Mr. SPROULE. What about the other 50 per cent? Will they receive their training?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As far as the cities are concerned there will be no difficulty, and as far as the rural corps are concerned, one-half the number will be pretty well up to the usual number who go to camp.

Mr. WHITE. I quite agree with my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Smith) in regard to rural regiments and the necessity of their having drill sheds. I have the honour of belonging to a rural regiment which has its headquarters at the town from which I come, and I think that the department should endeavour to at least provide a drill shed at the headquarters of the regiment. Our men have very little chance of getting any drill until they go out to camp and they are therefore somewhat handicaped, but I think I am quite safe in saying that the rural regiments, for the amount of training they receive, show up very well at the camp with the other regiments. As a matter of fact I think our men do remarkably well for the short time they are able to train. In reference to our own regiment, our men do not get more than a couple or three weeks of training before they go to camp and they generally, do just as well as most of the city regiments. Another matter which I wish to call the attention of the minister to, is that last year at the Petawawa camp there was some hitch in the arrangements for transporting the regiments. I know that our regiment, when camp broke up, was given orders to entrain at noon and I think the regiment was kept there until seven or eight o'clock at night. That simply meant that the men were left there with practically no provisions whatever and only that the officers happened to look around and get something for their men they would have fared pretty poorly.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think there is a good deal in what the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith) and the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) have said, but it is difficult for us to provide money to meet all these different suggestions. As I said a little while ago I think there should be a small armoury connected, as far as possible, with every company, or every unit, or certainly, with every two or three companies of the rural militia. A large portion of the rural militia are not situated where there are towns, and I dare say it would be difficult to get many of them together in the evening. But there should be in connection with this armoury a room large enough for a lecture room, and it seems to me that if we could have the young men brought together once a week in a building of that kind to listen to a lecture from their officers on military subjects it would be a good thing for the men and a good thing for the officers. I think a great deal of valuable information could be acquired and that it would largely meet the demand. Then, there is another way in which the point mentioned by the hon. member for Wentworth is being met, perhaps not so much in the country, but in some of the more populous sections and that is by the establishment of a cadet corps. The very thing is being accomplished by that means which my hon. friend mentioned as being so extremely desirable. Boys from thirteen to twenty are being formed into cadet companies and instructed at a time in their lives when they will be more impressed by such training and when they will likely receive such impressions as they will never forget. This is being done more and more every year, and I think the time has come when, in every school where there are boys of thirteen and up, there should be a certain amount of teaching and training of that kind.

Mr. HERRON. I would like another word of explanation from the minister on the point that has been under discussion. I think the minister said that 50 per cent of the strength of the different regiments would be in field. Do I understand that he meant 50 per cent of the full strength of the regiment or does it include 50 per cent of the men happening to belong to the regiment at the time ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Fifty per cent of the authorized strength.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence if he recollects receiving a petition from the league of western rifle associations. This is a league composed of a number of rifle associations in Manitoba and Saskatchewan organized about a year ago for the purpose of having competitions and practising, and I think they had their first meeting in the city of Brandon last year. Upwards of 100 men turned out to that competition, they were put to a great deal of expense, as naturally they would be in the first year of their organization. However, the meeting stimulated a very great deal of interest in these competitions and it is the intention this year to enlarge it. It is not their intention to meet at the same place permanently, but as other towns are strong enough to have a rifle association, the league will move around from point to point in succeeding years. It is hoped this year that upwards of 200 men will assemble for such competition, naturally they have to go to considerable expense and they have sent a petition to the minister asking that he grant them $500. I am in receipt of a letter from the president of the league asking me to lend my assistance and support to the prayer of the petition. I would like to ask the minister if he has given this petition consideration and if the request is likely to be granted.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The petition has been received, I have seen it, and all I can say is that while I sympathize very much with the desire of these men we could not very well accede to their request unless we adopted the policy generally. I think that is a thing which the local authorities have been doing in other provinces. However, the matter is under consideration. The petition came too late for an amount to be put in the estimates this year, even if we had felt that we were able to grant it, but the matter will receive every consideration.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. This is not a request from a single rifle association but from a combination of associations.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I understand that it is all over the province.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Yes, and it covers part of Saskatchewan as well.

Mr. HERRON. Will the troops from the western provinces take part in the celebration at Quebec, or has the minister arrived at any conclusion yet ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, I am afraid not. The time required to move them and the very great cost that would be entailed would scarcely justify doing so, but they will get their annual drill, of course, in camps as usual. How far it may be intended to bring representatives from every part of the west I do not quite know, but it seems to me it is probable there will be representatives brought from every corps in the west as well as from the east but not to the same extent.

Mr. FOWLER. How far west will you draw from ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Port Arthur.

Mr. HERRON. I would recommend the minister to have representatives of the western regiments of cavalry as they will show up to great advantage.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am informed just now that it is intended to form a composite regiment made up of representatives from different parts of the west.

Mr. FOWLER. That would be an infantry regiment ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. How about the cavalry and artillery of the west ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We have hardly developed the thing sufficiently to give any particulars, but the idea is to have this as a representative gathering as far as possible

Mr. FOWLER. Since we have decided upon this celebration at Quebec it may be made, if the department take the matter up in earnest, a very valuable thing for the militia of Canada. Bringing them all together will tend to incite them to make greater efforts than have been made in the past to bring the militia up to the mark, and it will be an object lesson to the country as to how quickly the troops can be mobilized, it will give not only the rank and file greater advantages but it will give an opportunity to the staff officers to show whether they are up to the mark and whether or not they are earning the money they get.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I agree absolutely with that view.

Mr. DANIEL. I understand those corps which do not go to Quebec will still have their ordinary annual drill.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Those of the west.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it the intention to take a percentage from every corps in the east, rural and urban?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. The minister made a very important statement regarding the camp at Quebec and I think the country is entitled to hear at the earliest possible moment the full details of what is intended to be carried out. I understood the minister to say there will be no annual drill for the rural corps this year.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No other annual drill.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I also understood the minister to say that the city baltalions would go full strength.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No. We will have to apply the same rule to all.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. What method of selection will be adopted? Will the department cause the colonel of each regiment to instruct his captains to select 50 per cent of each company?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The selection of course must be made by the officers subject to certain orders that will be issued, and one of which will be that no man shall go to Quebec who has not had some previous military training. It is assumed that every captain and every colonel for the sake of the good appearance of his regiment, whether it is a city or a rural battalion, will select the very best men. The department will leave that entirely to the judgment of the officers.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Is it the intention of the minister to have the cadet corps take part?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. A good many requests to that effect have been made, but I am unable to give an answer at this moment. Parliament will not prorogue next week I suppose, and there is lots of time between now and July to give the fullest information.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I desire to endorse the suggestion of my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Herron). This is a great historical occasion, and it would be unjust and unwise to entirely exclude all western representation from it. I agree with the minister that the distance is too great to bring to Quebec anything like 50 per cent of the western regiments, but I strongly urge upon the minister that he should favourably consider the request of my hon. friend (Mr. Herron) and have representation from the west. In a great gathering of this kind the inspiration that a few men will take back to the regiment would be of great benefit, and it would show the western people that they are not entirely forgotten in this great national celebration. Even if it takes more to bring the western men to Quebec that it does others, I think the people of the country would justify the expenditure.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have already said there would be representation from the west, but we have not yet been able to work out our plans. I agree with the spirit of the hon. gentleman's remarks.

Mr. BLAIN. This proposal means that 50 per cent of the men of the militia in the province of Ontario will have no drill this year.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not quite. There are some regiments with a strength of 400 which go to camp frequently with less than 200, and this year these regiments will go to Quebec 200 strong so that the probabilities are that many regiments will go to Quebec with the same strength as they go to the annual camp.

Mr. BLAIN. Will it mean that all the officers will go?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As I understand it, yes. Each company must have its captains and lieutenants. The half of the city regiments which remain at home will drill at headquarters in the cities.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it expected that this will cost more than the usual appropriation?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No. We have in the main estimates $1,000,000 for the annual drill. The sum necessary to drill the whole militia will be something like $1,200,000. I am going to reserve the right to ask for a supplemental vote for this particular item whether they go to Quebec or not. Our estimate for this expenditure is considerably less than $1,000,000 so that there will be enough to carry out the rest of the annual drill in the case of the west and in the case of some regiments which may not be able to go to Quebec.

Mr. FOWLER. Are you charged with the cost of transportation on the government railways?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Oh, yes.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. According to the explanation given by the minister it will work out that practically all the men of the rural battalions will go to Quebec.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Only half the strength.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. But the minister quite correctly says that these rural battalions are not usually up to strength.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Some are not.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Then under the scheme, practically half of a battalion will go which would be its usual strength in any case. In the city battalions the companies are practically all complete, and so in the case of the city battalions half of the men would be left at home.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, but those who do not go from the cities will get their annual drill at home, whereas the balance of the rural regiments will get no annual drill at all.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I quite understand that, but so far as the trip to Quebec is concerned it will work out as I say.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is hardly a fair way to put it.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. That is the way it works out.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We are sending half the rural and half the city militia right through and no process of logic will make anything else of it.

Mr. FOWLER. I think the statement of the minister had something to do with my hon. friend's remarks, because the minister rather overstated the case when he said that the rural corps were largely under strength. In my own province they are pretty nearly full strength in both the infantry and the artillery.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is true of the maritime provinces generally.

Mr. FOWLER. People from the big cities like Toronto and Montreal seem to think that we who represent the country have no rights in these matters.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The minister has not told us whether he has yet taken up with the railway companies and the boat companies the arrangements for the transportation of the troops. I think he should request the transportation companies to provide the most efficient service that can be rendered in a given time in order to show what they could do in case of an emergency. Experiments of this kind should be turned to practical advantage; and when the minister does take up the matter with the transportation companies, I hope he will insist upon their showing what they can do in the way of transporting troops to a given point in the shortest possible time and in the very best possible condition.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The department appreciate the importance of this matter of transportation, and the very first thing we did was to address letters to all the transportation companies to ascertain what kind of accommodation they will be able to give us. The answers are coming in now.

Mr. FOWLER. I think that is a very good suggestion. In connection with the ordinary annual drill there is a great deal of difficulty with respect to transportation. Volunteers going to camp are often kept on the trains, and not with the very best accommodation, for hours, when it seemed to be absolutely unnecessary for them to be so detained. I think this is a matter the department should address itself to at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. In connection with the camp at Niagara the same thing occurred. Men were kept waiting, I think over twelve hours, on various trains from the time they left camp until they reached their homes, where they arrived almost starved. The transportation facilities seemed to be very bad. There is a good deal of complaint in the country because of the increased amount of the annual expenditure for military purposes. I do not share in that complaint, if the money is spent judiciously. I do not care how much in reason is spent, if our military equipment is being put on a first-class basis. But it seems to me that the method of procuring the food supplies is somewhat loose. There is a great deal of variation in the prices at different camps. The common necessaries of life cost twice as much at some camps as they do at others. It seems to me that there should be some system of purchasing by which this would be prevented. I will give a few instances, as shown by a return which has been brought down. Flour varies in price from $2.20 in one camp to $3 in another, beef from 5 cents to 12·75 cents a pound, mutton from 4 cents to 12½ cents, evaporated apples from 8 cents to 33 cents, bread from 1·14 cents per pound at London to 4 cents at Aldershot.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The bread was nearly all made at Aldershot and in most of the camps.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Cheese was 9 cents at Toronto and 14 cents at Niagara, 15 cents at Three Rivers and 18 cents at Port Arthur; jam ranged at 6¾ cents to 20 cents a pound.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I suppose my hon. friend objects to the low price of jam.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. The low-priced jam is no doubt adulterated, while the specifications call for pure jam. I wish to point out the great injustice there. When a dealer tenders, expecting to supply pure jam, according to the specifications, he tenders at the price of pure jam. Another dealer, knowing that almost anything will pass, tenders at the price of compound jam, and gets the contract every time. That is not fair, either to the dealer, the poor soldier who uses the jam, or the country. The supply officer for one of these camps says in his report:

I am further directed to say that Mr. Seguin's prices for meat and groceries are considered enormously and shamefully excessive.

This was Mr. Brown's remark in regard to prices paid Mr. Seguin for supplies for the camp at Rigaud, Quebec, where bacon was charged at 22 cents per pound, potatoes at 5 cents per pound, beans at 4 cents per pound, jam at 20 cents per pound, butter at 30 cents per pound in June, sugar at 6 cents per pound, and everything else in proportion. It occurs to me that there is a lack of system in the purchase of these supplies. There is no necessity for the country paying two prices for any of these articles of food because the local grocer happens to tender on the supposition that he has a monopoly of the tendering.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The system is that in every case without any exception these supplies are purchased after public tender, advertised for two or three or four weeks before the camp. Tenders are invited by newspaper advertisement and by posters put up in post offices and public places near to where the camp is held.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Tenders are invited simply from certain people.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, posters are put up in all the public places. That is the universal system. It was done under the late administration and is done under this.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you take the lowest tender?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Always. I have in my department a gentleman who gives his whole attention to this and makes a special study of prices. I do not know what better we can do. If we do not ask for public tenders, we are in danger of being blamed; and if we do ask, we do not escape.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. The prices at Rigaud the supply officer himself said were excessive and extravagant. The government ought not to accept any tender, when the prices are excessively high.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Does any officer make an inspection of the goods purchased?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is an inspection every morning by the Army Service Corps.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How then is it that an inferior quality of goods is served to officers and men?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is not correct. That may happen in a particular case such as the one referred to by the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Smith). It seems to be difficult to get pure jam. We have had samples submitted to the department of Inland Revenue for testing, and are doing everything in our power to secure the delivery of pure goods. We may be deceived sometimes, but the goods, as a rule, are of excellent quality.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. According to these returns, two-thirds of your jam supply is compound jam, whereas the specifications call for pure.

Mr. MARSHALL. My hon. friend would lead the House to believe that compound jam is not healthy. As a matter of fact, I know it is. My hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Smith) puts up pure jam, and very good jam. We put up pure jam and compound jam. Compound jam we use in apple jelly for filling and it is just as wholesome as the pure jam.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. What am I to do when two such eminent authorities differ?

Mr. MARSHALL. I do not know anything about your tenders, but my hon. friend would lead the House to believe that compound jam is injurious. I say it is not. There are two pounds of compound jam used to one of pure. The compound jam is alright, it is perfectly good, I eat it myself. I have been eating it for twenty-four years. The minister is quite right in accepting compound jam, particularly if made by Canadian canners.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. I have no objection to compound jam but the specifications call for pure jam. A grocer who does not know, tenders according to the specifications and loses every time. But some one who does know that the compound will be accepted instead of the pure, that the supply officer does not know pure jam from compound, gets the contract every time.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The word 'compound' must be marked on the package, and if you let a contract for pure jam and get the compound, there is no excuse for accepting it, because the word 'compound' is plainly marked on every case.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister has pointed out that there is an inspection by the officers at the camp but he might go still further. They might inspect the prices as well as the quantities and quality. Take the camp at Rigaud where 30 cents per pound was charged for butter and 5 cents a pound for potatoes or nearly $3 a bushel. When a tender is so absurdly high, the government should not accept it. Very often there is collusion among the parties who tender, and they agree among themselves which shall get the groceries and which the oats and so on. That might be prevented by the government refusing to accept any tender if the prices were unreasonable.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I was not aware of this particular case of Rigaud and shall look into it. I would be disposed, in such a case, to advertise over again or go into the market and buy at fair market prices.

Mr. FOWLER. Let your comptroller look after the buying.

Immigration—further amount required for immigration general expenses, $125,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before the minister makes his explanation, I want to read him a letter that I received from a friend of mine in the west, and I want to ask him if any portion of this amount he is now asking for is to be devoted to the purpose of bringing in more Doukhobors. The letter is from Yorkton and is dated March 18:

George Taylor, M.P., Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Inclosed you will find a few facts about the way the Doukhobors live, and if you can do anything that will make the government step in and compel those people to live decent lives, the people of this province will have reason to be thankful.

That is signed by one of the most respectable men in that section of the country. It is not necessary to give his name. Here are the facts he refers to:

Dear sir,—I noticed a statement in the newspapers made by Dr. Cash and the Minister of the Interior. Now Dr. Cash knows perfectly well that the statements made are not correct as to the way the Doukobors live. Every child born in a colony by Doukhobors is illegitimate, and Dr. Cash and the hon. Minister of the Interior knows it. There is no marriage ceremony performed between a Doukhobor man and woman, there is no account of births and deaths, or anything connected with them. It is the darkest blot in Canadian history, and in the years to come the people of Canada will be held responsible if the Dominion government will import such cattle into this country and place them in the heart of this province, and then say it is up to the province to make them obey the law. I say if the government can do that, there is something wrong with the constitution. There are now forty-five villages of Doukhobors scattered over the country, and where every woman is every man's wife, you can imagine what the birth rate is. If this is permitted to continue for a few years more, we will have a pest here that wil be a hundred times worse than the Mormons. I would suggest that the only way to stamp this out is to make Peter Veregin responsible, as he has absolute control over them.

Now there is a statement I received a few days ago from Yorkton, and it is made by one of the most respectable men in that section of the country. He was a resident of my own county, and went out there a few years ago, and he writes these facts. Now I ask the minister if any portion of this vote is to be devoted to importing more Doukhobors, or is it to export them out of the country; if for the latter purpose, we will gladly vote for it. The minister has made a statement and the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Cash) has made a statement, but this gentleman who is on the ground says he knows their staements are incorrect.

Mr. McCRANEY. Has the hon. gentleman any objection to giving the name of the writer?

Mr. TAYLOR. He has written me the letter and I have read it, but he has not authorized me either to give his name or asked me to withhold it. But I will vouch for every word in that statement, and if the House will appoint a committee, I will put this gentleman in the box and he will give evidence on oath that the statements he makes here are correct; or if the government will send a committee out there to investigate, my friend will repeat his statements. I understand my hon. friend has men out there now making these people British subjects so that they will vote for him when the elections come on. And this is the class of cattle the government have imported, and paid this invisible company, the North Atlantic Trading Company, $5 a head for bringing in.

Mr. McCRANEY. I think when the hon. gentleman quotes a letter to contradict a minister and a member of this House, he ought to give the name of the writer.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all; my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) takes the responsibility.

Mr. CASH. I have only come into the House since the letter was read, and did not hear it. I did make a few remarks the other night concerning the Doukhobors, and I am ready to repeat them, I do not care what letter my hon. friends opposite may read to contradict my statements. I have heard things said about the Doukhobors, that they were guilty of immoral conduct. I wish to say that I have lived among the Doukhobors a great deal, I have been with them in a professional capacity, both in the night time and in the day time, and I am free to state that in my own district no exception will be taken to what I have said or am about to say. I have had them working in my house, both male and female, I have been with them in sickness, both in their own homes and in my home, and I have yet to see one immoral act or suggestion on the part of any of them. I know that the Doukhobors are said to have done certain things, of which I know nothing. I am only judging them from what I have seen and what I know of them. Certain thing are reported in regard to Peter Veregin's conduct. I have met him a number of times, and I have never seen in him anything suggestive of evil. I do not think I need say anything further in regard to the morality of the Doukhobors.

Mr. TAYLOR. The information is now before the government, and it is their duty to investigate it. The government are responsible for bringing these people into the country, and they should be responsible for their conduct while they are here.

Mr. McCRANEY. I come from a riding in which there are over 2,500 Doukhobors. I have heard in this House and out of it, and on a political platform in the city of Ottawa, statements made very derogatory to the Doukhobor people. I agree with what my hon. friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Cash) has said, that these statements apply to only a few of them. I am sure that no one can charge the Duokhobors as a people with immoral conduct because strange acts have been committed by some of them. The town of Rosthern in which I live is but a short distance from a Doukhobor settlement. The reputation which the Doukhobors have with us who live among them, is that they are an honest and moral living people. I noticed that the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) was very brave in making statements with regard to the Doukhobors on a public platform in the city of Ottawa, but when he was out there among them he did not say a word. No one makes that kind of statement in the west where the Doukhobors are living. Unfortunately the Doukhobors seem to have been trained in a narrow way, and there are a number of fanatics among them. An incident occurred in Saskatchewan where it was necessary for the police to take some of them into custody. There was also a number of demented people who travelled to Fort William. But I think I am safe in saying that in the west where they live, we regard these people as a good living people, and as for any scandalous conduct on their part, it is not believed in our country.

Mr. FOSTER. We want an explanation of the vote.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no intention of spending any part of this money in any way connected with the Doukhobors except it might be in connection with those who are now at Fort William, who have left the community and who at one time expressed a desire to return to Russia. The department had some negotiations with these people with a view to securing their return to Russia, and at one time it seemed likely that that would take place; had these negotiations been successful, a small amount of money would have been required, but it was not possible to carry them to a successful conclusion, and, as I have already explained to the House, as this government has no legal control or authority over these people, either to control their actions while in the country or to forcibly send them out of the country, we have to leave the responsibility with others for the present.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Has it come to the minister's knowledge that certain immigration agents working for the government in the United States are also in the employ of a land company? I have been informed that there are certain immigration agents working for the government in the United States who are also in the employ of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company and who are directing the attention of immigrants particularly to land owned by that company.

Mr. OLIVER. We have in the United States a certain number of agents who are paid salaries which are supposed to be payment for their full time and ability. I have no knowledge nor has any suggestion been made to me directly or indirectly, nor have I any suspicion that any of these men are engaged in any such transactions as my hon friend has suggested. If he has any information on that point, I would be very glad to have it, and I think I can assure him that if this is found to be the case the usefulness of these agents would not prevent their services being dispensed with. There are, however, subagents who are employed in the United States who receive a small commission on the settlers whom they direct to the Northwest. We pay these people only on results, and, therefore, we can hardly claim and do not pretend to claim control over their other means of livelihood. We pay them for the services they render us and they look elsewhere for the remainder of their income. If it is any of these people whose conduct is in question, I am not aware that there is anything for us to do, but so far as our salaried officials of the kind I have described are concerned, I certainly would not feel warranted in continuing them in our employ if the conduct mentioned by my hon. friend were brought home to them.

Mr. FOSTER. How is this money to be expended?

Mr. OLIVER. The House will be aware that last winter, owing to stress of weather and the extent to which settlement had spread out from the railroad, it was necessary to meet the extreme conditions by relief in the way of fuel and some provisions and seed. A vote was taken for that purpose, but that vote was not quite sufficient and $15,000 is required to complete that service and to pay for some service of the same character that had to be done in the same country this winter. There are people in the country southwest of Saskatoon who have gone very far from the railroads, pushing settlement. The country is absolutely treeless, there is no fuel and they have gone there expecting railroad construction earlier than it has been given them. It was represented to us this fall that unless we took some means to see that conditions did not become as they were last winter, these people would really have to come out. Therefore we had to incur some expenditure to meet conditions this winter which fortunately did not arise. The weather was so fine that the difficulties we expected did not occur, but we had to incur a certain amount of expenditure so as to be prepared for what might very well have occurred.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that to be repaid or are there any conditions?

Mr. OLIVER. The expenditure of this winter, which is very trifling, is of course simply an expenditure, because we did not go forward out of this vote and provide any seed. Last year where we did supply seed and provisions we took a lien which provided for the repayment of the money.

Further amount required for expenses connectd with park reservations (Governor General's warrant), $75,000.

Mr. OLIVER. This Governor General's warrant was taken last year in order to meet the expenses incurred in bringing the buffalo which we purchased in Montana over to Canada. We made a contract for the purchase of the herd. We understood that there were so many animals in the herd, but it turned out that there was a larger number than we had expected, and our expenses in bringing them over turned out to be larger than we expected. We did not, however, expend the whole of the $75,000.

Mr. FOSTER. There will be a vote in the main estimates for this?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes; $25,000 was expended and $50,000 remains to be carried forward into the expenditure of next year for the same purpose.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What is the whole cost of buying and bringing them into Canada? How many were there?

Mr. OLIVER. We have received 410.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. At what cost?

Mr. OLIVER. The purchase price is $200 per head and then there are the freight and general expenses connected with them.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. What is the total?

Mr. OLIVER. The contract price is $200 per head and we paid $45 per head for delivery. There were extra expenses connected with the purchase and the bringing of them over.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Who was the agent who made the purchase?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Douglas, superintendent of the Banff park, is the gentleman who made the arrangements and superintended the bringing of them over.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Is it not correct that some of the animals escaped on being detrained on their arrival at Edmonton? I happened to be at Edmonton when these animals arrived, and I understand that three or four trainloads came. My information is that some of these animals escaped while they were being taken from the train and up to the time of my leaving there they had not been caught. I would like to know how many escaped, if they succeeded in getting them back and how long they were lost.

Mr. OLIVER. As far as we are aware two escaped, their location was known and many attempts were made to get them into the park. But, I suppose the committee will understand that an aged male buffalo is not a very tractable animal to drive and they were unable to get them into the park. As they were large well grown animals with good fur and would be valuable if properly treated as specimens, one of them was shot, the hide was taken and it is intended to stuff it and keep it as a specimen. The other one which is known to be at large, it is intended to treat in the same manner if it is impossible to get it corralled. Mr. Douglas is, or has been in that district recently with that in view. We only know of two being at large and under the circumstances—my hon. friend was there and I was not—from the reports I heard it is very fortunate that a great many more did not get away because at the time of the arrival of these animals the people had gathered from all over the country to see them, the crowd was not any more controllable than were the buffalo, and between the crowd and the buffalo it is not remarkable that some of the buffalo got away. I think that everybody connected with the matter is entitled to credit because more did not get away.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Did these animals get out of the main inclosure that was made for their reception or did they get out of the kind of lane that was prepared from the train to the inclosure ?

Mr. OLIVER. My information is that they broke away when they were being driven down the temporary lane to the park Five broke away, three were recovered and two others remained out. No others, in so far as we know, have broken out of the inclosure.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The reason I ask that question is that if my information is correct the minister did not build this fence in the first place for inclosing buffalo at all. I understand that the minister set aside this as an elk preserve, that it was intended for elk and that it was supposed that the fence surrounded a herd of elk when it was built. After great expense had been gone to by the government it was finally found that no elk were in the inclosure and then the minister purchased a herd of buffalo to take the place of the elk that were supposed to be there. I would like to hear from the minister on that point to ascertain if there is any truth in the statement that was going the rounds of the west when I was there.

Mr. OLIVER. It is quite correct that the inclosure was made with the view of preserving a herd of elk which had been roaming in that vicinity for a number of years and which, unless measures of this nature were taken, would certainly all be slaughtered. I cannot say that there were any very strong hopes entertained of actually fencing in the herd of elk, but parties who were concerned in the matter have placed a bond of $5,000 with the government that they will place within the inclosure a certain number of elk in a certain time. It was under that arrangement that the fence was built. After the contract for the erection of the fence for the purpose of providing the elk reserve had been entered into the project of purchasing a herd of buffalo was entered upon, and as it was necessary to control the buffalo when they were purchased it was thought that the existence of this park at no great distance from the railway station offered a ready means for the temporary care of the buffalo. Therefore, the herd being purchased, they were taken into the elk park. An arrangement has been made with the provincial government under which the provincial government, in the interest of the preservation of the elk, are prepared to assume the expense in regard to this park.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. May I ask the minister if there are any elk there now?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say that there are. Some enthusiastic gentleman informed me they were elk in the inclosure, but I did not see them. I did not travel all over the inclosure but I had some doubts of there being any in the inclosure at the time.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Would the minister tell us whether elk and buffalo would get on well together? Are they likely to fight or create trouble one with the other?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot guarantee anything in that connection. The buffalo themselves do not get along very well together, and I presume that elk have trouble between themselves also, but I may inform my hon. friend that in the Banff park there are buffalo and elk occupying the same inclosure with, so far, no injury to either.

Mr. SPROULE. Was anything paid for these elk that you tried to fence in?

Mr. OLIVER. If the people who entered into this agreement succeeded in delivering a certain number of elk in the park they were to be paid a certain amount of money, but of course, not having delivered any elk they were not paid any money.

Mr. SPROULE. They have not been paid any money ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. We have not yet heard the total cost of the buffalo up to date.

Mr. OLIVER. The buffalo we have at present approximately cost $125,000, there are something over 400.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Was not the original contract price $100,000.

Mr. OLIVER. We paid $200 per head and $45 each for transportation for all buffalo delivered in good condition.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Was there any limit on the number to be delivered.

Mr. OLIVER. We were to have the whole herd except 10 which the proprietor was entitled to keep.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Are they all thoroughbred buffalo ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. No black Angus bulls among them ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Who accompanied Mr. Howard Douglas to Montana when the purchase was made. Did a Mr. Ayotte receive any money from the government in connection with the purchase of this herd ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to say who accompanied Mr. Douglas during his negotiations. He was compelled to visit the proprietor of the herds several times. Mr. Ayotte is an immigration agent at Great Falls, Montana, which is not distant from the home of these buffalo, and Mr. Ayotte assisted more or less, I cannot say how much, in the negotiations with the owner of the herd.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Have any moneys been paid to Mr. Ayotte for his services in connection with the purchase of the herd.

Mr. OLIVER. No money has been paid Mr. Ayotte beyond his ordinary salary as immigration agent and his travelling expenses when engaged in going to and from his place of residence.

Mr. HERRON. Are you going to receive the balance of the herd?

Mr. OLIVER. We expect, probably late in the summer, to get the whole herd with the exception of the ten.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Does the total cost given by the minister include the money paid to Mr. Lees, of Fort Saskatchewan. I observe from an answer to a question published in 'Hansard' that Mr. Lees, of Fort Saskatchewan, has been paid $7,000 and $6,800 in connection with some services he has rendered. He may not have been paid that yet, but he has tendered for some work that is to be done in connection with the park in which these buffalo are to be herded, and I wish to know if the amount stated includes the sums which are to be paid or which have ben paid to Mr. Lees.

Mr. OLIVER. The sums mentioned as being due to Mr. Lees are for the erection of a fence around this park and they have nothing to do with the payments for the buffalo.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Were tenders called for ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, tenders were called for.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. What is Mr. Lees occupation at Fort Saskatchewan ?

Mr. OLIVER. He is a lawyer.

Mr. BENNETT. How many tenders were received for the fence ?

Mr. OLIVER. The question has been asked and answered in the House already, but it may be interesting to give the information again. Tenders were called for and the following were received :—For contract A, clearing lines for roadway—Geo. A. Cranston, Fort Saskatchewan, $700 ; Wm. A. D. Lees, Fort Saskatchewan, $1,200. For contract B, furnishing and setting posts—Wm. A. D. Lees, Fort Saskatchewan, $7,000 ; For contract C, wire fencing and gates—Wm. A. D. Lees, Fort Saskatchewan, $6,800; Locked Wire Fence Company, Limited, London, Ont., $9,300 ; McGregor Banwell Fence Company, Limited, Walkerville, Ont., $9,355.10 ; J. M. Chisholm, Winnipeg, Man., $14,732. Besides the above, Messrs. Ross & Ross, of Winnipeg, tendered for the whole work at $20,341.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. What is the total cost of the fence as erected up to date ?

Mr. OLIVER. $14,500.

Mr. THOMAS CHISHOLM. What is the area of the inclosure ?

Mr. OLIVER. Sixteen square miles.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is there not some of it that does not require to be fenced.

Mr. OLIVER. There is a fence sixteen miles long.

Mr. THOMAS CHISHOLM. What kind of fence is it, what wire is used, and how high is it?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not absolutely familiar with the different kinds of wire fence. The posts are tamarack posts, the wire is a woven wire, but of course the mesh is very large and the fence has a depth of two webs, and I think the two together make about eight feet as the height of the wire fence.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. How many wires one above the other?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say, but I think there is about eight inches between the main wires.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. What is the gauge of the wire?

Mr. OLIVER. The specifications would tell that, but I have not the information at hand.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It is important to have the fence sufficiently strong to bar these heavy animals. It would be a great pity, if, after all the expense we have gone to, the herd should break away because of the want of a proper fence.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. If the minister had fortified this fence with barbed wire, it would have been effective. It would be a great pity to have these animals scattered over the prairie for the want of a good strong fence.

Mr. OLIVER. The fence is practically the same as the fence inclosing the buffalo at Banff Park, which has been found amply sufficient for the purpose. On the occasion of the animals getting away, a temporary fence had been run for a distance of two miles to guide the herd from the railway station to the entrance of the park. Only one web of wire was stretched on poplar poles. Had there been no crowd, there would have been no accident ; but the crowd started the herd, and several of the animals made a dash, and broke down some of the poplar poles and escaped.

Mr. HERRON. How far are the poles of the fence apart ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot give that offhand. Generally speaking, the specifications are based on the fence at Banff.

Mr. STAPLES. Who were the agents of the government to select and purchase the buffalo that were brought to Canada ?

Mr. OLIVER. Howard Douglas, the superintendent of Banff Park, negotiated the purchase.

Mr. STAPLES. I noticed in one of the papers the other day the statement that Mr. Ayotte had acted as agent, and had made considerable money in some way through the purchase of these buffalo. Who is Mr. Ayotte ?

Mr. OLIVER. He is the immigration agent at Great Falls, Montana. I believe it was he who first drew the attention of Mr. Douglas to the fact that this herd was in existence. Its location was not at a very great distance from Great Falls. The negotiations covered a period of time and required Mr. Douglas to visit the owner of the herd several times, and Mr. Ayotte was employed to communicate with the owner of the herd at other times ; but beyond that he had nothing to do with the purchase.

Mr STAPLES. Is it the policy of the government to have its immigration agents abroad act as purchasing agents ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is not the policy of the government to have their immigration agents act as purchasing agents. Mr. Ayotte was not a purchasing agent in any shape or form. He was information agent, and that was all.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Can the minister tell me the present location of the herd ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot give it exactly. I think it is about township 57, range 18.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Does the minister know whether the buffalo ranged in that part of the country when they were plentiful ? I have heard it stated by people who have been there for a great many years that they did not roam that far north.

Mr. OLIVER. I never saw any in that locality, but I have it from the very best authority that they did roam there, and very much farther north than there. But this particular locality is partially wooded, and of course the buffalo prefer the open prairie, and therefore their presence there was occasional rather than continuous.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. What were the reasons for selecting that particular locality, and putting the country to so much more expense ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have already explained that the fence was not built for the purpose of inclosing the buffalo, but for the purpose of preserving a herd of elk ; and it was only because the opportunity occurred to get the buffalo and the park was already fenced that this seemed to be a very simple solution of what would otherwise have been a problem of considerable difficulty. It is not the intention to use this park as the permanent home of the herd. We have made a reservation on the Battle river between the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Wetaskawin branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in a piece of country which everybody agrees is a buffalo country. There are four townships which have not been settled on, and which we have decided to set apart as the main range of the buffalo. We propose to ask parliament for money to put a fence around it with the intention of transferring to it the herd which is now in the elk park.

To provide a further amount for Sioux Indians, $2,000.

Mr. OLIVER. This is required to meet the expenses of an outbreak of small-pox $1,300 had to be expended in measures necessary to stamp out the outbreak, and $700 are required to meet the expenses of management.

Indians—to provide a further amount for printing and stationery, $3,000.

Mr. OLIVER. The department has a vote of $3,000 which includes the cost of school books and material for all the industrial day and boarding schools throughout the Dominion. It has proved insufficient this year.

To provide for relief to destitute Indians in remote districts, $10,000.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Are these in provinces or unorganized territories ?

Mr. OLIVER. Nearly all are in northern Ontario.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Has this been expended or is it to be expended ?

Mr. OLIVER. These are the accounts which have come in for services rendered and also to meet accounts which will be incurred in that part of the country. In that northern country we have no agents. The only body doing business there is the Hudson Bay Company. There are occasions when the Indians are in distress, and we are compelled to have an arrangement with the Hudson Bay Company for relieving such distress. These are the accounts sent in by that company and we require a vote in order to meet them.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Were they authorized by the department ?

Mr. OLIVER. As we have no agent in that country, the distress must be relieved on the immediate responsibility of the Hudson Bay Company. We can discuss afterwards with that company the propriety of the advance but we cannot possibly authorize it beforehand.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Are they only met by the company ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, there is no other mercantile institution doing business there.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 53) respecting the New Brunswick Southern Railway Company.—Mr. Carvell.

ATLANTIC, QUEBEC AND WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. LEMIEUX moved the second reading of Bill (No. 134) respecting the Atlantic Quebec and Western Railway Company.—Mr. Marcil. He said: Mr. Speaker, I am not the promoter of this Bill but, from the point of view of my constituency, I have some interest in the matter. The Bill has come up on several occasions in the House. There was a Bill passed empowering this railway company to construct a railway from Paspebiac to Gaspé Basin and I am pleased to inform the House that the railway is now being constructed and that nearly 25 miles have been completed. Last year the company came to parliament to obtain some amendments in order to facilitate the construction but unfortunately they wiped out a clause which should not have been wiped out and they come now to get this clause reinstated in the Act as it was originally. The Bill has been before the Senate, has been fully explained and has passed unanimously.

Mr. HENDERSON. Has this clause been reinserted ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. We had better look into it then.

Mr. SPROULE. How many miles have been built since last year ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Twenty miles. There is another clause in the Bill. They obtained power last year to purchase the famous Baie des Chaleurs Railway and it was stated they would purchase it directly from the Baie des Chaleurs Company, but the Judge of the Exchequer Court decided that there should be a judicial sale; so that, the company wish to be empowered to purchase from any parties who, outside of the bondholders of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company, might choose to become the owners of the Railway.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Ocean and river service—Dominion steamers—further amount required for maintenance and repairs to government steamers and ice-breakers, $85,000.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). This sum is required for certain repairs to Dominion steamers as follows:

|---|---|
| 'Montcalm' | $ 61,447 67 |
| 'Druid' | 1,849 79 |
| 'Champlain' | 1,559 03 |
| 'Minto' | 5,091 00 |
| 'Stanley' | 15,000 00 |
| | 84,948 59 |

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. KEMP. What happened to the 'Montcalm' which required such extensive repairs ?

Mr. BRODEUR. An accident happened to the 'Montcalm' last fall when she went down to the Labrador coast. There was a rock which was not shown on the chart. This information was asked when the main estimates were before the House and I have the chart here. This rock was not shown on the chart prepared by the British admiralty and as a result this accident happened.

Mr. HENDERSON. Where was that rock ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It was at Pointe au Maurier.

Mr. KEMP. That is north of the Straits of Belle Isle ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, no. It is also known as Whittle Rock. I promised also to bring down a report of the investigation. A report has been made by the Wreck Commissioner to the following effect:

In accordance with instructions, I proceeded to Quebec and held a preliminary investigation, under oath, into the cause which led to the stranding of the Canadian government steamer 'Montcalm' at Pointe au Maurier, on the morning of the 22nd ultimo. I fully inquired into the whole matter and have to report that no blame is attached to the captain or officers of this vessel. The casualty was a fortuitous accident, and the ship struck on an uncharted rock; all precautions were taken, she was going slow at the time, the lead was being used and lookouts were stationed.

In following out the instructions as laid down by the St. Lawrence Pilot, seventh edition, 1906, the course directed to be used in entering Wataghestic sound leads directly over the rock which the 'Montcalm' struck. There is a depth of twelve to fourteen feet on the rock, surrounded by depths varying from twenty to twenty-six fathoms; bearings and distances exactly locating the position of this were taken by the captain and officers, and there is no doubt in my mind that everything was done that possibly could be done for the safe navigation of the vessel.

Captain Belanger and his officers are therefore exonerated from all blame, and a formal investigation into this matter is not necessary.

Mr. KEMP. Was the fact that the rock was there reported to the British admiralty?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How long did it take to repair the vessel ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The greatest part of the winter. The information we have is that she will be out of the dock about April 10.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was this done at Sorel ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, at Levis.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who has the contract or is the work being done by the government ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is done by days labour.

Mr. TAYLOR. No wonder it costs a great deal as everything else in the minister's department. A striking illustration of this is afforded by an answer given yesterday as follows :

1. How many days has the dog-fish reduction plant at Canso, Nova Scotia, operated during the season of 1907?
2. Who is manager of the plant, what is his salary, what are the terms of his engagement, how much did he receive during the year 1907 up to the 31st December last, and how long was he actually employed in the business of the plant during 1907?
3. How many men are employed at the plant besides the manager, what are their respective names and salaries, and how much was each paid in 1907 up to 31st December, for their services?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. From 5th October to 9th November.
2. A. B. Cox, $1,200. He is employed by the year. $1,200. Twelve months.
3. Two. D. S. Hensbee, $700. E. A. Kelly, $675. In addition to these, during the time the works are in active operation labourers are employed, at the rate of $1.50 per day, as required.

Thus, $2,575 were paid to two men for one month's work besides we do not know what number of men who were working at $1.50 a day. If the repairing of the steamer is on the same line as the dog-fish plant, it is no wonder the expenditure of that department has run up into the millions. The item of Dominion steamers, I think, has passed and as there may be further discussion on this matter and it is desired to get all these estimates through now, the right will be reserved to discuss this on the minister's main estimates.

Mr. HENDERSON. Who owns the Lévis dock, the government or private parties ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am not very sure, it is not in my department. Docks are under the control of the Public Works Department.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What did it cost to take this boat to the graving dock ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Not very much, she came up under her own steam.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What did it cost to send the 'Strathcona' to pull the 'Montcalm' off the rocks, and to bring the boat to the graving dock ?

Mr. BRODEUR. About $3,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What did it cost to repair the 'Montcalm' last year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. $21,447.

Mr. SPROULE. That is $83,000 for the repairs to this boat in two years ? What did it cost for repairs to the other steamers? The boats are scattered under different heads in the Auditor General's Report. For the 'Minto' I see the amount of $5,399 was paid to Stewart, Ross & Co., Charlottetown, for making repairs. For the 'Lansdowne,' I do not see that any expenditures have been made for repairs. I am relying on the Auditor General's Report, which does not give separately the expenditures for repairs. On the 'Lady Laurier' there was spent $16,617. When I speak of repairs, they might not mean more than merely repainting the boat and putting it in proper shape for her voyage.

Mr. BENNETT. Is there any contract now for repairs on the 'Montcalm'?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no contract, because it was impossible to find out before she went into the dock and was overhauled, what work needed to be done. When a ship meets with an accident and goes into the dock it is almost impossible to determine accurately what repairs have to be made. The repairs are being done under contract by George T. Davie & Sons.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the government own the dock?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed by the deputy that it is the property of the Public Works Department, and we pay that sum to the Public Works Department.

Mr. BENNETT. Perhaps the Minister of Public Works knows who owns this dry dock at Lévis.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no question about the ownership, it is owned by the government, and is controlled and managed by the Public Works Department.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is it rented?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, we receive vessels there to be repaired and charge the ordinary fees or tolls therefor.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the minister aware that the 'Montcalm' is there at the present time, and does he know under what terms?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It has not been brought to my notice that the 'Montcalm' is there, but I have been informed there is a vessel there. She is there upon the ordinary terms; I presume we charge the Marine Department the same as we charge the owners of private vessels.

Mr. HENDERSON. What are the terms ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot give them offhand, but I can easily find out. It depends on the size of the vessel. We have a regular scale of fees.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Can the 'Montcalm' be used for breaking the ice at Cap Rouge this season ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, because she is at present in dock.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What was the date of the wreck, and when did she go into the dock for repairs?

Mr. BRODEUR. The accident took place on the 22nd November, probably she went into the dock in December.

Mr. BENNETT. Was the 'Montcalm' engaged in delivering supplies to lighthouse keepers along the coast of Labrador?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. Was any other vessel employed?

Mr. BRODEUR. The 'Arranmore,' which belongs to Halliday Brothers, Quebec.

Mr. BENNETT. What are the terms of the contract?

Mr. BRODEUR. $250 a day.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What other vessels are being used to break ice besides the 'Montcalm'?

Mr. BRODEUR. The 'Montcalm' was the only ice-breaker available this winter. We had the 'Lady Grey,' but she made a trip to the Seven Islands.

Mr. BENNETT. How many days was the 'Arranmore' employed on this work?

Mr. BRODEUR. During the season of navigation, not only for the purpose of delivering supplies, but mostly for construction work. It is a long distance between Quebec and the straits of Belle Isle, and in order to carry on our work in those places we had to have a boat for that purpose.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is not the inability of this boat to break ice going to interfere with navigation?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, as soon as the 'Montcalm' is out of dock we intend to send her to Cabot straits as we did in previous years, to meet sea-going vessels coming to the straits in order to facilitate the pasage of the straits by boats coming up the St. Lawrence.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has the work been pushed along as expeditiously as possible?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. We have the ship's husband there who has been supervising the work all the time. We have given instructions that the new work shall be prosecuted as quickly as possible in order that when the boat is ready she may be ready to meet the sea-going vessels on their way through the straits.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I understand that the contractors are receiving whatever price they care to ask for making repairs.

Mr. BRODEUR. The work is being done by day's work and each man is being paid so much per day.

Mr. ARMSTRONG.

Mr. BENNETT. How many months was the 'Arranmore' employed last season?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed about 100 days.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the length of the 'Arranmore?'

Mr. BRODEUR. 244 feet.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What crew does she carry?

Mr. BRODEUR. The crew and coal are supplied by the owners. We pay $250 a day and they supply everything.

Mr. BENNETT. Was she employed day and night?

Mr. BRODEUR. She is at our disposal night and day.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens). It puzzles me to understand how the 'Montcalm' has cost so much for repairs since she was bought by the government. Every year it takes from $25,000 to $30,000 to repair this boat, although she is a new steamer. It would seem as if there must have been something wrong with her original construction. For example, last year to repair this steamer the Drolet firm of Quebec was paid $15,259.62; J. B. Coté, Quebec, was paid $1,864, and George T. Davie & Co., of Lévis, $3,627.34. Besides that other large sums have been paid for repairs. Why, if such expenditures as these had to be made for repairs on vessels owned by private navigation companies there would be no profit left. The same would apply to the steamship 'Lady Grey.' There must be something radically wrong about it, and it is the duty of the minister to inquire into this expenditure.

Mr. BRODEUR. We must not forget that this boat is an ice-breaker——

Mr. BENNETT. She is a heart-breaker for the country.

Mr. BRODEUR. She is exposed to very strong pressure from the ice and in consequence more repairs are required to her than to an ordinary vessel. The first year the 'Montcalm' was in service she was caught in the ice and extensive repairs were needed. Last year she went ashore in a fog on the Cape Breton coast and repairs were needed. These were accidents for which no one was to blame. Then this year she ran ashore at Pointe au Maurier on an uncharted rock, which resulted in a serious accident.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens). That is not yet charged in the public accounts.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am citing these cases to show the nature of the accidents to which the 'Montcalm' is exposed in the service she does, and the hon. gentleman will realize that an ice-breaker is more liable to damage than an ordinary boat. The builders are a reputable firm and I have no reason to think the boat was not properly built.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens). The 'Minto' was engaged in a much more difficult winter service in the straits of Northumberland than is the 'Montcalm' at Quebec, and yet the repairs to the 'Minto' do not cost so much. The expenditure on the 'Montcalm' does not seem to be for repairing damage caused by ice, but for making good structural defects.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think the service done by the 'Montcalm' is much more hazardous than that done by either the 'Stanley' or the 'Minto,' and that she has to contend with stronger ice.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What was the 'Arranmore' doing before she entered the service of the government?

Mr. BRODEUR. She was a passenger steamer running between Quebec and the Labrador coast.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has she not been making these trips since?

Mr. BRODEUR. No. The 'Arranmore' was entirely at our disposal.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. This boat is owned by Halliday Bros. ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Am I to understand that she did not make any of her regular trips at all during the time she was in the government service?

Mr. BRODEUR. She was entirely at the disposal of the government. Halliday Bros. had a contract with the Department of Trade and Commerce for carrying mails from Quebec to the Labrador coast and that contract was performed by the steamer 'King Edward.' The 'Arranmore' has been used by us for construction work and for the supply of the lights.

Mr. TAYLOR. On Monday last I asked the following question of the minister :

How many trips did Mr. Cowie take on government steamers during the season of navigation in 1907 for the purpose of pleasure or for inspection?

The hon. minister answered that question by saying : '33 ; they were all on trips of inspection.' The second question was : 'On what steamers did he make such trips?' The answer was : 'The "Lady Grey" and the "Frontenac."' The next question was : 'On how many of these trips did Mr. A. Beauchemin, of Sorel, accompany him?' The answer was : 'None.' The next question was: How many other persons did accompany him on those trips and what are the names of such persons?' The answer was : 'From one to twelve ; minister, acting minister, deputy minister, members of shipping federation, board of trade, chamber of commerce, party of English engineers, English journalists, presidents of pilots, members of the engineering staff.' Thirty-three trips on either one or the other of these boats on junketing tours during the season of navigation wasted a lot of money of the people of this country. I have a letter from a gentleman in that part of the country, who has noticed the boats and the parties on board of them, and this is what he writes about Mr. Cowie :

It is customary for this chief engineer to go on a tour of inspection about once a month, with one of the government steamers, and on such occasions he invites a number of his friends, and during these a Mr. Beauchemin, of Sorel, whom he has appointed inspector of machinery, supplies his appetite for wine and other luxuries during the trip. Indeed, I am informed the steamer on these occasions is a veritable floating harem, for all of which the deluded people have to pay. This pampered chief engineer is at present off on a junketing tour through Europe with Mr. George Washington Stephens, president of the Montreal Harbour Commissioners, ostensibly to get information about harbours and aids to navigation, but really to enjoy life at the expense of the poor deluded Canadian taxpayer.

This gentleman says he knows what he is writing about.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Who is he?

Mr. TAYLOR. I will give the information probably in the Public Accounts Committee some day. The minister knows that this is not in accordance with the answers he gave to my questions.

Mr. BRODEUR. On the question of the trips my hon. friend is absolutely mistaken. We are carrying on extensive works in the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec. There are seven or eight dredges working there all the time, besides two of which were working last season at Beaujeu Bank. It is necessary for Mr. Cowie, as superintending engineer of the channel, to visit these places very often; I would say that 33 trips during the season were certainly not too many—quite the reverse. I would be inclined to believe that a trip of that kind should be made at least once a week by the superintending engineer to see that the work was properly done. When I gave my hon. friend the answers to his questions, I gave them from information supplied to me by the officers of the department, and I have no reason to believe that it is not correct. Mr. Beauchemin is not an inspector of machinery; he was supervising the dredging. I saw him thus engaged when I went down with the members of the shipping federation. He had absolutely nothing to do with machinery.

