquestionably an appropriation Act because it says the government shall pay. I would suggest that we should add a provision like that in the Quebec Bridge Company's Act:

Nothing in this Act shall authorize the government, without the consent of parliament previously obtained, to exercise the right to take over the whole undertaking. . . .

Thus you establish the right of the government to take it over in the public interest as against the wish of the company, but parliament must first determine that it shall be taken over.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand that the committee decided that the clause should go in and therefore I do not wish to raise any undue objection.

Mr. FIELDING. I would suggest adding to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Galliher) the following words :

Nothing in this Act shall authorize the exercise, without the consent of parliament previously obtained, of the right to take over the company's works, undertakings and property, as provided in section 16 of this Act.

Amendment agreed to, Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Penitentiaries—additional amount required—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Kingston.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $15,000 | |
| St. Vincent de Paul.. .. .. | 2,000 | |
| Dorchester.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 13,000 | |
| British Columbia.. .. .. .. | 10,000 | |
| Alberta.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 10,000 | |
| | | $50,000 |

Mr. BLAIN. We should have some information regarding the binder twine industry. Is the binder twine sold direct to the farmers and how are the prices fixed ? Or is it in the combine ?

Mr. BUREAU. It is sold direct to the farmers and not to anybody else. The prices are based on the cost of labour and the raw material and it enters into competition with the other factories.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the hon. Solicitor General why the French copy of the circular which is distributed by the government sent among the farmers in connection with the sale of binder twine manufactured in the Kingston penitentiary, is not issued together with the English copy. Last year, we received the French copy about a month after the other. This year, the English copy has been issued on the fourteenth of March.

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) I am informed by the inspector that he cannot say how long elapsed between the publishing of both circulars; but this year the French copy is already in the hands of the printer.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Can the Solicitor General tell me when we may expect the French copy ?

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) It will be distributed within two or three days.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. minister says the binder twine is sold on the basis of cost. Is it the basis of cost for producing it at the penitentiary ?

Mr. BUREAU. The price is based on the cost of raw material plus the cost of labour at the penitentiary.

Mr. J. D. REID. How do these prices compare with the prices at which manufacturers are selling ?

Mr. BUREAU. They are from 1 cent to 2 cents per pound less than the wholesale prices.

Mr. J. D. REID. Sold to the farmer on that basis ?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes, so I am informed.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the minister able to sell the total output each year ?

Mr. BUREAU. No, but what is left over is kept at the penitentiary to be sold next season.

Mr. BLAIN. What was carried over last year ?

Mr. BUREAU. I cannot give the exact figures, but it was in the neighbourhood of 250,000 pounds.

Mr. BLAIN. If the twine is sold for lower prices than are charged by the dealers, I cannot understand why the farmers do not take advantage of the opportunity offered them. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bureau) use the best means of reaching the farmers ?

Mr. BUREAU. There is a difference between the government and the manufacturers in the terms of sale. Those buying twine from the penitentiary have to pay cash, while the manufacturers grant terms. As to the system of advertising, notice is sent to the members of parliament and also to all the farmers' organizations known.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does the government sell to farmers at the same price at which the manufacturer sells to the retail merchant ?

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed that the price charged by the government is less than the price charged by the manufacturer to the wholesale dealer.

Mr. HENDERSON. Two cents less ?

Mr. BUREAU. It varies from 1 cent to 2 cents less.

Mr. J. D. REID. Can the Solicitor General explain, then, why farmers do not take advantage of these prices ? Is he sure they are advised of them ? I have never understood this before. My impression has been, and I am informed by those in the business, that the government are practically in a combine, or have agreed to sell their twine at the same prices that the manufacturers sell at, in fact, they have been selling through some other person. I know that, in cases, they have sold their whole output through another party who charges the same prices as do the manufacturers.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I happen to know something about this binder twine business. I notice that the prices advertised by the government are practically the same or a little less than the dealer can buy from the wholesalers elsewhere, taking the quotations f.o.b. Peterborough, Chicago, Welland and other places. No matter what the quantity bought, they get practically the same prices as are quoted by the Kingston penitentiary.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does the government insist on the farmers taking a certain quantity at these prices ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. They can take 500 pounds or whatever they like.

Mr. BUREAU. I would refer to the circular giving the prices. The farmers can buy in any quantity at the following prices :

'Pure manilla' (warranted all pure manilla hemp) 600 feet to pound, 11 cents.
'Manilla' mixed (two-thirds manilla and one-third New Zealand) 600 feet to pound, 10½ cents.
'Premium sisal' (from superior fibre) 500 feet to pound, 8¼ cents.
One-half cent per pound off for ton lots or over.

Mr. J. D. REID. What are the prices charged by other manufacturers ?

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed by the inspector he has not that information. But he has seen the prices as advertised in the 'Binder Twine Journal.'

Mr. J. D. REID. The prices, I understand, are practically the same as charged by other manufacturers, except that the farmers get the advantage of getting it at the same prices as the retailer would pay to the wholesaler.

Mr. BUREAU. The farmer gets it cheaper than the manufacturer sells it to the wholesaler.

Mr. WARD. At what period last year was this 250,000 pounds carried over ?

Mr. BUREAU. That remained in stock at the end of harvest, when the season for buying twine was over.

Mr. BOYCE. What was the total amount manufactured ?

Mr. BUREAU. About 700,000 pounds.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does the government figure any profit ?

Mr. BUREAU. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then, they must figure that they are making so much out of the labour of the convicts. How much a day do they figure for the convicts ?

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed that the charge for labour on the work done is 30 cents a day.

Mr. J. D. REID. A great portion of the cost of this twine is in the labour. Those employed by the government are charged at 30 cents a day while other manufacturers have to pay from $1.50 to $5 a day. Yet, practically, the government is not able to sell the twine for less than the manufacturers sell it for.

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed that the convicts in the penitentiary never work after dark, and the hon. gentleman will realize that you can get more work out of workmen in an ordinary factory that out of a convict. The only reason I see why this twine is not all taken up is the fact that it has to be sold for cash at Kingston before delivery.

Mr. J. D. REID. In a manufacturing industry such as the hon. gentleman mentions you have to take pay for fuel, light, machinery, buildings, staff, and interest on plant, all of which make up cash cost; the government has none of these things to pay for, yet with all that advantage in its favour the government is not able to produce this twine any less than the ordinary manufacturer, and in that case you are shutting out legitimate labour in this country.

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed that the greater part of the cost is the raw material, and that labour and these other items the hon. gentleman has mentioned, form but a small portion of the cost. We take the best means possible to advertise the twine, notices are sent out to all the farmers' clubs all over the country, to all the members of parliament and to all people whom we believe will distribute information amongst the farmers. Why they do not take it, I do not know; the reason may be the difference in the terms of payment.

Mr. J. D. REID. Labour is only 30 per cent of the cost of production. In a penitentiary you pay nothing for fuel, nothing for plant, nothing for interest, nothing for office and staff; yet with all that advantage on the part of the government the farmers of this country are not able to get their twine from the government at any less price than from any other legitimate manufactory. There must be something wrong in the management of that industry in the penitentiary. I would like to see the farmers get all the advantage possible from that binder twine industry. From all I can learn I believe the government have made an arrangement of some kind with the other manufacturers of binder twine that the prices should be the same.

Mr. BUREAU. My hon. friend asked me a few minutes aga if we charged anything for labour, and I answered about 30 cents a day. But that does not include coal, light, &c. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the report of the Minister of Justice on penitentiaries, page 141, he will find mentioned all the different items that go to make up the cost of production.

Mr. J. D. REID. Do you allow anything as interest on the money invested in the business?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes, I am informed that is included in the price of the binder twine before it is put on the market.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is an interesting fact that we consume in Canada upwards of 30,000,000 pounds of binder twine annually, and we imported 15,676,309 pounds during the nine months of last year, which practically means the whole year. I understand that we imported about half the quantity of binder twine consumed in this country. I believe if all the facts were known there is some kind of an arrangement by which the Americans are to have one-half of the Canadian market for binder twine and the Canadian manufacturers are to have the other half. I think the facts elicited a year or two ago showed that to be the case. I have no doubt the same arrangement is in force yet as between the manufacturers and the importers. However, the question is, how does it come that with a consumption of 30,000,000 pounds, the penitentiary twine, which amounts only to about 700,000 pounds, cannot all be sold in one year? There seems to be something wrong. Either the twine is inferior, or the mode of putting it upon the market is not in the interest of the farmer. If the price, the quality and the length of twine per ball are all right, then the twine should all be taken up in two or three weeks by the farmers themselves. But the farmers seem to be backward, they do not send in their orders. What is the difficulty? The Solicitor General has suggested that the terms to the farmers for this twine are cash on delivery, or rather the cash before they get the twine as they must remit the money before the twine is shipped. I do not think the farmers of this country are so poor that they are unable to take advantage of a bargain of this kind, to get the twine at 1 to 2 cents less than the wholesale price, less than the price at which it is sold by the manufacturer to the wholesale dealer, practically, you may say, 3 or 4 cents a pound less than it is sold to the consumer by the ordinary dealer. It is strange that the farmers are not able to take hold of this splendid offer made by the government, of pure manilla twine at 11 cents, manilla mixed at 10½ cents, and premier sisal at 8¼ cents. Has the minister discovered that the twine is not up to the quality, or are there any complaints about the length of the twine in the ball? I think there must be some other explanation. Why is it that the penitentiary authorities are able to sell only about 500,000 pounds out of 30,000,000 pounds. A few townships in the Northwest would consume the whole thing. If this industry cannot be made of any more advantage to the farmers of this country than it appears to be from the statement of the Solicitor General and the statement sent to us, it is of very little use to carry it on. As to the cost of production, the statement was made in a blue-book issued by the Hon. David Mills that the labour cost ¾ cent a pound. The chief component parts of binder twine are manilla and coal oil. Has the minister any explanation to give as to the price ?

Mr. BUREAU. As my hon. friend knows, most of the twine consumed in the Northwest is imported from the United States. The freight rate on twine from Kingston to the prairies is so high that it puts it at a great disadvantage. As to the quality of the twine, a great many letters of praise have been sent to the penitentiary authorities. Only a few complaints have been made, and these by people who bought more twine than they could use and wanted the authorities to take it back. As my hon. friend knows, the large manufacturers have their travellers on the road who never cease to run down the twine made in the penitentiary, trying to make people believe that because it is made by convicts it is of inferior quality; but there is nobody to boast of the quality of the binder twine manufacturend at Kingston. A very small proportion of the twine is consumed in the eastern provinces compared with what is consumed out west.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not think it is very small. The province of Ontario consumes an enormous quantity. When you consider that 30,000,000 pounds is consumed in the country, it is evident that a very large proportion of that is consumed in the eastern provinces. So far as Ontario is concerned, the question of freight is neither here nor there, because the distance from Kingston to any part of Ontario is not very great.

Mr. BUREAU. The western farmer is close to the United States market and as there is no duty on binder twine he can get it from the United States delivered at Winnipeg or anywhere else in the west at less cost.

Mr. A. A. WRIGHT. I think I can give you some information as to why even United States twine is sold in Kingston. The manufacturers go to a storekeeper and say: We have plenty of this twine on hand; we do not know where to store it, so we will ship it to you in the winter time and you do not have to pay for it until the following fall. A machine agent will do the same thing. He is continually going around the country trying to sell machinery to the farmers, and every time he goes to a farmer he says: Don't you want to get some twine for next summer? You do not have to pay for it until next fall. In the same way, by means of the same offer, the storekeeper forces the twine on the farmer. It is delivered in the winter time, and is not paid for until the following fall, and that is the reason why so much more twine is sold by the other manufacturers than by the penitentiary.

Mr. LAKE. There is a great deal in what the hon. gentleman has said, but I would like to suggest that in order to sell the twine cheaply enough to the farmers in the Northwest you should have some points of distribution there. At present you send a circular to a farmer telling him that his order has to be accompanied by the cash, and owing to the distance he has to send his order a long time in advance of the time when he wants the twine. If he is not going to pay a high price for bringing the twine from Kingston in small quantities, he has to hunt up a number of his neighbours to join with him in ordering in large quantity, a trouble which he is not likely to go to, especially as he has to put up the cash. If there were centres of distribution in the Northwest, where the orders could be received and from which the twine could be sent, the farmers could send in their orders at just about the time they needed the twine and would be prepared to pay cash for it. Then the twine could be sent to the Northwest in large quantities, and it would be of real benefit to the consumers.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend has stated that the twine is sold direct to the farmers. I want to call his attention to one or two items in the Auditor General's Report, at page M—34: W. J. Keen buys $4,819 worth, J. M. Morin buys $2,142 worth, E. H. Muir, buys $2,953 worth, R. Shephard buys $2,640 worth, R. W. Wallace buys $2,725 worth. What class of farmers are these ?

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed that these gentlemen are all secretaries of various branches of the Alberta Farmers' Association.

Mr. W. McINTYRE. I can say that the gentleman named R. Shephard mentioned by my hon. friend is the secretary of the Strathcona branch of the Alberta Farmers' Association and he ordered the quantity mentioned there for supplying the farmers of that section.

Mr. BLAIN. What about W. J. Keen ?

Mr. BUREAU. I do not know, but I am informed that all these gentlemen are secretaries of the various branches of the Alberta Farmers' Association.

Mr. BLAIN. What about T. L. Hobbs ?

Mr. BUREAU I am told that Mr. Hobbs purchased some rope, not binder twine.

Mr. BLAIN. It is described as binder twine in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. BUREAU. There must be an error there if my information is correct.

Mr. ALCORN. I have in my hand one of the circulars referred to and I call the minister's attention to the fact that it is nowhere stated in this circular that sales are made to farmers only. It does contain a schedule of prices said to be for farmers only, but that implies there are other schedules applicable to other people, and it would seem from the statement made by the hon. member for Peel that sales are made to others than farmers.

Mr. BUREAU. There are no prices for others than farmers, and the gentlemen mentioned are, I am told, officials of the various branches of the Alberta Farmer's Association. There is no binder twine offered to any except farmers.

Mr. ALCORN. What steps do the government take to ascertain they are selling to farmers only?

Mr. BUREAU. We have to rely on the signatures of these gentlemen and the decription they give as secretaries of these associations. It would be very difficult for us to have any other guide than that.

Mr. AVERY. I notice that sales were made to the Independent Cordage Company to the extent of $5,384.68; is that a farmers' company ?

Mr. BUREAU. If my hon. friend will look at the heading he will find that these are rope sales and not sales of binder twine.

Mr. BLAIN. We are anxious to know about Mr. Hobbs, because he figured in the binder twine industry a few years ago. This was a very large sale to Mr. Hobbs, and it requires some explanation.

Mr. BUREAU. We did not expect so much discussion on the supplementary estimates to-night, but if my hon. friend is agreeable I will bring the information down on the main estimates.

Mr. STAPLES. Can the minister tell us what it costs to place this binder twine in the Winnipeg market in carloads ? I would like to have that information so that I can advise my constituents as to whether it would be to their advantage to purchase this twine. I suppose this industry is going to make a profit for the country, or at all events not to make a loss, and we should know the details with regard to it. I would also like to know whether the quality of this twine has been satisfactory. I had a little experience with it a few years ago which was not quite a success, but probably it is is better now than it was then.

Mr. BUREAU. I will correspond with the railway companies and ascertain what their freight rates are on this twine if the hon. gentleman will state to what points he would have it delivered. I am informed by the inspector that there have been a few complaints about this binder twine some of which came from the west, but the letters expressing commendation are more numerous than the complaints.

Mr. BLAIN. Was the rope sold to the Independent Cordage Company sold after tender?

Mr. BUREAU. A circular was sent to every man in the trade and the person offering the highest price for the rope got it.

Mr. BENNETT. Both sides of politics?

Mr. BUREAU. To every one in the trade; I do not know whether they are Tories or Grits.

Mr. TAYLOR. There was purchased during the year 377,000 pounds of manilla and 55,000 pounds of New Zealand, and I would like to know what it cost. The Auditor General's Report formerly gave the cost, but I do not see it published this year and neither can I find it in the report of the Department of Justice.

Mr. BUREAU. At page 141 of the report of the Minister of Justice it shows there was purchased 55,123 pounds for $4,350.21 and 377,000 pounds at $38,388.88. At page M—18 of the Auditor General's Reunder the heading of Kingston penitentiary, the details of the cost are given.

Mr. BLAIN. At what price was this rope sold to the Independent Cordage Company and what are the different kinds of rope that are manufactured in the penitentiary?

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed they do not pretend to manufacture rope, but there are certain qualities of hemp which are unfit for the manufacture of binder twine and it is turned into rope. There is no definite quantity manufactured every year.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the price per pound?

Mr. BUREAU. At page M—33, Auditor General's Report, under the head rope shipments, the details are given: Pure manilla, 11 cents, 12 cents, 12½ cents and so on.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Can the Hon. Solicitor General tell us what the sale of binder twine manufacteured at Kingston amounted to ?

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) As I already stated, I am informed by the inspector that out of last year's total output of 700,000 pounds, about 250,000 pounds still remain on hand. As to the price of sale, it will be found in the circular issued by the department.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) The Auditor General's report states well enough the expenditure incurred during the fiscal year of 1907, but it does not indicate the receipts therefrom.

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) If my hon. friend wants to turn up page M—33, of the Auditor General's report, he will find there a statement of the various amounts of money received, the number of pounds of twine and cable sold, and the different prices paid for each of these respectively.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Could not the department alter the terms of sale of that product? According to the circular sent out by the department, farmers are requested to send in the amount of their purchase either by money order or check. As a rule that circular is sent out in March or April of each year. But, that is the very time of the year when farmers have less available money. If, instead, the warden of the penitentiary be instructed to note down all orders from farmers, orders for deliver, say in May or in June, then the farmers could more easily meet the payment of these goods. It could also, for instance, be paid on delivery as is customary in the trade.

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) As was observed a little while ago by the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. Wright), the manufacturers leave it optional for the farmers to pay the amount if they purchase in the fall only. But, it can easily be noticed that the government cannot follow such a course, not having any one like the manufacturers appointed to collect the accounts. In regard to that, the government is not in the same position as private individuals. On the other hand, there is that truism—I know not whence it came—that the state cannot be as faithfully paid as private parties.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) The year prior to the elections might be taken advantage of.

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) It might be adding allurement upon temptation. I admit that some good may be found in my hon. friend's suggestion, and the department will take it into consideration.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Should the government hesitate to give effect to my suggestion through fear of losing money, it might insist upon payment at the time when the twine is being made use of, either in June or July, when the order has been given and is being delivered. It might be delivered C.O.D.

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) There is this drawback, that should the purchaser refuse his order, this order would remain unsold, owing to the late season, not allowing a sale to other purchasers.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) I always took it that the intention was especially to assist the farmer, and that was primarily the object of establishing this industry at Kingston. As it is, it appears that certain clubs and associations of would-be farmers control the production and re-sell it later at a profit of 2, 3 and even 4 cents per pound. So soon as you make it available to the farmer to purchase directly on terms offered to him by the dealers, that is by granting him reasonable time, he will not fail to profit by the opportunity.

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) My hon. friend must understand that the government could not, like the individual dealer. be kept posted on the financial condition of every farmer that would place an order with them. Moreover, if the government were to start granting time to farmers, it might meet with serious difficulties in collecting bills. My hon. friend also suggested the C.O.D. system. Besides the objection which I already stated, there is also this one which is to be guarded against. Should the purchaser refuse his goods, the government would stand to lose the cost of transportation both ways, which would not be quite profitable.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) There would still be the agreement which is binding on the farmer, and the government stands to lose nothing.

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) The government would hardly revert to lawsuits for securing payment. The dealers have got this advantage that their agents are perpetually on the road and looking to these matters. If the government were to employ travellers, of course this would still increase the price of sale.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) If the government were really anxious to help the farmer, they could easily adopt another system. Everybody knows that the farmer much prefers buying on time and settle up whenever he has the cash. It is the system in use by all dealers and manufacturers of implements, who sell at an advanced cost of 50 per cent, but at long terms of 24 or 30 months, and farmers prefer this system than the cash system.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to draw my hon. friend's attention to the way this binder twine business is being run. My hon. friend has said that they sold the output of the Kingston penitentiary, 37,450 pounds of pure manilla rope at 8½ cents, $3,181.22. Looking over the Auditor General's Report I find on page P—119 a purchase of 103 pounds at 15 cents and another item of 24,466 pounds at a fraction less than 15 cents. Would it not be better for the government to sell rope to themselves rather than to the people throughout the country? On the one hand the hon. minister is selling his rope at 8½ cents and his colleague is buying it at 15 cents.

Mr. BUREAU. It may not be the same kind of rope.

Mr. BLAIN. Yes, manilla rope of the same size. It would be better for the one department to sell the rope to the other.

Mr. TAYLOR. There would be no chance then for a rake-off.

Mr. BENNETT. Was that at Sorel?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. Oh, everybody steals there.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The rope is made at the penitentiary out of the refuse or culling of the material used for twine. A certain amount of the manilla, which is not fit for twine, is manufactured into rope. The manilla which is made into rope at the penitentiary is worth only 5 cents or 6 cents a pound, whereas the manilla fit for good rope is worth 10 cents to 15 cents. Manilla is graded practically as wheat. Some grades are sold as low as 5½ cents a pound.

Mr. J. D. REID. Where ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. In New York and Liverpool. Other grades sell at 10 cents to 12 cents a pound. That which is made in the penitentiary is made possibly from pure manilla but manilla that is only worth 4 cents a pound.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman then must give the lie to the officer who is in charge at Kingston. For if the hon. gentleman will turn to the report, page N—32, he will find that the government had on hand the first of July, 1906, 518,365 pounds of pure manilla. They manufactured during the year 95,000 pounds into twine, they shipped 341,000 pounds, and made rope out of 22,000 pounds of that pure manilla. They used nothing else but pure manilla, yet my hon. friend says they made the rope out of the refuse.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What is made into rope may be pure manilla but it is none the less the culling of the material made into twine.

Mr. BLAIN. I was very much interested in the explanation of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford), but would be much more interested if the minister would tell us whether this was the best or an inferior manilla. My hon. friend must be aware that there is no rope manufacturing establishment in Canada which buys the highest grade of manilla to put into rope. The highest grade is sold for the purpose of making binder twine.

Mr. BUREAU. The only manilla we buy is the best quality to manufacture twine, but when they open the bales and put it in use some of it has to be culled because it is not fit.

Mr. J. D. REID. Do you get a rebate ?

Mr. BUREAU. That has never been considered. It may be a good suggestion.

Mr. J. D. REID. Any business man would get a rebate for an inferior article.

Mr. BUREAU. There may be something in the suggestion. I am informed that the culling is put into rope. That which has been culled out would not be worth the price of high-grade, pure manilla.

Mr. TAYLOR. You do not purchase any.

Mr. OWEN. At page M—32 of the Auditor General's Report, it is shown that 377,095 pounds of manilla hemp was purchased during the year. But no price is given. We cannot judge whether what was purchased was first or fourth class.

Mr. BUREAU. If my friend (Mr. Owen) will turn back to page M—18, at the bottom of the page, he will find the total prices paid for raw manilla.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will the minister explain how he pays 10⅞ cents for manilla and sells it at 8½ cents ?

Mr. BUREAU. If part is used for first class and the cullings for inferior grades, of course, the same price cannot be got for the lower grades.

Mr. J. D. REID. I understood the minister to say that he was selling twine at 8½ cents to 9 cents, and he reads there that he is paying 10⅞ cents for manilla.

Mr. BUREAU. I have not read anything yet. I said that manilla was bought at 9⅞ cents and the twine was sold at something a fraction over 11 cents to the farmer.

Mr. HENDERSON. Perhaps, it is not necessary to detain the committee longer on this question. I think the Solicitor General (Mr. Bureau) will be able to afford more information when the main estimates are under discussion. I was afraid the hon. gentleman was going to give a very erroneous answer to the question as to how the minister could pay 10⅞ cents for the raw material and sell it at 11 cents. I suppose the explanation is this : In a pound of binder twine, there is not a pound of manilla. Only 80 per cent of the weight of the twine is manilla, the remainder being coarse oil or grease, at about 5 cents per pound. The manila would cost 8 cents and the oil 1 cent. Then, add 75 cents per 100 pounds for manufacture and you get 9¾ cents. And the hon. gentleman sells that to the farmer at 11 cents. Yet, he tells us that he is selling this manilla at cost price. It seems to me he is making a very large profit.

Mr. BUREAU. There is the coal and other expenses.

Mr. HENDERSON. Hon. David Mills is on record as having stated that the cost of manufacturing binder twine in Kingston penitentiary was about ¾ cents per lb., and I think that included all expenses. What I contend is that the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Bureau) is not giving the farmers a square deal. Instead of selling at cost price, he is making a profit of 1¼ cents per pound on an article which costs less than 10 cents, which would be a very large profit on an ordinary commercial transaction. I do not wish to criticise unduly the twine made at Kingston, but there must certainly be a reason why that twine is not taken by the farmers more readily than it is. The fact is that the twine at Kingston is made by prisoners who are turned on to a job that they know nothing about and so cannot turn out the nice, even article that a spinner would who has been spinning twine for ten or fifteen years. It is not reasonable to expect it. It is a question for the government to consider whether this institution should be kept alive or not—whether it really pays or not. I do not think the farmers, or the public either, are getting any real benefit out of it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood the Solicitor General (Mr. Bureau) to say that the government sold this twine strictly for cash. But, if he will turn to page M—35 of the Auditor General's Report, he will find, in the statement of revenue, the following :

| | |
|---|---|
| Outstanding from 1905-6.. .. .. | $10,855 78 |
| Shipments in 1906-7.. .. .. .. .. | 39,574 64 |

Who owes these outstanding accounts of $10,855.78 ?

Mr. BUREAU. I have not that information at hand. I will have it looked up, and will give it to the committee on another occasion.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is something wrong about this business. I live alongside Kingston, and am well acquainted with the farmers of Pittsburg. I see them buying twine in the stores in Gananoque and Kingston. You do not find the farmers of that part of the country in the list of the purchasers of this Kingston binder twine.

Mr. BUREAU. You find the secretaries of many farmers' clubs.

Mr. TAYLOR. We know that, as a matter of fact, you can go to any machine agent or hardware dealer and buy at the prices given in the circulars that the government is sending out—perhaps better prices. And the farmers say they get a more satisfactory article. There is no question about it—the government are keeping up these prices to oblige their friends who are manufacturing in the country, part and parcel of the combine, and the farmers are paying nearly double prices for every pound of twine. For, as has been stated here, sisal can be bought in New York at 5½ cents per pound.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Not fit for twine.

Mr. TAYLOR. If you buy it in New York it will cost 6 cents or 7 cents when it is put into the twine, because the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) says there is only 75 per cent or 80 per cent of manilla in a pound of twine, the rest is cheap material.

Mr. BLAIN. I want to press upon my hon. friend's attention the fact I mentioned a few moments ago. He contended that the output of rope at Kingston penitentiary last year was $7,407 worth, the largest part of which, $5,384 worth, was sold to the Independent Cordage Company at 8½ cents and 10 cents per pound, pure manilla. Now, why could not the hon. gentleman sell this rope to the Department of Marine and Fisheries for the same price as he sold it to the Independent Cordage Company, particularly when the Marine and Fisheries Department are buying the same kind of rope and paying 15 cents a pound for it?

Mr. BUREAU. Very likely the Marine and Fisheries Department are buying rope, but are they buying the kind of rope that we make in the penitentiary? The rope that we manufacture in the penitentiary is made from the cullings, from an inferior quality of manilla that is not fit for binder twine. Perhaps the Marine and Fisheries Department would not accept that kind of rope. We would like to sell them the rope, but they might not have any use for it.

Mr. BLAIN. Some persons must be using it, because the Independent Cordage Company, who are manufacturers and sellers of rope, are selling it in this country. It is fair to assume that the same kind of manilla the penitentiary is using for making rope is used by the Independent Cordage Company to make the same kind of rope.

Mr. BUREAU. My hon. friend will admit that if the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) wants to buy a rope to take a cow down to market he will buy a different kind of rope from that he would use on a ship. Of course the Department of Justice would be glad to sell their rope, but I do not know as it is our business to go round all the departments and ask them if they will buy it. We are not in the rope business, we are manufacturers of twine, and the rope is only an incident of the manufacture of twine, so as not to waste the cullings.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There are just as many grades in twine as there are in wheat. You can have 5 cent manilla pure and you can have 20 cent manilla pure, and in both cases it is all manilla. The wholesale price of the International Harvester Company for 650 foot twine, the same as quoted here to-day, is 13 cents, not to the farmer, but to the retailer or jobber in the west. That twine will cost the jobber or retailer at Winnipeg $13.75 per hundred, whereas the price for the Kingston penitentiary is $11.75, a difference to the farmer of about 2 cents.

Mr. BLAIN. Why is it that when the government are offering pure manilla twine at 11 cents per pound the farmers do not buy it ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think this is just another instance of government ownership, it does not work out as it ought to. Some years ago the Kingston penitentiary sent a lot of twine to the west, and we are feeling the effects of it to-day. It was the most miserable stuff that ever came into the west, not because of the quality of the material in it, but owing to the way it was spun. I do not think this industry at Kingston is a success myself, to be honest about it. The great thing in connection with the manufacture of twine, and what makes the value in twine, is not so much the quality of the material that comes out more in the spinning than in anything else. I think it is almost impossible to get evenly spun twine from an institution such as this at Kingston.

Mr. BLAIN. May I suggest that a few years ago they were applauding themselves because they had invested in the very best modern machinery to be found, so that they could supply the best quality of twine.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have no doubt that the machines are all right; but unless the twine spinners are experts, who have been trained to the work from childhood, the twine will be uneven. The twine of the Plymouth Manufacturing Company is possibly the best twine sold in the whole western country, and the reason of that is that the spinners employed at the factory are people who have been trained to the work from childhood. I have seen farmers throw into the fence corners twine that was thick and thin, and then drive to town and buy another kind. The unfavourable impression created years ago in regard to the Kingston twine has never been got over in the western country, and the want of confidence then created in it has been a detriment to it ever since. It may be that it is now much better than it used to be; but as our friend from Renfrew said, there is a great difference in the way twine is placed on the market. I know agents in the western country who have all their twine orders booked for next year, with the understanding that they will deliver the twine when it is wanted, and that the farmers may return what they do not use at the end of the season, which is a great inducement to them. Then, the fact that the farmers do not have to put up the cash until they sell their grain is another inducement. In the case of the Kingston twine, they have to advance the money when they buy, and they have to keep all they buy, whether they use it or not. The conditions surrounding the sale of binder twine to-day have had the effect of seriously shortening the sale of the Kingston twine.

Mr. BLAIN. I just want to say a word in respect to the quality of the twine manufactured in the Kingston penitentiary. The farmers of my own county have had some experience of it, and I do not at all agree with my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford). I have not many good words to say of the government, but I wish to say that the twine manufactured in the Kingston penitentiary is in my opinion number one, the equal of the twine sold in any part of Canada. We have some very good farmers in the county of Peel, who are using hundreds of pounds of twine every year, and of the large quantity of twine that has gone into that county in the last few years I have not heard of one complaint from any farmer. My own opinion is that the Kingston twine is the equal of any other on the market.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Will the Solicitor General have a statement prepared for the next meeting of the committee showing on the one side the amount paid for labour and materials and on the other side the amount of the sales, so that we can see the amount of profit or loss on last year's business ?

Mr. LEONARD (Laval). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before the item under discussion is adopted by the committee, I wish to inquire of the government what measures they propose to adopt with respect to the officers of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary who take an active part in politics in the county of Laval ? Oscar Beauchamp, especially, the warden of the penitentiary, is at present the chief Liberal organizer in the parish of St. Vincent de Paul. Since his appointment to that position he has been in the habit of organizing our opponents' committees. He has used the horses, carriages, and even the officials of the institution in arranging contradictory meetings in their interest. He has headed gangs of noisy rowdies. Officials under his orders have been mixed up in a rather bloody fight, and several of them were arrested for assault.

Since many years, the leader of the government and his colleagues have been in the habit of declaring it to be their fixed intention to prevent government officials from taking part in elections. When complaints are made to them under this head, they never fail to reply : Make a direct charge and the government will attend to it. Well, I will make a direct charge to-day. I now declare from my seat in this House, that Oscar Beauchamp, warden of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, is a violent and fanatical partisan of the present government. He has fostered and is constantly fostering political passions in the parish of St. Vincent de Paul. In 1900, he attended the nomination meeting at St. Rose, being accompanied by the guards of the penitentiary in penitentiary vehicles, and they took an active part in the tumult which ensued. In 1902, he attended the parish committees. He himself brought liquor or caused it to be brought there, and the penitentiary officials became intoxicated and broke the peace.

In 1904, the same officials, headed by the same Oscar Beauchamp, were guilty of the same reprehensible conduct.

Since then, at the time of the revision of the voters' lists in September, 1907, a St. Vincent de Paul lawyer, son-in-law to one of the guards, had been instructed by my political friends to contest certain lists before the courts. Some time before the hearing, Oscar Beauchamp summoned to his office the guard whose son-in-law was to conduct the case, and informed him that unless the petition was withdrawn he would lose his position.

The official, who was, quite naturally, reluctant to lose the salary upon which he lived endeavoured to induce his son-in-law to give up the case. The latter, however, refused to do so, and reminded his father-in-law that he was under no obligations to him.

Thereupon Oscar Beauchamp again called him in the office and requested him to resign, stating that if he refused he would be dismissed within two days. The officer was therefore obliged to choose between resigning or being dismissed and losing his indemnity. He preferred to secure his indemnity by tendering his resignation, which was accepted on the spot.

Hon. Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) Would my hon. friend mind giving me the name of the official in question ?

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) I have the name among my papers, but they are not at present before me. I think it is a Mr. Rochon, but I am not certain. The lawyer is Mr. Larivée, practising in Montreal and residing at St. Vincent de Paul.

At the time of the municipal elections, January 8, 1908, Oscar Beauchamp——

Mr. MARTIN (St. Mary's, Montreal). (Translation.) The government has nothing to do with municipal elections, as the hon. gentleman should know. Let him confine himself to federal matters.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) The hon. the Solicitor General has no need of help from the brilliant member for St. Mary's (Mr. Martin). He can defend himself without his assistance.

We are discussing an item having special reference to the salaries of the warden of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary and of the officers of that institution, and I have a right to criticise their conduct.

At the municipal elections of 1908, Oscar Beauchamp organized the campaign ; he gave the matter his special attention and requested all the officials of the penitentiary one after the other to go and cast their votes. Those who refused to vote for his candidates were threatened with dismissal. His son and one of his friends stood at the door of the polling booth, and as they came up, the penitentiary officials were given the names of the candidates supported by the warden.

It appears to me that if the hon. the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General and their colleagues really desire to enforce the policy which they have since several years proclaimed, this is a case deserving of their best attention.

The warden of the penitentiary is an active political partisan constantly taking part in elections in the interest of government candidates and preventing his employees from voting as they desire. I call upon the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice to stand by their principles and to say whether, in the face of all these facts, Oscar Beauchamp is to continue in the employ of the department.

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) I desire to say to my hon. friend that this is the first time I hear of any complaints concerning the conduct of the warden of St. Vincent de Paul. Some time ago a question appeared on the Order paper as to whether the government was aware that certain officers of this penitentiary were taking part in municipal elections. The Minister of Justice replied, I believe, that he knew nothing about it. For my part, I do not know what took place.

The hon. member has made certain charges against Mr. Beauchamp. As he has done so from his seat, I have no doubt that he believes them to be true. It strikes me, however, that the facts complained of took place as far back as 1900 and 1904, and that they are said to have been going on from day to day since that period. How is it that the hon. member did not complain of them sooner, either to the Department of Justice or before this House ?

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) There is an end to all patience.

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) I give my hon. friend full credit for the patience he has displayed, and I think he might have continued in patience a little longer, as the crimes charged against Mr. Beauchamp may not be as serious as he has stated.

The reports of the Department of Justice show that Mr. Beauchamp is an officer who performs his duty to the letter, and the inspectors place entire confidence in him. His administration of the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary has always given entire satisfaction. He has treated the convicts with justice and I may add that since his appointment things have greatly improved at the penitentiary. My hon. friend will admit that we cannot be held responsible for matters which have not been brought to our knowledge, especially when the facts alleged are not of public notoriety and when they are based upon the ipse dixit of interested persons. Under present circumstances they may have been exaggerated.

If the officers of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary have taken an active part in elections, they must have done so very secretly, as no complaint has reached the department on the subject.

At all events, if my hon. friend makes a serious charge against the warden, it will be the duty of the Department of Justice to take notice of it.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) I accuse him of having taken an active part in politics in the past and of still doing so every day, of being the most violent partisan organizer to be found in the county of Laval.

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) That accusation seems rather vague.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) I accuse him of using the carriages and horses of the penitentiary for electoral purposes, of giving leave of absence to the officials for the same purposes, of attending political meetings and interrupting Conservative speakers.

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) All these charges are rather serious, but they date back several years, as my hon. friend has not been re-elected since 1904. I desire to insist upon it that this is the first time that such charges are made before the House, and that the Minister of Justice declares that they have never been brought to his attention. I have just inquired of the hon. the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) as to whether he had any knowledge of such complaints when he was Solicitor General. His reply was the same as that of the Minister of Justice.

My hon. friend desires me to make a declaration of policy, but I do not clearly see what declaration he would wish me to make.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) I do not wish these things to be repeated at the next election.

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) My hon. friend cannot prevent a man, because he is the warden of a penitentiary, from having sympathies and opinions, from believing that things are better managed by one government than by another. The man is free as to his convictions.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Has such a man any right to use government horses and carriages and the prestige of his position to prevent his opponents from speaking at contradictory meetings ?

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) I do not know that it is wrong for the warden to have a horse at his disposal.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Not one horse but ten horses, government horses, and twenty-five officials following him to each meeting.

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) The charges being made, I will request my hon. friend to be precise as to time and circumstance ; we know nothing of the alleged facts and for my part I hear of them to-day for the first time. As I have several times stated, Mr. Beauchamp, as warden, is a model officer who is always spoken of in the highest terms.

Mr. MONK. The Solicitor General having been asked for a declaration of the policy of the government under the circumstances mentioned by my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Leonard), he should at least have gone to the trouble of stating what that policy is. I have heard it stated time and again in this House, both by the Prime Minister and by the Minister of Finance, that the policy of the government is that civil servants may have their opinions and may vote but they are forbidden to take an active and partisan part in elections. To-night, the member for a constituency in which is situated this important penal establishment, points out a most disgraceful state of affairs in connection with an official of that penitentiary, and he asks for a declaration of the policy of the government, and the Solicitor General representing the Department of Justice gives no answer. My hon. friend (Mr. Leonard) is lectured for not making an accusation in due form before this date, but he was no doubt afraid of provoking an inquiry such as was had when this government came into power, into comparatively unimportant complaints regarding the administration of that penitentiary, and which inquiry cost the country $25,000. A lawyer in Montreal who sat on that committee was paid I think $12,000, others connected with it were paid on a proportionate scale, and the inquiry ended in the dismissal of Mr. Ouimet, then warden of the penitentiary. How can it be that the Solicitor General has not heard of the facts stated by my hon. friend from Laval to-night. I think the Solicitor General was in the county of Laval during the elections of 1902, and if he had his eyes open he must have seen that this warden of the penitentiary was here, there, and everywhere, that the employees of the penitentiary, the horses belonging to the penitentiary, the whole staff of the penitentiary were in commission to try and defeat my hon. friend (Mr. Leonard). Everybody knew it; it was a matter of public notoriety. There is not a man who follows public events within the city of Montreal or within 50 miles of St. Vincent de Paul who does not know that this man Beauchamp is continually in the breach at election time. He meddles in federal elections, he meddles in provincial elections, he takes an active and disgraceful part in municipal elections. And yet the Solicitor General says this man is a model warden of the penitentiary. It is difficult to believe that it is possible for a man to be continuously on the road for political and partisan purposes, and at the same time be a fit and proper person to conduct a penitentiary. I cannot say as to how he fulfils his duty within the penitentiary, but it is inconceivable that a man who has such an idea of his duty as the head of the leading penal establishment, can discharge his duties properly within the walls of the penitentiary and so multiply himself outside of the penitentiary for purposes which are calculated to shed disgrace and shame upon the whole administration of justice. What does the Solicitor General want? Does he want the member for Laval (Mr. Léonard) to put his seat in jeopardy—as we are often invited to do when we point out such things as this to the government—does he want the hon. gentleman to lay formal charges? Why it is a matter of public notoriety. I have seen this man Beauchamp at work and I have seen him put his men to work and I say it is the duty of the government, if it requires to be absolutely certain of the facts which are notorious to obtain these facts and to obtain them without the expenditure of $25,000 from the public funds as was the case in the last inquiry. What is the inspector of penitentiaries good for if he cannot go into that county, or into a single parish of that county, or if he cannot go into my own county which adjoins it and not find out that these rumours are true. There is nothing more important in this or in any other country than that justice should be properly administered. I say that a penitentiary warden who carries on in that way ought to be dismissed. He is not fit to fulfil the duties of his position. We are voting these supplies to-night in a temporary way, but I think we should take our stand and under these circumstances, refuse supplies to this department until justice is done. A man of that description would not be tolerated in the public service of England for five minutes. The rule in England is that public servants may entertain such opinions as they wish on public matters and they may vote, but it is a strict regulation that no man shall take such part as this man takes in elections. I venture to say that an official in any state of the American Union in charge of a great penitentiary such as this is, and who would do what this man does, would not be tolerated in his position for five minutes. This man goes about openly, he boasts of what he does, and yet he is retained in office. Under the circumstances we are perfectly justified in raising an objection to this vote. If the Solicitor General goes to Montreal, without leaving the city of Montreal at all he will find that the allegations made here are absolutely true, and that being the case this man Beauchamp ought to be dismissed from the service.

Mr. BUREAU. It is surprising to me that the hon. member should read me such a lecture and demand that the Solicitor General should go down and within twenty-four hours dismiss a man for offences which he says have been going on for six years, when the hon. member and his colleague from Laval who represents the very riding in which this man lives, have not yet brought the matter officially or unofficially to the notice of the department.

Mr. MONK. I have spoken of this and the attention of the government has been repeatedly brought to it in this House which is the proper forum in which to speak of it.

Mr. BUREAU. It has been asked if the department has any knowledge of these things and the answer is on 'Hansard.' My hon. friend charges that in 1902 I was with Mr. Beauchamp in the Laval election and witnessed the things of which complaint is made. I took part in the Laval election but I did not meet Mr. Beauchamp and did not know him until I was appointed Solicitor General. He may have been there for all I know but I did not see him and do not know that he was.

Mr. LEONARD. Where did you spend the time?

Mr. BUREAU. In St. Rose, where you polled the largest vote, if that is any comfort to you. I think it is unfair for the hon. member to say that he is going to hold up the estimates and that he wants us to at once, within forty-eight hours, dismiss Mr. Beauchamp on a statement made here to-night by himself and the member for Laval (Mr. Leonard). My hon. friend justifies the member for Laval by saying that they do not want to have an investigation, to have public money expended to find out whether this man did right or did wrong. It costs nothing to write a letter to the department or to the Minister of Justice or to make complaint to the inspector of penitentiaries. Why has that not been done? I have asked the inspector if he has had complaints against the warden of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary and he says: No. I have asked him if he went there and mixed with the people and he replies that he did. If this man has been committing such outrageous crimes the people would speak of it. I have been in St. Vincent, in the penitentiary and the village and have had occasion to talk with the people, but I have heard nothing of it. The hon. member will admit that it is unfair to say to-night: Dismiss this man or we will hold up the estimates. He must give a chance for an investigation of the matter. He says we have received complaints but that does not mean that we must say: The man is guilty. Let us take some of the rope that has created such a fuss to-night and hang him. Surely an opportunity should be given him to prove that he is not guilty.

Mr. LEONARD. If he is guilty?

Mr. BUREAU. We will find out first. It is a principle of British law to hold a man not guilty until he is found guilty. My hon. friend may make a statement from his seat and of course I accept what he says, but he will agree that it is unfair to say that we must go to this man and dismiss him. If we did that the hon. member for Laval would be the first to condemn our method of administering justice. My hon. friend stated that I said Mr. Beauchamp was a model warden of a penitentiary. I have to judge him as I find him and the reports of the inspectors upon his work are the best. We have to take these reports and to take Mr. Beauchamp as being as my hon. friend has said, a model warden of a penitentiary, until the contrary is proven.

Mr. MONK. I do not wish to raise the question of the manner in which civil servants have been dismissed since 1896. That is not my object. Throughout my own county every civil servant was dismissed. Most of them were employed on the Lachine canal. Some were dismissed without being given an opportunity to learn what they were accused of. Where the government had some reason for instituting an inquiry, some lawyer, some heeler, some political hanger-on was charged with the inquiry and conducted it ex parte in most cases; at any rate I was never notified of any of these inquiries and the inquiries ended with the dismissal of men who possibly had been twenty years in the civil service and so were unfit for anything else. I remember particularly a case that created quite a sensation in Montreal, that of the bridge master at Cote St. Paul, a man infirm, with twelve children, who had been placed there by Laflamme, Minister of Justice in the Mackenzie administration. He was told at midnight that he had to clear out the next morning to make place for a relative of the then member for Hochelaga. I do not wish to waken up these cases as it would lead to too long a discussion, but the Solicitor General surely remembers that in these early days when a member would ask why such a man was dismissed the stereotyped answer of the government was that he was dismissed on the complaint of the sitting member for the constituency. I have heard that answer given here time and time again, and therefore I do not see why this man if he is guilty of these offences should not be treated as others have been treated by this government. I do not think it is necessary after the allusions and complaints that have been made here from year to year since the election of 1902, that a member should sit down and make a regular complaint in writing supported by affidavit like some proceeding in a court, against such an important branch of the administration of justice; it is sufficient I think to ascertain whether what I am stating here to-night is true or not. Is it notorious in the district of Montreal that this man takes an offensive and partisan part in every election ? If that is the case how can it be that the inspector of penitentiaries goes down to the very place where these forbidden acts are committed and is not able to ascertain whether there is any truth in them or not? The matter has been ventilated in the press of the district of Montreal and it is known to every man there who follows elections that this warden violates the essential principle of the public service. Under these circumstances I do not ask my friend to go down to-night and dismiss him, but I say his duty is to ascertain whether that is true and if it is true this man should be removed from office because he meddles in a shameful and brazen manner in elections when he should not. If it is true, he should be removed from office.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, before this item is voted, I ask for a plain declaration from the government. I want to know from the Department of Justice, if the warden is guilty of the facts which I charge against him, if the department, I repeat, will dismiss him.

Mr. BUREAU. My hon. friend cannot ask for such a declaration before an inquiry being made by the government. We will decide according to the results of the inquiry.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) I want to know, if Mr. Beauchamp is guilty of the facts I accuse him, if the Minister of Justice will punish him.

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) I have only to say that if the employee is guilty, the department will have to look into the degree of culpability before taking any action.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) I have accused Beauchamp of using the rigs of the penitentiary; of having granted a fortnight's holiday to more than half of the employees of the penitentiary so that they could attend the public meetings. More than that, of having used his position to threaten a public employee of dismissal if his son-in-law would not consent to withdraw a political prosecution in which he was acting as lawyer. I have accused him of having taken part in municipal elections which were practically political elections. I want the government to make a declaration.

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) My hon. friend plays his part very seriously. He accuses the warden. I answer to him that we will inquire. My hon. friend is a lawyer and he is too respectful of the dignity of his profession to ask me to render a judgment upon simple hypothesis.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) The First Minister and the Minister of Finance have declared many times here that their policy was to punish those employees who would take an active part in elections. Why is the Solicitor General so much afraid to make a declaration?

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) I do not want to declare Mr. Beauchamp guilty before having heard him.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) But if he is found guilty, will the government encourage him by keeping him in his position?

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) The department will certainly not encourage him; but we won't give any judgment before having heard him.

Mr. MONK. It would be a great mistake to think that the complaints of the conduct of this man are confined to members of the Conservative party. When the warden of a penitentiary mixes up in municipal elections, he naturally very often comes up against his own friends. I do not remember having attending a single meeting in Laval without seeing this warden turning up with his own men, and I have heard Liberals as well as Conservatives exclaim: There is Beauchamp with his men; it is a public scandal. If this man has any sense of the dignity and importance of his position, he would on no account meddle in elections. But when he takes part in politics, municipal, provincial and federal, he creates a public scandal, and when the facts are brought to the knowledge of the government, they should take immediate action.

Mr. BLAIN. Here is a charge made on the floor of the House by two hon. members that a certain highly paid official, the warden of one of the penitentiaries, is an active partisan. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has noticed him in public meetings taking an active part in politics. Considering the fact that the policy of this government, announced by several members of the cabinet from time to time, is to allow no officials to take part in politics other than to vote, it is time the leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) should pronounce himself upon this particular case. He should say whether he proposes that the policy he laid down shall be carried out or whether he is going to let his Solicitor General (Mr. Bureau) set it aside.

Mr. FIELDING. I have nothing to add to the statement I made on previous occasions as to what I regard as the proper attitude on the part of Dominion officials. As to this particular case I have no knowledge other than that which comes from the discussion to-night, and I do not feel free to express any opinion.

Mr. BLAIN. Surely the hon. gentleman must accept the statement of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that he has seen this man from time to time taking active part in elections. If that statement be true, it is the duty of the government to take immediate action. Does the minister propose to do that?

Mr. FIELDING. I propose to leave the matter in the hands of the Department of Justice.

Mr. BLAIN. Are you going to leave it over until next year?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not feel disposed to make any statement regarding a matter of which I have no knowledge other than that which comes up to-night. I propose to leave it to be dealt with by the Department of Justice.

Mr. BUREAU. I told my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Leonard) in French that I had not heard about this before to-night. I told my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that I did not know Beauchamp in 1902 or until I was appointed Solicitor General. I shall make inquiries, but it would not be fair to require an immediate dismissal without giving the man a hearing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. A great many men have been dismissed without being heard. I do not propose that that should be done in this case. But when we have resolutions concurred in unanimously by this House and adopted by the government as their policy, and when we find that policy violated by the head of this penitentiary, action should be taken and taken directly. Otherwise the will of this House is set at nought and the alleged policy of the government becomes no better than a farce.

Railways and Canals—chargeable to capital—Railways—Intercolonial Railway—to increase accommodation at Halifax, $220,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. minister (Mr. Graham) please explain this?