Mr. HENDERSON. The minister states that the repairs to the 'Montcalm' were costing about $61,000. The 'Montcalm' was wrecked on the coast of Labrador, but as she came to Quebec on her own steam in order to go into dry dock, the damage could not have been very serious; her machinery must have been all in order. I do not suppose the Minister of Public Works would charge the Marine Department more than about $150 a day for the use of the dock, and I can hardly imagine that the necessary repairs would have cost this enormous sum of $61,000. Does the minister not think there is something wrong in the calculation he has made?

Mr. BRODEUR. These boats are double-bottomed, and even if the 'Montcalm' was able to go to Quebec on her own steam, she may have suffered very serious damage to her outside plates. These would have to be replaced by new ones. We have an officer in whom we have a great deal of confidence at the dry dock, who supervised the work. I have no information as to what the cost of these repairs should be, but if my hon. friend consulted with some vessel owners he would find that the cost of repairs to vessels is very large.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no knowledge personally of what they cost. My hon. friend in front of me (Mr. Sproule) tells me that the charge for the dock is only $28 a day.

Mr. SPROULE. On page P—23 of the Auditor General's Report I find that Geo. T. Davie & Sons of Levis were paid for laying one dock bed, November 28 to December 3, 1906, four days at $28.64 per day.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is not the dry dock. It must be a dock bed which belongs to Mr. Davie.

Mr. HENDERSON. Surely the minister can tell us what he pays a day for the use of the dry dock at Levis.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am informed it is about $200 a day.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Are we to understand that the ministers do not know what the dock costs for each day ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have not got the precise information, but the prices are well defined and there cannot be any overcharge.

Mr. BLAIN. Were the supplies to the 'Montcalm' purchased last year after tender ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have a contract with the captain of the 'Montcalm' by which we pay him a fixed price per day for feeding the crew and officers. I have here the charges for the dry dock. 'La Canadienne' was four days in the dry dock and she paid five cents a ton on her tonnage of 372. The 'Galveston,' 1,267 tons, paid four and a half cents per ton per day. The 'Kensington,' 2,000 tons, paid four and a half cents per ton per day. They charge so much for the first day and then so much per subsequent day per ton, according to the size of the vessel.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend says he did not purchase supplies for the 'Montcalm' after asking for tenders. I want to draw his attention to a letter on page P—182 :

Audit Office, Ottawa, March 2, 1907.

Sir,—I find on examination of the vouchers so far sent me in support of expenditure during the fiscal year that the following payments were made in connection with the maintenance of the steamer 'Montcalm':

|---|---|
| F. X. Drolet.. .. .. .. .. .. | $11,188 49 |
| Adolphe Huot.. .. .. .. .. .. | 4,612 06 |
| Samsan & Filion.. .. .. .. .. | 2,258 55 |

The accounts rendered in each instance are certified 'prices fair and just'; but in view of the amount involved for a period of six months, I should like to know if there was any agreement with the business firms concerned as to the price at which the various articles would be supplied. It would seem from the accounts rendered that tenders had not been called for.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
J. FRASER,
Auditor General.

To Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

I do not find any answer to this letter.

Mr. BRODEUR. I was asked a few minutes ago whether supplies had been purchased after calling for tender and I thought that what was meant was provisions. But these accounts are for repairs. My hon. friend knows that a boat requires repairs constantly and it would not be advisable that we should purchase supplies of that kind in advance. They might be needed to-day and not be needed for a great length of time, so we purchase them as they are required.

Mr. TAYLOR. How much does the hon. gentleman pay per month to the captain of the 'Montcalm' for boarding the men ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Fifty cents a day for the men and sixty cents for the officers.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister ridiculed me when I pointed out that he was paying $25 a month for the board of each man when he was buying provisions, and I said it could be done for $10 to $12 a month. He said it could not and so did the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston). But the minister now says he is doing it at $15 a month for the men. Why not have that system on all the boats instead of paying political friends $25 a month for each man ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It depends on where it is. We were very fortunate in having the captain to do it in this case. We had to press him to accept it.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens). Was that last year or the year before ?

Mr. BRODEUR. September, 1906.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I see in the Auditor General's Report, P—21, that there was paid to Buchanan & Co., North Sydney, $983.55 for provisions; to Louis Marois, Quebec, $696.75; to S. Martel, Quebec, $61.55, and to another firm $226.20 If the captains are feeding the crew, why did the government buy these provisions?

Mr. BRODEUR. It was evidently there before the captain took the contract. It may be for accounts which were incurred in the previous fiscal year. When this question came up for the first time I looked into it and found that these accounts of the 'Montcalm' for feeding the men were mostly incurred in the previous year, and we paid for July and August.

Mr. TAYLOR. In reference to the prices charged at the graving dock, I find by the Auditor General's Report, E—10 that Davie & Son charged for docking and undocking 522 tons at 30 cents a ton, which comes to $156. Then she was in the dock from September 30 to November 1, at $15.66 a day.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am sure that was not in the dry dock, that may be the dock bed.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the dry dock at Lévis admit of large vessels?

Mr. BRODEUR. Unfortunately the dry dock at Lévis is not long enough for receiving large vessels. The question has been engaging the attention of the department, and it is expected that under the new law about to be enacted some company will take up the construction of a larger dock.

Construction of lighthouses and aids to navigation—further amount required, $117,500.

Mr. KEMP. Are all these lighthouses lighted by acetylene gas?

Mr. BRODEUR. Only twenty or twenty-five are lighted with acetylene gas out of the whole number.

Mr. KEMP. Is it the intention to discard acetylene gas and go back to the old system?

Mr. BRODEUR. We have never abandoned the old system, which has given satisfaction. We use vapour lights, generally speaking; they give about 3,000 candle power.

Mr. SPROULE. What became of the Pintsch gas, that new preparation you were using?

Mr. BRODEUR. That is only used in gas buoys.

Mr. TAYLOR. When we are on the main estimates I want the minister to get me the names of the gentlemen who compose the Canadian Fog Signal Company, from whom were purchased last year $54,000 of supplies; also the name of the gentlemen composing the International Marine Signal Company, Limited, formerly Thomas L. Willson, from whom we purchased last year $238,000. I want the membership of both these firms.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Does this vote include the lighthouse that fell over at Burlington channel last fall?

Mr. BRODEUR. With regard to that matter, the information I have is that this lighthouse was built on a pier, the pier sank and of couse the lighthouse went down with it. But it was no fault of the department.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. There has been a large amount of money spent there in the last two or three years re-erecting piers.

Mr. BRODEUR. Of course, many faults are attributed to us, but I would not like the members of this House to charge us with being responsible for lighthouses falling over when they are erected on some other foundation which goes down. The lighthouse was erected lately on a pier, the pier sank, and of course the lighthouse went down with it.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Surely the minister's department is at fault in building a lighthouse on a foundation so weak that the lighthouse fell over in a year or two.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend knows this pier was carried away in one of the fiercest storms ever known in that section of the country. I do not think the hon. gentleman wanted to be unfair to the department when he says that this lighthouse was erected a short time ago, and went down because the construction was not properly supervised. I have made some inquiries and have ascertained from the chief engineer that this work was supervised by one of his foremen in whom he has absolute confidence.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is this work which is done by the Public Works Department if not by the Department of Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. BRODEUR. This is an old pier which has been there for several years and was probably built under the old government.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. Oh, no. Surely the minister will not contend that a lighthouse should be built on a pier that has not been tested to see if it is strong enough to withstand a storm. He will not contend that a lighthouse should be built only for fair weather and that it should go down with the first storm.

Mr. BRODEUR. There are storms and storms.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice my hon. friend has some trouble with the wharfinger at Sault Ste. Marie. In what position is that account ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The deputy informs me that there has been some difficulty with the wharfinger and the matter has been settled between the Auditor General and the wharfinger.

Mr. BLAIN. From the correspondence in the Auditor General's report it appears that the wharfinger collects the money and retains his own salary, sending in the course of two or three years the balance to the government ; he practically controls the account himself. While the minister was away the acting minister sent an agent up there to investigate the account. Are the wharfingers throughout the country allowed to collect the money and deduct their own payment ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, that is the way it is done.

Mr. BLAIN. Is that regarded as good policy?

Mr. BRODEUR. That is under the provisions of the law. In the other services, for instance in the Customs Department, the collector is not paid out of the amount collected, but the wharfingers collect the money and keep twenty-five per cent or fifty per cent according to the amount they are entitled to receive.

Mr. BLAIN. The revenue at Sault Ste. Marie is large and according to the correspondence a request was made to the department to send up a special officer to make a report. Who was sent up and was a report put in ?

Mr. BRODEUR. An officer from the Auditor General's Department was sent. A report would be made to the Auditor General.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the minister would have that report brought down on the main estimates.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, I will get it.

Mr. BERGERON. There has been some difficulty between the Dominion authorities and the local authorities in reference to fishing in the river Matane. I have had correspondence on the matter in which it is stated that the federal authorities allowed them to fish for salmon until July 31, and the local authorities until August 15. That is one difficulty, another is that the people claim the right to fish according to an old law of the seigneurs. I would like the minister to explain so that those interested may see his explanation.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend knows the situation since the Privy Council decided that the proprietary rights in the rivers belong to the provincial authorities and the regulation of the fisheries is under the control of the federal authorities. My hon. friend is probably misinformed as to our regulations concerning the rights of fishing in the river Matane differing from the provincial regulations because the provinces, although they may have proprietary rights in the rivers, have no right to determine the dates at which fishing should take place as that is a part of the regulation of the fisheries, and is consequently under the control of the federal authorities. I have some correspondence from the same gentleman. The matter is entirely under our control. If I remember rightly it is a question of licensing in the Matane river and the question comes up whether it should be under the control of the provincial or the federal authorities. I would be inclined to believe, in view of the judgment rendered by the Privy Council that it would be a question of the proprietary right which would come under the control of the provincial authorities.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it true that the federal authorities allowed them to fish until July 31, and the local authorities until August 15 ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, no, that is impossible, because it would be a question of the regulation of the fisheries and this falls without the least doubt under the control of the federal authorities.

Mr. BERGERON. It is represented that this river Matane should not fall under the authority of any government as it is a private river.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is another question.

Mr. BERGERON. As I understand while these people contend that they have complete rights over this river, they are caught between the local and federal authorities and these seem to differ. It is a complicated question and I would be glad to have a full explanation.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have just explained the relations between the provincial and federal authorities. As I mentioned, the federal authorities have the right to regulate the fisheries, to determine the seasons in which it would be permitted to fish, the close and the open seasons.

Mr. SPROULE. The size of the nets.

Mr. BRODEUR. The size of the nets and the seasons at which people would be permitted to fish. The federal authorities have the right to deal with that part of the question—close seasons, open seasons and the apparatus with which they are entitled to fish. The provincial authorities have proprietary rights. For instance, licenses should be issued by the provincial authorities under the decision of the judicial committee of the Privy Council. It does not mean, however, that the federal authorities would not have the right to impose some tax upon a person who was permitted to fish in that locality. I think there is no doubt that the federal authorities would have the right to levy such a tax. It may be that in this case that my hon. friend refers to, it is a question whether this river should belong to the first concessionnaire or should belong to the province. I think that the proprietary right is vested in the province, although I suppose the correspondent of my hon. friend, if he is the same man who corresponded with me, claims otherwise. But that is a question which does not at all affect the relations existing between the provincial and federal authorities as far as I remember at the moment.

Mr. BERGERON. In the meantime I will examine these papers and I would ask that the minister get from his department all the information so that we can settle the question in a definite way.

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose that is the case of Dr. Bouillon?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes.

Mr. BRODEUR. I had some correspondence with him but I will get the information in regard to the matter.

Fisheries—further amount required for salaries and disbursements of fishery inspectors, overseers and guardians, $30,000.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. There was a question on the Order Paper the other day asked by myself, in reference to the dog-fish reduction plant at Canso. The questions and answers are as follows:

DOG-FISH REDUCTION PLANT, CANSO, NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN asked:

1. How many days has the dog-fish reduction plant at Canso, Nova Scotia, operated during the season of 1907?

2. Who is manager of the plant, what is his salary, what are the terms of his engagement, how much did he receive during the year 1907 up to the 31st December last, and how long was he actually employed in the business of the plant during 1907?

3. How many men are employed at the plant besides the manager, what are their respective names and salaries, and how much was each paid in 1907 up to 31st December, for their services?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. From 5th October to 9th November.

2. A. B. Cox, $1,200. He is employed by the year. $1,200. Twelve months.

3. Two. D. S. Hensbee, $700. E. A. Kelly, $675. In addition to these, during the time the works are in active operation labourers are employed, at the rate of $1.50 per day, as required.

Here is an outrageous charge of $1,200 a year for a man who is employed, according to the answer of the hon. minister, from the 5th October to the 9th November, which would be about thirty working days.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is $40 a day.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Forty dollars a day; it is more than was paid to some of those men employed by Falconer. There were other men employed, not experts, labouring men I presume, and they are paid $675 and $700. I think this is a case that should be inquired into and that it deserves a place in the report of the Royal Commission which was suggested to the House yesterday.

I would, however, draw the attention of the minister to another question. A few moments ago he stated that certain regulations can be made by his department in reference to the lobster fisheries and he claimed the Dominion government had the right to regulate the season of fishing, the size of the fish taken and matters of that kind. I conceive that under the decision of the Privy Council he is correct in the contention that the department have authority to adopt regulations as to the size of the lobsters that shall be taken. A few days ago I put a question on the paper in reference to a complaint made by the fishermen in Lunenburg, Shelburne and Yarmouth, Nova Scotia. It seems that a certain number of fishermen there have been fishing undersized lobsters with the knowledge of the overseers and of the men who are employed to guard the interests of the department in reference to the size of the lobsters. My question was: Whether the government had knowledge of illegal fishing and whether they were cognizant of the fact that lobsters were being caught under size. The minister answered:

The department is aware that the regulations respecting the size of lobsters are in some districts not strictly enforced.

If the government are aware of these facts and if the law is to be observed the government should punish these men and the overseers who are permitting this should be removed from office. I am informed from reliable sources that fishermen and packers friendly to the government are allowed these privileges, but that if a Conservative fisherman or packer attempted to evade the law the overseer would be on top of him at once and he would not be permitted to fish undersized lobsters. There is no doubt that the facts as stated are correct and there is no doubt that the minister was aware that this illegal fishing was taking place. The minister, in order to get out of the hole, attempted to give a reason why this illegal fishing was permitted and he said:

The difficulty which usually exists in the administration of the lobster regulations has recently been increased by a change in the American laws, which permit the importation of live lobsters of smaller size than formerly, thus diminishing the supply available for the canneries. It is feared that the rigid enforcement of the size limit would prevent the canners receiving sufficient quantity of fish to carry on their business.

The matter is now engaging the attention of the department, and it is hoped that means may be found to harmonize the conflicting interests.

I do not think that the government had any right, unless with the authority of the law, or of the regulations of the Governor in Council, to permit any overseer to pass lobsters under size as they have been doing in Nova Scotia during the last season. There is no doubt about the fact that they have been doing it because we have the answer of the minister admitting it. Will the minister permit the same infringement of the law to take place in the maritime provinces during the coming season because the Americans put a lower limit on the size of the lobsters admitted to the United States? This fishing goes on during the summer months commencing in April in the straits of Northumberland and along the Cape Breton coast. Will he allow the same infringement of the law to take place that has been permitted in Lunenburg, Shelburne and Yarmouth during the coming season? The overseers have just as much right in these parts of the province to wink at the violation of the law as they have in the counties that I have named. I think it is a dangerous principle for the government to allow an infringement of the law, and the fishermen of these counties who are not so favoured by these government officials think that they are very harshly treated, that no concession should be given to one man and withheld from another and that every man Liberal and Conservative should be treated alike. There is another matter that I wish to bring to the attention of the minister; that is the question of fishing in British Columbia. This is a matter which should receive the serious attention of the government. I am told by a man of high standing in the community that several fishermen in that province have been very unfairly treated by the government.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman has stated that we have paid a man $1,200 for working for one month at the Canso reduction works. That is not a fair interpretation of the answer given to the question. The question was as to what length of time these works had been operating, and I answered for a month and some days, but that does not mean that the man was only employed for that length of time. There are extensive works there and they have to be looked after not only during the dog-fish season, but also when the products are being disposed of, and the building has also to be taken care of. This is an entirely different state of things from that instanced by the hon. gentleman. Now, with regard to the lobster fishery, the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. A. McLean) would like to see the government take action against everybody who violates the regulations. Does he mean to say that every fisherman should be prosecuted when there is a slight violation of the law?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens). The minister himself has stated that he is cognizant of breaches of the regulations and that he permits them to continue. I say that if all the fishermen were treated alike I would not complain, but I do complain that Liberal fishermen are allowed to break the law when the Conservative fishermen are punished if they do so.

Mr. BRODEUR. My information is quite to the contrary, and I have been reproached by political friends because they say Liberals have been prosecuted and Conservatives have been allowed to go free. My answer is that the department has been trying to administer the law impartially and justly. Would my hon. friend ask me to take the responsibility of closing up a large number of canneries, a result which would certainly follow on a strict enforcement of the law. If the law were enforced in Prince Edward Island as rigidly as my hon. friend (Mr. A. A. McLean) suggests most of the canneries would have to be closed and it would be a serious thing for the fishermen.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens). I do not think there is any infringement of the law in Prince Edward Island so far as I can understand.

Mr. BRODEUR. I would be extremely surprised if all the lobsters canned in Prince Edward Island are more than eight inches long. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. A. McLean) will find that here and there some lobsters are canned which are a little below the standard. My hon. friend knows that the reduction of the size of the lobster in the American market has seriously affected the lobster trade in some parts of the maritime province, and if we were to enforce the law as the hon. gentleman suggests it would mean a serious blow to the fishermen and to the canneries, most of which would have to be closed. If I were to enforce the law in Prince Edward Island, as the hon. gentleman says I should, he would be the first to enter a complaint.

Mr. TAYLOR. Surely the minister should not place a law on the statute-books if his intention is to allow it to be violated. Why does he not amend the law to suit the conditions?

Mr. FIELDING. That is a pretty way of saying it and one would naturally make that remark, but the trouble is that we have a large territory to deal with and the conditions differ in different portions of it. The law which in some districts seems to give trouble has been administered fairly well in other districts, but how to adjust it to the different sections of the Dominion is a difficult problem. From what I know of the action of the Minister of Marine I am quite sure that he is doing his utmost to give a reasonable interpretation to the law, although undoubtedly in some cases it is generally known that the law is not rigidly observed. As to the political aspect of the question I can testify that my hon. friend (Mr. A. A. McLean) is entirely mistaken. I heard the complaint from my own section of the country that some officials—gentlemen appointed in bygone years by the Conservatives—have punished the Liberals and let the Conservatives go. I frankly say that I do not attach the utmost importance to that; the man who is fined is always prone to think he is not well treated and that some one else is getting an advantage. But I do know that in portions of the country pronounced Liberals have been fined again and again under the administration of the Marine Department. I have heard it stated that the Conservatives were not fined, but to that I do not attach much importance. The Minister of Marine has an extremely difficult problem to solve in this matter of the lobster regulations, and I believe he is doing his utmost to meet the various interests of the lobster business in the various sections of Canada.

Mr. LALOR. The Minister of Finance has stated that there are constant complaints as to the enforcement of the law, and that those in the business think that some are treated fairly and some unfairly. If that be so, why not change the law and treat every one alike? If the law were thus changed the inspectors would not be in a position to make a law for themselves, but there would be a general law which everybody would be expected to live up to, and the suspicion would be removed that there was partiality shown in the treatment accorded.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend were more familiar with it, he would realize that it is not so easy to make a general law in that matter which would suit all portions of the country.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I do not think my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. McLean) should make a statement like that without giving some instances. It is very easy to make a general statement that Conservatives are fined and Liberals are allowed to go scot free, but the hon. gentleman ought to be able to give some proof of the statement. Speaking from my own constituency, which is one of the largest fishing districts in Nova Scotia, I wish to say that the statement is not true. Some fines have been levied, but not from Conservatives alone. The officer in charge of that district was once a Conservative member of the local legislature for the constituency, and he is not a man who would be very apt to injure his own friends. In the town of Canso there were some nine convictions for the illegal fishing, and six out of the nine convicted were Liberals. I want to say something about the dog-fish institution, the usefulness of which my hon. friend criticises.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, we did no criticise the usefulness of it at all.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I suppose, then, the reference to the Royal Commission was only a joke.

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask how it was, when James Noble, of Killarney, had his nets seized, he was not prosecuted. This seizure was made last fall, and the minister stated yesterday that no prosecution had yet been made.

Mr. BRODEUR. Instructions have been given to the inspector to take proceedings against him before a magistrate.

Mr. BENNETT. This is a most extraordinary case. This man's nets were seized last fall, and there is no question about his guilt. The Nobles are notorious law breakers, and yet they are not prosecuted. The minister was of course rather in a dilemma, because while he had this man's nets under seizure he was paying him as a commissioner to investigate the fishery business.

Mr. BRODEUR. The information which I have from the commissioner of fisheries is that instructions have been given to prosecute him.

Mr. FOWLER. When were they given?

Mr. BRODEUR. About six weeks ago.

Mr. FOWLER. How long since the nets were seized?

Mr. BRODEUR. About six weeks ago.

Mr. BENNETT. My information is that the seizure was made much longer ago than that. I had a letter from a gentleman who resides in that part of the country. The whole travesty of this thing is that this man Noble is employed by this very government to show the people and parliament how the fishing business should be conducted, and is at the same time a law breaker. I hope if the minister continues in his office, he will not become weak kneed, and do with the Nobles what a former minister did. After the law had been administered as it should be, they came here and by political pressure got from the department $16,000 or $18,000.

Marine hospitals—further amount required, $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT. There is a hospital at the town of Midland, a very good institution, which I think does not receive any grant from the Department of Marine.

Mr. BRODEUR. We do not make any grant to these hospitals. We simply pay so much a day for the mariners who go to them.

Mr. BENNETT. I thought there was a grant made to a hospital at Collingwood. If so, I would like the minister to make note of the hospital at Midland.

Mr. BRODEUR. We do not make a grant to the hospital at Collingwood. We simply pay so much for the mariners.

Mr. BENNETT. What mariners are they —those employed on government vessels?

Mr. BRODEUR. Any mariners.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the total cost to the country of these marine hospitals?

Mr. BRODEUR. They do not cost the country anything. Everything is paid by the vessel owners.

To provide an amount for the payment of losses sustained by the Japanese in the recent riots at Vancouver, British Columbia, and incidental expenses, $10,775.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will this be collected from British Columbia?

Mr. FIELDING. Much might be said in favour of asking for such a refund, but I do not know that we have any machinery for that purpose.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Does this cover the whole expense in connection with the riots?

Mr. FIELDING. This is a direct payment to the Japanese authorities.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There will be a further vote for the cost of the investigation.

Amount required to meet expenses connected with the reception and entertainment of His Imperial Highness Prince Fushimi of Japan, during his visit to Canada, $37,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. What was the total cost of this trip ?

Mr. FIELDING. This is the total cost.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is he coming back again?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. TAYLOR. Bring down the details.

Mr. FIELDING. I have them here. The Prince landed on June 7 and sailed from Esquimalt on June 27. He was the guest of the government from the time he landed in Canada until he sailed.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I may say that Prince Fushimi, after he left, sent to this country about $20,000 in presents. Prince Fushimi left in the country about $20,000 in presents, in Montreal, Ottawa, Quebec, Toronto and elsewhere.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. Minister of Finance give the details?

Mr. FIELDING. The details are as follows:

Prince Fushimi while in Canada was the guest of the Dominion government. The principal items in the cost of his entertainment are:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Canadian Pacific Railway.. | $12,000 | |
| Canadian Pacific Railway for illuminations at Quebec and Victoria.. | 3,000 | |
| | | $15,000 |
| Intercolonial Railway.. | $ 3,700 | |
| Grand Trunk.. | 1,300 | |
| | | 5,000 |
| Reception at Quebec, Department of Public Works.. | | 4,000 |
| Militia Department, escorts, guards of honour, &c.. | | 2,500 |
| Telegraphs and telephones.. | | 1,600 |
| Reception, Experimental Farm, Ottawa.. | | 1,500 |
| Flags.. | | 1,100 |
| Richelieu & Ontario Navigation Company.. | | 900 |
| Hotels.. | | 900 |
| Cabs, carriages, and motors.. | | 600 |
| Books, maps, &c., specially bound.. | | 600 |
| Police.. | | 400 |
| | | 34,100 |

To provide an amount in aid of the sufferers by earthquake and fire in the Island of Jamaica—revote of lapsed amount, $7,256.53.

Mr. FIELDING. We did not pay the whole amount voted until we were assured that the conditions were such as to require them. After communicating with the government at Jamaica, we thought it right to pay the whole sum.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before the committee rises I want the Minister of Finance to retract a statement he made last night. I did not notice it at the moment or I would have taken exception to it, but I see it on 'Hansard' to-day. At half-past midnight, when I asked the committee to rise, Mr. Fielding objected and wanted us to pass some other estimates. On my stating that I thought that we had done very well and they could wait over until to-day, he said that we were evidently determined to keep the poor militiamen at Halifax out of their pay. I do not think that remark was at all called for and the hon. gentleman ought to withdraw it. These supplementary estimates, amounting to some $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 were only placed in our hands a few days ago, and the hon. gentleman ought to thank the opposition for facilitating their passage instead of making a captious criticism.

Mr. FIELDING. I think that the hon. gentleman who has been leading the opposition to-night has been very fair and I desire to express to him my thanks.

Mr. TAYLOR. Shall we take up the Budget on Tuesday next?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, but we shall have previously to take concurrence.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding House adjourned at 10.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 30, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTS.

House in committee on Bill (No. 88) to incorporate the Institute of Architects of Canada.—Mr. J. C. Walsh.

Mr. GERVAIS. I beg to call the attention of the Chairman to the fact that the promoter of this Bill, the hon. member for St. Anne, Montreal (Mr. Walsh), is not present. I move therefore that the committee rise and report progress.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION ATLANTIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. COPP moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 50) respecting the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company be read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What are they ?

Mr. COPP. The only amendment is in clause 9, changing the date of the annual meeting from the second Tuesday in September to the second Friday in October. It is merely a matter of convenience.

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to call the attention of the Prime Minister to some omissions in the Pringle papers. I now send over to him a memorandum of the omissions.

Mr. BENNETT. I asked for a return of the papers regarding the Office Specialty Company. I do not think they have been brought down yet.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If they are not, I will see that they are as soon as possible.

QUESTIONS.

BAYONET FOR THE ROSS RIFLE.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked :

1. Has the government of the Department of Militia and Defence adopted a bayonet for use on the Ross rifle?
2. If so, what is the nature of the bayonet and when was the selection made?
3. By whom will the bayonet be manufactured?
4. Has an order yet been placed for the manufacture of said bayonet?
5. If so, in what quantities and at what price?
6. Will the bayonet be manufactured entirely in Canada?
7. If so, at what factory?
8. Will an advance payment on the purchase price of the bayonets be made by the government to the company manufacturing the same? If so, what percentage of the price will be advanced?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (for Minister of Militia and Defence) :

1. Yes.
2. A sword bayonet, approved by the Militia Council on December 17, 1907.

3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8. The question of placing an order for the manufacture of the bayonet is receiving the consideration of His Excellency in Council.

ROSS RIFLES IN USE.

Mr. TAYLOR—by Mr. Bennett—asked :

1. How many Ross rifles are now in use by the Canadian Militia Force, including permanent corps, ordinary military regiments and Northwest Mounted Police?
2. How many will be in use by or supplied to the Canadian Militia Force as aforesaid by the end of 1908, 1909 and 1910, respectively?
3. How many bayonets suitable for the Ross rifle will be ready and distributed by the end of 1908, 1909 and 1910, respectively?
4. Who are manufacturing the bayonets?
5. Is the contract by tender or how otherwise?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (for Minister of Militia and Defence) :

1. 8,716 rifles.
2. It cannot be estimated.

3, 4 and 5. The question of the placing of an order for the manufacture of bayonets for the Ross rifle is receiving the consideration of His Excellency in Council.

STONEY LAKE DOCK.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

1. Has the government constructed a dock on island number 19 'a' Stoney lake, Ontario?
2. If so, who is the owner of the island above referred to, and was the part of the island on which the dock is built purchased by the government? If so, what was paid for same?
3. Have any docks been constructed in said lake on the island by the government since 1896?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for Minister of Railways and Canals). The government have not constructed any docks on any island in Stoney lake. In 1906 it was found, during the summer months, that there was not sufficient water in Stoney lake for navigation purposes, in consequence of which, it was decided to hold the water at Young's Point dam, the outlet of Stoney lake, from eighteen to twenty-four inches higher than formerly; it being estimated that the advantage to navigation, in this respect would be equivalent of $50,000 expended in dredging. In thus raising the water level of Stoney lake, certain damage was done to a number of small docks at the various islands used for summer resorts on this lake. It was, therefore, considered a fair proposition that the level of the docks should be raised proportionately. In all, twenty-two docks were raised, among others those of Dr. S. P. Ford, Mr. H. LeBrun, ex-Alderman Shortly, of Peterborough, J. S. Knapman, J. D. Collins, Hon. J. R. Stratton and a number of others. All the owners of the island whose wharfs were raised have given a full discharge for any damage that was done to their property, in this connection. The government have no information as to the owner of the island 19 'A,' but it is understood that it belongs to Hon. J. R. Stratton.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY—DR. BARLOW.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—by Mr. Cockshutt—asked:

1. Did Dr. A. E. Barlow, while in the service of the Geological Survey Department, investigate a belt in Lake Temagami district, the property of the Honourable Sir William Mulock and Mr. Daniel O'Connor, and run lines and trenches across the property?
2. Did Dr. A. E. Barlow make a report of this investigation or survey?
3. Did he make a map of the property, and is it available?
4. What was the total cost of the work, including Dr. Barlow's salary?
5. Was Dr. Barlow, while engaged in making examination of nickel deposits in Sudbury region for Dr. Mond, paid a salary and allowance for expenses by Dr. Mond, in addition to the salary paid by the government?

Hon. W. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Mines):

1. In 1903 Dr. Barlow made a geological examination of the country to the north of the northeast arm of Lake Temagami, an area of forty square miles, which necessarily included iron formations covered in part by locations held or owned by a company (the Temagami Iron Mining Company).
2. Yes, summary report for 1903.
3. Yes. He made a map, which is available.
4. Cost of season's exploration including Dr. Barlow's salary $2,065.82.
5. The department does not know if Dr. Barlow was paid a salary or allowance by Dr. Mond.

Mr. BENNETT.

SUPPLIES FOR ROYAL CANADIAN DRAGOONS AT ST. JOHNS, QUEBEC.

Mr. MORIN—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. Have tenders been advertised of late in connection with supplies for the Royal Canadian Dragoons at St. Johns, Quebec?
2. What are the names of the tenderers for each article, and the prices of each tender?
3. Have contracts been awarded? If so, what are the names in each case, and the prices?
4. (a) Were the contracts awarded to the lowest tenderer at the opening of tenders, (b) or were they offered to former contractors on condition of lowering their prices?
5. If such is the case, is it considered a fair system to the tenderers?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (for Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. Tenders for supplies to the permanent force at St. Johns, Quebec, for the year beginning April 1, 1908, were called for by newspaper advertisement.
2. It is suggested that a return be asked for in this case.
3. Contracts have been awarded as follows: L. Papineau, meat; J. R. Labelle & Company, bread; Marsan & Frère, groceries and vegetables; George O'Cain, forage and straw; H. Masse, removal of manure; E. Camaraire, emptying latrines and refuse pits; H. Logier, washing hospital bedding, &c. No contract was made for the supply of groceries and vegetables to the military hospital.
4. (a) The contracts were awarded to the lowest of the tenderers at the opening of the tenders in each case. (b) No.
5. Answered by No. 4.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the unanswered part stand as a notice of motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. Question No. 2 stands as a notice of motion.

PASSAGE OF UNITED STATES TRAINING SHIPS THROUGH ST. LAWRENCE CANALS.

Mr. TAYLOR—by Mr. Blain—asked:

HUDSON BAY RAILWAY.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette)—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. Has any proposition been made to the government for the construction of a railway to Hudson bay?
2. If so, by whom, and what is the nature of the proposition?
3. Is the land grant formerly voted by parliament for such a road still in force?
4. Has the government decided on any policy for the construction of a road to Hudson bay?

Hon. F. OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Several suggestions regarding the building of a railway to Hudson's bay have been brought to the attention of the government, but no definite proposition.
2. Answered by answer to No. 1.
3. The Act of parliament providing for a land grant in aid of a railway to Hudson's bay is still in force.
4. The question is under consideration.

REDUCTION WORKS AT CANSO, NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. McLENNAN asked:

2. What is the annual expenditure by government in operating and maintaining these works?
3. What is the annual value of the proceeds of the sale of the product of these works since their inception?
4. Are there railway transportation facilities connecting these works with any market?
5. What is the amount of the government subsidy to the Canso cold storage plant for bait to deep sea fishermen?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

| 1. 1905-6 | $25,996 22 |
| 1905-6 | 15,811 64 |
| 1906-7 (shed) | 322 81 |
| Construction | 42,130 67 |

2. 1905-6.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. $18,323 24
1906-7.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 14,859 37
1907-8.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 10,630 25

3. Most of the product manufactured in 1905 and 1906 was not sold until 1907. The net amount realized for the products of 1905 and 1906 was $13,691.78. Those for 1907 have not yet been all disposed of.

4. The nearest railway connection is Mulgrave, between which point and Canso there is daily steamboat communication.

5. $30,000 and a bonus of $4 per ton up to a maximum of five hundred tons of bait frozen during the first three years of the operation of the plant.

CLAIMS AGAINST DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. BENNETT asked:

Have claims for damages against the Department of Agriculture been made by various persons claiming upwards of $350,000 or more for damage, for losses on shipments of hay to South Africa made through the Department of Agriculture ? If so, what action has been taken by the Department of Agriculture in reference thereto ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). Yes, to the extent of twenty-three in number and $258,030 in amount. The Department of Agriculture considering the claims unfounded refused to pay the same and two of the claimants, the firm of Boulay & Lucier, and Mr. A. Poirier, sought to recover the amount of their claims by Petition of Right. The claims were for $20,766.97 and $1,331.75 respectively. The petition of the former suppliant was heard before Mr. Justice Cassels sitting in the Exchequer Court, Montreal, on the 24th and 25th instant, and was dismissed with costs against the suppliant. The petition of the other suppliant has not been brought to trial.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the minister say what the basis of the claim was?

Mr. FISHER. I do not consider myself that there was any basis, but the petitioners thought they had a claim against the government on two grounds: First, that hay which had been offered to the department to be shipped to South Africa at the time of the South African war had been rejected and they thought it had been improperly rejected; and second, the other claim was for damages because the business ceased.

Mr. FOSTER. The war ceased.

Mr. FISHER. The war ceased.

TRAINING OF TROOPS AT PETAWAWA CAMP.

Mr. WHITE—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. What branches of the Permanent Force and Active Militia will encamp for training at Petawawa Camp during the coming season ?

2. When will this camp open, and what will be the duration of same ?

Mr. BRODEUR.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (for Minister of Militia). No definite arrangements have yet been made regarding the training of troops at Petawawa this summer.

HARBOUR AT INVERNESS TOWN, C.B.

Mr. BLAIN asked:

1. Has the government decided to build a harbour at Inverness Town, Cape Breton ?

2. If so, is it proposed to purchase what is known as McIsaac's Pond, or has the government already purchased said McIsaac's Pond as a site for a harbour ?

3. What connection is there between McIsaac's Pond and the gulf, or what breadth and depth of water is there at the present time ?

4. Has the government, during the last year or the year previous, sent an engineer to this locality to ascertain the feasibility of building a harbour ?

5. If so, what is his report as to the advisability of building a harbour and as to the cost?

6. Has the government engineer made a report as to the advisability of building a wharf, or improving or extending the one there at the present time, outside of McIsaac's Pond ?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. and 2. The matter of making certain improvements to the harbour at Inverness is under consideration. The government has not purchased McIsaac's Pond.

3. A channel, 30 feet wide with a depth of 4 to 9 feet at high water.

4. Yes, as to the feasibility of improving the harbour.

5. Estimated cost of works sufficient for fishing vessels, $22,000. Estimated cost of dredging, reconstruction, new channel piers, property, &c., required for a harbour of 10 feet depth to accommodate coasting vessels, $82,000.

6. The plan shows only the channel piers outside of McIsaac's Pond, cost of extension of which is included in the above.

5TH REGIMENT, GARRISON ARTILLERY, VICTORIA, B.C.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked:

1. Does any trouble or misunderstanding exist, or has any recently existed among the officers, non-commissioned officers or men of the 5th Regiment of Garrison Artillery, of Victoria, British Columbia? If so, what is the nature of the trouble ?

2. Has the government received any information of the same? If so, what is the nature of the information ?

3. Have any of the officers or men resigned or threatened to do so ?

4. Is the pay of this regiment in arrears, or has it recently been in arrears ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (for Minister of Militia):

1. and 2. There is none as far as the department is aware.

3. No.

4. No.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE INTERCOLONIAL.

Mr. DANIEL asked :

1. How many claims against the Intercolonial Railway for damages to property or personal injury or loss or damage of any nature were unsettled on January 1, 1908?
2. How many of such claims have since been settled?
3. What was the nature of the claims so settled, the amount of damages claimed in each case, and the settlements arrived at?

2. Has any reduction at any time been made in the amount of said duties?
3. Has any refund or reimbursement or diminution of any kind been made in said duties?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs) :

1. Yes.
2. No.
3. No.

PROVINCIAL TAX ON COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS.

Mr. GUTHRIE asked :

1. At the time that increased subsidies were granted to the various provinces of Canada, was there any law, agreement, understanding or condition that provinces which were in the habit of imposing a tax upon commercial travellers should abolish such tax?
2. If so, when was such tax to be abolished?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). No such agreement or condition was attached to the increase in the subsidies, but the propriety of repealing the tax referred to was discussed, and expected to be taken into consideration by the various provincial legislatures.

Mr. CLEMENTS asked :

1. Who were the immigrants recently deported by the Immigration Department from Chatham, Ontario ?
2. What are their names, occupation, nationality, &c., and the reasons why they were deported in each case ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. There were five families in all; one family (Housden) was brought to Canada by the East End Emigration Society; the other four families (Pierce, Mortimer, Seeney and Young) came to Canada through the Central (Unemployed) body for London.

POSTMASTER AT ST. FRANCOIS XAVIER.

Mr. STAPLES asked :

1. Who is the postmaster at St. François Xavier ?
2. When was he appointed ?
3. Was a petition received by the department asking for his appointment ? If so, how many signatures were attached to the petition?
4. Was any petition received by the department asking for the appointment of any other person ? If so, in whose favour, and how many signatures were attached to it ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for Postmaster General) :

1. Mrs. Josephine Robidoux is postmistress of St. Francois Xavier.
2. She was appointed on the 30th August, 1907.
3. No petition was received asking for her appointment.
4. A petition in favour of the appointment of Mr. R. P. Precourt was received at the department. There were 106 signatures to this petition.

MR. J. J. COSGRAVE.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL asked :

What was the total cost of the investigation into the case of Mr. J. J. Cosgrave, late of the Inland Revenue department, Toronto, which took place in or about the month of February, 1906 ?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). The cost of the investigation into the case of Mr. J. J. Cosgrove was eighty-two dollars ($82).

Mr. JAMES H, MACKENZIE.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL asked :

1. What position does Mr. James M. Mackenzie hold in the Department of Inland Revenue at Toronto, and what is his salary ?
2. Is this Mr. Mackenzie the same person who carries on business as a druggist at 1160 Yonge Street, Toronto, and is he the postmaster at this place, and what is his salary or remuneration therefor ?
3. Is this Mr. Mackenzie the same person who carries on business as a druggist at 253 Avenue Road, Toronto, and is he the postmaster at this place, and what is his salary or remuneration therefor ?
4. If this Mr. Mackenzie is not the postmaster at these two postal stations, who are the postmasters thereat ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for Postmaster General) :

1. Mr. James H. Mackenzie is a deputy collector, class 'A,' Toronto; his salary is $1,700 per annum.
2. Mr. James H. Mackenzie is not postmaster at North Toronto sub post office (1160 Yonge street, Toronto).
3. Mr. James H. Mackenzie is not postmaster at sub post office No. 27 (253 Avenue road, Toronto).
4. Miss Annie McCarter is postmistress of North Toronto sub office, and Mr. E. G. Seyler is postmaster of sub post office No. 27.

DAM AT ADAMS LAKE.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

1. Is the government aware that a dam has been constructed at the outlet of Adams Lake, British Columbia, which prevents water from entering the Adams River, a tributary of the South Thompson River ?
2. By whose authority was this dam constructed ?
3. Has the Minister of Public Works or the Minister of the Interior received any complaint from the City of Kamloops that the water supply of the city is threatened by the damming of Adams Lake ? If so, what action is to be taken ?
4. Is it the intention of the government to cause the dam at the foot of Adams Lake to be removed, if it has been constructed without proper authority ?
5. What action will be taken to protect the interests of the City of Kamloops, in view of the low stage of water in the South Thompson River, from which the water supply of the city is obtained, consequent upon the construction of this dam ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. The Department of the Interior has received a letter from the city clerk of Kamloops stating that a dam has been constructed at the mouth of Adams lake and suggesting that the low state of the water in the South Thompson river may be due to this dam.

2. No authority has been given by the government for the construction of a dam at the outlet of Adams lake.

3. Answered by No. 1. A report is being obtained from the Dominion land agent at Kamloops.

4. This question cannot be answered until a proper report has been received.

5. The interests of the city of Kamloops will not be overlooked in the granting of any rights which the Dominion government may have the power to grant.

MAIL TENDER AT RIMOUSKI.

Mr. COCKSHUTT asked :

1. Is it true that the tender 'Rhoda' had to take the place of the steamer 'Lady Evelyn' last season during rough weather ?

2. If so, what reasons are given for the 'Lady Evelyn' not making the trips?

3. Did the captain of the Canadian Pacific Railway and Allan vessels inform the department that they were afraid of a collision with the big tender?

4. Is the 'Lady Evelyn' a passenger boat ? If so, how many passengers can she accommodate ?

5. What is the estimated cost of running the steamer 'Lady Evelyn' during one full season ?

6. How many of crew are in the employ of the government during winter season, and how are they employed ?

7. Was the service satisfactorily carried on previous to the purchase of the 'Lady Evelyn'? If not, what were the objections ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for Postmaster General):

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. Not so far as the the Post Office Department is aware.

4. Before being purchased by the department the 'Lady Evelyn' was employed in the conveyance of mails and passengers between Penzance and the Scilly islands. She was authorized to carry 149 first-class passengers and 142 second-class passengers.

5. $18,000.

6. Five. These men have to be engaged by the year to retain their services.

7. Yes, the department received serious complaints from the Allan Line and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company as to the unsuitability of the 'Rhoda' for the service owing to the fact that she was a paddle wheel boat and unable to lie close enough to the steamships in rough weather to enable the transfer of the mails to be satisfactorily effected.

A resolution was also adopted by the executive council of the Shipping Federation of Canada, under date the 4th October, 1906, to the effect that :

Whereas the present mail tender that is used for transferring the mails from the royal mail steamers to the Rimouski wharf is old and unsuitable for the work required of her, besides the style of her construction does not adapt her to work safely in an open roadstead, and great inconvenience and delay has been caused by the time taken in transferring the mails.

Therefore be it resolved that the Executive Council of this Federation respectfully petition the government to provide a new approved sea-going tender, with powerful machinery and appliances for the rapid handling of the mails; further such a vessel would be able to proceed down the gulf and transfer of the mails take place en route, thereby effecting a considerable saving of time, besides adding to the safety in handling of such valuable matter.

MONCTON WORKSHOPS.

Mr. DANIEL asked :

1. Have tenders been called for leasing car and workshops at Moncton?

2. If so, what tenders have been received, from whom, and for what amount ?

3. Has any tender been accepted ? If so, whose tender, and for what amount ?

Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for Minister of Railways and Canals). Only one tender was received and no action has as yet been taken thereon; the matter is now under consideration by the department.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a copy of all papers and correspondence, &c., in connection with an account of the town of Truro against the Intercolonial Railway for sewerage frontage.—Mr. Stanfield—by Mr. R. L. Borden.

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and other documents relating to an accident which happened at the Intercolonial Railway crossing known as Hanlon's crossing, near Mulgrave, Nova Scotia, on the 3rd of December last, whereby Captain James Forrestall lost his life; and also, the evidence taken at the investigation subsequently held by officers of the department and the report made thereon. —Mr. Sinclair.

For a return, so far as not already furnished, showing, except in so far as the same has already been brought down, what amount has been expended on wharfs, piers and harbours each year since 1895, and the amount expended in each province.—Mr. Blain.

For a copy of all orders in council, reports, documents, correspondence and papers from the 1st of January, 1907, to the present time, relating to the passage of United States war ships or training ships through the St. Lawrence canals and great lakes, including a statement showing the number of United States war ships or training ships which have passed through the St. Lawrence canals during that period, and a statement of all such war ships or training ships now on the great lakes, and particulars of the tonnage, horsepower, armament and crew of such war ship or training ship, and of the naval reserves or other naval forces of the United States government, or of any state government upon the great lakes; also, all correspondence respecting the proposed passage of the gunboat

'Nashville' through the St. Lawrence canals and river on her way to the great lakes next summer.—Mr. Taylor—by Mr. R. L. Borden.

For a copy of all orders in council, reports, correspondence, documents and papers relating to the appointment of Mr. W. H. P. Clement as legal adviser to the council of the Yukon Territory, or as public administrator in the Yukon Territory, or to any other office of emolument in the Yukon Territory, or relating to the resignation of the said W. H. P. Clement from any such office, or relating to the circumstances under which and reasons for which the said W. H. P. Clement ceased to act as such legal adviser, public administrator or in any other such capacity.—Mr. Sproule.

For a copy of all memorials, documents, telegrams and correspondence between the government of Prince Edward Island and the government of Canada since 30th June, 1904, with respect to the nonfulfilment of the terms of union and for claims for damages in respect thereof.—Mr. A. A. McLean (Queens, Prince Edward Island).

1. For a return showing how many tenders the Public Works Department received in 1904 for the construction of the wharf at Deschambault, in the county of Portneuf.

2. The name of each tenderer and the amount asked by each of them.

3. To whom the contract was awarded.

4. Any extras paid to the contractor, and the amounts.

5. Apart from the amount expended on the construction of the wharf, what amount the Public Works Department spent at Deschambault, county of Portneuf, from the 1st of May, 1904, to the present date, and the nature of the works it had done in that locality.

6. The names and residences of the engineer and the inspector or inspectors who had the superintendence of such work.—Mr. Monk—by Mr. W. J. Roche (Marquette).

For a return showing all the lands granted to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company under their contract of May, 1902, specifying those which are patented as well as those unpatented, to date.—Mr. W. J. Roche (Marquette).

For a copy as it appeared printed in the 'Yukon World and Official Gazette' for nine months of the financial year 1906-7, of a synopsis of mining regulations referred to in the Auditor General's Report, 1906-7, at page L—37, and also setting forth the number of times the said advertisement appeared in the newspaper referred to in the time stated.—Mr. Lennox—by Mr. R. L. Borden.

For a return showing: 1. what leases or licenses, other than gill-net licenses, have been granted to capture salmon in the waters of British Columbia, when, to whom, and for what term of years?

2. What proportion of said leases or licenses purport to grant exclusive privileges, for what waters, to whom granted, and for what term of years.

3. What undertaking the granters were or are responsible for in view of the special privileges granted, and what steps the government has taken to ascertain that conditions have been carried out.

4. The penalty provided for not making use of the privileges granted, and what steps the government has taken to ascertain if the conditions have been complied with.

5. What licenses can be cancelled in case of non-user.—Mr. J. D. Reid—by Mr. R. L. Borden.

For a copy of specifications, tenders, contracts, orders in council, extension or renewal of contracts, in connection with Quebec harbour improvements in 1903 and subsequently; and of all letters, correspondence and memoranda in connection therewith; and also, a statement of the sums of money paid on account of the work in and subsequent to 1903.—Mr. Lennox—by Mr. R. L. Borden.

For a return showing: 1. The names and places of birth and domicile of all civil engineers and engineers' assistants, employed on the field or office staff of the National Transcontinental Railway at any time or times during the years 1905, 1906, 1907 and 1908.

2. The date of each such engineer's first employment on such staff, his age, the period or periods of his service during such years, and in what capacity or duty so employed from time to time.

3. Their salaries and allowances from time to time.

4. The suspensions or termination of service, the periods and dates thereof, and the reasons thereof.

5. Whether such engineers were or were not members of any Canadian society or institute of Civil Engineers, or other such foreign society or institute.

6. And also for a return covering the same information under the above several heads, as to all civil engineers, and engineers' assistants employed upon the fields or office staff of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway during the aforesaid years or portions thereof.

7. And for a copy of all papers, reports and correspondence of and with the Department of Labour, or with or by any department of the government, or between the departments, relating to the employment and matters above detailed, and not already brought down.—Mr. W. J. Roche (Marquette).

For a return, so far as not already furnished, showing what amount has been expended on wharfs, piers and harbours each year since 1895, and the amount expended in each province.—Mr. Blain.

PURCHASE OF GOVERNMENT SUPPLIES.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto) moved:

That all the supplies purchased for the use of the various departments of the government should be procured on the basis of public tender and contract, under the direction of a competent purchasing commission, and with regard primarily to quality and price.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of the session I gave notice of three resolutions which have been delayed, and the reason for the delay was in part the desire which I had to have the report of the Civil Service Commission brought down before they were taken up. It is a little remarkable that the propositions involved in the three resolutions have all been treated more or less fully by the Civil Service Commission, and that the report of that commission has been in favour of the principle of all three —the first one being a non-partisan civil service commission, which is a plank in the platform of the Liberal-Conservative party, and the other two being cognate resolutions.