Mr. GRAHAM. These improvements are under contract. Last year we had a vote of $300,000. But we made better progress with the work than we had anticipated, so that $220,000 is due to the various contractors.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the total amount expended by the government for terminals at Halifax?

Mr. GRAHAM. The amount spent from the beginning is $3,753,188.01.

Mr. HAGGART. Is it not more than that?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is the amount given me by the department.

Mr. HAGGART. What amount will be required to finish this work?

Mr. GRAHAM. The total estimated cost of the work is $1,019,380. The amount spent is $520,000, leaving practically $500,000 yet to be spent.

Mr. HAGGART. What do the improvements consist of?

Mr. GRAHAM. They are as follows:

| | |
|---|---|
| Additional facilities west side Water street.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. ..$ | 173,225 |
| 36 stall engine house.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 175,000 |
| Freight car repair shop.. .. .. .. .. | 75,000 |
| Store house, sand and oil house.. .. | 35,000 |
| Steel concrete chimney and foundation | 4,500 |
| 14 coal pockets and foundation.. .. | 2,500 |
| 100,000-gallon tank.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 5,000 |
| Water supply.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 7,000 |

| | |
|---|---|
| Cinder pits | $ 10,000 |
| Grading in new yard | 51,000 |
| Ballast | 15,000 |
| Tracks | 20,000 |
| Rails in engine house | 3,655 |
| Double tracking, Richmond | 55,000 |
| Heating and piping in new building | 2,000 |
| Sewer in new yard | 10,000 |
| Turnouts | 2,000 |
| Tracks, Richmond yard | 25,000 |
| Locomotive crane | 8,500 |
| Building for power inspectors | 2,000 |
| Wharf and dredging | 328,000 |
| Total | 1,019,280 |

Mr. HAGGART. Does not the minister think that a road completed as long as the Intercolonial, with terminals at Halifax, should have such expenditures as this charged to ordinary expenditure instead of to capital ?

Mr. GRAHAM. We are following as closely as possible the English system under which increases of accommodation are charged to capital account.

Mr. BERGERON. Was it in connection with these works that land was purchased for the government by Mr. Preston ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not quite conversant with that. Land was bought concerning which there has been some discussion.

Mr. BERGERON. I am sure that the deputy minister knows whether the land in this case was that in connection with which Mr. Pearson was engaged.

Mr. GRAHAM. Part of it on the same land.

Rolling stock, $80,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is for the purchase of 50 steel coal cars. We are badly handicapped for rolling stock for the transportation of coal, and we bought 50 cars for which we had not a vote.

Mr. HAGGART. How did the minister get the cars without paying for them ? Or has he got them yet ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The government's credit is good. The cars are promised for immediate delivery, and we expect them in a few days.

Mr. J. D. REID. Are all cars purchased for this railway charged to capital account, or are any charged to revenue ?

Mr. GRAHAM. We buy cars, repair cars and hope to make cars ourselves. But these are steel cars and practically a new thing for us.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister is evading the question. I asked if the government ever charged to revenue account any new cars purchased ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I said they did, and that they made new cars themselves and expect to make more.

Mr. J. D. REID. Were any cars purchased within the last year charged to revenue account ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think so.

Mr. J. D. REID. From what company were they purchased ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Some from Rhodes, Curry & Company.

Mr. J. D. REID. Are they manufacturers of cars ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, large manufacturers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Under what circumstances are cars charged to revenue account ?

Mr. GRAHAM. We are endeavouring to purchase some of these cars to replace those broken down or worn out, charging them to revenue as far as possible. We are trying to adjust that, as I explained a few weeks ago, by putting aside a certain amount $25,000, at the first of every month. The additional rolling stock, we charged to capital, but cars to replace others are charged to revenue.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And this is an absolute addition ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes—this is a thing we never had.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is a plausible way to put it.

Mr. GRAHAM. I did not mean exactly——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought not. Perhaps the minister will explain just what he did mean ?

Mr. GRAHAM. These cars are absolute additions to the rolling stock and are not to replace others.

Mr. HAGGART. Would the minister state what number of cars and engines he has charged to capital account last year ? Has he charged any to revenue ?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is, for the fiscal year just closing ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. We have charged some cars as well as engines to revenue. I will get a statement of them.

Mr. HAGGART. I have the printed return for nine months, and I think that shows only one locomotive charged to revenue.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is for last year, but the hon. gentleman asked me concerning this year.

Mr. HAGGART. That is what is shown by the report for nine months of last year. I find that, at the ordinary rate of depreciation, a long life for a locomotive is fourteen or fifteen years, and, for a car, twenty years. Then you ought to charge to revenue account each year 5 per cent of your rolling stock, and perhaps 8 per cent or 10 per cent of the locomotives.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is the principle, and I think we are getting nearer to it than the department ever did before. As I said previously, we are charging to revenue every month $25,000, or $300,000 per year, and we expect to get an equilibrium established so as to be able to charge everything to revenue that should be charged.

Mr. HAGGART. You don't intend to defend the past, then?

Mr. GRAHAM. Well, if you go very far back, no.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) referred to a certain phenomenon last year, namely, one engine that was charged to revenue. Was there any such phenomenon this year?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think my hon. friend will find nearly a quarter of a million dollars this year placed to revenue, between locomotives and cars.

Mr. HAGGART. What percentage is that of the total value of the locomotives and cars?

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot answer that; I am not sure that any railway makes its calculations on that basis.

Mr. HAGGART. Every railroad allows a certain time for the life of rolling stock; twenty years is a long time. If you keep that rolling stock in repair and replace it, it would mean 5 per cent addition every year to the rolling stock and perhaps 7½ or 10 per cent on the locomotives. We don't find anything of that kind in the hon. gentleman's report.

Mr. STANFIELD. The four motor cars, does the minister charge them to capital or to revenue?

Mr. GRAHAM. To capital account.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister is not charging all the engines and cars that he has purchased during the present year to revenue account? The next time we take up these estimates will he bring a statement showing how many engines and cars during the year just ending were charged to revenue and how many to capital?

Mr. BENNETT. Where are these four motor cars being used and what did they cost a piece?

Mr. GRAHAM. They cost approximately $17,000 each. They are self contained, car and motor. The car carries its own propelling power, which is steam.

Mr. BENNETT. Are they a success?

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. GRAHAM. They are an experiment and we hope they will be successful.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is the minister not aware that these motor cars are an absolute failure for handling freight?

Mr. GRAHAM. They are not for hauling freight; they are for handling passengers for the suburban service, where it does not pay to run trains. We think they will be more economical.

Mr. HAGGART. Let me draw the minister's attention to the amount that he has charged to revenue account for the year ending 31st March, 1907: 1 passenger car, 9 box cars, 11 platform cars, 2 coal cars, and an oil tank.

Mr. STANFIELD. I would call the attention of the minister to a shortage in engines. In Nova Scotia the Lord's Day Alliance want to prosecute the department, and because they cannot sue the government they are getting after the employees. In my own town of Truro an engine that came in on No. 26 train on Saturday night went out the next morning to Springhill and came back, and went out that same evening on No. 9. Now, the people who are employed in the engine shops do not have time to look after the engines properly. The accident at Belmont is supposed to have been caused by lack of inspection. That was before the time of the present minister and before the time of the present deputy minister.

Mr. GRAHAM. We have a new engine house at Truro and are in better shape in that respect than before. We are short of motive power, and we are trying to remedy that as fast as we can. I am afraid we shall have to charge a good deal of that to capital. Another thing that aggravates the situation is the loss of shops by fire at Moncton, which renders it difficult to keep our engines in repair.

Mr. BENNETT. Reading on page 10 of the report of the Department of Railways and Canals, we find that for the year ending 31st March, 1907, there have been, as stated by the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), the following equipment added, and that alone is chargeable to revenue, namely: 1 first-class car, 9 box cars, 11 platform cars, 2 coal cars and 1 oil tank. Now, is the House to understand that for the year mentioned no equipment in the way of cars has been charged up to revenue, and that every other item has gone to capital account?

Mr. GRAHAM. I can hardly answer that directly. The hon. gentleman has named 23 cars; there must be some locomotive power in addition to that.

Mr. BENNETT. Take first the passenger car, what would be about the value of that?

Mr. GRAHAM. About $20,000.

Mr. BENNETT. And the nine box cars ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Perhaps $1,150 each ; that would be about $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT. The eleven platform cars ?

Mr. GRAHAM. About $650 each.

Mr. BENNETT. And the two coal cars ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Probably $2,500 for both.

Mr. BENNETT. These figure up to about $40,000. We often hear of the amount of money charged to the revenue account of the Intercolonial Railway. I have seen it stated repeatedly in the public press that were it not that hundreds of thousands of dollars are taken out of the revenue to add to the stock of the railway, there would be a handsome surplus. The minister's figures prove that for the year ending the 31st March, 1907, there has been taken from the revenue account only about $40,000 for cars, and nothing for locomotives. Does the minister say that that statement, taken from his report, is right or wrong ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The report is correct.

Mr. BENNETT. Then it can go out to the public that the magnificent sum of $40,000 was taken out of receipts to go towards rolling stock, and that a very large amount that was disbursed was charged to capital account. It is just as well that the country should understand where we stand ; and that is an official statement of the minister.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is hardly putting that fairly. He wants the country to understand that we are expending on the maintenance of the road only some $40,000. As a matter of fact, we have been spending since last April $25,000 a month in renewals and betterments.

Mr. BENNETT. Let us confine ourselves to the rolling stock, or rather to cars, because there are no locomotives.

Mr. GRAHAM. I would not agree to that until I have looked over the report myself. It must be borne in mind that, in addition to new rolling stock, a great deal of money is spent on repairing and bettering the rolling stock we have, and this is absolutely new, which under the practice of some roads is charged to capital account.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to ask the minister if a special vote was taken for the four motor cars, which were obtained at a total cost of $68,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. A special vote was taken last year, I think.

Mr. BLAIN. It seems to be rather a large expenditure without the department having fully looked into the matter. Would it not have been better for the department to have constructed one motor car and given it a test before ordering the others ? I understand that these cars are now put out of use altogether, and the minister has almost said to the committee that he looks on them as a failure. May I ask him what he expects from them in the coming year ?

Mr. GRAHAM. We expect them to take care of suburban traffic at places like Halifax, St. John and Moncton, whose citizens live outside of the cities in the summer, and for which it would not pay us to run a regular train. One of these cars was constructed in the old country, and they are a success there. I have been on one of them, and I think they are well fitted to do the work for which they were obtained.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the trouble with them ?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is partly the expense of manning and operating them, which costs much less in the old country than in this country. I believe myself that they will be successful eventually. There is no doubt of their practicability.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has the minister not found that they will not climb the difficult grades?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not think there is any difficulty about that. They will climb any grade we have on the Intercolonial, and a great deal more.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Are they in service now ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The one at St. John is, and the others will be in a short time.

Mr. BLAIN. Where were they manufactured, and what is the name of the firm ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The model car was manufactured in Austria, the others by ourselves in Moncton. The car part was made by Rhodes, Curry & Co., and the engine part at Moncton by our own people.

Mr. J. D. REID. From the statement made by the minister in his report, that only these few cars have been rebuilt or charged to revenue account is a surprise to me after the statement made by the late minister at the last session when, if I understood him aright, he stated that they had changed the system and had adopted the system in use on the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway, which would be carried out from that time forward. Yet here is a statement read from the minister's own report to the effect that only a few thousand dollars for cars are charged in the revenue account. The minister has been showing the people of this country in by-elections during the past year what great results have been achieved on the Intercolonial under the new system that has been adopted ; and to-night, when met face to face, he has to admit that it is the same old system that has been going on for the last ten years, and we have no reason to believe that any other system will be adopted during the next year. To my mind there is something wrong, and we should not be misled in that way. At Halifax the government paid $187,366 to one person for land. Was that land valued and who were the valuators ?

Mr. GRAHAM. That was a very valuable wharfage property belonging to the Cunard Company and everybody to whom I talked in the city of Halifax said it was an exceptionally good bargain. We had it valued, but I do not remember the names just now.

Mr. J. D. REID. We are entitled to know who valued that land.

Mr. GRAHAM. Perhaps unwisely, I did not look upon it as necessary to have all this detailed information on the supplementary estimates to-night but I will be glad to give it on the main estimates.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who is this $220,000 to go to?

Mr. HAGGART. It seems extraordinary that there should be $220,000 earned by somebody in Halifax; it seems queer that on a vote of $300,000 they should have earned $520,000. Who is so well off in Halifax that he can afford to be out of $220,000?

Mr. GRAHAM. This work is divided amongst eight or ten contractors. The contracts were let to the lowest tender in each case but owing to favourable conditions the contractors were able to do more than the work we thought they would be able to preform this year and this is to pay for it. The contracts are not exceeded in any case.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the nature of the work done and who are the contractors ?

Mr. GRAHAM. W. Kitchen, grading the west side; M. E. Keefe, engine house; Rhodes, Curry & Co., freight car repair shops, etc.; Wallberg, store and oilhouse; Dube, coal pockets; Wallberg, cinder pits; Wallberg, heating and lighting.

Mr. J. D. REID. When were these contracts let ? Were they let during the current fiscal year or last year ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Each one of those men has performed more work than was expected but none have exceeded the contract.

Mr. J. D. REID. Cannot the minister state whether these contracts have been let since March 31, 1907 ?

Mr. GRAHAM. They must have been let in 1907, but I cannot say just now definitely as to that.

Mr. J. D. REID. At page W—18 of the Auditor General's Report I find Intercolonial Railway capital Halifax increased accommodation. Is this $220,000 to be paid out under that head and to be added to the amount we have charged in the Auditor General's Report last year ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Oh, yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not see anything of Wallberg, Dube, Rhodes-Curry, in the Auditor General's Report of last year. Were these contracts let since ?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend will see that those whom he has mentioned had contracts last year but these are new contracts made at the beginning of the current year.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have only mentioned Kitchen.

Mr. GRAHAM. You mentioned Keefe.

Mr. J. D. REID. No, I mentioned W. Kitchen. There is another contract, the estate of Beasley Brothers, a contract for removing and dredging out pier 9, $7,096. The minister has not mentioned that. I do not see Wallberg down under increased accommodation at Halifax. He is down under 18 or 19 contracts on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. GRAHAM. Being the lowest tenderer.

Mr. J. D. REID. Not in all cases.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. No, he is not. I can assure the minister that I have seen in the Public Accounts Committee cases where he is not.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Oh, no, you have not, that is a dream.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have, it is not a dream.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not understand my hon. friend. If this were a contract made this year, in 1907, he would not find it in the Auditor General's Report, would he ?

Mr. J. D. REID. This report is up to March, 1907.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am explaining that they are new contracts.

Mr. J. D. REID. Have they all been let since March, 1907 ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think so. The real meaning of it is that these men as contractors have consumed the estimate that the department took last year and have performed work on the same contracts to the extent of $220,000 more.

Mr. BENNETT. Did they receive any payment on account of these works before March 31, 1907, and if so where are they in the Auditor General's Report ?

Mr. GRAHAM. If they received them they would I suppose appear in the report.

Mr. HAGGART. How does the minister enter into contracts of $1,700,000 on a vote of $300,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend knows as an ex-minister that it is customary to enter into a contract for a large amount and only take in the estimate what we expect to spend during that year. My hon. friend would be the first to object if we took more than that amount.

Mr. HAGGART. Then the statement should be made when you take the vote what the total expenditure is estimated at and what amount is to be taken for that year.

Mr. GRAHAM. The explanation would be fully made in the committee before the vote would be given.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister will find these explanations are not as full as he thinks they are.

Mr. FIELDING. It is not unusual to enter into a contract for a larger sum than is voted but the contract usually contains a provision that it is subject to a vote from time to time. I do not know as to this particular contract but this is the practice.

Mr. J. D. REID. Can the minister give us particulars as to date, amount, &c., of this contract with Wallberg ?

Mr. GRAHAM. One contract is for a store and oil house, cinder pits, another is heating and lighting. He was the lowest tenderer in every case.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister should be able to give the dates and full particulars of each contract.

Mr. GRAHAM. These same matters will probably come up in the main estimates.

Mr. BLAIN. In the Auditor General's Report at page W—367 I see a letter from the Auditor General dated February 7, 1907, commencing :

Sir,—With this please find vouchers amounting of $4,115.41 in favour of R. T. MacIlreith, for legal services charged to Intercolonial Railway, increased accommodation at Halifax.

Would the minister give us an explanation of this item ?

Mr. GRAHAM. This was of course all taxed by the Law Department. In expropriations of this kind there is always a great deal of legal expense.

Mr. BOYCE. When we ask for information concerning this item of $4,000 paid a legal gentleman, we are told that the item is all right because it must have been taxed.

Mr. GRAHAM. I said it was taxed.

Mr. BOYCE. Then the hon. minister ought to be able to tell us something about it. I am curious to know what services could have been rendered for this $4,000, and what was the bill put in originally which was reduced by the Department of Justice ?

Mr. GRAHAM. As a legal man, my hon. friend is not fair in saying that I have given no information. I gave as much as he would get in a lawyer's bill. As a matter of fact there were some twenty or thirty properties which had to be expropriated and the transfers of titles completed and the other necessary legal proceedings taken, and I think the charge was as reasonable as one you could expect from a legal practitioner.

Mr. BLAIN. The point is what are the services which were charged for ?

Mr. GRAHAM. What more information can I give? As a matter of fact this has been already investigated before the Public Accounts committee.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend will see by the letter of the Auditor General, page W—367, that he wanted the vouchers in order to put them before the Public Accounts Committee, and they were for services rendered down to June 30, 1906.

St. Rosalie—improvements, $20,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is where the Intercolonial Railway connects with the Grand Trunk Railway. The estimated expense was $138,900.

Mr. HAGGART. What was the amount paid last year ?

Mr. GRAHAM. $56,000 was voted for this current year but the contractor got on faster with the work than was anticipated and has earned $76,000.

The improvements consists of :—

| | |
|---|---|
| Water supply.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $ 7,000 |
| Engine house.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 20,000 |
| Buildings for stores and offices.. .. | 3,500 |
| Sewers and drains.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 1,000 |
| Cinder pit.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 3,000 |
| Turntable.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 5,400 |
| Grading, masonry, tracks and ballast.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 71,000 |
| Land (18:19 acres) and legal expenses.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 25,000 |
| Coaling pockets.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 3,000 |
| Total.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 138,900 |

Mr. HAGGART. What is the estimate of the total cost of the work ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The contractor is J. P. Morin. Tenders were called for by poster and newspaper advertisement. There were two tenderers, Morin being the lowest. The estimated cost of the work is $138,900.

To increase accommodation at Pictou, $12,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is to pay the final estimatae for the sea wall, filling, engine-house, pump and water service. E. A. Wallberg is the contractor, being the lowest out of seven tenderers. The amount of his contract is $62,520.

Mr. HAGGART. How was water pumped there before ? We want some idea why this should be charged to capital account.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am told that whatever service they had there before was very amateur.

Mr. STANFIELD. The city water in Pictou is bad for the boilers.

Mr. BOYCE. Who is the engineer who certifies the completion of work ?

Mr. GRAHAM. W. D. McKenzie.

Mr. BOYCE. Who is this man A. C. Selig who has done some certifying on Mr. Wallbergs' contracts?

Mr. GRAHAM. He is assistant engineer.

Mr. BOYCE. I would draw the attention of the minister to a matter referred to by the Auditor General on this Wallberg contract. I may say that the Wallberg contract is open to very grave suspicion, as shown by the evidence before the Public Accounts Committee. At pages W—369 and 370, there are letters which show that Mr. Selig has been in the habit of certifying for Mr. Wallberg before the work is completed. I desire to put on record a letter of the Auditor General of January 25, as follows :

Sir,—Let me acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 22, in answer to my telegram of same date, concerning an outstanding cheque for $3,540 in favour of E. A. Wallberg, for final estimate on tanks at Truro and Rivière du Loup.

The final estimate in question, dated June 30, was received at this office July 7; and it was approved and returned to Moncton July 9. The cheque for $3,540 is still outstanding, and my telegram of January 22 asked for an explanation.

Your answer is: 'This cheque is retained in the custody of the treasurer of the railway, and has not been issued to Wallberg; because although all the work for these tanks has been completed, yet the testing of them, which has to be done by the railway, has not yet been done. The railway had to put in the water pipes connecting with the tanks, and these have not been put in; so that the testing could not be carried out.'

The local engineer should not have certified that the work was completed until he knew that it was satisfactory. In similar cass, a deduction is usually made, to cover any expense which may arise from possible unsatisfactory work, and the balance is paid as a further progress estimate.

It is a curious fact that the same complaint is made with regard to the same engineer's certificate in relation to a contract of Mr. Wallberg, at Stellarton. I give a quotation from a letter of January 26, 1907, from the Auditor General to the general manager of government railways :

This means, I suppose, that the work was not completed until shortly before December 24, 1906, the date when the cheque was released. If this supposition is erroneous, please send the correct date.

If completion was not had until December 1906, the certificate on the voucher of June 30 is not correct, which reads: 'I certify that the work described in the within account, amounting to $2,441, has been performed. (Sgd.) A. C. Selig, assistant engineer.'

If Mr. Selig has certified to the performance of work which had not been done, he should give a full explanation of his reason for doing so.

No explanation is given by Mr. Selig. There are other cases in which the same sort of certificate has been given and cheque issued before the work was actually performed. I would ask an explanation as to how the public interest is safeguarded.

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) will see that he is mistaken. The cheque was not issued——

Mr. BOYCE. It was issued, but held.

Mr. GRAHAM. It was held by the treasurer of the railway.

Mr. BOYCE. But Mr. Selig certified that the work was completed before it was completed, and upon this the cheque was issued by the Auditor General, and then held. But the reason for it being held was the exception taken by the Auditor General.

Mr. GRAHAM. While the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) may be correct as to the fault of certifying before the work was done, yet the inference that there was any chance of Wallberg being paid until the work was fully tested is not justified.

Mr. BOYCE. Had it not been for the Auditor General, he would have been paid.

Mr. GRAHAM. No, the Auditor Genral did not retain the cheque, and had nothing to do with retaining it. As a matter of fact the work was practically completed so far as the assistant engineer could certify to it, but the department had not tested the work and the cheque was held until the work was tested.

Mr. BOYCE. Does the minister quarrel with the principle laid down by the Auditor General in this letter ?

The local engineer should not have certified that the work was completed until he knew it was satisfactory.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is not going to put me in that place. I told him that possibly there was something to complain of in the action of the assistant engineer—that it would have been better for him to wait until the test had been made. But I was explaining what was done. There was no chance of loss on the part of the department, for the cheque was not given until the test was made.

Mr. J. D. REID. There have been many cases in which these cheques are issued, and the Auditor General's duty is not to issue the cheque until he gets——

Mr. GRAHAM. He does not issue the cheque. These cheques are issued from Moncton.

Mr. J. D. REID. They are on the Auditor General.

Mr. GRAHAM. No, they are on the Bank of Montreal.

Mr. J. D. REID. Must not the Auditor General transfer the amount to the department?

Mr. GRAHAM. He transfers a credit amount. I approve of his suggestion that the assistant engineer should not have certified until the test was made.

Railways and Canals—chargeable to capital—Railways—miscellaneous—to pay Canadian Pacific Railway compensation for right of way, $600.

Mr. BENNETT. At what place ?

Mr. GRAHAM. This is an old story. When the British Columbia section was being handed over to the Canadian Pacific Railway, a similar portion of land was included for which no clear title could be given. That was in 1885 I think. Recently the title was perfected and the Canadian Pacific Railway paid the owner the price $600. This is to refund that amount.

Post Office—to provide for the appointment of Messrs. Robert Durston, letter carrier, and R. W. Hynds, porter in the Toronto office, to the senior third class, at $800 a year each, from the 1st April, 1907, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service or Post Office Acts, $1,600.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. Durston is an expert in organizing the free letter delivery system in cities. He came from the old country some years ago and is a very able man. Unfortunately he came into the service late, and for that reason we wish to give him this increase. We are extending the system of free delivery to cities with a population of 10,000 and a revenue of $20,000. Mr. Hynds is 51 years of age, he is an able accountant, and by reason of his special ability he has been promoted.

To complete payments for mail service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1908, $52,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX. This is to establish new post offices and to open new postal routes in the western provinces. There has been for two or three years past a demand for the extension of the postal service in new districts of the western country, and there has also been a demand for free rural letter delivery. The revenues at the disposal of the department have not been large enough to meet all these demands. But we are extending the mail service constantly. Where we formerly gave a tri-weekly service or a semi-weekly service, we are to-day practically giving a daily service.

Miscellaneous—further amount required, $48,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX. This vote is asked for in consequence of the general increase in all branches of the postal service. An additional amount will be required for printing, stationery, and various items of miscellaneous expenditure, such as letter carriers' uniforms, wages of labourers, telephones and telegraphs.

Charges of management—additional amount required for printing and engraving Dominion notes, $35,000.

Mr. FIELDING. An additional sum is required owing to the fact of an enlarging circulation and the desire to have a cleaner currency. It is an item which must increase every year with the increase in the volume of currency.

Department of Finance and Treasury Board contingencies—further amount required, $1 500.

Mr. FIELDING. This is to purchase a couple of adding machines costing about $1,200, and the balance is for odds and ends in the department.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. HAGGART. What business to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. We will resume the Budget debate.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.05 a.m. Wednesday.

---

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, March 25, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

PRIVILEGE—GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS.

Mr. D. W. BOLE (Winnipeg). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I find in the parliamentary report in the Montreal 'Gazette' of this morning the following:

During discussion of the $50,000 additional for penitentiaries. Messrs. Blain and Bennett proved by the Auditor General's Report that supplies for penal institutions had been purchased from Senator Campbell's flour mill at Toronto, the D. W. Bole Drug Company of Winnipeg, and Senator Edwards' Lumber Company, Mr. Bennett said that the Justice Department had generally been held to be above board. However, senators and members seemed to be permitted to browse in these green and fertile fields.

Further on is this paragraph:

Mr. Henderson thought it curious that the lowest tenderer chanced to be a firm which had associated with it a senator or member of parliament. There was grave ground for suspicion.

On the editorial page of the same paper I find the following:

It was shown in the House of Commons that the government bought penitentiary supplies from corporations in which Senators Archie Campbell and Edwards and Mr. Bole, M.P., were interested. The government evidently knows supporters when they are to be seen and also understands how to encourage them.

As I was not present in the House yesterday, I was not aware what all this pertained to until I read 'Hansard' this morning. I have to state that this is the first knowledge I had that my company did business to the extent of $142 or any other amount with this government. I wish to state that I have never, either before I became a member of parliament or since, asked this government or any other government for any patronage. Further than that, no member of my company since its organization has to my knowledge solicited business from this government or from any other government. If any business has been done with this government, it has been in the usual course of business, and it must have been solicited by some officer of the government or it would not have been done.

QUESTIONS.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked:

1. What is the estimated length of the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway, (a) from Winnipeg to Quebec, (b) from Quebec to Moncton, according to present information?
2. What is the estimated average cost per mile?
3. On what are these estimates based?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). I was informed in my department this morning that a return has been asked for covering the same matter as the question and that it is being prepared.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I adopted that course, not knowing which would be the most convenient and the most expeditious.

Mr. GRAHAM. We are working on the return, and it will be brought down as soon as possible. If the hon. gentleman wants an answer to the question, I will get it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is not necessary if the return will be brought down at an early date.

Mr. GRAHAM. It will be.

Mr. BOLE.

STONEY LAKE DOCK.

Mr. BENNETT asked:

1. Has the government constructed a dock on island number 19 'a' Stoney lake, Ontario?
2. If so, who is the owner of the island above referred to, and was the part of the island on which the dock is built purchased by the government? If so, what was paid for same?
3. Have any docks been constructed in said lake on the island by the government since 1896?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). I cannot find from the officers of my department that any work has been done by the Public Works Department on that island. Whether or not any has been done by the Department of Railways and Canals I do not know.

Mr. BENNETT. It will be in one department or the other. For reference, the island is owned by Mr. James R. Stratton, formerly a member of the Ross administration in Ontario.

SERVICE OF D. B. DOWLING.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked:

Was D. B. Dowling, of the Geological Survey Department, when absent from the service of the department from May 1 to October 1, 1907, in the service and pay of the German Development Company?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). The department does not know if Mr. Dowling was employed and paid by the German Development Company while absent without pay from the department.

TORONTO ISLAND SUBWAY.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens) asked:

1. Has a deputation waited on the Minister of Public Works, respecting the construction of a tunnel between the city of Toronto and Toronto island, as reported in a special despatch to the 'Globe' newspaper on the 15th instant? If so, has the minister promised a survey?
2. What is the object of the proposed tunnel, and what is the estimated length?
3. How many permanent residents live on Toronto island?
4. Did honourable Senator Jaffray and Mr. M. J. Haney, president of the Reform Association, Toronto, from a part of the deputation?
5. Does the government propose to survey or build the tunnel at Toronto before taking any steps to build the tunnel under the straits of Northumberland?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. A deputation consisting of representatives of the board of control and harbour commissioners of Toronto, also of other citizens of that city, recently waited upon me, respecting the co-operation by the Department of Public Works with the city of Toronto in constructing a subway under the new west channel which the government propose making for the accommodation and safety of shipping. I have promised to have an examination and report made with a view of ascertaining the necessity for the work and the cost without in any way committing either the government or the department to its construction.

2. The object of the proposed subway, as stated to me by the deputation, is to afford a means for carriages, street cars and foot passengers to pass and repass between Toronto Island and the city. Its estimated length is 400 feet, besides the approaches.

3. I am unable to answer this question at present.

4. Senator Jaffray and Mr. W. J. Haney formed a part of the deputation.

5. The government has not considered the question of building such subway. I am unable to see what connection the making or not making of a survey, or the building or not building of the subway at Toronto has with the construction of a tunnel under the Strait of Northumberland.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the minister if the proposed sending of an engineer there will cause any expense to the department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not imagine so. We have a resident engineer at Toronto, and he will not be paid anything extra for his services in connection with the matter.

STONEY LAKE DAMAGE CLAIMS.

Mr. BENNETT asked:

1. Were any claims made by the owners of island in Stoney lake, Ontario, for damage done by flooding in the past three years?

2. If so, what claims, if any, were allowed and what are the names of the persons and amounts given to same for damages or otherwise?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Yes, a number of claims were sent into the department.

2. Mr. W. R. Aylesworth, of Belleville, Ont., who was appointed commissioner to investigate the above claims, recommended the settlement of the following, viz.:

| | |
|---|---|
| Honourable James R. Stratton et ux, whose claim was paid by authority of an order in council, dated 10th June, 1907, amount of which was.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $ 500 |
| Richard B. Jeffrey, settlement recommended in September, 1907. | 25 |
| Township of Verulam, settlement recommended in October, 1907.. | 2,000 |
| James Tighe, settlement recommended in October, 1907.. .. .. | 225 |

This list of claims will, in all probability, be added to when the commissioner makes his final report.

QUEBEC BRIDGE FINANCES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked:

1. How much money have the people of Canada contributed by way of (a) subsidy, (b) loan, (c) bond guarantee, (d) any other mode of advance or contribution, to the cost of the Quebec bridge?

2. What has been the cost of the Quebec bridge to date?

3. What is the estimated cost of completing the said bridge?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

1. (a) By chapter 7. Acts of 1899, the government appropriated $1,000,000 as subsidy for the Quebec bridge. Of this, $374,353 was paid. The remainder of the subsidy was released and cancelled by the schedule agreement to chapter 54 of the Acts of 1903.

(b) Under the provisions of chapter 35, Acts of 1907, the government have avanced $2,000,000 to the Quebec Bridge Company, and, in connection with such loan, have received guaranteed bonds to the amount of £478,700, being portion of securities referred to in subsection (c) of this answer.

(c) Chapter 54, Acts of 1903, authorized the government to guarantee the Bridge Company's bonds to the amount of $6,678,-200. The bonds were guaranteed accordingly and delivered to a trust company to be applied to the purposes of the bridge undertaking. These bonds have not been issued to the public. They were used by the Bridge Company has collateral in the raising of loans from the banks to the amount, including interest to the 30th of June, 1907, of $5,561,507.23. The advance by the government of $2,000,000 above mentioned has been applied in reduction of this indebtedness.

(d) The Bridge Company advises that the cost of the bridge, including Chaudière bridge and the railway approaches, to March 1, 1908, was $6,899,033.03, to which is to be added interest from June 30, 1907, on the advances for which the bonds of the company were pledged.

2. The cost above mentioned includes for customs duty, harbour dues and fees, $510,-288.73.

3. No estimate has yet been made of the cost of reconstruction.

OTONABEE POWER COMPANY, PETERBOROUGH.

Mr. BENNETT. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Railways to a question which I asked on the 23rd. I was not here when it was answered, but if the minister will refer to it, he will find it was not answered when asked. The question and answer were:

Mr. BENNETT—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

What amount of horse-power was paid for by the Otonabee Power Company, of Peterborough, in last fiscal year?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The lease to the Otonabee Power Company, of Peterborough, was for the right to use all the surplus water, estimated at the time at 625 horse-power.

The minister will see that the question asked is what they paid for it, and I wish he would have it looked up again.

Mr. GRAHAM. I see the difference.

ALLEGED IMMIGRATION FRAUDS, HALIFAX.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would ask the Minister of the Interior whether he has any further information to submit to the House in respect to the alleged frauds upon the Immigration Department at Halifax?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I am able to afford some information, but not at length. The information I have is that the letters signed W. Dodds were written by Dr. Hugh L. Dickey.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it the intention of the government to lay the report of the Civil Service Commission on the table today?

Mr. FIELDING. I hope to lay the report on the table before six o'clock, but if the papers are not ready then I shall submit it the first thing to-morrow.

INQUIRY FOR REPORT.

Mr. BENNETT. I would ask one of the ministers to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the fact that the report of Mr. Victor Gaudet, appointed to inquire into certain affairs at the Sorel shipyard, has not yet been placed on the table.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding, that the Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Mr. H. H. MILLER (South Grey). The gentleman who last took part in this debate, the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Thompson), occupied but a very short time, and yet in that time he made an announcement that seemed to be of special importance to himself and to afford a great deal of comfort to our friends upon the other side of the House. They are as welcome to that comfort and enjoyment as they are entitled to it and as entitled to it as they are welcome. For my part, I congratulate the hon. member of the Yukon on his taking at this late date a step that perhaps it would have been better for him to have taken at an earlier date.

Most of us are somewhat prejudiced in our political leanings. We are biased by our early political upbringing. I find that the hon. member for the Yukon has not been an exception in this respect, that he is a Conservative and a member of an old Conservative family. Referring to the 'Parliamentary Guide,' published at the beginning of this parliament, I find in the short biographical sketch of the hon. member—a sketch founded, I have no doubt, like all the others in that book, upon statements made by the member himself—that the hon. member was at that time a Conservative, and did not claim to be anything else. But it was stated in that sketch that the hon. gentleman chose to run in the last campaign, not as a Conservative, but as an independent. That is to say, he chose to ride for the time being under colours not his own for purposes best known to himself—and it may be to the electors in his own constituency. In his short address of probably ten or twelve minutes upon Friday last the hon. member criticised what he was pleased to call the extravagance of this government, and to find fault with their administration of affairs in the west, particularly as to the public lands and as to the granting of certain fishing leases in some of the smaller lakes in the remote and isolated parts of the west. It is passing strange that the hon. gentleman sat in this House for four years without, by his voice or vote, raising any objection to any of the expenditures that he now describes as extravagant, and that he offered no objection to any of the transactions with which he now finds fault. If there has been extravagance, if there has been mal-administration, it was not only his right, but his duty, during the time that he sat in the House, when these transactions were being negotiated, to have raised an objection.

I say I congratulate the hon. member for having taken at this date a step that perhaps he ought to have taken long ago. He must have found it very uncomfortable to have to resort to the things he had to resort to, and to take the course he had to take in order to preserve his role as an independent member of the House. I have said he did not protest either by voice or vote against any action of the government. Neither did he very strongly support the policy of our friends of the opposition. The fact is that in many instances the hon. gentleman absented himself from the vote, either paired with some member of the Liberal party or without a pair, and it was only upon very rare occasions that he voted at all. I am very sure that, during the remainder of the time he may sit as a member of this House, whether a longer or a shorter period, he will find it much more comfortable for himself, and he will respect himself more, and perhaps be more worthy the respect of others, if he appear in his own true colours rather than in colours assumed for the time being, for whatever reason. We on this side have not suffered loss, for we cannot lose that which we never had. I will say this for the hon. gentleman, who is not present, and who, I believe, has returned to his home, that, during the time he has sat as a member of this House, he has always conducted himself as a gentleman, and has received, and not only received but merited, the good will and good feeling of every member of the House on both sides. I am sure that the announcement he chose to make on Friday last will not lessen the respect in which we hold him, nor will the kindly feeling which we on our side of the House extend to him be affected.

Immediately preceding the hon. member for Yukon, we had a speech of some length and some interest from the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. E. D. Smith). It seemed to be the particular desire of that hon. gentleman to reach for the scalp of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). In the first place, he scored the Minister of Agriculture on the ground that the hon. minister had not made sufficient endeavours to have removed the embargo imposed upon our cattle by the government of Great Britain. I do not think that the Minister of Agriculture can be successfully criticised on that line. I do not think he has missed any opportunity or that he had lacked in industry in his endeavour to have that embargo removed, Sir, although the Minister of Agriculture has a very great deal of influence in the affairs of this country, we cannot expect and do not believe that he controls the parliament of Great Britain or that he can force the authorities of Great Britain to remove the embargo. But, very soon after the criticism to which I have referred, the hon. member for Wentworth, endeavouring to belittle the Minister of Agriculture, said that the only thing that hon. gentleman had succeeded in doing was one of no consequence, the removal of the quarantine regulations that had practically barred from the United States market the store cattle of Canada that, since the removal of these quarantine regulations, we have been enabled to send to the United States. If it would be a good thing to remove the British embargo upon our cattle, it was a good thing that the minister succeeded, as he did, in removing the quarantine regulations that prevented our farmers and stock raisers from sending their stock into the markets of the United States; for the cattle that we are prevented from sending to Great Britain by the embargo are our store cattle and the same class of animals that we are now enabled to send to the United States because of the removal of these quarantine regulations to which I have referred.

The hon. member for Wentworth then asked the question: Has this government during the past ten years opened up any new markets? That is an important question; let us consider it fairly. The hon. member for Wentworth will admit that, as the figures will prove, our exports have wonderfully and marvellously increased under Liberal administration. Then, one or other of two things must be true—either we have succeeded in finding new markets, or we have greatly increased our exports to the existing markets and our dealings with our old customers. I ask the hon. member for Wentworth, as a business man, as a successful business man, whether he would not prefer, in his own business, to increase his sales to his old customers, whose names he has on his books, with whose methods of trade he is conversant, and upon whom he has learned that he may rely, rather than increase trade by finding new customers with whom he is not acquainted? Speaking of the British preference, the hon. gentleman (Mr. E. D. Smith) asked: Are we benefited by the preference? He did not answer that question. And I leave it for the people of this country to answer for themselves. The hon. gentleman asked also: Is it any great advantage to our people that we can get goods at one-third less duty? I point out that hon. members on the other side of the House are inconsistent. They accuse this government of adding immensely to the taxation—as they choose to speak of it—wrung from the people by our customs duties, and yet, when, by means of the British preference, a large proportion of the goods imported into this country come in under duties reduced by one-third, they ask: Is that removal of taxation any particular benefit to the people? But the hon. gentleman asks a third question: Are the manufacturers satisfied with the British preference? It seems strange to me that so many members on the Conservative side of this House do not seem to be able to see beyond the manufacturers. I do not look lightly upon the manufacturers; I am ready to admit that, under Liberal administration, the manufacturers of Canada have done a great deal for themselves, and, in doing a great deal for themselves, have done a great deal for the country. Canadian manufacturers for the past ten or twelve years have done much for the development of our resources, the advertising of our country and the adding to our national wealth. At the same time, they have been making themselves rich as they never did in any preceding period of equal length or under any other government. But, I ask the hon. member for Wentworth, are there no other people in this country to consider than the manufacturers, no other people whom we may consult as to the benefits that have accrued under the British preference and the throwing off of one-third the customs duties? Are there not workmen in the factories and workshops making their living by their daily labour? Are there not farmers tilling our soil? Are there not men working for these farmers ? Are there not the professional classes and the men employed upon salary in the various undertakings throughout Canada ? And are not the interests of these people to be considered as well as the interest of the manufacturer? And may we not ask ourselves the question, have these people been benefited by the British preference and the removal of one-third of these duties ?

The hon. member for Wentworth then sought to draw a contrast between this country and other nations of the world to prove that we have not made a greater percentage of increase in the value of our trade in recent years than other nations have done. And with what nations did he make comparison ? With Germany ?—with Great Britain ?—with the United States ? No, Sir, it would not have suited his purpose to have made comparison with these nations. He compared the progress of Canada with the progress made by Japan, Argentine and Mexico. Mr. Speaker, we contend that Canada was fairly fast asleep under the Conservative administration ; that there was not much life in Canada during the eighteen years when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power ; but we will hardly go so far as to compare the somnolent condition in which we were during these eighteen years with the long sleep of centuries which enwrapped the people of Japan, Argentine and Mexico. The hon. member for Wentworth himself said that Japan, a few years ago, was regarded as a half civilized nation, and was looked upon with scorn. Yet it is with such nations that he makes comparisons in setting forth the condition of Canada to-day.

The hon. member for Wentworth says that we have boasted that we have spent $100,000 for Atlantic steamer cold storage. I am sorry the hon. gentleman is not here, for I would like to know what he endeavoured to make us understand when he spoke of an expenditure of $100,000 for Atlantic steamer cold storage. Did he mean yearly expenditure, or a total expenditure of $100,000 during the eleven years this government has been in power? He not being here to answer the question, and I not knowing what he meant by his figures and words, I desire to turn up the records and see what has been the amount expended by this government for cold storage in the years during which they have been in office. First, I will quote the figures for cold storage from the year this government came into power, aye, and give the figures for the year preceding up to the time that we ceased to assist and bonus Atlantic steamers for cold storage. Let me say here that we have not paid any bonuses for cold storage on Atlantic steamers since the year 1901, and we have not paid any bonuses for cooled air storage upon the Atlantic steamers since 1903, which was the last year when we had any expenditure for anything of this kind.

Expenditure for cold storage from year to year since its inception to the time it was withdrawn from the ocean service:

| | |
|---|---|
| 1895-1896 | $ 16,741 00 |
| 1896-1897 | 29,518 09 |
| 1897-1898 | 27,087 83 |
| 1898-1899 | 45,695 61 |
| 1899-1900 | 24,538 77 |
| 1900-1901 | 27,002 76 |
| 1901-1902 | 30,028 92 |
| 1902-1903 | 39,708 31 |
| 1903-1904 | 30,940 85 |
| | 254,521 14 |

Now the hon. member spoke of ventilation chambers upon Atlantic steamers by means of fans, and said that this ventilation was usually of as much effect as the cold storage and that could be had without any expense to this government. Let me say that that is not an original idea with the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. E. D. Smith), but it originated with the hon. the Minister of Agriculture in 1901, as may be seen from the report of that minister for the year 1902. I have shown to the House that the total expenditure for cold storage by this government was something about $250,000. Let us see some of the benefits that have accrued to the country, and especially to the farmers by that expenditure, and again it will be necessary for me to quote some figures. For that purpose I invite your attention to the exports in the articles of eggs, butter, cheese, bacon, ham and pork.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that all these articles were exported in cold storage ?

Mr. MILLER. That is my understanding and my information. We will start with 1895, the year before the Conservative government started in with the ice cold storage by their expenditure of $16,000, and we will continue to the date the expenditure ended on the new system in 1903 :

| Year. | Eggs. | Butter. | Cheese. | Bacon, Ham and Pork. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | $ | $ | $ | $ |
| 1895.... | 807,990 | 697,476 | 14,253,002 | 3,839,145 |
| 1896.... | 807,086 | 1,952,089 | 13,966,571 | 4,446,884 |
| 1897.... | 978,479 | 2,089,173 | 14,676,239 | 5,871,988 |
| 1898.... | 1,255,304 | 2,046,686 | 17,572,763 | 8,092,930 |
| 1899.... | 1,267,063 | 3,700,873 | 16,776,765 | 10,473,211 |
| 1900 ... | 1,457,902 | 5,122,156 | 19,856,324 | 12,803,034 |
| 1901.... | 1,691,640 | 3,295,663 | 20,696,951 | 11,829,820 |
| 1902.... | 1,733,242 | 5,660,541 | 19,686,291 | 12,457,863 |
| 1903.... | 1,436,130 | 6,954,618 | 24,712,943 | 16,029,269 |

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Were all these exported in cold storage ?

Mr. MILLER. That is my understanding, and I think the hon. gentleman will find upon investigation that the whole or nearly the whole of these exports were by cold storage.

Mr. OWEN. Why does the hon. gentleman stop at the year 1903 ? Why not give us 1904, 1905 and 1906 ?

Mr. MILLER. Because that is the last year when this government paid any bonus for either cold storage or cold air storage on the Atlantic steamers. Let me point out also that the total of agricultural exports from this country being the produce of Canada, for the decade from 1887 to 1896 under the Conservative administration was $451,938,000, whereas the total exports of Canadian farm produce under the Liberal administration was $953,980,000, or more than double. But hon. gentlemen, especially those who are agriculturists, will realize that our cold storage system did not apply to a large part of our Canadian farm products. The three exports that were chiefly benefited by our cold storage system were the items of butter, cheese, bacon and ham. Under the Liberal administration these three items, assisted by cold storage, made up 63 per cent of the total exports of farm products, and had it not been for the wonderful increase in our exports of wheat, then these three items, assisted by cold storage, would have formed 75 per cent of our total exports of farm produce, while under our Conservative friends in the next preceding ten years the exports of these three particular items amounted to only 48 per cent of the total of our Canadian agricultural exports. But now, in order to make comparisons or draw contrasts, let us look at the figures as they stood in the United States for the very same period and let it be remembered that during this time the people of the United States were clinging to the old style, out-of-date system of ice storage which was introduced into this country in the last year of the Conservative administration. In order not to take up too much of the time of the House I will confine myself to the figures with reference to cheese and butter and we find that in the United States the exports of cheese and butter, during the same length of time, when our exports were so largely increasing, were just as largely diminishing and decreasing. The exports of cheese from the United States were, during exactly the same period of time as follows : In 1895 there was exported of cheese from the United States, $5,497,539 worth and, without quoting the figures year by year, by 1903 their exports of cheese had fallen from above five and a half million dollars to $2,250,229, and their exports of butter had fallen off from $2,937,203, in 1896, and $4,493,364, in 1897, to $1,604,327, in 1903. That is, I think, sufficient evidence of the efficiency of the cold storage system inaugurated by our Minister of Agriculture and the splendid benefits that have accrued to the farmers of Canada under that same system.

The hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith) paid especial attention to the item of butter and he said :

> Butter does not require a very efficient cold storage system ; it may be kept at any temperature below freezing point.

Then, the hon. gentleman went on to say that surely it would not be a very difficult thing for us to maintain a cold storage system by which we could keep the temperature below the freezing point ; and further that one would naturally expect our exports of butter to have increased rather than to have decreased. The hon. gentleman quoted the figures of 1905, of 1906 and of 1907 to show that we were exporting less butter to-day than we were a few years ago, and he endeavoured to blame it upon the lack of efficiency of the cold storage system. I would like to answer what the hon. gentleman said in 1908 by the words of the same hon. gentleman which he uttered in this House in a debate in March, 1907. In 1908 the hon. gentleman says that butter does not require a very efficient cold storage system, that it may be kept at any temperature below freezing point. What he said in this House on the 21st day of March, 1907, can be found upon 'Hansard' revised edition, page 5129, as follows :

> I am bound to say that now most of the steamers carrying butter in cold storage are carrying it at a temperature below freezing point. The minister has said in his report at one time that it should be carried at 10, and at another time at 20. I am not going to cavil about the exact temperature. If the butter is carried below freezing point, I dare say, it is not so very bad after all.

So, we have the hon. member for Wentworth effectually answering in 1907 the criticism that the same hon. member has given to us in 1908 and what he says ought to be done is exactly what he says has been done. The hon. member next devoted his attention to the Fruit Marks Act and he said :

> I think it is a good Act.

So far that is an endorsement of the Fruit Marks Act, but to have allowed it to remain there would have been to give credit to the Minister of Agriculture that the hon. member for Wentworth did not want to give him, and he said that while the Fruit Marks Act is a good Act it was practically framed by the fruit growers of Canada. I do not know whether that be true or untrue, but suppose it to be true, what does it show ? It shows that we have in Canada to-day a Minister of Agriculture who is a man big enough to be willing to accept good suggestions from wherever they may come. Who ought to be better able than the fruit growers of Canada to suggest to the minister what would be good legislation for the betterment of their condition and the possible improvement of the business in which they are engaged, or who were in a position to offer better and wiser suggestions, than these same fruit growers? I say to the cattle breeders of Canada, I say to the members of the Sheep Breeders' Association, the Swine Breeders' Association, to the men who are interested in the breeding of horses and cattle, and to the members of the various Farmers' Associations, that upon the testimony of the hon. member for Wentworth we have as Minister of Agriculture at Ottawa a man who is willing to listen to their suggestions as to legislation that would be a benefit to them and is willing to put their suggestions, in the shape of legislation, upon the statute-books of Canada. No higher praise could be bestowed upon the Minister of Agriculture than has unconsciously been bestowed upon him by the hon. member for Wentworth. The hon. gentleman has said that two years ago there was a convention of Canadian fruit growers in Ottawa, and that the gentlemen who attended that convention had their fares paid and he thought their time paid by the Minister of Agriculture. The hon. member has given the fruit growers of Canada credit for having less enterprise than they really have. The Minister of Agriculture paid to a certain limited number of delegates five cents a mile, one way, the shortest route, from their homes to Ottawa to attend the convention and paid them $2 a day for their expenses for a time not exceeding three days. But the hon. member for Wentworth again says that at that convention of fruit growers a resolution was passed that was condemnatory of the Minister of Agriculture, and that because of that resolution condemning him there has not since been a further convention of fruit growers in this country. The hon gentleman was mistaken. There was no such resolution passed at that convention. There was no resolution passed at that convention that was condemnatory of the Minister of Agriculture. The hon. member for Wentworth said that it was a resolution suggesting that the fruit growing department of the work of this government be placed under a separate head subservient to the Minister of Agriculture. I will admit that the particular delegates at that convention, whose duty it was to frame resolutions, did frame a resolution having that in view, but that resolution was not submitted to the meeting for the simple reason that the Minister of Agriculture said that he would like to discuss the question before having it submitted; and, the time of the convention being taken up with other things apparently greater of importance, it was not submitted at all. If it was not submitted it could not have been passed.