It would almost seem superfluous to spend very much time in discussing the principles upon which the expenditure of public money should be conducted in a country like this, and yet it may not be inopportune to briefly state them. In the first place I suppose we will all agree that the money to be expended is the people's money, that it does not belong to the individual minister who may have a portion of it placed at his disposal, nor is it the property of the party upon which the government depends for support. It is the money of the state paid by and to be expended for the benefit of the public. I suppose we also will agree that this public money ought to be expended simply and only for the public good, that it ought not to be diverted to private uses in any shape or form, that it ought not to be expended for the sake of strengthening the minister or the government beyond what strength legitimately comes to every government from wise and proper expenditures as authorized by parliament.

I suppose we will also agree that the government are the trustees of the public. Parliament is elected to do the business of the public and the government is surely a committee of parliament. The oath a member takes when he enters parliament and the obligation he assumes when he enters the cabinet and is sworn in as a member of the Privy Council, show that ministers or governments are simply representative trustees acting for the public.

But having said so much on that point, it may not be out of the way to observe that there exists a continual centrifugal tendency, or a tendency to fly off from the central theory and prnciple; and an essential to good government is the existence of a strenuous opposition ever on the alert to check that tendency and hold the government down to the true position. In the old idyllic times when the republic was small and thoroughly honest, everybody worked for the good, and solely for the good, of the state; but if you take from the middle ages on to the present, the history of parliamentary government has been rather that of a contest to work back to this central idea of trusteeship from a practice which was totally different. We find the king possessed of the public domain and in control of the army, and considering himself justified in using both for his own personal advantage, to intrench himself in power, and in expending what tribute he can levy or revenue he can raise on his personal favourites or in the prosecution of his favourite projects; and a most interesting study it is to take up the history of the evolution of parliament and free government and follow the successive stages by which the people have vindicated the idea of trusteeship against the theory of one man power. So far as observation goes, it is a tendency of the party in our time to rather put itself in the place of the king of those days, and to consider itself the owner of the public moneys and entitled to dispose of them, not merely with reference to the public good, but conjoined more or less—and when more always detrimental—with the idea of a certain right, as the common saying goes, to distribute the spoil to the victors for the time being. And I think it is essential to good government that there should be a strong and successful movement against any such tendency and towards the primary idea of which I spoke at first.

In a young country like Canada there is another reason which strengthens the proper theory and practice of the expenditure of public money. Canada is a young and comparatively a poor country. That is, it is comparatively poor, as regards its ability to contribute to the great works it requires, and comparatively poor also, taking into account its slender capital resources for the work it has to do. So that in Canada there has been a continual strain and desire, and I may say a generous acquiescence in the payment of contributions to the utmost extent of the ability of the country in order to overtake, as far as possible, the immense demands for development and the progress which can only be had by development. Therefore in a country like ours any waste of public money comes to be almost in the nature of a crime. Where money is so hard to get, where the demands are so extensive and varied, where it is impossible, either by contribution or by borrowing, to meet all the demands that the country makes, it becomes of the utmost importance and no doubt it ought to be the stern and stubborn resolve of every administrator to make the hardly earned and hardly paid contributions of the country go directly and without waste to the effective point, that is to the service and the successful completion of the service.

In forty years this Canadian people, at first about four millions, and now a little over six millions, have paid in taxation the immense sum of $1,217,000,000. In 1867-8 the taxation amounted to $12,000,000, and in 1907-8 to about $73,000,000. Thus it will be seen that the total amount raised is not at all a measure of these later years, in which the amount of taxation has been doubled, trebled and is now six times as great as in the early years of the confederacy. It is also to be taken into account, and, I think, ought to be kept in mind by every one of us, that the drain of taxation is less obvious because of the mode we have of levying our taxes. But, though it is less obvious, and therefore is more easily acquiesced in, it is still, of course, altogether true that the burden is exactly the same, the drain is exactly the same,—if, indeed, it is not arguable that both the cost and the burden are increased by the indirect method.

Now, it would seem that two points might be easily agreed upon by all. The first is that the public moneys should only go to necessary objects, and, should go to these necessary objects in the order of their necessity. There are a great many things that are necessary in this country, but they are not all possible, and the administrator has to select that which stands nearest in the point of necessity and go ahead, as far as the country can consistent with its ability to contribute towards great works of public development. And the second is that the money which is appropriated for every service should go directly to that service and reach its objective with as little deviation from the direct line and with as little waste as possible. For, therein is, of course, very great saving. The electric current, when it was first sent along the wire, went at a leakage of fifty or sixty per cent, the electric current to-day goes at a leakage brought down to ten, or seven or even five per cent. This great saving has been effected by improved methods of insulation, so that nearly all the power that is produced reaches the objective point. The same should be true with reference to the expenditures of the country. If every dollar appropriated, could go straight and without leakage or loss to the objective point the country would gain by having so much more devoted to the real work of the public service.

Now, it would seem that, with these two principles laid down, the first thing to do would be to apply modern business methods to the expenditures of the government—You will see, Mr. Speaker, that I am arguing this question simply on the general and non-partisan ground, and I intend to do so until the end of the remarks I have to make.—Is not this true, Mr. Speaker?—that the method most difficult to improve, the method least appreciative of proposals for change is the bureaucratic method. Business men have the strain of competition, and the keen mind is always on the alert to find methods better than those employed by a rival, so that expenditures may be lessened, waste saved and the effect made more perfect. Thus, business methods within the last ten or twelve years have had an immense movement forward. Have government methods had anything like a proportionate movement forward. Or is it not true that the staid, conservative, and sometimes lazy, bureaucratic methods have lagged behind the business methods and consequently are not up to date? Another thing I think is true as well: Hardly any of us have taken sufficient account of the immense strides forward both as to extent and variety in the business of this country within the last fifteen or twenty years—though, it may be that our administrators under the present regime have been in a better position than others in that respect. Take almost any department, and whilst the old bureaucratic method could have—to use the phrase—'collared' the workings of that department twenty-five years ago, that method would be absolutely a child in arms in attempting to deal with the extended business and diversified ramifications of that business at the present time. And so, if any department of the government is not keenly alive to these two facts—first that it is of the essence of the bureaus to go slow and make a few improvements, and that business is continually increasing and widening and under competitive methods grows sharper every year—is it not true that we are liable to waken any day, unless extreme vigilance be used, and find that our methods are far behind the times and that our business is at loose ends because of that fact?

Now, as soon as you make the plea to apply modern business methods to government—that is, let us say, to the expenditures of the government—you meet with the old-time objections. One of these is that a government cannot do business like a business man. Well, I do not take any stock in that objection at all. That objection, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred comes from the incapable man or the unwilling man. But if you take these two classes out, I think you will find a response from every intelligent administrator that the government, just the same as the individual or corporation, must have a mind upon improved business methods and improved business systems. Another objection is that you cannot do as an individual does but that you have your dignity to keep up, you have your position to look after. I have as little sympathy with that objection. I think the minister's dignity, the administrator's dignity, anybody's dignity, is better conserved by his character and his ability, and I may say, by a simple, plain, good, Canadian scale of living. I think that ministers—although, perhaps I ought not to give the advice—I think that men high in authority ought to set an example of plain, straight and simple Canadian living to the great Canadian people over whose fortunes and destinies for the time being they preside. So I have no sympathy at all, quite the contrary, with that idea that nothing but lavish expenditure can keep up the dignity and the position of a representative of Canada. I have read that at the Hague conference there were some of the inferior powers, and very inferior powers, that spent, I was going to say, almost millions of money in lavish entertainments at the Hague, under the mistaken idea that in so doing they were keeping up the dignity of their country and of their position. Instead of that, they have been laughed at at every court in Europe, and all over the world where the information has gone.

There is really no good reason, when we come down to be honest with each other, why we should not apply modern business methods to the administration of a government; and if it be necessary in order to do that, let traditions crumble and let them pass. The business man who has been brought up in a certain school and suddenly wakes up to the knowledge that his neighbour is getting ahead of him because he has thrown off old cloaks and has got a brand new set of business methods, mighty soon breaks with the traditions and theories of the past—if he has an active mind and is competent for his business. So there may be many old traditions which are good, and there may be many old traditions which are hanging around the departments of government that are bad; and if, in order to bring in modern business methods, and buy what you want direct, it is necessary to rend these old garments, then let them be rent in twain and thrown aside.

Now, suppose you take a live business man, or a corporation, and put him in the atmosphere of the government and ask him to construct and carry out his business as the government does its business, in the way of expenditures, would he do it? Why, Mr. Speaker, there would be no reason to ask him the question twice, he would simply say, No, Sir, I do not propose to hazard my capital and to commit business suicide, I could not carry on my business the way you carry on yours. For instance, he has a million dollars of capital that goes into an expensive construction. He does not go to Tom, Dick and Harry, who may have some claim of relationship, or some claim of friendship, or some ulterior object to serve, and buy from them his lumber, and supplies, and everything the like of that, in the way that a government, in 99 cases out of 100, buys its supplies. And all through, to make a long story short, in his equipment, in his labour, in the purchase of his material, in working it up to the point of completion, and in its distribution, if he were guided by these practices which prevail with a government—not necessarily, although they often do it—why, as I have said before, it would be absolutely impossible for a modern business man to conduct his business successfully.

Now in the present system of government expenditures, particularly the buying of supplies, and that is what my resolution deals with, we find in the first place that there is no uniformity at all. Here you have in the first place, the good old system of buying upon well considered tender and contract; but you find that system falling into swift desuetude. In some departments it exists, in perhaps one or two, almost wholly; in some, in small part. But so far as supplies are concerned, in nine-tenths of the whole expenditure, that system has gone out of date entirely. I believe that the Minister of Militia in regard to his supplies for camps and the like of that, adheres to the old system of purchasing on genuine public tender. I think that claim has been made, and I am not ready to dispute it at this moment. I think in the penitentiaries branch of the Justice Department something of the same is carried out; and I believe that in the Northwest Mounted Police supplies, for the most part, that system is carried out. My right hon. friend would be able to say whether that is so.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Seventy-five per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. But when you pass out of those departments, so far as supplies are concerned, you have retrograded from that principle and from that method through several distinct grades. First, there was this kind of public tender and contract by circulars addressed to party friends. That is spurious. That is better than individual buying just from one person, although, as all administrators know, where these circulars go around to different friends, it is very easy for them to divide up different kinds of articles that are required, and for each to tender for his own particular part. That may be done. But suppose it is not done, that is but a mere make-shift, and departs entirely from the principle of genuine tender and public contract. Then there comes the vicious system of purchase through middlemen. There lies an article in the shop where it was made, or in the shop where it is sold at first hand; but the government does not go there and get, by means of proper purchase, the article at its lowest. It employs the middleman, and the middleman makes his profit of ten, or twenty, or fifty, or a hundred, or a hundred and eighty, or two hundred per cent, as the case may be. Now that is a wide departure from the old system of tender and contract, and it is a most vicious, and wasteful, and indefensible method of buying. That method of buying is all too common, as has been proved in actual transactions that have been brought to light.

Then there is the list purchase, that you call the patronage list. You want to buy goods for the public departments in Ottawa, you want to buy furniture, you want to buy carpets, you want to buy a hundred and one different things. Certain friends are put upon the patronage list; when something is required, an officer looks over the list, takes one of the names, goes down and orders what is required for the department. Then there is the personal buying where the minister, or officer of the department, tells the man who has to buy: Go to such a person and buy that from him, and see that the prices are fair and just. Appended to all these, before they go to the Auditor General, is the simple phrase, the now almost absolutely meaningless phrase, 'Certified to, that the qualities are as required, and that the prices are fair and just.' When a boiler was bought and there was paid three times the price it was worth, that certificate of good quality and fair and reasonable value was appended to the bill. So it runs through the list until it comes to be nothing but a meaningless phrase which is attached as a matter of course and with very little else in the way of conscience or of carefulness being exercised in the matter. These are the methods and they run through all the departments. In some departments all phases of this are to be found—in some departments fewer or more according as the department is managed. But there is no uniformity; it is confusion worse confounded. Fancy an up-to-date business corporation making its purchases in that kind of slip-shod, expensive and careless way; no business could prosper and no up-to-date business methods could be said to be in operation if such were in vogue. Then, as to prices, what do you find? You find that the very same department, buying in the same region of country where there ought not to be and is not in reality any variation in price, pays all kinds of prices for the very same material. What else do you find? You find that there are departments buying, in Kingston or at other points, and are paying for exactly the same staple, different prices. And so, as there is no uniformity in methods there is no uniformity in prices. It depends upon a multitude of things; but in no case does it seem to depend upon the quality of goods that are required and for which a fair price ought to be paid and nothing more.

Mr. PATERSON. Could not that happen under tender ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, anything can happen anywhere except in heaven.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. And in heaven some things cannot happen, but the last resource of the objector is, with respect to any good method, cannot some way be found of beating the method? It can, but it does not require anybody to find a way of beating these methods. The very best means the beating of the government.

Mr. PATERSON. I am not objecting, but I want to see where the hon. gentleman's contentions lead.

Mr. FOSTER. It happened the other day ; the Minister of Militia was defending some of his estimates and there was a tender down at Rigaud for potatoes and the like of that. Rigaud is not very far from Montreal and yet it turned out that under tender the most extravagant prices were paid. The minister agreed that they were extravagant. You are not obliged to take any man's tender. Under any proper supervision the moment that tender would have come in they would have said to the contractor at Rigaud : No, Sir, we do not pay that much per pound for potatoes at Rigaud; we will send potatoes from Montreal where we can get them at a fair market price. It is always, by proper supervision, possible to mitigate wrongs that may come up under the tender system and in the end you are not obliged to accept any tender, you can throw it aside, call again for other tenders and, through your purchasing department, or in some way, you can see that you were getting these articles at a fair price. Then, there is no proper check upon the quality. In some of the departments I know by my own experience and observation that they have trained men to look after the quality. In some cases, I think, it is well done, but as a rule, it is not. But, there is not a bit of use in amplifying it. We can find that that is going on everywhere and that there is a laxness in the system of inspection. The very fact that when you call for pure jams for a military camp, you find that all kinds of jams come in shows that. I am not saying that these are adulterated jams. My hon. friend (Mr. Marshall) who spoke the other day, said that all cheaper jams were not adulterated and they are not if they are not mixed with bad things, but if you pay the price of pure jam and then find that it is compound, while you are getting a healthy article, you are not getting what you ought to get and you are not doing what you ought to do with the people's money. There is not the keenness and thoroughness about the inspection as to quality that there ought to be. Then, as to the quantities, there is no standard. There is one point that ought to be taken into account. Go through all these different departments. Just as different individuals have their different scales of living, one man wasteful and extravagant in his family and the other man frugal and plain living, so you find it in connection with these different services. One man is very extravagant in his prices and another one looks after exactly the same kind of service, and does it, I am bound to say, quite as well, and his prices are away below those of the other man. Now, the government ought to have some equalizing power or hand somewhere so that when it is fairly established what ought to be a fair provision to be made, we will say, for workingmen, they should make that a uniform standard as far as possible and see that it is carried out through all branches of the service. Why should a sailor who happens to have the good fortune to live on a River St. Lawrence steamer live like a fighting-cock when a sailor who has the misfortune to live down by Prince Edward Island has to be content with plain, good food and plenty of it? It is not for the benefit of the service of the country. To illustrate that let me read a table that I have prepared from the returns brought down. It is not a full table but it shows exactly what might be found by further research. Here is the cost of provisioning men in the Militia Department:

COST OF PROVISIONS—MILITIA DEPARTMENT.

| — | Days. | Number rationed. | Total Cost. | Cost per man per day. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | | $ | Cts. |
| Royal Military College..... | 192 | 90 | 8,640 | 50 |
| Halifax Garrison | 274 | 1,080 | 64,109 | 21½ |
| Quebec Military School..... | 274 | 189 | 11,400 | 21 9/10 |

Why should not soldiers in a garrison be fed as well as the men are on board our steamers? I say they ought to be. I believe they are. They are given good, healthy, plain, satisfying fare and that is all that ought to be given anywhere. If they are ill then I think that medical comforts should be given to them.

Mr. W. ROCHE (Halifax). I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether the men in the garrison buy a part of their supplies in addition to what is given them?

Mr. FOSTER. Not unless they wish. I do not think there is any law in this country which prevents a man, be he a soldier, a sailor or any one else, from buying anything he wants outside of that which is furnished to him. The country surely attends to the bodily wants of the men wherever they are and attends to them well. Here is the cost per man of provisioning the government steamers and note how it reads:

Mr. FOSTER.

You will notice in the first place from these figures that in some cases the cost is 400 per cent greater than it takes the military establishment to look after its men. I omitted to say that the military camps are composed of good, strong hearty eaters; the men are brought from the rural districts, kept in the open air and have good appetites, and yet the Minister of Militia stated in the House, I think, that the cost of rationing a man was somewhere about 20 cents per day. We also notice that in the case of these steamers there is a great deal of difference as between themselves; here is one running from 55 cents up to 81 cents, almost doubling itself in two years; here is another one which costs on an average over $1 per man per day for the three years under review. The cost on the different vessels seems to run up and down with no conceivable regularity. But speaking generally, any of them are from 40 per cent to 60 per cent greater than the cost in the Militia Department, and some of them are from 300 to 400 per cent greater in cost. That arises from lack of system, lack of supervision and extravagance in purchase. It may arise in some part from extravagance in living, though I think the main difference will be found in extravagance of purchase.

Now, Sir, in conclusion let me say that buying is an expert business in this age, and that it can be made into a perfect system by the proper men taking it in hand and working it out, but that the clerks in the different offices can never reduce it to a perfect system. It implies in the first place knowledge of the current prices of the country from one end to the other, and it implies also a constant watchfulness upon the part of the body in charge of it as to the variation of these prices, and it involves as well constant and unremitting supervision and watchfulness and care.

What to my mind would be the remedy would be the appointment of a purchasing commission whose business and whose sole business would be to do the purchasing. They would be expert men and business men who would be capable in the first place, and having it as their whole business and devoting their whole time and attention to it could introduce that regularity, that uniformity and that ceaseless supervision from one central power which to my mind would bring the matter as near to a science as it possibly could. But if you have that purchasing commission you must have a commission of independent men; it must be absolutely free from solicitations of patronage; it must be absolutely independent in that respect keeping in view simply the quality of the goods, the quantity that is purchased and the price paid as being a fair and reasonable price, thus buying at the very best advantage for the country's good. It would give every citizen in the country the same chance to furnish supplies for the country's use, without fear on the one hand and without favour on the other. If my personal views were carried out I would ask that the members of this commission should be appointed for life and removable only for cause, much in the same way as the Auditor General is removable, and not by the government itself. In no other way can I see how it is possible to put new business methods into operation under a proper commission unless you guard strenuously and carefully and perfectly with regard to these things. With that machinery in operation, with men keenly alive to their work, always ready to take advantage of the newest and best systems, always ready by their knowledge to take advantage of the best sources from which to buy, always careful that the current prices are known to them, always careful that the quality of the goods is there, that the quantity purchased is delivered, and that when it is delivered it shall properly be issued out again; with that system in proper working order, it would render the very best service to the country, and I would have that commission and all its purchases under audit by the Audit Department; under severe and perfect audit. With some such system as that it appears to me that we could do a great thing for our country. I have said that the taxpayers contribute a large amount of money for the services of the country. From 1867-68 until 1908 the expenditures of this country have run up to the enormous sum of $1,879,000,000; beginning, of course, with a very moderate expenditure and ending in the year 1908 with an expenditure of $110,000,000. What proportion of that large expenditure goes for supplies I cannot tell, nor have I the time nor the means to get at the figures, but I know the amount expended for supplies must be very large indeed. Now, suppose the supplies bought in the present haphazard way cost us $5,000,000 a year, by a system such as I have outlined we could save from 20 per cent to 30 per cent in the cost, so that taking the calculation in this rather loose way, if we save 25 per cent a year on the $5,000,000 purchases there you have a cool $1,000,000 every year which is saved and which ought to be saved because it is the people's money, and which would be there to go into the improvements that the people demand and that our country is starving for. Is it not a process worth putting into operation? Waste begets waste, and there is no administration under the sun which tolerates wasteful methods in its departments which will not feel the reflex of that all through the departments in the lowering of their general tone. It works out from the lowest to the highest, and is a deleterious influence in the department and in the service of the country generally. These things come to be seen and known, and, worse than that, little by little distil into the public mind until every day you will meet men who think the government is fair game, who say if they can get a larger price from the government than they can get from their private business sources, that is so much gain for them, and is perfectly right. The citizens there who pays taxes and the citizen here who dispenses them should have the same high sense of the expenditure of public moneys by trustees for the people's benefit.

Lastly, if we can get some such system as this, it would be one of the most important saving and elevating influences in the public life of the country. See how it works; see how reciprocal it is. Your steward goes off from a government vessel; he wants to spend a hundred dollars or so. He goes up to a party man and says, 'I want so-and-so from you'; he gets it; 'what are the prices?' These seem a little too high. 'But,' the party man says, 'you know I have to help the party, and I cannot be so close about my prices; they are all right; take them along.' And in nine cases out of ten they are taken along; you cannot run through a single page of the Auditor General's Report without seeing it. What else happens? When the time for contributions comes along, the party worker goes to the man who has had the patronage and says: 'I want a contribution from you.' 'Why do you come to me?' 'Oh, you have been getting the government patronage, you make a good thing out of it, and you have to help the party.' As candid men, sitting face to face with each other, is not that the way the thing goes? Don't we all know it is? Is that the best thing for the public life of this country? We all know that it is not. Do away with this bad purchasing system, substitute the proper business method in its place, and you do away with one of the causes that are deteriorating and corrupting public life, and you introduce with the new system a method for elevating and heightening the tone of public life in the country which would be of incalculable value.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have not gone extensively into history; and I have not cited examples from other countries. This is a simple, plain business matter, which we in Canada ought to be able to settle in the best way for ourselves. It does not make much difference what the United States or Great Britain or any other country does, although, if I did bring examples, they would show, so far as my reading goes, that Canada is lagging away behind the United States and Great Britain and every other progressive country in the way its supplies are bought. Examine the processes in Great Britain and see with what exceedingly great care these are carried on. The Minister of Customs may say: But breaks take place—so they do—and accidents will happen in the best regulated families. But nobody in Great Britain thinks for a single moment, because these do take place now and again, of sweeping away that fine strong system and reverting to the old idea of patronage and plunder. Then while we in Canada have been sleeping on our oars in regard to the public service and in regard to our public expenditures, the United States has been going forward by leaps and bounds. The old motto, to the victors belong the spoils, was taken down by President Cleveland, and it has not waved on a flag pole of the United States from that time to this; and under President Roosevelt to-day both the civil service and all these great activities of government in expenditure and purchase are immeasurably higher than they ever were before in any part of the United States. Would I surprise you if I told you that ninety per cent or thereabouts of all the public offices in the United States to-day, are filled on competition and merit. Day by day, month by month, now one and now another proclamation is issued by the president, under the powers that he possesses, bringing another section of the civil service under the civil service requirements. And so the United States has immeasurably distanced us.

Now, it is time for Canada to sit up and think. We are throwing off the short clothes of childhood; we are putting on the raiment of dignity that becomes a nation; we are laying the foundations for tremendous activities, and there will be immense expenditures and immense purchases; and it becomes us as prudent men to lay the foundations clean and straight and solid. A civil service is one of the finest corps that does battle for the standards and for the permanence of a nation. You may laud your soldiers that fight the outside battles as much as you like; but the civil service of the country is doing its work of conquest and of homekeeping. Britain owes more of her territory than we think of to her trained civil service, and the matter I speak of is fundamental in connection with the general civil service of the country. A nation is made permanent and strong, and its finances are kept in order by the work of a trained and competent and faithful civil service; and you cannot have such a service unless these matters of every day occurrence of expenditure and purchase, are pitched on as high a plane as you want to pitch the service of the body itself.

Hon. WM. PATERSON. I would like to ask my hon. friend a question. It is a practical question that he is dealing with, and my previous remark was made not by way of criticism or opposition at all; but when he was just now giving the illustration of the steamboat, it occurred to me—not by way of trying to weaken what he said at all—whether his scheme contemplated the purchase of large quantities and the keeping of general stores; that is to say, would you have a large stores department, in which you would keep large quantities of goods and give them out as wanted, or would you continue to buy, as is done now, when the ship touches a certain port? Has the hon. gentleman thought on that matter?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The way it used to be done in Halifax by the imperial government was to call for tenders for the supply of all goods that might be required for the troops during a fixed period. They would see that there was a principal contractor, who was able to carry out the contract, and he would fix his prices; and they would accept the lowest tender.

Mr. FOSTER. The same thing is done in Great Britain to-day. But my general answer to that is that once you establish the system there will be no difficulty in working out the details satisfactorily. In a country like this, there will be exceptions to every rule. There will be some things we cannot get by contract, but they will be few compared with the mass. There are cases in which stock articles should be bought and kept in store, but there are some others in which waste would result if that was done. The details however could be worked out if the system were once established, and competent men put in charge.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I am very glad, Mr. Speaker, to be able to say, at the outset, that in a great many of the observations of my hon. friend I fully agree, and it is with some regret that I have to take exceptions to some of his remarks. I do so all the more reluctantly, that I wish to offer my congratulations to the hon. gentleman, if he will accept them—my sincere congratulations—for the manner in which he has presented his views to the House. He has presented them in such a way as to invite a frank and free discussion of this whole matter, and I shall endeavour to follow him in giving my views. At the outset he stated that it ought to be the object of a government to carry on the business of the country in the same manner as a business man carries on his own private business. For my part I would be quite willing to agree with that doctrine, if it were possible to carry it out. But does my hon. friend believe it possible, from his own experience, to carry out such a principle to its logical consequence? Take the very first proposition of my hon. friend, because there are two involved in his motion:

> That all the supplies purchased for the use of the various departments of the government should be procured on the basis of public tender and contract.

To this no objection can be taken. It ought to be the rule which should guide every government, and it has been found the only method by which a government can safely do business. But is this a rule which is observed by business men? When a business man wants to put up a public building, does he confine himself to this one rule? Everybody knows he does not. Sometimes he will call for tenders and sometimes he will give the contract without doing so. Sometimes he may select a contractor, who may charge him from 10 per cent to 15 per cent more than he could get the work done for by another man, and he does this because he thinks he will get better value from the higher priced contractor. But no government could exercise that discretion. We know that there are contractors who are absolutely unimpeachable, who would give greater satisfaction than others, but if we were to limit our choice to those and not give the public a chance to tender, we would be immediately assailed with the charge of favouritism. A government is bound, under the circumstances, to call for tenders. So that it is impossible for a government to conduct the business of the country exactly as a business man would conduct his own affairs. The safest rule is that which has been laid down by my hon. friend, and that is that in the expenditure of all public moneys, contracts should be given and only given after tenders are invited and then given to the lowest tenderer. But that is a rule which no business man would consider himself bound by in his own private affairs. To that rule, as applicable to a government, there can be no objection. But I must call my hon. friend's attention to a qualification. It is not possible, as he knows, in every instance, to have the expenditure of the government carried out by contract and tender. My hon. friend referred to the Mounted Police, the department with which I am connected. I think I can say that that is a fairly well administered department. I am not taking the credit to myself but give it altogether to the able and diligent deputy who has been in charge of the force ever since its initiation. Under all administrations, that force has given pretty general satisfaction. 75 per cent of the money voted for it by parliament is expended under contract, but the minor expenditures, amounting to 25 per cent—the purchase of a few bushels of potatoes, for instance, the provisioning of the men here and there throughout the provinces—these it is impossible to do by contract. These have to be purchased on the judgment of the minister, and if he is blessed with a good deputy, the matter runs very smoothly, and since I have been connected with the department, I am not aware that it has been subjected to any severe criticism on that score. On the whole therefore it is not possible to lay down the hard and fast rule that every expenditure should be by contract, for there must be a small margin which has to be left to the judgment of the minister. We have a standing rule governing the expenditure of public money on public works, and that is that all contracts involving over $5,000 should only be given after public competition and tender, but any lesser contracts can be given on the judgment of the minister. So with regard to the purchase of supplies, the principle of tender and contract should prevail, as a general rule, leaving a small latitude for minor expenditures, which must be left of necessity to the judgment of the men entrusted with the administration of the department. But I now come to what is really the crucial point of the motion to which he asks the House to commit itself. The resolution goes on to say:

—under the direction of a competent purchasing commission, and with regard primarily to quality and price.

As to these qualifying words 'with regard primarily to quality and price,' I have no observation to offer except that I agree with them. But I would call my hon. friend's attention to the words 'under the direction of a competent purchasing commission.' He has outlined here a plan, which, I think, he himself will revise before he can expect it to be accepted even by his own friends. To many of his preliminary observations, no one can take exception. He outlined the history of the development of government, showing that at first the sovereign was a despot responsible to nobody; he showed the efforts made from time to time to have the money which the sovereign collected from the people expended in a manner upon which the people could have a word to say—they, after all, being the parties chiefly interested. But I have this to observe to my hon. friend—and I think he will agree with me upon reflection—that in these contests which have taken place in all parts of the world between the sovereign and the people, between despotic power and the spirit of liberty, the one method which has been most successful (certainly the one which seems to me must commend itself to his judgment as it does to mine) is the British method, the one by according to which expenditures are to be made by the sovereign but under ministerial responsibility. I do not know that any principle more calculated to do justice to all parties has ever been adopted in any country than that under which we carry on our own government and on which our system of ministerial responsibility is based. At the present time, in England and in this country, this is the principle under which expenditure is carried on. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster), if I correctly understood him, now proposes a complete departure from that system. If I understood him, he proposes that all the expenditure in connection with the purchase of supplies shall be made, not under ministerial responsibility but by commission—he went so far as to say, by a commission appointed for life. In other words, if I understood him aright, henceforth, if his voice prevails, two or three commissioners appointed for life, and therefore not responsible to any person, will manage these expenditures;—they may do well, or they may do wrong; if they do well, well and good, but, if they do wrong, there would be no remedy except, I suppose, impeachment or something of that kind, a remedy which would be difficult to apply and, which, to my mind, is not to be compared to the remedy we have under our present system. Moreover, if such a commission were appointed, I ask my hon. friend what would be their work?—what would they do in reality? Admitting the proposition laid down by my hon. friend, that supplies should be purchased under contract, after public tender and the lowest tender accepted, except where good cause is shown for not doing so, the work of the commission would be restricted within very narrow limits, and I do not see how such a commission would be an improvement upon our present system. But, apart from that, I revert to the first point, and to which I invite my hon. friend's attention—that the remedy he suggests cannot be compared in efficacy with the remedy we have under our present system.

Mr. FOSTER—Will the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) allow me a moment ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. The right hon. gentleman is basing an argument against the resolution upon an idea. I suggested as to how the purchasing commission should be appointed. I said that if my own sentiments should prevail, I would have such a purchasing commission as I described. But the right hon. gentleman will see that my resolution has two parts to it: first, that supplies should be procured on the basis of public tender and contract—to which the right hon. gentleman agreed—and, second 'under the direction of a competent purchasing commission.' We may have differing ideas as to how the commission should be appointed and what status it should have. I gave my ideas, but these are not read into the resolution, though, I must say, I would try to have them carried into the reality if I could.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I interpreted the resolution in the light of the remarks with which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) supported it. And in those remarks I understood him to say that the commission he wants to have appointed would be appointed for life, and therefore, I understood, quite independent of parliamentary control.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be my idea, personally.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I may say that I believe—I sincerely believe—that on reflection, my hon. friend will agree with me that this idea is not one which ought to be adopted. It would not be conducive to the good effect we all have in mind. Everybody agrees with my hon. friend that the people's money ought to be economically expended. Taxation is a burden, it takes money from the hard earnings of the people, and therefore it is right and proper that every cent should be so expended as to give the greatest amount of benefit to the people. But it is not in the experience of mankind—and I call my hon. friend's attention particularly to this—that men absolutely irresponsible have proved beneficial to administration. On the contrary, I think that if there is a principle that is more true than another, it is that all men in authority should be subjected to some responsibility. That is, at all events, the principle of our constitution, and I do not think it would be advisable to depart from it. But now, perhaps my hon. friend will agree with me that, on the whole, he has carried his ideas too far. Let us say, then, that we should take a modified form of his idea and should have a commission appointed, not for life, but during good behaviour and responsible to parliament. Does my hon. friend believe that such a commission would discharge this duty more effectively than it is now discharged? If we maintain the principle—and I think it is a principle which every government should be tied to—that all important expenditures should be made under contract and after tender, I do not think that there is any necessity for any departure from the present system. At all events, that is the way the matter strikes me ; and, as I said a moment ago, I offer these remarks in the same spirit in which my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) offered his, in order to invite discussion, in order to provoke a frank expression of opinion from all sides upon this very important topic. I repeat what I have said that, as to the first part of the resolution, the government is disposed to accept it and to have it apply to them. But as to the appointment of a commission, I would invite a reconsideration by my hon. friend of this new departure in our political system.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton). It seems to me that the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) practically agrees with the words of the resolution, but does not agree altogether with the speech of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) who proposed it. There is nothing in the resolution which calls for the appointment of a commission which would hold office otherwise than during pleasure. The right hon. gentleman may say: What is the advantage of a purchasing agent or commission which should hold office only during pleasure? Well, he seems to have forgotten one illustration which his own government have given. He suggests that the proposal of the hon. member from North Toronto is a departure from the principle of responsible government. Does he not recollect that the commission appointed by the present government, the National Transcontinental Railway Commission, is disbursing ten, twenty or thirty millions of dollars yearly at the present time, under that system which he regards as inconsistent with the principles of constitutional government? It seems to me that is a sufficient answer to the argument which the right hon. gentleman has addressed to the House. He must have forgotten the action of this government in 1903 and 1904, when he took that exception to the remarks of my hon. friend from North Toronto. I think that even if you appointed a purchasing agent, or a purchasing commission, and made the person or persons holding those offices removable at pleasure, you would still have a certain safeguard which is not provided under the present system.

The right hon. gentleman says that the present system is a good one. Well, I do not know that the present system is a good one, and I am bound to say that I think very legitimate criticism may be passed upon the present practice. This is not an opportune time to discuss the report which has been lately laid upon the table of the House. Surely the right hon. gentleman, looking over that report, will come to the conclusion that whatever he may say about the merits of the present system, the merits of the present system have not made themselves very manifest in certain departments of the government. Therefore, it seems to me absolutely important and even necessary that some change in method should be brought about. The right hon. gentleman concedes that the system of public tender and contract is a good one. My hon. friend from North Toronto desires not only that, but he desires something more; he desires that when, for exceptional reasons, in certain cases, that system cannot be carried out, then you should have supplies bought by an agent who will apply a uniform system to the methods which he adopts in every case. The Minister of Customs a little while ago asked for some details of the methods by which the system of tender and contract could be carried out. I pointed out to him that the Imperial government at Halifax, whose methods I have observed pretty carefully, ask for contracts, by which some responsible person or corporation undertakes to supply during the coming year all the beef, all the bread and all other supplies which are required by the troops on that station during the twelve months. They require certain securities to be put up, and they require a certain status and responsibility on the part of the contractors. But when these were obtained, then they had a contract which guaranteed to the Imperial government supplies of those various kinds during the year for the use of their troops. Is there any reason why we in Canada, a country where large supplies of various commodities are required for the public service, should not adopt a system of that kind? I am sure the right hon. gentleman, whatever he may say about the merits of the present system, cannot for a moment suggest to the House that any such method as that has been carried out on a large scale in this country. The difficulty of the present situation is that one department may have a very capable deputy minister, very careful and painstaking, and in that department things may be done in order, perhaps as well as they could be done, but in the adjoining department different conditions may prevail, conditions which may deserve criticism. I do not see any thing in the motion of my hon. friend from North Toronto which should call for any dissent from the government. His motion is this:

> That all the supplies purchased for the use of the various departments of the government should be procured on the basis of public tender and contract, under the direction of a competent purchasing commission, and with regard primarily to quality and price.

Now, the only objection taken to that was the one I mentioned a moment ago, the objection taken by the Prime Minister, to the effect that this does away with the principle of ministerial responsibility. Let me point out to the right hon. gentleman that it would do away less with the principle of ministerial responsibility than that system which he himself has created for building the National Transcontinental Railway, and I will tell him why. On the National Transcontinental Railway you have handed over the whole business, the letting of contracts, the provision of supplies, everything which is necessary for building nearly 1,900 miles of road—you have handed all that over to a commission, which I think holds office during pleasure, so far as I remember. That is the case, is it not? Suppose you appoint a commission, or a purchasing agent, such as my hon. friend has suggested, what would be the result? That purchasing agent or that commission would not have carte blanche to buy all the supplies that they might see fit. It would simply exist for the purpose of providing such supplies for the public service as might be requisitioned from time to time by any department of the government. That is what it would mean, and that is what it would stand for. It would stand there as a safeguard to the public that middlemen would not be employed, that enormous profits would not be paid to these middlemen, that the purchase of supplies would be made from wholesale dealers and from manufacturers, and in that way the public interest would be served. I trust that the right hon. gentleman will, upon reflection, come to the conclusion that there is not one word in this resolution which merits his dissent, and that he will agree to the adoption of the principle which I am sure will work out in the interests of the people of this country.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The main purpose of the resolution of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is so commendable, and it has already been so well approved by the observations of the Prime Minister, that I do not wish to say a single word in a contrary sense. At the same time I think some portion of the resolution is open to the objection that has been taken by my right hon. friend, and the reasons advanced in support of the resolution seem to me not to be quite so conclusive as the hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken would imagine. My hon. friend from North Toronto says we should apply business methods to these things. Well, now let us think for a moment. Do we conduct our individual affairs according to these business methods, do we ask for tender and contract for all our personal supplies? I have no means of knowing what is the practice of my neighbours, but I think the average citizen does not resort to tenders and contracts to obtain his supplies. He goes to some reputable business establishments, some persons whom he can trust, and he purchases his goods from them on what he believes to be fair and reasonable terms. And yet he does his business in a business-like way. Of course the purchase may not be very large, but the individual is very anxious as a rule to apply business methods to his own affairs, and my observation is that he does not apply the methods which are proposed for our adoption by our hon. friends. Then passing away from the individual whose affairs may be small, let us take the action of the great corporations of the country. Do they adopt the methods proposed by my hon. friend ? To the best of my knowledge and belief they do not. I am a fairly attentive reader of the newspapers, but I have no recollection of ever seeing an advertisement in the newspapers from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company asking for supplies. I should not be rash enough to state that there is no such advertisement, but my impression is that it is not their practice to purchase supplies by tender and contract. My impression is that they have a list of persons whom they believe to be capable and competent to supply the goods, persons who have an established reputation, and they purchase supplies from these people without public tender and contract. In other words, what they regard as business methods are not the methods which my hon. friends refer to as the only business methods. The leader of the opposition has referred to the practice at Halifax in connection with the imperial service. He has seen the advertisements, I have seen them too, asking for tenders for supplies there. To that extent his argument is correct. But to give it full force he should have been able to show that the British government have a purchasing commission appointed for that purpose, as is proposed in the second part of this resolution. Now, to the best of my knowledge and belief, no such purchasing commission exists, or did exist, when the British government maintained troops at Halifax. A responsible officer, responsible to his superior officer in England, who was in turn responsible to parliament, purchased the supplies. If an excessive price was paid the only remedy was the complaint that could be made to the superior officer and ultimately to the tribunal of parliament.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That may not be technically what one would call a purchasing commission but they have a commissariat department which fulfils the very same purpose.

Mr. FIELDING. So has every department of the government of Canada. As to how well or how poorly it may be worked out is a question for debate. I am free to say that in some respects it has not been as well done as it might have been, and that there is room for reform. But, we were talking of the proposal for the establishment of a purchasing commission. Wherever you have responsible work to be done you must have men of the right kind to do it, and much will depend on the character, ability and integrity of the men who are employed for the purpose. No purchasing agents or commission will serve the purpose unless you can secure men who are capable who are at the same time alive to the performance of their duty, and who are men of the highest integrity. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition has said that the position of my right hon. friend the leader of the government is inconsistent because we have appointed a national transcontinental railway commission which has power to spend untold millions. My hon. friend omitted to mention the very important point that that commission cannot spend a dollar till they get the approval of the government which is responsible to this House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Neither can this commission.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the motion as proposed by the hon. member for North Toronto gives them full power to deal with the matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not so understand it.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member for North Toronto said that was what he wanted and we are perfectly justified in taking it as the hon. member for North Toronto stated it himself.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not so understand it.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will not say otherwise. The hon. gentleman said that what he desired to bring about was the appointment of a commission of that kind.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend must have misunderstood me. A purchasing commission, in the first place, is not an appropriating body. It cannot buy a dollar's worth unless it is requisitioned to do it. The primary responsibility is with each department; it appropriates the money, says how much it wants, the kind of goods it wants and the purchasing commission is the machinery through which they are bought.

Mr. FIELDING. But suppose that a department wanted a certain quantity of provisions, if the purchasing agent or purchasing commission had the absolute power, having first taken tenders and awarded the contract to pay whatever price they pleased, there would be no remedy in this parliament. If the price was excessive the minister would say: I am very sorry; in the good old days I was liable to be called to account here, if a mistake was made I had to bear the responsibility, but I am no longer responsible; this work has been handed over to a purchasing commission; they have the power to do the purchasing; they are responsible and the government are not. Therefore, that is the conclusion to which I think the speech of the hon. member for North Toronto would lead. I do not think he dissents from that. He said frankly that that was the result he wanted to bring about. The main object of the resolution, which is the bringing about of some reformation in this matter of purchasing supplies is commendable and I should be sorry in any way to detract from that. Nevertheless, I think that the plan proposed by the hon. member for North Toronto is unworkable and I should hesitate to have the House commit itself to the exact form of his resolution. I would therefore propose to amend his resolution by striking out all the words after the word 'contract' in the third line and by adding others. If you will permit me I will read the resolution as it would then read:

That all the supplies purchased for the use of the various departments of the government should be purchased on the basis of public tender and contract——

So far we will take the words of the hon. gentleman's resolution, and add:

so far as practicable, where especially large quantities of goods are required.

I would like also to take his words there:

with regard primarily to quality and price.

And add:

And that all such purchases should be made under the authority and direction of ministers responsible to parliament.

It seems to me that we cannot and should not wish to get away from this principle of parliamentary responsibility. Wherever you create a body which is absolutely independent of parliament it is a moral certainty that the operation of that body will not be satisfactory to the people. Those who compose it will have their own views and whims and fads, and if it is not to be responsible to parliament I am afraid it will not give satisfaction. We could have a purchasing agent, or whatever you care to call him, in each of the larger departments of the government. There is nothing in the name by which you call him; he might be the deputy minister of one department, or a chief clerk or a special purchasing agent. I think that the scheme of the hon. member for North Toronto to have a purchasing commission for the whole public service is hardly workable. Each department would have to become responsible as it now is for its own administration, and if in any case it desires large quantities of supplies I think they should be taken by tender and contract. I do not think the rule should be rigidly laid down that everything must be done by tender and contract. I have already pointed out that amongst some of our great corporations the tender and contract system is not relied upon as being in every instance the best. I could name a case where one of our great corporations wanted to have a large building constructed in one of the cities of Canada and they did not even take tenders for it. They selected a contractor and asked him his price to put up the building. They gave him the contract, he went to work and did a good job and nobody complained. I think it would be a mistake to be too rigid and to say that in every instance the tender and contract system should be applied. I think that the principle is right and that in most cases it will accomplish the purpose. The words which I suggest by way of amendment to the resolution would recognize that as a general principle tender and contract is desirable, especially where large quantities of goods are required. I would retain the principle of parliamentary responsibility which, it seems to me, is the only way in which we can carry on satisfactorily the affairs of the people. I therefore beg to move in amendment:

That all the words after the word 'contract' in the third line be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

so far as practicable, especially where large quantities of goods are required, with regard primarily to quality and price, and that all purchases should be made under the authority and direction of ministers responsible to parliament.

Mr. R. BLAIN (Peel). Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my approval of the principle laid down by my hon. friend from North Toronto in his resolution that goods should be purchased by public tender. I have tried to follow the proposed amendment of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and as I read it I think it is the reaffirming of the principle that has been applied by this government to the purchasing of goods. I cannot see that the proposed amendment suggests any alteration of the system that has been laid down and is being carried out by this government at the present time. The system that this government has adopted and which is in operation at the present time permits a minister of the Crown to go to a merchant in the city of Montreal and give him a verbal order for the supply of goods. I dissent entirely from any such practice on the part of any representative of the Crown. I have before me the evidence which was taken with respect to that case and it will be found at page 591 of the report of the evidence taken by the Public Accounts Committee in the session of 1906. This has reference to what took place between Mr. Préfontaine then Minister of Marine and Fisheries and Mr. B. J. Coghlin. Mr. Coghlin, who had an order from Mr. Prefontaine, was being examined:

Q. What was said between you?—A. There was no price nor any terms.

Q. No terms at all?—A. No terms at all.

Q. That is between you and him as to what you were to be paid?—A. None.

Q. That is quite clear? When Mr. Préfontaine left your store you had a blank order?—A. A blank order.

Q. To furnish what you thought and at what price you thought and no arrangement as to your remuneration.

As I understand it, the policy laid down by the Prime Minister this afternoon and endorsed by the Minister of Finance in his proposed amendment is, that this system shall be permitted to go on. For myself, I disagree entirely from the proposition that a minister of the Crown, without any request from his department, without any written order whatever can go to a leading political supporter and give that man a blank order to go to the old country and purchase goods without any prior agreement as to prices. Well, this gentleman went to the old country with the blank order in his pocket and not only did he purchase a class of goods which he ordinarily sold at home but he purchased goods which were not in his line at all and of which it is to be presumed he knew nothing as to the price or the quality. I read from the evidence of Mr. Coghlin:

Q. Have you china in your store?—A. No.

Q. Glassware?—A. No.

Here he stated in his sworn evidence that he did not sell china or glassware, and yet the minister gave him a blank order to go to the old country and purchase a large quantity of these goods at his own price. The evidence shows that Mr. Coghlin went to the old country, purchased $3,000 worth of goods and sent in his bill to the government. Then, as regards one item of this bill objection was taken by the Auditor General and Mr. Coghlin refunded $166.32. This is the letter:

Mr. BLAIN.

Colonel Gourdeau, Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Dear Sir,—Confirming our letter of the 10th instant we herewith inclose you a cheque in favour of the Receiver General for $166.32 refund of commission charged your department for purchases made for you last year which we hope will be satisfactory to you. This is in accordance with the interview the writer had with you lately. Kindly acknowledge receipt and oblige.

Yours truly,
B. J. COGHLIN.

This is one refund in connection with the purchase of these goods under the blank order given by the minister, and here is another:

March 29, 1906.

Colonel Gourdeau, Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Dear Sir,—Herewith we hand you our cheque for $1,171.87 in settlement of disputed account.

And this was in connection with the $3,000 worth of goods purchased for the government. Here we have this gentleman purchasing $3,000 worth of goods in the old country under a blank order given by the minister, and when the Auditor General raised a question the purchaser refunds $166.32 in one cheque and $1,171.87 by another cheque, and this occurred under the policy that the Minister of Finance to-day says should be continued by the government. I dissent from that contention of the Minister of Finance, and I say that the government should adopt the principle of purchasing their goods by public tender. The correspondence here proves that goods are purchased without tender by the Marine and Fisheries Department, that the goods are sent to the stores, that no inventory is taken of them at all and that no record is taken of these goods by the officers of the government when they are sent out of the stores. That is the condition in the Marine Department at the present time under the policy which the Minister of Finance wishes to perpetuate. Even with respect to the new accounting system in the Marine Department what do we find? We find the minister himself giving a blank order to a political friend of his, without tender, to supply the very books that are to be put into the Marine Department under the new policy which is said to be in the interest of the people. There are in this country several establishments that could supply these books. One of the largest manufacturing establishments in Canada, yes, the largest establishment of the kind in Canada is in my own constituency, the Copeland Chatterson people, and they supply what is called loose leaf ledgers. Not only has this firm an extensive establishment in Canada but they have also a large one in England which supplies the home and foreign trade. Why did not the Minister of Marine and Fisheries invite tenders from these people and from another large institution which is in the city of Ottawa and other places. But, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries says in the correspondence with Mr. Falconer : You may buy the books from this friend, Mr. Beauchemin, in Montreal, without tender.

Mr. BRODEUR. By what authority does the hon. gentleman say that Mr. Beauchemin is a political friend of the government ?

Mr. BLAIN. I will answer that by saying that in looking over the correspondence I asked my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier who this gentleman was and he said : He is an active supporter of the government in the city of Montreal. Does the Minister of Marine and Fisheries deny that ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I deny that Mr. Beauchemin, who I suppose is largely interested in this business, is.

Mr. BLAIN. Is he a Liberal ?

Mr. BRODEUR. He is a Conservative.

Mr. BERGERON. Which Beauchemin is it ?

Mr. BRODEUR. L. J. O. Beauchemin. I ask my hon. friend from Beauharnois if Mr. Beauchemin is not a Conservative ?

Mr. BERGERON. If he is the Mr. Beauchemin from Sorel he is a Liberal.

Mr. BRODEUR. Is the one in Montreal not a Conservative ?

Mr. BERGERON. The one in Montreal I do not know, but I know the one in Sorel is a strong Liberal.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am speaking of the bookseller in Montreal, L. J. O. Beauchemin, and I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) if L. J. O. Beauchemin is not a Conservative ?

Mr. BERGERON. I cannot tell.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend knows Mr. Beauchemin.

Mr. BERGERON. I know Mr. Beauchemin, but I cannot tell his politics.

Mr. BRODEUR. Is he not a friend of my hon. friend.

Mr. BERGERON. There are a great many friends of mine who are Liberals.

Mr. BRODEUR. I mean a political friend.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not know his politics.