Mr. MILLER.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If the Minister of Agriculture passed by the resolution and said that it would be taken up later and if the convention closed without it being taken up was it not the fault of the Minister of Agriculture that it was not brought forward?

Mr. MILLER. Not entirely, because if anybody afterwards had brought that matter to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture who was in the chair there is not the slightest doubt that it would have been submitted, but it is not fair to say that the resolution was passed when the fact is it was not submitted at all. But, this is not a case of the hon. member for Wentworth saying what he knew was incorrect. I do not think that he did it intentionally, but I think he was mistaken. I think that what he had in his mind was a resolution moved by the Rev. Father Burke, of Prince Edward Island, and seconded by Mr. Martin Burwell, of British Columbia, in which the convention resolved to give to the Minister of Agriculture a very hearty vote of thanks and it is said that that resolution was carried with very great enthusiasm by the convention.

That resolution conveyed to the Minister of Agriculture the thanks of the members of the convention for bringing them together as he had done and for his personal interest in the matters that were of vital importance to them, and for the many pieces of useful legislation they had had at his hands. The member for Wentworth has said that the Fruit Marks Act is a good Act, but that it has not been well administered, and he has said that the penalties under that Act have been too light to accomplish any useful purpose. This again is not an idea that has originated with the member for Wentworth, because it was stated in the newspaper press some time ago upon the authority of the Minister of Agriculture himself that the fines had been shown to be too light, and that it was the intention of the department to increase the amount of the fines. I would like to point out as an evidence that the officials who have had the administration of that Act have been duly vigilant, that the number of fines under the Act has been increasing from year to year. And it has not been altogether the fault of the department that the fines imposed have been lighter than they ought to be to have been effectual, because the Act does not say that the fine shall be 25 cents, but it says that the fine shall be from 25 cents to $1, and it has been the fault of the magistrates to a large extent that in almost every case the minimum fine has been imposed. The member for Wentworth said: Administer your Act more efficiently and if necessary spend a little more money. I have noticed that as the opposition members have advocated first one thing and then another, in almost every single instance of suggested expenditure they have been willing to say and do say: Spend a little more money; and while they do not condemn the expenditure of money in any single instance they are ever ready to condemn the same expenditure in the aggregate and call it extravagance. I have here—I am sorry the member for Wentworth is not present to examine them—a number of thermographic records of the temperature of several steamers which crossed the Atlantic during this summer carrying fruits and meats, and dairy, and orchard products. I think, if the member for Wentworth were here, and I think every other gentleman in this House who examines these records will say that the temperature was so satisfactory that there is no room for surprise that the products carried by these steamers reached the European markets in very good condition indeed. The member for Wentworth quoted and we cannot find any fault with him for quoting, the report of Mr. Jackson, the agent of the Department of Trade and Commerce, stationed at Leeds, England. Mr. Jackson, referring to the apples sent from Canada to Great Britain during the past year, stated that the apples had not arrived in the best of condition, and that they had not been subjected to the best possible classification. It was perfectly fair for the member for Wentworth to quote the opinion of one of the officers of this government. But Mr. Jackson being the general agent of the Trade and Commerce Department in Leeds he was not giving his whole attention, or by any means his particular attention to the fruit exports of Canada, but to Canadian trade in general and he is not an expert in so far as Canadian fruit exports are concerned. The member for Wentworth said that American apples now outrank our Canadian apples in the British markets. If that statement be true, if our Canadian apples are outranked in the markets of Britain it is perhaps necessary to make the statement, but if that statement be not correct, it was a very unwise thing to have made it because it is calculated to do very great injury to our Canadian fruit export trade. Notwithstanding the letter and the report of Mr. Jackson, I claim it is not a fact that American apples outranked Canadian apples in the British market even during the past year. And in order to prove my contention I refer to the reports issued by Woodall & Co., of Liverpool, England, who are among the largest handlers of apples in the British market. Their reports are weekly reports and they cover the whole period from about the middle of October until I think the middle of December. I quote from their report of the 19th of October, 1907 :

The condition of Canadian fruits has also been quite satisfactory and fancy varieties such as Alexanders, &c., have sold from 18 shillings to 25 shillings.

When the prices as quoted by Woodall & Co., of Liverpool, are as follows :

New York Greenings, 13 shillings to 15 shillings per barrel; Boston and Maine Greenings, 12 and 6 to 14 shillings; Canadian Greenings, 15 shillings to 17 shillings and 6 pence; New York Kings, 18 shillings to 21 shillings and 6 pence; Boston and Maine Kings, 18 shillings to 21 shillings and 6 pence; Canadian Kings, 21 shillings to 27 and 6 pence.

I am quoting for first-class in every case. Their report for October 26 says :

The bulk of receipts have been from Canada the condition and quality of which continue satisfactory.

Then the price quotations are as follows:

New York Greenings, 13 shillings and 6 pence to 15 shillings and 9 pence; Boston and Maine Greenings, 14 shillings to 15 shillings; Canadian Greenings, 15 shillings to 18 shillings and 3 pence; New York Kings, 18 shillings to 21 shillings; Boston and Maine Kings, 18 shillings to 21 and 6; Canadian Kings, 20 shillings to 26 shillings per barrel.

In their report for November 2, 1907, they say :

With the exception of 7,000 barrels of Nova Scotian the bulk of arrivals were from Canada.

They always distinguish between apples from Nova Scotia and apples from other parts of the Dominion :

With the exception of 7,000 barrels of Nova Scotian the bulk of arrivals were from Canada which continue to land in very good condition.

The prices are quoted as follows :

New York Baldwins, 16 shillings to 18 shillings and 3 pence; Boston and Maine Baldwins, 15 shillings to 19 shillings; Canadian Baldwins, 16 shillings and 6 pence to 19 shillings and 3 pence; Boston and Maine Kings, 17 shillings and 3 pence to 20 shillings; Canadian Kings, 18 and 6 to 24 and 6.

And so on all the way through the reports of Woodall & Co. show the price for Canadian apples to be very largely in excess of the price of apples imported from the United States. I quote from another authority, namely, the 'Market Growers' Gazette,' published in London, England, which in its issue of February 5, 1908, says:

Canadian fruit realizes from 10 shillings to 24 shillings per barrel according to variety and condition and United States fruit from 9 shillings and 6 pence to 14 shillings and 6 pence.

This again shows the Canadian fruit quoted at a very large advance over that from the United States. Again, in the report as quoted from Cardiff, Wales, I find :

Canadian Baldwins, 18 to 20 shillings; Greenings from 17 to 20 shillings; Kings, from 22 shillings to 28 shillings; Spies, from 16 shillings to 19 shillings. Americans about 3 shillings per barrel less on the average.

This shows very clearly indeed that our Canadian apples all through the last season have brought in the British market from 2 shillings to 3 shillings per barrel more than the same variety of fruit arriving from United States points. I quote again from the last report of the Dairy Commissioner, page 103, and this is a statement made by W. & L. Gilmour, of Glasgow :

We quite admit that there is still room for further improvement in the make of Canadian butter but this is a matter we are willing to leave in the hands of your different dairies as the suggested improvements and instructions given by your dairy experts if acted upon are bound to have a good effect. In our opinion they are one and all in the right direction and without intention to flatter in any sense we may honestly say that no government has done and is still doing more towards perfecting the development of the very highest and admittedly best system in the production and distribution of dairy produce than has the government of Canada.

I would like to quote from a speech made in the House by the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Chisholm) on the 21st of March, 1907. That hon. member made, as he usually does, a very excellent speech, in which speaking on the subject of cold storage, he said :

Although this matter was taken up in the time of the Conservatives by the Hon. Dr. Montague, there is no doubt at all that the system has been greatly improved; I think we must admit that.

The hon. member further pointed out that if we are to send our fruit in good condition to the markets of Great Britain, we must depend on something more than the establishment of a system of cold storage. He said, and well said, that the farmer pays great attention to the time at which he reaps his grain crop; he goes and looks at his wheat field, and says to himself, that wheat has approached the time when it ought to be cut, and to-morrow we must reap it. But, said the hon. member, he does not exercise the same care and wisdom in the reaping of his fruit crop; he often allows the fruit to remain on the trees until it is over-ripe and the germs of decay are in it, and no system of cold storage would take that fruit, shipped in an over-ripe and over-heated condition, to the markets of Great Britain in any proper condition. I was talking on the street yesterday to Mr. McNeill, who is in charge of the fruit branch of the Department of Agriculture; and, referring to the remarks of Mr. Smith, of Wentworth, in which that hon. gentleman said that it had been impossible to ship pears or peaches in any proper condition by our cold storage system to the markets of Great Britain, Mr. McNeill said that the fact that pears and peaches were not shipped in large quantities to Europe during the past season was not because of any lack of efficiency in our cold storage system, but because there were not enough pears and peaches grown in Canada during the last season to satisfy the demands of the home market. He said that last summer he had inquiries from South Africa for large quantities of pears and had made himself very busy in attempting to meet that demand; but with all his efforts he was only successful in obtaining two carloads, which were shipped to South Africa in vessels having the cold storage equipment provided under instructions from the Department of Agriculture; and those two carloads of pears reached the South African market in a first-class condition, after crossing the equator and making the long ocean voyage. Mr. McNeill stated that so great was the scarcity of that kind of fruit in Canada last year, that while he had managed with strenuous efforts to get these two carloads, at the same time the Canadian canners had imported from outside markets five carloads of pears for their canning business. The fruit growers of this country, and the people of this country generally, must realize that if we are to preserve our reputation for good fruit in the markets of the world, the responsibility must not rest entirely on the shoulders of the Minister of Agriculture, but the fruit growers must take care to produce the best fruit their orchards are capable of producing. If the man who owns the orchard will persist in slovenly methods of cultivating and caring for his orchard, he will have poor fruit which no system of cold storage or inspection will make into good fruit. If the hon. member for Wentworth would use his influence with the present provincial government at Toronto, to see that a better system of spraying were carried out in the orchards of Ontario, he would do more good than he does by his cynical criticisms in this House of the methods of the present Department of Agriculture at Ottawa. The spraying of fruit trees is a matter of very great importance. This is nowhere more fully realized than it is in some of the United States, particularly some of those near or on the Pacific coast ; I refer to the states of Oregon, Washington and Idaho. In the state of Idaho especially, a great deal of attention is paid to this matter. There is a state board of Agriculture composed of six men, and the state is divided into ten inspectorial districts, over each of which there is a district inspector, whose duty it is to report annually or semi-annually to the state board. In each county there is a sub-inspector. Every orchard owner in the state is obliged to spray properly the fruit trees of his orchard, I think six times in the year. If he does not do so, his orchard is quarantined, and is properly sprayed at the expense of the state, the cost of this spraying being charged against his lands in the same manner as taxes that are in default. Every man in the state of Idaho who places wormy fruit on the market is subject to a fine of from $25 to $300, or to imprisonment. Wormy fruit, wherever found, may be confiscated and burnt. As a result of the attention paid to spraying, the fruit of the state of Idaho is of the very highest quality and brings very high prices. If, then, the government of Ontario will pay the attention they ought to pay to the matter of spraying, the Minister of Agriculture and his officials at Ottawa will find a great deal better class of fruit to classify and ship, and the orchard owners will obtain vastly better prices for the fruits they grow.

I would like to devote a little attention to the speech delivered in the same debate by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). That hon. gentleman said that this government was always careful to do three things: in the first place, to depreciate the condition of affairs as they existed in 1896; in the second place, to keep in the background the important truth that in the years preceding 1896 there was a general and world-wide depression, and that in the years immediately following 1896 there was a period of equally world-wide prosperity and advancement; and, in the third place, to make it appear that whatever degree of prosperity and success this country has had under a Liberal administration, has been due to that administration. Well, Sir, I do not know that it requires the representations of Liberals to make the people of this country know what was the condition of affairs in 1896. The people of this country have memories, and are well able to remember the state of affairs as they existed then. It is unnecessary to paint those conditions in any more gloomy colours than they were painted by our Conservative friends who were then in power; but if it were possible for us to forget the sad and depressed state of our trade in 1896, a state to which no one wishes ever to return, the figures and records prove to us most clearly what were the conditions in 1896.

I wish to give to the House a comparison of some increases during the two decades 1887-1897 and 1897-1907, the first under a Conservative government and the second under a Liberal government.

| | Increase, 1887 to 1897. | Increase, 1897 to 1907. |
|---|---|---|
| Total trade.. .. .. .. .. | 54,760,815 | 360,796,090 |
| Total imports.. .. .. .. | 6,326,373 | 240,574,669 |
| Total exports.. .. .. .. | 48,434,442 | 120,221,421 |
| Total trade with Great Britain.. .. .. .. .. .. | 15,479,359 | 109,810,153 |
| Railway traffic tonnage.. | 8,943,996 | 38,565,802 |
| Bank discounts .. .. .. | 57,603,156 | 413,010,214 |
| Bank deposits.. .. .. .. | 93,087,205 | 388,318,201 |
| Deposits in Post Office Savings Banks .. .. .. | 8,102,700 | 12,558,696 |

But, Sir, if the picture that the Liberals paint of conditions as they were in 1896 is darker than the facts warrant, then surely the picture drawn by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) as to the conditions that existed in 1896 when the Liberals came into power is very very much too bright. It is a bright picture indeed that he draws of the conditions as they were at the moment when this government assumed the control of the affairs of Canada. The hon. member said that during the eighteen years of Conservative rule previous to 1896 Canada had been strengthened as well as chastened. I will admit that men are oftentimes strengthened by the privations they have to endure and the strenuous efforts they have to make, and if making strenuous efforts for a living during eighteen years, if many privations consequent upon hard times, had made us stronger, then we were stronger in 1896. The hon. gentleman says we were strengthened. He says further that we were chastened, and although there may be some doubt as to the degree in which we were strengthened or the process of strengthening, there cannot be the slightest doubt as to the truth of his assertion that we were chastened during the eighteen years of the Conservative reign at Ottawa. We were chastened and it is probable that the people of Canada deserved to be chastened for continuing in power so long as they did the Conservative government that assumed office in 1878. We were not only strengthened and chastened, but we were humiliated. We were humiliated for that upon every side of us, in 1896 there was strife—strife in the country, strife in the cabinet. There was everywhere in 1896 such a degree of corruption that we, the people of Canada, had no confidence in ourselves, we had no confidence in our country, in the people who were administering the affairs of the country, in the future of our country; and while we had no confidence in ourselves or our country, the people of other lands, of the outside world, had no greater degree of confidence in us than we had in ourselves, and consequently neither we ourselves nor strangers from other lands were willing to make any permanent investments or establish permanent industries in Canada.

The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) says that in 1896 everything was bright and lovely and there was not a single cloud upon the horizon excepting one little cloud, no larger than a man's hand, and that would have quickly been dispelled, the good sense of the people would have adjusted it if left to themselves—that one little cloud was the Manitoba School question. Sir, that was more than a little cloud upon the sky over us in 1896. The Manitoba school question had put three-fifths of our people on one side of a line and two-fifths on the other, it had created a feeling of enmity between the people of this country that boded no good for our country. It had split and divided a cabinet and it had nearly split the Dominion, and it is true that a country divided against itself is not likely to stand. I have here a volume of the 'Monetary Times' and in the issue of June 26, 1896, just after Sir Wilfrid's victory at the polls, I find in an editorial this reference to the Manitoba School question:

All that Mr. Laurier is committed to do, so far as the public is aware, is to appoint a commission of inquiry into the Manitoba school question and to do justice upon the facts disclosed.

Sir, that was all that any one required to do, to ascertain the facts and to do justice. Sir Wilfrid Laurier coming into power ascertained the facts and did justice to the people of Manitoba; that cloud upon the horizon immediately disappeared, and where there had been confusion and strife, we had peace and unity, and the people of Canada, joined hand in hand, working together for the prosperity of this great Dominion.

At a later date, not long ago, a similar cloud appeared upon our sky, and we had to deal with another very similar question. When that second cloud arose, we found our friends of the opposition willing for the sake of political capital to again create strife, quarrelling and division among the people of Canada. Sir, the right hon. gentleman who in 1896 ascertained the facts and did justice did not, upon that subsequent occasion, reason with himself and say: What move can I make to secure the largest degree of political capital out of this question? But again he said, standing out courageous and brave and wise and temperate: What are the facts and what will be justice? And having ascertained the facts, again he did justice, again there was peace everywhere from east and west and many even of our Liberal friends who were disturbed and hesitating during the time of that trouble now say that while the action of the right hon. the Prime Minister was not perhaps in acordance with the political exigencies of the time, while his sole endeavour was to stand firm amid all that sudden gust of popular passion and to endeavour to do the right thing, to do what was just and right and not what appeared most likely to win immediate political capital, he stands today, by reason of his action, stronger in the country than he was before that question was raised by our friends on the other side of the House.

The hon. member for North Toronto has said that, while there had been a deep, dark, world-wide depression up to 1896, at that time, the great sun of prosperity rose over every land in the world and that from that day to this we have had an unprecedented world-wide prosperity. Is the hon. member prepared to go as far as this—is he willing to say that, as a consequence of the change of government that took place in Canada in 1896 we have had, ever since, world-wide and unprecedented prosperity? I do not think he will admit that, nor do I think it would be a well founded argument. But I say that it would be not more unreasonable to argue that the world-wide prosperity we have had was due to the advent of the Liberal party to power in Ottawa as to say that the marvellous degree of prosperity, development and progress that we have had in Canada in recent years has not been largely due to the administration of the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The hon. member for North Toronto says that the Northwest, in 1896, had passed the stage of experiment and stood as a great producing agricultural country. As was well pointed out by the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) these lands of the great Northwest were as fertile before 1896 as they have been since, they were just as wide in extent and had as great possibilities as they have to-day. In 1896, our country had owned these lands for more than a quarter of a century, and, for many years, a railroad had been running through these lands. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) further says that, in 1896, the stream of immigration from the United States and other countries had begun to flow towards that country. Up to 1896, that stream had not been very rapid; it had not begun at all to overflow its banks. The total immigration into the Northwest—that is, into Manitoba and the territory now included in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta and also the thinly populated country to the north—in the calendar year 1897 was 10,977. In the year 1907, ten years later, that immigration had increased to 106,457. In 1896, when this government came into power, land in the Northwest had no value. Some of our Conservative friends throughout the country, who had received land in the Northwest for nothing, or for small prices because of services that they had rendered to their party, found the ownership of those lands of no advantage to them; they could not sell them; they were worth nothing. But when Sir Wilfrid Laurier came into power in 1896, and gave into the hands of Hon. Clifford Sifton the administration of the Department of the Interior, there began the boldest, the cleverest, the most systematic and most successful plan of immigration, the best conducted, and, in its results, the greatest immigration campaign ever carried on in any country since the beginning of time.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MILLER. Some hon. gentlemen laugh. I have seen the same statements made in magazine articles written by public men of repute in the United States. These men say that never in any country was so well-planned, well-executed and successful an immigratnon campaign carried on as that carried on by Hon. Clifford Sifton when he was Minister of the Interior. Under Hon. Clifford Sifton and under Hon. Mr. Oliver, who succeeded him in that department, and who has carried on the policy with the same vigour, the same success, while making changes required by changing circumstances, the policy of that department has been exceedingly creditable to this government and exceedingly profitable to this country. Under this policy the people came into that Northwest country. They brought money into that country and spent it. They grew wheat and other grains upon those fertile lands, thus creating immense amounts of wealth. Upon the ranges and ranches and large farms, they raised great herds of horses and cattle and immense flocks of sheep that meant millions of dollars to that western country. Through these industries, they have produced freight and money has been spent to provide the railroads necessary to handle that freight and carry it to market. More than that, the cultivation of these lands in the Northwest, the settlement upon them of the people of the world, has given to the people of the east, merchants, manufacturers and business men, eleven years of the most successful trade they ever had. Throughout Ontario, manufacturers have had to add to their factories and to increase their output because of the excellent market afforded them in that Northwest country.

The hon. member for North Toronto said that Sir Wilfrid Laurier made pledges in Toronto in 1896 which had not been carried out. I will not admit that the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier made any pledges in Toronto which were broken in the ordinary acceptation of that term. But I am willing to admit that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, then Mr. Laurier, in 1896, did say that, if his party came into power, they would reduce the expenditure. And I am willing to admit, further, that the expenditure has not been reduced. As an illustration, to show what I mean, when I say that this does not involve what is usually called a broken pledge, let me remind the House that the hon. member for North Toronto stated that he could not conclude his speech on the evening of Tuesday, but would like to continue it another day, and would occupy three-quarters of an hour. But, as a matter of fact, the hon. gentleman spoke for two hours and a half. I do not say that that was a broken pledge or promise. In the meantime, the hon. gentleman had acquired material that he thought ought to be dealt with, and dealing with it under different circumstances required a longer time than he had anticipated. When Mr. Laurier was chosen to be the leader of the Liberal party years before that party came into power, he was a big man and a clever man. But it is the part of big men to grow bigger, and of great men to be greater. And, constantly, we find great men, as new duties and responsibilities are placed upon them, grow greater and stronger In 1896, Mr. Laurier was made First Minister of this Dominion and was successful in bringing about him such men as Mr. Fielding from Nova Scotia, Mr. Paterson, Sir Richard Cartwright and others from Ontario, Mr. Borden from Nova Scotia, Mr. Sifton from Manitoba and other leading men whose names do not at the moment occur to me. The presence of these strong men about him, added to his strength and gave him confidence in what he could accomplish, with their help, for the good of the country. I believe that Mr. Laurier could have administered the affairs of this country as they had been administered and still have reduced the expenditure. He felt that, with such men as he had about him, the country could do business on different principles and undertake a work of development that had never before been undertaken.

You see the two distinct types of men everywhere. Take two young men brought up in the same community, men, perhaps, of equal ability and with equal advantages. One says: I am going into life to acquire a fortune, and I will acquire it by keeping down my expenses. I will not spend one copper that I can avoid spending, I will make and firmly hold every copper that I can make. The chances are that that young man, if he is not troubled with ill health or something of that kind, at the end of his life will have a reasonable amount of money. But in the meantime he will have become warped and withered himself, and have been a source of no good to himself or any body else. The other man says: I will not do business on that principle; I am going to be very enterprising. and while I shall endeavour to succeed, and while it is my purpose to make as much money as my friend, I will endeavour to benefit others while I do it. I am not going to be so miserly and so penurious in keeping down my expenses, but I will spend money when it is prudent to do so, and I will spend a dollar so that it will bring me more than one hundred cents in return. Now I claim that the rate of success that has attended the administration of the Laurier government has been due to themselves, that they were an aggregation of business men, of business enterprise, of business ability, of business integrity, and that in business ability they far exceeded the men who had preceded them.

As an instance to prove my argument, I would point to the Post Office Department. The total expenditure for the Post Office Department in the year 1897 was $4,897,783.06. I will give you the figures for 1907 for nine months, but have added to those figures one-third in order to make them appear as for twelve months, and in that twelve months you have the expenditure of that department increased to $7,270,383.79, a tremendous increase indeed. Now that is a part of the extravagant expenditure for which this government is blamed. There has been admittedly a very large increase of expenditure in that department, but with what result? We find that the revenue of that department in 1897 was $4,311,243.14. Whereas the revenue in that other period of equal time was $8,713,457.57. So that while the Conservative government kept down the expenditure of that department to under $5-000,000, they did that with a deficit, with a balance on the wrong side of the account at the end of the year of $586,539; whereas the Liberal government, with more enterprise, with more ability, and with greater business talent, expended fifty per cent more money and showed, in place of a deficit, a surplus of nearly a million and a half dollars, or to be exact, $1,443,067.78. Now the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) used the old argument that there had been no change of policy whatever but only a change in the methods of administration. The argument is not a new one it is an old one with our Conservative friends. The hon. member for North Toronto puts it in this language:

They do not attempt the new work with new tools as they had promised. They found a workshop already built, with tools in place and fires burning bright. They entered that workshop, they used those tools, they employed the same system as their predecessors; and to-day, eleven or twelve years after they came into power, they are still at the old stand doing their work—not over efficiently—in the old way, so far as principles and policies are concerned, with some deviations which I propose to take up a little later.

The hon. member uses the old argument that there has been no departure from the old principles, no adoption of any new policy—'we are working in the old workshop with the old tools.' Sir, I beg to point out to the members of this House and to the people of this country that there is absolutely nothing left of the old workshop and of the old tools except the bellows, and in these days the bellows appear to be working overtime. Is there no difference between the policy of the Liberals and the Conservatives to-day? Hon. members sitting around and behind the member for North Toronto do not agree with him. One of the differences is this, that while the tendency of the Liberal administration is to reduce the tariff, the tendency of our friends of the opposition is to increase the duties and raise the tariff. I need only quote from the hon. member from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt), from the member from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) and from the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith) to prove what I say. The member for Brantford, speaking upon the budget debate on the 30th of November, 1906, and referring to the reduction in duty upon agricultural implements that was brought into effect by this government during the last session, a reduction to the extent of two and a half per cent, used these words:

I doubt whether it will give him——

That is the farmer.

—an advantage of more than $2.50 on a mower or a reaper, and for that you jeopardise an important Canadian industry. It is a retrograde step. This country has gone too far in the direction of adequate protection to home industries to take such a retrograde step towards free trade.

Mr. MILLER.

There is a statement by the member for Brantford that this government is going towards free trade. Again, the same member, in the same speech, said:

I look upon a twenty per cent tariff——

That is the tariff that had existed upon agricultural implements.

—as a very moderate tariff. I think that should have been increased on the bulk of agricultural implements and not diminished.

Again he says in the same speech:

I may say that I think most of the reductions are not well advised, in a general way I think that any reductions that have been made would have been better not made, and that in some instances there should have been an increase where the reduction has been made.

And to show which way the sympathies of that hon. gentleman lie, I quote further from his speech when he said:

Then why should we jeopardize the $500,000,000 of capital embarked in these manufacturing industries in order to give a very slight advantage to the agriculturist?

Now it may be the opinion of the member for Brantford, it may be the opinion of other members upon the opposition side of this House, that all the attention of the House ought to be given to the promotion of the interests of the manufacturer. But I do claim that this government have acted wisely in going in a contrary direction, and in decreasing the duties upon agricultural implements rather than increasing them. I want to refer to a little incident that occurred in this House during the last session when the House was in committee and when the votes were not being recorded. After the budget speech had beeen delivered, and after the changes had been announced that were to take place in the tariff, and at a time when there was a very small attendance in the House, some of our Conservative friends proposed a reduction in the duty upon agricultural implements to the extent of ten per cent. That resolution, if I remember correctly, was opposed and voted against by the leader of the opposition and by the member for North Toronto; it was supported by some of the Conservative members representing rural constituencies; and if I mistake not that resolution will be used by them in the coming campaign, whenever that campaign may take place, for the purpose of making political capital. But I want to point out that the very members who proposed in committee at a late date in the last session, a reduction of ten per cent in the duty on agricultural implements, were the very same men that cheered and applauded the hon. member for Brantford when he said that the duty upon agricultural implements ought to have been increased instead of being made less. When our Conservative friends endeavour to make capital out of this ruse of theirs in asking for a reduction of duties, I believe our farmer friends will ask whether there is not a little hypocrisy in that attempt that our Conservative friends were found making. The hon. member for North Toronto showed a great deal of sympathy with the people of this country out of whom this wicked Liberal government had wrung a very large amount of money in the duties under the customs tariff. I do not often quote to this House the figures of the hon. member for North Toronto. I do not always think I can rely upon the figures that come from that gentleman, but, as in this case, his own figures are to the advantage of my argument, I do not hesitate to give them to the House. The hon. member said, in speaking of the rate of taxation to-day and the rate of taxation in former years :

I have added the bounties and the customs duties together and the result shows that in 1897 the average duty (including bounty) was 30·15 per cent; in 1906, 28·22 per cent; in 1907, about 27·04 per cent.

Showing by the figures of the hon. gentleman himself that the rate of taxation, including with the duties, also the bounties, had fallen under Liberal administration to the amount of 10 per cent and I say that a reduction under Liberal rule of 10 per cent of the rate of taxation is a very material decrease that I am sure the people of this country will appreciate at its full value. The hon. member for North Toronto called attention to one of the planks of the Liberal platform as laid down at their Ottawa convention of 1903, and I do think that the hon. gentleman might have been expected to have avoided this of all planks in that platform. The paragraph to which I am referring in the platform of the Liberal party as adopted by that convention is as follows :

We cannot but view with alarm the large increase in the public debt and of the controllable annual expenditure of the Dominion and the consequent undue taxation of the people under the governments that have been continuously in power since 1878 and we demand the strictest economy in the administration of the government of the country.

I would have expected that the hon. member for North Toronto would have avoided any mention of the public debt. What are the facts ? What are the figures ? In 1878, when the Liberal administration went out of power and when our Conservative friends assumed the duties of office, the public debt of Canada was $140,362,096. But when they went out of power in 1896 the public debt had increased to $258,497,432, an increase in the public debt in the eighteen years of their administration of $118,135,363, an average yearly increase of about $6,500,000 or to speak more correctly, or more exactly, an annual average increase in the public debt of $6,563,075 ; while we find that the total increase of the public debt of Canada in the first 10¾ years of Liberal rule was $5,174,427 or considerably more than $1,000,000 less for the whole 10¾ years than the annual average increase of the public debt under the administration of our Conservative friends. And, to quote again the words of the hon. member for North Toronto, he said that the interest upon the public debt of Canada in 1896 was $10,502,429 and that in 1906, after 10 years of Liberal administration, the interest on our public debt was only $10,814,697.

As to the matter of economy, to which this particular plank in the platform of the Liberal party refers, I claim that there has been in the Liberal administration thorough business economy. I do not say that there has been penuriousness, that there has been a niggardly administration, that no mistakes have been made by the Liberal administration, but I do say that there has been a businesslike economy characterizing their whole administration. By economy I mean that it is economy to spend a dollar that is wisely and well spent and that will bring to the people of this country more than one hundred cents worth of value. The hon. member for North Toronto introduced a doctrine with which I cannot agree. It was that when building a great work like the Grand Trunk Pacific or other such permanent work that will exist and be to the benefit of the people of the country for a hundred years we ought not to tax the people to pay for the carrying out of that undertaking but that we ought to borrow the money and allow those who come after us to wrestle with the debt. The hon. gentleman has oftentimes, used and very wisely used, this illustration ; he has said that the government ought to pursue the same policy as a wise and prudent business man would adopt in carrying on the administration of his own affairs. I say that the farmer would not be a wise farmer, who, in making permanent improvements upon his farm either with respect to drainage, fencing, or clearing, would say to himself : Now, my sons who will come after me and who will inherit this farm, will benefit by the improvements that I am making ; therefore, I will not endeavour to pay for these improvements but I will put a mortgage on the farm and let my sons wrestle with the mortgage. That is not good business and it is not such a system that this or any other government ought to follow or practise.

There will, in the more or less near or distant future, be other large undertakings that the government of Canada will have to busy themselves about. There will be the building of other railways, of other transcontinental railways and of other railways running north and south as well as east and west, there will be, possibly the building of the Georgian bay canal, there will be, I have no doubt, the building of the Prince Edward Island tunnel, there will be the establishment of the All Red Line, and, Sir, there will always be in the development of a great and growing country like Canada large projects which will require our money as well as our attention and it is good business for us to provide for these works as nearly as possible as we go along. It is perhaps hardly necessary to devote attention to the statement made by our friends of the opposition that the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) made the flat assertion that the Grand Trunk Pacific would be built from the Atlantic to the Pacific for $13,000,000. I notice that the chief whip of the Conservative party is here and as the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has been fond of making that statement I would like to ask him what he understood to be the statement of the Prime Minister. I would like to ask the hon. member for Leeds whether he understood that the right hon. First Minister contended that the whole road from the Atlantic to the Pacific would be built for that amount of money.

Mr. TAYLOR. Read his speech and you will come to no other conclusion.

Mr. MILLER. That is the information I want. Then, I understand that the hon. member for Leeds understood the First Minister to say that the whole line from the Atlantic to the Pacific would be built for $13,000,000, and that after reading the whole speech we could come to no other conclusion.

Mr. TAYLOR. That was all it was to cost the country.

Mr. MILLER. Now does the hon. member endeavour to deduce some other meaning than the one he endeavoured to convey to us the other night ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Read the speech and we will have it in 'Hansard' again.

Mr. MILLER. Read the whole of the speech ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Read it all.

Mr. MILLER. The whole speech ? Thank you, no, but I will read from the speech which was delivered in this House on the 30th of July, 1903, and which will be found at page 7690 of 'Hansard' :

> Now, Sir, what is the liability incurred by the government for the construction of this road from Winnipeg to the Pacific ocean? Assuming that the road across the mountains is 600 miles long, the cost of construction will be $18,000,000.

Mr. MILLER.

Then, how can it be contended by the member for Leeds that if the mountain section of the road, 600 miles, was to cost $18,000,000, that the whole line was to cost only $13,000,000. Quoting again from 'Hansard,' page 7691, the Prime Minister said :

> When completed the company will lease the road and will pay to us a rental at the rate of 3 per cent per annum upon the cost of construction whatever that may be.

Now, Sir, was there any attempt made to deceive the people of this country as to what would be the cost of the Grand Trunk Pacific. Let me quote from the campaign literature that was circulated by the Liberals in the campaign of 1904 throughout the length and breadth of Canada, and there I find these figures taken from a speech delivered by the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) on the 26th day of May, 1904, as may be found on 'Hansard,' page 3626. The figures given by the Minister of Finance for the building of the road from Moncton to Winnipeg were as follows :

> This would make the cost as follows:
> 400 miles Moncton to Quebec.. .. ..$12,500,000
> 1,475 miles from Quebec to Winnipeg 51,625,000
> On this basis the cost of the eastern division would be:
> Interest during construction capitalized.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. ..$ 7,031,975
> Capital account, actual outlay.. .. 64,125,000 > making the total charge to capital account for the building of the section from Moncton to Winnipeg.. 71,156,975

As I have said, these figures are taken from the campaign literature circulated by the Liberal party throughout the length and breadth of Canada during the year 1904. And the Minister of Finance in giving the figures was careful to say that his estimate was based on the figures of Mr. Schreiber, government engineer, and that in order to be upon the safe side he had added 25 per cent to the figures furnished him by Mr. Schreiber. In his speech the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) made another charge as to the Grand Trunk Pacific. He said :

> More than that Sir, he (the Prime Minister) kept back from the people and parliament of this country the offer that the Grand Trunk Pacific made for the building of the road west of the lakes, an offer which carried out the idea that they were willing to build it, and hand over the traffic on this side to the Intercolonial Railway and take nothing but a simple subsidy for the western part from the lakes on to the Pacific coast.

As I understand it, this is a charge made by the hon. member (Mr. Foster) that the Prime Minister endeavoured to deceive the people of this country and to withhold from them knowledge which they should have had. Sir, there was no attempt made to deceive the people, for during the whole of the campaign of 1904 that proposition of the Grand Trunk Pacific was discussed upon every political platform and upon every hustings throughout Canada. It was argued then by the government of Canada that it was a desirable thing that there should be what was termed an enlargement of the spout; that there should be some means of carrying the products of the west and particularly the grain eastward from the lakes to the Atlantic ocean by a railroad of easy grades capable of carrying a large number of well laden cars at the least possible expense, in addition to and if necessary in opposition to the facilities provided via the lakes; and to carry the grain of the west out of the country after navigation upon the lakes had closed. The argument was a good one, and is justified by the facts as the facts are presented to us to-day. I noticed in the daily 'Globe' of the 17th of the present month a statement as to a condition that well warrants the argument that was put forth by the government at that date. The article is a very short one and is as follows:

Blockade of grain. Situation at Fort William causes bitter complaint. Canadian Pacific Railway will not supply cars for shipments yet charges storage on grain delayed though its own act. Eastern and western divisions holding cars:

Fort William, March 16.—The inability of the Canadian Pacific Railway to supply cars is causing here a big tie-up of export grain and the attention of the railway commissioners will be called to the situation. At the present time upwards of 1,700 cars are needed to handle the grain for which orders have been given to the company. A considerable portion of this may be cancelled and sent by way of the lake route when navigation opens. From two weeks to 30 days is the period of delay and the delays have been made doubly obnoxious to the grain men by the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway continues to charge storage until the grain is loaded. Heretofore storage charges ceased when the grain was ordered out by local agents.

The contention therefore is borne out that a rival route was required and is required to-day, and when the member for North Toronto goes among the grain growers of the west his opposition to the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific from the lakes eastward to the Atlantic coast will not be a welcome argument to the people of that western country.

The hon. member (Mr. Foster) said also, that the Liberals of these days are not as fond of making comparisons with the United States and of drawing contrasts between the state of affairs in Canada and in the United States, as they were some years ago. He pointed out that the per capita debt of the United States is to-day $11.46, while the public debt in Canada to-day is $45 per head. His figures are not quite right because the Finance Minister has set forth that our per capita debt to-day is $42.84 and not $45. Let me point out that while the hon. member (Mr. Foster) objects to a per capita debt in Canada to-day of $42.84; that our per capita debt in 1897 when he himself was Minister of Finance was not $42.84 but $50.87. Surely we would expect that in the United States whch has a territory not so great as ours, which is a much older country and much further developed and which has twelve persons for every one person there is in Canada; surely we would expect that their per capita debt should be less than ours. At any rate, the comparison is not a fair one because in the United States, with a constitution very different from ours, the people are subject in every state of the Union, I think, to a very large state debt, which is not the case in this Dominion. In the province of Ontario where many of us reside there has never been a provincial debt under the administration of the Liberal party. Referring to an article in the 'Daily Globe' the other day, I noticed from the heading of the article, I did not read the article itself, that now after three or four years of Conservative administration in Ontario we have a provincial debt, a thing which did not exist under the regime of the Liberal party in that province. I find from the figures that the per capita debt in the state of New York, aside from the federal debt, but including the debt of the cities and towns, is almost equal if not quite equal per capita to the whole federal debt of the Dominion of Canada. But, Sir, let me point to the per capita debt of Great Britain and see how we compare with that country with which we are fond at times of making comparisons. In 1906 the population of Great Britain was 43,659,121, and its national debt, reduced to dollars at $4.87 to the pound, was $3,842,382,210, or $87.82 per capita. In any comparison between Canada and the United States, we do not, I think, suffer. In the Toronto papers of the 17th of this month appeared an account of a visit to the United States and this country of Sir Edgar Vincent, who is described as having been a former financial adviser of the Khedive of Egypt and a man of affairs in England. Sir Edgar Vincent is represented as having said:

I was especially impressed by the financial soundness of Canadian enterprise and the thorough, sure way in which that country is developing. I know of no greater tribute to the confidence in Canadian methods than the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway has been able to borrow $10,000,000 at a shade less than four per cent. The government itself pays a little more than three per cent, and by way of comparison we have the New York Central paying a little more than five per cent.

The hon. member for North Toronto said that the Minister of Finance had added to his surplus to the extent of three millions and a quarter dollars by reducing the interest on the Post Office Savings Bank deposits of labourers, farmers, school children, widows and working girls. If the hon. member will take the trouble to make inquiries, he will find that a large part of the deposits in the government savings bank to-day are not the deposits of the people he described, but the deposits of men who are comparatively well off. If the Minister of Finance had increased the rate of interest, instead of reducing it from 3½ to 3 per cent, what would have been the effect? Simply this, that the government would not have benefited, because it can usually borrow money in Great Britain at as low a rate as it is paying to these depositors, but there would have been locked up in the government savings banks a large amount of capital which, since the reduction in the rate of interest, has been put in circulation. Men who had large amounts deposited in the savings banks have withdrawn their money and have lent it at a comparatively low rate of interest to farmers to aid them in improving their farms and to mechanics in the cities, towns and villages, to aid them in building homes for themselves, and in doing so have not only directly benefited themselves as well the borrowers, but have helped to keep down the rates of interest charged by the loan companies and other financial institutions of this country.

The hon. member for North Toronto again made reference to the North Atlantic Trading Company. He asked, was ever a more reckless bargain—$370,000 of the people's money paid out? Now, why was that a reckless bargain? What fault can be found with any one in making the bargain? The hon. member for North Toronto did not argue, as he used to do, that there was any dishonesty in connection with the bargain, or that no benefit had accrued from it to the people of Canada. He could not do so. No man can continue honestly to argue that that was not a good contract for the people of Canada. The fact remains that during the period that that contract ran, we did not receive into Canada any other immigrants for whom we did not pay more than we paid for the immigrants who came to us as a result of the work of the North Atlantic Trading Company. But the hon. member for North Toronto says, to whom has the money been paid? That is the vexed question, with regard to which he endeavours to fasten this contract on the minds of the people of this country as a scandal—as something to the detriment of the present administration. Sir, why does not the hon. member for North Toronto, and why do not other hon. members, when discussing the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company, upon various platforms in the country or in this House, and saying that the premier knows, but the parliament does not know, who composed that company, be honest and tell the whole truth? It is an old saying that a truth half suppressed is the worst form of falsehood. If these hon. members will tell the whole story, I shall not be afraid of the effect that will be produced on the minds of the people of Canada. Why does not the hon. member for North Toronto say that the Prime Minister offered on two occasions in this House to tell the hon. leader of the opposition who are the men composing the North Atlantic Trading Company, and that the hon. leader of the opposition preferred to have his grievance rather than to have the information. If the people of this country know, as the hon. member knows, that that information was offered and was refused, there will be but little of a scandalous character attached to the dealings of that company.

The hon. member for North Toronto criticised also the contract between the government and the Ross Rifle Company, and not only the contract, but the Ross rifle itself. He said that the government had entered into a contract to get made in Canada a rifle which is not made in Canada and has not been from the beginning. He said that this government had given to Sir Charles Ross a perpetual lease of 19½ acres of land, and that if this government desired to get rid of that factory they would have to put up of the hard earnings of the people of this country a million dollars. It is not denied that the contract was made and that the lease was given, but I cannot understand why the hon. member for North Toronto says that if it becomes necessary to get rid of that factory we shall have to pay to the Ross Rifle Company $1,000,000 of the hard earnings of the people. He has not proved, in the first place, that it will be necessary to get rid of that factory. What is the history of this whole transaction? We have had it thoroughly investigated before the Public Accounts Committee, where Colonel Fiset, the deputy Minister of Militia, told us on oath that long before any such contract was discussed between the Minister of Militia and Sir Charles Ross, the minister had endeavoured to get British manufacturers to manufacture rifles in Canada, but they had refused to do so; that in the year 1900, long before the contract was entered into, rifles could not be purchased in Great Britain for the use of our Canadian militia, the Lee-Enfield people having absolutely refused to make them. Was it not time for a Canadian Minister of Militia, awake to his responsibilities, to endeavour to have rifles for the use of our militia made within our own Dominion? If they could not be purchased in Great Britain, it became absolutely necessary for us to have them made in this country, and it is obvious under any circumstances that instead of having in troublous, warlike times to bring our rifles overseas it would be of great advantage to us to have them manufactured on our own ground. Under these circumstances the Minister of Militia entered into negotiations with Sir Charles Ross. In the first place, he appointed a committee to investigate the Ross rifle, the committee being composed of General Otter, one of the ablest and most patriotic military men in this country; Colonel Gaudet, Colonel Hughes, the Conservative member for Victoria and Haliburton in this House, and Colonel Gibson, of the city of Hamilton. This committee composed of these able and experienced men, tested the rifle at many times and in many ways and pronounced it to be a good gun. Having the pronouncement of that committee, the Minister of Militia went further with his bargaining and entered into a contract.

As to the efficiency of the Ross rifle, I was talking the other day to the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) who is himself a militia man of considerable experience, who takes an interest in militia matters and is accustomed to handling rifles; he assured me that he has found the Ross rifle to be equal to any other rifle he had ever tried and in many respects superior. A gentleman living in my own riding, a Mr. Rummage, wrote me quite unsolicited last week and incidentally mentioned the Ross rifle. He said he had been a member of the Canadian militia since either 1881 or 1891, I forget which, and he had been accounted a good shot, and he is to-day considered a good shot; he said:

I have used and have shot from the Ross rifle. I consider it to be the best rifle I have ever used and I have been able to make with it the best record I have succeeded in making with any gun.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MILLER. We have the testimony of the member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) whatever may be his faults and whatever some of us may have to say about him, no one will deny that he is a patriot; he was brave enough at the time of the South African war to go to South Africa with the boys and take his part in the troubles there. In this House and before the committee Colonel Hughes has stated that the Ross rifle is a good gun, equal to the Lee-Enfield in every respect and in many respects superior.

I find that in the Austrian army to-day 1,200,000 men are equipped with the Mannlicker rifle which is the counterpart of the Ross rifle and made after Sir Charles Ross' patterns and designs.

I noticed in the Toronto 'Globe' of March 20, the following short but significant item, headed 'Ross rifle for Norwegian army.'

London, March 19.—The Norwegian army is to be re-armed. King Haakon, it is believed, favours the Canadian Ross rifle.

So we have the Austrian army equipped with it and the Norwegian army about to be equipped with it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. If the hon. gentleman had read the Montreal 'Star' of the day following the appearance of that item in the 'Herald,' he would have seen that the commander in chief of the Norwegian army, General Jansen, laughed at the idea and said he knew nothing of the Canadian rifle at all. That was in reply to a cable sent from the 'Star' office to the commander in chief of the Norwegian army.

Mr. MILLER. Then the fact will appear to be that a general in the Norwegian army laughs at the rifle while the King of Norway proposes to adopt it.

It has been said that the Ross rifle is not and has not been made in Canada. There appears to be a disposition to convey the idea that the Ross rifle factory is a very insignificant factory and yet we have the sworn evidence of Colonel Wurtele that the factory is to-day employing from 300 to 500 men, that there are a large number of machines, that parts are imported but imported as raw material and are milled, machined and put together in the factory. We have also the sworn testimony of Brigadier General Cotton that there is no rifle factory in the world that does not begin its manufacture with steel billets, that they always get their steel billets as the Ross factory does, they do not manufacture the billets but buy them from other manufacturers no doubt as a matter of economy. We have also his sworn evidence that the wood for rifle stocks is not grown either in Canada or in the United States and therefore has to be imported, and that the wood in the rifle stocks of the United States army rifles is grown either in Italy or in Spain. We have the sworn testimony of Major Pym that in the government rifle factory at Enfield, England, in which he was at one time employed, they receive their barrels, that is they do not manufacture their own barrels any more than does Sir Charles Ross at Quebec, and the further evidence of Major Pym that the wood for the stocks of the Lee-Enfield rifle is grown in Central Europe and cannot be and is not grown in England. We have the sworn evidence of Sir Charles Ross that the steel he uses in the manufacture of the Ross rifle costs him more than double the price of the steel he would require to make a rifle like the Lee-Enfield. We have the evidence of Colonel Wurtele as to the Ross rifle factory at Quebec in which he says:

I consider it a very carefully systematized factory.

We have the statement of Mr. Wallace Nesbitt that the factory at Quebec, with the plant, is insured for $1,250,000. We have the sworn evidence of Sir Frederick Borden, the Minister of Militia, and of Colonel Sam. Hughes, member for Victoria and Haliburton, that neither one of them has the slightest interest whatever in any financial way in the manufacture of the Ross rifle or the output of the Ross rifle factory. We have the further evidence of Sir Charles Ross that no person but himself has any financial interest whatever in the output or carrying on of his business except two or three of his employees who have their remuneration based in some degree upon the profits of the factory.

It does seem to me that if that factory in Quebec, a Canadian factory employing from 300 to 500 hands, was a factory engaged in the manufacture of boots and shoes or agricultural implements, the members of this House ought to be sufficiently patriotic to help rather than to destroy its trade. And I say further that when that factory is established to produce rifles for the use of the Canadian militia at a time when they cannot be obtained otherwise, it is a very unpatriotic thing that members of this House should go out of their way to endeavour to destroy the reputation of the rifle or to make it impossible for this or any other succeeding factory ever to manufacture in Canada such a rifle as our militia will require.

Sir Charles Ross has said that it had been his expectation that by this time he would have been employing thousands of men in his factory where to-day he is employing hundreds. He has said that one great difficulty he has had to encounter has been the very strong opposition of a wealthy rival factory in Great Britain, and another great difficulty has been the studied and strenuous opposition of Conservative members in this House by which they have endeavoured to obtain political capital.

The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) objected to the building of the Mint. He gave evidence as to the expectation not only of Liberal governments but of Conservative governments as to the building of a Mint. He said:

Then there is the Mint. Here is another example of misrepresentation or lack of information. The history of this Mint is peculiar.

Notice these coming words which are important:

It was mooted in my time——

It was mooted in my time.

—and the government of which I was a member said: the time may come in the history of Canada when we should have a Mint, but there are so many things that we need more than we do a mint that it will have to be put off to the distant future.

It was then the idea and intention of the Conservative government years ago, when our revenue was comparatively insignificant, that Canada at some date in the future should have a Mint. The hon. gentleman further said:

It was again brought to the attention of parliament, I think by Mr. McInnes, in about 1900, and the Finance Minister himself made a reasoned speech against the establishment of a Mint not only in Victoria, but anywhere in Canada. It was a well-reasoned speech every argument that he advanced was, I believe, a good argument and each argument was sufficient to preclude the possibility of building a Mint, at least for the present.

Showing by the hon. gentleman's own words that it had been the expectation of the Conservative government, as it was the expectation in 1900 of the Liberal government, that sooner or later Canada would have its own Mint and would make its own coin.

The hon. member (Mr. Foster) pointed out that the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) wired to a candidate during an election in British Columbia that the government would undertake the building of a mint. Sir, I will admit that it is a wrong thing to endeavour to bribe any constituency by the promise of a public work within that constituency that can be of only local interest and where the promise is made for political purposes; but I say that to wire to any province and to the people of any province, that the government of this country are about to adopt a new general policy such as the policy of the manufacture of our own coin has no political significance and is not a matter concerning which any blame could be attached to the government. If the people of Mr. Maxwell's constituency in British Columbia thought that they would be benefited by the building of a mint, it was because they believed it would assist in the development of their mining resources. If that were true of one mining constituency in British Columbia, it was equally true of every mineral producing community in British Columbia and throughout the Dominion. I say it was not wrong to tell these people that the general policy of this government was to build a mint for the purpose of developing the mineral industries of the Dominion. The hon. member argued that in building the mint, in building the Quebec bridge, and in many other public undertakings of this government, the cost of the work when completed was in excess of the estimate. That, I admit, is perfectly true in some instances, and, perhaps in many instances. But the same sort of thing is usually true. I appeal to any hon. member of this House who has built a private residence or a business building, whatever the cost may be from $3,000 up, if this has not been his own experience. He may get the most careful estimate he can from the best achitects whose serivecs he can employ of what would be the probable cost of the building, and, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, he will find that the cost of the work exceeds the estimate given him. If this be true of the small undertakings usually entered upon by private individuals, can it be wondered at that it is true of the great public undertakings of the government whether it be Liberal or Conservative? The hon. member for North Toronto gave us another reason why the cost of these undertakings in recent years has exceeded the estimates. He spoke of the very great general increase in prices in Canada and elsewhere during the past ten years. He said that, in the United States, the best authorities say that prices generally have increased, in ten years, from 50 to 60 per cent. In Great Britain there has been a general increase of from 35 to 40 per cent, and in Canada he estimates the increase at from 35 to 50 per cent. This being the case, does it not furnish sufficient reason why, in great public undertakings for which the estimates were made years ago, when the work is completed it is found to cost more than had been expected ?

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) criticised the administration of this government in the Yukon and quoted figures of 1904-5, 1905-6 and 1906-7 to show that, while the revenue derived by the government from the Yukon is diminishing, the expenditure has not shown a corresponding decrease. That is perfectly true, and the hon. gentleman himself gave the reason for it. He said that the population of the Yukon in 1901 was 28,000, and in 1906 it was 8,000 while to-day he estimated it at about 5,000. So, taking the hon. gentleman's own figures, there has been a constant and very rapid decrease in the population. Still, according to his estimate, we have still 5,000 people in that country. The Yukon is as big a country as in 1901 and is just as isolated. It is just as much the duty of the government to maintain government and governmental institutions in the Yukon as when the population was at its greatest. Though the gold output has decreased and the revenues from royalties diminished accordingly, would the hon. gentleman advise that we entirely abandon the Yukon ? Would he say to the people : Now that we cannot show a surplus from administering the affairs of the Yukon, we will not attempt to keep open the courts or maintain law and order, but will take our officers out of the district ? I think he would scarcely advise the adoption of such a policy as that. But the most remarkable argument advanced by the hon. member is in relation to the telegraph line to the Yukon. He pointed out that this telegraph line, owned and operated by the government, is to-day operated at a loss. He says that, some years ago, we might have accepted an offer from the Canadian Pacific Railway to take over that line at a rental equal to 4 per cent interest on the cost of construction, and he rather censured the government for not having escaped this loss by handing the line over to the Canadian Pacific Railway, who, perhaps, would have made up their loss by charging exorbitant rates to the people of the Yukon. It seemed most remarkable that the hon. member should censure this government for not having handed over to a large corporation a telegraph line owned and operated by the government when one of the planks of the Halifax platform of his own leader is government ownership and operation of telephone and telegraph lines. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) spoke of the balance of trade as against us. He said that our imports for the time being exceeded our exports, and predicted that this government and the affairs of Canada would go to smash should this state of affairs continue. He was afraid that some one would quote the case of Switzerland against him, that being a country whose imports exceed its exports, and yet continues prosperous. He answers by saying that Switzerland exports scenery. Well, I have seen celery, but to sell scenery is a new argument among political economists. Take an illustration : A man comes here to Canada with $50,000. He buys a factory site and builds a factory and equips it with machinery. His $50,000 is gone and his friends say, your expenditure has been great, but you have had no income. His answer is, I have faith in my investment ; I believe that the $50,000 will bring me in $100,000 in a few years. We in Canada have been equipping our country as a great factory with machinery and plant that will produce great wealth every year in the time to come.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Miller) allow me ? Suppose you had put the money into a woollen factory years ago ?

Mr. MILLER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. A. Martin) may put it into whatever kind of factory suits him. I would point out that, in the last nine months, we have imported into Canada machinery to the value of $9,060,967, which rate of import, carried out for twelve months, would amount to $12,081,298. But in 1896, we imported machinery to the value of only $1,725,690. In the last nine months, we have imported animals for the improvement of our live stock to a value which, for twelve months, would represent $1,549,840. Thus in these two items, we have imports of nearly $14,000,000 for the purpose of equipping ourselves with plant which will produce great wealth in the years to come. The hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. E. D. Smith) also deplored this balance of trade against us, but said that England might be quoted against his argument, as England, in recent years, has imported very largely in excess of her exports. But he pointed out that, years ago, the exports of England were greatly in excess of her imports. What must we deduce from that ? Why, that, years ago, England was a country of comparatively little wealth, comparatively little importance, and had exports largely exceeding her imports ; but now that she has become a wealthy country her imports exceed her exports. I would point out to the hon. gentleman that while we do not sell scenery, we are receiving year by year, and have been for some time receiving, a large amount of wealth from foreign investments in our mines in British Columbia, in Cobalt, and in other parts of Canada, and we have been receiving from outside countries large amounts of money invested by foreigners in our lands and in the building and equipment of factories. I point out that settlers have been coming into this country by hundreds of thousands, bringing with them settlers' effects that have added to the volume of our imports, and not only settlers' effects but large amounts of money that have swelled our annual income but do not appear in the trade returns.

The hon. member for North Toronto attacked the British preference. He intimates that the bargain made was a bad bargain, and yet he deplores and opposes the French treaty, and one of the reasons, he told us, was that the putting into effect of the French treaty lessened to the people of Britain the value to them of the British preference. I contend that he is arguing upon both sides of the question. The hon. member for North Toronto, as well as his friends, have been arguing against the iniquitous increase of taxation of the people which the government of this country has wrung from them through customs duties, and yet he deplores the fact that by putting into effect the French treaty we are admitting large quantities of goods from France, and from twelve other countries he mentions as well, at a largely reduced duty. So he complains upon the one hand because we are collecting too much duty, and complains upon the other hand that we are making treaties by which the duty and taxation will be diminished. Speaking of the French treaty, the 'Weekly Sun,' published in Toronto—I will not say that it is a paper opposed to this government, or unfriendly to the government, but the 'Weekly Sun' is a paper that assumes the position of a critic, and in assuming that position it is more anxious to criticise and to mention our vices than our virtues. In speaking of the French treaty the 'Weekly Sun' has an article headed 'It is a Good Treaty,' and it points out that a binder manufactured in Canada would have an advantage in the markets of France of $7 over a binder manufactured in every other country, and that every other agricultural machine manufactured in Canada will have a proportionate advantage in the markets of France. The 'Weekly Sun' points out that because of this great advantage to the Canadian manufacturers of agricultural machinery, American manufacturers are preparing to remove to the city of Hamilton all their equipment for manufacturing agricultural implements for the whole of their foreign trade. That newspaper points out further that the only persons who have found serious fault with the French treaty, or who have expressed any alarm that their trade will suffer detriment, are the grape growers and the wine producers of the southwestern peninsula of Ontario. The 'Weekly Sun' points out to them that the addition to the factory equipment of Hamilton, the large number of additional men that will be employed in that city in manufacturing agricultural implements for the French markets, will more than make up to them any losses they otherwise might sustain and lead to an increase rather than a decrease of their wine business. That newspaper further says that if the only advantage to Canada were the large increases that will take place in our manufacture of agriculture implements, that in itself would have been a sufficient reason to justify the government in making the treaty and in permitting us to call it a good treaty. But that newspaper further points out that while the Canadian farmer will be able to send his bacon into the French markets with a duty of only $2.63 per hundred weight, the United States exporters have to pay on their bacon going into France a duty of $4.39; that the Canadian exporter of apples to France will pay a duty of 17·7 cents per hundredweight, while the American fruit grower will have to pay a duty of 44 cents per hundredweight; that the Canadian exporter of dried apples to France will have to pay a duty of 87·7 cents per hundredweight, while the American exporter will have to pay a duty of $1.72.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would ask the hon. gentleman if the duty on dried apples has been reduced in the French treaty?

Mr. MILLER. I quote the figures taken from the 'Weekly Sun,' and I assume that the writer has carefully considered the treaty and carefully made up his figures.

Mr. HENDERSON. Under the old French treaty dried apples were on the minimum tariff as they are now.

Mr. MILLER. The fact still remains that the Canadian exporter of dried apples will have a large advantage, under the treaty, over our American friends exporting the same article. The 'Weekly Sun' contends that because of the French treaty our exports to the French market ought to be at least trebled in extent.

Now, I have taken up a great deal of the time of the House, for which I apologize. In conclusion I have to congratulate the Minister of Finance upon being able to present to this House such a splendid budget speech and to have been able to make such a splendid showing as he did in the budget he brought down to this House and in the figures he was able to quote. I congratulate the people of Canada in having their public affairs administered by a group of men who have shown the business ability and the business integrity that have been shown by the right hon. gentleman who leads this government and by the gentlemen associated with him in the cabinet. I trust, for the sake of the people of this Dominion, for the sake of the future prosperity of this country, that the administration of the affairs of Canada will be left in the hands of these gentlemen for many years to come, as I believe it will be, and I trust that the Minister of Finance will for many years be spared to occupy the place in this government that he occupies to-day.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). While it is my intention to offer a few remarks on the financial condition of the country as set forth in the budget speech of the Minister of Finance, it is not my desire to take up the time of this House for two hours and a half, as my hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller) has just done. Therefore, I shall not travel over many of the subjects he has mentioned, but will endeavour to compress my remarks into a brief space. Now, the man in the street who reads the budget speech of the Minister of Finance will be somewhat mystified. On the one hand he will read that there is cause for rejoicing and congratulation in the fact that the country has a surplus of some $19,000,000; while on the other hand he will find that when the Minister of Finance wanted to advance $5,000,000 to the banks to enable them to move the crops in the Northwest, he apparently had not the money to do it with, and as he did not think it was advisable to try and borrow it, he went to the treasury and took from it money which is deposited there under the law of the land against the redemption of Dominion notes. Where then are those surpluses of which we have heard so much, and of which the Finance Minister is so proud, amounting, as we are told, to $94,000,000 in the last ten years? Have they been applied to the reduction of our national debt of $258,000,000, which these hon. gentlemen found when they came into power? No, Sir, they have all been spent, and more than that, the national debt has been increased to $275,000,000. But that does not represent the whole of the national liabilities which have been incurred by the present administration. On the 31st of October the Finance Minister reported that we had guaranteed bonds to the extent of some $32,000,000, backed notes, so to speak, for this amount. It is true that we have got some security for these bonds we have guaranteed. But let me point out that in the case of the Quebec bridge, something over $6,000,000 of these securities are now lying in the bottom of the river St. Lawrence, and it is probable that the Dominion of Canada will have to pay the whole of that money and add it to the national debt.

In the near future, Sir, we shall have to guarantee the bonds or back the notes so to speak of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company for enormous sums in addition,—how much we do not know: nobody knows, because it is dependent upon the expenditure which they make, but all these matters have their bad effect upon the credit of the country and in my opinion will account to a certain extent for the difficulty of borrowing money at a reasonable rate which the hon. Minister of Finance told us he experienced quite recently, having to give as much as 4½ per cent on a short loan which he made. But, with this great surplus to spend and a large addition to the national debt, the ordinary man would say that surely it has been possible to reduce the ordinary expenditure for carrying on the government of the country. Here again, he will find that he is mistaken. When the present administration came into power, as they did about eleven years ago, when confederation was about thirty years of age, they found that the ordinary expenditure chargeable to consolidated fund stood at about $37,000,000 and had stood, within a million, more or less, of that amount for the preceding ten years. They have increased this expenditure year by year so that we find, at the close of the eleventh year of their administration, that they have reached the astounding total of $77,500,000 merely for carrying on the ordinary administration of the country. This does not cover the whole expenditure for they are charging such things as the bounties they pay to iron and steel manufactures, amounting to millions of dollars, to capital account and they are also charging betterments on the Intercolonial Railway, that on a privately owned railway would be charged to revenue, to capital account as well, and they are doing the same thing with regard to other matters. The present administration found, in 1896, that the expenditure on capital and ordinary account combined had averaged less than $43,000,000 for the preceding ten years. This year we are told that the expenditure under these two heads will amount to $110,500,000 and the estimates which are being prepared for next year, we expect, will increase this amount to something like $130,000,000 or $140,000,000. We do not know what the total is yet as the hon. Minister of Finance has not told us. Therefore, I say it is well that the country should ask itself: Whither are we drifting? These hon. gentlemen say that the country is so prosperous that we can well afford such an expenditure as this. The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) is reported as saying only the other day that the late financial crisis in the United States had 'passed almost unperceived in Canada.' I leave it to the ordinary citizen, to the farmer, to the municipalities, or even to the hon. Minister of Finance himself, to say whether they 'perceived' any financial stringency in the recent past. While I am mentioning this matter of financial stringency I would like to say a word in regard to the serious effect that the situation had upon the movement of the western wheat crop. The situation was so grave that the hon. Minister of Finance tells us that he offered a large loan to the banks to put them in a position to assist in moving the the grain. In making that offer I can only regret that he did not provide for the continuance of a system which has been in vogue in the western country for a long time past by which advances have been made by the banks to farmers on their bills of lading. The banks got their loans from the government but they refused to grant this accommodation to farmers, and when I drew the minister's attention to the matter across the floor of the House he replied that the banks 'had to be judges of the persons to whom loans should be made.' I do not think that this met my question, and I do not think such an answer will be considered satisfactory by the people of the Northwest.

We have had the usual boasting by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House in regard to the prosperity of the country and the increase in our trade and commerce, attributed, as always, to the policy of the present administration. It appears to me that it would have been the part of wise statesmanship to have laid something by, to have had some reserve to meet the time of restriction—I do not think I will refer to it as depression—that inevitably, in the history of the whole world follows upon a period of great expansion. But the policy of the present government has been a spendthrift one, they have been spending all their money, borrowing more and paying no heed to the morrow. While we all must admit the prosperity of the country, I am not disposed to give all the credit to the present administration. On the contrary, I do not think our progress has been as great as it should have been under all the circumstances. There has been a great expansion of trade throughout the world and we have shared it, but, as I have already pointed out in this House, our progress has not been as great as that of any other of the great dependencies of the British empire that were represented at the recent imperial conference, with one single exception, although, with our conditions and resources, our opportunities have been very much greater than those of any of them. I have already pointed out, and my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Smith) reiterated it the other night, that our great rival in the southern hemisphere, the Argentine Republic, so similar to ourselves in population and in natural resources, has far surpassed us in the development of its trade and commerce. Not only that but its productiveness and exports have increased in far greater proportion than ours have done. I think I may say that is true of all the great self-governing colonies that I have mentioned and of the countries which were referred to by my hon. friend from Wentworth, while year after year we see an ever increasing the balance of trade mounting up against us and with regard to which we will have a day of reckoning at some time or other. I cannot understand, Mr. Speaker, how it is that we have no commercial agent in the Argentine Rupublic. In that republic, which is grappling with so many of the same problems that we are up against to-day and grappling with them more successfully in many instances than we are doing, an agent should be able to keep us informed of the progress of events. I would strongly urge upon this government to have some capable official placed there. We shall probably find that we can get very many useful hints from the administration of our great rival in the south.

Now, I have referred to the surpluses of which the Minister of Finance is boasting to-day. In the old days he used to denounce them as so much money drawn from the pockets of the people 'without a shadow of excuse.' These were his very words. This year, over and above an extravagant expenditure which is more than twice what it was ten years ago, he has taken in taxes something like $17.50 from every family in Canada more than was necessary to meet the ordinary needs in connection with carrying on the government. I will use his own words and say that there is not the shadow of an excuse for doing such a thing and that our necessary taxes are quite high enough without asking us to pay further taxes when there is no need for them. You will remember, Sir, that between the years 1891 and 1895, rather than pile up a surplus, the Conservative administration of the day struck off duties on raw and refined sugar and gave relief to the taxpayers of this country on these items alone to the extent of something like $21,000,000.

Before 1896 when these gentlemen were in opposition they denounced as extravagant a customs and excise revenue which was less than $28,000,000 annually, and they said that the people were bled white by taxation. But this year they have taken over $73,000,000 out of the pockets of the people by means of these same taxes. The customs duties alone, for the year 1896, amounted to less than $20,000,000; the Minister of Finance did not tell us what they would be for the present financial year, but for the last twelve months for which I have been able to obtain the figures, the calendar year of 1907, the customs duties have amounted to close upon $60,000,000, being just three times as much as they were 11 years ago. The hon. gentleman for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) gave us some interesting calculations the other day in regard to our customs taxation. He pointed to the increase that has taken place in the cost of all commodities since 1896 and quoted a long list of figures to prove that this amounted to from 35 to 50 per cent. We all know this to be the case, we all know that everything we have to buy to-day is dearer than it was some 10 years ago. That increase in price accounts to a very great extent for the apparently large increase in our trade and commerce. We are not at the present time buying so much more goods as these figures would indicate but we are paying much more for what we do buy. The Trade and Commerce returns are not based upon quantity but upon value.

Now, the Minister of Customs in reply made a long argument to prove that the present administration had adopted a policy which was leading towards Free Trade and he told us that the customs duties had on the average been reduced about 2½ per cent, or, from 18·28 per cent in 1896 to 15·73 per cent in 1906. Let us take his own figures and apply them to any specific article. Let us take for instance an article which would cost $100 in 1896, and taking the figures given by the Minister of Customs we would in 1896 have paid $18.28 customs duty on that article. But this year exactly the same article is valued at from $135 to $150 and as we pay duty on it at the rate of 15·73 per cent, we are paying duty on it to the extent of between $21.53 and $23.59 as compared with $18.88 in 1896. Therefore, the customs duty we have to pay on exactly the same article has increased between the years 1896 and 1906 to the extent of between $3 and $5. And yet these Liberal speakers have the assurance to state that they have reduced the customs duties. But the Minister of Custom did not tell us the whole story; he did not mention that the bounties granted to iron and steel manufactures, &c., these last few years have amounted to about $11,000,000 a year and that they should have been added to the customs duties in order to make a fair calculation with regard to this matter. In my opinion the bounty system is the very worst form of protection. By it you take money from the taxes paid by all the people and hand it over to bolster up the industries of just a few. The farmer gets no bounty for producing wheat but his taxes go to bonus manufacturers who produce iron and steel. The Liberal party came into power with the promise that they would eliminate the last vestige of protection and give us free trade, but their policy has been in the direction of a continuance of protection and every one of their actions has been guided by the necessity—as they undoubtedly have argued—of seeing that there was an adequate protection still maintained in this country. They cannot any longer pull wool over the eyes of the people. During the present session both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have virtually admitted that there is no difference now between the two parties as regards the question of protection. Rightly or wrongly both parties in this country find a protective policy necessary for revenue as well as for other purposes. But there are changes and readjustments which should be made here and there in the interests of producers or consumers. Take for instance agricultural implements, and in my opinion they stand in somewhat the same relationship to the farmer as the raw material does to the manufacturer. They are absolutely necessary to the farmer for the production of his finished product—the wheat. Last session gentlemen on this side of the House supported a resolution to cut in half the duty on mowers and binders but when the resolution came to a vote it was opposed by every Liberal member then in the House, including those who come from the Northwest.

Mr. KNOWLES. Does the hon. member mean to say that his friends on his own side of the House supported that resolution as a whole?

Mr. LAKE. All the Northwest members on this side of the House supported the resolution but the members on this side of the House as a whole, did not, all of them, support the resolution. I am perfectly willing to admit that. But I take very strong exception to the statement of the member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) that the resolution as proposed from this side of the House was not proposed in sound earnest by the gentlemen who supported it and who endeavoured to have it carried into effect.

Mr. KNOWLES. Is it not true that only five or six members on the Conservative side of the House supported the resolution?

Mr. LAKE. I forget exactly the number, but if the hon. member (Mr. Knowles) will multiply his figures by four or five he would be very much nearer the number of gentlemen on this side of the House who supported the resolution. The difference is that the gentlemen on this side had the courage of their convictions and they believe it would be in the interest of the country and especially in the interest of the farmers that there should be a reduction in the duty on agricultural implements, while I am just as firmly convinced that there were certain hon. members on the other side who held the same opinion but who had not the courage of their convictions and so did not support the resolution. There are various other items besides agricultural implements with regard to which it would be in the interest of the public to make changes but I have not time to go into the whole of that question now.

During the time I have had the honour to sit in this House the opposition in my opinion have conducted a fair criticism of the administration. When measures were introduced, if the opposition believed them to be in the interests of the country, they have not opposed them but by legitimate discussion they have endeavoured to make them as perfect as possible. There has been no opposition whatever to every legitimate encouragement of railway expansion, or to the improvement of the great channels of trade and commerce. The enlargement of the powers of the Railway Commission and the good results which have come therefrom, may be attributed very largely to the attitude of the members of the opposition,

Nor have the members of the opposition been reluctant to grant generous supplies and a free hand where it deemed it in the interest of the country to do so. Take for instance, immigration—an uninterrupted series of six years of bountiful harvests throughout the Northwest have opened the eyes of the world to that section of the country and a magnificent tide of immigration has set in.

The opposition has not refused plentiful supplies to encourage that immigration. Year after year sums approximating $1,000,000 have been freely granted for this service. Allow me to contrast this with the attitude of these hon. gentlemen when they were in opposition. In 1889, when the then government asked for only $95,000 for immigration purposes, the Liberal opposition moved to reduce the amount to $50,000 and divided the House on the question. That is all the money they were willing to grant to the Conservative government of the day to encourage the settlement of our great Northwestern territories, and to-day they are asking for twenty times that amount, and we have given it to them freely. We have only criticised where there has been gross extravagance in the use of the money. While we have been willing to grant liberal supplies, we want the money honestly and economically expended. Every effort should be made to bring to our shores the best class of immigrants, but we object to the system of indiscriminate bonusing that has been going on. When the only object of steamship agents is to send large numbers of people without regard to their quality, it must result in many undesirables being brought in.

Two years ago we criticised the contract with the mysterious North Atlantic Trading Company which was drawing vast sums of money from the treasury of this company, without performing, so far as we could make out, any adequate service therefor, and the government hastily cancelled the contract. The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) has criticised us for not accepting the offer of the leader of the government to state privately to the leader of the opposition who were the persons that composed the North Atlantic Trading Company. Allow me to point out that that statement was to be made in absolute confidence. That being so, what satisfaction would it be to the hon. member for North Toronto or to any other member of parliament or to the country at large to know that the hon. leader of the opposition was informed in the strictest confidence who the persons were who composed that strange company? The hon. leader of the opposition did perfectly right in refusing to bind himself to keep silence on such an important matter, and I believe that the country will demand, as soon as it has a chance of enforcing that demand, to know who the people were who were engaged in that contract. Within the last two months the government have doubled the bonus on immigrants from the continent of Europe, in the interest of probably the very persons who were profiting by that contract. Can it be that these people have the government by the throat, and are threatening to reveal who the principal beneficiaries under that contract were if they do not increase the bonus?

Speaking for the Northwest, I find much to criticise in what this government have done, and still more perhaps in what they have left undone. In the first instance, they have refused to grant to the new provinces the full status of self-governing provinces. They have curtailed their powers and have withheld from them their natural resources. They nominated a government in the province of Saskatchewan and placed it in power by methods which were absolutely indefensible. When an appeal was made to the courts to set aside many of the elections which were held at that time, judges of their own nomination and appointment declared that the right of contesting the validity of the first elections in the new provinces had been deliberately withheld by the Autonomy Acts. That very government of Saskatchewan, which should have been so grateful to hon. gentlemen opposite, at the first session of the legislature, passed a memorial addressed to this government, asking that the validity of the Autonomy Acts should be appealed to the Privy Council. It would appear that the Prime Minister has taken no notice whatever of that request; at any rate, we have heard nothing of it. Although I asked for the papers in the matter nearly two months ago, they have not yet been brought down, and so I am not able to speak positively. Again, at the time the Autonomy Bills were under discussion, it was urged that the new provinces should be relieved from the burden that the exemption from taxation enjoyed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had upon them; but the Prime Minister, if I understood him correctly, took the position that as litigation was pending at the time, and as no decision had been arrived at by the Supreme Court of Canada, and an appeal could not yet be taken to the Privy Council, the matter should be put on one side for the time being. As I understood him, if the final decision of the courts was against us, he would be prepared in some measure to come to the relief of the people of the Northwest provinces. I asked for the papers in connection with this matter more than two months ago, and I have been informed, that through a misunderstanding between two departments, they are not yet ready to be brought down, and so I am not able to speak with absolute positiveness as to the details. But, from very explicit answers which were given in response to questions which I asked last session, I am led to the conclusion that the government neglected to make their appeal to the Privy Council for more than two years, and that in consequence the Privy Council refused to permit the appeal to be made, and we were non-suited. Therefore the matter is closed and the people of the Northwest provinces have to continue under this very unjust burden. While the loss of our lands, mines and forests must affect our credit for all time and cripple our borrowing powers, the administration of these lands from a distant centre like Ottawa must always be very unsatisfactory ; and so it has proved, up to the present time. The administration in the hands of partisan officials, far removed from headquarters, must breed abuses and discriminations in favour of party friends. And may I point out to the Minister of the Interior again while I think of it that many of the lands of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company which were granted to them by this government have been escaping taxation because for some reason the patents have not been issued to the company, and so the people residing near these lands have to bear the burden of double taxation. So I hope patents will be issued immediately and that these lands will be brought under taxation.

While the administration has proved a source of dissatisfaction, what about the policy which has placed vast areas of agricultural, grazing, timber and coal lands in the hands of speculators who will be able to bleed the incoming settlers down to the last cent ? If this continues in the future it will prove to be absolutely intolerable. Hundreds of thousands of acres of our best farming lands have been sold to speculators at a dollar an acre, to be held by them at high prices at the expense of the settlers. We discovered last year one transaction in which about 10,000 acres were purchased at $1 an acre by party friends, and were sold by them within a few months at $12 an acre. That is only an example of what is going on in regard to very large areas of our land. Hundreds of thousands of acres of coal lands have been disposed of at $7 per acre to be held by speculators and bogus applicants have been paid $1 per head by these speculators to allow their names to be used as applicants for these coal lands. Millions of acres of timber limits have been sold for a mere song, outwardly under the form of public tender, but actually under conditions which destroyed all real competition, rendering it completely fictitious. Different tenders were sent in by the same individual or set of individuals under various names in order to make the public believe there had been some competition. Under this system we find that a small ring of persons are now in possession of more than a million acres of the best timber lands of the west. What will the price of coal and timber be to the settler in the future ? That is a question which the local governments in those provinces will have to face and they will be powerless to control the situation because our rightful heritage has been withheld from us and is being exploited by this government for the benefit of speculators and party friends. If our natural resources are to be made the source of profit to anybody, the entire profits should go to the people themselves and not to the middleman as has been the case. By the Ontario budget delivered the other day I see that the province of Ontario is deriving more than $3,000,000 this year from her timber and minerals. With, I believe, as great or even greater natural resources than even the great province of Ontario, the two provinces in the Northwest, can never, under their so-called system of compensation, receive more than $1,125,000 each per annum, no matter how great their population may become in the future. The land-owning companies according to the report of the Interior Department, sold their lands in the Northwest last year at an average of more than $6 an acre and the school lands that were sold by the government in Saskatchewan in 1906 and 1907, averaged nearly $21 an acre, according to an answer given by the Minister of the Interior the other day. At present we in Saskatchewan receive only $375,000 a year as compensation for the loss of our public domain, far less than the actual revenue which this government are deriving from it, and quite apart from the valuable concessions which they have been practically giving away to their party friends.

The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) called attention very pointedly to the fact that four or five individuals have been granted exclusive rights of fishing for commercial purposes, over thousands of miles of rivers in the Northwest and over from 15,000 to 20,000 square miles of lakes and lake coast for periods varying from 5 years to 21 years in return for a total yearly revenue for the whole five or six of them of $380 to be paid into the Dominion treasury.

While I have pointed out some of the sins of commission of this government, I must not overlook their sins of omission. What for instance has the government done to remedy the very real grievance of the farmers of the west in regard to the grain and cattle business ? We in the west believe that the construction of a railway to Hudson's bay is absolutely essential to the continued progress and prosperity of that country. The government have not denied the necessity for that great work. It was admitted last year by the Prime Minister himself who promised to make a statement on the subject within a very few days, which he did not do. It seems to me they have simply been playing with the matter, talking as they do of creating a fund for it by the sale in the future of pre-emptions which are not in the market to-day. As yet not one real step has been taken towards the settlement of this question. The Minister of Finance told us the other day that it is time for caution and that 'large new enterprises may well be laid aside for a little time.' I hope that the great enterprise of the Hudson's Bay Railway is not one of those to which the minister then referred, and I trust that the government will be prepared to undertake the building of the road at the earliest possible moment.

But the Minister of Finance told us in the very next breath that the government will continue to push forward the building of the Transcontinental Railway. Four years have passed since that railway was commenced and all we have at present is about 250 miles of track on the prairie section—which is supposed to be about ready for traffic but which has not yet been formally opened, and no branches—after four years of effort. What a very poor showing this is in comparison with the record of the Canadian Pacific Railway who, in five years, were able to push their line right through to the Pacific ocean in the face of every difficulty as they had always to push from the end of the track further and further out into an unsettled country and were only able to carry on construction from the ends. In the case of the Transcontinental Railway, on the contrary, they can attack the work at half a dozen different places. I hope the Minister of Finance will push the building of the Transcontinental Railway and of the Grand Trunk Pacific and its branches, and let us see something in the immediate future for the money we have been expending on this great undertaking.

For the past five years there has been practically no progressive legislation in the interests of the grain growers of the west, although there has been a very strong demand for such legislation, and the position of the farmers of the west has been growing gradually worse and worse. What has been done, for instance, to remedy the ever-recurring car shortage which annually costs the farmers of that country hundreds of thousands of dollars, taking away their freedom of action to sell where and to whom they please, and forcing both farmers and dealers to carry their wheat over for nearly a year with all the charges for that period, interest on borrowed money, storage and so on, before they can ship it out and realize. The government have practically admitted that this grievance exists, and they know the position full well, yet they have not made even an attempt to remedy it. To my mind, drastic measures should be taken, and at once, to ensure that there should be a sufficiency of transportation facilities to take such grain as may be offered to the head of the lakes before the close of navigation in each year. It is true, a Royal Commission was appointed some time ago to thoroughly inquire into the whole grain trade. That commission cost the country about $30,000, and the result of its inquiry is embodied in a report which has been somewhat of a disappointment to those who had hoped that it would recommend some radical measures to get at the root of the trouble. No doubt many of its recommendations are useful—I am not denying that. But they are only recommendations which will tinker with the question and bring no real and radical relief. We would like to see the evidence which was taken by this commission printed at the earliest opportunity and distributed throughout the country. Some valuable information, at any rate, will be obtained from it.

Again, farmers are demanding more radical steps to free the grain trade, as far as possible, from the control of large corporations and combines. One measure which will materially contribute to this end is the ownership and operation of terminal and transfer elevators by the government. I would strongly urge this question upon the attention of the government. It has been unanimously asked for by the representatives of the Grain Growers' Associations of Saskatchewan and Manitoba and by the Farmers' Association of Alberta. A unanimous request has been made that the terminal elevators should be taken into the possession of the government and operated by the government. There need be no question of expense in this matter; the western grain inspection pays for itself and the elevators would pay for themselves fully, and more than fully, and the whole system would be self-sustaining.

There are other matters which, perhaps, I would liked to have discussed, but I do not desire to speak at great length at this time. Before I close, there is one other question I would just like to mention, in which I entirely disagree with the policy of the present government. I believe that a mutual preferential tariff arrangement with the mother country is in the interest of not only Canada, but of the whole empire. Speaking as a western farmer, I believe it would be greatly in our interest if we could get a preference for our products in the British markets. I do not agree with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) on this point; I entirely disagree with him when he says that our farmers do not want such a preference. I believe that the government should do everything in their power to obtain this advantage for us, and if the Minister of Agriculture will come up to the Northwest he will find that the farmers of that country are particularly keen upon this point. Now, as I said before, I only intended to make a short speech and I will no longer occupy the time of the House.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL (South Oxford). It being near six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

An hon. MEMBER. Twenty minutes yet.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. SCHELL. If it is the wish of the House, Mr. Speaker, I will speak for a short time. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake). He closed his speech in declaring himself in favour of a mutual preferential tariff with Great Britain. I do not think there will be any material differences of opinion between members on this side and that side of the House on that question. Hon. gentlemen opposite, prior to 1896, discussed the question of a British preference; they waved the flag and shouted 'Loyalty!'—professing what they would do in regard to securing a preference with Great Britain. For years they discussed the question, but made no apparent effort to secure an entrance to that market on more favourable terms or to secure the mutual preference which they professed so loudly they were anxious to secure. When this government came into power in 1896, instead of talking about what they would do, instead of shouting 'loyalty' and proclaiming their anxiety to secure a preference, they proceed at once to deal with the matter from a business standpoint. Finding that there stood in the way of such an arrangement with Great Britain the most favoured nation clauses in the treaties with Germany and Belgium, they determined that it was necessary that these treaties should be denounced. This they proceeded to secure, and when the treaties were denounced they at once gave to Great Britain a preferential entrance into our own market. They would not have objected to secure for us a preference from the British market, but when they entered into negotiations with the British government, it was found that that government were not prepared to grant us a preference in their market in return for the preference we were prepared to grant them in ours. However, this government was not slow in dealing with the matter. In 1898 they granted the British producer a preference of 25 per cent, which, in the next year, or the year following that, was increased to 33⅓ per cent. And what has been the result of the granting of that privilege? Prior to 1896 our imports from Great Britain were running down. They decreased from $43,000,000 in 1893 to $29,000,000 in 1896. Immediately after the preference was granted to Great Britain English goods were sold in Canada in a largely increased volume. In 1900 we find they had increased to some $50,000,000; at the present time we are buying from England—that is in 1906—over $69,000,000. This year, for the nine months, we have bought already over $64,000,000 of English goods. Had these goods come in under the old tariff arrangement that was in operation prior to 1896, the people of Canada would have paid into the Dominion treasury in the way of customs duties, or taxes as hon. gentlemen opposite are pleased to term them, $30,300,000 more than we have paid during this period.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Do I understand that the 33⅓ per cent was applied to all the imports from Great Britain?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. The 33⅓ per cent was applicable to the dutiable imports only, and the $30,300,000 that was saved was figured on the basis of the dutiable imports, not on the dutiable and free. But that does not represent the only benefit that Canada has received from the British preference. The countries that were compiling against the British preference, in order to retain their foothold in our markets, had to reduce their goods to the closest possible margin of profit in order to retain a fair portion of the Canadian trade, and in that way also the Canadian consumer will reap an immense benefit.

Yet that was not all, or even the most important result of the preference. While we do not secure a legal preference in their market we secure an actual preference. Prior to its adoption we had not exported to Great Britain anything like the quantity of goods that we should have exported in view of the immense market, and in view of the high class quality of our products. Prior to that time the English consumer had not a very high appreciation of Canadian food products. There were many reasons for that. One of them has been referred to in the debate this afternoon, and that is that our transportation facilities to the English market prior to 1896 were not as good as they have been since. When the English people found what our government was doing, they were so appreciative of the preference given to them in our market that they began to ask about Canadian goods and Canadian food products, with the result that they found our products were of the very highest class. They found our cheese, our butter, our bacon, our fruits were equal to the best of their own growth, they found they were better than similar products they were getting from the United States. Why has our trade increased under the preference? Several causes were at work. While the English people were examining our goods and comparing their values, we had a man at the head of the Department of Agriculture who was devoting his energies to seeing that the best possible class of goods were put on the English market. He was taking every pains to see that not only the goods were properly put up, properly transported, and properly handled in going to the sea-board and going on board ship, but he appointed inspectors to see that every care was taken in putting these goods on the English market. So when the English people realized that we had as good or better products in these articles than they were getting from the United States, or from any other country, they began to inquire more and more for our goods. Our shippers found that it was becoming easier to trade with Great Britain, and the result has been that our exports immediately began to increase at a very rapid rate. I will give a few figures to show a comparison between the two periods under the two governments. In 1886, our exports to Great Britain were $41,540,304; in 1896, they had increased to $66,689,253, or an increase in eleven years of $25,148,949. Following the introduction of the British preference our exports began immediately to climb up at a very rapid rate. In 1898, only one year after the introduction of the British preference, our exports to Great Britain reached the enormous sum of $104,998,818, an increase in one year of $38,309,565. We sold to Great Britain in 1906, $133,092,571, or an increase in ten years of $66,403,318. That is to say our exports to Great Britain alone at the end of 1906 were double what they were in 1896. For 1907, I have not the exact figures, but I find according to the returns that are in they will be about the same as they were in 1906. Now, Mr. Speaker, when we find such an increase as that in our exports to Great Britain, we begin to conclude that the British preference that was entered into by this government in 1897, was one of the principal reasons why the English market became so valuable to us, and became at once the greatest market for all our natural food products. We to-day are selling to England $12,000,000 worth more than we sold to all the world in 1896. Our total sales to all countries in 1896 were $121,000,000 and odd, while to-day our exports to Great Britain alone amount to a trifle over $133,000,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Would my hon. friend state how the preferential tariff has affected the export trade of Canada?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. I think I showed you that it was because of the feeling of appreciation that arose in the minds of the English people in consequence of what Canada had done. Following that appreciation they inquired about our goods, and they had a very fine idea of the quality of our goods generally. I could quote to you from the 'Times' which referred to the preferential tariff as being the greatest move that had ever been taken in regard to securing freedom of trade between England and her colonies. The English newspapers were loud in their praises of what the Canadian government had done. Inquiries were made as well by English consumers, store-keepers and handlers of our goods and with the able, efficient and practical work that our Minister of Agriculture was doing, concurrently with the bringing into operation of the preferential tariff, in placing our goods on the British market in the best possible condition, the English people became appreciative to such an extent that the prices which had been obtained in the past for similar products increased in a very marked degree and in this way we secured a very much better place in the English market and obtained increased prices for our products.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to say whether goods from Canada are purchased in England out of sympathy for the Canadian people or on account of their quality?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. They are bought on their merits. Being six o'clock, I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask what business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. We will continue with the budget.

At six o'clock the House adjourned.

---

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, March 26, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION REPORT.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I beg to lay on the table the report of the Civil Service Commission with the evidence attached. The evidence is printed but not the report. It would be desirable that the report be submitted in printed form, but as that would involve some delay, we have concluded to lay it on the table as it is. A portion is typewritten and a portion is manuscript. I move that the rule of the House be suspended and that so much of the report as has not been printed be immediately printed.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). In connection with this report I desire to make a brief statement. The general tenor of the report will no doubt be discussed in due course, and I have no wish to anticipate such discussion, but there is a special feature of the report which relates to officials of the Department of Marine and Fisheries which calls for an immediate statement and immediate action.

The chairman of the commission, Mr. Courtney, does not appear to have taken part in the inquiry concerning that department, and the report as to that department is made by the two other commissioners, Messrs. Fyshe and Bazin. In general but unmistakable terms they charge officials of the department with dishonesty but give no official by name; neither do they make any clear or specific charge upon which the minister could take action. The report cites a couple of cases apparently intended to support the conclusion of the commissioners, but both these cases in the report convey impressions completely at variance with the facts.

The order in council appointing the commissioners authorizes them to inquire into and report on such changes as may be deemed advisable in the best interests for efficiency in the public service. I may venture the opinion that matters connected with the management and control of the departments can scarcely be said to come within the scope of this commission.

I suppose it may be stated also that it was hardly within the scope of this commission, or any of the commissioners, to state that the increased cost of living was the logical result of the wasting, impoverishing and demoralizing system of protection.

On page 61 of the report the following paragraph appears :

There is not only a lack of efficient organization and method in the department. There would also seem to be a lack of conscience. In connection with the enormous expenditures which are deemed necessary, the word 'discount' never appears. It is tacitly assumed there is no such thing; but the whole commercial world knows otherwise. If one gets any benefit from trade with the government except the trader then it must be clear that in these great purchases made for the government, without discount, its officers must be assisting the trader to get better prices from the government than he can get anywhere else; for everywhere else he has to give a discount. In other words, some of the government officers are serving two masters and apparently succeeding with both—scripture notwithstanding.

The two commissioners assumed that the greater amount was received and in consequence prices were paid dishonestly. The two commissioners, in support of their statement, proceeded to furnish two illustrations. They quote an official memorandum dated 17th September, 1907, in regard to the purchase of coal at Prescott, prepared for the Deputy Minister's consideration by the clerk in charge of the work, Mr. Stumbles. That memorandum reads as follows :

Mr. James Buckley, of Prescott, who furnished anthracite coal to this department at $5.75 per ton, states that this coal was furnished at a considerable loss to him. The coal cost him $6.25 and he is now willing to continue the furnishing of the anthracite coal at cost price, namely $6.25 per ton. I recommend that Mr. Buckley's offer be accepted and as he has furnished coal at a loss in the past that 5 per cent profit be allowed him for coal in future. Anthracite coal in Ottawa cost from $7.25 to $7.75 and the regular price at Prescott is $7 per ton.

The two commissioners, I suppose, must have seen a duplicate of this original memorandum on the file and evidently concluded without any further investigation that as it had been recommended by Mr. Stumbles it had been approved by the department, because they state in their report that the recommendation was agreed to. The fact is that the deputy minister submitted to the minister the memorandum with the following words written across it :

This will have to be decided on the conditions of the contract.—F. G.

'F.G.' are the initals of the deputy minister. This being submitted to me I refused to increase the price of the contract and across the memorandum I wrote :

Carry out the contract.—L. P. B.

The two commissioners stated in their report that the department had agreed to pay a larger price than the one mentioned in the contract. If they had taken the trouble to look more closely into the matter they would have found that positive instructions had been given, as I have just stated, to carry out the conditions of the contract as it was. Moreover, I may add that I have had very careful inquiry made into the payments made since the date of this contract and the prices which have been paid are those mentioned in the contract.

I would call the attention of the House to another sample of the manner in which the two commissioners have supported their statements. The officers of the department here, having had occasion to question the price certified by the agent at Quebec for a certain brand of flour, wrote to that official and asked him for an explanation of the item, before passing the account for payment. A long correspondence took place between the accountant's branch of the department and that official and the account was officially inquired into to ascertain whether the price asked was fair and just. In other words, the officials of the department here took all necessary precautions not to pay any more than what would be a just and fair price. However, the two commissioners in their report state as an instance of the carelessness of the officials of the department, that this was inquired into at the instance of the Auditor General. As a matter of fact, the Auditor General has not seen the account and the Auditor General could not and did not have anything to do with the inquiry.

While I am aware that some of the officials have been open to censure for the manner in which they have discharged their duties, I have never had any evidence to establish dishonesty on their part. The accusation of the commissioners, while general and indefinite, is of such a character as to reflect on the integrity of the officials generally. For the protection of the public interest and in fairness to the officials, it is necessary that further inquiry should be made into the accusation and I propose to take, without any further delay, the necessary steps to that end.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ontario). Mr. Speaker, it is a novel spectacle in the history of parliamentary government that an administration within a few minutes after laying upon the table the report of a commission appointed by themselves should put up one of their own members to attack not only the commissioners' report but the commissioners themselves. I do not know whether the incident we have just witnessed with some surprise has anything to do with the delay in bringing down the report. I do remark, however, that it seems to me the minister who has just now spoken has been guilty of an act of very grave discourtesy to the House in undertaking to discuss a subject which could not be discussed generally upon this motion, because no member of the House, outside the government, has had an opportunity of examining this report. Presumably the gentlemen to whom was entrusted the duty of making this investigation and who submitted this report were men in whom the government had confidence. If that confidence was justified—and I have no reason to believe it was not justified—surely it might have been permitted to the House and to the country that the parliament of Canada should make itself acquainted with the terms of that report before gentlemen occupying the treasury benches should see fit to discuss it and to discuss it at a time when no answer could be given either on behalf of the commissioners, or on behalf of the interests of the people, at a time when the minister knew that absolutely no defence of the commissioners could be made in this House. The course adopted is most unusual and I think it is not a very wise precedent for the government to set. When the report of that commission has been printed and distributed among the members of this House, no doubt there will be an opportunity to discuss more in detail the remarks which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has seen fit to make this afternoon.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). I quite agree with the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) that we are rather taken aback because we have not yet seen the report. Perhaps the minister will inform us whether or not the report contains any strictures on the fact that over a year ago a gentleman was assigned as a commissioner to inquire into padding of the lists at Sorel in connection with his department. Statements were made before that commissioner and charges were laid that material that had been paid for by the department or by the people of Canada had never been delivered and that these alleged defalcations amounted to $150,000. The inquiry into those serious allegations was commenced over a year ago, but there has as yet been no report laid before parliament of the inquiry. It is easy to understand this. Mr. Desbarats, the man in charge of that department, whom the minister has not seen fit to suspend while that investigation has been pending, is a son-in-law of the Hon. R. W. Scott, Secretary of State of this government.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is absolutely nothing of that kind in the report which has been laid before the House. I may say also to my hon. friend that what he says with regard to Mr. Desbarats is absolutely incorrect. Mr. Desbarats has never been directly or indirectly connected with the branch of the service to which he refers. It was a matter under the control of the chief engineer of the department and Mr. Desbarats is in charge of the yard at Sorel, and has absolutely nothing to do with it. My hon. friend is entirely mistaken.

Mr. BENNETT. I will have to accept the minister's statement. These defalcations have been the talk, not only of Sorel, but also of Montreal and Ottawa. I have had a lot of most authentic information vouchsafed to me in reference to them, and they will be aired in the Public Accounts Committee, beginning on next Tuesday. I have been informed that Mr. Desbarats is the head of that yard, because, in the Auditor General's Report, he is described as the director of the Sorel shipyard, and I understand that it comes under his purview and supervision, that he has charge of the administration of that yard and all works connected with it. When the public, as well as the government, understand that millions of dollars are disbursed there and that the bulk of the money is not spent under contract, no tenders being invited, and as I think it will be proved, and is stated in the report here, the public will think it strange that with all those things going on year in and year out, a friendly commissioner appointed by the minister has not been able to fathom them during more than a year, because the minister has stated here on more than one occasion that he has not yet been able to lay the report on the table of the House. Perhaps then the minister can give me information on another point. There has been a large expenditure in his department on what is known as the Georgian Bay Fisheries Commission. Is reference made in the report to the fact that one of those commissioners has been convicted by officers of the hon. gentleman's department for illegal fishing? One of the very commissioners appointed to inquire into the workings of the department and of the fishery regulations is to-day on record in the hon. gentleman's department of having been convicted of illegal fishing by his own fishery officers in contravention of the law. I would ask the minister whether any reference is made to that matter in the report?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no reference to that. I do not know whether I made myself clear in regard to Mr. Desbarats, but I think the insinuation which is thrown across the House concerning that gentleman is absolutely uncalled for. The investigation which is now taking place is with regard to some contracts for the construction of piers on Lake St. Peter. These piers were constructed under the supervision of the chief engineer, Mr. B. H. Fraser, and Mr. Desbarats, neither directly nor indirectly, had anything at all to do with it. I hope my hon. friend will not insist upon the statement he has just made. Mr. Desbarats is a deserving officer, and I should be sorry if such a statement were to go abroad without contradiction.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister stated in the House the other day, in answer to a question, that the inquiry had been along the lines of padding the pay-list at Sorel. Is that padding of the pay-list confined to the supervision of Mr. Fraser?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes ; it is in that branch of the service, which has no connection at all with the administration of Mr. Desbarats.

Mr. BENNETT. That investigation, having been pending now for over a year and that inquiry having been made, is Mr. Fraser still in the employ of the department or has he been suspended?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, Mr. Fraser has not been suspended, because so far I have seen absolutely nothing which would justify me in suspending him. He has been in the service for many years, and seems to be a deserving officer. I have confidence in him until it has been proved that he is not a deserving officer.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, Mr. Speaker, some light was thrown on the workings of this Sorel shipyard in another place, and it was distinctly pointed out by an officer of the government that he had found great looseness at that place. As I understand the witnesses on that occasion, their evidence had reference, not to work that was being done on the lake, but exclusively to work in and about the shipyard at Sorel. However, after I have seen the report I will be able to see whether there is any reference to that. Now, may I ask the minister—because I primarily rose to ask him the question—Is the report that has been made by Mr. Gaudet, and which he has been promising to bring down for several days past, still not available?

Mr. BRODEUR. I brought it down some days ago.

Mr. BENNETT. I asked for it a couple of times.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to inquire whether——

Mr. SPEAKER. This discussion hardly arises out of the motion, which is that this report be printed.

Mr. TAYLOR. My inquiry has reference to the report. I want to inquire from the minister before the report is printed, what is the cost of the report, have the commissioners been paid and will the minister, who disagrees with the report, join with the opposition in voting that, as the report is not favourable to his department, it be not received nor printed?

Mr. FIELDING. If I may be permitted to add a few words—if no other gentleman wishes to speak—I will first answer the question. The report has not been printed in full, as I stated in making this motion, but the evidence has been printed, and there are two good sized volumes placed on the table. The commissioners have not yet been paid, as their remuneration has not yet been determined, but that will follow in due course. Let me say that I dissent entirely from the view of the leader of the opposition that there was any impropriety whatever in the action taken by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in reference to this report. The minister has attacked nobody, he has made an accusation against nobody, either in this House or out of it. I think, however, that if the minister, with the facts he has before him, had not called attention to a discrepancy in the report, if I may so call it, and which I am bound to think was an error of judgment, a very important point affecting the honour and character of his own officers—if the minister had allow-that report to go out for one hour without calling attention to that particular feature making an accusation affecting the honour and integrity of his own officials, I think the minister would not have acted fairly or justly. He has made no charge against anybody, he has made no attack on the commissioners, he has simply called attention to the fact that the commissioners—we are bound to believe through erroneous information or improper judgment—have made grave accusations, not against the minister himself, as I understand it, there is not a line affecting the minister himself. But when accusations are made against officials of the department, not as to mismanagement, but accusations affecting the personal honour and honesty of officials who have been in the department for many years, officials whose integrity and honour we have trusted in the past, and which we ought to trust until just cause is shown to the contrary—if the minister, I say, had not criticised that report, a report which, as he points out, specifies nothing, accuses nobody specifically, but levies a general charge of dishonesty against all the officials of the Marine Department, although it excepts some without naming them—I think my hon. friend will admit that the minister owed it to himself and to the officials to make a statement at once that he did not purpose to allow the matter to rest there, but that such a grave accusation called for some further proceedings, and that he intended to take such proceedings. Such, I think, will be necessary in the public interest, and such surely will be necessary in fairness to those old officials.