Mr. BLAIN. If the Minister of Marine states that this gentleman to whom he instructed Falconer to go for the books is a Liberal-Conservative I will accept that explanation. For myself I do not know and I asked a gentleman living in Montreal whom I thought did know, and he informed me that he was a supporter of the government. Perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) is suggesting that at one time this gentleman was a Liberal-Conservative.

Mr. BRODEUR. No. Mr. Beauchemin, of Montreal, keeps one of the largest and best bookstores in that city and Mr. Beauchemin has always been and is still a Conservative.

Mr. BLAIN. I accept for the moment the statement of the Minister of Marine and I will put it against the statement of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier and they can discuss it when the hon. member Mr. Monk) is present. But that is not the point. The point is this, that when this gentleman, Mr. Falconer and his associates, came in to instruct the government how to correct their system, he pointed out that the condition of this department was so bad that a gentleman who went to the city of Halifax could not make out from the books a correct statement of the assets and liabilities of the office. My hon. friend will not deny this.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to prevent my hon. friend from continuing, but this is a matter of sufficient importance to be preceded with regularly. I object, as I did on a former occasion, to this matter being brought up in such a way that no person on this side of the House can controvert any proposition set up by the hon. member for Peel. The subject is now before the Public Accounts Committee and should not be discussed in this House until such time as that committee reports upon it to this House. I think my hon. friend will see the fairness of that proposition.

Mr. BLAIN. I can only say that I am quoting not from any document now in the hands of the Public Accounts Committee, but from a return to an order of this House, which has been laid on the table and which my hon. friend might have studied for the last three or four weeks if he had desired to inform himself on the question.

Mr. JOHNSTON. If you, Mr. Speaker, rule that my hon. friend is in order in discussing a matter that is a subject of inquiry in the Public Accounts Committee, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course, the principle is well understood and no reference can be made to a matter which is before a committee of the House for investigation until the matter has been reported upon by the committee.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not permissible to quote from a return which has been brought down and is in the possession of this House?

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it is quite so.

Mr. BLAIN. Then having the decision of the Chair, I wish now to quote——

Mr. JOHNSTON. While not dissenting from the rule, I wish once for all to have a clear and distinct ruling whether questions that are inquired into before a committee of the House can be discussed here?

Mr. SPEAKER. The ruling is that if a matter has been referred to the Public Accounts Committee for inquiry no reference can be made to it until the committee has made a report upon it. But, apart from that, if a return has been laid before the House, even while the matter is pending, I can see no reason why such a return should not be made a subject of quotation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, the rule is exactly as you have stated it. A member cannot refer to the proceedings of the committee until they have reported to the House, but he can deal with a matter of information already laid before the House and not referred to the committee.

Mr. BLAIN. Then, I quote from a letter of January 30, 1907, to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries from Mr. Kenneth Falconer:

The first forms to be ordered are loose sheets, with some binders therefor, and I understand your instructions are that these goods shall be procured from Beauchemin, of Montreal.

Whether this gentleman is a Liberal-Conservative or a Reformer I will not stop to ask, but when this large order for books was to be given and my hon. friend the minister knew that there were large manufacturing establishments in this country prepared to tender for the supply of this kind of goods, my hon. friend was setting aside the policy of his government in directing that the first order for these goods should be given to a friend in Montreal, which meant that he would probably have the opportunity of supplying all subsequent orders. I am informed that this man does not manufacture these goods at all. I would like to ask the minister whether that is correct or not?

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend asked the same question the other day. This matter is being investigated, and why does he not wait until the investigation is over?

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman acknowledges that the system in vogue in his department and in some others is not up to date, and when he commences a large expenditure for books which are manufactured by large manufacturing concerns in Canada, he gives the order to a friend of his in Montreal who does not manufacture them and without any competition whatever. Now, I want to point out how these goods are purchased, and I have a charge to make against two ministers of the Crown, one of whom is present. Mr. Merwin supplied a large quantity of goods to this government without any tender. One item was a Sturtevant engine, which he bought from the manufacturer for $335 and sold to the government without tender for $960, gaining a profit for himself of $625, or 187 per cent. I have a large list under my hand of goods which were purchased from this man who was not in business at all, but was simply a middleman. He got orders for tens of thousands of dollars worth of goods from this government without any public competition at all. When we were attempting before the Public Accounts Committee to find out whether the public were receiving full value for the money they were expending or not and when we desired to call on Mr. Merwin to tell the committee what he had paid the manufacturers for these goods, objection was taken at once by a minister of the Crown.

When the question was put to the committee as to whether the public had the right to know what these goods cost, what was the attitude of the government? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was present. What did that hon. gentleman, whose special duty it is to see that the public money is expended in the public interest and not in the interest of the grafter or middleman, do? What did the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) do? They both recorded their votes against this man being ordered to state what he had paid the manufacturer. The question being put. The ruling of the chair was sustained, and those who were in favour of the middleman not being obliged to tell what he had paid for the goods were:

Mr. FIELDING. An unlucky number.

Mr. BLAIN. Is my hon. friend very much in love with the vote he gave?

Mr. FIELDING. I took the view—and I think it is the right view—that we have no right to inquire into the prices paid by the purchaser. There were other means of ascertaining the value of these goods, and it was ascertained that the department had paid excessive prices, but we were voting on a principle, and one of the Conservative members, not now here—whose name I need not mention—told me afterwards that, as a principle, he did not think it wise to ask any man to declare his purchase price, that it was not fair.

Mr. BLAIN. All I can say is that I differ entirely with the policy laid down by the hon. gentleman. While I do not think it fair to investigate the private business of members on either side, when an agent supplies goods to a department, and that agent is neither a manufacturer nor a merchant, and when he puts in a bill to the government charging the government $960 for an article that cost him $335, thus making a profit of $625 or 187 per cent, I think it is the duty, especially of the Minister of Finance, to stand up and see that this man shall not be shielded by any technicality from telling the price he paid.

Mr. FIELDING. It did not matter what price he paid for the goods, the evidence showed he charged the government too much, and it was not necessary at all to ascertain what price he paid.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend says the evidence showed he charged too much. But where had we that evidence and when did it come out?

Mr. FIELDING. My recollection is that prices were obtained and brought before the committee from other parties in the same line of trade.

Mr. BARKER. Mr. Merwin gave way when we brought the manufacturers from whom he purchased the goods. He had to give evidence then and the facts came out.

Mr. FIELDING. That may be but my point was that a man should not be obliged to tell the price at which he purchased the goods. We can see very strong reasons why he should not be obliged.

Mr. BLAIN. I differ entirely with my hon. friend, and the policy of the opposition, although we were voted down by a majority of 22 against 13, seemed to prevail when the next meeting of the committee was called. Mr. Merwin then went into the box and told us what he paid, and the charge I have brought against the government in respect of this matter and against the Minister of Finance is that after Mr. Merwin having admitted that he had charged too much for the goods, this same gentleman has been supplying goods to the government without tender ever since and goods are bought by the same minister. How then can my hon. friend expect the opposition to vote for an amendment which purports to continue the policy that has brought about this condition? And this policy has brought about such a condition in the department in question that men had to be brought in from the city of New York to look into its accounts and these men were brought in at enormous prices. I propose putting on record what these men have been charging for their services. Mr. Richards from the city of New York charged $75 a day with expenses from New York, and $5 per day for living allowance in addition.

Mr. FOSTER. You might ask the Minister of Inland Revenue if he thinks that is too much.

Mr. BLAIN. It is reported that my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue dismissed Mr. Richards. I have a letter in my hand in which that hon. minister, then acting as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, suggested that this man's services would be no longer required. He did not even give him time to finish his work. If this man's work was so important, why did the acting minister write him this letter? Will that hon. gentleman tell us why? I pause for a reply. My hon. friend knows full well that in writing this letter he condemned the policy of the government on this point. He thought that Mr. Richards was getting too much. Was that the reason, I would ask my hon. friend? Then we had Mr. Gunn at the same price, $75 a day, and Mr. Falconer at $40 per day. We have a long list of these men who were imported from New York to revise the accounting system and to audit the books of the Marine and Fisheries Department at these enormous prices. But why go to New York for these men when in every city of Canada we have a number of accountants who have graduated at our high schools and business colleges and universities and who are specially fitted for this kind of work. Yet my hon. friend, for some unexplained reason, sent to New York for these men.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Would you put that work up to tender and contract?

Mr. BLAIN. I will tell my hon. friend what I would not do. I would not go to the city of New York and hire men at $75 a day to come to Canada and do work when we had better men in our own country to do it.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Allow me to say that he could not find men in Canada to do it.

Mr. BLAIN. Another thing I may say to my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. A. K. Maclean)—and I ask him whether he approves of it—is that the minister gave to the representative of this book-keeping company carte blanche, not stipulating how much per day he should charge, not saying whether he would be allowed expenses, what his hotel fare should be, or anything of that kind, he practically signed a blank order to this gentleman and his friends from New York to come in and audit the accounts of the department. My hon. friend (Mr. A. K. Maclean) shakes his head, but he can hardly mean that I am unfair in what I say, particularly in the face of that fact that, year after year, the hon. minister (Mr. Brodeur) and his predecessor have stood up in this House and told the people of Canada that this department was well equipped, that the public interest was well taken care of, that the money was well expended, that the book-keeping system was modern in every particular, and that the administration of the minister was pure and not corrupt as we have found it to be.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BLAIN. At six o'oclock I was pointing out to the House that we would expect better things from the Finance Minister, he, a defender in the Public Accounts Committee of the middleman, he, as a representative of the government on that committee saying to Mr. Merwin by this vote: You may charge whatever prices you wish to the government, and when your case comes up for investigation in the Public Accounts Committee I am there as a representative of the government, and will record my vote that you should not be compelled to tell the committee the prices you have been paying for these goods, notwithstanding the fact that you have charged enormous prices for them which enabled you to reap a profit of 187 per cent. I am sure that when the right hon. gentleman, the leader of the government reviews this investigation, he will call his Finance Minister to account; and I am sure that when he realizes that not only the Finance Minister, but the Minister of Justice and several of his leading supporters recorded their votes to say that Mr. Merwin should go on, that he should not be compelled to divulge the facts with reference to the way he bought these goods, and what prices he paid to the manufacturer. I was much interested in a remark of the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Maclean). I referred to the fact that this government, when it was proved that the Department of Marine and Fisheries was in such a condition that no man could make anything out of it, not even the accountant himself, and I suggested that this government were responsible to the people of Canada because they had overlooked every bookkeeper in Canada, men who had devoted their lives to the profession, who had been employed by large commercial institutions, men who had received a university education, the government of this country thought it better to ignore them and to go to New York.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. What would you say about your friend Mr. Whitney, the premier of Ontario, doing the same thing?

Mr. BLAIN. I may tell my hon. friend that Mr. Whitney is quite able to take care of himself, and does not require any defence at my hands. I am directing the attention of the House to the fact that we are investigating the public accounts of this government of which the hon. gentleman is a prominent supporter, and the hon. gentleman himself before six o'clock, said that the government had brought in these New York gentlemen for the reason that no man in Canada could be found to do this work. Canada, with its six millions of people, with accountants in every city and town all over the country, with many able gentlemen of that profession in the great centres of Montreal and Toronto—yet my hon. friend stands up, a Canadian himself, and says that all these men must be ignored, that the government does not think them competent to make this investigation.

I differ with the government, because I strongly disapprove of the system now in operation under which the government has bought goods in the way they have been doing during the last few years. Finally the Minister of Marine and Fisheries decided not of his own motion, but on the suggestion of the book-keeper who came up and interviewed him, that perhaps it would be better to look into the affairs of the department. So my hon. friend was taken in by this book-keeper, the door was opened to these gentlemen, but with one restriction. My hon. friend is brought face to face with the condition of affairs in his department. He is trying to make the people believe that we had a business government, that everything was being transacted up to date, that no goods were bought or paid for except on business principles; and when it was proven in the Public Accounts Committee and on the floor of this House from time to time that this department was unworthy of any government, my hon. friend did not say to the accountant: Go on and make a thorough examination of the accounts. Oh no, he said, I will restrict you, and you must not go beyond the years 1905 and 1906. If my hon. friend had been anxious to find out how the public money had been frittered away in that department, he would have said to these gentlemen, I find the condition of my department is bad, the methods that have brought about this wrong-doing have been exposed to the public view in the Public Accounts Committee during the last year or two; and if my hon. friend had wished to do his whole duty to the public he would have said to these gentlemen, investigate all these accounts for years back and tell the people the enormous sums of money that have been frittered away by this government, particularly in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has a record for some years in this House. May I be permitted to say that he occupied the honourable position of Speaker of this House for some time, during which period he bought goods largely.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am inclined to think this is wandering somewhat from the motion before the House.

Mr. BLAIN. I am pointing out my hon. friend's position as a minister of the Crown and as a member of this House, and the manner in which he has been purchasing goods. I know of no other financial business confided to the Speaker, outside of the functions of that office, except the purchase of supplies for the Speaker's department. I find that when Mr. Ouimet was Speaker of the House, for nine months and twenty-eight days——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think this is not at all pertinent to the question before the House.

Mr. BLAIN. I was only going to make a reference to the goods that had been purchased for the Speaker's department without tender.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order. Do you not consider that in order to show that the methods which have been adopted and carried out in the past are not satisfactory, my hon. friend is justified in making this departure for the purpose of advocating the adoption of a new and better system ? I would imagine that it was only dealing with the history of what has been so unsatisfactory and that it is necessary for my hon. friend to give these examples to show the urgent need there is for another system.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the discussion as to the form in which these articles have been purchased by tender or otherwise, and a comparison as it affects them in that way would be in order, but I do not think the comparison between the expenditures of one Speaker or another could be held to be pertinent to the motion.

Mr. BLAIN. Then I will take another opportunity.

Mr. FOSTER. Have you so decided the point of order or is it debatable ?

Mr. SPEAKER. It has been debated, I ruled upon it and that is my ruling.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose it is not open then to discuss the point of order ? I should like very much to say a word with regard to it.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am not disposed to close the matter up if the hon. gentleman desires to discuss it.

Mr. FOSTER. The question involved has reference to the purchase of supplies, and the expenditure of the people's money therefor. The resolution proposes to substitute a different system from the one that has already prevailed. We are bound to show, in order to make the motion prevail, that the previous system has been lacking in certain essentials and that this would supply the lack and would serve a better purpose. It seems to me that we are perfectly right in bringing up any example of the expenditure of public money for the purchase of supplies at any time during the history of the government, by any minister, or any official, or any Speaker, so long as the fundamental idea is underlying it that it is public money and that it is expended for supplies. I do not see how you can allow me, for instance, to canvass as I did this afternoon, the difference between the Minister of Militia's purchases of supplies and the Minister of Marine's purchases of supplies if you do not allow me to carry it into any department in so far as any officer or any person who is in charge of public money and is expending it for that purpose is concerned. Therefore, it seems to me that we have a perfect right to contrast the expenditures of the different Speakers. They are purchasing supplies, not with their own money but with the people's money. One man seems to be provident and his supplies are carefully got and are not too extensive, as we think, and at a fair price ; another Speaker is of quite a different class, purchases, as we consider, very extravagantly and he pays, as we think, high prices. Hence, we think we have the right to deduce these as examples to show that instead of having a state of things like that, instead of having this lack of uniformity and this absence of general check it will be better to have a uniform system so that we could get a check. I cannot see how that can possibly be out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I may or I may not have allowed the hon. gentleman who has last spoken to have exceeded the lattitude in which he was entitled to the discussion of the matter. Anything which is pertinent to the question whether purchases should be made by tender or otherwise is quite relevant to the motion before the House. A comparison as to whether one Speaker purchased more than another or one minister more than another in a particular department is not, in my judgment, pertinent to the motion and as such I propose to rule it out of order unless the House otherwise decide.

Mr. BLAIN. I accept, of course, the ruling of the chair. What I want to direct the attention of the House to is the fact that I have before me a list of goods that were purchased by the different Speakers of the House without tender. I take it to be quite in keeping with the decision of the Speaker to-night that I should give a list of the articles purchased by the hon. gentleman when he was Speaker, and which were purchased without tender. The list is as follows :

|---|---|
| The Cuddy & Brodeur Company.. .. .. | $ 15 00 |
| William Howe.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 89 00 |
| William Howe.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 00 |
| Bryson, Graham & Company.. .. .. .. | 5 75 |
| Thos. Liggett.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 349 43 |

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman proposes to show that these were purchased with or without tender and that by reason of the fact that they were purchased with or without tender they were purchased at too high a price that would be quite pertinent.

Mr. BLAIN. That is my point.

Mr. SPEAKER. The reading of a list of names and the prices of these articles does not furnish the House with any indication of the hon. gentleman's intention to show that they were purchased at too high a price ; nor, is it relevant to the question of whether the articles were purchased with or without tenders.

Mr. BLAIN. I am not reading the list for the sake of taking up time. I have either one purpose in view or no purpose. I am on my feet for the express purpose of pointing out that this government have purchased for different departments goods without tender, and I am reading a list of goods that were purchased by the hon. minister when he was Speaker of this House without tender and at what I regard as high prices. Surely, I am clearly within my right in doing so.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman states that it is his intention to show that the articles were purchased at too high a price he may proceed. To make the matter relevant I think that statement should precede the reading of the articles.

Mr. BLAIN (reading)—

| A. J. Lawrence.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 270 25 |
| | $4,580 38 |

I will not continue the list further, and I will only point out that Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, when goods are being purchased, for example, from the C. Ross Company, to the extent of $1,462.71 at what I regard as high prices, by the Speaker's department or any other department, they should be purchased by public tender. My point is that the excessive cost of the Speaker's apartments, while these goods were being purchased at these prices, tells the country something about the system that hon. gentlemen are proposing to continue rather than to adopt the public tender system in accordance with the resolution which is now before the House. I want to give the cost to the country of the American book-keepers who were introduced in the month of February, 1907 : W. B. Richards, 29¼ hours at $75 per day, $346.54 ; Kenneth Falconer, 39 hours at $40 a day, $267.14 ;——

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Would you put that up to tender ?

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend asks if I would put that up to tender. I would have sufficient faith in my own country and in my own people that I would employ some honest straightforward Canadians, and there are dozens of them to be found in every part of this country, to do this work rather than to employ Americans.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I rise to a point of order. My point is that this is surely not relevant to the resolution before the House. The question of the rates paid to a firm of accountants——

Mr. BLAIN. I do not propose to allow my hon. friend to interrupt me.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has a perfect right to state his point of order.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. My point of order is that this discussion on the motion before the House relates to the question whether it is advisable or not advisable to have a system of tendering for goods purchased by the government or services secured by the government. I simply asked the hon. gentleman if he thinks that in this case tenders should have been asked, and if he thinks that his discussion as to the book-keeping system and the accountants is relevant to the resolution.

Mr. SPROULE. As I understand it the Minister of Finance moved an amendment which is practically an endorsement of the present system of the responsibility of the minister, and therefore the resolution and the amendment cover the whole ground as to whether it is best to have tenders, or to follow the system which has obtained for several years past.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I have no great objection to the thing; I only point out that this is a matter which must come up before the House at a later date, and I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) is using testimony which was given before the Public Accounts Committee and which is not yet reported to the House. It does not advance the matter any to anticipate discussion——

Mr. BLAIN. Is this speaking to a point of order, or is it discussion?

Mr. SPEAKER. The point of order taken is that a discussion as to whether these auditors are Canadians or not is not relevant to the question before the House, and I am inclined to think that the point is well taken.

Mr. BLAIN. Would my hon. friend permit me to explain on the point of order; I am pointing out that the system of purchasing goods——

Mr. SPEAKER. I think I will have to stand by my ruling until it is disposed of by the House. I yielded a moment ago on that question to the member for North Toronto who apparently thought he had something to say on the matter, but I have ruled on this point now and the hon. member can either adopt the ruling or appeal to the House.

Mr. BLAIN. I at once bow to the decision of the chair. I should have hoped I would have had an opportunity to state my reasons. My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) has suggested that I am using documents that are before the Public Accounts Committee, but I wish to say that I am using a return to an order of this House and that it is from that document I am quoting. I am pointing out to the House that because of the system that this government has adopted and has in operation at this moment and proposes to continue according to the amendment moved by the Minister of Finance; I am pointing out that that system of purchasing goods since 1896 under this government has brought about such a condition of affairs in the Marine and Fisheries Department that expert accountants at $75 per day were brought in from the United States to straighten it up. What I say is that if the resolution moved by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is adopted and put in force and if goods are purchased by public tender then there will be no necessity for subjecting the departments of the government to the scrutiny of American accountants at the rate of $75 a day. Now let us see for a moment how this system is working out. In the Auditor General's Report for 1905, page 163 Mr. Strubbe, a middleman, got an order without tender to purchase hardware and files, which he purchased for $2,315.45 and sent them to the government and an invoice for $4,786.45 and made a profit of $2,470 or 107 per cent on this small transaction. That is an example of how the policy of the government is working out; buying goods from middlemen, from political supporters, without asking those who are engaged in the business for tenders to supply these goods. And besides that, as my hon. friend here points out, there were dozens upon dozens of files purchased that could not be used for many years to come. The policy of allowing middlemen to control the affairs of this government is further shown in the Moncton land deal where a middleman bought the land for $5,075 and sold it to the government for $13,880, making a profit of $8,805 or 167 per cent. The Railway Department said in that matter to a political friend: Go down and buy this land, and it cost the people of this country the enormous overcharge I have mentioned, whereas the government should have sent one of its officials down to Moncton to buy that land, and that official is just as well able to do it as Mr. Lodge, and the government could have had it at a fair price and without the enormous profit of the middleman. I say that the middleman should be done away with in these transactions and that the public money should be profitably and wisely expended. Now, to show the condition of the Marine and Fisheries department under this system I wish to read the following letter:

Ottawa, April 3, 1907.

Hon. L. P. Brodeur,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Brodeur,—To properly safeguard the large expenditure of your department I beg to advise you personally that a complete and thorough reorganization of your present methods of purchasing and of keeping record of contracts is absolutely necessary.

Statements submitted to you from time to time showing 'balance available' on account of various votes represent balances on those votes unexpended which you will readily see in view of contracts entered into by your department is very different from 'balances available.'

I had not wished to take this matter up with you until I had in my possession records as to the exact status of all contracts entered into by the department and not completed at the end of the fiscal period. In view, however, of your departure from Ottawa for some time, I beg to advise that dating from April 1, I propose keeping close and accurate record of transactions between your department and vendors, affecting contracts. On your return I will be in a position to outline plans for the reorganization of this branch of your department, and the carrying on of its work on a business basis.

As an indication of the necessity of taking up this matter I have in front of me a list of some twenty vouchers for coal paid but not initialed by Mr. Stumbles, who, I understand, has special charge of vouchers for goods received on account of contracts. These twenty vouchers amount to something over $13,000. This for coal alone; there are other vouchers amounting in the aggregate to large sums and bearing on their face a notation that the prices are according to contract, have apparently gone through and been paid without any evidence that the prices and terms were compared with those of the contract.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) K. FALCONER.

That is the condition of the department after an examination, although we have been told that all these matters have been carried on by this government in a business way. While this investigation by Mr. Falconer was going on, the minister had business in Europe, and the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) took his place for a short time, and I want to read a letter addressed to Kenneth Falconer, accountant, by F. Gourdeau, deputy minister of Marine and Fisheries, under instructions of the acting minister. It is dated May 15, 1907, and is as follows :

Sir,—I am to inform you that the hon. the Acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries has instructed me to acquaint you that the services of yourself and staff reorganizing the system of book-keeping in the department will terminate on Saturday, the 18th instant, and from that day your engagement with the department will cease.

We are informed that the hon. gentleman looked into the accounts and found that they were charging $75 a day for the work, and that right in the midst of the work, after thousands of dollars of public money had been expended in putting the department to right, the acting minister stepped in and informed this gentleman that his services would no longer be required.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is still not relevant to the motion. The hon. member seems to think that it is, but I rule that it is not.

Mr. BLAIN. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to conform to your ruling. Surely I can point out to the House——

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. member can point out how a letter written by the Minister of Inland Revenue or by his deputy to the accountant telling him to discontinue his work is relevant to the question whether supplies should be purchased with or without tender, I am not able to appreciate it, and I rule accordingly.

Mr. BLAIN. Would I be permitted to state what I am trying to show?

Mr. SPEAKER. The proper course in discussion is for a member to state what he is proposing to do, and then give his evidence —not to read something utterly irrelevant to the question before the House, assuming that I or the House must understand that there is something behind that which he is seeking to bring out. The Chair can only deal with a matter as it comes up, and if the suggestion is, as it appears to be that this letter which has been read is relevant to the motion, I fail to appreciate the relevancy, and must rule accordingly.

Mr. BLAIN. Have I the privilege of saying what my opinion of it is?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. I am pointing out—and I did not think that I would have had to preface my remarks each time with this statement—that the policy of this government which has been in operation for a number of years, of purchasing goods without public tender, has placed the Department of Marine and Fisheries in such a condition that it was necessary to bring American accountants here at a cost of $75 a day to put it right.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Will my hon. friend pardon me?—just to have the record accurate and truthful.

Mr. BLAIN. I am quite willing, but I am supposing I have some rights myself.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I simply rise to ask the hon. gentleman why he persists in talking about men having been paid $75 a day when he knows perfectly well that the total amount paid to that grade of men who received $75 a day amounted to only $2,000.

Mr. BLAIN. I am very much obliged to my hon. friend. I supposed I would have a right to put in the facts of the case, and place on 'Hansard' a list of the American bookkeepers and the prices paid them but I was not allowed.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. That is what I want the hon. member to do, and not deal so much in fiction.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend has devoted himself more to fiction than facts in the investigation before the Public Accounts Committee. However, I do not propose to take up the time of the House longer, although I could go on and point out if necessary that a large amount of money has been paid to these gentlemen, some at the rate of $75, some at $40, some at $30 and some at $15 a day.

Now, the Militia Department has been purchasing some goods without tender, and I am going to quote something to prove that statement. A brand new company suggested that they had obtained in the United States the patent of a sub-target gun—a company composed of political supporters of the government, and I was informed that there were in it some supporters of the Conservative party—in days gone by, I suppose. The Militia Department without tender let a contract to this new company, which had no manufacturing establishment in Canada, and had no business whatever except the business of middlemen, for 250 sub-target guns at $250 apiece. What did these gentlemen do with the contract? Did they put up a manuafcturing establishment and invest their money? Oh, no. They took the contract to the city of Sherbrooke in the province of Quebec and sub-let it to a firm there which agreed to supply the guns for $64 apiece. Then they sent these guns to the government and put in their bill for $250 apiece, and were thus able to make a profit of $186 apiece on each gun for themselves. That is what is going on under this government. When I brought this matter up the other evening I was interrupted, as the hon. member for Lunenburg interrupted me tonight, with the statement that Mr. Whitney's government had been purchasing similar guns at the same price. I have before me now the answer to that, and if my hon. friend were in his place I would point out to him that Mr. Whitney's government did not make any contract to supply sub-target guns at $250 apiece. I have a copy of the contract under my hand. It was made by the Ross government and signed by Mr. Harcourt, Minister of Education and that contract tied up the Ontario government for two years from its date, November 9, 1904, and bound the government to buy all the sub-target guns it required at the rate of $250 each.

I shall not continue this discussion longer. I only wish to express my own opinion, and I have no hesitation in saying that I approve of the principle of buying goods after public competition. But when this government want a large supply of goods, such as groceries or hardware, how do they buy it? The other evening the Solicitor General (Mr. Bureau), when asked if he were buying these goods after public competition, replied: Oh, yes. When questioned further, he said that what he meant by public competition was sending around notices to a few of the friends of the government and these favoured few would send in their tenders. When asked again what were the necessary qualifications in order to be put on the favoured list, my hon. friend said: you must belong to the faith. He meant, of course, the political faith. That is the kind of public competition that this government calls for. They ask a few of their friends, who are on the political patronage list, to send in a tender, and they accept the lowest when it suits their purpose. But why should not the government, when buying a large quantity of goods such as groceries or hardware, advertise for public tenders in a journal that reaches all the traders in these goods, such as the hardware journal and the grocers' journal. The newspapers in which you will find a government advertisement is the partisan press. Conservative newspapers no matter how large a circulation, no matter how many homes they reach, are rarely given a government advertisement. It would never do for the government, according to their policy, to give patronage to any but their political supporters. And when we on this side endeavour, in the mildest manner possible, to assist the government in bringing about a change in this condition, when my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) presents a resolution to that effect and in the mildest way possible points out the evils which have grown up under the present policy, and when the right hon. gentleman who leads this House is forced to compliment my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) on the moderation of his statement, we find the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) jumping to the rescue of the middleman and exciting a political discussion. Only for the amendment proposed by the Finance Minister I would not have had anything to say on the question. No matter how careful my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has been to avoid any political rancour, and notwithstanding the admission by the right hon. gentleman of my hon. friend's moderation, we find the Finance Minister moving an amendment with the object of perpetuating the policy of purchasing goods without competition from political partisans. Why, there is hardly a municipal council in Canada which does not, when it has any public work to give out, advertise for tenders and advertise in papers irrespective of their political views, but when we come to the federal government—this government which is supposed to administer the public affairs on business principles and set the example to smaller bodies—we are told by the Finance Minister that while the policy of purchasing goods after public competition may be all right in a municipal council or a provincial government, it would never do for this government. I want, Sir, to point out that the people of Canada are aroused. The commission appointed by the government to look into this matter has published broadcast to the people that these departments are corrupt and not conducted on business principles, and the people look to the right hon. gentleman to see that these middlemen will be put out of business and a more modern method of purchasing goods be adopted, and that after public competition so far as is practicable.

With that object in view, I beg to move the following amendment to the amendment:

That all the words after the word 'therefor' in the said amendment be left out and the following words inserted instead thereof: Except in cases of unforeseen emergency and necessity, and should be purchased with regard primarily to quality and price; that the present system of purchasing from middlemen and at excessive prices should be immediately discontinued.

Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE (Halifax). I gave my best attention this afternoon to the very mild exposition given by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) of the abstract principles contained in his second resolution. Without his accustomed partisanship and vehemency, he conveyed the idea, or sought to convey the idea, that during the regime of the present government a new system had been adopted and put in force under which the people of this country were compelled to pay larger sums for the articles supplied them than under the system which prevailed when he held office.

His resolution was one of three, and, to make out the points of that resolution in any logical sequence, it was necessary to establish the first one. I once had a copy of the celebrated picture of the Witch of Endor, painted by Salvator Rosa. In that picture, in the foreground, there was the prophet who had risen from the earth with his white mantle over him; before him were the prostrate forms of Saul and his armour-bearer, and in the background was the witch with some goblins that the painter had invented and introduced for artistic effect. But the back of the cavern was not painted in but was left to the imagination of the spectator. It is a melancholy fact that my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I believe there is no record that during his incumbency of office he introduced this reform upon the system that then existed. It is a melancholy fact also that it is only when my hon. friend has ceased to have the power of carrying these reforms into practical effect that he is a reformer. At the beginning of the administration of the Dominion in 1867, Hon. Peter Mitchell was Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and his deputy was Mr. Wm. Smith, a gentleman, I believe, who was brought from New Brunswick and who had had considerable experience in that office. On the advent of the Mackenzie government in 1872, Hon. Albert Smith became Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and the same Mr. Wm. Smith was deputy minister. I believe that under Hon. Albert Smith's administration of the department, the system of tender and contract was introduced and that it was to a greater or less extent, in evidence during the whole period of the Mackenzie regime. Whether that was of great advantage to the administration and to the people, I do not know, but, very certainly, in 1878, the people put an end to that administration and the system of contracts also. In 1878, when the administration of Sir John Macdonald returned to power, Hon. J. C. Pope became Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Mr. Wm. Smith, I believe, being still in office as deputy minister. I did not hear anything about the system of tender and contract during Mr. Pope's administration. It may have existed in some lines and particulars, but I do not think it was a distinguishing part of his administration. The next Minister of Marine and Fisheries was Mr. McLellan, and, following Mr. McLellan in 1885 was my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster). I do not know that my hon. friend's administration was particularly distinguished by the carrying into effect the doctrine of tender and contract, nor do I think that his administration was so very creditable to himself and his party, for, I believe, one of the things on which his successor, Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, prided himself, and one of the subjects on which his friends and supporters congratulated him, was that he had corrected the abuses and remedied the disorders existing in the Marine and Fisheries Department—which may not have arisen under the management of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) but which certainly were perpetuated by him. From 1894, Hon. John Costigan was the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Now, this afternoon, my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) took up the abstruse principles involved in this motion; and, though I admit I did not hear him perfectly, and perhaps may omit something or make some slight verbal mistake, I think he announced these principles in a sort of sorites. First of all, the money is the people's money, we grant that; second (the negative of the first) it is not the money of a committee—we grant that; third, it is to be expended for the benefit of the people—we grant that; fourth, it is to be expended for the public good—we grant that; fifth, it ought not to be expended to strengthen the government. Why should it not strengthen a government if wisely and properly administered? Have the people no interest in wise expenditure of their own funds? Are they so oblivious to the their own interest that they will give no credit to a government that acts conscientiously, prudently and energetically in the expenditure of their funds? But, last of all was a proposition from which we dissent—that the money should not be spent for the friends of the government. How is this committee, as he calls them, to discriminate? Are the members of that committee better acquainted with their enemies than they are with their friends? Have they a better knowledge of the Liberal-Cnservative party than of their own and the people who compose it ? When tenders are called and it is a matter of indifference to whom the contracts are to be given, would this be a wise and patriotic government, would it be expending public revenues for the benefit of the people, if it did not consider the half of the people—at least half—and allow them to have some benefit from the expenditures of the government ? Why should not their friends be chosen, other things being equal, instead of those who oppose their policy and who endeavoured to prevent them from coming into power? Sir, my hon. friend said that the money should be expended for the benefit of the people. How is this money to percolate through all strata ? How is it to reach the greatest number in being expended for the various interests of the country ? Remember that, for eighteen years, the present government supporters were kicking their heels outside the halls of patronage and under the cold frowns of hon gentlemen opposite. Ought we not then, on the hon. gentleman's own principle, to make a fair distribution of the revenue of the people and allow the faithful friends of the people, who were out of power and out of the enjoyment of patronage for eighteen long weary years to enjoy it for ten years and ten longer ? Does the hon. gentleman doubt that friends of the present government were left in the cold shades of the eighteen years of their opponents' term of office ? Will he tell me the name of the Liberal newspaper which ever received the faintest smile of recognition from my hon. friend or any of his friends ? Will he give me the name of any wholesale or retail Liberal merchants who ever enjoyed their smile ? Will he tell of anybody that ever received the faintest amount of patronage from this government, or any department of this government, during those eighteen years, except they were choice friends and vigorous supporters of the then government ; people who did the work that he denounces sometimes as dirty work ?

Now my hon friend is a good deal of a sceptic at times. Let me give him a few facts. In 1893, lest the system then in vogue should get into disrepute, lest the patronage of the government should not reach the proper hands, a letter was written by Messrs. Kenny & Stairs, representatives of Halifax in that parliament, and good supporters of my hon. friend, sending the Minister of Marine a list of the individuals—my hon. friend would call them middlemen, in all his innocence he called them middlemen—a list of middlemen who were to receive the patronage of the government. Now I will read the list. First of all are the parties that are denounced in connection with the purchase of lands at the new railway roundhouse, Henderson & Potts. The next firm is Grant, Oxley & Co. Now Grant, Oxley & Co. may not be well known to my hon. friend from North Toronto, but they are well known to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. In fact I believe that Mr. Grant lives in his own house. Mr. Grant is leader of the Liberal-Conservative party in Halifax, and I believe that Mr. Grant was the treasurer of the funds of the Liberal-Conservative party in 1894. Now my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) would call Mr. Grant a middleman. But he is an insurance broker, he was in the insurance business. Now why did my hon. friend and his successors in office call on Grant, Oxley & Co., insurance brokers, to furnish supplies of ironware, hardware and other articles of that kind ? The next firm is C. E. Smith & Co., who were hardware men ; A. J. Grant, another hardware man, and an emissary of the hon. gentleman in the constituency of Halifax, and who was supplied by the party with ammunition both of a literary and of a pecuniary kind. Then there was Mr. M. O. Crowell, a very reputable gentleman, and at the same time a very earnest worker on behalf of my hon. friend. Then there was John Starr & Co., gentlemen who are dyed with the same stain ; J. P. Mott, who disbursed liberally when they were in difficulty ; G. Thompson, a gentleman who makes brooms ; and last and least of all, that much tried, that much reviled and objurgated company, the Imperial Oil Company. There were these and others. This is not a solitary document, there were others in other departments, all good supporters of the Liberal Conservative party from whom the supplies of this government were to be obtained, to the exclusion of all Liberals, who would have liked to furnish supplies.

Mr. NORTHRUP. All purchased by tender.

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). Not at all. Now I wish to take up some of the observations of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain), and also the observations of the leader of the opposition. The leader of the opposition has been in Halifax during its occupancy by the British troops, and he is familiar, so he informs us, with the methods of contracting by the British government in various departments I presume both naval and military. Now some contractors may have large supplies of goods and if it be the benevolent design of my hon. friend from Toronto to allow all classes of producers, all classes of merchants, to participate in government benefits, would not the large holders of goods be able to undersell the small dealers, and would not the supplies of these goods be concentrated in large localities like Montreal, and thus various parties who were benefited by the government expenditure would be concentrated in large cities ?

Now this is a cardinal objection to a centralizing system, that it is contrary to the accepted axiom of political economy that money should be returned to the source from which it was drawn, thus allowing all classes in the community to participate in the disbursements of the government, since everybody is called upon to contribute to the expenses of government. Now I do not know that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition is thoroughly conversant with the minutiae of the system adopted by the British government and which he eulogized. The British government in Halifax had under its control from 1,500 to 3,000 men. There was a large staff of officers, naval as well as military. When the authorities made a contract they could make a large one, and for a long time ahead. They compelled the contractors for meat, for instance, to keep a supply of sixty days on hand, and it was to be available from time to time. They purchased large quantities of flour, and they employed bakers to make bread. So there is no analogy whatever between the system adopted by the British government and that which is in vogue in the Department of Marine and other departments. The British government had from 2,000 to 3,000 troops under military discipline, whereas in the Marine Department you have a crew of perhaps ten or twenty men, scattered all along our frontiers, on the lakes, and on the St. Lawrence river, in the various harbours and along the maritime coast. You see there was no analogy between the money per head expended for the support of men in the Marine Department on those little vessels, and a large number of 2,000 or 3,000 military men collected in one place, where the stores were at the disposal of the government, and where were kept, under surveillance of a very large staff of trained officials, five times as many men in proportion, as the number paid under the Marine and Fisheries Department. There was a redundancy of detail in the military establishment which was exasperating, even which sometimes had to be condemned by experts of the British government; the details were excessive and were an encumbrance to the discharge of public business, and increased the expenses of the supplies which were bought for the troops and the navy. The hon. member for Toronto produced statistics showing that some years ago the amount per head on these little vessels was $25, rising to $50. and even as high as $80.

Is there any comparison between the vessels that there were at one time and that there are now? Is there any comparison between the status of the sailors? Sailors will not live now upon what they would accept ten or fifteen years ago. Their wages have been largely increased and in proportion their diet has had to be improved and increased. In many particulars the expenditures upon sailors per capita has very much increased. Sailors now are very much more select. It is difficult now to secure crews. Apparently the navigating interests have gone out of fashion, people have gone into other employments and there is a scarcity of seamen along our maritime coast. They cannot be treated with indifference, they cannot be starved and they cannot be put upon a per capita, artificial and arithmetical basis. They must be treated like men and not like dogs. Men have their rights, they assert them, and if a vessel does not treat her seamen as they ought to be treated they go ashore and leave her. That is not a condition in which the government should have their vessels; they should be ready for any emergency. My hon. friend also adduces a comparison between the cost of feeding soldiers and the cost of feeding sailors. Soldiers are in a very different position from sailors. They are all there together in the barracks. A sailor's work is never done. After a soldier's work is done all he has to do is to curl his hair, put on his uniform, go and see the girls, go to the theatre and then go back to the barracks. But the sailor has to be up day and night in cloud and sunshine, rain and storm, and in all other vicissitudes of the weather and to put him down to the level of the small per capita expenditure on a soldier is to make an unfair comparison. Again, soldiers have their canteen and they can exchange their provisions. they need not take any of them. A sailor must take what is provided for him. There is no shop or canteen to go and buy from. The cost of the sailor has all to be put down while perhaps only a fraction of the cost of the soldier is charged against the account.

I would inquire of the hon. member for North Toronto why should a purchasing board be better than a board composed of the minister, his deputy, his officials and expert advisers? These gentlemen—the purchasing board—it is true, might take tenders. They might see that one article amongst those which are the subject of tender is lower in price than another. Can they send these articles from the centre store all over the country and can they make certain that every article is delivered precisely in accordance with the sample and that the quantity is right? Can any board, sitting in a separate place—I presume they will sit in Ottawa—determine that problem of honesty of distribution, honesty of reception and honesty of expenditure with regard to these stores bought and distributed in every little place where they are consumed? It is true that a system of tender and contract may exist for perhaps certain articles and large supplies of articles, but for small supplies to be delivered at different places it is better to buy them on the spot, because they are fresher and they suit better the needs of the special occasion than would be the case with goods collected in large depots, liable to fire, liable to damage, liable to deterioration, liable to other vicissitudes. It is better to purchase such articles on the spot at the time and just as much as is required, and to have a good system of surveillance to ensure that every article purchased for the government service suits its purpose and goes to the end for which it is designed. The evils that the hon. member for Peel took the trouble to dilate upon this evening would occur under any system, or under the system proposed by the hon. member for North Toronto, because this board could not be on the spot to see to the carrying out of that which they had prescribed and that which they had contracted for. Here, the claim of the hon. member for North Toronto falls absolutely to the ground.

Again, I say that the appointment of a procuring board of this kind is the worst form of corruption which could exist. It leads to the construction of rings and of a bureaucracy with all its satellites. In the personal supervision of a board of that kind there would grow up a power of the most dangerous character in this country, because if purchases were being made for the Department of Marine and Fisheries, for instance, it would be a rival department and it would not be in the minister's control, there would be no person responsible and it leads up to and opens an avenue to the worst form of corruption that could exist in any country. It is an independent board, liable to no authority, appointed for life, but with no responsibility to the people through their committee. The Minister of Marine is held responsible to the government and the government is held responsible to the people. If the people are instructed in their own interest they will be jealous to see that the ministers carry out their trust, but to whom is the board responsible? Who appoints it? The government appoints it. Are they going to appoint Tories? Are they supposed to appoint people friendly to them? Are they supposed to appoint independent men? Would they select a board of lawyers to purchase these supplies? Who are these men? I will put it to my hon. friend and I hope he will give me a candid answer. Does he think that the politicians, the ministers in this country are so fallen below the level of the ordinary occupants of the country that they cannot and ought not to be trusted with the administration of a system if that system be adaptable to the interests of the country? Does he think that the politicians and ministers who are on this side or on that side cannot be trusted by the people? Does he really believe it? I do not believe it of hon. gentlemen opposite, although I think some of them ought not to be put in any position of trust; but, I will not admit that any of them should be regarded, in the discussion of a resolution of this kind, as being of a class so dishonourable, so unjust, so corrupt that they could not be trusted with the ordinary disbursements of government and with the execution and carrying out of the contracts of these different departments. My hon. friend tells us that he has a check on this board? What is the check? If there is any irregularity it can be reported to the Auditor General. The government has no authority over it. The government has no power to dismiss or censure it. The members are appointed for life and without any check upon their actions. The hon. gentleman proposes the appointment of a board with such extensive powers as this and all the check that he has upon them is that the Auditor General can talk to them, but he can exercise no control over them. Lastly, the hon. gentleman quoted the example of the United States government? Well, the United States government send out bids extensively to their own supporters. They send out bids to the producers of various articles and they advertise in the press when certain things are required; but for great contracts they adopt precisely the same system which has been in vogue under this government. How do the British government act? Do they take tenders and award contracts? They do in some instances, but under their systems there are colonels and people in authority in connection with every large firm who see that their influence personally and in other ways is brought to bear upon the government and the purchase board with the result that their articles are supplied to the government. The man who has no patronage and no influence gets no contract. Do my hon. friends forget the 'Brummagen bayonets' that were served to the troops on serivce in the Soudan? That was under the system of tender and contract, and the whole army was imperilled by the fact that when the British troops came to a hand and hand conflict with the Arabs of the desert the Brummagen bayonets turned round on the stock. A gentleman told me he was on the board of ordnance in England that condemned £30,000 worth of Armstrong ordnance and within one week that very ordnance was carted into the yard and paid for by the British government although it was condemned by that board.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). As I listened to the motion made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) the answer thereto by the Prime Minister, and the amendment moved by the Minister of Finance, I was very much impressed with the idea that after all it does not make so much difference what you decide in words, for there is a great factor in the equation ever so much larger than any language we may use, and that is the man who is charged with the duty of giving effect to it. It is all very well for us to look at it from one standpoint and to say: It is better that goods should be advertised for and purchased only by public tender; it is all very well for other gentlemen to say: You will have greater security if the minister who is responsible to parliament is the one to whom the country must look rather than an irresponsible board; it is all very well to say that, but I venture to think there is not a man in this House—including the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Marine—who is not prepared to admit frankly that after all the man is a far bigger factor than all the rules that can be laid down for the regulation of any department. The hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Roche) thought he had made a triumphant attack on the motion of the hon. member for North Toronto when he asked: What was done in the olden days when the Conservative administration was in power, and when he stated that in those days the government purchased from the middlemen in Halifax. I would ask the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Roche) does he think the Conservative government in the days they were in power did wrong in buying from these middlemen?

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). No.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Then, if that be the hon. gentleman's idea of public morality I would like to know why it was he dragged the matter up before the House? He certainly did not drag it up to commend the Conservative government for it, even though he now frankly admits that he thinks what the Conservatives did was perfectly right. I venture to tell the hon. gentleman that there is no man in this country—outside of the supporters of the right hon. gentleman and the individuals who immediately benefit by the contracts—there is no man in this country who would dare to stand up and say he believes in the system of the middlemen.

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). Permit me to explain. I said that for 18 years we found no fault with the Conservative government patronizing their friends, and these men who are now called middlemen were the men who supplied the government during these 18 years.

Mr. NORTHRUP. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche) said he had no fault to find with that system. I differ from the hon. gentleman. I do not know whether the Conservative government did that or not, but I say that if they did do it, it was nothing to their credit. I can tell the hon. gentleman something more—I am sorry my leader is not in the House at the moment because I am sure he would endorse what I say—I will tell the hon. gentleman that when the Conservative party is returned to power after the next general election we will not only do better than the Liberal government have done, but we will do better than our predecessors did before 1896 if their practice was as the member for Halifax states. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche) commends the practice of buying from the middlemen; I am not surprised that a man who has not a word of condemnation against the nefarious practice of buying from the middlemen would present to the House such an argument as he has presented in favour of the present system. He said: Why find fault with the present system; is it not known that the British troops in the Soudan were supplied with bayonets that were utterly unfit, and that under the English system. I can hardly imagine that an hon. gentleman who supports the Minister of Militia would dare stand up in this House and advance such an argument as proving the advantage of the Canadian system over the British system, when under the Canadian system we found our troops in South Africa supplied with decayed hay and rotten dog biscuits under the name of emergency rations. If we are to judge of a system merely by solitary fruits, then if the hon. gentleman is entitled to condemn the British system on account of one instance of rascality, surely we would be equally entitled to condemn the present administration on account of the equally great or even greater instances of rascality under its regime. My own opinion is, and I give it with all deference to the House, that it is a matter of comparatively small importance whether a minister is honest, or a deputy minister is honest, or a middleman robs the country, for while such a thing should be punished most rigorously, yet, in my humble judgment, it is a thousand times more serious that when we have had proof after proof advanced to this House and proof after proof given in the Public Accounts Committee of infamous wrong-doings by gentlemen opposite and their subordinates, to this day not one man has been punished for these wrong-doings. It will not do to make a scapegoat of the Minister of Marine, or of the Minister of Militia and Defence, for while I might defend them in one sense, I am not prepared to defend the outrageous state of their departments. I do not believe there is a single man opposite to-night—if we could take a fair vote apart from party prejudices, apart from what the consequences of a vote against the government would be—I do not believe there is one man on the opposite benches to-night, knowing that he must face his constituents in a short time who would be prepared to vote in favour of any motion stating that the Minister of Marine or the Minister of Militia and Defence had properly and honestly and intelligently managed their departments. When the Minister of Marine was confronted with the fact that this middleman Merwin had been the recipient of thousands and thousands of dollars from his department, he could only say: That was before my time; that was in the days of the late Hon. Mr. Préfontaine. But the gentleman's record was known to the right hon. gentleman, and if it was not known to him he was told of it by his own leading newspaper in the city of Montreal and yet Mr. Préfontaine was placed in power by the Prime Minister, and he lived his time in office, and after he is dead the first to throw stones at him and deride his memory are the hon. gentlemen of his own party. The Minister of Marine said: I am not guilty, because I was simply the legatee of my predecessor, but yet in the current accounts, pages 95 and 98, we find that Brooks received $56,679 and Merwin received $50,641, and yet the present Minister of Marine went into office on the 5th of February, 1906. How dare he say that he is responsible only in the constitutional sense because these contracts were made by his predecessor, when despite the fact that the whole dealings of the department with Merwin were shown in the Public Accounts Committee we find Merwin just as firmly ensconced in the pages of the Auditor General's Report in connection with the Marine Department as J. W. Woods is in the Militia and Defence Department under the regime of the Minister of Militia.

The great objection I have to the suggestion of the Premier and the Minister of Finance is that while I admit that it is a matter of very little importance whether these goods are bought by tender by the minister and his deputy—and that to my mind would be the preferable way—or by a commission, the important thing is that we should have honest men buying the goods and an honest supervision over this buying. But when the opposition attempted to bring before the Public Accounts Committee the most indubitable proofs of wrongdoing on the part of ministers and their deputies, we found the Minister of Finance, who should be the guardian of the public purse, not only not assisting us in bringing out the facts, but backing up Merwin in his refusal to tell the committee where he purchased the goods. The Minister of Finance said there were other ways of getting the information ; but he did not suggest what any of these other ways were, but left us to find them out for ourselves with a great deal of difficulty and expense. When we were doing our best, in face of the opposition of the majority of the committee, to discover how much wrong had been done with the view of putting an end to it for the future, and the Minister of Finance not only refused to assist us or to punish those who had been guilty of wrong-doing, but put obstacles in the way of our getting proof of it, I think we are justified in objecting to have the full control of all expenditure left in the hands of a ministry whose Finance Minister exercises so little supervision over it. I need not deal with case after case that has come before the House. The expenditure in connection with the 'Arctic' expedition has been referred to again and again. I am not going into details, but I would like to ask who has ever been punished in connection with that infamous carnival of public expenditure ? Why was it, when the minister, the Deputy Minister and Captain Bernier were all out, north, east and west, purchasing goods, the only man who exercised any supervision was a man who had been dismissed from a banking institution because he had made a large loan which resulted in heavy loss to the bank and a rake-off to the manager who had made the loan ? Not a word in condemnation of any official connected with that famous transaction have we ever heard from that day to this. We have also discussed the furnishing of the 'Montcalm' and the 'Champlain.' We paid as high as $1.04 apiece for cups and saucers for the icebreaker crossing the St. Lawrence ; $118 for six dish covers, ice pitchers for from $20 to $30 a dozen, five o'clock tea sets, silverware, champagne, port and other wine glasses ; and no man in the country believes that these were for the sailors. Yet nobody has been punished for these expenditures. If somebody had been punished a few years ago for these things, does any one suppose that this year we would have had the exposé of the 'Speedy,' a little tug used to tow scows carrying mud taken out of the mouth of a river, which had an electric light appliance put in at a cost of $3,000 ? Then, because the fittings in the cabin were not sufficiently superb, $397 were spent to fit it up ; in order that the cook should not catch cold $197 was paid for an interlocked Maltese cross framework covering for the floor of the kitchen ; and in order that the sailors should not be jealous of the cook, a rug costing $32.50 was put down on the floor of the cabin, a mahogany table costing $100 was put on the rug, and eleven chairs at $10 apiece were ranged around the cabin. It was one piece of economy that they only purchased eleven chairs instead of twelve ; but we found that the other chair was a lounge chair over in the corner, for which they paid $16. So I say that if the wrongdoing had been put an end to a few years ago, we probably would not have had this year the scandal of the tug 'Speedy.' I only mention these cases to illustrate the necessity that exists for applying the proper remedy. It seems to me that the right hon. leader of the House is really obliged to accept the amendment to the amendment or else to vote directly in favour of the middlemen. The original motion stands thus :

That all the supplies purchased for the use of the various departments of the government should be procured on the basis of public tender and contract——

The right hon. gentleman approves of that in so far as it is practicable, but he is not prepared to accept the full proposition of the motion, because he says that it is not practicable in all cases, though in his own department it is the practice in 75 per cent of the cases. Then the Minister of Finance moves in amendment that all the words after contract be struck out and the following substituted :—

So far as practicable, especially where large quantities of goods are required, with regard primarily to quality and price, and that all purchases should be made under the authority and direction of ministers responsible to parliament.

Then the hon. member for Peel moves his amendment to the amendment, that after the original words, which are not objected to, the motion read :

Except in cases of unforeseen emergency and necessity——

That is, to meet the views of the Premier—— —and should be purchased with regard primarily to quality and price——

And then comes the sting :

—that the present system of purchasing from middlemen and at excessive prices should be immediately discontinued.

So that we have the government committed unreservedly to the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain)—committed unreservedly to every word of that amendment with the exception of the last two lines. If the government supporters vote against this amendment, as they have adopted the rest of it, they put on record their opinion that it is proper that the present system of purchasing through middlemen at excessive prices should not be discontinued. All those who have any knowledge of what has taken place in the Public Accounts Committee can recall the names of Merwin and Wallberg down on the Intercolonial Railway, Strubb at Montreal and Coughlin and a dozen others, who had not a dollar of goods to sell of their own, but who nevertheless raked in hundreds of thousands of dollars a year out of government contracts, and when we have been able to raise the curtain a little, as we have been at times, we found that profits of from 50 per cent to 100 per cent were made by these middlemen on the sale of goods to the government, although they had nothing to sell themselves and purchased from the manufacturers from whom the government might just as well have purchased directly. We find in the case of Merwin that he not only had nothing to sell but did not himself pay anything for the goods delivered. He simply received an order from the department, sent it on to the manufacturer, the manufacturer delivered the goods at Prescott, the payments were made by the government to Merwin, and out of these payments Merwin paid the manufacturer his pittance and kept the balance.

Mr. J. D. REID. No, he divided it up.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Well, it is hardly fair to make a charge of that kind because the government refused to allow the committee to investigate and find out what Merwin really did with the balance over and above what he paid the manufacturer. But we have it admitted that goods which Strubbe bought at $2,200, he sold within twenty-four hours to the government for some $4,700. He took his cheque from the western block, walked over to the Ontario Bank, purchased a draft of $2,500 and put $2,200 to his credit in that bank. And we only found that out because the teller had put on the back of the cheque the denominations of the bills. And in this case the witness had so poor a memory that he could not say whether a dollar of this money went to his credit in the bank and had not the faintest recollection what he did with the $2,200 which he made that day. And the Minister of Finance had not a word to say, and we know that this man has been selling goods to the department ever since. Surely if there was ever a case for investigation, it was this. Yet neither the Finance Minister nor the right hon. the First Minister thought it his duty to investigate, and this man, having shown his fitness to be considered and favoured by a patriotic government, has been selling larger quantities of goods to the government ever since.

With these object lessons before us, we are justified in supporting the amendment, but at the same time we think it will go a very short distance towards securing an honest, economical and just administration of public affairs unless the men who are to carry into effect the wishes of the House supervise more scrupulously than they have been doing the transactions of their departments.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). When the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) delivered his speech, I hoped that we might have a fair and unpartisan discussion of a very important question of public administration. The right hon. the leader of the House followed in his footsteps and my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, although he allowed the cloven foot of partisanship to show itself occasionally, still fairly followed the example set him by his colleague and desk mate. My hon. colleague the Finance Minister took the same course, but unfortunately the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) showed clearly that he wanted to make this purely a party question and moved an amendment to the amendment which can be taken in no other sense. My hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Northrup) who followed made some references to old matters which have been threshed out in this House time and again and which do not properly come within the scope of this discussion. But his object was quite evident. It was simply to discredit the government without regard to any principle. Well, if these tactics do no more damage to the government than did the so-called exposures we have had exploited by hon. gentlemen opposite the past two or three years, I do not think the government have much to fear. I propose therefore to leave these matters entirely aside and discuss the subject before us in an impartial, non-partisan manner. As far as the original motion is concerned, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance accepted the principle that government supplies should be procured on the basis of public tender and contract. That is in fact the present law, so that the proposal of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) is simply a reiteration of the present law which is being carried out by this government. But the latter portion of the motion of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was struck out by the amendment of the Minister of Finance. Why? Because we do not believe in a purchasing commission which shall have no minister to represent it through whom it shall be amenable to parliament. The hon. gentleman proposed the creation of a purchasing commission, which, as I gathered from his remarks, would be akin to the Auditor General and be directly responsible to parliament and not to the government or the minister. I believe myself that such a commission would not work effectively. I believe that the purchasing of supplies should be made on the responsibility of a minister answerable to parliament, who would have to explain these expenditures to the House.

Now, the difference between the original motion and the amendment of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is that, while the original motion proposes an independent commission, the amendment of the Minister of Finance declares that supplies should be purchased on the authority and under the administration of a responsible minister. The amendment says, 'bought as far as practicable, where large quantities of goods are required, with regard primarily to quality and price'—the same words as are used in the original motion—'and that all purchases should be made under the authority and direction of ministers responsible to parliament.' I wish to emphasize and make clear this difference, and I may tell my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) that I am quite ready, and I am sure all the ministers are ready, to join issue with him before the electors, to meet face to face this supposedly outraged public opinion; and I am satisfied that public opinion will smile upon us and not feel outraged except by the very extravagant language of hon. gentlemen opposite, their supporters and their press.

My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) spoke about the civil service and mentioned some slight indications in that service of a bureaucratic tendency. I quite agree that these tendencies are but slight. I believe that the civil service in Canada, under responsible ministers, has been checked from having too great bureaucratic tendencies. I appreciate that the civil service, without responsible ministers at the head of it, might easily become bureaucratic and a direct menace to the interests of the people. But my hon. friend from North Toronto proposes to create a special commission for the purchase of supplies independent of any minister, thus containing in itself all the worst elements of bureaucracy and having a strong tendency in that direction. I do not think that would be reasonable or in the public interest. At present we have, under the various responsible ministers, purchasing agents who are working in their several departments under the direct and close supervision of the deputy ministers and ministers and, in most instances, purchasing by tender and contract—I will allude to that in a little while—purchasing according to the same principles that the hon. member from North Toronto proposes this bureaucratic commission shall observe. But, in one case we have an irresponsible body of two, three, four or five men and in the other case, under our present system, we have ten or a dozen such men under constant and responsible supervision. I venture to think it much less likely that these ten or a dozen men will individually or unitedly do what is inimical to the interests of the country than a small commission not under close supervision, and not controlled by any one responsible to parliament. I believe that commission would be open to the worst tendencies of bureaucracy, and open also to the worst tendencies of malfeasance in office, for they would not have the same investigation into their work and would not be able to resist temptation as well as the men scattered all through the service now.

Now, a word or two with regard to the system of tender and contract: I have already shown that the amendment does not shut that out. I venture to say, though without having gone into the subject in figures, that fully three-quarters, if not nine-tenths in value of all the supplies bought for the government to-day, are bought by tender and contract. I know from hearsay that the supplies of the Department of Militia for the camps are all bought under tender and contract, the supplies for the Mounted Police, the coal and the great mass of other supplies for the Intercolonial are bought under this system. There are, no doubt a considerable number of small items, in the aggregate a small proportion of the value of the supplies bought by government, that are not bought by tender and contract for the simple reason that the circumstances and conditions practically prevent this from being done. And a purchasing commission, such as is proposed, if brought into existence, could not buy by tender and contract the supplies of this kind bought for all parts of the country. Such a commission would buy as large a proportion of supplies outside of this system of tender and contract as the government does through its present officers.

Mr. BLAIN. If tender and contract be the principle of the Marine and Fisheries Department, why were not the goods purchased from Merwin purchased in that way?

Mr. FISHER. I am not going to deal with these instances——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FISHER. I am trying to deal with this question without partisan bias. I have not gone into the details of the public accounts investigation, and do not intend to discuss them here. When the reports of the public accounts investigation come before this House will be prepared to discuss them.

Mr. BLAIN. May I remind the minister that this was in 1905?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, and it was discussed here and disposed of by this House. If I remember well it was disposed of by a vote of the House, and I am prepared to leave it there.

Mr. HENDERSON. Where it was voted down.

Mr. FISHER. Yes, by the people who understood the question and who heard the discussion? And, as the Minister of Finance has remarked to me, it was voted down since by the people.

Mr. BOYCE. Where, in Stanstead?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, in Stanstead, in Centre York, in South Huron and some forty other constituencies.

Mr. BOYCE. And in Colchester?

Mr. FISHER. No, other things were discussed in Colchester. I know why hon. gentlemen opposite refer to Colchester; it is because it is the one little thing in which they can find comfort.

Mr. BOYCE. How about New Brunswick?

Mr. FISHER. New Brunswick did not deal with these matters. But when New Brunswick did discuss the question of electing a gentleman to the federal government, St. John elected him by acclamation. When they were dealing with provincial matters, it went the other way, I grant you.

Mr. BLAIN. What about London?

Mr. FISHER. The Conservatives worked against the labour man and defeated him.

Now, I am rather surprised that the hon. member for North Toronto should have waited until this late day to take up this question. He knows, as we all do, that there was a report on the civil service in 1892, four years before he and his colleagues went out of power. In that report there are several references to matters of this kind, and I wonder that the member for North Toronto did not propose then what he proposes now, if he thought it was a wise thing to do. Now, in regard to purchasing, I find the report says this:

A still further subject your commissioners deem worthy of note, before treating of the expenditures themselves, is that relating to the purchase of supplies, and the prices paid for articles purchased by the several departments. In his evidence before the commissioner the Auditor General stated most distinctly that when goods were purchased without tender——

They seem then to have purchased goods without tender.

—such as furniture and other supplies for the public buildings, as a rule, retail prices were paid for the same when wholesale prices should have prevailed. It happens too that in places where two or three departments are expending money, as for instance in Kingston, where the Militia Department is answerable for the expenditure for the maintenance of the Royal Military College and barracks of the permanent force, the Department of Justice for the expenditure on account of the penitentiaries, and the Public Works Department for the care, maintenance and repair of customs houses and other public buildings, different prices are paid for sundry supplies procured for each department. In the matter of coal alone the prices varied to a great extent.

I find something here also with regard to purchasing departments:

This is fully treated of in the separate report on revenue and expenditure, but generally it may be stated that there has been a tendency in some cases to purchase in such a manner that the government pays retail prices for wholesale quantities.

Now, I do not want to dwell on that, I am not objecting to what the former government did; but I wish to observe that the hon. member for North Toronto had the same kind of thing in existence when the was minister, and that for four years after that report was made and his attention had been drawn to these things, he did not appoint a purchasing commission; in other words, he and his colleagues believed what my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has proposed by his amendment. The hon. gentleman and his colleagues thought that was the correct method of administration, they accepted ministerial responsibility, and had purchasing agents for the different departments. I think they were right. The hon. member for North Toronto has changed his mind, he comes here now and proposes something different. It is very well for him when he has no responsibility, when he is not called upon to administer the purchasing of supplies, to say that we ought to do differently. But when he and his colleagues were called upon to carry on this same work they did it just as we are doing it, and just as we propose to do it, accepting full ministerial responsibility for the approval by the people. I think they are right, and I think we are right now. We are following their example. It might be said perhaps by some hardened partisans that it is always dangerous for us to follow the example of our predecessors. I am not prepared to say that. Where they did right we have followed them, and where they did wrong we have changed their policy, and I think all changes we have made have been beneficial to the country, and have been approved by the people. I think these are sufficient reasons why we should vote down the amendment and support the amendment of the Minister of Finance. Why should we vote it down? In the first place, because it says what I do not believe to be true, it says:

That the present system of purchasing from middlemen and at excessive prices should be immediately discontinued.

I maintain that we do not, in a general way, purchase from middlemen; and that we do not pay excessive prices as a general rule. Whatever prices we pay we pay by contract and tender, just as our predecessors did, just as the law requires that we should do, and as it required them to do. Now, my hon. friend talked about middlemen. Would purchasing by contract and tender eliminate the middleman? I do not think it would. Moreover, I see no reason why the middleman should not tender just as well as the original manufacturer. As a matter of fact we know that middlemen, jobbers and wholesalers do tender in a great many cases. Commercial arrangements are such that frequently middlemen and jobbers are able to tender at lower prices than the original producers, and when the tenders of middlemen are lower, it is our duty to accept them instead of tenders of the original producer. The fact that we buy by contract and tender eliminates the question of the middleman, because the contract goes to the lowest tender whether he is an original producer or a middleman. I think, therefore, we have no reason to vote for the amendment to the amendment, but we have every reason to vote for the amendment proposd by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Fisher) I expected would resort to the usual device of moving the adjournment of the debate. He admits that the motion of my hon. friends from North Toronto contains a great deal that he can agree with, that it was supported in a moderate way; but he says that the amendment to the amendment makes this a party question. What did he say that the amendment of my hon. friend from Peel was? That purchasing by midddlemen was improper. That was all, and that makes it a party question. Then by that admission he accepts full responsibility for the principle of purchasing by middlemen. On this side of the House we say that in view of what has been brought to light, in view of the abuses that have crept in through purchasing by middlemen, that system is wrong, vicious and improper, and should not be continued. The government, through their mouthpiece, the Minister of Agriculture, says that this is the dividing line between the two parties. The Minister of Agriculture says: Why didn't the hon. member for North Toronto, when he was in power for 18 years, adopt this system? I say that had he found creeping into it abuses, and extravagance, and dishonesty, and corruption, and improper expenditure of public money, he certainly would have made some change. But it is because he did not find it to the extent that it is now apparent to our friends that there was no urgent necessity for departing from the system which he had been administering in a different way from that in which the present government are administering it.

Mr. FISHER. The Civil Service Commission of 1892 drew his attention in this very fact.

Mr. SPROULE. That it was what?

Mr. FISHER. Just what you said.

Mr. SPROULE. Not at all. I have not seen any such statement in the report of that commission. The hon. gentleman says we must vote this amendment down. It says the purchasing from middlemen is improper and it results in compelling us to pay exorbitant prices and he says we must vote it down because it does not bring about that result. We have shown in case after case, that it does bring about that result and it is because of that fact that we think it is necessary to adopt some other system. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture said that they accepted what is the present law, the principle of purchasing supplies by tender and contract, enunciated in the motion moved by my hon. friend from North Toronto and that they intend to support that. We intend to stand by that. If it is the present law and if the present law is correct in principle how is it in carrying out that law these abuses have crept in? How is it that we have demonstrated over and over again that hundreds of thousands of dollars of the public money have been spent for nothing. have been given away to political favourites and for which we have got nothing in return? How is it that the money which we have voted year after year has not been properly spent if it is spent under the present law and if the present method is a proper one ? For three years we have been bringing to the attention of the House and the country through the Public Accounts Committee and in this House by returns examples where, in carrying out the present law and the principle which the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance declare to be the proper principle, abuses and dishonesty which have crept in and it has been shown that in the public expenditure the country has been robbed of hundreds of thousands of dollars and has got no return ? How is it, in carrying out the present law these practices have brought about the results that have been referred to ? In view of that fact is it not time that we suggested some board or some other device which would result in bringing about honesty instead of dishonesty, bringing about economy in the interest of the country instead of the system that at present exists. The Minister of Agriculture said that a certain percentage of all the supplies that were purchased were purchased under the principle of tender and contract. Would he be good enough to inform me what he said was the percentage of transactions that were carried out under the principle of tender and contract ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Ninety per cent.

Mr. SPROULE. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) says 90 per cent. Am I correct in accepting that ?

Mr. FISHER. I said certainly three quarters; probably it might be 90 per cent.

Mr. SPROULE. That would be that from 75 to 90 per cent of the transactions of the government are carried out under the principle of tender and contract. I would like to ask him whether the purchases from Merwin and Brooks were made under tender and contract? Were they ?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know.

Mr. SPROULE. And yet we purchased, inside of two years, from these two firms, or one firm—because I believe that they are one and the same firm,—no less than $404,308 worth, not a dollar of which, as far as I can see, but was purchased without tender or contract,—half a million dollars in one department, the Department of Marine and Fisheries in two years without tender or public competition and purchased from one firm and yet the Minister of Agriculture says that from 75 to 90 per cent of the supplies purchased are purchased under the principle of tender and contract. I would ask him whether the purchases that were made from the International Marine Signal Supply Company, to be found at page 97—P of the Auditor General's Report, and amounting to $237,-162, and whether the purchases from the Canadian Fog Signal Company, amounting to $54,720, and which were purchased inside of a little over a year, were purchased by tender and contract.

Mr. TAYLOR. And Merwin is in that company.

Mr. SPROULE. And Merwin is in the same company. Were these purchases made by tender and contract ? Not a dollar of them. Here we have nearly a million dollars purchased in one department and not a dollar's worth purchased by tender and contract. In view of that showing how can the Minister of Agriculture stand up and say to this House that from 75 to 90 per cent of the public money that has been spent for the purchase of supplies has been spent in accordance with the principle of tender and contract ?

Now, I will come down to the supplies of the Intercolonial Railway and I ask if they are purchased by tender and contract. After looking at the public accounts, I think I am within the mark when I say that not over 50 per cent have been purchased by contract. I doubt if there were 30 per cent purchased by tender and contract and yet the purchases are made to the tune of hundreds of thousands of dollars from the friends of the government, purchases without tender or contract, and at prices which are in many cases exorbitant. How much of the supplies for the speaker's chamber are purchased by tender and contract ? We were shown only a few hours ago that $4,000 worth were purchased in a short time and that not a tender was asked for a single dollar's worth of these goods. A thousand dollar's worth in one lump sum was purchased from one firm—no tender, no competition. They were purchased at the invoice price and from political friends of the government. How much of the supplies for the House of Commons and for the Senate have been purchased by tender and contract—only a very small proportion, I am told. How much of the supplies for the government steamers were purchased by tender and contract ? I do not know but I do know from inquiries we have made that only a very small percentage have been purchased by tender and contract. Take for instance the purchase of supplies for the ice breaker 'Montcalm;' were the prices paid for these goods fair and reasonable and purchased by tender and contract ? Not by any means, because the figures that were paid were extravagant and I think I would be within the mark if I said dishonest, and that the figures that were paid were three times the value of the goods. There was no semblance of receiving value for them. Take the supplies for Government House, situated in a suburb of Ottawa: how much of the supplies for Government House was purchased by tender and contract? Were there any at all? In so far as I know not a dollar's worth has been purchased by tender and contract. Then I come to the purchase of supplies for the Printing Bureau. How much has been purchased by tender and contract? I believe a very small proportion of them. It is a fair presumption that not more than 50 per cent have been purchased by tender and contract. I could go over all these disclosures which month after month we have brought out in the Public Accounts Committee showing that supplies have been purchased at extravagant and exorbitant prices without competition, and in the face of all this will the Minister of Agriculture still adhere to his statement that about 90 per cent of all supplies are purchased on the principle of tender and contract. The Minister of Agriculture is dealing largely in fiction when he makes that statement. The present system of purchasing supplies has been demonstrated over and over again to be vicious and rotten. The evidence in the Public Accounts Committee taken under oath demonstrates there is not the slightest doubt in the world about that. The system has resulted in hundreds of thousands of dollars of the people's money being expended without any return having been received. Is it not time we should devise some better means. And, we have not been able to bring out all the evidence we desired in that Public Accounts Committee. Although we have shown much that was wrong we would have been able to show a great deal more were it not that when witnesses are asked a question lawyers on the commiteee tell them not to answer it. I say it, and I say it advisedly that any one who has sat in that committee from day to day can reach no other conclusion than that these lawyers were pleading the defence of their clients; they were defending their clients, the government, every time. We were blocked on every hand by them when we tried to bring out the evidence.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I have heard the hon. gentleman use the same words before. When he states that the members of this committee who are lawyers were pleading for their clients it conveys an imputation, and if it be true such members of the committee are guilty of an infringement of the Independence of Parliament Act and of the rules of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman want to make a speech or to ask a question?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what he means by it.

Mr. SPROULE. I will tell the hon. gentleman what I mean. I say that when we are endeavouring to bring out the information which would show wrong-doing and improper and wrong expenditure of money the witness is told not to answer the question by one of these lawyers. Does not that look like it?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. In the first place, I say that statement is not correct, but that is not what I am at——

Mr. SPROULE. I say that members of that committee get up and demand the right to bring witnesses forward to prove the case for the defence before those who are proving guilt are done with their witnesses. Does not that look like offering a defence for their clients, bringing witnesses for the defence before the witnesses for the prosecution are heard.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. It never occurred.

Mr. SPROULE. The very last day I was in the Public Accounts Committee I saw that done by a vote of the majority of that committee against the will of those who were desiring to inquire into the improper expenditure of public money. We are often blocked by the statement that we must be guided as far as possible by the rules of evidence in the committee and that the rules of evidence would not allow such and such questions in any court. I would like to quote the statement of Judge Winchester who when sitting in an arbitration in Toronto said:

> He would not follow the rules of law in admitting and excluding evidence. These rules he said are obsolete and antiquated and no business man would follow them in such an inquiry.

We are supposed to be business men in that committee and yet we are limited by the rules of evidence. We are stopped by what are called the rules of evidence in that committee and the majority of the committee is invited to vote down our right to put questions, and in view of that am I not justified in stating that we are not allowed to go on with that inquiry as we should be. We, who are the representatives of the people charged with the responsible duty of making an inquiry into the expenditure of every dollar of public money are obstructed in a hundred ways. Although we have shown wrong-doing and dishonesty and improper expenditure of public money we could have shown very much more had it not been for the obstruction of these gentlemen. And yet, when we point all this out, the Minister of Agriculture says: What do the electors think: what do the by-elections show? I ask the Minister of Agriculture what does his own royal commission say? Does it not say exactly as we say: That the management of the Marine Department is rotten. Though he will deny that in face of the report of the royal commission appointed by the government. And to-day they dare to discredit that commission because it told the truth, and only a small portion of what they might have told if they had done as they were justified in doing, and probed to the bottom the condition of affairs in other departments. I give that back to the minister as a reply to his question whether the electors of this country believes there was wrong-doing in these various departments. In the Interior Department, in the Public Works Department, in the Marine Department, in all these departments we have been bringing out from month to month in the Public Accounts Committee and by the papers that have been brought down to this House, evidence of wrong-doing over and over again, mismanagement, incompetence, improper expenditure of public money, thousands and thousands of dollars of the people's money paid out to political friends for which no return was had. There are two methods by which the political pirates are robbing the country to-day. One is by the government employing their political friends who are in many respects only pirates to purchase the supplies required by the government at their own price and then sell them to the government at an advance of 100 per cent, 150 per cent and 200 per cent. No one will deny that. Need I point to the fact that Mr. Merwin purchased as a middleman fourteen articles for the government at a cost of $11,838 and sold them at an enormous advance. And that in face of the fact that any second or third-class clerk, or any engineer of the government, or the minister by a letter to the manufacturers could have purchased these supplies at the same price as Merwin did, because the manufacturer stated under oath in the committee that he would be glad to sell to the government at the same price that he sold to Merwin.

Yet Mr. Merwin purchased these fourteen articles for $11,839. What did he sell them to the government for? $18,012. It would cost him only fourteen letters, on which he would pay postage of two cents each, to order the goods for the government; yet he made a commission on these fourteen articles of $6,173, the equivalent of a very large salary to any man for a whole year. The government and the country paid $6,173 more for these fourteen articles than they would have paid had they been purchased by the engineer or by one of the agents or clerks of the department; and for this payment to a political friend of the government the country got no return. Inside of two years this firm bought for the government goods to the amount of $404,308. If they made the same commission on these that they did on the fourteen articles that I have mentioned—and I have every reason to believe from my examination that they made that much or more—they must have made on these purchases as commission $134,577, for which the country got no return. Is that right or wrong? The government say, through their mouthpiece, the Minister of Agriculture, that the system of purchasing from a middleman is right; the hon. member for Peel says by his amendment that it is wrong. That is the dividing line between the two parties. I have given transactions of only one department. If time permitted I could give transactions which have been carried out on the same principle and through the same class of middlemen in other departments, that would astound the country. Are we not justified in trying to find some remedy for the abuses that have crept in under the system that has been carried out by the present government during the past ten or twelve years? I say that we are, in the absence of some proposal by the government. In the face of these facts, is the government going to vote down the amendment to the amendment, which declares that purchasing from a middleman is wrong? If they do, they will be held responsible before the bar of public opinion, where the great jury of the nation is empanelled to try them. Will they move the adjournment of this debate to sidetrack this motion as they did the motion I made a few nights ago to get information? If they do, we will hold them responsible. In view of what has been brought out during the last three years; in view of the report of the Royal Commission, which hon. gentlemen opposite are trying to discredit; in view of the declaration that in the administration of the Department of Marine and Fisheries there is no evidence of conscience or of a desire to obtain any rebate or refund for the government on these large purchases, but that there is evidence that many of the employees are able, contrary to the declaration of Scripture, to serve two masters successfully, both the masters here and the masters from whom they purchase; in the face of all this, will the government vote down this motion? If they do, they must take the responsibility before the bar of public opinion, and there will come a day of reckoning when the people will speak in a voice louder than thunder, and tell them that their actions are neither endorsed nor condoned.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). Mr. Speaker, I do not desire at this late hour to detain the House at any length upon this subject; but I desire shortly to express my views on the resolution which has been submitted by the hon. member for North Toronto, the amendment moved by the hon. Minister of Finance, and the amendment to the amendment moved by the hon. member from Peel. The resolution itself deals with a matter of paramount public importance. I presume that the departments of any and every government should be kept as free as possible from taint and fraud. If there be a suspicion of either cast upon the departments of any government, surely it is a matter of paramount interest to that government to take hold of the situation very quickly, with the strongest possible determination to do the greatest good in the most effective manner and in the shortest time possible. Therefore this motion comes at a very opportune time, for never was a time when there has culminated in this House, as a result of a succession of charges made from this side of the House, a necessity for an absolute change in the system which heretofore has been allowed to govern or misgovern the departments of this government. Hon. gentlemen opposite have sought to defend the present system because forsooth the Conservative government in the past may have committed errors of the same character. In that connection it does strike me that the lament of the Minister of Agriculture was somewhat extraordinary. He deprecated the hon. member for North Toronto's disapproval of the system, which the Minister of Agriculture said had obtained under the Conservative rule. He differed from the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and deprecated the fact that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) had disapproved of the system which, the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) said, had obtained under Conservative rule. But does the hon. gentleman forget the attitude that he and his colleagues took prior to 1896? Does he forget how he and they agitated for departmental reorganization and made that a part of their platform in 1893? Does he forget that prior to 1896 he and they went up and down the country declaring that the then Conservative government was corrupt, that there was mismanagement, extravagance and dishonesty in the departments, and that if he and his colleagues were elected they would establish a better system of departmental supervision? Surely the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) must have a very short memory, as short as that of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) whom, however, with his many failings, I can pardon for that deficiency. The motion before the House is whether, under the present system, there have been grave abuses, the responsibility for which must necessarily fall on this government. The question is not what took place under the late government, but what is taking place under this government, and it is useless to try and shuffle off responsibility by saying that under the Conservative government similar crimes were committed. That is simply adding insult to injury. In taking that stand, these hon. gentlemen give to the people an exhibition of incompetency—perhaps not so much incompetency as dishonesty. They are simply trying to avoid the discussion of the crucial and vital issue which has been put before the country by the Civil Service Commission and with regard to which the people are intensely interested. The excuse that they are simply continuing the system which formerly prevailed and which prior to 1896 they condemned as bad and vicious, is one that the people are not likely to accept. What is the system which to-day obtains in the departments with regard to the purchasing of government supplies? It is this. There is a list in each department of a favoured few from whom only supplies are to be purchased. When supplies are required, instead of calling for tenders by public advertisement, an invitation is sent out to these favoured few who are on the patronage list. What happens? These few get together and form a combine and they decide which one of them shall get the government contract. That has been demonstrated in the Railway Department, the Public Works Department and the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and by that system, this government loses hundreds of thousands of dollars and perhaps millions every year by having to pay excessive prices. Yet when a minister is asked if such and such a contract was let after public competition, he will coolly say yes, and it is only on being closely pressed that he will admit that what he calls public competition is simply competition restricted to a favoured few. That system is responsible for all these extravagances. My hon. friend from Hastings rather commiserated those who preside over the departments of this government.

I do not know but that, in a certain qualified sense, I agree with him. For, with the example the ministers of the Crown have set in this government, what would you have expected in the ordinary course of human nature but that these gentlemen would follow the lead of the Prime Minister? Where you see the Prime Minister of this country rising in his place and voting down resolutions such as those to condemn the Wagner steals, the Nixon steals, the North Atlantic Trading Company steals. the Merwin and Brooks middlemen steals, the 'Montcalm' and 'Arctic' steals—when you see the leader of the government first to rise in his place and vote down inquiry, vote down resolutions to condemn these well-known and admitted extravagances, what can you expect from the ministers whom he has brought into office as his colleagues? What can you expect but that in every department there will be a laxity of morality and of departmental discipline, that there will be carelessness in the expenditure of money, in the method of letting contracts, and great laxity in favour of political favourites, and always a tendency to forget the interests of the public upon whom the burden of expenditure must fall? If the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who leads the government did not realize it before, he must realize now where the responsibility for all this maladministration rests. We have charged, for instance, session after session, that the Department of Marine and Fisheries has been allowed to run wild. We have charged extravagances and corrupt expenditures against other departments of the government. And we have been met with scoffs and sneers and adverse votes refusing us the right of inquiry into matters of expenditure that were of great importance to the people. And then, when there is a commission to inquire into the civil service, and when that commission brings down a report involving the Department of Marine and Fisheries, at long last the government must take notice of the facts. And what does the government propose? Has one hon. gentleman yet admitted the great gravity of the charges contained in this report? Can hon. gentlemen opposite boast that one of their number has risen in his place and said that the matters shown by this report are of such gravity as to require earnest deliberation in this House and to call for immediate reform? Not so. They do not seem to treat the matter as being of great moment. They regard it with the same complacency with which they treated the scandals brought against them by this side within the last three or four years—such scandals as I have already mentioned.

The contempt—for it is nothing else—which the right hon. gentleman who leads this House has shown for the rights of the people will not long be tolerated by the people who suffer from it. This country is alive to the significance of this report and the necessity for the reform covered by this resolution and the amendment to the amendment of my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain). The people know that the best method to preserve the public morality is to carry the resolution into effect. If the amendment to the amendment be voted down, can hon. gentlemen opposite go before the people at the general election—which, we are told, is shortly to come on—and expect the people to believe that they are honest in any statement they may make that they are desirous of grappling with and suppressing the extravagances and dishonesties which have been laid at the doors of the departments of government?

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. BOYCE. I hear an hon. gentleman say 'No.' I do not suppose they believe such a thing. What will the Prime Minister do? Will he ask his followers to vote down the amendment to the amendment, or will he be honest enough to see the necessity for it and bold enough to adopt it and call upon his followers to accept it?—and thereby endeavour to strengthen himself with the people of this country, and be looked to, not as a public spectacle, but as a public example. Here is the spectacle of the Prime Minister, who posed before the people of this country prior to 1896 as the champion of public rights, who complained on the hustings, making that complaint the groundwork of his campaign, that the people's rights were being voted away, that their money was being extravagantly and dishonestly expended, and that extravagance in the departments of government ran riot and held high carnival. And what does he do to carry out the pledges of reform that he made? With an expense bill running over $100,000,000, does he give heed to the unqualified and undeniable cases of extravagance, mismanagement and down-right dishonesty in the departments which have been brought to his notice? Not for one instant. He simply turns a deaf ear to every case which we seek to bring to his attention, no matter how great be the extent of the wrong charged and how indisputable the proof. Where will this end? The right hon. gentleman has heretofore attempted to justify the vote he has given and which he has called upon his followers to give, and which they gave quite readily, by saying that, in his judgment, the charges fell short of that which ought to be investigated.

What will the right hon. gentleman do in the present position? He is face to face with a report from his own nominees, he is confronted by a conviction pronounced by judges appointed by himself. Yet he still pays no heed to that which he promised prior to 1896, and upon the faith of which he attained to power. He made a pledge to economize, to put down extravagance and corruption in every department—that was the charge against the departments he made then, and that is the charge which we make now. Now, although he expends over a hundred million dollars a year, he can complacently afford to criticise and pick flaws in resolutions of the character of the one brought in by my hon. friend from North Toronto, with a sincere desire to effect reforms. The right hon. gentleman stands to day as a spectacle before this country of a man who has failed absolutely to fulfil the promises upon which he obtained power. He is being criticised from one end of the empire to the other. The right hon. gentleman will remember the criticism of the 'London Economist' of only a couple of months ago. That paper said that his friends were saying that he had around him a number of gentlemen who had acquired riches by unknown means, and that it was impossible for him to get rid of them. That is what the London 'Economist' said, and it is on the records of this House. But there is something more that was said by a very eminent friend of his, a gentleman of great prominence in days gone by, a gentleman to whose words perhaps the right hon. gentleman and his followers may still pay some heed. I refer to the Hon. Geo. Brown, whose words my right hon. friend is often fond of quoting when they suit his purpose. As I say, the right hon. gentleman went to the country in 1896 upon the promise to reduce expenditure and to put down extravagance and corruption. Has he done so?

See how he and his followers meet the resolution proposed by the hon. member for North Toronto; see how they meet the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain); see how they disdain and scoff at every sincere effort made to right the wrongs that are so prevalent in this administration. Now I would draw the right hon. gentleman's attention to these words of the Hon. Geo. Brown:

If, sir, a public man avows certain principles, agitates those principles and seeks to overthrow the government to establish those principles, and when he has obtained power laughs at his professions and casts his principles to the winds, he is aiming a blow at public morality.

ADJOURNMENT—CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION REPORT.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, before the House adjourns I would like to know if the government have any information as to when the report of the Civil Service Commission will be distributed among members of this House. It does not seem to be necessary that there should be any very great delay. The report of the commission is not as long as an ordinary issue of 'Hansard', which is brought out daily and is placed upon the desk of every hon. member of this House at eleven o'clock in the morning containing a full report of the debate of the day before. As members of the government seem to be anxious to stay here this evening it might be just as well for them to give the House some information as to what the policy of the government is in regard to the very serious and very grave charges which are brought against the government in the report of this commission appointed by themselves. Several days have elapsed, public opinion throughout the country is very greatly aroused and instead of giving the House any intimation as to what their course will be with regard to the very grave issues involved by these charges—I use the word 'charges' advisedly—these hon. gentlemen sit calmly upon the treasury benches and occupy the time of parliament in taking idle votes for the purpose of adding four or five more to their majority. It is a silly and undignified proceeding and I never saw one more silly or more undignified. While I am on that subject perhaps they will be good enough now to interest themselves in giving the country some idea of what is to be done in regard to these charges of the utter and absolute demoralization of the public service which has been brought about under this administration. I think that it is high time that the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), instead of keeping the representatives of the people here and delaying this House for the purpose of taking unnecessary votes, instead of taking up the time of this House, valued according to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House at $16 per minute in waiting for this, and that the other absent member should give some statement to the people as to what is to be done by this administration in regard to the charges brought against it by the strong Liberals whom they themselves appointed to this Royal Commission. It is well that we should have some statement from the government on this subject and that at a very early day, and I think it is not desirable that this House should adjourn until some statement is vouchsafed as to what the policy of the government will be in that regard.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). In regard to the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) that the House should not adjourn I do not know that it is a very alarming one; we have occasionally stayed later than this and if necessary we can do so again. I very much regret that my hon. friend has found the discussion and votes of to-night so disagreeable. I cannot realize that there was any thing in them that should have created this very great disturbance in his mind whereby he has given us such a very strange exhibition during the last few minutes. However, that is a matter that I must leave to the hon. gentleman himself. Coming now to the question with which he began his remarks, he wanted to know when this report will be ready. That is a question for the King's Printer. The order of this House was that the papers be printed forthwith. I take it for granted that the order will be complied with and that in due time the report will be brought down. I would be very happy if I knew of any way of accelerating the bringing of it down. But, I take it for granted that the King's Printer will do his duty in that respect. When it is down we will be very happy to discuss it in its proper time and order.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is not so much a question as to whether the King's Printer is going to do his duty or not; it is a matter of whether the ministers are going to do their duty or not. For instance, what is the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) going to do about it? He stands as an accused person before this whole country. His department is held up to the winds to go through all its tattered garments and he, himself, with it is held up to the criticism and judgment of this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister did not lose any time at all in attacking the commission that he and his own government appointed. The report of the commission was not laid on the table until he got up and attacked man for man the commission that he and his colleagues appointed. He made a promise at that time to this House that he would make an investigation into his department and do it at once. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) also made a promise. He backed up the promise of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He said that there was a necessity for further investigation and that there should be an investigation. Now, several days have passed and what has the Minister of Marine determined to do? I think that he owes to this House an immediate statement of his policy in this regard. What does he do? I find here that he arose immediately after the report had been placed on the table and amongst other things what he said was this:

> The chairman of the commission, Mr. Courtnay, does not appear to have taken part in the inquiry concerning that department, and the report as to that department is made by the two other commissioners, Messrs. Fyshe and Bazin.

There is a direct imputation, which the minister knows how to make and which he has made that the portion of the investigation which went on in his department and which led to such deplorable results, as far as the minister is concerned, and which will lead to such good results, I shall hope, in so far as the country is concerned, was not participated in by Mr. Courtney, the Chairman of the Commission, and that therefore not so much countenance need be given to the findings of the other two gentlemen of the commission, Messrs. Fyshe and Bazin. What did it matter whether Mr. Courtney was with these two gentlemen when they were investigating the hon. gentleman's department or not? The result was the report of the commission, not the report simply of Mr. Bazin, or Mr. Fyshe, or Mr. Courtney, and there is no intimation at all that the three commissioners were not absolutely agreed in reference to the statements which were made in regard to my hon. friend's department. So that, it did not seem to be what the minister should have done to undertake to create the impression in this House and the country that Mr. Courtney, the Chairman of the Commission, was not with Messrs. Fyshe and Bazin, and therefore the implication was that he had nothing to do with the investigation of the minister's department. He goes on again to say:

The order in council appointing the commissioners authorizes them to inquire into and report on such changes as may be deemed advisable in the best interests for the efficiency in the public service. I may venture the opinion that matters connected with the management and control of the departments can scarcely be said to come within the scope of this commission.

The galled jade winces and my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries intimated, there in no unmistakable language that these gentlemen went beyond their duties and beyond the scope of their commission when they dared to interfere in his department to the extent of looking into his mode of management. Now, this hon. gentleman, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, has been in his department for two years and more. I shall not forget the time some years ago when he made a very determined defence of that department by holding up the dead body of his colleague which had just been laid away, and declaring that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House were attacking the dead when they attacked his department. To-day he has a changed view in that respect, and time after time when he rises on his feet, he is not over and above declaring in veiled language, but yet you can easily see what he means, that he should not be held responsible for what took place in the Marine and Fisheries Department, that all this mismanagement, this trouble, this confusing of principle and conscience in that department was due to those who preceded him. Well, why does he not think of the shield he endeavoured to hold up to prevent an attack upon himself and his department two or three years ago. Why does he not hold up the same shield to-day and why does he speak in a way which is a direct imputation upon his predecessor in office. But where it strikes the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is this: That the commissioners went beyond simply saying what salary so and so should have and what grade so and so should have, and that they went into the management of the department as they had I think a perfect right to do, and he takes occasion to administer a ministerial rebuff to his own commission because they dare stick their noses into the affairs of his department without consultation with himself. He goes on further to give a hint, at a particular man I suppose, and he says:

I suppose it may be stated also that it was hardly within the scope of this commission or any of the commissioners to state that the increased cost of living was the logical result of the wasting, impoverishing and demoralizing system of protection.

Had he a double idea in that? Was he standing up as the apologist and defender at this time of the system, the wasting, impoverishing and demoralizing system of protection, which he himself since he has come into office has been foremost as a defender, and has kept upon the statute-books of this country? Or, was it a dab at Mr. Fyshe, one of the members of the commission. who, I believe, according to the report of the commission was the chief factor in having that choice bit of political wisdom embodied in this report. One or the other, or both, but whichever it was, or if it were both, it was for the purpose if possible of depreciating one of these commissioners who had dared to call in question the methods of my hon. friend's department. Well, he went on and after a great many words he made a promise to this House. He is eaten up with zeal for the honour of his officials and so he declares: That for the protection of the public interest and in fairness to the officials:

It is necessary that further inquiry should be made into the accusations and I propose to take without any further delay the necessary step to that end.

The hon. gentleman has had several days; there has been a delay. He says that without further delay he proposes to take steps. What steps are they? Has the minister done anything? If so I think the House has an interest in the department as well as himself, and I think he ought to take the House into his confidence and tell the representatives of the people what he proposes to do under this somewhat grave condition of affairs. Public opinion amounts to something in this country yet. I know the Minister of Agriculture does not think it does. He has not a very high opinion of public opinion; he says he has not been afraid of it so far—

Mr. FISHER. Because I have a high opinion of it.

Mr. FOSTER. He says he is not afraid of it now, but still public opinion is existent in this country, and I think public opinion at this time is voicing itself somewhat in reference to this peculiar state of things in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. He promised to take steps without further delay. The House is awaiting and the country is awaiting to know whether he is going to fulfil his promise and how he is going to fulfil it. Then, the right hon. gentleman who leads the government had something to say, and although he criticised the remarks that were made by me, he agreed with me in some respects and in the end declared :

The commissioners have thrown out suspicions and made not only insinuations but also actual statements against the officials, and yet strange to say they say they named nobody, thus casting suspicion all over the department and without any definiteness which would show who the guilty parties were.

Now that is a grave matter to cast suspicion over a whole department such as the Department of Marine and Fisheries. And there again there is a cogent reason why delay should not occur and why these steps promised by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should be at once undertaken. Again I think we have the right to ask the hon. gentleman who presides over the Marine and Fisheries Department as to the steps that have been taken. The right hon. gentleman at the close of his remarks said :

I agree with the statement of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that there is enough in the report of the commission to cause further investigation to be held. Whether it should be by royal commission or whether it should be by committee of this House my hon. friend is not prepared to say nor am I prepared to say, but I say there should be further investigation.

Now, I submit that all this calls for prompt action. The case itself calls for prompt action. The promise that was made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries calls for prompt action, and the taking up of that promise by the leader of the government himself gives us I think, the very best of reasons for asking the government to give us to-night before we leave what steps they have taken or what steps they propose to take in this very grave matter.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation at all in giving my hon. friend the information to which he is entitled, and I think it is just as well that we should try to be calm and not be carried away by excitement or temper. I do not think it adds at all to the dignity of the House or to the good feeling of the House, or the good conduct of the business of this House to have such words bandied about as 'scorn,' 'contempt,' and 'silly.' I can leave aside these words and come to the facts. I stated the other day, speaking as the head of the government, that there was enough in the reports of the commissioners who had been appointed to investigate the public departments to warrant further action. In this I expressed the same opinion as was expressed by the hon. member who has just addressed the House (Mr. Foster). He stated himself the other day that in his opinion there was enough in this report to warrant further action. What action should be taken he was not prepared to say; whether it should be by royal commission or by a committee of this House or otherwise, and neither was I prepared to say at that time. And how many days ago is that? It is just three days ago if I remember aright. Since that time as the hon. gentleman is aware there are more matters than one which have engaged the attention of the government. There are other matters in connection with the business of the session which had to be attended to. The ministers have had to be in their seats in the House and in their departments every day.

On Saturday council sits, and is it extraordinary that after three days the government is not prepared to say what action should be taken. That action should be taken we all agree ; but my hon. friend says you must give us here and now, at half past twelve in the morning. a statement of what action is to be taken, and if you do not give us that, we will sit and go on with the investigation. Is that a reasonable request, I ask any member of this House. We have stated that action must be taken, and action will be taken ; but the hon. gentlemen says we must have it here and now. I say it is not reasonable to ask that. He knows the duties that ministers have to attend to, the multiplicity of demands on their time which come from day to day and therefore it must not be thought extraordinary if I tell him that at this moment I am not prepared to say what action will be taken ; but action must and will be taken at the proper time. With regard to the question of the hon. leader of the opposition, who wanted to know when the report would be laid on the table of the House, that was a fair question, and a fair answer was given. A lot of material which forms an appendix to the report is in the hands of the printer and will be brought down as speedily as possible. I will say more : I am not afraid of this report. If the government appointed a commission, an independent commission, composed of men who are known for independence of character, it was because they wanted to probe everything. When the report is brought down, my hon. friend will find us, me in particular, ready to face him and give him all the information he wants.

Mr. SAM. BARKER (East Hamilton) Mr. Speaker, I think the right hon. gentlemen is rather shirking the question, if he will allow me to say so. This report has been in the possession of the government for nearly two weeks. The right hon. gentleman has not been obliged to wait for this report. If all we hear is true, he had it in his possession for nine or ten days before it was placed on the Table of the House.

Mr. FIELDING. That is not correct. A partial report was made; but the remainder of the papers were brought down with a very slight delay, indeed before the ministers themselves had an opportunity of reading them.

Mr. BARKER. Will the Minister of Finance say specifically what portion of the report was not laid before the government nearly two weeks ago?

Mr. FIELDING. I say, in the first place, that the report was handed to me on the day of the budget speech—Tuesday, the 17th. My colleagues did not and could not have seen it for several days, because they had no opportunity. Then, there was a portion of the report, documents which were referred to in it, which had not been sent in. We asked that these documents be sent in. They were sent in, and immediately they were placed on the table of the House.

Mr. BARKER. Now we have the facts. The report was before the minister.

Mr. FIELDING. Part of the report.

Mr. BARKER. What he calls a part of the report, I understand to be the notes which formed no part of the report.

Mr. FIELDING. The notes, so called, were referred to in the report, and were stated to be essential elements in the judgment of the commission.

Mr. BARKER. They were simply notes. The report itself was in the hands of the minister nearly two weeks ago. It is all fudge, if I may use the expression, to say that he did not tell his colleagues, or that they had not heard of a report making charges against a department of the government which the minister himself says creates suspicion. Is a minister of the Crown to remain under suspicion for two weeks, or for three days, without making up his mind as to what he is going to do about it?

Mr. FIELDING. There is not a word in the report reflecting on the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. BARKER. The statement made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries himself was that the report created suspicion against his department without naming anybody, and therefore against the whole department. He is the head of the department, the responsible minister; and if suspicion has been thrown on that department, how does he escape? Surely he is more attacked than any body else until some distinction is made between persons. The hon. gentleman has lain under that suspicion for two whole weeks; the Minister of Finance has certainly known it all, and we are told that he did not communicate it to his colleagues.

Mr. FIELDING. I did not read it.