Mr. J. D. REID (Grenville). Is there any mention in this report of the Falconer investigation?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is the attention of the commissioners drawn to the report that this man made?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is a reference.

Mr. J. D. REID. That report, I suppose the minister will remember, shows where goods were purchased in his department, and have been purchased, which the department never received at all. Now, was attention drawn to that?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have not seen anything of the kind in the report.

Mr. J. D. REID. It was read in the Public Accounts Committee, and the minister will see it in the report. Then I would like to know if the minister drew the attention of the commissioners to the way these accounts are passed by the department.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am extremely sorry to have to state to my hon. friend that the commissioners never consulted me, they never came near me. I have had absolutely nothing to do with them.

Mr. J. D. REID. I suppose they must have consulted some one. I would like to know if the attention of the commissioners was drawn to the way these accounts were passed.

Mr. BRODEUR. I must correct the statement I have just made, when I say that I never saw the commissioners. I saw one of them—Mr. Fyshe. There was some complaint that he could not get all the information he wanted, and I told him that he could get all the information he wanted, and I gave instructions to that effect.

Mr. J. D. REID. Was this information given to Mr. Fyshe?

Mr. BRODEUR. All the facts were placed at his disposal.

Mr. J. D. REID. What I would like to know is if his attention was drawn to the fact——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. We are getting out of order. The mover of the motion has the right to reply and in this case the hon. gentleman who moved the motion asked if any one else desired to speak before making his reply. It is customary for the Speaker to put that question to the House before that is done. Although I must confess that I did not ask the question, the continuation of the debate at this point would be out of order.

Mr. SPROULE. May I ask on what ground, Mr. Speaker? There is a motion before the House relative to this report. While I confess that this is a very inconvenient time to discuss it and while I think that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) showed a very bad example and set a very bad precedent, since it has been opened up by the motion and since he has referred to the report, is it not in order for any other member of the House to refer to the report if he so desires?

Mr. SPEAKER. Where the mover has the right to reply it is customary for the Speaker to ask if any other member wishes to debate the question before the mover has his reply. I did not do that from the chair in this instance and the hon. member from Grenville (Mr. Reid) asked that question before the mover of the motion commenced his reply. If there is any question about the matter I would prefer to let the debate go on rather than enforce the rule.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I doubt if you, Mr. Speaker, can apply the rule to a member of the House.

Mr. FIELDING. I did not know that any other hon. member wished to speak, and I have no desire to press the point.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Grenville has the floor.

Mr. J. D. REID. I was asking the minister if cases such as the Merwin case, for example, where it was shown that a Jones Underfeed stoker was purchased for $800 and sold to the government for double that amount, were brought to the attention of the commissioners. If these facts were not presented to the commissioners I claim that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has not been doing justice to the commissioners in not explaining to them the whole working of the department, and if they have not how is he going to defend himself or his officials? He stands up in the House and says he has no reason to believe that they have found anything wrong in his department. The minister stood up in the Public Accounts Committee, backed up these transactions that were disclosed there and declared that because the prices were certified to be fair and just the transactions were right and honest on the part of the government. He was the one man who fought it out and maintained that it was all right. He believes that it is right for his department to purchase from a man like Merwin an article for $960 that only cost Merwin $330. That is what the minister claims is right and fair and, in order to show the public that he believes it is right and fair, he continues doing business with this man Merwin right along. Merwin puts in a wrong name, doing business under the name of F. L. Brooks & Co., and the minister continues doing business with him. We had this man Strubbe in the Public Accounts Committee last year and we proved that he beat the government by charging double for the articles which were purchased of him. The minister stood up in the Public Accounts Committee, fought it out and declared that it was right and just. He is the only minister I have seen in the Public Accounts Committee who has done it, and yet Strubbe's name is there and Strubbe continues doing business in the same old way and at the same old price. That proves that the minister was upholding these transactions. He cannot see anything wrong in his officials and I believe he is right because the officials have to do what the minister tells them. Does any hon. member of this House believe that these officials would have continued purchasing from Strubbe or from Merwin unless they had orders from the minister to continue? The minister has to defend the officials because I am satisfied that they acted under the instructions of the minister. I am willing to subpœna these persons before the Public Accounts Committee, and they will swear, I am satisfied, that they continued to purchase from Merwin and Strubbe because the minister told them to do so.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is absolutely incorrect.

An hon. MEMBER. And he knows it.

Mr. BRODEUR. Of course he knows it.

Mr. J. D. REID. We have no evidence except the official documents. The Auditor General's Report would not state what is not true, and I am not stating anything but what is in the Auditor General's Report.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have seen in the Auditor General's Report the names of Geo. T. Merwin, of F. L. Brooks & Co. and of Strubbe & Co. I have seen the evidence. I do not know how I can get at it in any other way and in so far as the officials are concerned I agree that the minister should uphold the officials if he has given orders to them to do business with these men.

Mr. BRODEUR. I say that I never gave any such orders.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must not repeat a statement after it has been denied.

Mr. J. D. REID. Very well, I will withdraw it and leave it to the public to decide from the blue-books that we have on record. I would like also to state that the minister should read the report of Falconer if he has not read it because there is evidence in it which will show that there is no department which could be run in a worse manner than the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I want to do justice to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. His is not the only department. There are several others.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is not discussing the motion before the chair.

Mr. SPROULE. The motion refers to all departments. It is not confined to any branch of the government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The report is upon all the departments.

Mr. J. D. REID. I will just draw the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the following accounts in the Auditor General's Report:

F. L. Brooks & Company, Montreal, $56,679.50—P—95.
Geo. T. Merwin, Montreal, $50,641.50—P—98.

Mr. BRODEUR. Does the hon. gentleman state that these goods have been ordered since I have been the minister?

Mr. J. D. REID. If I were to state what I think myself I would have to state that they have been, but I am not in a position to prove it and I must take the hon. gentleman's word. But there were purchased to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars, as was shown in the Merwin investigation, on which the least profit that was made was from thirty to forty per cent and it ran up to over 100 per cent. If we average the profit at fifty per cent it will be seen that Merwin made $50,000 in cold cash and that the minister let him make it since he has been the minister. That has been continued since the minister came into office. The minister has stated here before that he had to continue these contracts with Merwin. Notwithstanding the fact that we proved in the Public Accounts Committee last year that this man was deliberately and systematically robbing the government, he was allowed to go on and was paid the same prices that he was obtaining before. The minister did not reduce the prices that were charged by Merwin. The same prices are shown in this book as having been paid since these disclosures were made. The minister let him go on and take that graft and he did not do anything to prevent the people from being robbed by this man. I would like to ask if that is managing the department in a fair and proper manner and if it is in the interest of the people of this country. No minister would allow Merwin or any other man to rob this country of at least $50,000 without there was some graft going to some person. I don't think there is any person but what will agree with me on that.

I only rose to ask a question ; I have not been able to see this report, but when the time comes I will try and do justice in discussing it with the other members of the House.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has raised a tempest in a teapot after all. There are two cases, not very important ones, in which he thinks the Civil Service Commissioners are in error. The commissioners have no doubt gone through all the departments and have had before them a multiplicity of transactions and details in connection with them. Suppose that in the end they did make a mistake with reference to these two transactions the minister should be devoutly thankful that he got off so lightly. He may be devoutly thankful that the commission did not look that department through from top to bottom and take in the whole of the transactions for the last five years—take the 'Arctic,' take the pleasure steamers, take all these other things, and take that last, but not least, outrage upon the people of this country, namely, the granting of exclusive 21 year leases to political favourites of thousands of square miles of the valuable fishing resources of the country. The minister says he is filled with zeal for the honour of the officers of his department. It is not many weeks ago when he was ready to throw off all his responsibility upon the officers of the department, and it strikes me that about the same thing has taken place to-day. Did the minister know that Merwin bought at one price and charged his department double that price ? He did.

Mr. J. D. REID. Of course he did.

Mr. FOSTER. After that transaction was brought to the attention of the minister and the minister knew it, was Merwin paid another dollar out of the public funds? If so, why? Contracts—will the minister lay on the table any contracts between that department and Merwin? I have never seen any. Surely the minister knows himself that if he finds a man supplying his department and that man has doubled his price to his own advantage, that he has no right in the public interest to have any more transactions with that man; that he has a perfect right there and then to cut the connection with that man whether there is a contract or not, because he is taking from the public treasury what the people ought not to be called upon to pay and what they are called upon to pay because of the negligence or incapacity or worse of the department. Why was the people's money paid out, twice as much as it should be, to Merwin ? Who stands between the people and such a thing as that? The minister who is in charge of a department ought to. And if that money is paid out in such a way the responsibility must rest upon the minister in charge of such a department; he cannot throw it off on anybody else, not even on his officers; he is responsible for it. Two years ago and more the Minister of Marine knew that Merwin and others were doing that sort of thing, and for the two years succeeding that he has been minister he still pays money yearly to Merwin. He had abundant authority and abundant power to cut the connection at once with Merwin. Why didn't he do it? But if the minister has only had these two little things, as he states, misrepresented, how thankful he ought to be that the whole matter of that infamous supplying of the 'Arctic' was not taken up by that commission and shown in its proper light to the House and to the country. Now, what does the minister propose to do? He has told us he is going to have revenge. He is going to do something; what is it? I think the House has a right to know what he proposes to do. The only thing I see he can do, taking all things into consideration, the revelations of the Public Accounts Committee, the revelations of the Falconer inquiry, the revelations which have come out in various other ways, and this report of the commission, the only thing he can do if he does the right thing is to have a Royal Commission or an independent commission of this House clothed with full and unrestricted power and set them loose on that department to look into the management of it for the last five, or six, or seven, or eight years. That is the pass we have come to now. The country will not be satisfied with anything else. The country is not going to say, that these two gentlemen who have no interest in the matter at all have made an imputation on that department without having found reasons for that imputation. It may very well be that they have been in error in citing these two cases, but it may also very well be that it is not upon these two cases alone that they have made their imputations that things are wrong in that department. It is more probable that the commission would come to a conclusion from what they have seen in the department in the course of their whole investigation. You have these two gentlemen of honour and ability who have no interest or prejudice in any way, who make this statement with regard to that department. Put all these things together and the people of this country will not rest satisfied with partial committees, put in the way that my right hon. friend put the committee to look into certain things with reference to the 'Arctic,' a committee whose powers were so shortened that it was impossible for them to go into the whole subject and who so exercised its powers as to shut off anything like an independent inquiry. Now, Sir, that is not the kind of a commission or that the kind of a committee that the people of this country will wish to see or will be satisfied if they do not see. A Royal Commission or a committee of independent members of this House clothed with authority to go into the whole administration of that department covering the term of the minister preceding the present minister and his own term at least; that is the least that can be done to satisfy the people of this country.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). There is a good deal in the observations which have been made by the hon. member for North Toronto which is to the point and there is a good deal which is outside the question altogether. The hon. gentleman has gone far afield beyond the question at issue in throwing out insinuations generally, when he should have confined himself to the remarks which were made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries in presenting the report of the Royal Commission upon the Civil Service found that the commissioners in two instances which have been brought before the public with regard to transactions in his department, had made a singular error affecting the honour of the officials of his department. My hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) thought it right that this fact should be recognized at once, but at the same time the Minister of Marine said that there was enough in the report of the commission to warrant further investigation. He stated that the commissioners have thrown out suspicions, and made not only insinuations, but also actual statements against the officials, and that yet strange to say they named nobody, thus casting suspicion all over the department, and without any definiteness which would show who the guilty parties were. The commission not only insinuated, but stated that there had been wrong-doers but they did not disclose who the wrong-doers were. Under such circumstances. I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Foster)—and as the Minister of Marine has indeed already stated—that further action should be taken. My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Foster) said that ample inquiry should be held, but he also chose to say that it should not be such an inquiry as the leader of the House prescribed two years ago when the investigation was made into the 'Arctic' by what he called a partial committee. I do not admit the assertion of the hon. gentleman. That committee took the evidence and took it in the light of the day. It may not have suited my hon. friend, but that is a question which it is not necessary to discuss to-day. At the same time I agree with the statement of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that there is enough in the report of the commission to cause further investigation to be held. Whether it should be by Royal Commission or whether it should be by committee of this House my hon. friend is not prepared to say; nor am I prepared to say. But I say that there should be further investigation.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It is a little inconvenient to deal with this question at the present time, with the limited knowledge we have of the report. But, in view of the observations made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the right hon. premier (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) himself, I think it would not be amiss to refer very briefly to some of these observations. In the first place, this Royal Commission, appointed to inquire into the management of the departments, was appointed by the government of which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is a member. That commission, presumably, did its work according to its best judgment and with the best information it could obtain. And, if we accept the statement made to the House by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the commission condemns very strongly the management of affairs in his department. Now, the minister himself condemns the commission appointed by himself, discredits that commission, and declares that they had not sufficient data before them to justify them in reaching the conclusion they did. The minister (Mr. Brodeur) condemns his own Royal Commission. But what does he propose to do? He proposes, as head of the department, to appoint another commission. For what purpose? I venture to say that nine out of ten people in this country will reach the conclusion that there is only one purpose, and that is to whitewash that department. He is not satisfied with the commission appointed and the report they have made, but desires to have another commission, and this one to be appointed by himself, if I understand him correctly. Is it to be another Royal Commission that will investigate all the departments? If so, the one already appointed will be, by that Act, discredited by the government. There was a proposal made from this side of the House a year ago to make an examination of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. A motion was made to that effect, and sufficient evidence was adduced, in our opinion, to justify the holding of that investigation. We gave instance after instance of the purchase of articles from friends of the government and 50 per cent, or, in some instances 75 or even 100 per cent more paid for these articles than they could be bought for in the open market. But, notwithstanding this, our proposal to have a commission or committee of inquiry to go into the department was opposed, and the minister himself said that he saw no ground for granting the request. He said that everything was fair and honourable and that the country got full value for money spent in making purchases of supplies. So, the motion was voted down.

The minister himself insisted upon appointing a Royal Commission. And now that commission condemns his department in as strong language—or, at least, as strongly by implication—as we did. And the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not satisfied with that, but wants another investigation. I happen to have before me the facts concerning some of the articles purchased for the department by Merwin, as shown before the Public Accounts Committee. It appears that Merwin supplied one Hendey Norton lathe for $1,250. But it was shown that any agent of the department could have purchased that lathe from the manufacturer for $995. That is, the country paid $255 to this middleman, this go-between, for which it received no return. And there was no discount, no refund, no allowance of any kind. These facts were brought out before the minister on oath. The department purchased one Underwriters' pump for $1,550. The account for this was certified and the price declared to be fair and reasonable. But the manufacturers told us that the same pump was purchased for $1,024, which meant that the country lost $526 on that transaction. There was no trade discount, no remission, no rebate to the country, but the middleman got that $526 as a commission for the purchase of the article. The department, at the expense of a two cent stamp—or rather, merely by writing a letter, for a department of the government does not pay postage—could have purchased that pump for $1,024, but they bought it through the middleman and paid $1,550 for it. There were two Underfeed stokers sold to the department for $2,550, and the country paid that money on the account being certified to as correct and the amount fair and reasonable. Yet the manufacturers told us that they would supply the same pump for $1,880, or a saving of $670 as compared with the price actually paid. Yet the minister thinks that nothing wrong was done. There was a tubular boiler sold to the department and paid for with the country's money, $975. It should have cost $660, so that this go-between friend of the government got a commission of $315 for merely sending in this order which might have been sent in by the department. There was a Sturtevant engine paid for by the public which this friend of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries sold to the department at $960. It cost $335, so that the country paid $625 for nothing. Where did the money go? Who got that extra amount? Does the minister think that this was all perfectly right and that the affairs of the department in this instance were properly managed? Does he think that the man who certified that this was a fair and reasonable price was doing his duty to the country and to the department? Does he still retain that man in the service? Here is another engine sold to the department at $550, which really cost $265.50—$285 of the public money paid out for nothing.

Mr. BENNETT. Which official bought that?

Mr. SPROULE. This was purchased from Merwin, purchased, I presume, by Mr. Fraser, Am I correct in saying that Mr. Fraser was the party who authorized this purchase?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not remember the facts exactly. It was before I entered the department. If I remember well, it was shown in the investigation that took place that the purchase was made by Mr. Fraser.

Mr. SPROULE. I wanted to get that for purpose of exactness. I am told there are two Frasers. Which one is it?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think this is G. Fraser, but am not very sure.

Mr. TAYLOR. Superintendent of lights.

Mr. SPROULE. At any rate the sum and substance of it is this: that he sold to the department an engine for $550 for which he paid $265.50. So that the country paid $284.50 for nothing, as the department could have purchased it direct at exactly the same price. There was no discount asked and none allowed. Take the Beatty hoisting engine sold to the government for $1,100, what did it cost? It cost $770, so that there was $330 paid for nothing. No trade discount was asked or given. Take the Hendy pillar shaper sold to the government for $800. Presumably the department required it and they ordered it through the same Mr. Fraser. How much was paid for that engine? $505. Mr. Fraser purchased it for the government and paid $295 less for it than the selling price to the government. Yet this price of $800 was certified to as fair and reasonable. When this was brought to the knowledge of the minister afterwards, he saw nothing wrong in the transaction and neither suspended the officer nor did he ever try to get back the money. We paid for a steam derrick $1,250, ordered in the same way through a friend of the government. How much did that cost? It cost $756.70. Thus we paid out $493.30 over and above what the article cost and what we could have got it for ourselves on our own order. We had a McG. & G. boiler supplied for $975, bought through this same agent of the government, who paid $660 for it, thus making an overpayment of $315 for which the country got no return. Yet the minister saw nothing wrong. Then I find a capstan sold the department for $650 which cost $390, or in other words, this gentleman got a commission of $260 on that one small article. A Sturdevant engine cost the country $550 and it was bought for $262.50, so that the country paid $287 for nothing. There was no trade discount and no reduction of any kind, yet the minister saw nothing wrong, and that price was certified to as fair and reasonable. Take an O. & S. boiler for which the government paid $852.50, and that again was certified to as fair and reasonable. Yet that boiler only cost $575, and the department could have purchased it for that price if it had sent the order direct. Out of that, the government lost $277. Then there was a travelling crane sold to the country for $2,500 which cost through the same source, $1,640, yet there is a certificate that $2,500 was a fair and reasonable price. Well the account has been paid and this friend of the government got $860 commission on this one article. Here is a bitumastic solution for which the government paid $1,500 but which cost only $1,120, so that the agent of the government had on this transaction a nice little commission of $380. The prices of all these artcles were certified to as fair and reasonable. Yet the same men are kept in the employ of the department and the government see no reason for suspending them or for ceasing to deal with these firms, and although the minister had all this information, he saw no reason why we should appoint a commission to inquire into the management of the business of his department. I have given only fourteen items, but these fourteen cost the country $18,000 whereas they were bought for $11,838, so that the middleman, the friend of the government, got a commission on these fourteen articles of $6,173. We could have ordered these articles ourselves and saved this commission. Yet all these prices were certified to as fair and correct although the manufacturers said under oath that they would sell them to any one on a cash basis at the prices sold to this individual and allow a discount besides. The government, however, did not see fit to order in that way and preferred to order in such a way as to enable their friends to make this rake off. And the minister goes on dealing with the same firm through the same individual. The commission very properly condemned this method of doing business, and because they condemned it, the minister rises and criticises the commission. He condemns the commission which brought to light these transactions.

Mr. BRODEUR. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to recommend the government to dismiss Mr. Fraser for those transactions? I suppose he has read the evidence. Does he say that Mr. G. F. Fraser should be dismissed ?

Mr. SPROULE. I am not recommending anything at all. The minister is running his own department; but if, in the face of these facts, if he still retains the same man and allows him to go on doing the same work in the same way, the country can draw its own conclusions. The minister is the only one we can hold responsible. What does he propose to do now? Does he propose to appoint another commission to be named by himself? His own Royal Commission has condemned these transactions and he has condemned his Royal Commission and now he wants to appoint another commission, presumable to stultify it.

Mr. BENNETT. Was Mr. Gaudet appointed in 1907 to undertake this inquiry at Sorel?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not remember the date. It was some time ago and I pressed Mr. Gaudet to make a report. He sent me the other day an interim report which I laid before the House.

Mr. BENNETT. I will refer the minister to it. The gentleman in his interim report says :

I have been asked last year to proceed with an inquiry into certain charges laid against Mr. Ernest Roy, foreman of works, or rather of a certain part of works in the Department of Marine and Fisheries at Sorel.

I do not wish to place the minister in a wrong light. Do I understand that he appointed Mr. Gaudet himself or was the appointment made by one of his predecessors ?

Mr. BRODEUR. He was appointed on my own recommendation.

Mr. BENNETT. It appears that although this gentleman was appointed a year ago he did not move until this year. He says :

I thought I could grant him this delay and finally he appeared on the 12th of February last and gave his version of the matter.

This report is dated March 11, 1908, so that the 12th of February of this year was the first date at which anything was done in the matter of the inquiry. Might I ask the minister if that is correct ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think Mr. Gaudet states that. He states that the man against whom the charge was made appeared recently, but I understand that he had been carrying on the investigation for some time before.

Mr. BENNETT. He proceeds :

Before I proceeded with the inquisition I notified Mr. Roy either to attend the same or to be represented thereat. At the time, Mr. Roy, who had been transfered from Sorel to below Quebec, saying he was very busy for the purposes of the department. I somewhat delayed the inquiry and finally wrote again to Mr. Roy and told him it was impossible for me to delay any more and I had to proceed whether in his presence or in his absence.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has already of course spoken on this motion.

Mr. BENNETT. I was simply asking the minister a question and he asked me a question.

Mr. RICHARD BLAIN (Peel). Mr. Speaker, I am sure the electors of Canada will be very much interested in the report that has been laid on the table and they will be very much surprised by the attitude taken by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in connection with the report. It is, I think most unfair that the members of this House should be thrown into a general discussion of this question without having the facts before them or having had an opportunity of examining into the commissioners' report. The hon. gentleman will remember, of course, that the people of Canada have for many years had their eyes centred on the Marine and Fisheries Department, in connection with the investigation which has taken place in this House and in the Public Accounts Committee, and the general discussion of the estimates of the Marine and Fisheries Department. There have been rumours of scandal and it has been proven before the Public Accounts Committee that men have been supplying this government and to this department in particular goods of various kinds and charging enormous profits on them, and that the minister has not put a stop to this practice although he was the proper person having full control of his own department. We had an example of that the other day. We have had examples of it in this House. I have myself heard this hon. gentleman and his predecessors, in discussing the estimates of the department, say that the department was in splendid condition, that not a dollars' worth of goods had reached the department without a record being taken of them, and that when the goods were sent out a record was kept and at the close of the year a correct statement of every transaction would be found upon the records of the department. A gentleman interviewed the minister a short time ago and suggested that he would look into the hon. gentleman's department, and after some interviews between Mr. Falconer, a representative of an American book-keeping system, and the minister, Mr. Falconer received an order to examine into the department and after his examination of the departmental affairs in the city of Halifax, he stated that there was no record and the affairs of the Halifax office were in such shape that it was absolutely impossible for any man to give a correct statement of the assets and liabilities of that one office.

Mr. BRODEUR. Does my hon. friend think it is fair to discuss this question which is now being investigated by the Public Accounts Committee ?

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend laid the return upon the table of the House and I quoted in a former discussion a letter to which I am now referring ; therefore, if it is before the Public Accounts Committee, it will have to take care of itself. I shall make no reference to what is going on in the Public Accounts Committee. I will confine my remarks to what has already taken place in this House. A gentleman was brought in at $75 a day, some of his employees coming from New York received $40 a day, some $25 a day. A large amount of money was paid out of the treasury for the investigation of this department, and it would have been very much better if the hon. gentleman would now say that he complimented the Civil Service Commissioners upon their report, and upon having brought to light some of the facts in his department rather than to suggest that somebody had better look out, that there will be trouble and he will go after some of these employees. He did not, of course, tell us exactly what he proposes to do. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) asked him the question but he did not feel disposed to answer it.

A serious condition of things has been revealed. This department has been in operation for many years and there are many honest officials in connection with it, there is no question about that, but until this American bookkeeper suggested to the minister that he should straighten up the whole accounts, only a few of these irregularities had been disclosed. We were told that this is a business government and yet this department, after being under the control of this business government since 1896, is in such condition that when an expert bookkeeper went into one of the offices he was unable to give the government a correct report of the liabilities and assets of that one office. When the people of Canada understand this, they will realize that there is something wrong.

One of the strongest complaints I have to make against the minister is his willingness to protect the people who are charging enormous prices instead of the minister calling out for another commission, if necessary, and joining hands with the people of Canada and saying that if this department is wrong, if the conditions are such as have been pointed out, then he, as controller of that department, will be prepared to have a thorough and complete examination to ascertain where the public money is going and how it is being expended. Whatever action the minister may take against either the commissioners or the employees in his department, I hope that his first duty will be to see that he has an honest and fair administration of his departmen from his own office. That is what the people of this country expect, because the hon. gentleman has the power to discharge and the power to appoint. For myself I think it is a disgrace to the government of Canada, and will be I am sure a black mark upon the record of the hon. gentleman when, in his own department, after having had control of it for some time, he was unable to detect these things, was not able to bring these matters to light without the assistance of imported bookkeepers and of commissioners who have told us some of the things of the many, I suppose, that are going on in his department.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (Kings, N.B.) Before this motion passes I would like to ask the minister a question or two with respect to a return regarding charges made against Mr. Ernest Roy, who I believe occupies the position of foreman of works at Sorel. It seems that one Victor Gaudet was appointed to investigate certain charges against Mr. Roy. As I understand it—and if I am incorrect I hope the minister will correct me—Roy was charged with padding lists and with paying for material that was not delivered. Is that correct?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Now, as I understand it also, the minister has stated in answer to a question that Gaudet was appointed in February, 1907, to investigate the charges against Roy, he was appointed by the minister himself, and that Roy, during all this time, has continued to occupy the position which he did occupy in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Is that correct?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, that is not correct, he is not occupying that position now.

Mr. FOWLER. When was he dismissed?

Mr. BRODEUR. He was not dismissed. He was employed at Sorel at first, and has been removed from there.

Mr. FOWLER. When was he removed from Sorel?

Mr. BRODEUR. About a year ago.

Mr. FOWLER. But he is still in the employ of the department?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. What position is he in now?

Mr. BRODEUR. He is under the agent at Quebec.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to ask the minister why it is that the investigation found necessary in February, 1907, is not proceeded with until February, 1908, and in point of fact is not proceeded with yet, as only certain preliminary steps have been taken.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is not correct.

Mr. FOWLER. According to the return, it is correct. This is what this gentleman says, that everybody seemed to be sick, there seemed to be a certain epidemic down in that country, and all the witnesses required seemed suddenly to be taken ill, and it was impossible to examine them. It is strange that they should remain ill for over a year since this investigation was ordered. Mr. Gaudet says that Roy did not answer the letter which he wrote him. As soon as he got instructions to hold an inquiry he wrote Roy a letter notifying him of the fact, and Roy never anwered the letter. Gaudet notified Roy of the time and place that he would hold the inquiry. He took a number of depositions, and then he again notified Roy.

Mr. BRODEUR. Then he did take some depositions?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, he took some depositions. He again notified Roy. But Roy's wife was ill and he could not appear so it was not until February 12, 1908, after something more than twelve months had elapsed, that Roy was able to appear before the commission. Then there was another witness required on Roy's behalf, a Mr. Cherrier, the member for Laprairie in the provincial parliament. Mr. Cherrier was ill, too, and consequently the inquisition, as I understand, has not been proceeded with. Now I do not quite understand how Mr. Cherrier could be a witness on Roy's behalf, how he, the provincial member, could be mixed up in the affair. Was he the person who delivered these goods, or who sold these goods to the department, or was he connected with the padding of the lists which was charged against Roy? It seems to me a strange thing that a man would be allowed to remain in the department over whom grave charges were hanging such as these. What more serious charge can be preferred against a member of the civil service than a charge that he is defrauding the government by padding lists and by making a return for material that has not been delivered to the government? Yet this gentleman is allowed to remain in the public service of Canada, shifted, it is true, from this position and given another one, and probably a better one, because judging from the action of the government in the past in cases like the Wagner case, a man always gets promotion for that sort of conduct. Now I would like to ask the minister if he can roughly state the amount involved in these charges against Mr. Roy? I understand it is a very large amount. Perhaps the minister will be able to tell us within $25,000 or $50,000 what the amount is.

Mr. BRODEUR. So far as I was able to see when the charges were brought to my knowledge, some cooks were put on the list as labourers, when they should have been paid by himself. It was a small amount.

Mr. J. D. REID. $180,000, I think.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, I do not think it is $500.

Mr. FOWLER. What about the material? The minister has said that the amount of padding only amounted to some $500. That is not much, but it is the principle of the thing. If a man is guilty of stealing $500 from the public service he should not be allowed to remain longer in it. Then there is the question of material, what about that?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not remember that there is anything with regard to material. If I remember right, it was a charge of having padded the lists, that is to say, of putting on the list some cooks whom he was to pay himself. He had a contract for feeding some men at work on the piers on Lake St. Peter, and I understand that by his contract he was to pay for his own cooks, instead of doing that, he was charged with putting these cooks on the list.

Mr. FOWLER. As I understand the matter, in addition to padding the list, there was a lot of stone to be delivered that was not delivered.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the value of that?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know. I sent Colonel Anderson to make an investigation with regard to that, even before this report came in, as it appeared there was an overcharge. I am having an inquiry made under oath.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister betrays a lack of knowledge of the workings of his department that is rather to be regretted. Here is a man charged with certain heinous offences and the minister has not the faintest idea apparently as to the amount of money that this man was charged of having defrauded the country. It seems to me the minister ought to be able to get somewhere close to it. Is it possible that this thing is of so frequent occurrence in his department that he does not charge his mind with these little things? How much has Mr. Gaudet been paid?

Mr. BRODEUR. I gave the amount the other day.

Mr. FOWLER. I mean how much for making the investigation.

Mr. BRODEUR. I cannot say off-hand. I gave the answer the other day.

Mr. BERGERON. It was $600.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that correct?

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman will understand that I cannot be expected to carry all these details in my memory.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand that Mr. Gaudet, the investigator, has been paid a matter of $600. He is only beginning his investigation, and has taken only a few depositions and has received the statement of Mr. Roy. I think he has been pretty well paid, and I suppose that is merely on account. Surely there is a balance still due him, and yet you are paying him over $600 for what he has done so far in this investigation. Certainly, that is a matter that the minister had better direct his attention to and be prepared, when it comes up again, to give a complete answer so that the members of the House will understand it.

Mr. BRODEUR. This question was put to me the other day and I gave an answer to it. I do not remember what the answer was but I will look it up and I will give it to my hon. friend.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the minister state that he has suspended the official in the meantime and ordered an inquiry to be made as speedily as possible? That is the usual course.

Mr. BRODEUR. I removed him from the place in which he was.

Mr. HAGGART. Ah, but he should have been suspended. When you prefer a charge of fraud against him and order an investigation, he should be suspended at once and have the benefit of an immediate inquiry.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know that it is British principle that a man should be convicted before he is tried.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the minister if he thinks it is British principle to have a charge preferred, to have it supported so far by the minister that he orders an investigation and to hang that up against a man for over a year?

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). Mr. Speaker, it is, I think, a very extraordinary position for the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) to take in regard to the report of the commission which has just been brought down and it has too in my opinion, a very grotesque appearance. There was a commission appointed which was supposed to be an independent commission and when the report of that commission is brought down and, before the details of it are laid before the House, we hear a miserable whine from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that his department has been hit, and before any particulars are laid before the House, he gives the House notice that he protests very strongly against any insinuations that may be made in that report against the honour, or the pristine purity of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The people of Canada are beginning to take the protestations of the minister as a joke. They know perfectly well, as every hon. member of this House knows, as the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) himself knows and has admitted on the floor of this House, that the Department of Marine and Fisheries has been allowed to run riot, and, time after time, whenever an attempt has been made from this side of the House to get within the arena of the department to let in fresh air and, by investigation, to get at the rottenness and the scandals that have permeated that department, the minister has persistently obstructed any such step and has persistently stated that there is nothing in all these different reports—nothing at all—upon which the public should be entitled to an investigation. And yet, Sir, when there is, according to his view, something in the report of what is supposed to be an independent commission that in any way reflects upon the honour and the purity of his department, or on any one connected with his department, he comes before the House and, before we are even treated to the particulars of that report, he begins to make a noise and whines like the proverbial stuck pig. There are limits even to the burlesque. I certainly think that the burlesque which the minister is attempting to play before the country now will be treated as such by the people. As has been suggested by my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) every one would have thought that a responsible minister, recognizing his duty to the Crown and to the people of the country, would have welcomed any insinuations made by any independent commission with regard to the administration of his department, especially in view of the serious insinuations that have been hurled across the floor of this House against that department. Had the minister been worthy of the position which he holds now, had he been equal to the responsibility attached to the administration of such a great department, he would have hailed with delight the criticism of any independent commission and the result of any inquiry with regard to his department which reflected upon that department and which would enable him as a sworn minister of the Crown and a representative of the people to clear that department from the very serious suspicion which rests upon it.

I do not want to give instances or to go into details concerning the variety of scandals that have been laid at the door of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. They are notorious. Their record must always be regarded as a very dark page in the political history of this country. They are of a most serious character; yet, they have not been investigated. Whatever investigations have been made have simply been made with the idea of excusing the department and of pulling the wool over the eyes of the people in regard to its mal-administration. There are cases going on to-day. There are papers being brought down every day almost in regard to the administration of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. For instance, I might refer now to a case within my own knowledge. The Department of Marine and Fisheries, upon the recommendation of its engineer, and in order to save the expense incident to the leasing of a tugboat for towing barges, buys a tug which is under lease for the recommended price of $4,000, the purchase money is paid, the bill of sale is handed over to the Department of Justice and what happens? Does the rent stop? The rent goes on just the same. The rent is paid. Notwithstanding the fact that there is a bill of sale, recognized as such by the Department of Justice, the Department of Marine and Fisheries pays $12 a day for the rent of this boat. This is an instance of what is going on in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. But, we have other instances in other departments. While I do not desire to weary the House with particular instances, I will just briefly refer to something that might well have been the subject of some criticism in the report of this commission, and perhaps it is the subject of criticism in the report, and I think I hear a sigh of relief escaping from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that this is not in his department. It is in connection with the transactions of Mr. E. A. Wallberg with the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. BRODEUR. Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to give me the name of the boat to which he makes allusion?

Mr. BOYCE. 'Catharine C.'

An hon. MEMBER. C.C.

Mr. BENNETT. Cold cash

Mr. BRODEUR. This is the first time that I have heard the name.

Mr. BOYCE. I have given an instance of a case in the hon. gentleman's department. Now, here are the transactions of a very favoured gentleman named E. A. Wallberg who dealt largely with the Department of Railways and Canals. There is one singular thing about the transactions of this gentleman with the Department of Railways and Canals that certainly looks very much like a coincidence and that is that where he tendered for twenty-five or thirty contracts sometimes he was high, sometimes he was low, sometimes he was medium, but he never failed to get the contract. That is one peculiar feature about the position of E. A. Wallberg.

An hon. MEMBER. He is a winner.

Mr. BOYCE. He is a winner. He is a Wallberg winner. Mr. Wallberg is essentially a middleman; or, he is not a middleman, he is a universal man. He is a man who will tender to supply anything whether or not it is within his capacity or knowledge to carry out his tender. He will tender for heating car shops, to supply the material necessary for building water tanks to build stone passenger stations, to deliver locomotive cranes or boilers, and to construct umbrella roofs. He will tender in the Department of Marine under another name as the hon. gentleman knows, to build lighthouses all over this country and in all cases Wallberg figures as a middleman. Wallberg's tender for supplying the locomotive cranes was the most extraordinary contract ever made by anybody outside of this government. Locomotive cranes were required for facilitating the handling of coal at Lévis, and correspondence took place between the Deputy Minister of Railways and Wallberg with regard to the system of coal handling at Lévis, and before tenders were invited at all there was a letter from Wallberg to the minister suggesting that a certain course should be followed. It was stated that five locomotive cranes were required for the work. Then the Minister of Railways sent out invitations to a favourite few to tender for one of these locomotive cranes and Wallberg knowing that five were required tendered for the five and got the contract, although it appears that taking into consideration the question of duty and freight, even then Wallberg's tender was not the lowest.

Mr. BENNETT. Did he join the pulp company yet ?

Mr. BOYCE. He has got a better thing than the pulp company.

Mr. BENNETT. Oh, no.

Mr. BOYCE. He has got a concrete company and he is associated with gentlemen in that company who are in a position to make it a pretty concrete company so far as actual cash is concerned. Now who is Mr. Wallberg and what are the particulars with regard to the delivery of these locomotive cranes. Remember that Mr. Wallberg was never in possession of a locomotive crane and never was an agent for supplying them. Nevertheless, in advance of the order Wallberg got these cranes delivered from Cleveland and he reaped a profit of $1,000 on each crane or $5,000 on the five. And Mr. Wallberg's contracts with the government have been steadily increasing in number and in value ; he started with $75,000 and he has now contracts running up into the hundreds of thousands of dollars. It is peculiar, that in every case Wallberg's tender to the government is followed by some extraordinary letter to the minister or to the engineer who opens the tenders suggesting some special advantage which can be gained by this government in obtaining the article from Mr. Wallberg.

Mr. BERGERON. He is clever.

Mr. BOYCE. For instance when girders are required for ash pits for the Intercolonial Wallberg knows all about it and Wallberg tenders to get the girders. The engineer in charge knows that girders are required, and it is admitted they were part of his plans and specifications, and does he ask for them. Oh, no. There is a gentleman who is a very great friend of the department named E. A. Wallberg and Mr. Wallberg simply sends to an ordinary machine shop to get these girders and he puts $500 of the price in his own pocket, simply as a middleman. In Committee of Supply the other night I pointed out that there is a gentleman in the Department of Railways and Canals who, the Auditor General complained, had certified to Mr. Wallberg's work before that work was completed, and absolutely no notice has been taken by the government of the charge. In the Public Accounts of this year there will be found letters with regard to Wallberg's work showing that in two instances the engineer of the department certified that that work was paid for before it actually was performed, and upon that certificate a cheque was issued which was retained until the work was actually performed. Sir, the time has come when neither the Minister of Marine and Fisheries nor any other minister of this government, not even the Prime Minister himself, will be able to humbug the people any longer. Investigation must be held in regard to the disclosures in this department ; investigation will be insisted upon by the public and neither in the Public Accounts Committee nor in any of the other committees——

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN (Lunenburg). The hon. gentleman is referring to the Public Accounts Committee ; I wish to call his attention to the fact that he has no right to discuss the Wallberg matters this afternoon.

Mr. BOYCE. I have said all I intend to say about Wallberg.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. The inquiry is not completed and the proceedings have not yet been reported to the House.

Mr. BOYCE. Why, I stopped speaking about Wallberg three minutes before the hon. gentleman arose. I was proceeding to say that the people of Canada will no longer tolerate the avenues of inquiry being obstructed and polluted as they have been by this government and by those who are operating for the government. The time has come when we must have a full inquiry into the public expenditures of the country. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries by the attitude he took upon this report, even before the report comes to the knowledge of this House, complaining that that report hits his department ; his action to-day is a travesty upon the rights of the people who ought to be informed upon all matters in connection with the nefarious transactions of that department. It transgresses the first right of the people to full information concerning the inner transactions of his department, and the minister shows that he is standing upon the apex of a volcano, when, before the bomb has burst he comes down to the House and in such a grotesque manner as almost to excite the laughter of the whole House he says : Here is a report which reflects upon my department and I give the House and the country notice that some one will have to suffer for it. I would suggest to the Minister of Marine that it would have possibly been more in accord with the dignity of the officer of the minister of the Crown had he kept in reserve his remarks until such time as the report had been printed and placed in possession of the members of the House. It would have better satisfied the people of this country of the bona fides and the honesty of the minister himself and of his zeal and desire to really have an investigation into his department, rather than that he should have made this hysterical scream of rage and fury that no suspicion at all should be directed against himself or his department, and that no report brought to this House whether by an independent commission or otherwise should reflect on any officer or servant of his department.

Motion (Mr. Fielding) agreed to.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 134) respecting the Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway Company.—Mr. Turgeon.

QUESTIONS.

MR. F. W. COWIE.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

1. Is F. W. Cowie chief engineer for the government on the St. Lawrence ship channel? If so, what salary does he receive per annum?
2. What did he receive for travelling expenses during the last year?
3. Is the said Mr. Cowie also chief engineer for the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal? If so, what salary is he paid per annum by said commissioners, and how much did the said commissioners pay him for travelling expenses during the last year?
4. How much time does he devote to his duties in each capacity?
5. Where is he at present, and how is he engaged or employed?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Yes. $3,000 per annum.
2. $1,086.65.
3. Yes. $2,000 per annum. The Harbour Commissioners allowed Mr. Cowie as chief engineer $100 per month from May to December inclusive for board and expenses in Montreal as his home was in Ottawa.
4. All his time to both services as the requirements demand.
5. Great Britain and the continent inspecting the harbours and rivers with respect to harbour and dredging improvement.

STONEY LAKE DOCK.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

1. Has the government constructed a dock on island No. 19a, Stoney lake, Ontario?
2. If so, who is the owner of the island above referred to, and was the part of the island on which the dock is built purchased by the government? If so, what was paid for same?
3. Have any docks been constructed in said lake on the island by the government since 1896?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). I am trying to find out if this is in my department. I have not yet found out anything about it.

Mr. BENNETT. It was a dock built for Mr. Stratton, if that will be an index.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Perhaps Mr. Stratton built it himself.

IMPORTATIONS OF MESS PORK, &c.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN asked :

How much mess pork, ham and bacon, giving the quantity and value of each, was imported into Canada from the United States during the months of November and December, 1907, and January and February, 1908?

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (Minister of Customs). Pork barrelled in brine, 3,046,869 pounds ; value, $244,528. Bacon, hams, shoulders and sides, 2,112,457 pounds ; value $232,808.

Mr. SPROULE asked :

1. How much fresh pork has been imported for home consumption into Canada since December 1, 1907, up to March 1, 1908?
2. What amount of cured or salted pork was imported for same period?
3. What amount of all other kinds of fresh meats was imported during same period?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). Pork barrelled in brine, 2,059,448 pounds ; value $166,109. Bacon, hams, shoulders and sides, 1,515,289 pounds ; value, $154,622. Mutton and lamb, fresh, 545,113 pounds ; value, $39,025. Fresh pork, 21,818 pounds ; value, $1,934. Other meats, fresh, 53,857 pounds ; value, $6,282.

MR. W. H. P. CLEMENT.

Mr. SPROULE asked :

1. What position or offices, whether as legal adviser to the Yukon Council, or as public administrator, or otherwise, did Mr. W. H. P. Clement fill in the Yukon Territory?
2. During what periods did he fill each of these positions or office?
3. Under what circumstances and for what reason did he cease to fill such position or office?
4. Did he resign, or were his services dispensed with in each instance?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. Legal adviser to the Yukon Council, public administrator of the estates of deceased persons, infants, and persons of unsound mind, and member of the Yukon Council.
2. Legal adviser and member of the Yukon Council from 17th October, 1898, to 8th October, 1900. Public administrator from 5th September, 1899, to 8th October, 1900.
3. Mr. Clement's services terminated on the 8th October, 1900.
4. The records of the department do not contain this information.

MR. JAMES NOBLE.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

1. Was James Noble, of Killarney, Ontario, convicted for a breach of the fishery regulations in the latter part of last year before an officer of the Department of Marine and Fisheries? If so, was he fined, and what was the amount of the fine?

2. Was there a confiscation of nets or fishing plant?

3. Is the James Noble above referred to the man who was associated with John Birnie, of Collingwood, in an inquiry or investigation into the fisheries of inland lakes in Ontario?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. No, the case has not yet been tried.

2. No; but there was a seizure of a pound-net.

3. Yes.

DOG-FISH REDUCTION PLANT, CANSO, NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN asked:

1. How many days has the dog-fish reduction plant at Canso, Nova Scotia, operated during the season of 1907?

2. Who is manager of the plant, what is his salary, what are the terms of his engagement, how much did he receive during the year 1907 up to the 31st December last, and how long was he actually employed in the business of the plant during 1907?

3. How many men are employed at the plant besides the manager, what are their respective names and salaries, and how much was each paid in 1907 up to 31st December, for their services?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. From 5th October to 9th November.

2. A. B. Cox, $1,200. He is employed by the year. $1,200. Twelve months.

3. Two. D. S. Hensbee, $700. E. A. Kelly, $675. In addition to these, during the time the works are in active operation labourers are employed, at the rate of $1.50 per day, as required.

SALMON LICENSES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. ELSON asked:

1. What moneys were received in 1905, 1906 and 1907, for sale of salmon licenses in British Columbia, (a) gill-nets, (b) drag-nets, (c) purse-nets, and (d) traps?

2. Are any moneys due the government under the terms of the leases or licenses granted to take fish in waters of British Columbia? If so, from whom, for what years, and how much?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

| 1. | 1905. | 1906. | 1907. |
|---|---|---|---|
| (a) Gill-nets ..... | $42,667 | $37,602 | $35,800 50 |
| (b) Drag-nets.... | 1,250 | 1,445 | 1,550 00 |
| (c) Purse-nets .. | 1,100 | 1,550 | 1,300 00 |
| (d) Traps ..... | 2,850 | 3,450 | 2,700 00 |
| Total ..... | 47,867 | 44,047 | 41,350 50 |

2. No.

Mr. J. D. REID asked:

1. What leases or licenses, other than gill-net licenses, have been granted to capture salmon in the waters of British Columbia, when, to whom, and for what term of years?

2. Do any of said leases or licenses purport to grant exclusive privileges? If so, for what waters, to whom granted, and for what term of years?

3. What undertaking were the granters responsible for in view of the special privileges granted, and what steps has the government taken to ascertain that conditions have been carried out?

4. What penalty was provided for not making use of the privileges granted, and what steps has the government taken to ascertain if the conditions have been complied with?

5. Can licenses be cancelled in case of non-user?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). That should stand as a notice of motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as notice of motion for return.

Mr. MARSHALL asked:

1. Have any salmon fishing licenses or leases been granted for taking fish in the waters of Gardner's inlet or canal, British Columbia? If so, when, to whom and upon what terms?

2. What moneys, if any, were received in 1905, 1906 and 1907 from licenses or leases granted for Gardner's inlet or canal, from whom and what amount?

3. What moneys, if any, are due the government under the terms of any leases or licenses granted for taking fish in the waters of Gardener's inlet or canal, British Coulmbia, from who due, and for what periods of time?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Yes, to the British Empire Fish Company for nine years from 1st August, 1904, at $200 per annum.

2. None.

3. $800 from the British Empire Fish Company as fees on the said lease. The representatives of the company were informed on February 27, 1908, that if the above amount were not paid into the department within one month from that date, the lease would be cancelled.

CHAMBLY COMMON.

Mr. LEONARD—by Mr. Worthington—asked:

1. What is the area of the ground generally known as the Chambly Common?

2. What use does the government make of that ground?

3. Has it rented, given or loaned it?

4. To whom, on what conditions and for how long?

5. Has the government had any correspondence with any person in regard thereto?

6. If so, what is such correspondence?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. 8·75 acres.

2. A portion is occupied and used by the Department of Railways and Canals for range lights. The balance is held under lease.

3. Rented.

4. S. T. Willett. Nominal rental.

(1) That the lessee shall and will pay the rent hereby reserved in manner aforesaid, and shall and will also pay all charges, taxes, rates and assessments whatsoever which shall, during the said term, be charged upon or payable in respect of the demised premises ;

(2) And that the lessee shall and will maintain and keep in good and substantial repair all fences, ditches, fixtures and things upon and about said premises ;

(3) And that the lessee shall not nor will, at any time during the said term, without the consent in writing of the Minister of the Interior, hew, fell, cut down, tear up, destroy or injure or cause or knowingly permit or suffer to be hewed, felled, cut down, torn up, destroyed or injured, any timber or timber trees on the said demised premises ;

(4) And that it shall be lawful for the minister, or any person thereunto authorized by him, at all reasonable times during the said term, to enter upon the said demised premises to examine the condition thereof ;

(5) And that the lessee shall not, nor will, during the said term, assign or underlet the premises hereby demised or any part thereof, without the consent in writing of the minister ;

(6) And that the lessee shall not, during the said term, erect any buildings upon the said premises ;

(7) And that the lessee shall not permit the playing of baseball or other games on the said premises during any Sunday ;

(8) And that possession of the said demised premises, or any portion thereof, may, at any time during the said term, be resumed by His Majesty, his successors or assigns,upon three months' notice in writing by the minister to the lessee, and in no such case shall the lessee have any claim to compensation on account of damages in any way resulting from such resumption or from the determination of this demise.

Ten years.

5. Yes.

6. Usual correspondence arranging terms and conditions upon which lease was to be issued.

POSTMASTER, CHAMBLY CANTON.

Mr. LEONARD—by Mr. Worthington—asked :

1. Who is the postmaster at Chambly Canton?

2. Has the Post Office Department received any complaint or complaints in regard to money said to have disappeared from that post office?

3. What is the nature of such complaints?

4. By whom were they made?

5. Has the minister or his department taken any action thereon?

6. What has been done?

7, What explanation can the minister give in regard to this matter?

8. What persons intervened to bring about a settlement of this affair?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) :

1. Mr. Frederic Courtemanche.

2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 & 8. The post office inspector, Montreal, reported, in May last, the alleged loss of a thousand-dollar bank note from a letter posted at Chambly Canton, addressed to the Bank of Montreal, Ottawa. This money was part of a remittance on post office account, which the assistant postmaster (wife of the postmaster) made up in a room adjoining the post office. After placing the remittance in the envelope she left it with her husband, who was in the room, until she got the wax and seal, and on return sealed the letter without verifying its contents. The letter arrived at the bank and did not bear any evidence of tampering.

The department immediately took an action in the civil court against the postmaster for the recovery of the $1,000. No person has intervened to bring about a settlement of the affair. The action is still pending before the courts.

RIFLES PURCHASED.