Mr. BARKER. What is the story we hear! This government have known that a Royal Commission, appointed by themselves, have made charges against a department of the government which casts suspicion upon the whole government, and they remain under that suspicion calmly waiting, knowing all about it, for the Minister of Finance had the report in his possession, even though he had not the notes of the commissioners upon which they based their judgment. There was the judgment; there was no doubt about the suspicion it cast; and with that suspicion resting upon them for two weeks, the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues cannot yet tell what they ought to do about it. In the face of the words used by the Minister of Marine, that he would act, and the words of the right hon. gentleman, who said that he would have to act, the country is waiting With such a charge against a minister of the crown—because it is against him—the government stand for two weeks idle, and are not prepared to say whether they will defend themselves before the people or not.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I do not know whether the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has read the report or not. I suppose he has not read it, or he would not have said some things which he has said. He states that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries stands charged with very serious wrong doings. When he reads that report and the evidence, I may tell him that there is absolutely nothing in it, either directly or indirectly, against the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. There are charges against the officers of the department. They are charged with administering the department in such a way that they are supposed to serve two masters. Now, is it fair that this matter should be investigated further? I think so; I so declared the other day in the House. I think it is due to the officers of the department that these serious charges made against them should be fully investigated. That has been my purpose, and it is still my purpose. I may say further that since the report came to my knowledge, which it did about eight days ago, I have taken steps to look into matters which are specifically mentioned in it. I found that the two specific cases which were mentioned in the report were not correctly stated. I thought it was my duty to mention these things to the House and the country the other day, when the report was brought down. Outside of that, there is a mass of evidence and a large quantity of notes which seem to have been prepared by one of the commissioners, which I have not had time to read, and which none of my colleagues had time to read, because they came to the knowledge of the government just a day, I think, before the report was brought down. I went through one of the documents and had neither the time nor the opportunity to go through the others. But I took immediate steps to examine into all the cases concerning which I could procure the files and the documents. I have taken up the two cases which were mentioned specifically in the report, and I intend to investigate all the other cases when the report is printed, for I am anxious that the investigation should take place expeditiously, with the least possible delay. It is most serious for a minister of the Crown to find that the officers, upon whose advice he has to rely, stand before the country charged with being derelict in their duty. I am looking into the charges as expeditiously as possible, and if I should find any of the officers guilty, I shall deal with them promptly. I am extremely sorry to find that the report does not mention any names. I would have liked to have had the names mentioned because then I would be in a position to dismiss the officers complained of. The matter, however, will be investigated, and any officer found derelict in his duty will be dismissed or suspended.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am a little doubtful of the right hon. the First Minister taking immediate action. The right hon. gentleman takes the ground that he cannot act at once because this report has only been in the hands of the government a few days. But two years ago I brought the same matter to his notice. On reference to 'Hansard' it will be found that other hon. members as well as myself practically duplicated in this House what is contained in the Civil Service Commission report. On May 8, 1906, I spoke as follows:

Some one is getting that rake-off. There is a system going on in the Department of Marine and Fisheries by which, on almost every item in connection with this matter, there is a rake-off of at least 25 per cent, and the minister when he examines the accounts that go through his department, will have to come before the House and admit that there is 25 per cent at least paid on every item in connection with this matter over and above what I or any other member of this House could purchase these appliances for. That is a fact and I defy the hon. minister to dispute it. I can prove it here by the items in the Auditor General's Report. It is most unfair to have a system of that kind going on in the Marine and Fisheries Department. It is not going on without some one getting a rake-off. We should know who is getting that rake-off. It is a shame that this country has to pay these exorbitant prices.

Mr. BRODEUR. On which article?

Mr. J. D. REID. On every article in connection with the lighting system throughout Canada.

At the same time I added:

Mr. BRODEUR.

In addition to that the minister knows that when these goods have to be brought from a foreign country they are quoted to the government at a price with the duty added.

The matter was, therefore, brought to the attention of the Prime Minister on that occasion and action should have been taken then.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman speaks of a rake-off. Does he know of any one officer who has taken a rake-off? If he will give me the name I will suspend that officer right away.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am not acting as a detective, but if I had been in the department as long as the minister I would know whether any officials were getting a rake-off or not. It is the duty of the minister to find that out.

Mr. BRODEUR. When the hon. gentleman said that there were rake-offs I suppose he must have spoken of what he knew. Will he give the names?

Mr. J. D. REID. Did we not prove in the Public Accounts Committee, to the satisfaction of the minister himself, that there were prices paid which showed there was a rake-off given to Merwin?

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend knows that these prices were certified to by Mr. Fraser, an appointee of the late government. Does he advise that I should suspend or dismiss Mr. Fraser?

Mr. J. D. REID. At that time the Minister of Marine and the First Minister insinuated that I and other members on this side were reflecting on the memory of the late Mr. Préfontaine. I defended the memory of Mr. Préfontaine, and if there is no Liberal in this House who will come to his defence, I want to say that I believe he was an honest man, and I want to add that the present minister has purchased goods from Merwin on the same terms and conditions as when his predecessor was minister.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend is absolutely mistaken. He made the statement the other day in the House that I have been purchasing goods from Mr. Merwin as before. I have here a report showing that in 1905-6 the purchases from Mr. Merwin amounted $122,437.18, and with the exception of $674.50 the whole amount was ordered before I had charge of the department.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. gentleman takes the ground that these goods were ordered previous to his becoming minister. Admitting that fact, the fact nevertheless remains that exorbitant prices were paid for these goods and he admits that he accepted the goods and paid those prices. That does not show honest administration and ability on his part to occupy the position he does. What does the Civil Service Commission report state? It states:

The work proceeds in a lumbering haphazard way, giving rise to constant blundering and confusion. There is no sign visible of a single directing head or an intelligent purpose unless it be that of spending as much money as possible. Zeal for economy and good management, or pride in the work, is not visible. Perfunctory and mechanical discharge of duties is the rule, with apparently no perception of any need for improvement. The lack of organization and of organizing power in the department has recently been very conspicuously and painfully illustrated by the fact that the accountant's or bookkeeping branch had apparently fallen into such confusion that expert accountants had to be called in to put things to rights and create some intelligible system.

That shows that the minister has not been able to manage his department. But we have further evidence—and that evidence the Prime Minister has had before him ever since last November—that the Department of Marine and Fisheries was just in the shape the commission describes. Let me read what this Mr. Richards, who made his report last November, said about the department. He said:

In a good many instances, the quality of important materials has been noticeably bad, even of materials so important as plates for steamers, renewal and repairs. As to quantity, there is no doubt whatever that the department has paid for materials which were never received.

Since November, the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has had that report in his possession, for it was submitted to the department at that time. Yet he has taken no action. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has had the same report. Why was not action taken?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What report is that?

Mr. J. D. REID. The report of these accountants to the present Minister of Finance. There is what is in that report as sworn to in the Public Accounts Committee. But we do not need to go to that, for it is in the files before this House. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) will not say that this is not in the report, for he knows that it is. And the Prime Minister and Minister of Finance know it too. We have waited five long months to have this reorganization undertaken, that the country may be no longer robbed. Yet now the government are trying to get out of it on the ground that this report has been only nine days in their hands. It is exactly in line with what was done two years ago. The Prime Minister put us off then by saying that he had put the present minister in to reorganize the department. Yet nothing has been done to set the department right.

Nor is this the only department; several others are in the same condition so far as the purchasing of supplies is concerned. In the Department of Railways and Canals, for instance, the same system goes on. I remember that, between 1891 and 1896, the system along the St. Lawrence canals was to advertise for supplies. Any one could tender, and the result was that the supplies were bought 25 per cent cheaper. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) asks: Do you want to keep a stock on hand? The system at that time was to advertise for prices for certain goods—practically everything used on the canal—in the quantity that would be used. Tenders were put in, and at any place along the canals these supplies could be purchased. But what is the system now? As the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) knows, along the whole system from Montreal to Kingston names are given of parties from whom purchases are to be made, and prices are paid higher than private individuals can buy for. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. GRAHAM. Perhaps I may be permitted to say that there is very grave doubt about it.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is only the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham's) statement——

Some hon. MEMBERS. It is as good as yours.

Mr. J. D. REID. Probably it is. But if we have an investigation in the Public Accounts Committee, I can prove the truth of what I have said. And, if we have time, I will take the opportunity to prove it to the satisfaction of the Minister of Railways and Canals. As to extravagance on the canals, the minister admitted the other night that he was agreeable to running a steamer along the river right up to the Bay of Quinté for the superintendent of canals, a system that was not followed years ago.

Mr. GRAHAM. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. J. D. REID. Did not the hon. gentleman state that the superintendent should have this boat?

Mr. GRAHAM. What I explained was that not only did the superintendent use it, for his purposes, but that it was used for towing scows and for other purposes as well.

Mr. J. D. REID. I admit that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Graham) said that. But there is a difference of opinion about that, for it is only a pleasure boat, as any one knows who knows the boat.

I would call the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that for three sessions in the Public Accounts Committee, we have been showing how these contracts have been let, yet he has not taken any action. We have shown that the Department of Militia has been defrauded—at least, it has paid exorbitant prices, higher than those paid by private individuals. We have shown that the Public Works Department has been purchasing through men like John O'Gorman as middlemen. And the Railways and Canals Department also has been working through middlemen.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Whom?

Mr. J. D. REID. Wallberg is a middleman.

Mr. GRAHAM. He was the lowest tenderer.

Mr. J. D. REID. But the minister knows that Wallberg is not a manufacturer of steel girders or cranes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is a manufacturers agent, is he not?

Mr. J. D. REID. He swore that he was not an agent for any one. It is time that the Prime Minister should take action. Two years ago, we brought up the case of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. If we could see any sign that the Prime Minister intended to take action it would be a different thing, but in two years he has done nothing, and I cannot feel satisfied that he intends to do anything now. He has the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) in the Public Accounts Committee objecting to everything that comes up there when we get to a point where we are likely to learn something.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is the limit of mistatement. The Minister of Public Works has not objected to anything in the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. J. D. REID. Did not he object to some gentlemen from the lower provinces answering some questions the moment we touched the vital point?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No proper question was objected to.

Mr. J. D. REID. The contrary is the opinion of every member on this side of the House as well as some on the other side. I hope the Prime Minister will take some action, and that the time is not far distant when he will be able to inform the House that something has actually been accomplished in the way of putting the departments in better shape.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou). The rather peculiar course adopted by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition in objecting to the adjournment has given to my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) an opportunity of getting off one of the utterances which he seems anxious to give on every occasion. Those utterances are utterly irresponsible in their nature——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. J. D. REID.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD—and involve——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think I can hardly hold the term 'irresponsible' to be out of order.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD—involve, I say, on the part of my hon. friend the repetition of statements which have been reiterated from year to year without my hon. friend having the pluck to make a charge against anybody.

Mr. J. D. REID. A charge against whom?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Against anybody.

Mr. J. D. REID. I laid a charge against the department.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend has been in parliament too long not to know that when a member wants to charge malfeasance in office against any minister of the Crown there is a proper way to do it. When my hon. friend to-night undertook to read what he said two years ago in regard to certain transactions in the Marine Department, and when the Minister of Marine asked him whether he meant to reflect upon Mr. J. F. Fraser, the official who had certified the very accounts he was attacking, my hon. friend had nothing to say against Mr. Fraser. My hon. friend has been talking about Merwin and his accounts. He has stood up in this House from time to time and certified to the character of Mr. J. F. Fraser, the man who certified to the minister that these accounts of Merwin were accurate. Yet my hon. friend is not willing to charge any person in this House, and he is not willing to say anything against Mr. J. F. Fraser, the gentleman who was appointed by his own friends when the Conservatives were in power, and who was found there by this government, and who like many others of these men who are there to-day, if what the hon. member for Grenville says is true ought to have been dismissed. My hon. friend comes to-day and reiterates charges and attempts to impute blame against the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. If my hon. friend is not prepared to-day to say to the minister that Mr. Fraser is not a responsible man, or an honest man, he has no business to make the statement he has made to-night. If Mr. Fraser is a responsible man, then his certification of the bills made out by Merwin must be taken by the minister to be absolutely correct. The hon. gentleman undertakes to come in now and ventures to vindicate the memory of the late Hon. Raymond Préfontaine. The hon. gentleman need not rush to the defence of Raymond Préfontaine; if Raymond Préfontaine's good name is ever defamed by reason of anything my hon. friend may urge it will be on account of the fact that there were in that department men who were Conservatives and men who should have been turned out by him and his predecssor. And if the good fame of this government ever suffers discredit, it will be for a similar reason. Let there be no mistake about that. Hon. gentlemen opposite in former days planted certain people in the various departments. Unfortunately the services of some of those men were not dispensed with after 1896, and to-day when Mr. Fraser's name comes up my hon. friend stands up in this House and gives him a certificate of character, while at the same time he attacks the minister because Mr. Fraser certified to certain accounts. These gentlemen come into this House and talk about what they would do in the Public Accounts Committee. Now, if the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) knows anything against anybody in connection with the administration of affairs, why does he not have the pluck to stand up and make a charge? Hon. gentlemen opposite have relied wholly on their imagination in making their alleged disclosures. There have been no disclosures, no maladministration on the part of any one of the ministers. It does seem to me that the time has almost come when, for the dignity of this House, hon. gentlemen opposite who hurl these insinuations against ministers should be required to observe the well known parliamentary rule that when they have any charge to make against ministers in power they should pledge their seat and their word to the truth of their statements. But hon. gentlemen opposite, because, by misrepresentation and insinuation, they succeeded in changing the administration in Ontario for a certain time, think that they can now come to this House and repeat the same trick. That is a delusion they are labouring under to-day. It is true that in taking that position they have deserted every principle they ever claimed to have. At one time the great Conservative party claimed to be national policy party, they claimed to stand for a united Canada, they claimed to stand for big issues. But where do they stand to-day? They ignore every one of their professed principles, otherwise than by long-winded professions. When we come to the Halifax platform, which has been in existence now for five months, not one hon. gentleman opposite, with the exception of the member for North Toronto, has ventured to put upon the Order Paper a single proposition contained in the Halifax platform. So, deserting every theory and every policy they ever claimed to hold, they now come to this House and hurl forth these innuendos, these irresponsible statements, and expect the country to believe them. The hon. member for Grenville comes here and makes this little speech of his about Merwin every week or two, and when you ask him as to whether the man who certified Merwin's account is a bad man, he says, oh, no, that gentleman is a first rate fellow. And so they go. They talk about the Department of Railways and Canals and of the splendid condition of affairs that obtained in the good old Tory days when everything was bought on tender. Some of these days we will endeavour to enlighten the House about some of those communications which hon. gentlemen addressed to ministers and in which they desired their friends to be looked after. As regards the administration of railways in the maritime provinces, in the good old Tory days there was nobody but a Tory could look for anything in the way of contracts. If a man happened to be the lowest tenderer and a Liberal, he was passed over and the contract was given to a Conservative. If these gentlemen ever get into power, I believe this resolution of the hon. member for North Toronto, and all these fine spun theories about commissions to look after the buying of supplies, will be absolutely forgotten. After they have twelve long years in opposition one can fancy the cold and unwholesome welcome which await them when they tell their supporters that they are not going to have a chance to sell any supplies to the government. We are going to appoint a commission which will be irremovable except by impeachment and nobody, whether he is a Tory or anybody else, is going to have any control over it they say. I warn the hon. member for North Toronto; he will never attain the front rank of his party by advocating a policy of that kind. The Conservative party do not want any policy of that kind in this country. Then, my genial friend from Grenville (Mr. Reid) knows very well in his heart that he would be the last man to support any such proposition. My genial friend from Grenville talks about the Railway Department and the middleman—about Mr. Wallberg, the middleman——

Mr. BOYCE. Yes.

Mr. MACDONALD. That is a bitter pill for the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce). That hon. gentleman remained in the Public Accounts Committee for a couple of weeks and then gave up the job of hunting for Mr. Wallberg because we were able to bring down a list of the contracts that had been awarded in the Department of Railways and Canals for which Mr. Wallberg had tendered and in every instance he was the lowest tenderer.

Mr. BOYCE. Does the hon. gentleman not recall the fact that after being under examination for three or four days Mr. Wallberg begged that he would not be called again for three or four weeks?

Mr. MACDONALD. I recall the fact that the hon. member for West Algoma had abandoned the task of examining him.

Mr. BOYCE. I have not finished with him yet.

Mr. MACDONALD. All I can say is that if those who sit as members of the Public Accounts Committee have no more onerous duty than attending the examination of Mr. Wallberg by the hon. member for West Algoma we will have a light task.

Mr. FOSTER. Your sitting appears to be always on your feet.

Mr. MACDONALD. Perhaps I might refer to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) in that regard. The Public Accounts Committee has been regarded as a place where the subjects to be considered were the matters that were referred to the committee. But, when my hon. friend from North Toronto goes there he is not satisfied with carrying out the well known parliamentary usage in that respect but he brings matters before the committee and suggests subjects to deal with that were never referred to the committee and because some of us, who like to observe parliamentary usage in dealing with these affairs, venture to suggest the inadvisability of this procedure he hastens to his Tory newspapers in Toronto and in them describes the hon. gentlemen who stand for parliamentary usage as obstructionists although he knows that he is violating every parliamentary rule by his tactics. If the hon. gentleman had shown any anxiety to follow that principle of parliamentary usage which should guide a parliamentary committee it would not have been necessary for any of us to object to his methods. He knows in his heart that in every case in which we have ventured to object to his methods it is on account of the fact that he has transgressed against well known parliamentary rules and practice.

This little diversion we have had at this late hour has arisen on account of the fact that the hon. leader of the opposition displayed an unusual amount of bad humour. Why it was I do not know. Let me say as one sitting behind this government, that my hon. friend need not worry about the attitude of those who sit behind the right hon. First Minister in regard to the question as to whether action will be taken on the Civil Service report. The right hon. First Minister knows full well what his duty is in the present circumstances. We know what action may be expected by this House and the country as a result of this report with respect to anybody who has committed in any degree a dereliction of duty. My hon. friend need not worry about the day or date that this report comes down. When it is printed and before this House both sides will read it and I am here to say that we know that the right hon. First Minister will take such a course as will be worthy of his great name, that he will show to this country that he will not stand for mal-administration in the slightest degree and that if there be an official in any department of this government, whether Conservative or Liberal, against whom dereliction of duty shall be proved, he will deal with him as he has always dealt with wrong doers in the past.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE (Montmagny). Mr. Speaker, I think that this discussion is probably premature. I do not agree with the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) in stating that the ministers have been desirous of keeping the report of the Civil Service Commission back from parliament, but at the same time I think that it is the desire of the country that that very important report should be brought down as quickly as possible. I understand that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) wanted to see the appendices to that report, and I think myself that they form the most important part of the report and that it would not be complete without them. But, I trust earnestly that it will be printed as soon as possible and distributed amongst the members. This is probably the most serious thing that has happened during this session. Probably the discussion we have had to-night is a result of the attack which the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) made upon the Commission the other day even before members of the House had seen the report. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries—and I have risen merely for the purpose of contradicting his statement—asserts that he has not been called to account by this report. He is the head of the department and he is responsible to the country for what has happened. Having taken the portfolio he is responsible for what has taken place in that department. I do not think he can shield himself behind the officials of his department. Suppose the argument of the minister should be good, suppose he could shield himself behind the officers of his department, or suppose that everything had happened before he became the minister, I still say that the report holds the minister responsible for the act which have taken place during his administration. For instance, you will find in the report, as it has been printed in the public press, that the Falconer affair has been discussed by the commissioners and that there is a certain blame attached to the department in that regard. I am not going to discuss at the present moment the question as to whether that accusation is true or not. You will find also in reading the report of the commissioners this sentence having reference to the Department of Marine and Fisheries:

> There is no sign visible of a single directing head, or an intelligent purpose, unless it be that of spending as much money as possible.

I will not venture to say what the report is based on because I prefer to wait until we have the report before discussing it. I remember that one of the ministers of the present administration left it under far smaller suspicion, under the suspicion created by an attack only on his private life. The late Minister of Railways and Canals resigned his portfolio in order to clear his character as a private man. It seems to me that in the British House of Commons a minister placed in the position that the Minister of Marine is in to-day would owe it not only to the country, but to his colleagues to tender his resignation until the suspicions with regard to his administration were cleared away. One of the members of the government said that there is no rake-off in the department. I beg to say the contrary, for I find the report says :

Some of the government officers are serving two masters and apparently succeeding with both, scripture notwithstanding.

I want to make my position very clear, and I say that I believe according to the report there has been a 'rake-off.' But I will say also that I have every confidence in the honesty of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I think he is an honest man and I think there is certainly no accusation of a rake-off against him. But he is responsible to the country for his department, and consequently constitutionally he is responsible for everything that has taken place under his administration and under the administration of his predecessors in office under this government. I hope the inquiry into the matter will be pressed as soon as possible. But, believing in the honesty of the Minister of Marine I cannot at the same time forget that not very long ago some of the ministers who are attacked in this report clung to their portfolios, or sacrificing their principle to the portfolio. When the school question came we saw that some of the ministers who believed in protecting the rights of the minority in the Northwest, clung to their portfolios, abandoning the minority, and it seems to-day as if the chickens were coming home to roost, and as if the ministers who refused to let go their portfolios on that question, honest ministers, should have to go to-day when their honesty as administrators of departments is challenged. Therefore I hope that the report will be brought down as soon as possible and that the investigation will take place without delay.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I have no doubt that many members of this House have during their time listened to some very amusing after dinner speeches of a somewhat extraordinary character, but I venture to think that they have seldom been treated to one, more original, more amusing, and more interesting than that which has been given us to-night by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). It is said that a successful after dinner speaker is one who talks a great deal about nothing, amuses his audience and makes them laugh, interests himself, and on sitting down receives general applause. The hon. member (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) filled the bill to-night. The extraordinary doctrine that he evolved from the gigantic brain of his with regard to parliamentary government is intensely amusing to those who know anything about the subject. He announced that no member of this House has the right to criticise a department, or the government, or mismanagement, unless he is prepared to stand on his responsibility as a member of parliament and take the risk of his seat in making a charge. What a wonderful announcement as to parliamentary procedure and constitutional government! Why, I thought it was the right of any member of parliament, from the greatest to the smallest to at any time criticise the government or any member of the government or any department of the government with regard to anything they believed to be wrong without imperilling his seat as a member of the House. What constitutional authority lays down the doctrine that even a member who goes so far as to make a direct charge against a minister of the Crown or against a department jeopardizes his seat? I know of no such authority. But if this Daniel come to judgment can tell me where I can find the authority I will be glad to be enlightened at as early a date as possible. With regard to the report of the Civil Service Commission, it is serious enough in all conscience to justify the government in taking it up before any other important work is gone on with. This scathing indictment against the government and the management of certain departments of the public service cannot be laid at rest for long. It is equivalent to a verdict of want of confidence in the government as a whole, and especially a want of confidence in the administration of the Departments of Marine and of Militia and Defence. If that is the case the Premier is not justified in allowing one moment's delay. The report was laid on the table three days ago, and if it was not discussed by the cabinet before that I think they were derelict in their duty because it is too serious a thing not to be noticed by the responsible heads of the government. Then, if reports are true the report must have been discussed in caucus a few days ago, and while that may not be absolutely correct yet, notwithstanding that the caucuses are private, the newspapers often do publish news as to what takes place in them. For instance, will any one say that the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) did not know what that report contained when he spoke in the budget debate. Although the report had not then been given to the House it looks very much as if his inspiration were obtained from that report. I venture to think that the member for Brandon saw that report before it came to parliament.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is not so.

Mr. SPROULE. I will take the right hon. gentleman's word that so far as he knows it is not so, but we do know that many of these things leak out, and it is not unreasonable to suppose that the information with regard to the contents of this report became known beforehand. The Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister have said that there are a great many notes in connection with the report which they have not had time to read yet, and it would appear as if the whole report were not presented to the House, and if that be so the House was deceived. But it appears that there must have been something else to come down, that the House is not yet in possession of, that the ministers have seen, but have not had time to read.

Mr. BRODEUR. The papers to which I made allusion were brought down at the same time as the report.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood it to be stated that there were some to be brought down yet

Mr. BRODEUR. No, everything has been brought down.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, everything has been in the possession of this House at least three or four days, and has been in possession of the government for a much longer time, or the Minister of Marine could not have attacked the report of the commission at the very moment it was laid on the table of the House. The minister says there is nothing in the report reflecting upon him, although something has been said against the management of his department. But who is responsible for the management of his department? Is it not the minister? He is the only man the country will hold responsible for it. If these irregularities have taken place under his eye and he has never reproved any of those under him or made any improvement in the department. we are justified in holding him responsible. He tries to shield himself by saying that a great deal of this took place under his predecessor. But constitutionally he is as responsible for the management of that department under his predecessor as under himself; he assumed that responsibility when he took the position of minister. An intimation has been given to this House that in view of the disclosures which have been made in the report of the commission, further action will be taken by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He says: 'There have been insinuations and implied charges, but nobody's name has been mentioned; I want to have a further inquiry to satisfy myself who is at fault.' Is that going to satisfy anybody in the country? Suppose he does that, what will the world say? Ask my brother if I am a rogue. Is the minister likely to incriminate himself for what has taken place in the department while he has been at the head of it? Under the law no man is expected to incriminate himself, and the minister is not likely to do so. Is that what we are waiting for, with these extraordinary charges hanging over the department? The report of that commission is equivalent to a motion of want of confidence in this government, especially in the Department of Marine and Fisheries and in the Department of Militia and Defence. Would a minister of the Crown in Great Britain remain at the head of a department for one day while charges of this kind were hanging over him, without compelling the government to give him an opportunity to vindicate his conduct? In my judgment he would not. He would resign until his character was cleared. Would any Prime Minister of England allow one of his ministers against whom such charges were made, to hold office for three days or even one day, without telling the House what course he was going to take? Is this an evidence of what the Prime Minister has always told us, that he endeavoured to follow the British constitutional practice, as it was found in the mother of parliaments? The right hon. gentleman has departed far from it in his conduct on this occasion. The country will hold not only the heads of these departments, but the Prime Minister, to account for the delay that has taken place, while a great shadow of crime has been hanging over his government, without making any effort to vindicate its character. The eyes of the country are directed to this parliament. They see the government press at the capital declaring that there must have been suspicion of mismanagement in the first place, or the government would not have appointed a commission of honest, fearless and intelligent men to make this inquiry; and the press of the country, or the greater portion of it, even the most violent supporters of the government, have had to admit that wrong-doing has taken place under this government, and that there must be a further investigation; yet the government are continuing to manage the country as though everything were swimming along in the happiest possible way. I say the eyes of the country are upon this parliament. They are waiting to see whether the Prime Minister is going to live up to the precedents he derives from the mother of parliaments. If he is not, they will soon find that he has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. The right hon. gentleman cannot afford to let a moment pass without taking action on the report of this commission. Nothing will satisfy this House or the country but the most searching inquiry, either by a committee of parliament or by an independent commission, into every department of the government from cellar to garret. The government can not allow another day to pass without taking action on the serious indictment made by that commission. Every day they allow the present condition to remain as it is will be so much additional evidence given the people of their unfitness to administer public affairs.

Mr. L. A. RIVET (Hochelaga). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I did not have the privilege of listening to the remarks—eloquent I deem—of the hon. member for East Grey, but what struck me was his virtuous indignation because the hon. Minister of Marine had not yet resigned. Pious people seldom exhibit signs of honesty such as he has displayed. He claims that the hon. Minister of Maine should not remain a moment longer a member of the Cabinet and that, on the other hand, the Prime Minister ought not to keep him as his colleague on the ground that the famous report of the Civil Service Commission has not yet been taken up.

I wonder how it is that our good friends opposite feel so uneasy. Unless I am mistaken, the Commission has not criticised the administration of the Marine Department within the last four, five or even ten years, but its criticism covers a far more extended period.

The hon. gentlemen opposite were in power for eighteen years. Far too long, God knows, for the welfare of the country. However, during all those days they never thought of holding an investigation such as the one which has just been held and whose report has been laid on the Table of the House a few days ago. Why have they not done anything when they were in power and why are they now, scarcely a couple of days after the report has been tabled, so eager to discuss it? Why do they condemn the Minister and the Cabinet of which he is a member, even before studying that report?

The country to which the hon. member for East Grey has appealed by giving vent to his indignation will not take any stock in the pranks the hon. member has just indulged in. The people have confidence in the Cabinet. This very evening, I had the privilege of attending a public meeting at which reference was made to this report and particularly to the statements affecting the hon. Minister of Marine.

I can assure the members of this House that the people do not take in earnest the bold statements of the hon. gentlemen opposite and have absolute confidence in the government.

Our friends on the other side of the House want to get at the facts. Truth will out, thanks to the measures taken by the minister, and then the hon. gentlemen opposite will be the first to feel aggrieved. The government have no reason to fear investigation, for the welfare of the people is their only aim; but it was not always so, when the hon. gentlemen opposite have held investigations.

I did not intend to offer any remarks, but when I came in and noticed the hon. member for East Grey going to Great Britain to hunt out examples so as to condemn the Prime Minister for still keeping in the Cabinet the hon. Minister of Marine, I said to myself: Evidently, the hon. member for East Grey is not in his usual frame of mind.

I trust that nobody will take any stock in this discussion upon the motion that the House do now rise, started in order to deceive the public, and that this appeal to the country—whether made in earnest or not—will have, please God, the same result tomorrow as it had before, namely, the best advantage of the country.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). It seems to me the right hon. the First Minister does not fully realize the responsibility under which he is or he would have acted differently. What are the facts? Two weeks have gone by since the government have had knowledge of this report. During that time the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), if he has any knowledge whatever of the inner workings of his department, had ample opportunity to inquire into the truth of the findings of this report and take action on them or deny them absolutely. But when the report was laid on the table last Thursday we had the weakest exhibition imaginable made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He was not able to deny categorically the charges made, but he made reference in a vacillating manner to some of the findings of that commission and insinuated that something more would have to be said about the report later on. Is it to be believed that the minister, who has been at the head of the Department of Marine and Fisheries during the past two years, is ignorant of the facts that have been brought out in that report? He certainly cannot escape responsibility. Whether he was hopelessly ignorant or had any knowledge of what was going on in his department, we do not know, because he has not taken us into his confidence, but there is in this House a gentleman, who has been taking a great interest in the debate but saying nothing, who might be able to throw some light on the situation. I refer to the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) who presided over the Department of Marine and Fisheries during the absence in England of its head (Mr. Brodeur). I now beg to address myself to the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) and ask whether during the time he presided over that department, irregularities of a serious nature were not brought to his attention ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Unquestionably, no.

Mr. BOYCE. Then, I address myself to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) : If he had to wait for a Civil Service Commission to ascertain the irregularities of his department, can he rely on the weak defense he has brought before this House and country and declare that further investigation will have to be made before he can satisfy himself, forsooth, notwithstanding his two years as head of the department, that there is or is not something in the charges that have been made ? During the time the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) presided over the Department of Marine and Fisheries, possibly he was in a position to judge of the way that department was being run ; and possibly, if he would speak, he might be able to say whether complaints were or were not made to him, or whether he did not make some comments with regard to the department as he found it or as he handed it back to the minister. Be that as it may, the situation calls for action on the part of the government. Whether the government will take action or not, we know not, but there is need for immediate action we know.

The Prime Minister must have been gratified by the eulogistic speech of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald). If the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) was, in the opinion of the hon. member for Pictou, speaking irresponsible words, I have no hesitation in saying with regard to some of the words of the hon. member for Pictou that they were the irresponsible words of an irresponsible gentleman. He said that we were to cease insinuations with regard to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, that some hon. member should pledge his seat and his word, that we should, forsooth, make charges and not be content with hurling statements across the floor and casting reflections upon this pure Department of Marine and Fisheries. It is strange that an adherent of this government, be it right or be it wrong, should so far forget his position of responsibility as a representative of the people to say deliberately that it is necessary for members to make charges in a case like this. Here is the solemn finding of the commission as broad, as sufficient as it could possibly be made. Yet my hon. friend from Pictou, in the exuberance of his after dinner speech, finds that in order that these facts against the department may be brought to public attention, some gentleman must place his seat in jeopardy and make charges in this House. Possibly, on reflection, to-morrow, the hon. member (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) when he peruses his 'Hansard' will strike his pen through several lines of irresponsibilities—to use his own word against the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid)—and that he will possibly be sorry he spoke as he did under the circumstances under which he spoke. Let me say to him, as a word of advice, that one o'clock at night is a bad time to start making political speeches, possibly they will not read as well in his constituency at the time of election as they sound when he delivers them. I say that the right hon. Prime Minister must have been exceedingly gratified with the eulogistic comments of the hon. member for Pictou. That 'unerring instinct' which the hon. member for Pictou spoke of as having characterized the Prime Minister's action in dealing with charges against this government seems to have prompted the Prime Minister to strange things. It led him to vote down the resolution against Wagner, the man who stole from the poor immigrants coming into this country, and who was a prison bird. With 'unerring instinct' the Prime Minister voted that resolution down, and the government employed this criminal, this convict, this felon, at an increased salary. Another man whom the right hon. Prime Minister voted to retain at an increase of pay was named Dobbie. He was postmaster. The hon. gentleman (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) smiles. This case is a joke with him apparently. The report of the post office inspector showed that this man had stolen $1,000 from the postoffice. The Postmaster General ordered his dismissal, but, for political reasons, ordered his reinstatement. The 'unerring instinct' of the Prime Minister in dealing with charges brought to his attention in this House year after year did not prompt him to take any action in regard to this matter. These men who stole, some of whom were convicted felons, were not only not prosecuted, but were promoted for their misdoings, and for the service they rendered. The hon. member for Pictou says that the right hon. Prime Minister will investigate, that he will prosecute and that he will dismiss—I would like it if my irresponsible friend—I can call him nothing else considering the amazing position he has taken with regard to both parliamentary and legal matters in the speech he has just made—will mention one case in which the Prime Minister has shown his 'unerring instinct' by investigating anything, or prosecuting anybody, or dismissing anybody for wrongdoing brought home to him so long as he was a faithful servant or employee of the government ? If the hon. member for Pictou will consult 'Hansard' during the period he has had the honour to be a member of this House, he will find it very difficult indeed to show a case in which the Prime Minister has not refused to investigate, has not stood in the way of investigation, has not balked and forbidden investigation even though the case for investigation was clearly made out. As for dismissal, why, the right hon. gentleman far from dismissing anybody, has exalted those who have committed these wrongdoings, or rather voted to sustain the exaltation of Nixon and Wagner, the so-called gentlemen who steal from the public purse of this country.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (Leeds). The Prime Minister appointed a commission to inquire into the civil service, a commission composed of men in whom he had full confidence. That commission has made a report which reflects seriously upon the government, and now the right hon. gentleman proposes to take some action to investigate the Marine and Fisheries Department, and others. Why did not the right hon. gentleman move on the report of a commission he appointed two years ago, a special committee composed of members of this House to investigate purchases made for the steamer 'Arctic'? That committee brought in a majority and a minority report. The minority report ought certainly to have attracted his attention because it contained facts which should have been acted upon at once. It was proved before that committee that 8,000 pounds of pemmican were bought at $1.25 per pound from friends of the right hon. gentleman, and that purchase amounted to $10,000. A gentleman came as a witness, but as he was refused a hearing by the majority of the commission, he made this sworn declaration:

In the matter of the 'Arctic' investigation into the supplies purchased for the 'Arctic,' under reference to a special committee of the House of Commons, by a resolution in the House of Commons on May 18, 1906.

I, Leon Constant Van Bever, of the city of Toronto, in the county of York, manager of the Canadian departments of the William Davies Company, Limited, do solemnly declare:

1. I have been for a number of years engaged in the manufacture of meat products, including meat extracts, such as fluid beef, solid extract of beef, beef cordial, powdered, dried and fresh beef, and various products made therefrom.

2. I have examined a sample of the pemmican (so-called) furnished for the 'Arctic' expedition, and the firm with which I am connected would be pleased to furnish to the government, or any institution or individual, an article similar and equal in quality to such sample in lots of 1,000 pounds or over, packed in ten pound tins, boxed, strapped and ready for shipping freight prepaid to any railway station in Canada at the price of 35 cents per pound.

3. My said company have been willing to supply the same article at the same price at any time during the year 1904.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act 1893.

(Sgd.) L. C. VAN BEVER.

Declared before me at the city of Ottawa, in the county of Carleton, this 26th day of June, A.D. 1906.

(Sgd.) F. M. BURBIDGE.
Notary Public for Ontario.

Now if this 8,000 pounds of pemmican had been purchased for 35 cents a pound, it would have come to $2,800; therefore, there was a rake-off for some one of $7,200, Take another case of a lot of bovril bought from some of his friends, 5,900 pounds at $1.65. We put a witness in the box who swore that he would have supplied the same article at $1.10, showing another rake-off of $3,245. Then another one of their friends supplied 805 pounds of tobacco at $1.34; and we put a member of this House into the witness box who swore that he would have supplied the same quality of tobacco at 67 cents per pound; showing another rake-off of $539. These facts were all placed in the hands of the Prime Minister, and yet he refused to act. But now when his own commission have made a report which shocks the country, the Prime Minister says he is going to move in the matter. The hon. the Minister of Agriculture is not in the House now, or I would refer to a statement he made vindicating every purchase that was made in connection with the 'Arctic'. I would like his constituents to read this declaration of Mr. Van Bever, perhaps they would not take the same view of it that the Minister of Agriculture takes. The Prime Minister knew that all these rake-offs were going on and yet he refused to move. Now however he says he is going to move in regard to the Militia Department, and I think he would find the same bad state of affairs existing in all the departments. We cannot spend a hundred millions of dollars in this country and spend it properly. Here is how the money is frittered away—one friend getting a rake off on a few pounds of pemmican of $7,000, another on bovril of $3,000 and another on a few pounds of tobacco of $5,000. That is the way the money is going, and when it is brought to his attention the right hon. Prime Minister says that he will move in the matter. But he is moving too slowly. The country wants him to move quickly. We do not want this government to spend more money until we know that the country is going to get better value than they have been getting in the past.

Mr. F. F. PARDEE (West Lambton). It is something like old times to hear the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) speak because of the last three speakers we have had on the other side of the House, not one has said a word about the 'Arctic.' Every one has kept away from that old familiar subject. If there is one subject in regard to which this government was more thoroughly vindicated than another it was the question of expenditure upon the 'Arctic.' I think I can safely say that there was value received for the expenditure of the country connected with that boat. I recall speaking on that occasion, and I then said and I still think that in so far as the 'Arctic' is concerned, the country got value for what was paid. I think that if no greater impression is made upon the country than that which hon. gentlemen opposite succeeded in making with reference to the 'Arctic' it cannot have much effect.

In regard to this report, in so far as hon. gentlemen opposite are concerned, I do not think they are particularly anxious for it, to be acted upon or that they are absolutely sincere in the views which they have put before the House to-night. In so far as my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) and the government are concerned, the report has only been in their possession a short time. The report, everybody admits, is an important one, one which must be taken cognizance of, Therefore, it appears to me to be absolutely without the mark for hon. members on the other side of the House to say that, because the report has been on the table of the House for three days the government are absolutely guilty of delaying of waiting of hesitating and of vacillating in regard to it. It does not appear that any time has been lost because it is an important report and surely in three days it would be absolutely impossible for the government to make up their minds as to what they should do in regard to it. It appears to me that if the opposition had wanted to show their good faith they would have endeavoured to allow it to go and adopt some measure in regard to this report and they would have allowed the members of the government to go home and get some rest, rather than keep them here until this late hour of the night in order that they might be in a better position to prepare the policy which they desire to adopt in regard to this question. Certainly the action of hon. gentlemen opposite will not tend to bring the action of the government upon the report down any quicker. As far as that is concerned, the government have not been guilty of any laches and I have no doubt that they will do more than hon. gentlemen opposite would desire them to do. As soon as they have had time to take cognizance of the report they will bring down such a measure as will put matters to rights, if is is necessary that they should be put to rights. The most that the country will expect the government to do will be to take cognizance of the report, and I feel confident that they will not be slow to form a sound judgment with regard to it, and that they will not lack courage to adopt a policy that will give general satisfaction to the country.

Mr. PARDEE.

I want to say a word in reference to what the hon. member for Leeds has stated here, that in so far as the Minister of Marine is concerned, he had gone on, even in the face of what was disclosed with reference to the Merwin contracts in the Public Accounts Committee, still purchasing articles from Merwin. Since the Minister of Marine and Fisheries became Minister of Marine there have been purchased from Merwin $122,437 worth of supplies of which he himself has only been responsible for $674.50. In other words the present incumbent has only purchased on original contracts from Merwin $674; so that it is not fair for any member of this House to stand up and say that in the face of overcharges of 25 and 50 per cent having been shown in the Public Accounts Committee, goods were bought from Merwin. In the next breath they say that the minister is still responsible for all the goods that have been purchased by him from Merwin knowing, as a matter of fact, that the present incumbent had only purchased $674 worth of goods from Merwin, during his own incumbency and during the years which he has been the responsible minister.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have always been under the impression that a minister taking a department was politically responsible for all the acts of his predecessors. Does the hon. gentleman controvert that?

Mr. PARDEE. My point is simply that you could not have contracts and absolutely repudiate those contracts without being liable in the same way as a private individual.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That was not the point the hon. gentleman was making. The point he was making, was that the minister was not responsible because these contracts were made by his predecessor.

Mr. PARDEE. Yes, I say the minister is not responsible.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Not politically responsible?

Mr. PARDEE. No, not politically responsible.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is a new doctrine.

Mr. PARDEE. He is in the same position as a private individual. If the contracts were there and he repudiated them the government would be liable in damages. All he has done is to carry out the contracts that were made by his predecessor and all he purchased were a few small repairs amounting to $674. There have been no new orders given by the minister to Merwin. I think that is something that should be placed before the House and the country because it is a different impression that is attempted to be conveyed by hon. gentlemen opposite. As far as the present administrator of the department is concerned, I think he is administering it well, that he is administering it in the interest of the country, and with a singleness of purpose, and I feel satisfied that he recognizes that it is time to put his house in order, and that it will be in an absolutely satisfactory condition.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before inquiring into the business of the House, I would like to say that the doctrine of political responsibility enunciated by the hon. gentleman is in absolute antagonism to every authority on the subject. I would like to ask the Prime Minister what business we will take up to-morrow ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I dissent very much from the constitutional doctrine of my hon. friend, but this is not the time to discuss it. We will take it up later on.

Mr. FIELDING. We will take up concurrence and the necessary proceedings with respect to the Supply Bill and then the budget debate.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 2.13 a.m., Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, March 31, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 138) respecting the Pacific and Atlantic Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Bill (No. 137) respecting the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Bill (No. 139) for the relief of Edith Maud Rosario Gammell.—Mr. Galliher.

BRIGHTON WHARF.

On the orders of the day being called :

Mr. C. L. OWEN. Mr. Speaker, I beg to ask if it is the intention of the government to take over, put in thorough repair and extend the wharf at the village of Brighton, in the riding of East Northumberland ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not able to give my hon. friend an answer to this question to-day. Perhaps he would kindly give notice of the question and I will see that the necessary information is at hand when I come to answer it.

THE ROSS RIFLE.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. When may we expect the report of the Public Accounts Committee relating to the Ross rifle ? It is some weeks since the evidence was taken and the report has not been brought down. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) inquired about this on Friday night, but I see from 'Hansard' there was no answer to the inquiry.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). My hon. friend is aware that the government has absolutely nothing to do with that. The Public Accounts Committee sat to-day, I understand, and that would be the place and the occasion to raise the question.

RETURNS UNOPPOSED.

Mr. J. D. REID. Would it be possible to have orders No. 28, 29, 30, 31 and 32 on the Order Paper (relating to locomotives, late trains, and new steel rails on the Intercolonial Railway) allowed to go as unopposed motions on Monday next, as it is necessary that I should have these papers when we are discussing the estimates ?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). Certainly, I will give instructions now to start hunting the information.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens). I desire the same privilege in regard to orders No. 33 and 34 relating to the demand of the Charlottetown Board of Trade or others respecting loading of coal vessels and correspondence, &c., and to Prince Edward Island freight rates.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I would ask the same privilege with regard to order No. 27 (relating to the purchase of blankets, Militia Department).

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. These orders will come up on Monday.

QUEBEC BRIDGE COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Have the government any information as to when we may expect the printed copies of the report of the Quebec Bridge Commission ?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). I cannot give the information. The portion of the report previously brought down is in the printers' hands.

WESTERN ENTRANCE, TORONTO HARBOUR.

Mr. CLAUDE MACDONELL. What is the delay in the letting of the contract for the new western entrance to Toronto harbour ? Tenders were in two or three weeks ago.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). There is no delay beyond the ordinary delay which takes place in the letting of all important contracts. The matter is now going through the regular course.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Mr. FIELDING. In order that we may advance the Supply Bill covering the items which have already been approved by the House, it becomes necessary that I should move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of Ways and Means. We have already a motion to that effect before us, on which is proceeding the budget debate, and I suggest that we might, with the unanimous consent of the House, agree to adopt that motion now for this purpose, and that, immediately after the Supply Bill is disposed of, the motion be restored to its present position, and the budget debate proceed.

SHIPPING RINGS.

Mr. C. L. OWEN (East Northumberland). Mr. Speaker, there is a matter I wish to bring up before this motion is carried. The following is a clipping of Canadian news from an American paper :

Last week at a meeting of the Royal Commission investigating shipping rings in London, England, J. C. Eaton, head of the great department store business of Canada, appeared and said that transport between Britain and Canada was in the hands of the Canadian and North Atlantic conference, and the action of the latter had been to force ocean rates up on Canadian traffic but not advance rates on United States traffic. The companies interested in the combination against the interest of the Canadian Atlantic trade were, according to Mr. Eaton, the largest importer perhaps in the Dominion, the Allan line, the Canadian Pacific, the Dominion line, and the Manchester lines, which he alleges have agreed to force up British rates to Canada from 10 to 15 shillings per ton measurement on westbound goods for any Canadian port except Montreal, while if the goods were for points in the western States half the ocean rates are accepted. He also alleged that German traders are given lower rates than British.

I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to that.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING. About a year ago we received an intimation that it was the intention of His Majesty's government to appoint a royal commission to deal with the question commonly described as that of shipping rings, and we were asked whether we would care to nominate a member of that commission. Although at the moment there was no special matter in which Canada seemed to be concerned, still we thought it desirable to respond to the invitation of His Majesty's government, and accordingly a gentleman belonging to the government service, and having a special knowledge of the shipping business, in the person of Mr. Isaac H. Mathers, assistant receiver general at Halifax, was nominated, with an allowance for travelling expenses, but without any extra allowance for services. Mr. Mathers went to London and attended the meetings of the commission. The proceedings moved very slowly. Mr. Mathers came back to Canada and went again to London. The work moved slowly, and seemed to be of such comparatively small interest to Canada, that Mr. Mathers doubted whether any good purpose could be served by his remaining. The Minister of Trade and Commerce therefore recalled him. Recently a matter arose in which Canada was interested and the minister requested Lord Strathcona to authorize one of his staff to represent Canada. I think the interests of Canada in the matter referred to are being looked after by Mr. Griffith of the High Commissioner's office.

Mr. SPROULE. As I have a circular on what is a cognate subject, perhaps this is an opportune time to bring it to the notice of the House. It is as follows:

London, March 21, 1908.

Sir,—My executive committee have instructed me to forward you a copy of a letter sent by them to all the principal millers and shippers of flour from Canada. The letter inclosed explains itself, and my committee hope that they can depend on your good offices to get a bill of lading which is an injustice to Canada, made into a fair and equitable document.

Both Australia and the United States of America have had the same difficulties with steamship owners in the past, and these were overcome by the Sea Carriage of Goods Act, 1904, as regards Australian shippers, and the Harter Act, as regards the United States of America.

Thanking you on behalf of my committee,
I remain, sir, your obedient servant,
W. T. ODAM,
Honorary Secretary.

This is the circular letter which was sent:

London Flour Trade Association,
Corn Exchange, London, E.C.,
January, 1908.

Gentlemen,—This association has had several interviews and some correspondence with the Canadian Federation of Steamship Lines with reference to the bill of lading on which flour is shipped to London, and we understood in June last that the whole question was referred to Montreal, but up to to-day, we have heard nothing.

We can do practically nothing more on this side, and it rests with the millers and shippers of flour in Canada to bring such pressure to bear that the clauses objected to should be taken out of the bill of lading altogether.

In the first instance, shippers are to blame for accepting a through bill of lading, containing a clause (14) which reads as follows: 'The property covered by this bill of lading is subject to all the conditions expressed in local bills of lading used by the steamship, or steamship companies carrying this property at the time of shipment,' without either knowing or caring what objectionable clauses there may be in the local bill of lading by which all shipments must be made, and by which, in one instance at least, that is specified later, might make their documents practically valueless. This is a most serious matter to all concerned in the flour trade, both shippers in Canada and receivers in London.

The clauses in the sea-board bill of lading are here given, and each clause is followed by this association's objections in red. The Thomson line local bill of lading is the one which is actually before us, but the Canadian Pacific Steamship Company has exactly the same clauses, although in some instances they are numbered differently. The points at issue are as follows, viz.:

Clause No. 1. Reads that among other things, 'the ship is not responsible for hook marks or injury from hooks, stowage or contact with, or smell or evaporation from any other goods or from live stock or their excretions however caused, &c.,' and then goes on to say 'quarantine expenses upon the goods of whatever nature or kind shall be borne by the owners of the goods.'

Surely the steamship company should be responsible for tearing and loss of flour if they permit hooks to be used, and the steamship company should also be responsible for taint through improper stowage, while for human food to be in danger of being rendered unfit for human consumption owing to excretions of live stock which the ships carry entirely for their own profit, and for the ships not to be liable is iniquitous. Then surely quarantine expenses should be borne by the ship and not by the goods.

Clause 2. This contract or any question arising thereunder shall be governed by the law of England, &c.

This clause makes it doubly important that only just and reasonable clauses should be in the bill of lading, especially as it has been decided in the high courts of justice, quite recently, that if shippers accept such a document as this, then the receivers here must bear the consequences thereof.

Clause No. 3. Notwithstanding any written description in this bill of lading, the ship and shipowners are not accountable for the description, weight, measure, gauge, quality, condition, quantity, brand, contents and value of the cargo, all of which are unknown.

Clause No. 4. The owners of the vessel are not answerable for any discrepancies between the shipping marks, as described above, and the actual marks on the goods; nor for any difference between the contents of the packages and description of the same in the bill of lading as herein described and those actually delivered.