Mr. LEONARD—by Mr. Worthington—asked :

1. How many guns or rifles has the government purchased since 1896?

2. What price was paid for each one?

3. What amount did the government spend each year since 1906 on such purchases?

5. What is the total amount to be paid for guns purchased but not yet delivered?

6. To whom are such sums paid and how much to each one ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (for Minister of Militia and Defence) :

1. Since July 1, 1896, the government has purchased (a) 10,359 Lee-Enfield magazine rifles ; (b) 7,800 Lee-Enfield magazine rifles; (c) 300 carbines complete ; (d) 37,500 Ross rifles delivered to March 21, 1908, out of a total of 52,000 contracted for.

2. (a) $19.46 ; (b) $18.18 ; (c) $16.02 ; (d) $25.

| | |
|---|---|
| 3. 1896-7 | $ 333,447 94 |
| 1897-8 | Nothing. |
| 1898-9 | Nothing. |
| 1899-1900 | 4,807 35 |
| 1900-1 | Nothing. |
| 1901-2 | Nothing. |
| 1902-3 | 62,971 92 |
| 1903-4 | 159,262 48 |
| 1904-5 | 203,941 41 |
| 1905-6 | 335,641 59 |
| 1906-7 | 272,926 15 |
| 1907-8 | 174,631 45 |

4. $1,574,630.29, including 75 per cent of cost of 14,500 Ross rifles contracted for but not yet delivered.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 5. $234,375, 25 per cent of cost of 14,500 rifles undelivered of the 52,000 contracted with Ross Rifle Company. | | |
| 6. Birmingham Small Arms and and Metal Co., Ltd.—For 10,-359 Lee-Enfield magazine rifles, with cleaning rods, oil bottles and pull-through, at £4 or $19.46 each, $201,655.20 less for 10,359 rough stocks issued from War Office stores to contractors.. .. .. .. .. .. | $ | 191,572 44 |
| London Small Arms Co., Ltd., Old Ford—For 7,800 Lee-Enfield magazine rifles, with cleaning rods, oil bottles and pull-throughs, at $18.18 each. | | 141,875 50 |
| His Majesty's Accountant General (War Office)—300 carbines complete, $16.02 each. | | 4,807.35 |
| Ross Rifle Co., Quebec, Canada—37,500 rifles delivered to March 21, 1908, at $25 each. | $937,500 | |
| 14,500 rifles undelivered, 75 per cent of cost of same.. .. .. .. | 271,875 | |
| | | 1,209,375 00 |
| | | $1,547,630 29 |

MR. W. DODDS.

Mr. FINLAYSON—By Mr. Roche (Halifax)—asked :

1. Has the hon. Minister of the Interior any information as to who W. Dodds is, whose name was signed to a communication dated 91 Hollis street, Halifax, and addressed to one Atomian, an immigration agent, at Liverpool, as follows:

'Your eleven people were all passed; be a little more particular next time with Montreal cases. Do not let them make any sign whatever. If you describe something they wear it will be enough. I felt quite nervous when they all made signs with their hands on their ties. Signed, W. Dodds.'

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The minister has received information which leads him to believe that letters signed 'W. Dodds' were written and sent by H. L. Dickey, M.D., while he was acting as medical inspection officer at Halifax.

CHARLOTTETOWN PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. LEFURGEY asked :

1. Were tenders called for laying a pipe line and the building of a tank at Charlottetown?
2. What are the names of the tenderers, the amount of each tender, and the party to whom contract was awarded?
3. When was the contract to be completed?
4. Has the contract been started? If so, will it be completed at date specified in the contract? If not, why not?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways) :

1. Yes.
2. E. A. Wallberg, Montreal, $6,363.50 schedule rates; J. & G. Ives, Montague, P.E.I., $7,256.39 schedule rates; F. Schurman & Company, Summerside, P.E.I., $7,438.62, schedule rates; Morrison & Clark, Summerside, P.E.I., $7,594.70, schedule rates; Willard Kitchen, Fredericton, $6,521.15 schedule rates. Contract was awarded to E. A. Wallberg, his tender being the lowest.
3. March 31, 1908.
4. No. The contract was only awarded on December 21, 1907, no work could be done during the winter season, and the contractor has applied for extension of time to August 31, 1908.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT STEAMER.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked:

1. What is the name of the steamer purchased for the use of the Post Office Department?
2. What was the previous cost per annum of carrying the mail between the Atlantic mail steamers and the wharf at Rimouski, Quebec, each year for the past five years?
3. Has said steamer been employed since coming to Canada in carrying mails? If so, how many trips has she made and to and from what point, and at what dates?
4. Does this steamer carry passengers? If so, what amount was collected from that source since coming to Canada?
5. If said steamer has not been used in carrying mails, what other work has been accomplished by her, and between what points has she sailed, and dates of sailing?
6. How many of a crew is needed when the boat is in service?

Hon. R. LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) :

1. The 'Lady Evelyn.'
2. 1902-3.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. $4,720
   1903-4 .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 4,640
   1904-5 .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 4,720
   1905-6.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 4,698
   1906-7 (to June 30) .. .. .. 4,720
3. Yes. The steamer transferred mails to and from the Atlantic mail steamers at Rimouski from August 20 last to the end of the season during which period 24 trips were made.
4. No.
5. Answered by No. 3.
6. Twenty-five men.

OTONABEE POWER COMPANY.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

What amount of horse-power was paid for by the Otonabee Power Company of Peterborough in last fiscal year?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways). The lease to the Otonabee Power Company of Peterborough was for the right to use all the surplus water, estimated at the time at 625 horse-power and the amount paid during the last fiscal year of nine months was $635.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 135) to amend the Immigration Act. He said: This Bill is to cover a point which has been under consideration for some time. This point is covered by regulation, but it is thought advisable that instead of depending upon a regulation, an amendment should be made to the Act. It has reference to the admission of immigrants who come from other countries than those of their birth or citizenship. As was explained the other day by the right hon. leader of the House, when immigrants come from a country which is not that of their citizenship and the conditions are such as to require their deportation, the country from which they sail refuses to accept them and it is not possible for us to deport them. Therefore we must take the power to exclude, and that power we may exercise or not at our option.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister says they propose to take the power, and whether that power would be exercised remains to be seen. I would infer from that statement that after all, all that is proposed is to deport for unfitness or unsuitability or disability in some respect. That is if a man is diseased, if he has trachoma, if he is indigent or something of that kind you would then propose to deport him; but is it the policy of the government to send back an intelligent, able-bodied, thoroughly healthy, well-provided man who wants to come and live in this country, simply on the ground that he has bought a ticket taking him to a certain port and then bought a ticket from that place to Canada and has not come on a through ticket? If that is the policy, it strikes me as being a very harsh and unwarranted one.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It may be time enough to discuss this on the second reading. As I understand the Minister of the Interior it is impossible to exercise these powers of excluding undesirable immigrants unless he has such power as is given here.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all right if coupled with it is a declaration of the government that they do not propose to exclude those coming on double tickets unless they are undesirable.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course the proper time to discuss this is on the second reading as the Prime Minister has said. I think the interpretation put on the Bill by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) could hardly be a correct one because the government already has power to exclude all unfit persons under the Act of last year. Is that not the case? Then this is not required for that purpose.

Mr. F. D. MONK. I understand that the object of the legislation is partly to enable the government to exclude Japanese immigrants reaching Canada from any other country but their own. Those who have come in have come principally from Hawaii and the object is to exclude such immigrants. I think I have mentioned that in the United States they have passed a law taking power to exclude Japanese who do not come to the United States directly from Japan. They have reserved that power under their treaty with Japan; they are empowered for reasons of policy or other reasons to exclude Japanese from the United States. In the Anglo-Japanese treaty, no such reservation was made. Under those circumstances, would this Bill give us that power against the Japanese, inasmuch as they are guaranteed under treaty free entry into Canada exactly on the same footing as Canadians themselves.

Mr. OLIVER. We have been exercising that power against the Japanese under regulations which we now propose to confirm by legislation.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DREDGING RACQUETTE RIVER.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). I wish to correct an answer which I gave to a question asked I think by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) in regard to the amount of dredging which had been done on the Racquette river in the county of Vaudreuil, province of Quebec. I answered that the amount was $3,086.40. I find upon further inquiry that the dredging was not done in the Racquette river but that it was done opposite the mouth of the Racquette river at the Isle au Foin. It was intended that the dredge should work in the Racquette river but the engineers determined that this work at Isle au Foin should be done instead.

Mr. MONK. Was this dredging meant to clear the approaches to the Boat Club or the approaches to an ice house which is being erected by an individual there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My information is that it was the dredging of a channel to enable the steamers to get to Isle au Foin.

PURCHASE OF FIRE EXTINGUISHERS.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I also wish to explain a reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) as to the purchase of fire extinguishers.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course this can only be done by consent of the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend called attention to the fact that I had not given the full number of fire extinguishers purchased. I gave the number ordered by the Public Works Department. The additional ones to which he referred, and in regard to which he gave extracts from the Auditor General's Report, were ordered by the Department of Marine for use on steamers and would not be purchased through my department.

Mr. TAYLOR. I asked in reference to all departments. Perhaps there are others in addition to the ones mentioned by the minister and those which I quoted. I wanted to know the total number.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would ask the attention of the government to three returns moved for by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington): on December 4, relating to the construction of drill halls, on December 11, relating to the Ross rifle, and on December 11 relating to the contract betwen the government and the Ross Rifle Company. A very considerable period has elapsed since these returns were moved for and inquiry has been made more than once but they have not been brought down.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Directions were at once given to prepare the returns relating to drill halls as speedily as possible. They are being prepared in regular order and I expect the return will be forthcoming very shortly.

IMMIGRATION FRAUDS AT HALIFAX.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would ask the Minister of the Interior whether any steps are being taken to ascertain what amount, if any, has been improperly taken from immigrants landing or proposing to land at Halifax and whether it is the intention of the government to endeavour to procure restitution in case money has been improperly taken from any of these persons ?

Mr. OLIVER. The question of restitution has not been under consideration, but investigation is now in progress and I will be able to report from time to time any information to the House.

PAY OF HALIFAX GARRISON.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the attention of the government been directed to a press despatch from Halifax which reads as follows :

The salaries are overdue—A great deal of discontent amongst military at Halifax.

Halifax, Nova Scotia, March 24.—There is a great deal of discontent among the military who garrison Halifax because their pay is not forthcoming. The rank and file are accustomed to receive their wages weekly, and in some cases fortnightly. Nobody has been paid since the end of February, and there is a lot of kicking.

The only thing that prevents a real outbreak of trouble is the fact that the men are getting scrip for small amounts, but good only at the canteens.

The Canadian troops, who now constitute the garrison, are saying that never, when the troops here were British, was the pay allowed to become overdue. A year ago there was a similar delay in paying the forces at Halifax.

The non-production of supplementary estimates at Ottawa is said to be the cause of the present difficulty.

When the pay will be forthcoming is a serious question with the soldiers.

Is the condition of affairs correctly described in this despatch ? The situation seems to be regarded as somewhat serious and surely it is a rather undignified position for this country to have its soldiers paid in scrip which can only be passed at the canteen.

Mr. FIELDING. I am unable to give information as to the scrip. I am aware that owing to the fact that the supplementary estimates for the current year have not been voted there has been some difficulty in paying the men. We had hoped on Tuesday evening when the House was in committee that we would be able to reach these estimates, but as hon. gentlemen are aware, we did not make much progress. I would be happy to arrange now to go into Committee of Supply and carry the other estimates immediately if the hon. gentlemen will agree to that, but I do not suppose that would be satisfactory. However, at a very early day, as soon as the budget debate is over, we will take them up as the first order and endeavour to dispose of them.

Mr. BERGERON. Were not the main estimates of last year good until the 31st of March of this year ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, if there were enough. The Minister of Militia himself is laid aside by illness, but I hope the officials of the department will be here soon; a number of other officials were here waiting the whole evening. I do not know that the matter of the militia is of any more importance than moneys that are due to officials in other departments. We are desirous of getting the estimates for them, and as soon as the budget debate is over we will be happy to bring them on.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have never yet been able to understand why there is so constant a need of these supplementary estimates, particularly in a case like this, where the amount required is pretty well known in the first instance. I have pressed upon the government a good many times as the Minister of Finance knows, that they should endeavour to make ample provision in the first instance and not resort to supplementary estimates. I think the position of the troops is a little different, because the military regulations prevent them from making any complaint. I would be prepared with this side of the House to put through the militia estimates in order that these men could be paid, and I would do it at once. Everything that can be discussed on these items can be discussed on some other items.

Mr. FIELDING. I should be very happy at once to proceed with the militia estimates. I have not the officials of the department present, but they can be sent for and will be here shortly.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice when I may expect the return with reference to printing, in the case of the 'Sun,' the 'Chronicle' and the 'Echo.'

Mr. BERGERON. You will allow us to discuss all these matters later on the main estimates.

Mr. FIELDING. Every one of these questions is touched upon in the main estimates.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. With the understanding that if there were any technical question, we should be at liberty to discuss on the main estimates everything that could be discussed on these.

Mr. FIELDING. Quite so. The hon. gentleman might extend the suggestion, not merely to the militia, but to the whole of the supplementary estimates and put them all through immediately, on the same condition.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We will pass the militia estimates for the moment.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not mean for the militia only, but for other items just as urgent

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would not care about consenting to that for the present. We will pass the militia estimates now, on account of this trouble which might become serious. As for the proposal of the Minister of Finance, we will take that into consideration.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Mr. PUGSLEY. With regard to the estimates of my department, there are quite a number of contractors who have large numbers of labouring men depending upon them for the payment of their wages, and it would be a great advantage to a lot of people if they could be treated as well as the militia.

Mr R. L. BORDEN. I have said to the Minister of Finance that we will pass the militia estimates first, and take the other proposition into consideration. Why were not the supplementary estimates brought on long ago? Why was not provision made in the first place? I suggested that the militia estimates should be taken first on account of the discussion which arose.

Militia and Defence—annual drill—further amount required, $235,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it possible that we have had the annual drills for 1907-8 and that there is still due and unpaid $325,000? Does the minister know what that means?

Mr. FIELDING. I am sorry but I cannot give the hon. gentleman the information.

Mr. FOSTER. It needs explanation.

Mr. FIELDING. It needs explanation, perhaps. I had the officials here the other night but I could not answer my hon. friend's question now.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, we will take it up afterwards.

Militia and Defence—provisions and supplies—further amount required, $75,000.

Mr. FOSTER. There again, does the minister know how that amount of $75,000 for provisions and supplies, and which have all been used, is being carried?

Mr. FIELDING. I could not answer my hon. friend off-hand.

Mr. FOSTER. I would suggest that the minister should get into communication with the officials and when we go on with the estimates to-night he may be able to make a statement and put it on 'Hansard' so that we will have an opportunity of reading it before we come to those items again.

Mr. FIELDING. I will try and get them to give me a statement.

Militia and Defence—customs dues—further amount requried, $75,000.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister can tell us about that.

Mr. FIELDING. It used to be the practice to allow the departments to import all their goods free of duty. Of course, it is a mere matter of accounting. It appears as a charge against one department and it is credited to another. It was thought that the system was capable of abuse and in the amended tariff it was provided that all articles imported by the various departments should pay their proper duties and this item is intended for that purpose.

Mr. HENDERSON. That goes to swell the revenue of the government.

Mr. FIELDING. And it also swells the expenditure, so that it balances.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister intend to go on to-night with these supplementary Estimates?

Mr. FIELDING. I think the House will devote the evening to the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. If there is no objection we will leave item 317.

Mr. FIELDING. Very good. I have sent word to the officials to be here at eight o'clock.

Railways and Canals—chargeable to capital —Lachine canal—rebuilding slope walls, $124,-000.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the minister please explain that ?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The estimated cost of this work is $475,000. The contractors have performed this year $124,000 more work than we anticipated they would get through.

Mr. BERGERON. Who are the contractors ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Messrs. Haney, Miller, Quinlan and Robertson.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you spell it H-e-n-e-y ?

Mr. GRAHAM. H-a-n-e-y. I have it that way in my note.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Railways and Canals has no business to enter into a contract for the amount that he is asking us to vote to-day.

Mr. GRAHAM. It depends on the method of doing it. I imagine that the proper way of doing it is to say that it shall be subject to the money being voted.

Mr. HAGGART. You should bring down the total estimated cost of the work, get a vote for that and then get a vote to provide for your annual expenditure. Suppose a work is going to cost $4,000,000 and you have a vote entitling you to enter into a contract by which $300,000 is to be paid out this year, you have no right to exceed that limit. You might have a couple of hundred thousand dollars immediately available and enter into a contract for $1,000,-000 which you have no authority to do.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the total amount of this work ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The estimated cost is $475,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this work near the end of the canal ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the exact location of it. This is one of the large works that has been undertaken and it is costing nearly $500,000. About $238,000 has been paid on it already.

Mr. BERGERON. How can my hon. friend control these contractors if they have done $124,000 more work than they were supposed to have done during the fiscal year ? How do we know that the work for which this amount of money has been paid has really been done ?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have a government engineer who makes a report to us as the work is performed.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is the inspector there ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I could not give the hon. gentleman the information.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister had better give us an explanation now. There is about $335,000 expended on the capital account on the Intercolonial Railway and there is $1,500,000 in working expenses. The people are not out of that money all this time ; there must have been some arrangement made with them. How is it done ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I will explain that matter when we come to the item.

Mr. FOSTER. How long is this amount you are asking for overdue?

Mr. GRAHAM. It would be overdue in different amount as we go along. That is the amount of work completed up to the 31st of March as I understand.

Mr. FOSTER. Has any arrangement been made to pay the contractors in the meantime ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not think so. When they exceed the estimate they do it on the understanding that it will be voted by parliament.

Mr. J. D. REID. According to the Auditor General's Report the only contractors on the Lachine canal seem to be Coulson, Quinlan, and Robertson. I cannot see where Haney and Miller come in at all.

Mr. GRAHAM. The name of the firm has been given to me as Haney, Miller, Quinlan and Robertson.

Mr. SPROULE. Surely this sloping wall could not be built in the winter.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am informed they worked later than was anticipated, and I believe a good deal of it can be done in the winter.

Mr. SPROULE. What kind of work is it?

Mr. GRAHAM. Partly stone and partly concrete.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think they can do any concrete work in the winter and if it was done earlier in the season there was ample time to provide for payment.

Mr. GRAHAM. It could not be passed until the supplementary estimates were brought down.

Mr. SPROULE. They might have been down three months ago.

Mr. CONMEE. If the hon. gentleman knows anthing about the business he would know that a great deal of that class of work can be done in the winter as well as in the summer, and it is just as perfect when done in the winater as when done in the summer. I have done that work mself.

Mr. FOSTER. Did you get it passed ?

Mr. CONMEE. If the hon. gentleman wants to be humorous he can make as much sport out of it as he likes. I am telling him what is going on and if he does not know it he had better make inquiries and learn something about it.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the total amount of the work ?

Mr. GRAHAM. $475,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What has been paid up to date?

Mr. GRAHAM. The total payment up to the 1st of November has been $238,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Was the whole amount voted last year ?

Mr. GRAHAM. It must have been.

Mr. BERGERON. I cannot understand where this $124,000 comes in.

Mr. SPROULE. I am still not satisfied that this concrete work can be done in the winter time, especially the building of a sloping wall. Of course if you could protect it from the frost it is all right, but nevertheless it is more expensive to build it in winter than in summer, and if it was built in the summer payment should have been provided for it long ago.

Mr. GRAHAM. I can promise my hon. friend that I will give him full information on the main estimates.

Mr. SPROULE. I have been long enough in the House to understand that this is an unsatisfactory way of doing business. When we are discussing the main estimates if we ask for information on the supplementary estimates we are told it is not at hand and so we are jollied along without getting information. I object to that.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. J. D. REID. Was this contract let by tender ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. How many tenderers were there ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Only one was received. The contract was originally let to Quinlan & Robertson. But they were getting on rather slowly with the work, and Haney & Miller joined them, and the work has been going on more rapidly.

Mr. J. D. REID. This is for electrical supplies as well?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is another item.

Mr. J. D. REID. What is the estimated cost of this work?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is $475,000. So far, $238,269 has been paid and $124,000 is due.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it going to run over the estimate ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot say exactly. It is still well within the estimate.

Mr. J. D. REID. How much of the work is done ? Is there not any way of judging whether it is going to run over the estimate or not ?

Mr. GRAHAM. There is no way of reaching an absolute conclusion on that subject in the meantime.

Mr. SPROULE. At what figure was the contract let ?

Mr. GRAHAM. At schedule prices per cubic yard.

Mr. SPROULE. Could it not be measured, so as to make it a contract for a specific amount ?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, they have to tear down crumbling works, and, if more falls than is expected, it makes the cost greater.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it the wall of the canal ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The work is re-facing the slope wall.

Mr. J. D. REID. Do I understand that tenders were called for by advertisement in the newspapers and only one tenderer answered ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. How much is it per cubic yard ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The contract is $8 per cubic yard.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that for solid stone work ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Concrete.

Mr. HAGGART. It is not laid in concrete?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am informed that it is.

Mr. HAGGART. The old work was not laid in concrete, it was a dry wall.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. At page W—42 of the Auditor General's Report, I find mention of payments to Coulson, Quinlan & Robertson on account of rebuilding old locks 1 and 2. That is not this contract?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, that is a different contract.

Mr. J. D. REID. Was this contract commenced after March 31, 1907?

Mr. GRAHAM. Before that.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then, there ought to be some particulars of it in the Auditor General's Report. To what page should I turn to find it?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not find it in the Auditor General's Report, but, I have no doubt, it is there, as the work has been going on for some time.

Mr. J. D. REID. At page W—18, I find record of payments in connection with slope walls. But I do not see the names of Quinlan & Robertson.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose this work is done in winter, as they could only work when the canal is unwatered?

Mr. GRAHAM. It was at first necessary to do this work when the water was out of the canal, but now they have arranged a plant which enables them to go on with the work with the water in the canal.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the minister could refer us to the page in the Auditor General's Report, we could see the details of these expenditures.

Mr. JOHNSTON. If my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) will refer to page 5548 of 'Hansard' of last year, he will find an explanation of this vote. The discussion was on a vote of $90,000 taken then on account of this contract. It was stated by the minister at that time that $235,000 would be required for this contract.

Mr. J. D. REID. But the minister says that this work has been going on for several years, and in that case, the records should appear in the Auditor General's Report. The expenditures from this vote of $90,000 passed last session, of course, would not be in the present Auditor General's Report.

Mr. HAGGART. Perhaps the minister will explain, now that we have had an explanation from the hon. gentleman from Nova Scotia, how this work, which was estimated to cost $256,000, has cost $400,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is mistaken. The hon. member for Sydney (Mr. Johnston) said the estimate was $235,000 more. The work had been going on before that.

Mr. HAGGART. He said the work was to cost $255,000, and $90,000 was required for this year.

Mr. GRAHAM. To complete the work.

Mr. JOHNSTON. For the information of my hon. friend, I would recall to him that last year he asked the minister what it would take to finish and the minister said $235,000.

Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. HAGGART. $235,000 and $90,000 make $325,000. It is costing, according to the minister, now $400,000. He said it would require $400,000 to finish.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is wrong. The estimate altogether is $475,000. On that there has been paid already $238,369. We now owe $124,000. The balance between these two amounts and $475,000 is what it will take to finish the work. That will be in the main estimates this year.

Mr. BLAIN. If the hon. minister will turn up page 5548 of last session's 'Hansard' he will find that the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Haggart) asked what it would take to finish. The answer given was: The total estimated cost was $235,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. That meant to complete. That is the fact anyway.

Mr. J. D. REID. I see in the Auditor General's Report on page W—2 that the total amount paid on capital Lachine canal is for electrical installation, slope walls and dredges. On page W—8 the slope walls cost $4,756.76. I cannot see whether this work was going on prior to that. If it had been, it would be in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. GRAHAM. There was very little work done this year. I cannot say anything about the Auditor General's Report because that is not part of my duty.

Mr. J. D. REID. If there is anything wrong in the report, it is part of the minister's duty to tell us why it is wrong. Can he tell us the date this contract was let?

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot give that. It has been going on several years. But there will be another estimate for this work, and I will endeavour to get the information.

Soulanges canal—to pay Manning & Macdonald's claim for selected material behind walls, as certified to by Engineer Grant and Chief Engineer Schreiber, 28,452 cubic yards at 50 cents—revote of lapsed amount, $14,271.

Mr. HAGGART. Is this certified to by engineer Grant?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. The Auditor General says no. He refused to pay it on account of its not being certified to by engineer Grant.

Mr. GRAHAM. It has been certified to since then.

Mr. HAGGART. There was correspondence between the minister's department and the Auditor General. The Auditor General refused to pay because Mr. Grant would not certify that the contractors were entitled to their claim under the contract. Then it was left to Mr. Schreiber who reported in favour of it.

Mr. GRAHAM. There was no doubt a lot of correspondence but Mr. Grant gave his certificate nevertheless.

Mr. HAGGART. Is the hon. minister certain ? In his report Mr. Grant says that the work comes under the contract and refuses to certify to it as an extra. Then there is an appeal to Mr. Schreiber and the department takes the opinion of the law officers.

Mr. J. D. REID. On page W—35 of the Auditor General's Report there is a letter to the Treasury Board from Mr. Grant in which he reports adversely on the claim except as regards 1,220 cubic yards.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Grant did nevertheless give his certificate and the Deputy Minister of Justice advised that the government pay the claim.

Mr. J. D. REID. Cases of this kind, I understand, are allowed to go to the Exchequer Court. But in this matter it seems the claim was just passed through the department and had to be paid.

Mr. GRAHAM. If the Deputy Minister of Justice, our legal adviser tells us that the contractor can recover in the Exchequer Court, is it not better to pay the amount than go to court and pay costs as well ?

Mr. J. D. REID. That was after Schreiber has made his report.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. The moment the government had a man, who was favourable to the contractor, to make a report in his favour, that committed the government. That contract was let when Mr. Schreiber was deputy minister. He was the man responsible. It is like the cases we have had before the Public Accounts Committee. The man who certifies to the claim is sent to see that the claim is right. Then it comes before the Justice Department, and of course the Justice Department says it must be paid.

Mr. GRAHAM. These contracts all say that the chief engineer shall be the sole judge, and Mr. Schreiber was the chief engineer. I am free to admit that if I had my way I would revise these forms of contract, but some people do not agree with me. That is our contract.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister has repeated again and again that Mr. Grant has certified in favour of this claim. Let me read the wording of Mr. Grant's report, under date of August, 1903 :

All other filling in rear of the masonry walls is composed of all classes of material arising from the excavation on the section and was dumped in place from cars, wagons or carts, without any other labour spent on levelling it down, other than what would be necessary to keep the tip end of any high bank flattened out. Payment for this large quantity is now demanded at the contract schedule rate of 50 cents per cubic yard, no work on which was carried out according to paragraph 74 and 23 of the specifications. The claim should, therefore, not be entertained.

Mr. GRAHAM. He gave his certificate since that time and the Justice Department instructed us to pay it.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister states that the engineer shall be the sole judge of this.

Mr. GRAHAM. The contract says that.

Mr. J. D. REID. But it does not say he must and that is the impression the minister is trying to leave on the House. Here is a letter at W—364 from Mr. Butler that explains the whole matter in so far as going to the courts is concerned. It is addressed to the Auditor General dated December 22, 1906, and is in part as follows :

Mr. Hayter is not an engineer, and under the contract it is provided that the engineer shall be the sole judge of work and material in respect of both quality and quantity, and his decision on all questions in dispute with regard to work or materials, or as to the meaning or intention of this contract and the plans, specifications and drawings shall be final, and no works or extra or additional works or changes shall be deemed to have been executed, nor shall the contractor be entitled to payment for the same, unless the same shall have been executed to the satisfaction of the engineer, as evidenced by his certificate in writing, which certificate shall be a condition precedent to the right of the contractor to be paid therefor. (Section 8.)

That is what is in the contract but that is only to protect the government. The government may if they wish insist on his decision being final, but if the minister in charge is not satisfied with that then he can appeal to the courts as Mr. Butler goes on and says :

I have read the contract with care and can find no provisions in it that the Audit Office shall interpret the meaning of the contract, or how it shall be carried out.

This matter was, as I stated in my former letter, one that was handled entirely by my predecessor; and I do not feel called upon to re-open questions that were disposed of by him, and of which I can have no personal knowledge. If, under the circumstances, you see fit to refuse payment, the contractors will, I presume, have their remedy at law by action against the government for the amount with interest, from the date the certificate was sent to your office.

That is as plain as A, B, C. The government could have sent that to the Exchequer Court but for some reason they let Mr. Schreiber go down and give a certificate that the work was all right, which he could not help giving because he was the man who had certified to it up to that date. They let him give another certificate and the deputy Minister of Justice, I am satisfied, could not have given any other decision than he did because the government tied itself up the very moment they let Mr. Schreiber give that certificate.

Galops canal.

| | |
|---|---|
| Upper entrance—final estimate.. .. .. | $16,900 |
| North channel and cut dam between Les Galops and Adams islands—final estimate.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 15,000 |
| | 31,900 |

Mr. J. D. REID. Does that complete the contract ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. What has been the total cost of these two works ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The total cost of the Galops canal has been $6,060,192.

Mr. HAGGART. What has been the cost of the works at the upper entrance ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The expenditure on the upper entrance has been :

| | |
|---|---|
| To June 30, 1906.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $2,022,017 |
| From June 30, 1906, to March 31, 1907 | 45,000 |
| Total expenditure to March 31, 1907.. | 2,067,017 |
| From March 31 to November 30, 1907 | 54,349 |
| Total expenditure.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 2,121,366 |

Mr. HAGGART. On the upper entrance?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Cleveland contract at the upper entrance is not included in this?

Mr. GRAHAM. No.

Mr. HAGGART. Are they using the Galops channel at all ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think it is sometimes used by vessels going down but not by vessels coming up.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the depth of water ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think there is 14-foot navigation.

Mr. HAGGART. On the Galops ?

Mr. GRAHAM. That was the intention.

Mr. HAGGART. It was the intention but it was not secured.

Mr. J. D. REID. Not one large vessel of the class for which this channel was intended, that is grain carriers drawing 14 feet of water, has ever used this channel. I defy the minister to state that one of these vessels ever used that Galops channel. It has been used by some of the little boats that would have run down the old channel.

Mr. FOSTER. Then what was the purpose of the expenditure?

Mr. J. D. REID. It was $800,000 just thrown away. No large steamer has used it and none ever will because the insurance companies will not accept a risk on any vessel that goes down that channel.

Mr. GRAHAM. The work on the Galops channel has been going on for a great many years, ever since I was a young man. The object, as I always understood it, was to get a 14-foot channel. I am told by some men who own large vessels that as the water is very swift they would prefer going through the canal rather than take the chances of this canal with their large vessels. I cannot say whether they have ever run down there or not.

Mr. J. D. REID. I know they have not, because I have made inquiries and have ascertained that the insurance companies will not allow them to go down. This dam between Thomas island and the Galops was put there at a great cost for the purpose of making the channel so that it could be used, but it has not made the channel any better. I am quite sure it will never be used, because no insurance company will allow vessels to go down. For the last eight or nine years I have pressed on the government to stop the work because it was money thrown away, and I was told every year that that was the last year there would be any amount voted for that purpose, but the expenditure has continued. Will the present minister state that this work is actually finished, and that no more money will be spent on it? After the government had taken the work off the contractors' hands and notified the public that there was 14 feet of water, I insisted on an investigation and told them that I was willing to assume there was not more than 10 feet. The government went on afterwards and spent a couple of hundred thousand dollars to make it 14 feet, and there is not 14 feet of water there to-day.

To reimburse Lachine and Soulanges repairs appropriations—Leak at lock 1, Lachine canal, $21,700.

Mr. BERGERON. Do not the boats which caused the accident pay the damage?

Mr. GRAHAM. The boat has paid for that.

Mr. HAGGART. Did you pay the cost of repairs by Governor General's warrant?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am sorry that I had to follow the precedent that we have heard discussed. We took the money out of another appropriation, and we want to reimburse it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Was there any justification for that?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes ; we had to do the work at once or stop navigation.

Mr. HENDERSON. Would it not be better to stop navigation than to break the constitution?

Mr. GRAHAM. That depends on circumstances.

Mr. SPROULE. If navigation was stopped that might make a fairly good justification for resorting to Governor General's warrant. Then why should the minister adopt the wrong course, and take it from an appropriation that was never intended to be spent for that purpose?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am inclined to agree with my hon. friend that that perhaps would have been the proper course. But emergencies like these sometimes arise—what you may call a rush order—and it had to be done immediately.

Mr. BLAIN. Last year $8,250 were expended in interlocking steel beams. Was this all that was expended, and how many were constructed for that amount?

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot tell my hon. friend that until I get the report from the engineer. Those interlocking beams were really protectors to protect the gates from being carried away by tugs. The amount mentioned in the Auditor General's Report is the portion expended; I cannot say for the rest.

Welland canal—to dredge slide in deep cut, $6,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. What is that for?

Mr. GRAHAM. This has reference to the deep cut between Port Robinson and Allanford. There was a slide of 15,000 cubic yards and it will have to be removed before the opening of navigation.

Mr. J. D. REID. Has the work been done by contract?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is not done yet.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is there some one working at it now?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have very great doubts as to whether we will be able to pay it out of this vote, in fact, I think we cannot.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the total cost of this work?

Mr. GRAHAM. We cannot tell yet. I think there is a second slide which will cause another appropriation. I think we had better drop this $6,000 because we will not be able to use it before the end of the year. I therefore beg to move that the item be stricken out.

Motion agreed to.

Welland canal—to renew entrance piers at Port Maitland, $21,460.

Mr. HAGGART. What is that for?

Mr. GRAHAM. This is to complete the contract.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the total amount of the contract and what is the amount expended?

Mr. GRAHAM. The total up to date is $62,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the amount of the contract?

Mr. GRAHAM. My information is that it is a schedule contract by the yard amounting to about $84,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Does this finish it?

Mr. GRAHAM. This finishes it.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is the contractor?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Conroy, of Peterborough.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the total cost of building the Port Maitland pier?

Mr. GRAHAM. About $84,000. There is a balance of $21,460 to be applied in payment of the final estimate.

Mr. BLAIN. Who is the inspector of this work?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think I answered that question in reply to a question this year—did I not? It has gone from me now.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister answered a question put by myself. Samuel Braund, I think, he told me, was the inspector. I asked what qualifications he had for the work and on whose recommendation he had been appointed, but the reply was that there was no record in the department to show upon whose recommendation he had been appointed. I certainly would very much like to know who recommended him for that position.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the minister would be able to say who recommended this gentleman for that position.

Mr. GRAHAM. There is no record in the department to show who recommended him. I myself seldom keep any record. The minister has to take the responsibility for all these appointments.

Mr. BLAIN. Since the minister is not able to tell the committee I think that perhaps I will take the opportunity of informing the minister myself from a record of his own department. I see a letter dated Ottawa, April 25, 1907, as follows:

I have to acknowledge receipt of your communication of the 13th instant relative to the desired appointment of an inspector of crib work on the works of repair to be executed in connection with the east pier at Port Maitland, on the Welland canal.

In reply, I have to say that, on communicating with Mr. A. T. Thompson, solicitor, of this city, who controls the distribution of the patronage in the district in which the work is situated, requesting him to nominate a suitable and competent person for the said position, he has advised the department, under date the 22nd instant, that he is in receipt of a letter stating that Mr. Samuel Braund was appointed as such inspector, and that he received official notification of his appointment a good while ago, probably, he says, three months ago. Mr. Thompson adds that he had quite forgotten the circumstance attending this appointment.

Be pleased to notify Mr. Braund when his services are required.

I am, sir,
Your obedent servant,
L. K. JONES,
Secretary.

I may say that there is a good deal of correspondence in connection with this appointment.

Mr. GRAHAM. Not mine.

Mr. BLAIN. Of course, the hon. gentleman will not repudiate his predecessor. He is responsible for the department and he will be able to take notice that it is carrying out to the letter the system of patronage. Here is a gentleman who was a candidate in the county and who had moved to the city of Ottawa to engage in his profession, about which I have nothing to say. My hon. friend's department seeks him out and asks him to name a man and this gentleman names a man who, I am informed, had no qualifications whatever for the position.

Mr. J. D. REID. He was a tailor was he not ?

Mr. BLAIN. I think if my hon. friend the minister is not able to state to the committee what qualifications the inspector had we must ask the member for the county to make a statement. Then, perhaps, I will refresh the minister's memory with one or two letters in connection with it.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Lalor) speaks we ought to know whether the hon. minister has a competent man in charge of a work involving an expenditure of $84,000, whether he or his officers think that he is capable. I am quite certain that the minister will not undertake to defend a mere piece of patronage in the carrying out of an operation involving $84,000 of the people's money in a work which requires the very best overseeing and engineering ability, I should think, and certainly sobriety and steadiness. Does the minister really know what are the qualifications of this man ? Is the Deputy Minister not able to tell the minister that he made a thorough and conscientious inquiry and satisfied himself that he was a competent man to superintend that work and do it in a proper way ? This appears to be one of the, I am afraid, many instances where these things are simply matters of patronage and in which works are controlled as to supervision by men who know absolutely nothing about them at all, and, besides, knowing absolutely nothing about them, are men you would not put in charge of any work that required steadiness. I would like to know if the minister knows anything about the qualifications of that man ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. gentleman will see when he makes the insinuation that this man was in charge of a work costing $84,000 that he is all wrong. One of the best engineers in the employ of the government, Mr. Weller, is in charge of that work and is responsible to the government. He is responsible for keeping this man if he is not a good man. We hold Mr. Weller, an engineer of eminent ability responsible for this work.

Mr. LALOR. Mr. Weller is superintendent of the Welland canal and lives thirty or forty miles from there. I know from actual experience that Mr. Weller is seldom seen in connection with the work. In the main estimates there is a very large amount for building the west pier at Port Maitland. I can tell the minister that the contractor who built this same work equally as good as it is being built to-day and with just as good material, only a few years ago bulit the pier for a sum much less than $40,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is a big difference between three years ago and now.

Mr. BENNETT. Cement is cheaper.

Mr. LALOR. He told me he paid as high wages at that time as are paid to-day.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the work cost $40,000 two years ago surely it cannot cost $80,000 now.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister said that Mr. Weller was responsible for this work, but Mr. Weller is not responsible for the man the government appointed to supervise the work. No doubt that man was appointed under the patronage system which is very well described in the report of the Civil Service Commission which says :

It would seem that in the four post offices examined into by the commission letter-carriers were employed to do high grade duty and duties of clerks; that they are still designated on the pay-list as letter-carriers; that in consequence of a desire on the part of the officials not to bring these letter-carriers in their uniforms to the public notice, they to their loss, have been deprived of their uniforms as well as their street car fares. In that special branch of the public service politics was found, as a rule, to play an important part. The commissioners consider from the evidence submitted to them that on the part of responsible officials of the several departments, especially in the outside service, there is a dread of the politician, and every bit of strategy is resorted to to circumvent the carrying out of the patronage system.

In the matter of promotions the same patronage fear is apparent. Your commissioners found in their rounds that a collector of customs, a city postmaster, a post office inspector and others were appointed politically. The recent appointment of a postmaster at Kingston was on the recommendation of the patronage committee; the last appointment to the postmastership at Montreal, the most important in the Dominion, was given to an aged member of parliament, 67 years old.

As the almost universal practice is that no person is promoted out of his district and transferred to higher duties in another place, and that with few exceptions no person is promoted out of his class, it follows that young men, entering the public service in the several divisions to which they have been appointed, see that however hard they may work, and whatever intelligence they bring to bear upon their duties, there is no chance of getting out of the class to which they are appointed. Your commissioners have been told, and believe, that promotions have been made as a matter of politics, not in every case, but in many cases, and that people have been brought in from the outside over the heads of men who have given their lifetime to the departments, to fill the few positions of any superiority in the public service.

That is the way the patronage system works. The engineer has nothing to say about the appointment of this man and he has got to put up with him whether he is good or bad.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the particular work of this gentleman ?

Mr. GRAHAM. His duty is the supervision of the work under the control of the engineering staff headed by Mr. Weller, and he sees that the specifications of the contract are carried out in detail.

Mr. FOSTER. Was Mr. Weller asked to report on this man's competency to do that work ?

Mr. GRAHAM. In our department information is sent out to the engineer saying that so and so has been appointed or recommended and asking the engineer to see if he is qualified for the position, and we hold the engineer absolutely responsible. It is his duty to dismiss a man that is not competent no matter by whom he is recommended.

Mr. FOSTER. Was inquiry made of Mr. Weller in this instance ? I want the minister if he knows to say so and if he does not know, not to say so.

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot say positively. I have no reason to think the rule is not followed in this case.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the minister can find out.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think so.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a large work and a great deal of money is involved, and if you are to have an inspector at all he should be a good man. If there is no inspector of course the whole thing is in the contractors' hands except for an occasional visit from the engineer. What should be done is to leave the engineer a free choice to select the best man and then hold him responsible, But when you send Mr. Weller a man, or send any other engineer a man for the position, you will not find one engineer out of fifty who will interfere with the minister's appointee. He simply looks upon it as a matter of patronage and if the minister sends a man he will not interfere. I suppose we never will know how many millions of dollars of money has been wasted in the construction of works in this country because the minister has forced upon the work the nominees of party supporters instead of throwing the whole matter upon the engineering staff and holding them responsible for proper inspection. The system now in force has been the system for many years and it is a bad system.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister is to be congratulated that the inspector has not been appointed by the contractor but by the defeated candidate. If we look to the Public Works Department—I hope the present minister will not ruffle his pin feathers when I mention it—the practice is for the contractors to appoint the inspectors.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You say the contractors appoint the inspectors?

Mr. BENNETT. Certainly.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think not.

Mr. BENNETT. Why the inspector swore to it in a case we had before us.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That may be a long time ago.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, we will see what the present minister will do. Of course there is a great advantage in having the contractor appoint the inspector because the inspector is subservient to the contractor. In the case of the Penetanguishene Dredging Company the inspector swore that the secretary-treasurer of the company appointed him and he felt very thankful to him for it. In the case of the Great Lakes Dredging Company which does a lot of dredging all over the country, Mr. Bowman and Mr. Bowman's brother, half owners of the stock of that company, they appoint all the inspectors for work done on the Georgian bay.

Mr. BERGERON. Who pays the inspectors ?

Mr. BENNETT. The government does. Take another company, the Dominion Dredging Company, at Midland. Who appoints the inspector? Mr. Tudhope, the local member, who has the patronage. In past seasons—they are not doing dredging now—every one has been laughing at the fact that the scows go out with little or nothing in them. And when the contractor comes down and is pressed for an answer to questions, he admits that the inspector is not there, but he is sure that the inspector's reports are right, because his man tells the inspector what is taken out, and his man is a truthful man. To make sure they start out at five o'clock in the morning, when the inquisitive public are not likely to see them going out. I congratulate the minister (Mr. Graham) that he is not caught in this case —not saying that there are cases in his department on which he could be caught. To my mind, this is an exemplary case as compared with some that are known.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the minister say that the engineer is responsible for this man's qualifications and for his discharge of his duty?

Mr. GRAHAM. I said that the engineer was responsible for the work this man does, as he is for the work done by every man under him. If the man does not perform his duties properly it is the duty of the engineer to discharge him.

Mr. BERGERON. But if the engineer is forty miles away——

Mr. GRAHAM. The engineer may have his residence at some distance, but he is superintending engineer of the canal, a permanent employee of the department, and he has his staff. Hon. gentlemen opposite will not say that we do not engage a sufficiently large staff.

Mr. LALOR. The inspector seems to have complete charge of this work. Mr. Weller may be held responsible, but I doubt that he is often seen near the work. I have had a contract on the Welland canal myself, and I know that we did not see much of the engineer in charge.

Mr. BLAIN. Just to show how the politicians press themselves and their appointments on this government——

Mr. GRAHAM. Or any government.

Mr. BLAIN—let me read this letter :

Ottawa, September 24, 1906.

The Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa.

Sirs,—Re Port Maitland piers—repairs.

Extensive repairs are being made, or are about to be made, at Port Maitland, in Haldimand county, on the piers there.

The Department of Public Works writes me that they know nothing of the matter, and that probably it is being done by Railways and Canals. If this be so, I ask the privilege of suggesting an inspector for the works, as I was asked to do so when the Dunnville dam was built by the Public Works Department.

The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) will take note of this.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Was it the contractor who wrote that letter?

Mr. BLAIN. No, it was the politician.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) said it was the contractor who named them.

Mr. BENNETT. I said the contractors had the monopoly in the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Pugsley's) department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) has a very vivid imagination.

Mr. BLAIN. Let me finish this letter :

If you have not got these improvements in hand, can you inform me what department has?

Yours truly,
ANDREW T. THOMPSON.

That is signed by the government's candidate in the last election. Now, to show whether the hon. gentleman can hold the engineer responsible for this man or not, here are three letters :

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, October 10, 1906.

Sir,—I have to request to be pleased to inform the department whether an inspector will be required for the works of repair to be executed in connection with the piers at Port Maitland, on the line of the Welland canal.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
L. K. JONES,
Secretary.

J. L. Weller, Esq.,
Superintending engineer, Welland canal,
St. Catharines.

St. Catharines, Ontario, October 11, 1906.

L. K. Jones, Esq.,
Secretary, Department of Railways and Canals, Ottawa, Ontario.

Sir,—Replying to your communication of the 10th instant, file No. 5270, I beg to say that an inspector of crib work will be required in connection with the contract for the renewal of the pier at Port Maitland. The services of this man will not be required for some time, however, but when the contractor begins active operations.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
J. L. WELLER,
Superintending engineer.

St. Catharines, Ontario, April 13, 1907.

L. K. Jones, Esq.,
Secretary, Department of Railways and Canals, Ottawa, Ontario.

Sir,—Referring to your communication of the 10th October, 1906, file No. 5270, I beg to say that I shall shortly require an inspector of crib work for the renewal of the east pier at Port Maitland. If you will send the name of the party recommended, I shall notify him when his services are required.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
J. L. WELLER,
Superintending engineer.

That shows that the engineer had no power to select the inspector, but the first information he gets is a letter that Mr. Thompson has recommended a certain man, and that man is appointed. Surely the minister will not suggest, in the light of this correspondence, that the engineer could be held responsible for his work. The man was appointed in the usual political way, the politician recommending, the name being sent to the engineer, and the man going to work without regard to his qualifications.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does Mr. Thompson recommend the salary he is to get as well as the man?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) is not so innocent as he pretends to be. He has supported governments and recommended men for positions time and time again, and he knows that I know a lot of them. And I am afraid that my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) is not so innocent as he pretends to be. What these hon. gentlemen have said may be a argument in favour of this country looking into the question of civil service reform. But these arguments would have applied just as well at any time since confederation. But when these hon. gentlemen blandly insist, contrary to all precedent or custom that the government in power should not suggest the men to be appointed to positions, I think they do not expect the country to take them seriously so long as we have our present system.

Mr. BERGERON. So long as the men can do the work.

Mr. GRAHAM. No person has suggested that this work is not well done.

Mr. BERGERON. We do not know.

Mr. GRAHAM. The engineer in charge, who is responsible for the work, has reported that it is well done. Unless somebody is prepared to say that the officials do not do their duty, it seems to me safe to believe that the work has been done satisfactorily.

Mr. LALOR. In my own section, whether the work is done properly or not, people say that the cost is far in excess of what it should be. Who is responsible for the excessive cost I do not know. But I should think it could be traceable to its source. In the original estimates, which I cannot find at present, there was a large amount for building the west pier which seems in excess of what should be required.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is a matter of estimate. As a matter of fact, three tenders were received after public advertisement, and the contract was given to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. BLAIN. Was there more than one inspector on this work ?

Mr. LALOR. In reply to a question of mine, the minister said that the contract for the west pier had been given to the same contractor who had built the east pier and at the same price, without any public tender.

Mr. GRAHAM. There is an item in the main estimates for that work and it would be more in order to discuss it then.

Mr. J. D. REID. I know these works down on our own canal and in every case the engineer in charge is never allowed to appoint a man. The appointments are always recommended by the Liberal committee and the superintending engineer is powerless to dismiss them. Can the hon. minister's deputy tell him of one case where the superintending engineer ever dismissed a man ? He dare not do so. I want to ask the minister what kind of material was removed out of these piers ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Old cribwork and stone.

Mr. J. D. REID. So much a yard for removing the stone.

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot produce the schedule prices but will bring them up on the main estimates if my hon. friend insists.

Mr. LALOR. There were three tenders, and the lowest, that of Mr. Conroy for $29,831, was accepted. But we find that the work is costing $84,000. How does the minister explain the difference ?

Mr. GRAHAM. This is a case of moneying out approximate quantities. The exact quantities cannot be found until they do the work.

Mr. LALOR. The engineer's estimate of the total cost was $35,230, and a tender was accepted for $29,831. But now we find that the contractor was paid $84,000. Who is responsible ?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend would not say that this work should not be done.

Mr. LALOR. No.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is considered the most practical way of asking for tenders to call for schedule prices on an amount only estimated. The amount may be more or it may be less. The lowest tender is according to the schedule prices, and my hon. friend will see that it is impossible to say just what these things will total. There was not a yard more paid for than the work performed, and it was paid at the price of the tender, which was the lowest price.

Mr. BARKER. What does the minister think would happen to an engineer of the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway who estimated to his company that a work would cost $35,000 and accepted a tender for $29,000, and then the company had to pay $84,000 ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not wish to place my opinion against that of my hon. friend because he is a man of experience, but this work was done at schedule prices.

Mr. BARKER. These companies would expect their engineer to go somewhat nearer what the work would really cost.

Mr. GRAHAM. Railway work is quite different from hydraulic work.

Mr. HAGGART. When building a pier, the engineers should know the quantities and they do know them, and they estimate according to the actual amount of work to be done. The engineer estimated the work would cost $35,000, the contractor was willing to do it for $29,000, and the amount actually expended is $84,000. Either there is the most gross carelessness on the part of the engineer or the government have been paying out money to which the contractor is not entitled. In such a work as building a pier at Port Maitland, the quantities can be estimated to a certainty. What confidence can we place on the estimates of the engineer of a department such as the Department of Railways and Canals when these estimates are exceeded by fifty per cent and sometimes doubled in the actual results ? The minister should have a better staff of engineers. The moment the estimate of an engineer is so much exceeded by the work performed, that ought to be a notice to him that he is no longer required. Is engineering an exact science or is it only rule of thumb work ? I do not know if the department placed in the mouths of the minister's predecessors the statements as to the quantity of work that would be required and which have been so generally exceeded. It would seem from these statements that engineering is not an exact science, but apparently these statements were considered sufficient to gull the people of the country and the House in order to get the estimates through. We have had enough work of this kind. This is a serious matter, the estimates of last year were exceeded by over $6,000,000. If the engineering branch of this department is so far wrong in its estimates then surely it is no longer a branch on which the department or the House can rely.