This association consider both clauses should be deleted, for they relieve the shipowners of all responsibility as to brands, which practically means that they can deliver brands indiscriminately at this end without penalty. For instance, supposing a merchant buys a high patent and the steamship company deliver low grade, under this clause there is no redress.

Clause 5, in part, reads as follows: But nevertheless the goods may be delivered to the consignee named therein without the production of an endorsed bill of lading, and such delivery shall free the master, owners and agents from all liability to deliver the goods to any other person.

It is of vital importance to the trade that this clause should be deleted, for it gives the shipowner the power to deliver the goods without production of bill of lading, or presumably, without a proper guarantee, and such clause would prevent altogether the security of such documents being of any avail to bankers or other bona fide holders, in fact, it destroys altogether the financial value of the bill of lading.

Clause 7. The shipowner is not to be liable for any damage to any goods however caused which is capable of being covered by insurance.

This seems to be a general exemption clause from all liability for damage and should be eliminated.

Clause 16. The agents of the ship to have the option of forwarding cargo by craft, on deck, or under, at ship's expense and shippers' risk.

It is absolutely an unheard of thing to carry flour on the deck, so that this clause requires no further comment.

Clause 18. That the shipowners shall in no case be responsible for any loss or damage thereof, or in any wise relating thereto, whether such loss or damage arise from defects, or insufficiency, either before or after shipment, in the hull of the said steamers, &c., &c.

This clause should be expunged.

My committee suggest the addition to the Canadian bill of lading of a notification clause as follows:

'Carriers of goods on through bill of lading shall notify consignees accordingly on receipt of steamer's manifest.'

It is suggested by my executive committee that if the steamship companies do not wish to issue new bills of lading that they enter into an agreement with my association by which these objectionable clauses may be considered null and void.

Yours faithfully,

W. T. ODAM,
Honorary Secretary.

My object is to bring this matter to the attention of the government, so as to induce them to bring such pressure to bear on the steamship companies as will induce them to amend these regulations so that they will be more equitable and suitable for the protection of the shipper on this side and the receiver on the other.

Mr. FIELDING. I received a circular, no doubt of the same nature as the one my hon. friend has read. I imagine it has been sent to every member of parliament. I do not think the matter has officially been brought before the government, but I believe a Bill touching that subject is now before the Senate.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There was a deputation down here last week on that very matter.

Mr. FIELDING. Possibly, but I had not the pleasure of meeting them. They may have met some of my colleagues. I think there is a Bill before the Senate which, I imagine, covers the same ground, so that we shall probably have an opportunity of passing upon it.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee.

Mr. FIELDING. The items of Supply which have been passed from time to time have, as usual, been collected by the proper officials, and I have now two resolutions to submit to the committee for the purpose of confirming the appropriations already made. I may say that the appropriations made by way of supplementary estimates for the year 1907-8, which closes to-day, amount to $5,319,633.32. Accordingly, one of the resolutions which I have to submit reads as follows :

Resolved, that, towards making good the Supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1908, amounting to $5,319,633.32, the same be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

There are other appropriations covering the coming year. A portion of these appropriations were voted in full, amounting to $4,585,415.06. In addition to this, there was a vote on account of one-eighth of the remainder, amounting to $11,246,403.06, making, altogether, $15,831,818.12 voted for the service of the year. I have a similar resolution providing for this amount. I move the first of these resolutions as just read.

Mr. HENDERSON. It would be interesting to the committee, I am sure, to know exactly the total appropriations for the year which closes to-day. Perhaps the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has the figures and can give us the total.

Mr. FIELDING. I have not these figures at hand, but I should be happy to get them and send them to my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson).

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask whether or not the estimates brought down for the fiscal year 1908-9 have been prepared on the same basis as in the past? That is, are we to expect next year supplementary estimates of the same character and practically of the same amount as those brought down year after year in the past, or has the government adopted any different rule in the preparation of these estimates?

Mr. FIELDING. I think the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) showed me that in his case he had taken in the main estimates all that he was likely to require for the year. Speaking generally, the aim is to take, as far as may be, the appropriations for the entire year. I think that, under our system of government, we may not hope at any time that we shall avoid wholly the necessity of bringing down supplementary estimates. To what extent it may be necessary to have supplementary estimates is always a fair subject of debate. I hope it will not be necessary during the coming year to have as large supplementaries as for the year just closing. In this, I speak of the final supplementaries.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not prepared to deny that there will be a need of supplementary estimates now and again. But what I have objected to in connection with that subject is the preparation of the estimates in the first instance with the thorough understanding that they will not be sufficient for the purpose intended and that supplementary estimates will be brought down to make these good. My observation and my inquiries in this House would lead me to believe that, in the majority of the departments, that is the practice. It is a practice which I have never been able quite to understand. One might suppose that it originated in a desire to make a good financial showing. But, when a few years have elapsed, surely that reason entirely disappears; for, when one endeavours to ascertain what the financial expenditure for a particular year will be he naturally looks to the supplementary estimates of the past year and adds that amount to the estimates brought down for the ensuing year, and that method of computation has been found to hold fairly good in the past. It may be necessary that some supplementary estimates should be brought down, for there will always be emergencies and unforeseen cases and cases unprovided for. But the system I object to is the one, to which I have alluded, of preparing estimates in the first place with a thorough understanding that they are not sufficient and having in view supplementary estimates to be asked for later on.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to add a word to what has been said by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) with regard to the method of preparing the estimates. Surely, in nearly all the departments a very close approximation could be made to the requirements of the service. Of course, I do not expect that any of the departments can always strike just the requisite sum. But what I object to more even than that which has been referred to is the undertaking of works during the course of the year for which no estimate has been made and then, at the close of the year, asking a vote in the form of a supplementary estimate for moneys that have been expended without the authority of parliament and for work that was practically not required. I gave an illustration a few evenings ago of a work in my own county. The Minister of Public Works asked us to approve a vote of $5,100 for dredging in a small harbour. Now, that dredging was simply not required —it was a useless work and is so regarded by the people living there. It was a work inaugurated by the Public Works Department, not something to complete what had already been estimated for, but a work undertaken, as the people living there believe, merely for the purpose of giving employment to a dredge or dredging company. That $5,100 should not have been expended by the government; the government had no authority whatever for paying out that money. I do not like the idea of voting these considerable sums after the money has been spent. I think that, as a matter of courtesy to the House, we should first be asked whether we approve of the undertaking.

If the House approves of it and votes the money, very well, the government is justified in expending it. But when the government comes down with an estimate for a small work like that of over $5,000, and asks this House to vote money they have already expended without the consent of parliament, I think it is going a little too far, and not treating parliament with that courtesy with which it ought to be treated. I hope that items of this kind will not appear in the supplementary estimates of next year. If the government have not asked for a sufficient amount to do the work, let the work lie over until they get parliamentary authority, then if the House approves of it, let them expend the money. Now, I hope I have made myself plain. I have on former occasions protested against spending money without the consent of parliament. I do not know how the Minister of Finance regards this, but I can look at it in no other way. I think that we on this side of the House, by pressing this matter, can assist the Minister of Finance very much in keeping down the expenditures of the country. If the different departments go on spending money without the consent of parliament you may rest assured that the expenditure of the country is going to grow, and grow rapidly. The way to check it is for the government first to get the consent of parliament for the expenditure, and if that is strictly adhered to—and I hope the Minister of Finance will hold all the departments strictly to account for expenditures of that kind—I am satisfied that the expenditures of this country will not go on increasing as rapidly as they have done.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no knowledge of the facts of the particular case to which my hon. friend refers, therefore I can only speak with reference to the general principle. The general principle he lays down is one with which I agree. Dredging, however, I think is usually done out of a general vote, unless there are exceptional circumstances when special votes are asked for. But a large amount of dredging is done under a general vote, and it is quite possible that an amount of dredging might be ordered which in the end would probably be somewhat in excess of the appropriation. I quite agree that no public works should be undertaken except and until parliament has authorized the vote. As to the general principle I agree with the hon. gentleman, and will endeavour to enforce it.

Mr. HENDERSON. If this expenditure to which I refer had been paid out of the general vote, why come down on the last day of the fiscal year and ask for a vote to cover it? If it was all covered by a general vote, why should we be asked again to vote it? It left the impression on my mind that it was not covered by a general vote; in fact I understood the Minister of Public Works to say, when I drew his attention to the matter, that this dredging was not yet paid for and that the dredging company had to await the passing of this item before they could receive the money. I am glad to know that the Minister of Finance approves of the principle, and I hope, in the interest of the country, that he will see that the various departments observe that principle; and we on this side of the House will be glad to assist him in keeping down expenditure in that way.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I agree entirely with what has been said by my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson), except that I would be inclined to regard the course pursued in the case he refers to as something more than a lack of courtesy to the House; it is a violation of the law and of constitutional usage.

Mr. FIELDING. Where was the place?

Mr. HENDERSON. Bronte harbour.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know anything about the circumstances of the case; but, as they have been stated, it is perfectly plain that the government have been guilty of a violation of the law. They are only entitled to undertake a work of that kind when they have a parliamentary appropriation, or have provided money by the Governor General's warrant, if the case fell within any one of the emergencies covered by statute in that regard. So this is not so light a matter as has been suggested; it is one that I think demands the gravest consideration of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. FIELDING. Is there in these estimates a special vote for dredging at that point?

Mr. HENDERSON. There is a special vote in the supplementaries, for which we are now passing a Supply Bill, for that particular place, and that money, let me tell the Minister of Finance, had all been spent before any appropriation had ever been made for it. I understood the Minister of Public Works to say that the dredging company was still awaiting payment; consequently they were not paid out of the general vote.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Finance to another thing, an example of which has been before the House lately, and which leads to a great deal of abuse. Parties interested in a certain possible expenditure interview some minister with reference thereto, whether this expenditure is one which the government has ever contemplated or not. What is done to satisfy the applicant is for the minister to say: Well, I will send an engineer and I will have an investigation made. Now on general principles that might be said to be a perfectly fair thing to do, to send an engineer before you take any other steps. But what I complain of is that this is done in cases where nothing is ever intended to follow the sending of the engineer and the engineer is sent at public expense merely to satisfy the applicant for the time being, without any thought of construction following. Now a circumstance like that has happened with reference to the city of Toronto. Does the Finance Minister and the government seriously contemplate putting Dominion money into building a subway for the citizen's traffic in the city of Toronto, between the city and the Island? Is that an appropriation which the government seriously thinks it can undertake, and has it really undertaken to expend public moneys in that way? Mind you, this is simply the extension of the street and traffic system of the city of Toronto. An application was made and a deputation has waited upon the Minister of Public Works and I understand that the minister has expressed sympathy with the undertaking. Then he authorized a government engineer, at government expense, to go down and look over the situation and make a report to him. I would like to know from the Finance Minister whether the government has any serious intention of undertaking either in whole or in part, a work of that kind. If it has, why then it can give its reasons therefor; if it has not, it is the worst of all things to lead the people of Toronto to believe that the government are going to make an appropriation of public money for a work of that kind.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend asks me a general question to which I can only say that the government have no intention to make any such expenditure of public money. All I know of the matter he refers to is that, in answer to an inquiry in the House a few days ago, I think by my hon. friend himself, the Minister of Public Works said that a deputation having brought that matter to his notice, he would cause inquiry to be made by an engineer. Being asked the question whether the engineer was to be sent specially for that purpose, the Minister of Public Works said that the resident engineer in the city of Toronto would be requested to make a report upon the subject. Speaking not with reference to that particular work but to works generally, it is sometimes the least courtesy you can extend to a public deputation when they bring a matter before you, to promise to have an inquiry made, especially if the inquiry does not cost much. I would not agree that the promise of the Minister of Public Works that an inquiry would be made necessarily commits the government to do anything, or necessarily leads any one astray. It is difficult to say to a deputation that under no conditions will we listen to them; they have a right at any rate to have an inquiry into their request. If the request will not stand examination no public money should be expended, but if there is no more serious charge against the minister than that in response to a deputation he said he would direct his engineer to make an inquiry, I think it will be agreed that that is not a very grave accusation.

Mr. FOSTER. Then in this case it does not mean anything.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not now what it means.

Mr. BENNETT. It is quite clear that the dredge was sent there owing to the fact that it is owned by those into whose hands the dredging in Ontario has been delivered. The dredging outfit sent to Bronte is the Phin outfit. The Phins were honest, decent painters in their way. but with the change of government they blossomed into dredging people. The estimates for last year show an appropriation of $4,000 for Bronte, repairs to piers, &c.; there is no mention of dredging. But, I assume that after completing the summer's work these contractors had a dredge that was not being used, and as these dredging outfits are masters of the people, he simply placed that dredge in Bronte and charged up $5,000 for dredging. The minister says there is a general grant for dredging and he assumes this amount is taken from that grant. There was a large grant for dredging and not only was it exhausted but we voted $107,000 for general dredging in Ontario and Quebec in the supplementary estimates. Unfortunately it does not specify how much went to Ontario and how much to Quebec. I suppose in many cases the dredge is sent into a harbour before the contractors are directed to send it by the department. At Southampton one of the Bowman dredges was sent in. No request had been made by the town council or any one but the Bowmans sent in a dredge and earned, I think, $5,000.

Let us look at some of these items for dredging. For Yamaska there was an appropriation of $20,510 and in the original estimates, $15,000 for dredging. I am not sure whether this was done by those active politicians in Montreal, the Cohen Company or the Ottawa Company which is controlled by the son of the hon. member for Ottawa, a young man who a few years ago was engaged as an insurance agent about town, but who now has blossomed into one of these millionaire contractors with dredging outfits. For Ontario, I notice there was $116,500 for dredging. These look like large figures, but when you have a dredging outfit with the contractor's own inspector standing around town and the dredge charging up work at $2 a yard instead of 30 cents a yard, classing material as rock instead of sand, it is no wonder that we have these colossal figures. The Boone Company was a struggling dredging company doing a little business, pottering around the lakes up to a few years ago, but by the aid of powerful political influence they have succeeded in wresting $2,000,000 from the people of Canada, and the inspector who was appointed to supervise their work was displaced by reason of the president of the board of trade at Collingwood asking for his removal on the ground that the country was not getting return for the money expended. The Great Lakes Dredging Company earned $1,300,000 in a few years.

Then take the company of which Hon. A. G. McKay is the controlling spirit. it has secured over $300,000. It is not a question of the country finding employment for the dredges, it is a question of the dredging outfits finding some place to go and work, and the disclosures from day to day show that these men are not earning their money. If the First Minister should go to the Public Accounts Committee he would find the tenders of two rival companies written by one and the same man ; the secretary-treasurer of the one company actually wrote the tenders for both. The very envelopes are a tell-tale, but the handwriting is so plain it cannot be mistaken. The First Minister may say : Why not investigate that in the Public Accounts Committee? I cannot do that; there was no payment with reference to work done under that tender last year so I am estopped. Does not the Prime Minister think it is high time inquiry should be made into this matter? There were two works to be done, one at Midland and the other at Matchedash bay. A company at Midland of which F. W. Grant, a brother of the hon. member for North Ontario is president, and another competing company, the Penetanguishene Company tendered, and the tender of the Penetanguishene Company is written by Mr. Grant who also wrote the tender of the Midland Company. Is not that a startling state of affairs? The figures are so arranged that the Penetanguishene Company are the low tenderers as between the two for the Matchedash work and the Midland people are the low tenderers for the Midland work.

It has got to such a stage that these dredging outfits simply laugh at parliament and at the people. Does not the first minister think this is a case for inquiry and investigation even though I may be precluded from inquiry by the fact that there is no item for this in the current year's expenditure. It is high time that these dredging concerns and their representatives and their owners should be taught that they cannot collude in an attempt to defraud the people of Canada. It is up to the first minister to institute an inquiry. I brought the matter up in the Public Accounts Committee but I was stopped by reason of the fact that I could not show any expenditure this year under these contracts, but there are the two tenders and as plain as the noonday sun the figures on the tenders of these two rival companies are written by the one man. It is simply startling. If the first minister will direct the Public Accounts Committee to allow an inquiry as to these two tenders, that will be proved up to the hilt because there is no mistaking the handwriting. A number of gentlemen on this side of the House have seen the tenders and they are all as convinced as I am that they are in the handwriting of Grant. Let me give another instance to show the collusion and fraud that is going on in connection with these dredging tenders. The Owen Sound Company and the Penetanguishene Company put in supposedly rival tenders, and the tender of the Penetanguishene Company was inclosed in the private envelope of Mr. McKay who is the leading spirit in the Owen Sound Company, and I may tell the first minister that when McKay's agent was brought down here and when Dr. Spohn of the other company was brought down here, they both glibly swore there was no collussion between them and they asked reasonable men to believe that they could not account for how these envelopes came into their possession. The witness Wilkinson on behalf of the Owen Sound Company said I do not deny they are envelopes furnished to me by McKay but I do not know how Spohn became possessed of these envelopes. Well, the fact is they never dreamed the envelopes would be preserved. The country will have to judge of the evidence of these two men and where they are best known the country will judge, and the country as a whole will believe that the tenders were so arranged that each party was contracting not for a special work, but that there was collusion from the very outset and that the evidence of that is clinched by the presence of the tenders in the same envelopes. I now ask the first minister if he will direct the Minister of Public Works to allow a full and free inquiry in the Public Accounts committee ?

Mr. CLARKE. Did you not go into that matter thoroughly the other day in the committee?

Mr. BENNETT. I will tell what I did. When Dr. Spohn was giving evidence I handed him the tender put in by the Penetanguishene Company, his own company, and I asked him if it was his signature. He said it was the signature of Kastener, one of his partners. I then asked him if the body of the tender was in Kastener's writing and he said apparently it was not. I then showed him the handwriting of Grant signed on behalf of the Midland Company, and I asked him if he did not believe they were the same and his answer was that he was not a handwriting expert.

Mr. CLARKE. That matter has not been reported to the House yet.

Mr. BENNETT. That is true but it has all been printed. These men have got so bold in connection with these dredging operations that they do what they like. I ask the first minister if he will allow the bringing of witnesses before the committee to prove that these two tenders of these different companies are written by the one man. The figures are the same, the handwriting is plainly the same and the only difference is that Grant signed on behalf of one company and this man Kastener signed on behalf of the Penetanguishene Company. It is extraordinary to think that the government will not investigate into this. If that matter has been brought before the Civil Service Commission I have not the least doubt in the world that they would have reported upon it. The government should be the guardians of the people's money and they should hold an inquiry into this matter. No wonder my hon. friend from Glengarry (Mr. Schell) stood up in the House one night and said he had been asked by dredging men to go into their companies. Why should they want him if they did not think they would get a party advantage out of his presence in the company. Let me tell the first minister in connection with this very same Midland Dredging Company that I have stated it repeatedly on the platform and in the committee that this so-called Midland Dredging Company has among its other stockholders a son of Senator McMullen. There is no doubt about it. These people around Midland boast of what they can do on account of their political connections. Senator McMullen met me in the corridor and said he wished to tell me something and that for the future he did not wish me to associate his son's name with that dredging company. I said : He is a stockholder in the company. He said : He was formerly but by reason of the disclosures in connection with the dredging I made him dispose of his stock. I remarked to him : You are losing very handsome profits, and he assented to the fact that the profits were pretty handsome. It is openly canvassed on the streets of the different towns of the north country where stock is held in these companies that the profits arising from them run from fifty to seventy-five per cent. I believe every word of it when I remember the financial standing of men who a few years ago had an old dredge probably worth $3,000 or $4,000 and who today have in the harbours, dredges that are worth $100,000, and as a writer recently said in an English paper of others they lavishly display their vulgar wealth and openly boast of it. Look at the opportunities they are afforded when they can put one of these dredges into a bay and with the aid and connivance of a friendly inspector earn, $500, $600 or $700 a day. No wonder it is that the Boone Company has scooped in already $2,000,000, that the Great Lakes Dredging Company have had $1,300,000 and that the Owen Sound have captured $350,000. I am going to ask for a return as to what amount of money has been earned by this Stewart Company of Ottawa, so-called. I was not prepared to-day to discuss this whole question of the dredging but I intend to do so later on. However as the first minister was here I thought it was a most excellent opportunity to ask him to direct the Minister of Public Works to allow a full and free inquiry in the Public Accounts Committee along the lines I have indicated, and if so I will prove beyond demonstration that the handwriting in the tender of the so-called Midland Company and the handwriting in the tender of the Penetanguishene Company is all in the handwriting of Mr. Grant except the signature in one case. It is up to the first minister to say whether or not there will be an inquiry along these lines and I want him to answer.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Since my hon. friend has put a question to me in that way, I must say that he has taken me by surprise. He is more familiar with these matters that I am, and when he asks me thus suddenly to grant an inquiry into a statement just made on the floor of parliament in that way, he surely must realize that I am not in a position to give him an answer.

Mr. BENNETT. Then I will try and make myself more plain. There are to-day on the files of the Public Accounts Committee four tenders, two of them on behalf of the Penetanguishene Dredging Company and two on behalf of the Midland Dredging Company and all four of these tenders, and the figures as well, are in the handwriting of the secretary-treasurer of the Midland Dredging Company. Surely on the face of it that looks like a fraudulant tender when two supposedly rival dredging companies have their tenders written by the same man, and that they are written by Mr. Grant I know owing to the fact that I know his handwriting. The only difference is that the tender of this Penetanguishene Company was signed by Mr. Kastener. But I am prevented from an inquiry into the two contracts owing to the fact that there has been no expenditure mentioned in the Auditor General's Report in respect to them.

Mr. PATERSON. If my hon. friend would take a word of advice from me—I am an older parliamentarian than he is—it will not be given in anything but a friendly spirit. He is a critic in this House, properly so ; that is a part of the duty of the opposition ; but if he will permit me to say so, the weight of his criticisms is wholly discounted by the statements that he accompanies them with the insinuations that he throws out. When I have noticed so often that he has been told point blank by those who know that the statements he has made have been utterly without foundation, that shakes any reliance I might have on his criticisms being in the public interest ; and when I notice that his criticisms are invariably, I think I may say, coupled with insinuations of wrong-doing, whether it be by a minister or by some member of the House, or by his cousin or his aunt, it seems to me that he only weakens his position. With reference to myself, I think I have been long enough in parliament to have, except when my Scotch rises, a judicial temper, and I am willing to listen to criticisms and give weight to them ; but when criticisms are offered in the way the hon. gentleman offers them, it cannot fail to weaken their effect. I only rise because a matter of dredging in Bronte Harbour has been brought up. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) alluded to it. Then the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) rises and says it is very easy to see why this dredging was done in Bronte Harbour—it was done by the Phins, friends of the Minister of Customs. Now, what was the necessity of bringing my name in, as if I had done anything wrong, or as if I had something to do with getting Mr. Phin a job of dredging in that harbour ? When I know that the hon. gentleman's insinuation is absolutely without any foundation, my faith in all his criticisms is shaken. He says Mr. Phin is a friend of the Minister of Customs.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the hon. minister deny that they are well known to him and strong political friends of his ?

Mr. PATERSON. I will not deny that they are well known to me. So is the hon. gentleman well known to me ; so is the hon. member for Halton ; so are other members of this House, and a great many other respectable men known to me. The hon. gentleman says these Phins, of Brantford, are friends of the Minister of Customs. They are very well known to me, and are very respectable men, so far as I know. That they were ever engaged in the painting business I have no knowledge. They are not living in Brantford now, but in the town of Welland. I believe they are honourable men ; I hold that opinion until something is proved to the contrary. As to the suggestion that because they were friends of mine they got that job, all I can say is that I had no knowledge that they got it, and that I did not even know that there was any dredging being done at Bronte. I only mention this as an illustration in my own individual case of the hon. gentleman's method of criticism, which shakes my faith in all he says. Will he take a word from me ? He is not without ability, and I find no fault in his seeking to delve into everything that is wrong ; but I think it will be agreed by all that one who criticises will strengthen his criticisms if he leaves out these insinuations, which are without foundation. That is all I wanted to say. I want to enter into no controversy with the hon. gentleman. Of course, I would like to stand well in his opinion, as in everybody else's ; but if he has not confidence in what I am telling him now, it will be my misfortune. I only ask that when he mentions my name in connection with the matter again, if he thinks there is anything improper about it, he would give some reasons for thinking so. I ask him now, in all honour, why he mentions this man as a friend of mine, unless it is to insinuate that he got some work that was not in the public interest or that I was the means of influencing his getting it.

Mr. BENNETT. The Minister of Customs, as usual, has gone off at half-cock, so to speak. I never said a word about the Minister of Customs influencing the awarding of these contracts at all. He states that the people were not painters in Brantford. Will he say what their business was prior to 1896, when they became dredging contractors ?

Mr. PATERSON. Different things. I think he was a varnish manufacturer at one time, and he may have been in other work. He was not in the painting business, so far as I know.

Mr. BENNETT. Is not the minister splitting hairs, because I mentioned painting instead of varnishing. What a fine distinction. It is a well know fact that the Phins were very strong Liberals, and were not engaged at all in dredging prior to 1896; but after the change of government they blossomed out as dredging contractors.

Mr. PATERSON. How did they get into the dredging business ?

Mr. BENNETT. I think the minister can answer that better than I can. That is the mystery in all these cases. Now, the minister said I had made statements which were known to be untrue. I challenge him to show a single instance in which I made a statement in this House that I have not proven by the book. If he cannot do that, he must sit back and admit that he makes reckless statements charging gentlemen on this side of the House with making statements that are not true. I have a reputation just as good as that of the Minister of Customs. I ask him what statement I ever made in this House that I had to retract ?

Mr. PATERSON. Just the other day I think the hon. gentleman rose up and said, may I ask the Minister of Marine if so-and-so ?

Mr. BENNETT. What was it ?

Mr. PATERSON. I cannot remember the exact thing ; but the minister had to rise and say that there was not a word of truth in it. The hon. member made another statement, and the minister said there was not a word of truth in it.

Mr. BENNETT. I have the minister driven into a corner again. He cannot produce the 'Hansard' and he will not find a word in 'Hansard' to bear out the statement he has made. He makes a great amount of noise and I have respect for his age, but I do not propose to let him bully me, as long as I am a member of this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT. These hon. gentlemen may interrupt as they please. I am after bigger game than they. Where does the Minister of Customs find his authority for his statement that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries said my statement was untrue the other day ? Let him be man enough to follow that up and prove it or must he sit there convicted of throwing out reflections and slanderous statements which he cannot back up. I challenge him to prove from 'Hansard' a word of his statement. The other day I asked the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if there was any reference in the report to the Sorel shipyard and its director Mr. Desbarats, regarding certain shortages and defalcations there, and the minister said that my reference should not have been to Mr. Desbarats, but to Mr. Roy, because it was Mr. Roy who was in charge of the department where the defalcations had occurred. Is not that altogether different from the statement by the Minister of Customs that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had told me I had stated an untruth. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries made no such statement and the Minister of Customs knows it. The Minister of Customs is a very poor sample of a bluffer.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not want to get into a Billingsgate discussion with the hon. gentleman and shall not lower myself to his level.

Mr. BENNETT. The Minister of Customs must be judged by the standard other people have of him. When a gentleman of his years and standing in the cabinet charges an hon. gentleman on the opposite side with having made an untruthful statement and then is not manly enough to attempt to back it up, he must take the consequences. There is an apology due me by the hon. gentleman. He has travelled to East Simcoe and made there his loud and long speeches and I am back here again, and I hope he will come there again.

Mr. LAW. He might go once too often.

Mr. BENNETT. I am quite willing to take the risk. The hon. minister says that I never rise here without implicating someone on that side or some relative, I grant that I have done that and done it repeatedly and have furnished the proof of any statement I made. What statement did I make to-day relative to any gentleman on that side ? It was necessary for me in discussing the dredging question, to introduce the so-called Dominion Dredging Company of Ottawa and show who composed it. Who compose that company ? Mr. Stewart, son of the senior member for Ottawa, is in it. There is not a man in the city of Ottawa who believes that Mr. Stewart's son ever had the capital to finance that huge dredging outfit. So long as members are doing what they are doing to-day, so long may they expect me to expose their conduct. What can the Minister of Customs find today with reference to Mr. Stewart, if he goes to the Public Accounts Committee ? He will find that Mr. Stewart has a perfect graft on the insurance of all the boilers owned by this country. This same gentleman negotiates these insurances and has the benefit of them. Is that not true ? Here is a return in which there is a checque showing the signature of Mr. Robert Stewart right on the back of it. Let any of the ministers who know the signature of Mr. Stewart look at it :

To the Bank of Montreal,

Pay to the Boiler and Inspection and Insurance Company of Canada the sum of $390.

A. GOBEIL,
Deputy Minister of Public Works.

The Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company of Ottawa, Stewart & Sons, agents.

The right hon. the First Minister can see it. It is the signature of Mr. Stewart, the senior member for the city of Ottawa. Further on this is endorsed :

For deposit only in the Standard Bank of Canada to the credit of R. Stewart & Sons.

That is the depth to which parliament has sunk. And there are more of these cheques in the department. It is not an accident or a chance. Here is another cheque for $450 to the same company indorsed on the back : 'for deposit only in the Standard Bank of Canada to the credit of R. Stewart & Sons' —endorsed by the Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company, R. Stewart, agent, and the endorsation is in the handwriting of Robert Stewart, son of the hon. member for Ottawa. What can you expect of a parliament when the highest aim of its members is the amount of graft they can filch out of the public ? That is the depth to which parliament has got down to-day. I did not propose to expose Mr. Stewart to-day, but the Minister of Customs dragged him out in all his nakedness and petty graft. What does the Minister of Customs think of that ? Does he think it is honourable on the part of a member of parliament ? Not only is it not honourable but it is against the law, yet there will be no attention paid to it by this government. Let the hon. minister not talk too much about my statements regarding hon. members or some of them will be woke up. I never said a word impugning the honesty of the Minister of Customs. I think he is an honest man but he is weaker than ditch water or a jelly fish when it comes to holding on to office, for he will wink at anything that is done so long as he can hold office. I do not believe that personally he profits to the extent of one farthing by his position. I have made that statement repeatedly to Liberals when they have canvassed my opinion as to the honesty or dishonesty of certain members of the cabinet. But I ask the Minister of Customs to make good his charge that I have repeatedly made statements about certain members of parliament which have been shown to be utterly false and untrue. Will he stick to that charge or take it back?

Mr. PATERSON. I do not know whether I used the word 'untruthful' regarding the references of the hon. gentleman to members of this House, but I did allude to statements and insinuations which he made and which received direct contradiction. He has referred me to 'Hansard.' Well, I did not take the trouble to look up 'Hansard' and I do not want to enter into a personal controversy, but he can understand that my remarks were for his benefit, and it would be only a proper return for the good opinion he has expressed with reference to myself if I could show that he had been able to express more charitable and correct views regarding my colleagues. If he did, I would value more the tribute of honesty he has paid for me. For my part, I do not think that I have ever set myself up as a model for my fellow men in any way. The Minister of Customs is human as his colleagues are. I believe that we are all trying to do our duty, and I only wanted to point out to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) that, as a critic, he weakens his criticisms by these evidences of personal vindictiveness and malice. There is no need for that in this House. We should not try to injure one another personally because we differ politically ; our political controversies can be carried on more effectively in the other way. Other hon. gentleman on that side of the House do not make their criticisms in that way, and their criticism count for more for that reason. I was not going to trouble the House with quotations from 'Hansard,' but as the matter has been brought up, let me read what the hon. gentleman said. I quote from page 5809 of the unrevised 'Hansard' :

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). I quite agree with the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) that we are rather taken aback because we have not yet seen the report. Perhaps the minister will inform us whether or not the report contains any strictures on the fact that over a year ago a gentleman was assigned as a commissioner to inquire into padding of the lists at Sorel in connection with his department. Statements were made before that commissioner and charges were laid that material that had been paid for by the department or by the people of Canada had never been delivered and that these alleged defalcations amounted to $150,000. The inquiry into those serious allegations was commenced over a year ago, but there has as yet been no report laid before parliament of the inquiry.

Now, notice this. This is the way the hon. gentleman's criticisms go :

It is easy to understand this.

Just as he said it was easy to understand how the Phin dredge got the work in Bronte harbour because Mr. Phin was a friend of the Minister of Customs :

Mr. Desbarats, the man in charge of that department, whom the minister has not seen fit to suspend while that investigation has been pending, is a son-in-law of the Hon. R. W. Scott, Secretary of State of this government.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is absolutely nothing of that kind in the report which has been laid before the House. I may say also to my hon. friend that what he says with regard to Mr. Desbarats is absolutely incorrect. Mr. Desbarats has never been directly or indirectly connected with the branch of the service to which he refers. It was a matter under the control of the chief engineer of the department and Mr. Desbarats is in charge of the yard at Sorel, and has absolutely nothing to do with it. My hon. friend is entirely mistaken.

Mr. BENNETT. I will have to accept the minister's statement.

Mr. PATERSON. If I were to go further I think I could find other matters. But I do not wish to carry this on. But I say again that it seems to me it would conduce more to the amenities and courtesies of debate in this House, and say it with frankness—carry more weight if the hon. gentleman in making his criticisms confined himself to the question, instead of showing, as he shows in almost every utterance, that he is actuated by some personal malice or enmity. There is no necessity for that. Wrongdoing should be condemned, but there is no reason to try to insult men, and particularly to drag in the names of men who have no connection with the subject under discussion. In my judgment, that is not the manly way. Moreover, I think it destroys, in large measure, the effect of criticism that might otherwise command more attention.

Now, if I have said anything that is not strictly fair, if I have gone further than I should have gone—I am not aware that I have—I am sorry for it. I believe I have not said anything more than is borne out by what I have read, or what I might have read, not merely in the way of direct statement on the part of the hon. gentleman, but in the way of putting questions so as to carry an insinuation. And, while I am on my feet, I might as well refer to that point also—there is this continual cry of 'graft! 'graft!' till it is dishonouring to the nation. I say this continual crying of 'graft,' 'graft,' when there is no graft about it is dishonouring to the nation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh. oh.

Mr. PATERSON. Some hon. gentlemen laugh. Well, just let me refer to one other utterance to show what I mean. I have not 'Hansard' before me, but I think my recollection of the debate is sufficiently clear. Hon. gentlemen opposite found that there was a sum of $124 paid to the D. W. Bole Drug Company, also a payment to the Campbell Milling Company, with which Senator Campbell is supposed to be connected, and also a payment for lumber to a concern in which Senator Edwards is said to be interested.

Mr. BENNETT. Who said that?

Mr. PATERSON. I think it was the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett).

Mr. BENNETT. Be careful. Look up 'Hansard.'

Mr. PATERSON. Who was it?

Mr. BENNETT. You are making the speech.

Mr. PATERSON. I said I thought it was the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BENNETT. You are a poor thinker.

An hon. MEMBER. It was the member for Peel (Mr. Blain).

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. member for Peel may have brought it up, but I think the hon. member for East Simcoe alluded to the matter and said: Aha! This is being spread among members and senators and we will have to inquire into it. That is my recollection of what was said. I will look it up, but in the meantime I do not assert it except as my recollection. And what is the fact? Here is the member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) whose company received $124. That concern is one that is doing I don't know what business—I suppose hundreds of thousands of dollars a year.

An hon. MEMBER. Millions.

Mr. PATERSON. Millions, says my hon. friend. And this concern, after putting in a tender, gets a contract that amounts to $124. And the shout is raised, Oh! Oh! this corruption is spreading throughout the Senate and everywhere. Now, is it not too absurd—if it were not wicked—for men on such grounds as this to send abroad to the world the cry that the House of Commons and Senate are permeated with corruption? Because a concern doing millions of business secures, without the knowledge of the member for Winnipeg and after putting in a tender, secures a contract of $124——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is that an incorporated company?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes. And Senator Edwards—his company sells a little parcel of lumber which would not amount to the snap of his finger and which, probably, he knows nothing about, but which was sold in response to a tender; Senator Campbell in the same way in a tender for the supply of flour—all of them perfectly legal transactions. And for such a thing as this the cry is raised that corruption is spreading through the Commons and Senate and that it must be looked into. When hon. gentlemen condescend to that kind of thing, it weakens even a charge which might have weight. For the people will say that if these are the charges hurled at the government by the opposition, then the charges brought by the opposition cannot have much behind them. Surely hon. gentlemen opposite will see that this is unworthy of them and destroys the effect of criticism that might have some foundation. Now, I do not want to say any more, but if this kind of discussion is to be continued, I can look up 'Hansard' and refer to utterances that are recorded there. I have no desire to do so. I do not think I have said anything that was unfair. I do not think I used the word 'untruthful' with regard to the hon. gentleman. If I have said anything that went beyond the record that I read, I want to be considered as not having said it. I want to confine myself to the record.

Mr. BENNETT. At page 5810 of 'Hansard' it will be found that I said this:

It is easy to understand it. Mr. Desbarats, the man in charge of that department, whom the minister has not seen fit to suspend while that investigation has been pending, is a son-in-law of the Hon. R. W. Scott, Secretary of State of this government.

Now, what is the answer of Mr. Brodeur?

There is absolutely nothing of the kind in the report which has been laid before the House.

Now, what was the minister saying there? He says there was no reference to the Sorel work. What wrong does he suggest in saying that? Is that any reflection on myself, when he says there is absolutely nothing of that kind in the report which has been laid before the House, but that it has reference to the Sorel work. Then he says:

I may also say to my hon. friend that what he says with regard to Mr. Desbarats is absolutely incorrect. Mr. Desbarats has never been directly or indirectly connected with the branch of the service to which he refers.

Why, it was proved that there had been defalcations, the minister said so himself. That is the whole drift of the thing. I did not say that Mr. Desbarats had committed them, or who had committed them, but the minister said it was incorrect to state that it was in his division, it was in the division of somebody else.

Now, the Minister of Customs is posing here to-day as a gentleman who never says an unkind word. Well, the trouble is that that gentleman takes a fling at an opponent whenever he can get a chance. There is no man on that side of the House quicker to take a fling at a political adversary than this same meek, mild-mannered Minister of Customs. The other night he roared here before the House and demanded of the opposition, dared the opposition, to say where there had been any graft. I got up and showed where one of his own officers had committed a theft. And what was the answer of the Minister of Customs? Did he say: Well, if it is true, did the thief give back the money? No, he did not say that. But this peaceful, this mild-mannered, benevolent gentleman says: Did he get it on easy terms? Wasn't that very kind of the Minister of Customs? What was he driving at when he made that reference to myself? I asked the Minister of Customs what he meant by that when he said the other night: 'Did he get it on easy terms?' Well, the minister did not answer. It was just an opportunity for him to try to get off some of his spleen. He was stunned, badly stunned. He was challenging and roaring for proof and, when the proof was given, he was knocked down flat. Now, what did the minister mean when he said: 'Did he get it on easy terms?' He knows what he meant by it. There was a letter of mine dug up by that impudent deputy over in the Department of Indian Affairs, Pedley, an old letter of mine of twenty years before; and I hope that when a change of government takes place that fellow will be dismissed from the department—he should have been long ago. He had dug up a letter of mine asking that on a certain island a lease might be granted to a person, not to myself, but asking what would be the easiest terms upon which the island would be leased. And the minister, with that great power of his to remember anything that he can throw back, found this stored up in his cranium, and he thought: Now, I can give the member for East Simcoe a body blow. He stores all these little things up in his mind, and when he thinks he can get an opportunity he throws them off. Now, I want to tell this government that I am going to expose every grafter in this House on every opportunity. I don't care whether it pleases them or not. When I make any statements in this House they will be facts, and I defy any gentleman on that side, the Minister of Customs or anybody else, to disprove what I say. Hear the wail that the Minister of Customs sends up about this cry of graft. Who is sending up the cry of graft? It is the public generally, it is the clergymen of this country, it is the commission appointed by this government themselves. Now they have the proof right here before them, in addition to what can be proved in the Public Accounts Committee. Why do not the First Minister and the Minister of Customs say: If it is a fact that there is fraud and collusion going on between the contractors and the department, we will have it looked into. Now we have a new arrival, the Minister of Public Works, and I make the same offer to him. I have asked the First Minister, the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Finance to consider this state of facts. There is to-day lying up in the Public Accounts Committee four tenders, all written by the same hand, the representative of the Midland Dredging Company, a brother of the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Grant). How it stings them when you are able so frequently to mix up wrong-doers outside with a member of parliament. Now, these tenders lying up there are all four written in the handwriting of this Mr. Grant, two tenders of his own company and two tenders of the Penetanguishene Company. Now, I ask the Minister of Public Works: Does he not think it rather a bad state of affairs that contractors think they can do that, put in tenders all written by the same party, though supposed to be from rival tenderers, and that all investigation into them should be choked off? And how? By an hon. gentleman on that side rising in his place and saying: There is no expenditure under these two contracts in last year's Auditor General's Report. Now, I ask the Minister of Public Works, as I think he is jealous of the reputation of his department, will he consent to that matter being thoroughly investigated in the Public Accounts Committee? I will sit down for an answer.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will say to the hon. gentleman that neither I or any other member of the committee can prevent an investigation of the accounts at the proper time. The hon. gentleman knows that.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman knows that time will be next year, and not the present time.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman wanted me to be very careful when I talked about these criticisms, to be sure whether it is he who made them or not. If that meant anything, it meant that it wasn't himself.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister attributed to me the introduction of the names of all these three gentlemen to the House in the first instance.

Mr. PATERSON. Oh, yes; that is a very nice way of trying to get out of it. I said that the hon. gentleman made a criticism, that so far as I remembered his remarks, he said that the parliament had got into a very bad shape because there were senators and members of the Commons actually getting public money. Now, I find in the 'Hansard,' page 5693:

Mr. BENNETT. On page M—17, I find W. C. Edwards & Company, Ottawa, were paid $803.64 for lumber. Were tenders asked for?

Who introduced that?

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman said I had introduced the names of all three persons.

Mr. PATERSON. Well, I have given one; I have given one-third.

Mr. BENNETT. That is a big percentage for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. PATERSON (reading):

Mr. BUREAU. Yes, tenders were asked for from the largest firms in Ottawa and Kingston.

Mr. BENNETT. It seems extraordinary that the supply did not go to a Kingston firm, as there must be a good many lumber yards in that city.

It is really too bad to find senators giving their attention to the Department of Justice. It may be expected that members of the Commons will follow their example and see what profit they can make out of this department too. Is the W. C. Edwards of the company Senator Edwards?

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. Bureau answers, and then Mr. Taylor speaks about N—10. I am not dealing with Mr. Taylor. Then I find:

Mr. BENNETT. Now, I want to call the attention of the Solicitor General (Mr. Bureau) to another item, and I call attention to it because of its contemptibility—if I may use that word. Here, at page M—24 of the Auditor General's Report, I find an item:

Bole Drug Company, Limited, sundry drug supplies, $142.01.

May I ask if that is the firm with which the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) is connected?

Mr. BUREAU. I suppose it must be, but I have no information on the subject.

Mr. BENNETT. What does the inspector say? He knows whether the Caldwell in one case is the member for Lanark or not, and whether the Bole in the other case is the member for Winnipeg or not. We will get through these items all the quicker with a 'yes or no' answer.

Mr. BUREAU. The inspector says that there have been changes made in these companies and that he does not know whether these people are interested in them or not.

Mr. BENNETT. I think the public generally will understand the matter. And this is the depth to which we have got.

'This is the depth to which we have got.' The Bole Company which an hon. gentleman tells me is incorporated with a capital $6,000,000 and does a business of $5,000,000, being the lowest tenderer got a contract of $142.01—'and that is the depth to which we have got.'

In a city of the size of Winnipeg, where there must be druggists belonging to the Liberal party, when a petty bill of $142 worth of drugs is to be bought, the department must purchase from the company of the member for the city. As to the Caldwell case, I know nothing about it. I have always understood that the member for North Lanark is associated with the company for selling these things, and the inspector knows it or he does not know it.

Mr. BENNETT. Was the statement untrue?

Mr. PATERSON (reading):

Mr. BUREAU. I think the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) is mistaken when he says he is well informed about the Winnipeg transaction. The inspector informs me that the drugs are bought by contract and that tenders are publicly called for and the contract given to the lowest tenderer. Even supposing that the hon. member for Winnipeg should happen to be a member of the company that tenders successfully, I do not see that there is any harm in it under these circumstances.

Mr. BENNETT. It is simply a matter of taste. If the member of parliament thinks that he should be associated with the company that gets a contract for $140—well, as I say, it is a matter of taste.

Mr. BUREAU. The hon. gentleman does not truly represent the facts. This is not a private contract, but is a contract given after a public call for tenders, and awarded to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. BLAIN. Does my hon. friend state that the goods supplied by the Bole Drug Company were supplied after tender ?

Mr. PATERSON. Mr. Bureau reports that it was by tender. I call the attention of the House and of the country to the items which I have read. The hon. member (Mr. Bennett) cited them as an illustration of the depth to which we have descended. I think the country will say that if we have not descended lower than that there is not much fault to be found.

Mr. BENNETT. That is a matter of opinion. When it is proven in this House and to the satisfaction of the country that people are obtaining money from this government to which they are not entitled, why does not the government make them refund the money ? While the government permits members of parliament to act as they do, the minister cannot expect not to hear of these matters from this side of the House. It is proper that these things should be mentioned in the House. The minister says that probably this sale was put through by the W. C. Edwards Company and was utterly unknown to Senator Edwards, but the minister knows that for the past ten years this same concern has been selling hundreds of dollars worth of goods to the departments. It is all a question of taste and so long as Senator Edwards thinks that the company of which he is the head and front, should sell to the departments, so long as we have a government composed of gentlemen like the Minister of Customs who are prepared to hold on to office and take everything that can be laid on them by their confreres and colleagues, so long will we have the state of affairs pointed out by this commission the other day, that there was nothing less than wholesale thieving going on in the departments to-day—and the Minister of Customs knows it and every hon. gentleman on that side of the House knows it, and the country knows it, and will know more before the session is over.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would ask the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the hon. the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) if they do not think the Independence of Parliament Act has been violated in the case of the account referred to by my hon friend. I have the account here. It is not an incorporated company that has drawn the money. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs takes exception to a few of the companies that had tendered on private tenders and drawn money, saying they are incorporated companies and that they had a perfect right to do this. But here is a firm, father and son; the father happens to be a member of parliament, he and son are in business jointly and they draw a lot of money and there is a joint signature to the government cheque. What is it for? Has this been paid out for the benefit of this member and his son ? We all have in our cellars hot water boilers for heating purposes. The government have many of these boilers and a political friend of theirs must inspect them, charging $5 for each hot water boiler and $10 for each steam boiler. There are five in the drill hall in Toronto, $25 ; two in the drill hall at Brockville, $10; two in the Royal Military College dormitory, $10; three in the Royal Military College gymnasium, $15; two at the Royal Military College hospital, $10. Then there is another steam boiler at Kingston for which a charge of $10 is made. There are seventy-four of these hot water boilers, all inspected at $5 a piece.

Mr. FOSTER. Belonging to the government?

Mr. TAYLOR. Belonging to the government, in the military buildings all over the country.

Mr. SPROULE. Inspected by whom?

Mr. TAYLOR. The Boiler Inspection Insurance Company. The account is made out :

To the inspection of the following boilers in military buildings, for the season 1906.

Here is the cheque:

Pay to the Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company the sum of $450.

This is signed by Mr. Fiset, Colonel, and J. W. Borden, accountant. This cheque is handed over to R. Stewart & Co.; they sign in order to draw the money:

The Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company, R. Stewart & Sons, agents.

This is handed in 'for deposit only' to the Standard Bank, to the credit of R. Stewart & Son.

I ask the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if that is not a violation of the independence of parliament. I have another here for $452, and another for $390, a total of $842 I suppose every member of this House has a furnace and a hot water boiler in his cellar and he does not pay for inspecting them every year, but the government sends a man round and pays him $5 each to inspect each hot water boiler and it happens to be a member of parliament who draws the money. I want to know from the Minister of Customs how close this comes to graft, how close it comes to members of parliament dealing direct and drawing money from the government. There is no public tender about this. The government simply hands over $840, and these gentlemen go to work and draw the money. The Minister of Railways knows whether it is necessary to pay $10 each for inspecting the boilers in the Brockville drill hall and I know something about the boilers in Kingston. But here is a job and here is a member of parliament closely associated with it. He and his sons are agents for this insurance company and they draw the money in their own name. If that is not on a par with selling goods to the government I don't know anything about it. I have the cheques here and I send them to the Prime Minister and he can see that a member of parliament signs them and draws the money. In the other account a cheque is issued on the same date, the 16th of January for inspection of the Public Works Department, and the cheque is signed by Mr. Gobeil and Mr. Menard for the account and the cheque is for $390.

Mr. PUGSLEY. To whom is the cheque payable?

Mr. TAYLOR. The Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company of Canada.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is not that an incorporated company?

Mr. TAYLOR. I think it is, but Stewart the member of parliament for Ottawa, he and his son are not an incorporated company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They may be agents.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is the point, they sign as agents and get the money and deposit in the bank.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It does not follow that they get the money.

Mr. BENNETT. They get their commission.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understood the hon. member for Leeds to say that the company was not incorporated.

Mr. TAYLOR. What I say is that Stewart & Sons are not incorporated and they are the parties that get the money so far as the cheques show. These payments were for the inspection of boilers at $10 each in the custom house, Montreal, the post office Toronto, custom house, Toronto, the excise warehouse, Toronto, public building at Brantford, public building at Windsor, the custom house, London, the post office, London, the custom house, St. John, the post office, St. John, the savings bank, Halifax, the parliament buildings, Ottawa, the West Block, the East Block, the Post Office, the Supreme Court, the Langevin Block, the Printing Bureau, the Experimental Farm, which the Minister of Agriculture knows something about; in all $390 in that account, and the cheque is made out and endorsed by R. Stewart & Sons, and the money paid over to them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The cheque is not payable to R. Stewart & Sons.

Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. TAYLOR. R. Stewart & Sons, are the agents and they sign themselves as such, and they have no right to draw the money as they do and get the commission. They have no more right to do that than has a member of parliament to sell goods to the government. That is a violation of the Independence of Parliament Act and the Minister of Public Works cannot contradict it and he is a lawyer. I call the attention of the Prime Minister to that and I want to see whether he will approve of it or not.