Mr. LALOR. I think we can rely on the estimate of the engineer, Mr. Weller. He is a thoroughly competent engineer and I would not at all dispute his figures. If the minister will look up the building of this same pier, which has been rebuilt several times during the last 25 years, he will find that the engineer's estimate was very close, very liberal in fact, even considering the increased cost of material. The cost of the material has been increased so greatly; stone would not cost more than it did some years ago, labour is very little higher, and the only serious increase is in the cost of the timber used. When you come to consider that the cost was $50,000 more than the estimate of the engineer and $56,000 more than the tender itself, it does look as if there was something radically wrong in connection with this matter.

Mr. BENNETT. In connection with certain inquiries that have been made in reference to dredging some very suspicious circumstances have developed; it has been shown that some rival tenderers were employing the same envelopes. The estimate in this case was $35,000 but the cost is $85,000. Any innocent man, looking at the file which I hold in my hand, would say: Here is a case of bona fide honest tenderers, here is Conroy, of Peterborough, tendering at $29,831, and here is Joseph Battle, of Thorold, tendering at $32,045. I know who Mr. Conroy is. I know a case, although I cannot recall where it was, that was under discussion some seven or eight years ago, a case of grave suspicion. From that case I would look with suspicion upon any dealings of Conroy with this or any other department. I do not say that the dealings to which I refer were with this department. He is a pronounced Liberal, a Stratton Liberal, and everybody knows what that means around Peterborough. I will not say that Mr. Battle is a Liberal, as I want to be certain about my facts, and I know there are a number of Battles around Thorold, some Liberals and some Conservatives. My hon. friend (Mr. Lalor) says that this Jos. Battle is a Liberal. A deposit had to be made with each tender. By a perusal of this file it is seen that a deposit was made by Mr. Conroy and Mr. Conroy got the contract. Mr. Conroy had a perfect right, at a certain stage of the work, to ask for a return of his cheque. Let me read not a letter but a telegram which is on this file:

Thorold, Ontario, October 22.

Department of Railways and Canals,

L. K. Jones, Secretary, Ottawa, Ontario.

Have you sent cheque and when to Edward Conroy, contractor, Peterborough, for September estimate Port Maitland pier? Telegraph reply.

JOSEPH BATTLE.

Fearful and wonderful ! Here are the deadly rival contractors and one of them asking whether this estimate cheque has been sent to the other. At first blush I thought it was the cheque that had been deposited with the tender, but no, it is the cheque of one of the estimates on the work and here is Joseph Battle wiring and asking if it had been sent to Conroy. The minister will answer that Conroy got the contract and that he and Battle apparently had some dealings between themselves, consequently Battle was interested in the contract. It looks very suspicious, and odd. Is it the same old story that we have heard in connection with the dredging contract, the Great Lakes Dredging Company, putting in a tender at 9 cents and A. F. Bowman of the same firm putting in one at 22 cents and then trusting to the dishonesty of the then Minister of Public Works, if there were no tenders between 9 cents and 22 cents, allowing them to pull out the 9-cent tender and substitute the 22-cent tender. I do not know whether or not there was any collusion between Battle and Conroy in the matter of this tendering; I do not say there was, but it does seem odd that Battle is so concerned about the payment to Conroy that he post haste wires the department.

Let us go into the question of over-running the estimate. May I ask the minister how much dredging has been paid for under this contract up to date?

Mr. GRAHAM. There is no dredging under this contract, I think.

Mr. BENNETT. The first item on it is for dredging.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am informed there is a little dredging for crib seats.

Mr. BENNETT. The estimate is that it would run to $3,200. May I ask the minister what it did run to?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have not the information in detail of the different parts of this work.

Mr. BENNETT. Has it run nearly three times as much? I assume the dredging bills went up to $9,000 instead of $3,000. Then we have an estimate for removing the superstructure, $3,000. That was a fair estimate I suppose for that? Mr. Battle's tender for this was $4,500 and Mr. Beggie's $4,200. I do not know who Mr. Beggie is, I do not know whether he was a friend of the Battle people or not, I do not know the practice in that part of the country. My hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Lalor) says he is not a contractor at all, but a painter.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is all wrong. I have known Mr. Beggie for fifteen or twenty years. He has been connected with some of the largest contracts of this kind and of other kinds, in the province of Ontario.

Mr. LALOR. I am not aware of his ever having a contract. I know the family of Beggies, they are painters and paper hangers, and have been engaged in that business all their lives.

Mr. GRAHAM. He was a member at one time of the firm of Larkin & Sangster. He was a contractor also in connection with the building of large public institutions. I first met him in the village of Iroquois when he was a contractor on a work there.

Mr. BENNETT. This pier was of certain dimensions, and would require certain specified kinds of timber. Now the timber is a big item, $10,400. I ask the minister if the proportions of the pier were changed?

Mr. GRAHAM. My information is that they were not. This was tearing down an old work and replacing it. That is not like building a new work where you can make estimates with something like accuracy.

Mr. LALOR. It was tearing down and rebuilding an old pier, and the contractor, I presume, received a certain price for removal of the old material. What was done with the stone taken out of the old work?

Mr. GRAHAM. I will bring down the contract, all these things will be in the contract itself.

Mr. BENNETT. The removal of the old pier is estimated by the contractor at $3,000. It is not a question at all as to schedule prices, it is a complete tender for the removal of the superstructure at so much per cubic yard. The next question is concerning the dimensions of the pier and the quantity of timber required. The prices contracted for amount in round figures to nearly $20,000; was that all for timber alone? Will the minister make a nnote of it, and when he goes into his estimates again will he let us know exactly what the prices were for each article that was in the schedule?

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister also ascertain why Mr. Weller has never been asked for a report as to why his estimate of $35,000 has run up to $84,000?

Mr. LALOR. On December 16 last I asked certain questions of the minister regarding Port Maitland piers to which I received these answers:

Mr. LALOR asked:

1. What was the amount of Battle's tender for building piers at Port Maitland?
2. Have there been any extras? If so, what amount?
3. What is the total amount paid for work on piers at Port Maitland?
4. Is it the intention of the government to build both piers at Port Maitland?
5. Have any tenders been asked for building the west pier?
6. Who is the government inspector of the work?
7. Upon whose recommendation was he appointed?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Mr. Battle's tender was not accepted by the department for building piers at Port Maitland. The contract was awarded to Edward Conroy at his tender price, on schedule, his being the lowest.
2. No extras. On May, 1907, the superintending engineer reported that on examination, the east pier showed that about 290 feet towards the shore end was in a badly damaged condition—requiring dredging out and replacing, and made suggestion for remedying the trouble. Authority was given for completing the necessary work on schedule prices as in tender.
3. $52,780.

4. No decision has been reached by the department.
5. No.
6. Samuel Braund.
7. There does not appear to be any evidence in the department as to who recommended him.

But now we find from the return brought down that there is a very considerable amount of evidence as to who recommended Mr. Samuel Braund. Mr. Samuel Braund is one of my constituents.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend would not say that he did not do his work properly ?

Mr. LALOR. I am not prepared to discuss that, but I am prepared to say that Mr. Samuel Braund was apparently appointed inspector upon the recommendation of Colonel Andrew Thompson, and that the government made no inquiry whatever as to his responsibility or capability for doing the work, but appointed him apparently upon the recommendation of the defeated candidate. Now if public works all through this Dominion are carried on in that way, and if such exorbitant amounts are paid in excess of contract prices and inspectors are appointed purely on the recommendation of defeated candidates, it is no wonder that such large amounts of money are being wasted in Canada to-day.

Mr. BENNETT. There is further correspondence in reference to that in a letter dated St. Catherines, May 20, 1907, from Mr. Weller to the department. This paragraph occurs.

Mr. Joseph Battle is doing this work for the contractor, E. Conroy, of Peterborough, and his idea of the cost of this piling is high. He asks $1.50 as per his letter, copy of which I inclose.

It would appear then that Battle & Conroy were pretty close together.

Mr. GRAHAM. The work was done on schedule prices. The letter read by my hon. friend itself explains a lot of large amounts.

Mr. BLAIN. I want to draw the attention of the minister to the report of the Civil Service Commission, to one paragraph only, and I want to ask whether this paragraph applies to my hon. friend's department.

Your commissioners have been told and believe that promotions have been made as a matter of politics, not in every case, but in many cases, and that people have been brought in from outside over the heads of men who have given their lifetime to the department, to fill the few positions of any superiority in the public service.

Is that a custom of the department over which the hon. gentleman presides ?

Mr. LALOR.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend does not say that refers to my department in particular.

Mr. BLAIN. I am asking for information.

Mr. GRAHAM. It will open up a long question if I wanted to go into a discussion of that matter. It is not always a truism that the old employee is the best employee for certain work, but the rule that I am trying to follow in my department is that where I find an employee who is capable of advancing, I give the preference to the person in the department always if he is able to perform the work in a position next higher up.

Mr. LALOR. If the minister would accede to my request I would like him to hold the item over and bring down the inspector's estimates from time to time as the work progressed so that we will know the amount of material that is removed from this work, the amount it cost to remove it, what became of the material and particularly what became of the stone that was in this pier that was removed.

Mr. GRAHAM. The inspector never makes any estimates; the engineer does that.

Mr. LALOR. He has to make progress estimates from time to time for the contractors to get paid.

Mr. GRAHAM. The engineer makes the estimates. If my hon. friend (Mr. Lalor) allows this to pass I will see he gets all the information. It will be up again in connection with the main estimates.

Mr. BLAIN. The estimated cost of this was $35,000, the actual cost is $84,000, or a difference of $40,000; in other words, the amount expended was more than double what the minister told the House the work would cost. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs, once in a while, when matters come up for discussion involving large expenditures, twit the opposition by saying : You allowed this to pass, you did not enter any protest or make any motion to strike out the item and therefore you are responsible. In this case the minister presiding over that department told the opposition that this work would cost $35,000. The opposition allowed it to pass; $35,000 was put in the estimates. Then, the following year, the minister comes down and says : We have exceeded the estimate ; instead of spending $35,000, we have spent $84,000, or an increase of $49,000, on that one item. I want to point out to the Minister of Finance that when he twits the opposition in future perhaps it would be well for him to reprimand some of the ministers under him and point out that there is a very great deal of money expended without the sanction of the hon. gentlemen sitting on the other side or on this side either. Ministers take it upon themselves, as the Minister of Railways and Canals has done in this case, to exceed the estimates submitted to parliament.

Mr. GRAHAM. What the minister must have said last year when asking for this vote was that it was estimated that it would cost $35,000 to complete the work because there was an amount nearly equal to that expended before that time. Twenty-five thousand dollars or $27,000 had been spent on this work. We have paid in addition to this $21,000, $62,000 for this work.

Mr. BERGERON. What were the tenders that were submitted?

Mr. GRAHAM. They were based on schedule prices. It was an old pier and had to be removed.

| | |
|---|---|
| Rideau canal— | |
| To complete purchase of tug and fittings | $ 1,500 |
| Rebuilding apron below bulk head at Hog's Back | 16,000 |
| To rebuild waste wier at Black Rapids | 3,500 |
| Improvements | 3,000 |

Mr. J. D. REID. What is the name of the tug that has been purchased ?

Mr. BERGERON. Why not get a tug from some of the other departments that have lots of tugs ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I presume that they would draw too much water for the Rideau canal. The 'Loretta' is the name of the tug.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister has a tug down at Morrisburg, the 'Alert,' that does not do anything but run around with the superintendent of the Williamsburg canal. For the last forty years there has never been any necessity for a steamer for the superintendent of the Wiliamsburg canal, and now the superintendent has a tug that the minister knows well, the one that was purchased from Mr. Murphy. They have got her all fitted up and this man has this steamer running up and down the river simply as a pleasure boat. That would have been a splendid tug on the Rideau.

Mr. GRAHAM. Does she not draw too much water?

Mr. J. D. REID. No. At all events, she is now only used by the superintendent of the Williamsburg canal. I would like to ask the minister if he really thinks it is necessary to have a fine steamer fitted up like that boat is and which is costing $4,000 or $5,000 a year to run for the accommodation of the superintendent of the Williamsburg canal who lives at Morrisburg.

Mr. GRAHAM. You could not very well attend to this work unless you had some means of getting around and getting at the work. This superintendent goes from Cornwall up to the Murray canal.

Mr. BERGERON. On the Soulanges canal the superintendent has a yacht. Last summer I saw that the government were building a very nice boat for the superintendent. The ministers have their private cars——

Mr. GRAHAM. Official cars.

Mr. BERGERON. Official cars—and these superintendents must have boat which the government pays for and which add to the cost of maintaining the canals.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am surprised at the minister making the statement that the superintendent of the Williamsburg canal requires a large steamer such as that. He lives at Morrisburg——

Mr. BRODEUR. At Cornwall.

Mr. J. D. REID. At all events, if he wants to go to Morrisburg he goes on the train, or it is only a drive of an hour and a half or an hour and three quarters. In order to go from Cornwall or from the head of the Iroquois canal to the Murray canal, he has to have a steamer. It is simply a pleasure boat. It is used the same as the boats of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries are used. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has half a dozen pleasure yachts running around the river. The Minister of Railways and Canals is doing the same thing.

Mr. BENNETT. And the Minister of Public Works has a hundred thousand dollar one—the 'Speedy.'

Mr. J. D. REID. Yes, the Minister of Public Works has one too. It seems to be contagious. This, I think, is a very flagrant case of expenditure of this kind. I have spoken about the increased cost of managing these canals. Here is a sample. There is absolutely no reason why this man should have that boat. Knowing the situation and having lived in Morrisburg as long as he has the minister must agree that I am right in that matter. There is not one Liberal in Dundas or in Brockville who, if you got him to state his own opinion would agree with what the minister has said here to-night. The minister has to swallow these expenditures the same as some of the other ministers do, even though they know they are not in the public interest. I do not believe his deputy minister would allow it if he had not to keep the friends of the government employed. It is simply a pleasure yacht for them to run about in.

Mr. HAGGART. What did this boat cost altogether ?

Mr. GRAHAM. About $15,000.

Mr. HAGGART. What did you do with the old boat ?

Mr. GRAHAM. They allowed $2,500 for her on the bargain.

Mr. BENNETT. Who is building the boat ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Polson and Company.

Mr. BENNETT. Were tenders called for?

Mr. GRAHAM. There were three tenders and Polson was the lowest.

Mr. BENNETT. Who were the other two tenderers ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not remember now.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the cost of running this boat during the summer ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot say. These boats are not at all for pleasure purposes. They are used for towing scows and transferring the repair gangs. A man has to go through the canal to see the banks on either side ; he can't go through the canal with a horse and buggy.

Mr. J. D. REID. The inspection can be very well made from driving along the canal bank. Formerly it only cost about $800 a year to rent a boat for the canal work but now it will cost $4,000 or $5,000. You send your inspector up the Murray canal in one of these boats at a cost of a couple of hundred dollars a trip when a horse and buggy would do just as well. I am surprised that the minister should state it was necessary to have a boat on that canal.

Mr. BENNETT. He is used to it.

Mr. J. D. REID. Not at all. When he lived in Morrisburg he knew it only cost $17,000 or $18,000 a year under the Conservative regime to operate that canal and now it costs $45,000 a year.

Trent canal—to complete purchase of boat, $4,063.

Mr. BENNETT. Where did you get this boat ?

Mr. GRAHAM. From the Polsons.

Mr. BENNETT. Were tenders asked ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the cost of this boat ?

Mr. GRAHAM. $19,062.

Mr. BENNETT. How many tendered ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Two.

Mr. BENNETT. Who was the other ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not remember, Polson was the lowest.

Mr. BENNETT. What boat has been used in the past on this canal ?

Mr. GRAHAM. They rented a boat formerly, but the canal is being enlarged all the time and it was thought cheaper and more satisfactory to purchase one.

Mr. BENNETT. Did not the government own a boat called the 'Bob Hall ?'

Mr. GRAHAM. She was not sufficient for this work.

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. FOSTER. What work has she to do?

Mr. GRAHAM. Towing barges with repair gangs and all the work that offers, and attending dredges on the canal. This boat is very much used.

Mr. BENNETT. Who is the engineer in charge of the Trent Valley canal system ? Is it Mr. Kerr ?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is Mr. A. J. Grant.

Mr. BENNETT. Who is Mr. Malone who has been engaged on the Holland river dredging ?

Mr. GRAHAM. He is assistant engineer under Mr. Kerr, who is resident engineer.

Mr. BENNETT. Where does Mr. Malone come from and how long has he been in the employ of the department ?

Mr. GRAHAM. He is a graduate of one of the universities—I think Toronto University, but I am not sure. He has been employed by the department, I believe, for three years.

Mr. BENNETT. In the matter of dredging the Holland river, the position seems to be peculiar in this, that they are simply dumping the dredgings on the bank. Would it not be well to put in scows and take the material away ? It is looked upon as one of the most jocular things in that section of the country to see this loose sand taken out by day and left there to fall back at night.

Mr. GRAHAM. I regret to say that the contractors on that work have lost a very large amount of money.

Mr. BENNETT. How is that?

Mr. GRAHAM. Perhaps I can better explain in the discussion on the main estimates. Owing to unfavourable conditions, they have not been enabled to earn anything.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, the favourable conditions they enjoy under the Public Works Department will reimburse them for anything they lose on the Holland river. They are the same company, the Penetanguishene crowd. This company is headed by Dr. Spohn, an old friend of the Minister of Railways and Canals. They have invaded that desirable ground for politicians, the dredging business. With the assistance of the inspector appointed by Dr. Spohn, I am quite sure that anything they lose on the Holland river they will make up on the Georgian bay, unless the Minister of Public Works sends out an inspector from Ottawa or some other outside place. I would sound a note of warning to the Minister of Public Works that he is in a department that is worked for all it is worth by the contractors. As to these dredging inspectors, the inspector at Collingwood was put out on the ground that he was playing into the hands of the contractor——

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought the hon. gentleman said that inspectors never were dismissed.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, this man happened to be dismissed. Even their own friends protested against his appointment. For some reason or other he was driven out. But the Minister of Railways and Canals can console himself with the thought that whatever these parties lose on the Holland river they will more than make up on Georgian bay.

Mr. BERGERON. This will cost $19,000, I understand. What is the cost of running a boat like that?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not wish to take the chance of being inaccurate. I will get the figures and let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. BERGERON. Could not the minister get them from his deputy? Could not he say how much it would cost a month—$2,000, $3,000, $4,000 a month?

Mr. GRAHAM. We will be more economical than that.

Mr. BERGERON. I can remember that on the Beauharnois canal in the old days the superintendent used to go over the works frequently. He put in accounts which I used to think were pretty large, but nothing compared with the cost of running this boat. And he did the work perfectly well, though he had no boat at his disposal. This is a new thing. I wonder if the superintendent of the Lachine canal has a boat?

Mr. GRAHAM. A small one.

Mr. BERGERON. This is a new thing. Ten years ago or over there were none of these boats.

Mr. GRAHAM. There has been a tug to attend the dredge for years.

Mr. BERGERON. But the superintendent had not a boat at his disposal. I do not say that these are pleasure boats altogether, but they are too costly, and the work should be done in a cheaper way.

Mr. GRAHAM. We are going to try to show that there will be no higher cost, but more efficient work.

Mr. FOSTER. You will have to show it quickly.

Railways and canals—chargeable to collection of revenue—Railways—Intercolonial Railways, $1,400,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the minister tell us how these parties have lain out of their money, or how he made provision for payment?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Intercolonial is not on the same basis as other railways are. It must be remembered that it has earned this money—that is, when it comes out even it has earned the money. The receipts of the Intercolonial are paid into the bank to the credit of the Receiver General. Many members have spoken to me as though they thought the money received was spent by the Intercolonial and only the balance dealt with at the end of the year. But that is not the way. All the receipts of the Intercolonial go to the Receiver General, and we have to get a vote to pay wages and everything else. As a matter of fact, the custom has been for the Auditor General to allow us a certain amount of credit—a credit balance that we can use. He has done that with this amount, and that is the short explanation of it. The month of March alone will make up, perhaps, half of this amount or more. Last year our traffic increased $810,775.90 and our wages alone increased $224,000. The department, in making an estimate, made an error in the amount required, and did not ask for even as much as had been asked the year before.

Mr. HAGGART. I may be mistaken in my recollection of the affair, but I understand that all the moneys collected by the Intercolonial, instead of being passed to the credit of the Intercolonial, go to the Receiver General. The Minister of Railways and Canals took an estimate at the beginning of the year for the total amount required for expenditure on the Intercolonial for the year. He has exceeded that estimate by $1,400,000, and, as I understand him, he has taken the money that he has collected and has paid this $1,400,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. No.

Mr. HAGGART. Then who are your creditors?

Mr. GRAHAM. As I explained, the Auditor General gave us a credit for that amount, as is the custom.

Mr. HAGGART. The Auditor General cannot give you a credit. You get your credit from the House, in the shape of a vote of what you estimate to be necessary for the running of the Intercolonial for the year. The money collected you pay to the Receiver General, and you have no right to touch it. You have exceeded that estimate by $1,400,000. I will ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), who ought to be able to explain the matter, if what I have stated is not a true representation of the facts?

Mr. FIELDING. The general principle that the money, being paid into the hands of the Receiver General, cannot be touched by the Minister of Railways and canals is correct. My recollection is that there has been an old practice, as described by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham), whereby, as this is practically a cross entry, the money coming in for the receipts and going out for the expenses, an arrangement is made with the Auditor General by which a credit is allowed. I have not had the matter before me for some time and would not speak definitely on the subject until I had had an opportunity to make inquiry.

Mr. HAGGART. That used to be the practice both in the Department of Railways and the Postmaster General's Department. But there has been a change. The Postmaster General takes a vote for the full amount required and all the receipts go to the Receiver General, the same as in the case of the Intercolonial Railway. If the hon. minister has a sanction, he has a sanction which the Auditor General has not the power to give him. You have exceeded your estimate $1,400,000 and you have paid it out of amounts which were not at your disposition and over which you had no control.

Mr. FIELDING. As regards the increase in working expenses over the estimates, you cannot estimate in advance what the working expenses of the Intercolonial Railway are going to be. That will depend on the volume of business. The minister would naturally ask the largest estimate and the Finance Minister would say to him: The volume of business may not be so large, you must be content with a less vote, and come at the end of the year for the balance. That is precisely what happens with the Intercolonial Railway. In any special work, there ought to be an estimate which would guide the House, but no one can estimate in advance what will be the expenses of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the original vote?

Mr. GRAHAM. $7,600,000. That is considerably less than what was estimated the first twelve months. It struck me that possibly, in making the estimate, they might have gone on the basis of the previous fiscal year which covered only nine months.

Mr. FOSTER. What was spent the preceding year?

Mr. GRAHAM. Something over $8,000,000.

Mr. HAGGART. It is only a matter of bookkeeping.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, it is much better to take the full estimate. I shall try and do that in the main estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope my hon. friend will do it for another reason. It is a bad habit to get the Auditor General into, that of making appropriations, for that is what he is really doing. Parliament, after discussing the whole matter, gives the minister $7,600,000. That is what he asks for. Then in the latter part of the year, the Auditor General comes in and says: I do not care about parliament, I am going to make an appropriation myself, and I will give you $1,400,000. You cannot keep an Auditor General up to his duty if you allow him to do things like that. Here is the Marine Department which wants some money. The Auditor General says: You have no appropriation out of which to take it; you may take it out of such and such an appropriation, if you promise you will get a vote of the amount from parliament later on. The Auditor General has no business to do that, and if he does it in one case, the way is open for him to do it in every case. I hope that the minister will take a vote for really what he wants and have no Auditor General make an appropriation for him afterwards.

Mr. GRAHAM. In fairness to the Auditor General, I ought to say that a large portion of the $1,400,000 is not due until the 15th of April. We shall have the appropriation for March, which is over half this amount, before we get the money.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, the $1,400,000 has to do you up to the 31st March. What money you get for next year you cannot take and use to pay this.

Mr. FIELDING. With reference to the Intercolonial Railway, whatever the department has been doing it, has been following the old practices.

Mr. HAGGART. But we got out of that and got into a new one.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not saying that we ought to keep to the old practice and not change, and now that my attention has been called to it, I shall make it my business to see the Auditor General about it.

Lachine canal—staff, $15,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. The amount estimated was based on the opinion that the operating staff would be reduced about one-third, and we expected that the electrical machinery for the operation of the lock gates would enable us to do that. We have not got that machinery to work yet and have had to retain the staff.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the staff not been paid?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is to pay the staff.

Mr. HENDERSON. Have the men been living without their wages?

Mr. FOSTER. Evidently they have.

Statistical officers—salaries and contingencies.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. $ 5,500

Additional to persons employed permanently in the public service, and remuneration to any other persons for services rendered for, and in connection with, passing vessels through the canals of the government of Canada

| | |
|---|---|
| from midnight on Saturday to midnight on Sunday, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.. | 4,500 |
| | 10,000 |

Mr. GRAHAM. A considerable portion of this is due to the fact that we employ an agent to collect our rents in Montreal and pay a commission of 5 per cent. That is the most practical way of getting the rents collected promptly. The other item is largely for Sunday work.

Mr. HAGGART. Was that vote exceeded ? You had a vote for that work.

Mr. GRAHAM. That estimate was exceeded by $4,500.

Mr. FOSTER. When did these men stop their work ? They have not been working through the winter. The canals close, I suppose, about the 1st November. Have these men been out of their pay four months or have they been paid ?

Mr. GRAHAM. These men have been paid. That raises the question again of paying contingencies out of some other fund than a special vote. I do not like the practice myself.

Mr. FOSTER. Out of what fund was this paid ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I shall get the information, but my opinion is that while perhaps there may be some cases where this has to be done we should stick as closely as possible to paying money only out of the special votes for each purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. I would strongly urge the discontinuance of the practice. The minister cannot expect to have an honest department if he educates them to take funds out of one vote and use them for another purpose. I hope the minister will stick to his ideas as otherwise the discipline of the department is utterly ruined.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think it would be far better to take a larger vote than we need.

A question was asked the other night in connection with the amount of rolling stock purchased out of revenue. Up to December 31, 1907, the amount of rolling stock purchased out of revenue was :

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 160 | 60,000 lbs. box cars at $990 each.. | $158,400 00 |
| 130 | 30,000 lbs. hoppers at $562 each .. | 73,060 00 |
| 5 | 60,000 lbs. refrigerator at $1,590.. | 7,950 00 |
| 100 | 80,000 lbs. flats at $878.. .. .. .. | 87,800 00 |
| 9 | 60,000 lbs. stock at $900 .. .. .. .. | 8,100 00 |
| 8 | Conductors' vans at $1,640 .. .. | 13,120 00 |
| 1 | dining car.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 20,587 50 |
| 1 | sleepng car.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 19,500 00 |
| 2 | express cars at $7,000 each .. .. | 14,000 00 |
| 2 | postal cars at $8,675 .. .. .. .. .. | 17,350 00 |
| 4 | locomotives valued at $19,500 each finished this year and of which $54,400 was charged against last year's revenue and against current year.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 23,600 00 |
| | Total .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $443,467 50 |

This amount was expended for new rolling stock and charged to revenue.

Mr. HAGGART. Nevertheless the fact was that last year there was not in the return brought down a single locomotive charged to revenue.

Mr. GRAHAM. There were two as I will show when the main estimates come up.

Mr. HAGGART. In your report you do not give it.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is on another page.

Department of Public Works—to provide for the appointment of a chief clerk to the position of Assistant Deputy Minister of Public Works from the 1st of January, 1908, at a salary of $3,600 per annum, $425.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). This is to pay the salary of an assistant Deputy Minister of Public Works from the 1st of January up to the 31st of March. Mr. Hunter, who has been chief clerk in the department at a salary of $1,900, has been assigned to that position by order in council. It is proposed to fix the salary at $3,600.

Mr. TAYLOR. How long has he been in the service ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Since 1900. He is a very capable man and has been in close touch with the work of the department. It was thought desirable, when Mr. Gobeil sought leave of absence as a preliminary to his superannuation, that Mr. Hunter should be appointed assistant deputy.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this a new office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Had you a vote to establish it ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, this is the vote now.

Mr. FOSTER. But how did the minister establish an office and make a charge without having a vote for it ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He has been appointed acting deputy minister in the meantime.

Mr. FOSTER. How could the minister appoint him without a vote ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He has been acting as acting-deputy minister. Of course he cannot be actually appointed to the office until a vote is made. He has received no salary and this is to pay his salary from the first of January.

Mr. FOSTER. Has he been appointed ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He has been appointed and has authority to act as deputy minister in the absence of the deputy.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the order in council simply appoint him to act in the place of the deputy minister or is it an appointment as assistant deputy minister ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is appointed to act in the place of the deputy minister. The deputy was given leave of absence from the 1st of January and Mr. Hunter was appointed in his place to act in his absence.

Mr. HENDERSON. Why call him assistant deputy ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Because it is intended, with the consent of parliament, to create the office of assistant deputy minister.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is he not the acting deputy at the present time ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, but it is intended to have an assistant deputy if parliament makes the appropriation. I may say to the committee that since I have become the head of the department I have been convinced of the absolute necessity of having an assistant deputy minister. It is proposed to make Mr. Hunter the deputy minister upon the retirement of Mr. Gobeil from the service on the 1st of July next, and then I propose recommending that an assistant deputy shall be appointed who shall be a first class engineer, who will give great assistance to the deputy by reason of his technical knowledge. The work of the department has grown very rapidly and I am satisfied it would be to the public interest to have an assistant deputy who, as I have said, would be an engineer as well. Mr. Hunter will receive only his pay as assistant until he becomes deputy on Mr. Gobeil's retirement.

Mr. BENNETT. The department has been shorn of a great part of its former work as the St. Lawrence ship channel between Montreal and Quebec has been transferred to the Marine Department. What salary is paid to the present chief engineer, Mr. Lafleur, and will this gentleman be superior or inferior to Mr. Lafleur ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief engineer receives $3,500. With regard to the work of the department, I may say to my hon. friend that while a portion of the work has been taken away from the Department of Public Works, that is in connection with the St. Lawrence ship channel, yet the other work of the department has vastly increased in the work of dredging harbours, building wharfs, the erection of public buildings all over the country.

Mr. FOSTER. There will not be quite so many in New Brunswick now.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no reason to suppose that there will not be just as many, and I would hope possibly there will be a few more.

Mr. BENNETT. Has Mr. Gobeil's superannuation been fixed yet ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say that it has not been fixed, it is before the Treasury Board.

Mr. FOSTER.

Public buildings—Ottawa—Dominion Archives—fittings, &c., $19,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Steel fittings and contingencies make up this item, principally.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who supplied these fittings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Eclipse Manufacturing Company.

Mr. TAYLOR. By tender ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are two concerns in Canada furnishing these fittings and tenders have been called for from time to time. These were supplied by special arrangement at the price which represented the lowest tender for previous supplies. It was done by special order in council.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any real competition between these two companies ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no connection between them, competition is keen between them.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the minister take any steps to have an estimate made of the real value of these fittings ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not. These fittings were purchased before I came into the department.

Mr. BLAIN. I believe this vote is in connection with the filing away of documents. Does the minister propose to introduce Mr. Falconer to his department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I have seen no occasion yet for making any change in the mode of bookkeeping in the department. We have a very good accountant, and I am inclined to think the bookkeeping is all right.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the minister had an expert go over his department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My predecessor in office had an expert who went through the department, and he was of the opinion that there was not much chance of improvement.

Mr. FOSTER. Who was the expert ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. McKay, of Toronto. He was employed by my predecessor to look over the bookkeeping in the department, and generally to see if any improvement could be made. He came to Ottawa and looked matters over, and came to the conclusion that there was not much room for improvement. He made no charge.

Mr. BLAIN. How does it happen that a Toronto gentleman was not able to look over the other department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend will have to ask me something easier than that, I was not then in charge of the department.

Ottawa new departmental and justice buildings on west side of Sussex street—compensation to David Ewart, chief architect of the Public Works Department, for services rendered as member of the board of experts appointed to frame regulations for the preparation of competitive designs by Canadian architects for the erection of the projected new buildings, look into the merits of the designs submitted and pass judgment thereon, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $1,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When it was proposed to call for designs for the new departmental buildings and the justice building, competition was invited from all Canadian architects, and a board of experts was appointed consisting of Mr. Burke, an experienced architect of Toronto, and I think president of the Architects' Association of Ontario, Mr. Chaussé of Quebec, who is president of the Architects' Association of that province and Mr. Ewart, chief architect of the department. They devoted a good deal of time to the subject, there were quite a large number of designs submitted, and after very careful examination they awarded four grades of prizes to the various competitors. We have thought that it would be right to pay Mr. Ewart for his services, which were entirely extra and outside the ordinary duties of his office, services which were performed largely at night after office hours, and this amount of $1,500 would be his proportion of the bill which the board sent in.

Mr. KEMP. Are the government going to adopt any of the designs furnished by the architects referred to ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not decided. There were four prizes, and the successful competitors have received their prizes.

Harbours and rivers—Red river, Manitoba—improvements at St. Andrew's rapids, $62,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief reason why this amount is required to be placed in the supplementaries, is that some time ago, shortly after I became minister, representations were made to me that it was very desirable that the work on this lock and dam at St. Andrew's rapids should be hurried along with all possible speed, because it was represented that just as soon as these improvements were completed they would be of enormous advantage to the city of Winnipeg. I need only mention one advantage, it would enable the city to obtain its fuel supply from Lake Winnipeg, along the shores of which there are vast quantities of wood, and it would make a great difference in the cost of wood fuel to the people of Winnipeg. It was also represented to me that if a change were made in the material from granite to concrete, by covering the structure with a temporary roof and heating it the work of laying the concrete could proceed all through the winter. After going into the matter carefully the chief engineer was of the opinion that far from adding to the cost of the work, it would really reduce it. So we made that arrangement, and the work of construction has been going on during the present winter very satisfactorily. This amount is required to pay for the work up to March 31. There will be quite a large item in the main estimates.

Mr. KEMP. When was this work commenced ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was started several years ago but the present contract was let to the firm of Quinlan & Robertson in October, 1906.

Mr. KEMP. Who were the contractors who were on the work previous to that time ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Kelly Bros., of Winnipeg.

Mr. KEMP. Why was the contract transferred ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know all the details. Perhaps it would be a long story, but the work did not proceed satisfactorily and certain arrangements were made by which it was taken off their hands. The contract was given to the firm of Quinlan & Robertson, of Montreal, and since that time they have pushed the work forward with very great rapidity and satisfaction.

Mr. KEMP. I understand that Kelly Bros. are very large contractors, that they built the Winnipeg and Vancouver post offices.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, they are experienced in the building line, but not in work of this character.

Mr. KEMP. The idea that prevails is that the contract with Kelly Bros. was a more advantageous one for the country than the other one.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Kelly Bros. received the contract several years ago and a settlement was made with them. The claim that they put in was submitted to the board of arbitrators in the department, they were settled with and a new contract was given to the present firm. I cannot say as to which would be the more advantageous, looking simply at the amount of the contract, but the report of my engineers is that nothing could be more satisfactory than the way the work is now being performed.

Mr. KEMP. When the main estimates come down I would like to inquire why the contract was transferred, and I would be obliged to the minister if he would get all the information on this subject.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will be very glad to.

Mr. KEMP. May I inquire also how many tenders were received at the time the contract was awarded to Kelly Bros., and who the tenderers were ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend will let that stand, there is a large amount in the main estimates and when they come up I will get the information for him.

New Brunswick.

| | |
|---|---|
| St. John—quarantine station on Partridge island—water service, additional amount.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $6,200 |
| St. John—Dominion buildings—improvements, repairs, &c.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 1,200 |
| St. John—quarantine station on Partridge island—compensation to Harvey Ring in full of all demands for losses sustained in connection with his weir fishery near the inner side of the Negro point breakwater, as a result of the dredging performed for laying a water supply pipe from the main land to Partridge island .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 2,400 |

Mr. DANIEL. What will the whole cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $54,980, inclusive of maintenance during the fiscal year.

Mr. DANIEL. What does the minister mean by maintenance ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The service will have to be maintained. The total estimate for balance for water service in connection with Partridge Island is $6,200.

Mr. DANIEL. Was there not a big leak discovered there last season ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, this includes that.

Mr. DANIEL. What was the damage done to Mr. Ring's weir fishery ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In laying the water pipe between the mainland and Partridge Island, it passed right by a weir which Mr. Harvey Ring had there, and by the laying of the pipe his fishing station was damaged and he suffered loss in respect to it. He made a claim of $2,500. The matter was very carefully investigated by Mr. Valiquet, engineer of the department, who went to St. John, took evidence under solemn declaration, reported the loss of $2,400 and recommended payment of it. This item is for the purpose of paying the claim.

Quebec—Montreal—pneumatic postal station—preliminary work, &c., $2,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the whole cost of that to be?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a little difficult to say what the total cost will be for the reason that we have the pipes on hand. The plan of establishing a pneumatic station was abondoned, we have the pipes on hand, the department owns a lot of land in Montreal and this $2,000 is needed to pay $1,000 to Mr. Perreault, balance due for preparing plans and sketches, and the other $1,000 is for the purpose of erecting a shed on the lot of land that is owned by the government in Montreal. We have thought it a more prudent thing to do that than to continue paying rent.

Mr. KEMP. What is the total amount paid Mr. Perreault?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Perreault was paid $7,000 altogether and this $1,000 will make $8,000 as the total amount paid to him.

Mr. FOSTER. What for ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. For his services in drawing plans and making all the preparations for going ahead with this work.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then you have abandoned the work ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It has been abandoned.

Mr. TAYLOR. Got the pipes and then discovered that the thing was no good.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot quite say that. It was thought it would be perhaps too costly to make it advisable to carry it on. At all events, the view of the department was that it would not be desirable to carry out the proposed arrangement. We have the pipe on hand and we hope to dispose of it at a very fair price.

Mr. BLAIN. What has been the total expenditure on this pneumatic station ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sorry to say it is quite considerable. The total expenditure is $64,102, but that will not represent the total cost to the country because we have the pipe on hand which will be disposed of, and we have a site in Montreal which no doubt we will be able to sell to good advantage in the near future.

Mr. FOSTER. Whose scheme was this ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was inaugurated when Sir William Mulock was Postmaster General

Mr. BLAIN. What did the site cost and what did the pipe cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site cost $37,000; the pneumatic tubing cost $11,610.88. The cost of the site will not be lost and I should think the tubing will be worth substantially what it cost. We have several inquiries for it.

Mr. HENDERSON. If some other person could make the system practical why not the government?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It can be used for water pipe.

Mr. MARSHALL. What is the size of the pipe ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Ten-inch.

Mr. MARSHALL. When was it purchased ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. 1904.

Mr. KEMP. It wont enhance in value by holding it; why not sell it ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have several tentative offers for it and I think we will be able to sell it soon.

Mr. TAYLOR. Did you ever offer it to Strubbe ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the pleasure of knowing him.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps Merwin would buy it from you and work it off on the Minister of Marine.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am thankful for those suggestions.

Mr. BLAIN. Is this system in operation in other cities in Canada ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am told not.

Mr. LEMIEUX. When Sir William Mulock was Postmaster General he thought the pneumatic system could be adapted to Montreal and Toronto, but it was found the expense would be greater than the advantage and it was decided to adopt the decentralization post office system which has proved satisfactory. The pneumatic system is a success in London and Paris but Montreal and Toronto are not yet large enough for the luxury.

Mr. FOSTER. What became of the automobile service ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. That was only under trial.

Mr. FOSTER. That was another Mulockian idea.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Sir William Mulock had many good ideas.

Mr. BENNETT. His best idea was to get out with a good job.

Mr. BLAIN. How much was expended on the pneumatic system in Toronto ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The pipe was purchased for both cities. There was no site purchased in Toronto .

Ottawa post office, $1,250.

Mr. KEMP. What was expended on this post office ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The expenditure from the 4th of January, 1904, to the 1st of March, 1908, was $218,113.38 which includes remodelling the interior fittings and putting in the passenger and freight elevators.

Mr. TAYLOR. You could get an entire new building for less money.

Edmonton public buildings, $30,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What will be the total cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total probable cost is $285,785.67, which includes cost of site and building, heating, electric wiring, furniture, &c.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the material ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Partly stone and partly brick; it will be a very fine building.

Mr. FOSTER. Do the other public departments, besides the post office find accommodation there ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

British Columbia—Fernie—public building, $10,500.

Mr. FOSTER. How much will this building cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The architect's estimate of the total cost of the building, including heating, electric wiring, lock boxes, &c., is $66,261.96.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the population of Fernie ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the memorandum prepared by my clerk, that is left blank. But, to show that this is an important place, I may say that the money orders issued last year were $140,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the postal revenue last year ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was $6,613.98.

Rents, repairs, furniture, heating, &c.—Ottawa public buildings—telephone service, $2,500.

Mr. KEMP. I see that the total vote for rents, repairs, furniture, heating, &c., is $164,100. That seems a tremendous amount for a supplementary vote in a service in which there is not much change from year to year. What was the total amount voted?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say that there will be an item in the main estimates under this head, and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kemp) will intimate what he desires to know, I will get the information before that item is taken up.

Mr. KEMP. I want to know why the minister cannot get nearer to a correct estimate for this service than to require a supplementary of $164,100 ? What was the amount voted last year ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In order to give that, I should need to go through the separate items. But I may give an illustration. Take this first item of telephones. There was a vote of $12,000 by parliament for the rental of the Bell Telephone Company's authorized connection. As a matter of fact, the cost of 349 telephones was $14,082.25, with extra telephones in the House of Commons bringing the amount up to $14,500. We know that the demand for telephones is increasing.

Mr. FOSTER. What class of employees are allowed telephones ?

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. gentleman would give those in private houses, that would be an explanation. Down to what grade of clerks are they allowed telephones in a private house ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I find none below secretary.

Mr. FOSTER. Any in the houses of messengers ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not in the Public Works Department, but if there is any that the hon. gentleman has in mind——

Mr. FOSTER. Try the Marine Department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a telephone in the office and residence of the minister, the office and residence of the deputy, the office and residence of the private secretary, the office of the accountant, the office of the assistant chief engineer, the office of the messenger, but not in the house, the office of the clerk of supplies, the office of the fisheries exhibit, the office of the minister in the House of Commons, the stores branch, the accountant's branch, the correspondence branch, the Commissioner of Lights, the fishing bounties office, the residence of Mr. Venning—that is all.

Ottawa public builings—repairs—improvements in ventilation and lighting, furniture, &c., $40,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Why such an advance ?

Mr. BENNETT. What is the big item ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total expenditure for 1907-8 is $215,000 ; the appropriation is $175,000, leaving this balance of $40,000 to be provided for by supplementary estimate.

Mr. KEMP. So, you did not come within 25 per cent of the amount necessary? To go back to another and smaller item in this general vote, the vote for heating of the Ottawa Public buildings, including salaries, of engineers, firemen and watchmen, $8,000 ; it seems strange that the department cannot estimate to within less than $8,000 what it costs for men to take charge of the heating of this building. When the main estimates come down, will they be as much less than the amount required as those of last year seem to have been ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I hope the officers of the department have figured with sufficient accuracy that they will not require too large a supplementary vote for the coming year.

Mr. BENNETT. How much of this $40,000 is for furniture ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the memorandum before me, furniture, including carpets, is only one item of the general amount for supplies, including lumber, paints, oils and so on. This item amounts to $7,745.61, but the amount for furniture is not given separately.

Mr. MARSHALL. I would like to ask how many engineers and firemen are employed and how much you are paying them per day ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. When we come to the main estimates, I shall have that information.

St. John, New Brunswick—harbour improvements, $330,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was a vote of $150,000 last session for the purchase of a dredge to carry on the work at St. John. The dredge was not purchased but contracts were let after tenders were called for.

Mr. BENNETT. Who has the contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are two contracts —the Dominion Dredging Company and G. S. Mayes. There will be another amount in the main estimates on which we can discuss this.

Mr. BENNETT. Is Mr. Gordon Stewart the secretary-treasurer of the Dominion Dredge Company ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. I think he is the president.

Mr. BENNETT. Is he not a son of one of the members for Ottawa ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That I could not say.

Yamaska river dredging, $20,510.

Mr. BENNETT. Who has the contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. W. J. Poupore & Co. The work is done at schedule rate, $5 per cubic yard for rock and all other materials ten and a half cents per cubic yard.

Bronte dredging, $5,100.

Mr. HENDERSON. Has this work been done ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This amount has been actually done and this money is required to pay for it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is that like some other items, paid out of some other estimates ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, in my department we have not seen how it was possible to do this because each item is so distinct. We cannot take the money voted for dredging at one place and apply it to the work at another place. The contractors know that under the contract they go on at their own risk and expense after the appropriation is exhausted and in these cases of dredging and harbour work, the contractors are simply waiting for their money.

Mr. HENDERSON. What dredge did the work ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The dredge 'Hamil.'

Mr. HENDERSON. Owned by whom ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Phin was the contractor and of course he would be the owner of the dredge.

Mr. HENDERSON. How much has been spent in Bronte harbour since the government came into power both on account of dredging and the construction of piers ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $30,923.93 has been spent since the 1st of July, 1900.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does that include the lighthouse ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, that is not in my department, that is in the Department of Marine.

Tiffin—dredging opposite the wharf, $76,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a new place but one that will be heard of by and by. It is one of the Georgian bay terminals of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Grand Trunk.

Mr. BENNETT. Is this $76,500 in addition to the amount voted for Tiffin last year ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. What was voted for Tiffin ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $50,000.

Mr BENNETT. So there was spent last fall ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $126,500.

Mr. BENNETT. Will there be an item in the main estimates for dredging there ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. I have no objection to the work being done ; it is a most essential and necessary work to be done, and I hope a good amount will be appropriated, because two large grain elevators have been erected at this point ; but I hope the minister will read over the evidence given the other day by the manager of the Owen Sound Dredging Company as to the manner in which the country has been paying for thousands and tens of thousands of dollars worth of dredging in and about Midland in the last ten years. Having read that evidence he will arrive at the conclusion that the popular opinion in Midland that the country is not getting value for the money they have spent there is justified.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say I have read a number of things in regard to Midland and among other things a resolution of the town council of Midland complaining most bitterly of the criticism the hon. gentleman had made of the dredging operations at Tiffin, and alleging that the hon. gentleman had no foundation whatever for the statements he had made. I think he is aware of that resolution.

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, that resolution was passed by a town council of Midland some of whom were interested in this dredge. When I made the charge on the floor of the House that the country was not getting value for its money—and I make the charge again and the evidence given shows that some of those parties in the town council are interested in the dredge. If the minister will consult not the owners of the dredge, but some leading Liberals in Midland as to who shall be the inspector, there will be a great change in the inspectorship. The manager of the dredge himself confessed that the inspector had to rely on the reports given by the crane man and engineer on the dredge. I do not care a snap of the finger for this resolution sent in by these people who are interested as heavy stockholders in the dredge. You do not find any of these men in the town council to-day; I attended to their case and none of them are left in it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No one would be happier than myself to receive really valuable suggestions for the improvement of the service. The difficulty I find in taking suggestions from my hon. friend is that he is very extreme in his views, and sometimes I imagine he relies on imagination and hearsay rather than on fact. It may be his misfortune that this is the case. I might say to the committee that we recognize in the department that in view of the very large amount of dredging work going on in all sections of the country it is impossible to exercise too great care in the public interest and, after consultation with my deputy and the other chief officers of the department, a plan has been adopted which I think will meet with the approval of the committee and of the public. In the first place, I have sent out a notice to all inspectors that every inspector must be at his work and see every scow load go out; he must not take any one's word.

Mr. BENNETT. These have always been the instructions.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And they have been informed that any failure to perform their duty in that respect will result in instant dismissal. In addition to that we are sending a form of solemn declaration to which every inspector must depose when sending in the return showing his hours of work and swearing that he has a personal knowledge of every scowload sent out. These I think are proper precautions. While I do not think there is very much to justify the criticism of my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) yet we have felt it would be desirable to take these precautions and any others that may be of value.

Mr. TAYLOR. That has been brought about by the member for Simcoe.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not prepared to say that at all.

Mr. BENNETT. Since the minister has said there is nothing to justify my statement I would point out that I started in to prove in the Public Accounts Committee this year that the owner of the dredge appointed the inspector and I proved it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In what case?

Mr. BENNETT. In the Penetanguishene case where Gendron the inspector swore that in addition to swindling the country out of $200 he divided one half the fees of a man who was never there, he was appointed by Dr. Spohn, the president of the company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not understand Gendron to say anything of the kind.

Mr. BENNETT. The evidence is printed and his sworn evidence is that he was appointed by Dr. Spohn.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He was appointed by the department.

Mr. BENNETT. On the recommendation of Dr. Spohn. What is the good of quibbling about it ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The moment the fact came to the knowledge of the minister that Gendron was not personally in attendance upon the dredge and watching all scowloads that went out, he was dismissed; my hon. friend knows that.

Mr. BENNETT. That shows how little the minister knows about it; that was not the reason of his dismissal. Another man was on one dredge and Gendron on the other. The other man was paid by the department $3 a day for looking after the dredge and was not here at all as he admitted under oath in that committee. When the matter came up last year the Minister of Agriculture was acting as Minister of Public Works and he said Gendron would be dismissed for his connivance at the theft and I will do the Minister of Agriculture the justice of saying that he carried out his threat and the man was dismissed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He was dismissed.

Mr. BENNETT. Surely.

Mr. PARDEE. As soon as the department knew what he was doing.

Mr. BENNETT. That is correct, but it all goes to prove my former statement that Gendron was not only deliberately putting up a fraud on the department and conniving with the other man but that he was practically the manager for this company.

Mr. PARDEE. No.

Mr. BENNETT. Why, there was a stack of cheques in there to show that he kept the time of the men, but you can never make any man in that part of the country believe that any of these scows were ever half filled. The public won't believe it; and I invite the minister or any other gentleman to go up there and I will discuss the question with them in any of those towns along the front where it is alleged they have been filled. Leading Liberals in the town of Midland have pressed me to bring this matter before the department. So far as this inspector at Midland is concerned, he is too insignificant for me to notice. If the department wants to keep him on there they can, but I have done my duty in the matter.

Mr. HENDERSON. The minister has expressed a desire for information respecting dredging. I would say to him with reference to the dredging at Bronte in the county I have the honour to represent, that before he does any more dredging or spends any more money in that harbour, I would advise him to have a competent person look into the situation and see if the expenditure can be justified. The minister says that since 1900 the sum of $30,923 has been expended on this harbour. I have no hesitation in saying that almost the whole of that money has practically been thrown away, there was no great call for it. I have admonished every Minister of Public Works since 1900 that such expenditure was uncalled for, and I am of the same opinion still. Only a few days ago I made inquiry of a resident of Bronte how many vessels came in there during the past year, and he told me there was one vessel with a cargo of about 500 tons of coal. Apart from that, there were possibly two or three stone hookers ; the other vessels that came in were fishing crafts, 18 to 20 feet long, which could have come in without any dredging. The money sepnt on dredging last year, I am satisfied, was of no material benefit to the public. I was at Bronte while the dredge was working there, and I think they were simply dredging out mud to fill in time. That is the opinion of the people there, they were simply putting in time to earn money for the dredge, but it was doing no permanent benefit for the harbour. Now I say in all sincerity, although the money has been spent in my own county, that it has not been expended on my advice. I did not recommend it. When Sir Wm. Mulock was acting Minister of Public Works I did say that a small sum of two or three thousand dollars might be spent to advantage in improving the harbour for the benefit of the fishing trade; but beyond that I have never approved of any portion of this expenditure. I do not like to see the money of the country thrown away in that manner. A continuous expenditure of that kind is a mistake, and I am satisfied the minister will not be doing justice to himself or to the department if he continues that expenditure.

There is no trade there, there is no probability of any increase of trade; consequently looking to the future, there is nothing to be gained by expending money further on this small harbour.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not propose to submit to contradictions as to the evidence. An opportunity will be afforded me when this evidence is reported from the Public Accounts Committee, and I will then deal with it in connection with dredging.

Point Edward—dredging, $10,300.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does the minister make his dredging contracts by scow measure?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There have been some instances where the measurements are in situ, but I think in the great majority of cases they are scow measure.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In preparing a contract for excavating by measurements in situ it would be necessary to have very careful and costly survey made first.

Mr. J. D. REID. In the Department of Railways and Canals the opinion of engineers is that in situ is the only honest way to let a contract, because that represents solid material. Of course when it is excavated and put in a scow a solid yard in situ would make about three yards in the scow.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, no. If we paid on that basis you would have some ground of complaint. The ordinary expansion is recognized as from 25 to 33 per cent. They always charge more per cubic yard in situ.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then look at the position the government is in, for they generally choose for inspector a shoemaker or tailor or something of that kind.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman is too imaginative. Since I have been in the department, I have noticed on the part of the deputy, and the acting deputy, in the case of every inspector who is named to do a particular work, that great care is exercised to learn if he is qualified by experience, judgment and capability to perform the duty to which he is assigned.

Mr. ALCORN. I think that this rule goes very far to sustain the contention of the hon. member for East Simcoe that these inspectors as a rule are people wholly unworthy of confidence.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman would not be justified in drawing that inference from my remarks. Banks have their inspectors who go around and it does not follow that the bank officials are dishonest but this is regarded as a fair measure of business precaution. Of the many officials scattered all over the country, hundreds of them suppose there should be even one who was neglecting his duty, we do not want, even in one case, that there should be any wrong-doing or impropriety. I do not think it is any reflection upon the officials that we should take the ordinary business precaution of seeing that they are performing their duties.

Mr. ALCORN. Do bank inspectors swear to their returns?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not say that they swear to their returns, but they light down on the branches at the most unexpected times. It is not because there is a belief that there is dishonesty, but it is regarded as a fair measure of business precaution.

Mr. ALCORN. The minister cites the bank inspectors case as a parallel case which it is not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is not exactly the same but is similar in principle.

Mr. BENNETT. There is a gentleman who considered that I had done him an injustice because I had mentioned his name as being connected with one of these dredging companies. I want, on this the first occasion that has occurred to me, to make a public statement in reference to him.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Whose name is that?

Mr. BENNETT. Senator McMullen. I made the statement in the House that Senator McMullen's son was either directly or indirectly interested in what is known as the Midland Dredging Company. I want to publicly state that Senator McMullen has assured me that his son has no interest in that dredging company.

Mr. FIELDING. Why should he not have? Would there be any wrong?

Mr. BENNETT. Senator McMullen's son had stock in this dredging company and the returns were so large and the scandal that is attached to it was so great that Senator McMullen told me openly that he had his son sell his stock out. Actually the returns and the scandal that is attached to it are so great that he had his son sell out his stock. They go around in the most braggart way telling that they are making 50 and 75 per cent out of these dredging stocks. Take the case of Mr. McKay, of Owen Sound, the leader of the opposition in the Local House, a few years ago he and Dr. Horsey, who was not at that time a member of this House had an old dredge worth $4,000 or $5,000. What do we find to-day? Mr. McKay and those associated with him have one dredge alone that they boast is worth over $125,000 with the scows. They boast around that they are making 75 per cent profit on that and everybody believes it. However, I only rose for the purpose of making that explanation with reference to Senator McMullen. He had heard so much of it and he was so startled by the returns of the company that he actually had his son sell out his stock on account of the odium that attaches to his being mixed up with dredging operations in the province of Ontario to-day. The minister says that he is simply taking this new method because he thinks it will be better. The minister is accepting it because he has been stirred up and there are members who have told him that the matter has to be looked into. What did the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Schell) say here?—that he was being chased around by contractors trying to induce him to go into one of these dredging companies. Another hon. gentleman told me privately, while discussing this matter, that he had been asked to take a block of stock in one of these dredging outfits and that he would not touch it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a great wonder that they are willing to let outsiders in.

Mr. HENDERSON. We are not all like you New Brunswick men.

Mr. BENNETT. That was the reason that the hon. member for Gengarry intimated that he was being invited to go into it. The minister is not accepting this new plan and going to make the inspector swear to the returns of his own volition at all. Long before the minister came into the House, dredging at Port Arthur and Fort William was being done by Whalen & Bowman and they were being paid twenty-five cents a yard for work and had the appointment of their own inspectors practically.

Mr. PUGSLEY, Practically is quite a qualifying word.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Hyman, the then Minister of Public Works, so framed the advertisement that no one else but that firm could tender for the work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not so.

Mr. BENNETT. Not so? Well, the minister had better get posted.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am posted.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister is not posted or he would not make that statement.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What was the advertisement?

Mr. BENNETT. The advertisement required that the dredge had to be in the harbour of Port Arthur at a certain date when it was impossible for an outside dredge to come in.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman must know he is entirely in error as to that.

Mr. BENNETT. I am not in error, I am correct.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have seen the advertisement.

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister is in error when he says that. The minister will hear more of this on another day. He can thank hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, myself included, for the fact that, whereas, the members of the government and the then minister never asked for tenders, and as a result they were paying 25 cents a yard, the work is now being done for 9 cents a yard. There will be more of this question of dredging before the session is over.

Mr. TAYLOR. This question will come up on the main estimates and we will have an opportunity to thresh it out, because I want to show the minister where they are paying 75 cents a yard for doing dredging and where the contractor is farming it out at 15 cents a yard. I will show it to him in the Auditor General's Report. They are paying 75 cents a yard to a man who is farming it out at 15 cents and they are paying for thousands of yards at that rate. I will not take the time to do it now.

Mr. CONMEE. I just want to correct the remarks of the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). On several occasions he has made similar remarks. They are just as false to-night as they have been on other occasions. I believe the hon. gentleman knows they are not true. What is his position? He has stated several times that the minister was forced to change the advertisement and that by reason of that the price of the work has been decreased. Let me explain to the committee how absurd that is. Either the hon. member does not know, or he has temerity enough to make, year after year, statements which have been contradicted, which he has been told are false and which, if he has the ordinary common sense that members should have in this House, he must know are false.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BENNETT. By all means let the hon. gentleman have the same license here that he has in the Railway Committee. Let him have the special license that attaches to his position and person.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The word 'false' is not parliamentary; 'incorrect' is the term to use.

Mr. CONMEE. I am quite willing to substitute the word 'incorrect' for the word 'false.'

Mr. BENNETT. Give him his ordinary license.

Mr. CONMEE. The change in the advertisement to which the hon. member alluded was from the 5th of April to the 1st of May—15 days. Now, it is claimed that that change of fifteen days caused a reduction in the price. It had nothing whatever to do with it. No dredging plant could have gone into that harbour on the 1st day of May or on the 1st day of April either and it was not necessary for them to be there. It is absurd to talk like that. Those who tender for these works do not tender because their plant happens to be on the ground. The harbour was covered with ice both on the 15th of April and the 1st of May, and it is not true to say that the tenderers could have the information if the tenders were called for at another season of the year which he could not get at the time when the tenders were called for. No one tenders on such a basis as that. What is done is that the department prepares plans and maps and drawings of the contour of the area to be dredged and these are exhibited in the department and the man tendering gets his information there and it does not matter what season of the year it is. Now as to the reduction in the price. The hon. member (Mr. Bennett) states it was because of this change in the advertisement, and that the Waddell Company put in a tender they would not have otherwise put in. That is not true. The Waddell Company did not tender for any work in that harbour until a year afterwards. I have told the hon. gentleman before and I will tell him again what caused a reduction in the price. The previous work advertised for was for bringing the harbour down to a uniform depth where there was only a light cut and other pieces of work such as entrance channels to new elevators and wharfs that had been constructed. It was what is known as patch work and not regular work of any magnitude. That class of work always commands a higher price than the ordinary work where there is a heavy bank. The minister stated at the very time to which the hon. member makes allusion, that he was only calling for tenders for that season's work, that it was his intention to call for tenders for the dredging of the Mission channel, for the widening and deepening of the harbour in sections where it was necessary to extend the harbour works, and that it was his intention to give the contractors fair notice by advertisement and to have the contract continued not for a few months but for a term of years in order that they might equip themselves with proper plant and be able to do the work at economic prices. That is what caused the difference in the price. The work that was done at the 9 cents in both harbours is a different class of work altogether. In Port Arthur it is nearly two miles from the work that was being done previously and in Fort William harbour it is several miles away. The work is of a different character entirely. They are now dredging under conditions which give them from 12 to 20 feet of a face. Every one that has any intelligence knows that class of work can be done at a very different price from the work the hon. member has mentioned. There is therefore not a scintilla of truth in the statements which have been made. The hon. member, has had this matter explained to him on several occasions and yet he repeats the same old story. If the hon. gentleman chooses to make these allusions again, for my part I suppose he will have to take the standard of his own measure in that respect.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is now 12 o'clock and I would suggest to the leader of the House, that as several of his own friends do not want to pass the estimates the committee had better rise.

Mr. FIELDING. I think I could make a better suggestion than that. I think we should pass these supplementary estimates now because they all form part of the one Supply Bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. That can be arranged tomorrow. There is no use sitting up if hon. gentlemen opposite are going to delay the business of the House.

Mr. FIELDING. Let us finish the Public Works estimates.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend from Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) is so fond of reading lectures to members on this side that I wish to point to a statement which he made the other night and which is not a correct statement. In order to try to make some political capital he said the other evening that Dr. T. F. Chamberlain, inspector of prisons and charities for the Ontario government had been dismissed by Mr. Whitney and a Conservative put in his place. The hon. gentleman stated in reply to me that Dr. R. W. Bruce Smith was a Conservative.

Mr. CONMEE. I never used the name of Dr. Bruce Smith, I do not know Dr. Bruce Smith. I made the statement that Mr. Chamberlain was dismissed and I repeat it now, and I made the statement that the inspector who comes up our section of the country is a Conservative. I do not know his name and I did not give his name then.

Mr. BLAIN. Now we have got the member for Rainy River where we want him. The member for East Lambton read from Dr. Bruce Smith's report and my hon. friend (Mr. Conmee) said it was a partisan report.

Mr. CONMEE. I repeat that now if it will do the member any good.

Mr. BLAIN. He repeats that now ?

Mr. CONMEE. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that Mr. Chamberlain was not dismissed by the Whitney government. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that Mr. Chamberlain resigned when the Ross government were in power and contested the county of Dundas.

Mr. CONMEE. That was ten years previously.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) must not try that bluff. He knows very well that Mr. Chamberlain did contest that county some years ago, but he also knows that he resigned his seat and contested the county in 1904 and I have the report in my hand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. To what item is the hon. gentleman speaking?

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) undertakes to read a lecture on truthfulness to this side of the House, and I propose to answer him. I repeat that when he makes the statement that Mr. Chamberlain was dismissed by the Whitney government, he knows well that that is not a correct statement; he knows that Mr. Chamberlain resigned and contested the county of Dundas in the last federal election in 1904, and I have under my hand the record, which shows that the Ross government paid this man a gratuity, the payment of part of it being left as a legacy to the Whitney government. And the gentleman who took his place, was Dr. Bruce Smith and was not appointed by the Whitney government, but by the Ross government. He was taken from the Brockville asylum and put into that position. I have the record here. I do not wish to take up the time of the House, but when the hon. gentleman is reading a lecture on veracity to this side, he may just as well be a little more careful about the statements which he himself makes.

Mr. CONMEE. I made my statements in good faith.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. CONMEE. No, I will not take it back. But I will make my inquiries and, if I am wrong, I will take it back.

Mr. BLAIN. I will hold the hon. gentleman down to that statement.

Saskatchewan and Alberta—Lesser Slave river—urgent provisional improvements, $6,000.

Mr. LAKE. What is the explanation of that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was a vote last year, and the work has been going on. This is an additional vote to pay for the work of the present year.

Mr. LAKE. But what is the necessity for the work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. To improve the channel by blasting out rocks, and so on.

Mr. LAKE. But what is the necessity for it? Is it for the fishing companies?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That new country, though far north, is developing. There are boats upon the lake, and this is to assist navigation.

Stanley island, Lake St. Francis—wharf—to complete payments, $350.

Mr. J. D. REID. This wharf is owned by a private individual, is it not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am informed that this is a wharf needed for the public accommodation. The Richelieu and Ontario steamers call there. The place is a great resort for tourists, and the wharf is greatly in the public interest. It may be that the island is owned by private individuals, but the wharf is public and the roads approaching it are public. I suppose it is as public a place as can be found along the St. Lawrence.

Mr. J. D. REID. There was a wharf there owned by the parties who own the hotel. And I take it that they are making lots of money out of the place. The minister might just as well say that he will build a wharf at the hotel at Gananoque.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am informed that the large steamers of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Line did not call at this island until the wharf was built.

Mr. TAYLOR. What does the hon. minister mean by roads leading to the wharf? This is on an island.

Mr. J. D. REID. The only road leading to it is the walk that leads down to it from the hotel. This is an instance of where the department is building a wharf for a private individual. The government cannot do anything with the wharf, because private individuals own the land up to the wharf. Is the government going to charge an annual rental, or will they get any revenue from the amount invested?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Reid) is evidently misinformed. My information is that the owner offered all the ground and the old wharf property and the right of way.

Mr. TAYLOR. Right of way, where from?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Down to the wharf.

Mr. TAYLOR. The way to the wharf is by water. The wharf is on an island.

Mr. J. D. REID. There is no highway, only a walk from the wharf to the hotel.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is there only one hotel?

Mr. J. D. REID. Only one hotel. The owners of the hotel own several private houses. How much has this wharf cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The appropriation for 1907-8 was $3,500. In addition to this being used by the steamers of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, my memorandum shows that this makes a harbour of refuge. It is a great protection to the small vessels navigating that part of the lake.

Mr. J. D. REID. The man who made that memorandum certainly was only trying to give the minister some excuse for having this amount voted. As to a harbour of refuge, there are islands all around this. It is not necessary to have that wharf for a harbour of refuge. Besides, the parties who own the island must have a wharf there and have always had a wharf. There has been a boat between this point and Cornwall for twenty-five years. I want to know if the government are going to get any revenue from this wharf ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I do not know very much about this matter myself, but if the gentlemen who are well acquainted with that locality desire that it be struck out, I do not see why it should not be struck out. My hon. friend from Charlevoix (Mr. Forget) is here, and he has knowledge of the operations of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company. On a former occasion, it was represented in this House that this wharf was for the accommodation of that company as well as for the general public. If it is not so, then, so far as I am concerned, I would be prepared to join my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) in moving that this item be struck out.

Mr. KEMP. Who made the representations to which the hon. member (Mr. Johnston) referred ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kemp) will look through the discussions of the estimates as reported in 'Hansard' he will find it to be as I have stated. If the hon. gentleman will say that this matter has not been discussed within the last eight or ten years, I will undertake to convince him that it has.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not care whether the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company use it, or what line of steamers may use it. But I want——

Mr. JOHNSTON. I will support you in striking it out.

Mr. J. D. REID. All right, if the minister will strike it out. But this vote of $350 is only a small portion of what has been spent. And the minister will not tell me whether the country will get any revenue out of it. It simply means that the department has given thousands of dollars to the owners of this island, who are strong supporters of the government.

Mr. FORGET. The Richelieu and Ontario Company did stop their steamers there in years gone by, to help the hotel. But for the last two years, it has been a bankrupt concern. And, besides, I think this is one of the most dangerous spots on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. J. D. REID. And it is within the last two years, when the steamers have stopped calling, that this money has been spent. And it is on the representations that have been made to him that the minister is willing to spend $5,000 or $10,000 on this work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total cost is $3,250. My information is that the steamers of the Richelieu and Ontario are calling at this wharf, and that, in addition, this is a point of transfer for people to other localities there.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is a summer resort and when people want to make little trips to Lancaster, Summerstown and other places, they have to take a ferry boat. To help the owner of this island, the government are putting up an expensive wharf. It is absurd to talk of its being a convenience to the public. My hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Forget) says that now the hotel is bankrupt.

Mr. ALCORN. Is any land required at this point for the wharf ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My information is that the old wharf and the roadway to it have been acquired by the Crown.

Mr. BENNETT. Has there been a conveyance ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot say.

Mr. BENNETT. Why, the minister has just told the House that it has been acquired. He is being imposed on by his department. His assistant handed up to him a reference to a petition presented by the town council, but anybody who has ever been at Stanley Island knows that it is nothing but a little summer resort, which belongs to a very strong Liberal party man, a Mr. McLennan, and that is the reason this wharf is being built at the expense of the country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The title to the wharf and roadway has been acquired and invested in the Crown.

Mr. TAYLOR. What right of way to the wharf ? Is it the right of way from the wharf to the hotel ?

Mr. J. D. REID. It is only 100 feet from the wharf to the hotel. The minister refuses to state whether there is going to be any revenue. Here is a wharf costing over $3,000 which is being built on private land, owned by a private party.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This wharf will stand in exactly the same position as every other wharf. When transferred to the Marine and Fisheries Department, the ordinary tolls will be levied.

Mr. TAYLOR. We have come to the foot of the page and we ought now to adjourn.

Mr. FIELDING. Will my hon. friend not consent to our voting the balance of the estimates ?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, we have done very well, and we can finish them to-morrow.

Mr. FIELDING. Evidently our hon. friends are determined to keep our unhappy militiamen out of their pay. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Some resolutions reported.

THE CIVIL SERVICE REPORT.

Mr. LEWIS. Was it fair in the Minister of Finance to give to the leading Liberal newspaper in the city of Ottawa a copy in advance of the Civil Service Report so that that newspaper got an advantage over the other press ?

Mr. FIELDING. If I had done so, there would be no wrong, but as a matter of fact I did not. No newspaper received it, so far as the government are concerned. The only copy we had was the copy laid on the table, and no newspaper man saw it before then.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That newspaper had a staff of seven people copying it here.

Mr. LEWIS. The leading Liberal paper had eight columns of the report in its issue and none of the others had.

Mr. FIELDING. That shows the Liberal paper is the most enterprising. I beg to move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.25 a.m. Friday.

---

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, March 27, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

SUPPLY—BREAKWATER AT PETIT ROCHER.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (Leeds). Before you leave the chair, I want to draw the attention of the hon. the Minister of Public Works to a return that he brought down a few days ago in reply to an order of the House. It reads as follows :

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Return to an address of the House of Commons, dated January 15, 1908, for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, orders in council, and tenders, with the names and amounts of each, in possession of the government or any member or official thereof, respecting the construction of a breakwater at Petit Rocher on the southwestern side of the Baie des Chaleurs, as detailed on page 74 of the Minister of Public Works for the year ending March 31, 1907.

I moved for that return, and the return has been brought down, and the last document in that return is dated Ottawa, November 25, 1905, and that is the last reference to anything having taken place. The order of the House says, all papers and documents up to the 31st of March, 1907. Now, if the minister had read his report he would have seen that the return which he has brought down has not complied with the order of the House, and perhaps for a good reason, because it comes up to the point just where the critical work commences. I will read the report he presented to the House, page 74 :

Petit Rocher is a farming, fishing and lumbering settlement on the southwestern side of Baie des Chaleurs, twelve miles north of Bathurst.

To afford protection to the fishing boats and vessels trading in Baie des Chaleurs, for which there is no natural shelter in the vicinity, and to facilitate the shipment of lumber, a contract was entered into May 31, 1904, with Simon McGregor, for the construction of a breakwater, consisting of a main work 209 feet long on the outer face, and a wing or 'L' placed at an angle of 74 degrees 30 minutes with the main part, 160 feet long on the outer face. The width on tip will be 30 feet. At its inner end the breakwater will be 480 feet from the shore. The depth along the inner face varies from 11 to 18½ feet at low water.

In 1904-5 a right of way 860 feet long from the public road to the shore was opened up, graded and fenced.

As I stated a few minutes ago, the last document on the file of the return is dated November, 1905.

The contract work was began on March 18, 1905, and by the end of 1904-5 two cribs, 96½ and 40 feet long respectively, had been built and sunk in place. A crib to form the remainder of the work was started on February 19, 1906, but on March 11, when it had reached a height of about six tiers, it was carried away by the ice.

I fancy, due to the fault of having appointed an inspector that knew nothing about his work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That assumption does not appear from any facts.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, that is my opinion.

It was, however, recovered on May 14. The outer section, which was intended to complete the main part of the breakwater, was found to be intact and the work on it was resumed. By the end of the fiscal year this crib had been built to a height of 19 tiers, and the two cribs sunk in 1905 had been filled with ballast and built up to half tide level, and the upper ballast floors were laid.

During the fiscal year of 1906-7, the crib forming the remainer of the main work was sunk in place and a crib to complete the 'L' was begun and placed in position.

The work is going right along, but no correspondence on the matter is brought down, not a word said. It was about what occurred then that I wanted the correspondence.

The building of the superstructure was continued on the main part up to about high water level, when two storms, on November 12 and 16, carried away nearly the whole top, the break being about 9 feet in extreme depth.

Another inspector no doubt who did not look after the construction properly, and it was carried away the second time, the first time by the ice and the second time by a couple of storms.

Work was resumed on March 7, and by the close of the fiscal year the remains of three damaged piers of face timbers had been removed, and a part of the wrecked superstructure near the southern end rebuilt, the interior being filled with ballast. The expenditure for the fiscal year 1906-7 was $5,029.60.

Now I think we ought to have something about all this in the return. It is no wonder that the civil service is demoralized, because, when he got this report and saw there were damaging statements in it, the minister says: Tear that off, and we will bring down a return up to 1905. Certainly the minister must obey the order of the House and bring down all the correspondence, not cut it off in 1905 when the order says down to the first of March, 1907. It appears by his own report that this pier had been carried away twice and either under a new contract or the old contract extended, or in consequence of the work being done by the day, in some way it is carried on, and $5,000 spent last year and not a word of it in the return brought down. I want the minister to explain why he has not complied with the order of the House.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). When motions are made for returns in my department, the practice is to send the order to the deputy minister, and from him it goes to the clerks in charge of the department from which the information is desired. In this case the ordinary course was pursued. I gave no instructions whatever to the deputy minister or to any clerk in the department, I gave no instructions as to keeping back any correspondence or any paper. I did not see what was in the return, but simply submitted it to the House in the ordinary way. I think it is unworthy of my hon. friend, when calling attention to what he says is an incompleteness in the return, to suggest that the minister gave directions to remove certain portions and to send down an incomplete return. I am very much surprised that the hon. gentleman should feel it to be his duty to make a statement of that kind without the slightest foundation, and without having any facts which would authorize him or warrant him in making such an insinuation. Although a portion of the breakwater may have been carried away by storms subsequent to 1905, it does not follow that there would be correspondence on the subject.

Mr. TAYLOR. But I know there is.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, all he would have to do at any time would be to call my attention to the fact that this return is incomplete, and I would give the necessary directions to the department to see if there was any further correspondence, and if there was, I would have it brought down. But I think it is most unfortunate that my hon. friend could not rise in his place to call attention to what he thinks is an incompleteness in the return, without making unworthy and unfounded insinuations.

Mr. SAMUEL BARKER (East Hamilton). If, in the administration of the minister's department, it turns out that works are carried away, is no inquiry made? Do they go on renewing the work, paying for it without a word being said as to whether the engineer, the inspector or anybody is to blame? Does nobody care? This is the kind of thing we read in the report of the Civil Service Commission. Surely the hon. gentleman does not mean us to suppose that where works are carried away he is not called on to take action. If no inquiry is made in such a case to ascertain whether an official of the department is at fault surely the money of the country is not being properly looked after.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Who suggested that there is no inquiry? I made no suggestion of that kind. Whenever information comes to the department that a work has been carried away, instructions are at once given to the resident engineer to make a full inquiry and report.

Mr. BARKER. These instructions should be on the return.

Mr. PUGSLEY. These instructions would not form a part of a return or correspondence.

Mr. BARKER. Certainly they would.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all. The chief engineer would give his directions to the resident engineer. I do not understand that upon an ordinary motion for a return the directions which are given by the head of the engineering staff to the resident engineer would be included. If my hon. friend desires those instructions that would be a different matter altogether ; If there is any further information my hon. friend would like I would be only too happy to ascertain if it is in the department and to bring it down as a supplementary return.

Mr. J. D. REID. I want to make a somewhat similar complaint. One document, the most important of all, was missing from a return ordered to be brought to that committee with reference to the purchase of the boat 'Catherine C.' When we ask for a return we expect that all the papers and correspondence in connection with the matter will be brought down. That has been the custom in other departments. The incompleteness of these returns would indicate to my mind that there is something wrong in that department. On the discovery of the omission the clerk of the Public Accounts Committee communicated with the Public Works Department and a clerk from that department came over and told me that search would be made for the missing document. The minister snould see that these returns are complete, as matters stand there is no doubt in my mind that for some reason or other the Public Works Department does not want to produce these documents.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is the first intimation I have had, from my hon. friend or any one, that any document in connection with the purchase of this vessel had not been produced. I repeat that the instructions to the deputy minister are to produce all papers on the file of the department called for by any motion, either of the committee or of the House. I shall have a search made for the document if my hon. friend will furnish me with a memorandum.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. LAKE. I would ask the Prime Minister when we may expect a return to an address ordered by the House on the 19th of February last asking for a copy of the memorial passed by the legislature of Saskatchewan in regard to the validity of the Autonomy Act and correspondence relating thereto.

I would also call the attention of the Hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) although he is not present, to three returns which have been ordered by this House which I would very much like to see brought down. These returns relate to the disposal of Dominion lands ; one was ordered on February 19, and two on February 26 last.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

BRITISH COLUMBIA FISHERIES COMMISSION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries whether the commission appointed to inquire into the British Columbia fisheries has made a report and if so why that report has not been submitted to parliament. The information which comes to me is that the report was made in November last, and that for some reason which I cannot appreciate it has remained in the Archives of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries Department ever since.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). The report was submitted to me some time ago and it has been ordered to be printed. It has probably been printed by this time and the moment it is received from the printer I shall lay it before the House.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE REPORT.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have been asked by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington), who had to leave for Toronto last night, to inquire why the report of the Public Accounts Committee with respect to the Ross rifle has been so long delayed ?

COST OF NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know whether all the information embraced in my question with respect to the cost of the National Transcontinental Railway is covered by the motion for the papers. My question on this subject was dropped at the suggestion of the Minister of Railways. In dropping that question I did not wish to be understood as withdrawing my request for all the information covered by the question, and therefore I trust the hon. minister will see that the return brought down covers not only the formal terms of that return, but everything embraced in the question as well. I would like the hon. gentleman to be prepared, when his main estimates come up, to give very thorough information to the House with regard to the cost of that road up to the present, and an estimate, as far as possible, of what the entire cost of the road will be.

ADDITION TO HOUSE OF COMMONS—ALLOTMENT OF ROOMS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is any arrangement or allotment being made in respect of the rooms in the new wing of this building ? If that matter is being dealt with I would suggest to the government before any final conclusion is reached that it would be only fair that gentlemen on this side of the House should be consulted a little as to the nature of the arrangement ?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). I expect very shortly to look the rooms over in conjunction with Mr. Speaker, and after that I shall be very happy to have communication with my hon. friend with regard to their allotment.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this a matter for the Minister of Public Works or for this House? As I understand this addition is intended to add to the capacity of this central building which is largely at the disposal and for the convenience of the work of the House. It seems to me that whilst the Minister of Public Works is the builder thereof, the disposer of these rooms should be the Speaker acting for both sides of the House, and that before any cut and dried arrangement is made by any person else the House itself should be consulted I would like to know what is really going on, whether a large number of rooms is being provided and if it is proposed that these rooms shall be placed at the disposal of members of the House. Are we going into an arrangement of having elaborately fitted up rooms in large numbers for members of the House and all that follows ? Some statement of the policy to be pursued, I think, ought to be made. It seems to me that the Speaker is the proper person to make that or some one connected with the House itself.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is aware that the Minister of Public Works has always had charge of these matters. I agree with my hon. friend, however, that the Minister of Public Works has no more power in this matter than anybody else. He has more power, but technically the House itself can dispose of these rooms as to it seems best. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), however, has stated that he intends to consult with Mr. Speaker with regard to the disposition to be made of these rooms, and I have no doubt that the arrangement that is come to will be quite satisfactory.

GEORGIAN BAY FISHERY COMMISSION.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) when the report of the Georgian Bay Fishery Commission, of which Mr. Birnie is the head, will be brought down and printed ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think that report has been sent to the Printing Bureau to be printed and it will be brought down afterwards.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Public Works—chargeable to income—land and cable telegraph lines, Gulf of St. Lawrence, maritime provinces, Cape Breton Island telegraph lines—Meat cove, North Sydney, Port Hawkesbury section, extension of Grand river station, Loch Lomond branch line to Enon, $400; North Sydney, Scatarie section—improvement of, $600; $1,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the Minister proceeds I would like to say that as we are endeavouring to run over these items somewhat hurriedly in order that the public service may not suffer, we understand that any item, or any subject included in these items, may be discussed later on under the main estimates even although it should not be quite relevant to any subject embraced in the main estimates.

Mr. FIELDING. Quite so, if not discussed now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If not discussed now or if not duscussed fully now

Mr. FIELDING. I quite agree to that.

Public Works—miscellaneous—gratuity to the widow of the late Captain Thomas O'Leary of the government cable ship 'Tyrian,' accidentally killed November 28, 1907, in the Intercolonial Railway yard at Halifax, $1,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of that ?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). The only vote that is larger than the usual gratuity to employees is that providing for a gratuity to the widow of the late Captain Thomas O'Leary. Captain O'Leary was in a very responsible position and had been for a great many years Captain of the cable ship. When going to his vessel and when passing over the railway at Halifax, some cars which were standing were suddenly shunted back and he was killed. He leaves a large family and the government after very careful consideration thought it would not be unreasonable to allow the widow and family $1,000.

Mr. FOSTER. The other gratuities which are provided for here are paid in consequence of natural deaths ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. How much is paid to architects employed outside of the regular staff ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are very few architects employed out of the regular staff.

Mr. J. D. REID. Have you any idea how much is paid ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could not tell my hon. friend, but it is not very much.

Mr. J. D. REID. $5,000 or $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Probably not as much as that.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the department been in the habit of paying gratuities to the widows of deceased officers ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. The rule is that in the case of employees a gratuity equal to two months' salary is allowed when the husband dies in the employ of the government.

Graving docks—maintenance and repairs, $8,000.

Mr. FOSTER. How comes that amount to be necessary ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. These are repairs to the docks at Esquimalt, Kingston and Levis. There are receipts from each of these docks, but this is the balance which is required to pay for repairs during the present year.

Mr. FOSTER. Have the repairs been paid for ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Telegraph line—land and cable telegraph lines, Lower St. Lawrence and maritime provinces, $15,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is to be done with this money ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Constant repairs are required in connection with the cable and telegraph system.

Mr. FOSTER. There is not very much food for us in that information, but I suppose we cannot expect a full meal on the supplementary estimates. When the minister brings down his main estimates I will expect him to go fully into that matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will have all the information when the main estimates are being considered.

Telegraph lines—Ashcroft-Dawson, $17,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the year's revenue and expenditure for that line?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to pay outstanding accounts for rents, repairs, living and travelling expenses and supplies, $5,500 ; salaries, $11,500. The total expenditure up to March, 1908, so far as can now be ascertained, is $198,141.41. The appropriation was $180,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the revenue?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will get that when the main estimates come down.

British Columbia—Cape Beal lines—to provide for the settling of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's claim for their share of the cost of maintenance, $7,800.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. J. D. REID.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Canadian Pacific Railway operate the lines and we contribute half the cost of maintenance.

Mr. FOSTER. And get half the receipts?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not sure as to that.

Mr. FOSTER. Or do we pay half the loss, which is it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have the use of these lines in connection with the Pacific cable.

Mr. BERGERON. Do we get anything out of receipts?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, but these lines are in remote places and the receipts are not large.

Militia—annual drill, further amount required, $235,000.

Mr. FOSTER. The question that arose last night over this item was as to whom the money is owed, and as to whether those to whom it is owed have been out of their money for any length of time.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). Of that amount $65,000 was over-due the previous year and paid out of the annual vote of the current year, although the expenditure was incurred in the previous year. The following are the amounts due : Appropriation over-drawn, $91,000; railway claims awaiting payment, $102,000; city corps, to pay 2nd Regiment, infantry, $9,500 ; 10th Regiment, $6,750 ; 21st Regiment, $3,500; 22nd Regiment, $3,000 ; 24th, $2,250; 25th, $2,500; 38th, $5,250; 1st Regiment, infantry, Montreal, $5,900; 5th Regiment, $3,350 ; Foot Guards, Ottawa, $1,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Have the militiamen personally received their pay?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not those I have mentioned.

Mr. FOSTER. Those are the city corps?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Mostly, Toronto and Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. How long has that money been overdue?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Between one and three months.

Mr. FOSTER. Any kick?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not serious. In the city corps the men themselves do not get the pay individually, it goes into the regimental fund and it does not matter very materially whether it is a week or two late. There is no serious inconvenience to the men.

Mr. FOSTER. How is it that $65,000 has been paid out of the current year's expenditure to pay for what was due on the previous year, instead of taking a vote ? A balance of that size must surely have been known.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This $65,000 was for railway accounts, and these accounts are sometimes slow in coming in.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it the policy of the Miliitia Department to pay out of one year's appropriations what is allowed to be overdue on the preceding one ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is not.

Mr. FOSTER. But the policy is more honoured in the non-observance of it than the observance ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, this is the total amount out of a total vote of nearly a million.

Mr. FOSTER. Then we want to know how it is that the minister has overdrawn by over $91,000. On whom did you overdraw ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. On the general credit given to the department.

Mr. FOSTER. In this case again the Auditor General has made an appropriation of $91,000 to the Militia Department. I want to call the attention of the Finance Minister to this thing, which is getting serious. Parliament is coming to be pretty nearly a farce, so far as voting money is concerned. Last night we had an appropriation of $1,400,000 practically made by the Auditor General and now we have another. If the department is well directed, I do not see why you do not call for what you want, and do not keep to the rules.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think it is fair to admit the force of the hon. gentleman's observations, but it never has been the practice of the department to keep very strictly within the vote. When I came into office, the laches were even more serious than they are now. It seems to have been a custom that has grown up in the department not to expect the main estimates to cover the whole expenditure, but to look forward to a supplementary vote. The custom has existed since confederation. I venture to think that it is an undesirable custom, and I have attempted to put an end to it.

Mr. FOSTER. The attempt seems this year to have been very unsuccessful.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In the main estimates which I have submitted, with the exception of the item of annual drill, I expect that every dollar of expenditure for the year will be covered.

Mr. FOSTER. How much of the item of $155,000 for pay of the permanent force has been overdrawn ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. None.

Mr. FOSTER. All that $155,000 is owing?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, chiefly to the men, for a month and a half's pay.

Mr. FOSTER. When the minister is not brave enough to put in what he requires and have it voted, he runs the risk of having the army of the country——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Sometimes he is brave enough, but the Finance Minister may be stronger than he is.

Mr. FOSTER. That point will have to be settled between the two ministers. The hon. gentleman is the War Minister of this country, and he sees the gravity of this. We might be attacked at any time. The Japanese might come over, or the United States or some other enemy might send a brotherly contingent, but anyway you are a month and a half behind in paying your army I think Crowns have been overthrown for less provocation than that. What would the minister have done if they had marched up in force from Halifax, and attacked the citadel here for non-payment of dues for a month and a half?

Sir FREDERICK BOREDN. I should have called on the patriotic critic of the government to give us the money at once, and he would have done it.

Mr. FOSTER. The patriotic critic would have delivered you over to your enemies.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I may say as a matter of fact that the estimate was based on the total number of 2,800 for the permanent force, but it was found that the work could not be efficiently carried on at the different depots with that number, particularly at Halifax, and the number was increased to 3,000. Each member of the permanent force costs something like $500. Most of this amount is accounted for in that way. The force will be carried on during the coming year at the increased number.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the minister agrees that it is really too bad that they should have been kept out of their pay ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Of course I do.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the troublesome part of the matter is this. We passed all the estimates which the minister submitted and which he told us would be sufficient to drill the force for a year. Now he asks for $225,000 more. It shows that there has been bad judgment in estimating what was required or there has been some extravagance in the administration of the department. If it was known what number of men were to be drilled, the calculation ought to have come closer to the actual amount required.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think I can explain that. An estimate is made usually on the experience of previous years. We never know beforehand exactly how full the regiments will be. We provide for the usual number per regiment, but last year a larger number of men than usual went into camp. In addition, we had last year for the first time the permanent camp at Petawawa, and it was difficult to estimate exactly the cost involved. We considered 2,800 as sufficient, but we found it was not and the number was raised to 3,000 which is sufficient. We were making our first experience in carrying on the garrisons of Halifax and Esquimalt and were naturally anxious to reduce the number as low as possible. At the same time we are under an obligation to the imperial authorities and ourselves to keep those garrisons up to proper strength and we found we could not do that with 2,800 and increased the number to 3,000.

Mr. LALOR. What is the cost per man for the annual drill?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. About $25.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it a fact that ten or twelve years ago the expenditure in the Militia Department was $1,600,000 and now it is about $6,000,000?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I cannot see that answering that question gives very much valuable information. Six years ago we had no Esquimalt and Halifax to support. To-day the amount of money required to support those two garrisons is between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000. The pay of men is just double. The headquarters staff has undoubtedly been increased, for reasons I need not go into now. The strength of the militia has been increased 50 per cent.

Mr. LALOR. Is $25 per head the amount each man receives or is that the cost to the country?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is the cost of feeding, transporting and paying per man in camp.

Mr. OWEN. Is there a militia commission?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There are a great many commissions in the militia. There is a Militia Council.

Mr. OWEN. What is the number?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There are four military and two civilian members, besides the minister who is the president of the council. There is besides a secretary.

Mr. OWEN. What does that cost the country?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It does not cost anything because we simply utilize the heads of the different departments, who meet once a week to discuss the affairs of the militia and advise the minister as to what should be done.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens). Is $25 per man the cost to the country for the season's drill?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Is that the total cost?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That does not include the cost of the uniform.

Mr. A. MARTIN. If it only costs $25 to drill each man, you have a very large vote.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The militia is something like 50,000 men.

Mr. DANIEL. How many are drilled altogether?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. 44,000.

Mr. DANIEL. The minister had 9,400 more than he expected.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Probably that includes the permanent force.

Mr. DANIEL. Are they included in the annual drill?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They were this year. At Petawawa and some of the other camps, the permanent force turned out to assist in the camp.

Mr. DANIEL. They do not get anything out of this vote?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. How much do you pay each man per day?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The smallest pay is 70 cents a day up to $1 a day according to the number of years in camp. Fifty cents is really the basis, but for the first year's good conduct a man gets 20 cents extra. They practically all get it. For the second year he gets 15 cents, and the third year 15 cents.

Mr. LALOR. Does the minister contemplate anything better in the way of providing stores and taking care of the stores of the rural battalions? I have some little experience with the battalion of my own county. There is not very good provision for taking care of the rifles or uniform or stores especially where there are no armouries or drill halls. Might I take advantage of this opportunity to remind the minister, as I have frequently done before, of the great necessity of a drill hall in the town of Dunville.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am much obliged to my hon. friend. If he could come to my assistance in procuring the funds necessary to construct small or larger armouries generally throughout the country, he would have no complaint to make on that score. As a matter of fact the practice has been to give each captain a certain amount of money to pay him for taking care of the arms and clothing, and to provide storage. That has been the practice since confederation, and it has worked very well. But we seem to have reached a time now when something more is necessary. My own idea is, as I have explained to the House before, that in the rural districts small armouries should be built at a small expense where a company, or perhaps two companies if they were located near together, could have room at their own headquarters in which to store their arms and clothing, and a room large enough where they could have lectures and meetings occasionally in the evening. I hope that will come about, we are gradually doing it already. The particular place mentioned by my hon. friend will be considered in due course.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I would concur in what my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Lalor) has said with reference to the necessity of a proper place for the storage of arms. That is a great necessity for some of the companies in the province from which I come. I drew the attention of the minister several years ago to the fact that in my own town of Minnedosa there is no proper place where arms can be cared for. At that time they were in a room situated in the town hall, but the company had to vacate that during the last year; the town authorities notified them that they required the room for other purposes, so they were compelled to rent a room on the outskirts of the town. I understood that the room they procured has been broken into by some person or other and considerable damage done to the arms. I also brought to the attention of the minister at that time the necessity of a drill hall in the town of Minnedosa, and the minister, in order to cut my remarks short, stated that there was in the estimates of that year a lump sum for the purpose of erecting drill halls throughout the province of Manitoba. I also drew his attention to the fact that there were special sums for the erection of drill halls at both Brandon and Virden. This was in the year 1904, just before a general election, and probably that is why they were specifically put down for drill halls. Now, the town of Minnedosa has a company just as strong as the town of Virden or the city of Brandon. I have here a communication from Major Dyer in reference to the necessity for a drill hall in Minnedosa, and I will read it:

As I promised, I herewith give you a few reasons why I consider it vital that 'D' squadron, 12th Dragoons, should have a drill hall at its headquarters in the town of Minnedosa. We are the only squadron in Manitoba, with the exception of Souris, that has not one. We have a large and expensive equipment belonging to the government, which it is very difficult to keep as it should be kept, without proper quarters.

We have proved ourselves one of the most efficient squadrons in the regiment, having won the Lieutenant Governor's cup for greatest efficiency in shooting under active service conditions, each year since it was presented, and have been repeatedly commended for the steadiness and good behaviour of the men. There has never been a member of 'D' squadron in the guard-room or up before the orderly room for misconduct.

The squadron is composed chiefly of independent farmers who already make great sacrifices to make themselves efficient for the good of the country, and a drill hall here would do much towards increasing their efficiency, and would also tend to bind them more together and take an even greater interest in their work. Many of the members of the squadron who enlisted for three years have nearly got their time in, and the establishment of a drill hall here would be a proof to them that their work was appreciated at headquarters, and a great inducement to sign on again at the expiration of their term of service. Then again, almost all of the men are farmers, and their time is taken up in summer with their work, and in winter when they have the time to spare we cannot drill or instruct as the climate forbids it out of doors, and we have no place that we can drill indoors.

The building of a drill hall would also be a good advertisement, and we should be more likely to get the best men if it was in evidence.

Yours very sincerely,
HUGH M. DYER.

That I think shows the necessity for a drill hall in that particular town. The squadron is composed of 68 non-commissioned officers and men, and 6 officers, the same as in the town of Brandon. The allowance for care of arms and stores is only $80 per annum, and $5 is allowed for books, postage and stationery. I think that the damage done to the arms by reason of the storeroom having been broken into for want of proper protection, is certainly considerable. I would press upon the minister once more the necessity for a drill hall in that town. As the major truly says, that is the only town in the province of Manitoba having a militia company, with the exception of Souris, that has no proper place in which to store its arms, and no drill hall.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I sympathize fully with the views expressed in the letter which my hon. friend has read; and if I were able, I would be glad to have an armoury constructed in that town, and in all towns in similar circumstances, as soon as possible, and it will be done as soon as possible. It would take a large vote of some millions of dollars to construct even the most simple kind of building that would be suitable, if it were done all over Canada. I admit that the difficulties are probably greater in the west than in the east, because it is more difficult to get buildings in the west, and rents are much higher. But our friends there will have to be patient. At the present time we are constructing perhaps a larger percentage of such buildings in the west than in the east, relatively to the strength of the militia. As the hon. gentleman has brought the matter to my notice again I will not forget it this time, and will see what we can do.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The then Minister of Public Works promised me three or four years ago that he would have something in the supplementary estimates for the purpose of purchasing a site ; and he promised that if the Minister of Militia would recommend the erection of a drill hall he would put something in the estimates for that purpose.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Of course the work has to be done by the Minister of Public Works, although it is done on the recommendation of the Minister of Militia.

Mr. LALOR. I would ask the minister if there is being built an armoury in the town of Welland, and if so, what is the cost of that armoury ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If the hon. gentleman will let his question stand until the estimates come up again, I will give him the information.

Mr. LALOR. I can understand that the minister, probably for want of funds, has some difficulty in making all the armouries and drill halls that are needed. I want to impress upon him the great necessity for drill halls in the rural towns. I fear that so much attention is given to the city battalions that the rural battalions are being neglected. No doubt the rural battalions deserve more consideration than they are receiving. I think it is the battalions in the rural sections that we want more particularly to encourage. I know that there is a great necessity in the town where I live for a proper place in which the arms can be taken care of. The captain of the company in that town is a very efficient officer and he informs me that the amount he receives for that purpose is not nearly sufficient to take proper care of the arms, and he has himself to be at considerable expense in order to take care of them. I feel that the grants for taking care of arms of the rural battalions should be increased.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. I agree with what by hon. friend (Mr. Lalor) has said as to the desirability of having armouries in the different towns where there are militia companies organized. It does seem to me there is something radically wrong in the system. We have armouries over a large part of the country. In my own county a drill shed or armoury was built in nearly every township 30 or 40 years ago and there are three or four in ever county. Another one was built in the town of Dundas a few years ago. These sheds for a great number of years have been used only once a year for the township fair. The militia use only a small space at one end of the shed where the arms are stored; perhaps one-tenth of the shed is set apart for the armoury. The militia use the main part of the shed perhaps once a year in preparing for the annual drill at camp or something of that kind. These sheds should be used and I believe a great saving might be accomplished if a large part of the drill was performed in them.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend will observe that there is a difference between a drill hall and an armoury. There may be an armoury in a drill hall, but an armoury is not necessarily a drill hall. These halls to which my hon. friend refers were built as he says many years ago when the system of carrying on the militia training was entirely different from what it is now. Then the militia were drilled in units, under cover ; they are now drilled in camps. The rural militia and sometimes the city militia go under canvass each year, and so these old drill halls have been abandoned largely, many of them have been sold at auction and we have allowed the public to use them. The armouries of which we are talking now are small buildings which will give accommodation for arms and accoutrements of all kinds and a committee room large enough to permit the men to meet together in the evening and listen to a lecture on military subjects. There is no intention to construct any large drill halls in the future outside of cities.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Is it not a mistake to abandon the idea of drilling in these country halls? The consequence of the present system is that at the annual drills 50 per cent of those who enter the companies are men from the towns and cities out of work, generally men who are absolutely transients and who will not be in the country a year from now. I would say that not 50 per cent of those drilled in the annual camps of rural battalions are men likely to be in the country or at the service of the country if they are required. Farmers' sons at that time of the year when the drills are held are so busy that it is impossible for more than a very small percentage of the number required for each company to turn out, although these are the men who would be the most useful members of the militia. One of these men is worth 20 of the ordinary men who go to camp. These farmers' sons then have no opportunity to drill unless they can do so in these armouries in the winter when it is too cold to drill out of doors. I think it is a mistake to abandon that system, as it would enable the very men whom we desire to have in the militia to receive sufficient drilling.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Has the minister any explanation to give concerning the reported disorganized condition of the 5th Regiment in Victoria, B.C.? It seems to me to be important at this time to have some information on this subject.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We have nothing official in the department as yet. I am not officially really seized of the fact that anything has occurred there. As soon as I get the information I shall of course bring it down.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Is the newspaper report that the annual drill of the militia is not likely to be held this year correct? I have seen it stated that a certain portion of the militia will be taken to Quebec, I think 60 per cent of the militia regiments in Ontario and the eastern provinces. If this is to be done, will the cost of taking these men to Quebec be taken out of the vote passed the other day for the battlefields celebration, or will there be the usual grant for militia camps?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The plans have not yet been completed, in fact, they have scarcely been begun. It is the present idea that it would be desirable that a portion of the vote for the annual drill should be used in the transportation and mobilization of a considerable number of the militia at Quebec where they will be under canvass under the usual conditions of camp, and the duties ordinarily performed in camps of instruction will be discharged there, and of course the troops will take part in the review to be held at Quebec in connection with the celebration. I do not know how many days that will take, but whatever the cost will be it will be charged up against the vote for the annual drill and the officers of my department think that this will be a very valuable experience. The money will not be, to the extent of a dollar, taken from the $300,000 voted for the purpose of the celebration of Quebec.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Is the percentage stated correct, 60 per cent?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. About 50 per cent.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. In what way will the men be selected, by the local officers or by the department at Ottawa?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They could not be selected in any other way than by their own officers, and I think it is proposed that no one shall go who has not had at least one annual training. No absolutely raw recruits will be permitted to go.

Mr. FOWLER. Fifty per cent of the whole militia or of each company

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Of each company ?

Mr. FOWLER. So there will be skeleton companies ?