Mr. STEWART. Perhaps I might explain the matter which the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has just referred to. The cheques to which the hon. gentleman has referred are cheques for the renewal of insurance policies, that were placed, many of them, I should say about half of them, in the year 1883 or twenty-five years ago. Some additional policies were taken out by the Public Works Department for work which they considered very valuable to them for the year 1883 down to the year 1902 which was previous to the time I became a member of this House.

Mr. TAYLOR. These are not insurance policies at all that I am referring to.

Mr. STEWART. They are policies issued by the Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company of Canada, and when I explain what the nature of the business is I am sure the hon. gentleman will have reason to remove any reflection which he may have intended to cast. The Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company was for many years the only company in Canada doing that kind of business which they have been incorporated to do. The hon. gentleman seems to think that this boiler inspection is entirely unnecessary, but let me point out to him that the first object sought for by the insuring of the boilers is the protection of human life. There are a number of boilers just below us in this building and if they were not properly inspected and a report made on their condition to the Public Works Department from time to time, and if an explosion should take place, which is not at all an infrequent occurrence, it seems to me that serious responsibility would rest on the government. Explosions of hot water boilers have taken place in some of the public buildings of this country I regret to say. A few years ago the hot water boilers in one of the public buildings in Halifax exploded and two men were killed. Within the last couple of years the same thing has happened in one of the public buildings of Ontario. The first object sought in this insurance therefore is the protection of human life. There is not a public school in this city, or a separate school, and I venture to say there is not a church in Ottawa in which the hot water boilers have not exactly the same protection that the government provides in this respect.

Mr. BLAIN. Are there any other companies in Canada that do this kind of insuring?

Mr. STEWART. I will give the hon. gentleman the information as to that in a moment. I was saying that I do not believe there is a large public building in this city where the people congregate in which the boilers are not subject to this inspection, and of course the primary object is to provide protection for human life.

Mr. SPROULE. Against explosions?

Mr. STEWART. Against explosions.

Mr. SPROULE. I should advise you to put one on the Minister of Customs.

Mr. STEWART. In 1883 the government then in power considered it necessary to secure this advantage and they went to the Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company of Canada which was the only company doing this class of business at that time. From time to time American companies have come in here but they failed to make ends meet and they had to leave the country, no doubt because there is not enough of that class of business to make it remunerative for competing companies. In 1902 or 1903 the Casualty Boiler Insurance Company came into existence, and I want to say in fairness to myself that from that moment down to the present time not one policy of insurance has been added, so far as I know to the insurances that were previously issued, in favour of the Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company of Canada. I have never sought any advantage for the Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company of Canada because of my position as a member of parliament, and when I mention that none of this business has been transacted in my office since 1902, some time before I became a member of this House, it will be easily seen that there has been no desire on my part to profit by my position. I do not know that any other explanation is necessary. The cheques to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) has referred were simply the cheques in large part as I have said, for the renewal of these premiums which have been on the books from 1883 down to the present time. Perhaps I should say further that the office of R. Stewart & Sons have been for twenty years—well, my son has not been with me for twenty years—but the office of which I am the principal, has acted as agents of that company for at least twenty years. When the premiums fall due, they come to our office and are payable to the Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company, but in our office as in other offices there is one bank account into which all the cheques payable to the different companies for which we do business go. We have numerous cheques for other insurance companies, and we keep a separate account for each one, and transmit to the head office every month. Is it not the most honest way for these cheques to be endorsed R. Stewart & Son, the same as all other cheques that come to us. I might have sent the cheques to the head office, but the most convenient and honest way was to endorse them with the name of the firm, because we did not think there was anything to conceal in the matter.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend did not understand my question. The question was whether there were any other companies in Canada doing this business than the one which R. Stewart & Sons in Ottawa represent?

Mr. STEWART. I think I made myself clear. In 1902 the Casualty Boiler Insurance Company of Canada came into existence, and since that time the business of the Department of Public Works has been placed with that company with which I have nothing to do.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member who has just taken his seat says that these are all renewals of policies that were issued in 1882 or 1883. Am I right?

Mr. STEWART. No, I did not say that. I stated that the first policies were issued in 1883, and comprised about one-half of the whole amount the hon. gentleman has referred to this afternoon, and that none of the items referred to any business since that date, because no business has been placed with the company since 1902, two years before I became a member of this House.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that these were simply renewals of policies that had been issued previously. I know a building at Brockville which was erected previous to 1882, and a new account has been placed there, but it does not say anything about insurance. It is for the inspection of boilers; it says nothing about insurance.

Mr. STEWART. So far as I am concerned, I have had nothing to do with insuring those boilers. I do not believe there is any insurance connected with the account; but the inspection is a valuable part, and there are always premiums where it is necessary to have insurance go with it. The government do not as a rule carry insurance, but they get the valuable information I have mentioned. Inspectors go around who are able to find out defects or weaknesses in the boilers, and insist on the proper remedy being applied, or they will cease to have the boilers under their charge.

Mr. BLAIN. I want to ask my hon. friend from Ottawa if this statement is correct: from 1883 to about 1904 by another company the boilers of the Public Works Department were insured and regularly inspected ; this insurance was taken from this company in 1904 and transferred to a company doing business under an Ontario charter only, known as the Canadian Casualty Company.

Mr. STEWART. I may say to my hon. friend that the policy to which he refers was written about twenty years ago, and that in 1902, or since I became a member of this House, the business was taken from the company represented in my office, and was given to the Canadian Casualty Company with a provincial charter. The fact that the business went from a company in my office to another company is an indication that my position as a member of parliament has not been used in favour of the company of which I have the insurance.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not wish to do any injustice to the hon. member, but I wish to ask him whether the cheque that was read was endorsed by his firm or is it a bogus cheque ?

Mr. STEWART. The cheques that have been read are endorsed Boiler Inspection & Insurance Company, R. Stewart & Son, Agents. I do not know whose endorsement is written on the back of the cheques. I do not think it is my handwriting, though I do not know any reason why it should not be. It may be that of another member of the firm.

Mr. BLAIN. I will send the cheques over to my hon. friend and ask him if the signature is his signature or the signature of his firm. Perhaps my hon. friend would give the date of the cheque ?

Mr. TAYLOR. The 16th of January, 1907.

Mr. STEWART. There are two cheques. They are endorsed by the Boiler Inspection & Insurance Company, R. Stewart & Son, Agents. They are not in my handwriting, though I do not know what difference it would make if they were.

Mr. BLAIN. Whose handwriting is it ?

Mr. STEWART. The junior member of the firm, Chas. E. Stewart.

Mr. BLAIN. Your son?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not wish to catechise my hon. friend, but although he has pointed out that this is old insurance, he will not deny that the insurance is now being conducted in the name of the firm of which he is a member, and that last year and this year he has received payments from this government for insurance done by a company of which he is the senior member.

Mr. STEWART. That is hardly a fair statement. The Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company are receiving cheques from the government, and these cheques pass through the office of the agency of that company in this city.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the hon. gentleman doing that in the public interest, or has he any private interest in it?

Mr. STEWART. I have been doing this for twenty years, and I am quite sure the public interest has not suffered in any way.

Mr. BLAIN. I am not suggesting that the public interest has suffered, and I am not suggesting that the boilers should not be inspected, as one would infer from the speech of my hon. friend. The only point at issue is whether this hon. gentleman, who has a seat in this House, is receiving any benefit from insurance done by a company of which he is the senior member. His company receives a commission out of the business done by the Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company with this government, of which he is the supporter in this House. He will not deny that statement.

Mr. STEWART. I have made a very clear statement of the whole matter. This is simply a continuation of transactions that have been going on since 1883.

Mr. BLAIN. Will that make any difference?

Mr. STEWART. I would like to know how the public interest is suffering.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not suggest for a moment that it is, neither are we discussing the question whether the boilers should or should not be inspected. The point—and it has been brought up by the Minister of Customs, and he is responsible for it—is this. I am asking whether the member for Ottawa receives any pecuniary benefit from the cheque which has been read to the House by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) and the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett)? If he says that he does not receive anything, we will accept that. If he says he does not receive any commission whatever, I will apologize to the House for anything I have said or suggested.

Mr. STEWART. I am not asking for any apology from the hon. gentleman. I have given a very clear statement of the case. None of this business was secured while I have been a member of parliament or through my influence. On the contrary, since I have been a member of this House my influence did not retain the business that the management of the company might very well expect to have been done for them at Ottawa. That business left my office and went to a rival company in 1904, since I have been a member. The hon. gentleman has endeavoured to show that there has been some violation of the Independence of Parliament Act. I would ask him, in all fairness, now that he has heard my statement of the case, to revise the opinion he has expressed. The papers bear out the facts I have mentioned. They show that not only was none of the business secured at any time since I have been a member of this House, but that business actually left my office, as the agency of the Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company, while I have been a member, and my influence as a member was not used to retain it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think my hon. friend has gone into a number of explanations that are really not necessary or relevant. If he thought it desirable to make any explanation, there are only two points that are of the slightest relevancy, and I do not know that he has quite touched these. They are simply these—whether, in the first place, the certificate or policy, or whatever you call it, is issued or renewed annually. The other is whether or not the firm of which he is a member receives any commission. I am not expressing any opinion as to the effect of that, but these are the only two points on which the slightest question can possibly be raised.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think these have been explained.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman did not touch either to my knowledge.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He has stated that he has been the agent of the Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company since 1883, and that since he has been a member of parliament he has continued doing its business as before. He rendered accounts to the government for the premium, and the payments were made to his firm as agents for the insurance company. He then accounted to the company and received from the insurance company a commission for his own firm, I presume. I cannot see that he has done anything wrong morally or that wrong can be imputed to him——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. But there has rather been an insinuation cast upon him that he has profited by his influence with the government as a member of parliament, and the question is whether or not, under the circumstances, he comes technically under the Independence of Parliament Act, and whether or not it can technically be said that he is in receipt of money from the government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, I was endeavouring to get a statement of the facts which I thought material and to set aside those which are irrelevant. Mr. Corby, who was a member of this House, found it necessary, through some technical violation of the Independence of Parliament Act, to resign his seat.

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Currier, too.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And Mr. Currier also. The hon. gentleman has overlooked the other point, and that is whether or not this contract is a matter of annual renewal.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Suppose it is?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is all we want to know. I am not making any argument, but as the hon. gentleman has seen fit to make an explanation of the facts, I rise to point out that there are only two facts which are at all material. No charge of personal wrong-doing is made. The first question is whether or not the contract is annually renewed, as most insurance policies are. And the second is whether or not the hon. gentleman's firm gets a commission out of the business. These are the only two considerations with regard to which the hon. gentleman should find it necessary to enlighten the House.

Mr. McCOLL. The firm of Stewart & Son are agents for a certain insurance company. Their business is to collect premiums, which are payable from year to year, and they get a commission for collecting these premiums. That commission, however, they do not get from the government, but from the insurance company.

Mr. GALLIHER. I think my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Stewart) has made a very fair statement of the case, and I think that the discussion has rather degenerated into a cross-examination of my hon. friend. My hon. friends opposite will agree that this is hardly the place in which to conduct a cross-examination. With regard to the point raised by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, I do not wish to advance any opinion as to the legal effect, even if a commission were paid, because I think it is a very fine point; but as regards the question of fact, my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Stewart) has stated to the House exactly how it stands. He has explained how those cheques came to be signed by him, and I think he has given a very honest and frank answer to my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. MILLER. There is one other point I think of importance. The hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Stewart) has said that public schools, churches and other large institutions in the city carry the same kind of insurance as the government. I would ask if the Boiler Inspection Insurance Company charge the government any higher rate of premium than they charge to other institutions for the same service ?

Mr. STEWART. No, certainly not.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me the situation is simply this. The hon. member for Ottawa is doing a business. He effected these insurances in the first place, I take it.

Mr. STEWART. I did not effect any of the insurance on the books of the Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company so far as the government is concerned.

Mr. SPROULE. But it was since transferred to the hon. member's company to manage. On it, I assume, he gets the usual commission—five, ten or fifteen per cent. This commission he retains out of the moneys paid to him. The insurance contract is renewable and the hon. gentleman continues to renew it. Therefore he has a beneficial interest in the business to the extent of the commission. This goes on for years. At a certain time he becomes a member of parliament. Now the Independence of Parliament Act provides that a member of parliament shall have no transanctions with the government for which he receives a portion of the country's money. But the hon. gentleman continues to conduct the same business and receive the same commissions year after year and also to sit here as a member of parliament.

Mr. GALLIHER. If my hon. friend will allow me——

Mr. SPROULE. Let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) speak louder. I cannot hear him. He is big, but he has a small voice.

Mr. GALLIHER. That is probably the reason that I am more modest than some other members of this House. I would point out that not only has the member for Ottawa been doing business as agent——

Mr. SPROULE. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) putting a question? If he is going to make an argument, I would suggest that he might wait until I have done.

Mr. GALLIHER. Surely I have the right to point out——

Mr. SPROULE. No, the hon. member has no such right, if I understand my rights here. If he wants to put a question I will answer, but I am not willing that he should interrupt my argument to go on with an argument of his own. He can speak when I get through.

Mr. GALLIHER. I rise to a point of order. I wish to ask the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) a question.

Mr. SPROULE. That is not a point of order.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) will see that he cannot ask a question except by consent of the hon. gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. GALLIHER. Then, will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) permit me to ask a question?

Mr. SPROULE. Certainly, if he will ask it and not go into an argument.

Mr. GALLIHER. If the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Stewart) is doing business as agent for this firm—general business and not with the government alone—and collects premiums on which he receives a general commission, is it not from the money belonging to the company that he is paid and not from the moneys of the government or any individual?

Mr. SPROULE. Let us suppose that this firm was in England and had no representative in Canada except R. Stewart & Son. Or they may have taken over that business from some other firm. In any case, they continue to conduct the business. He renews insurances year after year and collects premiums on which he gets a commission. He has a beneficial interest in those premiums. That money continues to be paid to R. Stewart after he becomes a member of parliament. Is he not, then, getting some of the money of the country though he is a member of parliament and which the Independence of Parliament Act declares he should not get? If his firm was an incorporated company, which, I understand, it is not, the case would be different. But, if I understand the law correctly, the hon. gentleman is acting in direct violation of the Independence of Parliament Act.

Mr. McCOLL. The hon. member (Mr. Sproule) if he would think for a moment, I think, would see this—that when this money is paid, it is not paid to R. Stewart but to the insurance company; the cheques are made to the insurance company. The government's money goes to the company, but the money paid to Mr. Stewart comes from the company.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose that R. Stewart & Son were the whole company like the Arundel Printing Company in England——

Mr. McCOLL. We are taking the case as it is.

Mr. SPROULE. But suppose this was the case; suppose the company were in South Africa and that Mr. Stewart were here representing the company, would he be violating the Independence of Parliament Act by receiving this money of which he retains a portion? Take another instance of years ago which I recall. When Mr. Anglin was speaker in this House, the firm of which he was a member happened to do some printing for the government, and, when the matter was brought to the attention of the House, he had to resign his high position. The sum involved was only a small one, but that does not alter the crime. It has been contended that the amount was very small. But a crime is a crime regardless of the amount involved. The contention of the Minister of Customs is that because the D. W. Bole Company handled millions and the amount they received from the government was very small it was not a crime. But if they had handled only hundreds of thousands or even hundreds that would not have altered the crime. In the same way it makes no difference whether R. Stewart & Son get five, or ten, or fifteen per cent out of this money—it is money paid out of the public funds of Canada and of which Mr. Stewart receives a portion. That is the gist of the whole matter. And I believe that if the question were submitted to the courts they would without very much delay decide that the hon. gentleman had violated the Independence of Parliament Act, whether he did it intentionally or otherwise.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Galliher) and the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) have made an argument which convicts themselves. The cheques were made payable to the company. They were endorsed by R. Stewart & Son and deposited to their own credit in the bank and they sent the amount due, less the commission. So, the very money paid by the government went to their credit in the bank. Had Messrs R. Stewart & Son sent these cheques direct to the company and then received a commission from the company, the argument might have been different. These cheques went direct to the company that was doing business with the government.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS—INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTS.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 88) to incorporate the Institute of Architects of Canada.—Mr. J. C. Walsh.

On section 4,

Mr. GERVAIS. I move that clause 4 be struck out.

Mr. WALSH. I am willing to strike out the first paragraph of clause 4, as my hon. friend objects particularly to the phrase 'establishment of classes.' I do not think that the establishing of classes of membership is a question of education but I am willing to strike out the first clause. The other paragraphs of the clause simply refer to the different members who would be admitted, members of the Quebec, Toronto and Alberta associations and those who are not members of any association but who have been practising for two years. I think the elimination of this first paragraph would meet my hon. friend's objection.

Mr. GERVAIS. I have reasons for pressing my motion. I would not like to have it conveyed to the public that this new corporation could establish classes as between architects ; I would not like to have conferred upon it the right to discriminate between the architects of Quebec and Alberta or Ontario. I object also to the proposal to give to this would-be corporation an apparent right of control or supervision of the classes and classification of architects. The committe must remember that this corporation will be a paper corporation purely and simply—I would call it a statute-book corporation because it will not teach anything, it will be a bookless, aimless, profitless and staffless school.

Mr. J. C. WALSH. It will be a club like the engineers.

Mr. GERVAIS. If it is to be a club, let the committee so state. That is why I gave notice of my amendment to strike out clauses 3, 4 and 9. No provision is made by the future corporation for the communication of the knowledge, skill, &c., which will constitute an architectural education.

Mr. J. C. WALSH. Since you have objected to that society, we have withdrawn it.

Mr. GERVAIS. I have moved to strike out the whole of clause 4, because if this corporation is to be purely and simply a social club what is the use of giving to it the apparent right to supervise and control the teaching of architecture throughout Canada ?

Mr. J. C. WALSH. There is nothing about teaching in the Bill, that has been eliminated.

Mr. GERVAIS. Quite true. But why does this Bill mention, for example, in subsection (a) of clause 4 :

> Members in good standing of the province of Quebec Association of Architects, the Ontario Association of Architects, the Alberta Association of Architects, the Manitoba Association of Architects, the Toronto Architectural Club, and the Regina Architectural Association.

It would be preposterous and useless to give an admittedly social club the even apparent right to interfere with the education of architects who are members of architectural associations throughout Canada.

Mr. J. C. WALSH. I would move in amendment to the amendment to strike out the first paragraph of section 4.

Amendment to the amendment agreed to, and section as amended adopted.

On the motion of Mr. Gervais section 5 was stricken from the Bill.

On motion of Mr. Gervais section 10 was stricken from the Bill.

On section 11 :

Mr. GERVAIS moved that the section read as follows :

> Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to encroach upon the rights and privileges conferred upon any association of architects having a charter or which may hereafter have a charter from the legislature of any province of Canada.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is the effect of that?

Mr. J. C. WALSH. In each of the provinces of Alberta and Quebec they have an association of architects, and naturally they are jealous of their rights and do not want this parliament to pass legislation which may affect them in any way. The point is similar to that raised when Dr. Roddick presented his Medical Bill in this House. This parliament then voted against the principle that we should do anything here which would be calculated to interfere with the rights of the provinces in the matter of education. We recognize the rights of the provinces, under this amendment, to deal with their educational institutions and the requirements for entrance into the learned professions.

Section 11, as amended, agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time.

On the motion of Mr. Gervais the title of the Bill was changed to: An Act to incorporate the Architectural Institute of Canada, and passed.

CANADIAN NORTHERN ONTARIO RAILWAY COMPANY.

Consideration of an amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 67) respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company.—Mr. Pardee.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is the nature of this amendment?

Mr. LENNOX. I think it limits the amount of security.

Mr. SPROULE. Better leave the Bill until the member who is promoting it is present; he may not be satisfied to accept the amendment.

WAYS AND MEANS.

House again in Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. ALCORN. With reference to the subject under discussion when the House arose at six o'clock, with the permission of the House I wish to direct attention to sections 14, 15, 16 and 18 of chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, an Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons. Section 14 reads:

No person, directly or indirectly, alone or with any other, by himself or by the interposition of any trustee or third party, holding or enjoying, undertaking, or executing any contract or agreement, expressed or implied with or for the government of Canada on behalf of the Crown, or with or for any of the officers of the government of Canada, for which any public money of Canada is to be paid, shall be eligible as a member of the House of Commons, or shall sit or vote in the said House.

Section 15 reads:

If any member of the House of Commons accepts any office or commission, or is concerned or interested in any contract, agreement, service or work which, by this Act, renders a person incapable of being elected to, or of sitting or voting in the House of Commons, or knowingly sells any goods, wares or merchandise to, or performs any service for the government of Canada, or for any of the officers of the government of Canada, for which any public money of Canada is paid or to be paid, whether such contract, agreement or sale is expressed or implied, and whether the transaction is single or continuous, the seat of such member shall thereby be vacated, and his election shall thenceforth be null and void.

The hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. McColl) raised a point which appears to be covered by this section. His point was that the money when it reached the hands of the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Stewart) was the money of the company for whom he acted. But this section covers the case of a member who is interested or concerned in any service or work, or performs any service for which any public money of Canada is to be paid, so that it would appear to be of little or no consequence whose the money was if the money is the public money of Canada and is paid for that service and the member of parliament has an interest in that money.

Section 16 reads:

If any person disqualified or by this Act declared incapable of being elected to, or of sitting or voting in the House of Commons, or if any person duly elected, who has become disqualified to continue to be a member or to sit or vote, under the last preceding section of this Act, nevertheless sits or votes, or continues to sit or vote therein, he shall thereby forfeit the sum of $200 for each and every day on which he so sits or votes.

2. Such sums shall be recoverable from him by any person who sues for the same in any court of competent civil jurisdiction in Canada.

Section 18 reads:

In every contract, agreement or commission to be made, entered into or accepted by any person with the government of Canada, or any of the departments or officers of the government of Canada, there shall be inserted an express condition, that no member of the House of Commons shall be admitted to any share or part of such contract, agreement or commission, or to any benefit to arise therefrom.

2. In case any person, who has entered into or accepted, or who shall enter into or accept any such contract, agreement or commission, admits any member or members of the House of Commons to any part or share thereof, or to receive any benefit thereby, every such person shall, for every such offence, forfeit and pay the sum of $2,000, recoverable with costs in any court of competent jurisdiction by any person who sues for the same.

So that it is not merely a case of a contract by a member with the government. The policy of the Act extends to any share or benefit to be derived by the member from a contract made by any other person with the government. Without expressing any opinion upon the particular case in hand, it might be well for the hon. gentleman concerned to particularly inquire and satisfy himself what the operation of these sections may be in his case.

Resolution reported, read the first and the second time and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 136) for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial years ending respectively the 31st of March, 1908, and the 31st of March, 1909.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

Mr. FIELDING moved :

That the House again resolve itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

He said : The object of this motion is that we may restore the budget debate to the point at which we left it.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL (South Oxford). Mr. Speaker, when I moved the adjournment of the debate, I was showing the great advantages that had accrued to Canada under the preferential tariff which Canada gives to Great Britain. This government is on record as having a standing offer to Great Britain that at any time she may wish to enter into negotiations with Canada with a view to a larger preference or to a mutual preference, this government will be prepared to discuss the question. I wish also to point out, as an appreciation of the principle adopted by this government in granting a preference to Great Britain, that the Australian government have recently adopted the same principle in their tariff by granting to Great Britain a preference in their markets. Truly may it be said that Canada has taken a long step towards the federation of the empire in matters of trade. Following up the same aggressive and statesmanlike policy, this government, through the good offices of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries during the last year, have successfully completed a trade treaty with France. It is too soon to form a correct idea as to the benefits that may accrue to Canada from this treaty ; yet I am sure that it requires no prophetic vision to satisfy any candid mind that great good will result to Canada, from having access to a market so important as that of France—a market that buys a billion and a half dollars worth of goods in a year, of which from three to four hundred million dollars worth are goods of a class which Canada can naturally supply. The treaty gives Canada an entrance to that market under the minumum tariff for a large number of articles such as we are exporting to the markets of the world, and an advantage in that market above our greatest competitor, the United States, and the other countries who supply like products. Instead of selling to France $2,000,000 worth of goods per year, we can reasonably hope in the near future to be selling double or three times as much. Many of the goods that we buy from France are goods that we cannot very well buy with equal advantage from any other country ; they are a class of goods that the people of Canada want ; and in giving a concession to France on the goods that we purchase from her, we are relieving our own people of a certain amount of taxation as our friends opposite would say. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) after speaking some four or five hours and showing that the people of this country were deriving a very large revenue, twice the revenue that accrued to the former government, said that we would lose in revenue under this treaty with France some $400,000 or $500,000 per year. Before that he was trying to make the point against the policy of this government that under it the people were too heavily taxed and too much revenue was raised. But after speaking three or four hours in that strain, he turned right around and swallowed all he had said. He turned a double somersault and claimed that by reducing the duties on goods coming from France, this government was going to lose some $400,000 or $500,000 of revenue. After condemning the government for collecting too much revenue, he finds fault with it for reducing the duties and thereby losing some revenue. Consistency, thou art a jewel. Under the minimum tariff provided by the French treaty, we will have freer entrance into the markets of France for goods that we are selling them to a considerable extent to-day and the sales of which must, with this advantage, be largely increased. Take 1906, because we have not the complete returns for 1907, I find that we sold to France in that year $164,330 worth of cattle under one year old. We sold also to France canned lobsters to the extent of $935,188 worth, green apples $209,131 worth, canned vegetables over $60,000 worth. We sold also during this last year nearly half a million dollars worth of agricultural implements.

Mr. W. JACKSON. What statement did the hon. gentleman make regarding the export of cattle to France?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. I said that we sold to France in 1906, $164,330 worth . Under the arrangement which has been made the reduction on some of these articles amounted to over 50 per cent and in others to even over 100 per cent. For instance the duty on apples is reduced from 44 cents per hundred pounds to 17 cents.

Mr. W. JACKSON. Do you say that under the French treaty the duty on apples has been reduced?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. W. JACKSON. Is it not a fact that fourteen years ago Canada had the privilege of the minimum tariff with France? I made it a point to go and see the commissioner himself, Mr. Macdougall, and he told me there has been no change in the last fourteen years in that respect. That is the statement made in the 'Farmers Sun.'

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. I did not get it from the 'Farmers Sun' but from another authority quite reliable, and I am satisfied there is a very substantial reduction, and I think the amount I have named is correct.

Mr. HENDERSON. I know that the hon. gentleman does not wish to be misleading, but he must bear in mind that the minimum tariff was given under the late French treaty just as under this one. The United States have the same advantage of the minimum tariff with France.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. The United States have not the same advantages as we have on many articles. We have in this tariff a special advantage on some 147 articles and we only give them concessions in our markets on some 110 articles. We also have a special provision providing that we give no retroactive advantage to goods coming from France, in lieu of an advantage given to us on cereal products.

Mr. W. JACKSON. Does the hon. gentleman still contend that Canada is allowed the minimum tariff on apples, evaporated and green, under this recent treaty? I claim that we have had it for fourteen years and the Americans have had it eight years.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. Notwithstanding what the hon. gentleman says, I still contend that we have an advantage in the French market on fruit which Americans do not enjoy. And I firmly believe that the shipments of apples from Canada to France will materially increase under this treaty. I believe also that our shipments of manufactured goods will increase. I know, as an absolute fact, that very substantial reduction has been made on agricultural implements. I know, as a matter of fact that some $7 will be saved the Canadian shippers of agricultural implements on certain kinds over and above the duties which have to be paid by the American shippers, and that our Canadian manufacturers expect to reap a very material benefit. Instead of selling half a million dollars worth of agricultural implements to France, we may reasonably expect in the near future, unless the Americans are able to negotiate a treaty with that country on similar lines, to sell one and a half to two million dollars worth. I believe also there is provision in this treaty whereby in case any other country at any time receives an advantage from the present tariff on any article, Canada will participate in that advantage. That to my mind is a very important clause in this treaty because by it we are assured of an entrance into the French market on a basis equal to that of any other country.

The hon. member for Wentworth was complaining that the government had not opened up many new markets. I will call attention to the treaty entered into with Japan by this government. I know there was a treaty between Japan and Great Britain entered into some twelve years ago, and it was left optional with the Dominion whether she should become a participant in that treaty. We know that, for reasons which were considered sufficient, Canada did not avail herself of the opportunity to become a party to the treaty, but following the war between Japan and Russia, following the conquest of Korea by Japan, and following the restrictions Japan put upon her emigrants to foreign countries, so protecting Canada from an influx of her population, this government, two years ago, thought it wise to become a party to that treaty. We know that since Canada became a party to that treaty, our shipments to Japan have materially increased and that the Japan market bids fair to become a very important market for Canadian products. Canada enjoys the advantages which she did not enjoy prior to becoming a party to that treaty, and we believe that in the near future a vast trade will be developed between Canada and Japan. Our manufacturers have goods which Japan wants to buy and many of our raw products will likely find a market in that country.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) felt disposed to criticise the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) because he did not provide a means by which the banks would advance money to shippers of grain in the west on local bills of lading. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman was serious or not, but if he was, I doubt if there is another member in the House who would really think the government should engage in advancing funds on local bills of lading and undertake to do work that properly belongs to the banks. But I do know that the people of this country have reason to congratulate themselves and to congratulate the Minister of Finance, upon the courage and promptness with which that hon gentleman came to the relief of the banks last fall when he advanced them $5,300,000 to assist them in handling the crops in the western part of the Dominion. Only a man who had courage and conviction and business capacity would have risen to the occasion, and I believe that the hon. minister (Mr. Fielding) not only merits but receives the approval of every fair-minded man in this House and in the country. The hon. member (Mr. Lake) also called attention to certain grievances the people of the west were labouring under in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. He complained that the government had not taken action to relieve the people from the burden of the privilege of exemption from taxation which the Canadian Pacific Railway enjoys. It is easy to talk about what the government should do. The hon. gentleman's own friends entered into a contract by which the Canadian Pacific Railway were relieved of taxation on their lands in these western provinces. And now the hon. gentleman comes to this government and says: We are suffering from the incubus put upon us by the Conservative government and we want you now to come to our rescue, to take this case to the courts if you cannot put through legislation by which the Canadian Pacific Railway shall be compelled to pay taxes on their property. It is a serious thing for a government to take away rights granted by this parliament, and even if the government had the power, even if the courts should in any way give it that power, I doubt if the government should confiscate property granted and privileges accorded to a corporation like the Canadian Pacific Railway any more than they would the rights and privileges of a private individual. The hon. gentleman also complained of the sale by the government of lands, timber limits and grazing leases in the west. He approached that subject rather timidly, in fact, he simply made the statement without attempting to discuss the question. I do not wonder that he was rather timid in his reference to the timber limit deals. After the exhaustive investigation in the Public Accounts Committee, after the complete vindication of the Department of Dominion Lands and the sales of the public domain made by this government, by which parties who received timber limits paid from three to ten times as much as were paid for similar privileges under the previous government. After it being shown that during the term this government has been in power they have only disposed of some 6,400 square miles of timber lands as compared with 26,000 square miles either sold or given away by our friends opposite, I do not wonder that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake) referred to this question rather timidly. Instead of selling timber limits at a nominal sum, as they alleged this government did, the former government gave the limits away to their friends. I have a record here which shows that they parcelled out among their friends immense tracts of timber. Not only did they do that in the west, but they did the same in Ontario. We know what was done in Ontario in the eighties, when this government parcelled out thousands upon thousands of acres of our best pine timber limits in northern Ontario. That is on record and the names are on record in this House. I did not take the trouble to bring those names to present to the House, but they are a matter of record, as also are the orders in council that were passed granting the privilege of cutting timber, each order in council covering 32,000 acres of land. And these grants, let it not be forgotten, were made without any consideration whatever; and, had it not been for the strenuous fight put up by Sir Oliver Mowat, the champion of the rights of Ontario, these timber leases would have become operative and these parties would have had the timber that rightly belonged to Ontario without paying a cent for it. So, in regard to the disposal of the timber lands in the western province, I find there were some 201 applications made on behalf of members of parliament, largely for their friends, and orders in council were passed granting timber limits not only to 201 but to a great many more than that number. I have here the names of many who received timber limits. For instance, Hon. David Tisdale got 50 miles. Mr. J. Craig Boyd, an election agent —I suppose some here have heard of him— got 50 miles. Mr. F. W. Gibbs, son of Hon. G. W. Gibbs got 50 miles. Mr. Wm. Wilson, a Tory candidate, got 50 miles. Mr. J. C. Rykert, member for Lincoln, who obtained a limit, as he said for friends, in the Cypress Hills, for $250 odd, sold that timber limit in a short time for $100,000.

Mr. LALOR. And what was done with Mr. Rykert in connection with the timber limit ?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. It does not make any difference what was done with Mr. Rykert, but it is on record the sale was made.

Mr. LALOR. Is it not a fact that Mr. Rykert was expelled from the House by Sir John Thompson ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Not for that.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. I am glad the hon. gentleman has mentioned that one was expelled. Well, if one was expelled, there were about five hundred others who should have been expelled or punished, because their cases were exactly parallel.

Mr. TAYLOR. How would you expel five hundred from a House of two hundred ?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. I find among other applicants for timber limits made for themselves or their friends a name somewhat familiar to the members of this House, T. S. Sproule, M.P., made application for his brother, R. J. Sproule, and five others.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to tell the hon. member that he is astray, or else, if he has copied that, either the original is wrong or he has made a mistake. I made application for a good many more, not one of whom except one did I ever see, so far as I know, and that was Mr. Nelson, of Dundalk, a former resident of my riding, and a political opponent of mine. He was the party that sent me in the applications.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. I am glad the hon. gentleman is honest enough to admit that he made applications for a great many.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to ask the hon. member if he thinks there was anything wrong or improper in a member of parliament, when applications were sent in to him to be forwarded to the department, doing so as a matter of courtesy. That was all I did in any case. Of all the applications put in, so far as I know, I do not think there was even an order in council passed in any case except one, and when the party went out west there was practically no timber on the place, and therefore he never attempted to do anything with it.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. The hon. gentleman, I admit, was very courteous in making applications for his friends.

Mr. SPROULE. They were not political friends of mine.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. Then for his enemies. Because there was not much timber on the place, as the hon. gentleman expected, I do not know that he was to blame. I suppose if there had been a lot of fine timber, why so much the better for his friends—or his enemies. I find also that the Hon. Geo. E. Foster, for himself, made application on April 25, 1886, and also for two friends named John Sadler and Henry Muirhead on the same date, 50 miles each. I also find another member of this parliament who is known to most of you, Geo. Taylor, M.P., who made application for friends for townships 39, 40 and 41, ranges 18, 19 and 20, west meridian, not a very small application; he did not go in for small things. Another return brought down shows 449 applications were made for coal leases, and among them are the names of Mr. J. C. Patterson, M.P., four applications; C. C. Colby, M.P., seven applications; A. Boultbee, M.P., one application; Thomas Scott, M.P., three applications. There were several others.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman will allow me—he has been perusing the records, I presume, of the Department of the Interior, where he gets his information. I challenge him to produce an application signed by me on behalf of anybody. Mr. Walter Beatty made an application in his own behalf, and I forwarded his letter. The hon. gentleman cannot find anything else in the department, no application that I ever made, either on my own behalf or on behalf of anybody else. He has made a statement. I challenge him either to produce the proof or to withdraw the statement.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. The hon. gentleman is like the rest, he says he made an application, and gives the name of one.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, I did not make an application; I inclosed his letter in one I wrote to the minister.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. That is just as good.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is that a crime? It is simply disgraceful for a member to get up in his place and make a charge against a member of parliament, and then either refuse to take it back or to produce the document.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. I am glad the hon. gentleman is candid enough to admit that he forwarded an application on behalf of some friend. I see that for Northwest lands, in a little over one year, applications were made for 2,295 townships, and among the names of those who applied were over twenty members of parliament.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Including Alexander Mackenzie.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. No, Alexander Mackenzie was not among them. Out of 115 names there are only four who can, by any stretch of the imagination, be classified as Liberals. The names are on file in the library, and any one who wishes can go and look them up for himself.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. member in what class he puts the names of those who put in applications on behalf of others? I happen to know something about their political affiliations in the case of some of them. How does he classify them?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. I classify them mostly as Conservatives, the others I do not classify at all.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, my brother never got any, not a foot.

Mr. GERMAN. His name is on the list.

Mr. SPROULE. The application was put in, but no order in council was ever passed, so that cannot be included. As for the others, so far as I know, some of them lived in Ontario, though I never saw them; several of them lived in Manitoba at the time, or in Birtle. Mr. Nelson, who left my riding and took machinery up there to build a grist mill, sent in, I think, fourteen applications for timber limits, with a request that I put them in proper form and present them to the department for him, as he intended to go on and erect a sawmill. I think he gave me the names, and out of all the names he sent me I never saw but one of the applicants, and I never knew but one, except from information he gave me, and that information was to the effect that they were friends of his, and I assumed, of course, that they were Reformers, as he was himself. They were friends of his who were going in with him upon this line of business.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. Of course, the hon. gentleman admits that he made the applications, and if he did not get the land it was no fault of his.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not admit that I made an application at all. The hon. member might just as well be fair and manly; if he is not, let me tell him that I am going to strike back and give him something that he don't want. I am not going to be treated this way. I have been too long in this House, and my name and reputation are too well known for me to allow them to be sullied by any such insinuation.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. The hon. member is evidently getting a little warm, because he begins to threaten.

Mr. SPROULE. Because of the unmanly conduct of the hon. member.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman said that the applications are on file; are they in the department or in the library?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. I said the records were in the library.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. In the 'Hansard.'

Mr. TAYLOR. In the speech made by the late Ananias Cameron?

Mr. SPROULE. And John Charlton.

Mr. TAYLOR. They made statements, as the hon. gentleman is making them, without any authority.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. I do not wonder that hon. gentlemen do not feel like discussing timber limits in the west. I am glad to know that the able and exhaustive answer that was given by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), relating to the policy of the government in dealing with timber limits in the west, answered every objection so completely and so fully that the opposition have not been able to find a single point upon which they can make an attack upon the government. The hon. member for Brandon showed that between 1891 and 1896 the Conservative government had sold 440 miles for $3.63 a mile on an average, that is less than one cent an acre. He also compared the prices that were obtained by the former government with those obtained by the present government; therefore I do not wonder that hon. gentlemen opposite are annoyed when we repeat those comparisons. When that hon. gentleman contrasted the publicity given to advertisements for the sale of timber land limits, and the length of time permitted for the examination of these limits, by the Conservative and by the Liberal governments, I do not wonder that hon. gentlemen opposite felt disposed to drop that question.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) also referred to certain scandals in the west and, because the courts were not capable of dealing with certain questions that arose, he declared that this government had been remiss in their duty. He did not tell us of the action of the Liberal legislature of Saskatchewan in the case of one constituency from which the returns were irregular, so that the candidate was not entitled to take his seat; the Liberal majority of that legislature passed an Act giving the seat to the Conservative candidate who apparently was fairly entitled to it. That stands in strong contrast to some of the tactics that were adopted by the Conservative party in the past. For instance, we have the circular sent out by that party in 1896 as to how to conduct elections. I do not think it becomes them to preach purity and to throw across the floor of the House such insinuations as I have heard them indulge in, or to make such protestations of their desire to see public life purified. It ill-becomes them to proclaim themselves the great apostles of purity in view of their record in past days. I have here the instructions sent out to their returning officers prior to the elections of 1896. Listen to the instructions sent out:

> We have the printing of the ballots, therefore, a sufficient number should be printed extra to enable the deputy returning officer to have them marked for our candidate and ready to use after the count to replace those read out wrongly to the scrutineers.

What a frank and interesting explanation.

> Or the deputy returning officer can have them marked and folded in his pocket to slip into the box in place of an opposition ballot, if opportunity offers.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is some Grit literature you are reading from.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. This is from the circular issued by the Conservative party in 1896.

Mr. BARR. Where did you get that circular? That was issued by the Reformers of Ontario

Mr. M. S. SCHELL (reading):

> To get control of both scrutineers, have one of our men—not a prominent one but a supposed kicker—to apply to the opposition as scrutineer inside. They are generally short of workers——

The Liberals in those days were supposed to be generally short of workers.

—and a few plausible men will turn the election in a close constituency.

Mr. LALOR. Will the hon. gentleman give his authority for that circular?

Mr. CLAUDE MACDONELL. I think it is a disgrace to stand up in this House and read it.

Mr. BARR. That was sent out by the Grit government.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. This is a document sent out by the Conservatives to their candidates. It continues:

Efforts should be made to make these methods work in wards that give the heaviest opposition vote.

Having control of both scrutineers, a large vote can be polled—dead and absent electors, &c., can have their ballots marked.

Dead and absent voters can have their ballots marked. There is no redress if both scrutineers were present. A friendly constable should be present to keep the poll clear of loungers and inquisitive people.

The deputy returning officer should be a reliable sharp and plausible man, so that if we do not get control of the opposition scrutineer, he can, when the counting time arrives, ask both scrutineers to take a piece of paper and record the votes for their candidates as he reads the ballots which have been emptied on the table. He will then have a chance to read out wrongly.

He will then have a chance to read out wrongly so that a majority can be secured for our candidate. The ballots should be put back into the boxes as quickly as they are read. The extra ones will do to fix things correctly when he gets home.

Here is another clause:

Spoiled ballots can be made sure by a little doctoring. Opposition ballots can be spoiled by the lead out of a pencil fastened under the little finger with beeswax drawn across opposite our candidate's name in opening the ballot. If you cannot get control of opposition scrutineer have your deputy returning officer announce that he is against you so as to lead him astray if possible.

I do not need to tell you about a certain man named Freeborn, a Conservative who went to Winnipeg on behalf of the Conservative party to teach the deputy returning officers how to switch ballots. When Mr. Boyd, a Conservative candidate out there, telegraphed back to Ontario asking about Freeborn, he received the reply:

He was a good man in North Bruce.

Nor need I call attention to the way in which ballots were spoiled in London—296 ballots spoiled in seventeen polls—nor to other irregularities and acts of corruption by our friends opposite.

The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), speaking in Hamilton recently, said that all the Liberal party had to do on coming into power was to step into the boat the Conservatives had built. He also said that Sir Wilfrid Laurier was a great discoverer. It is quite true that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in 1896, came from the people with a mandate to take charge of the old ship of state. The ship was in a sadly battered condition, she was water-logged and in danger of stranding on the rocks; the leading members of her crew had recently been in open mutiny, their conduct had been such that their leader, the captain of their vessel, had in his exasperation called them a nest of traitors. It is no wonder that we had that period of depression of which the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) tells us, from 1893 to 1896, the greatest period of depression that ever existed in Canada. Is it any wonder that with such a crew in charge of the ship of state, depression prevailed all over Canada?

But taking possession of the old ship of state and standing on the bridge with glass in hand and compass before him, with officers around him, every one of whom was an expert in his department, and with sails unfurled——

Mr. CLAUDE MACDONELL. Where was Cap. Sullivan at that time, was he on the bridge ?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. Sir Wilfrid, with firm hand steered the ship of state into the open sea, and his officers discovered new channels of trade, new fields of commerce, new possibilities of national development, hitherto undreamed of, and from that day to this the ship of state has been sailing the high seas of national prosperity, national development and national stability. Cecil Rhodes said that some men think in parishes, some in continents, some in nations. True it is that the men who took the helm of state in 1896 were large men, men with a wide outlook, men of courage, men who had the instinct of statecraft.

They did not think in parishes merely but they thought in continents and nations, and as a result of their rule Canada is to-day occupying one of the foremost positions among the nations of the world in the matter of commercial progress and commercial extension. Taking hold of the work that came to their hands in 1896, one of the first things this Liberal government did was to bring in another policy in matters of trade. Canada had been labouring under a high protective tariff for eighteen years; a tariff that had been given every opportunity to prove that it was capable of bringing prosperity to the Dominion as its framers claimed for it. We all know the results; for eighteen long years Canada laboured under this high protective tariff and instead of the tall chimneys that were pictured to us that would arise heavenward we found that during these eighteen years of high protection the country industrially was practically at a standstill. The immigration of our own people to the United States was on such a scale that the increase of the population was scarcely half of that increase which should come to us from the normal increase of our own population. The immigrants, many of them who were brought into Canada during that time came and saw and went, and during the eighteen years our population had not increased more than five per cent. In devising a tariff the Liberal government did not employ a few persons who were specially interested in a special line of production, but as commissioners the ministers went throughout the Dominion gathering information from manufacturers, from farmers, from business men, from merchants, from mechanics, from artisans, from all classes. And after the information was available to them the government devised a tariff; a tariff that was known then and is to-day regarded as a revenue tariff—not a high protective tariff, but a tariff, the principle of which is to collect a sufficient revenue to meet the necessary demands for carrying on the government of the country; a tariff that was not devised as the Conservative tariff was in the interests of the few as against the many; a tariff that was not devised in the interest of the classes as against the masses, but a tariff that was devised on broad and liberal principles. It was a tariff in the first place to foster and develop our own industries protecting them in a legitimate way from undue foreign competition; in the second place it was a tariff which did not unduly hamper trade or bring about an inflation of prices, thus imposing unjust burdens on the great producing classes of our community; it was a tariff in the third place designed to obtain the maximum of revenue and at the same time imposing the minimum of duties on imports to our country; and in the fourth place it was a tariff calculated to encourage trade with those countries willing to trade with us on a reciprocal basis. That was the kind of tariff which the Liberal government brought down in 1897 and which with slight changes has been in operation ever since. Last year, 1906, after the tariff introduced in 1897 had been in operation for ten years, another general tariff was brought down by the government and submitted to parliament, and what did we find? We found the great Conservative party which professes to have a policy on fiscal matters did not offer a single counter proposition to that tariff, and did not state what their policy would be in matters of trade. We found that but two speeches were delivered from the Conservative benches when that tariff was brought before the House, one by the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and the other by the member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt). In 1903 and in 1904 the leader of the opposition declared for a tariff which he was pleased to term a tariff of adequate protection. It was a name which sounded well and it looked well in print, especially when printed in capital letters, but it was capable of a very wide interpretation and to this day the leader of the opposition has never given us his version of what he meant by the term 'adequate protection'. And when discussion took place on the tariff in committee what did we find. We found certain members on the opposition side who believed in high protection claiming that 100 per cent was not too high a duty to have imposed on certain manufactured articles. For instance the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) took that position; a tariff as high as Haman's gallows was not too high for that hon. gentleman. We found another hon. gentleman in the Conservative ranks claiming that the tariff should be made so high as to prohibit American goods or goods manufactured in any other country coming into competition with goods made in Canada. On the other hand, we found Conservative members from the rural constituencies saying that the duties should be reduced to ten per cent, and that the duty on agricultural implements which was seventeen and a half per cent should be reduced by one-half. We find that the opposition had a go-as-you-please policy on this question; no definite clear-cut or distinct policy that they could announce in this House when the tariff now in operation was submitted to parliament.

No one can view the development which has taken place under the present tariff, the progress that Canada has made, the general prosperity which is enjoyed by the people of Canada without feeling a thrill of pride, without feeling that Canada has made a progress that is not surpassed by any other country in matters of trade and commerce. For instance, if we make a comparison between the period from 1878 to 1896, with the last eleven years under the present tariff what do we find. Here are the figures:

| Total trade in 1878 | $172,000,000 |
| Total trade in 1896 | 239,000,000 |
| Increase in these 18 years | 67,000,000 |
| Average annual increase | 3,750,000 |

Here in this period we have an average increase in our trade of less than three and three-quarter million dollars per year. But let us look at the trade of Canada during the eleven years of the Liberal rule and we find the following figures:

|---|---|
| Total trade, 1896 | 239,000,000 |
| Total trade, 1907 | 617,900,000 |
| Increase in 11 years | 378,000,000 |
| Average yearly increase | 34,000,000 |

Look at it in another way—the increase during this last year (1907) alone over 1906 has been $67,100,000, a larger increase than took place during the whole eighteen years under the high protective policy of our friends opposite. The trade of the Dominion of Canada to-day is $93 per capita as against $42 per capita in 1896. The trade per capita in Canada is more than double what it is in the United States, that great country to the south with all its boasted commercial supremacy, and there is only one other country in the world that has a greater foreign trade than Canada, and that is Great Britain which exceeds our foreign trade per capita by a trifle

Again, our friends opposite are claiming that at present the balance of trade is going against us and they try to make some capital against the government because our exports are not as great as our imports. I do not wonder that our friends opposite feel strongly on this point and are trying to make some capital out of it; for they had an experience during their regime that convinced them that no country with a very large adverse balance of trade could be prosperous. During the eighteen years of their tenure of office, from 1878 to 1896, the total imports of Canada amounted to $2,044,807,768 and the total exports amounted to $1,682,592,467, or an excess of imports over exports of $362,215,301, or an average of $20,123,000 per year. Is it any wonder that the country was depressed, that trade was demoralized, that Canada was not making the progress that she should have made? As compared with the eleven years under the present tariff, what do we find? During those eleven years the total imports have been $2,295,947,369 and the total exports $2,165,574,140, or an excess of imports over exports for the period of $130,373,229. In other words, the balance of trade against the Dominion during the latter period has been only one-third of what it was during the former period, although the trade of the country has been infinitely larger, the percentage being only 7 per cent as compared with 21 per cent during the former regime. If there were no compensating assets, there might be reason to feel alarmed at this excess of our imports over our exports; but I am glad to say that we have assets that more than counterbalance the excess. For instance, among the imports we find $54,000,000 of settlers' effects, which wipes out about one-third of the amount. Then, it is estimated on the best authority that the American settlers who have come to Canada during the last eleven years have brought in cash $80,000,000. We know that they are settlers of the best class, men who have sold their farms at good prices and have brought their money with them to invest in lands of the Canadian Northwest. That $80,000,000 wipes out the balance of the excess of imports over exports. But that is not all. The 470,000 odd immigrants who have come to our shores from Great Britain have no doubt brought with them $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 more. Capital has been flowing to our shores. It is estimated that the great railroad corporations have brought in at least $180,000,000 to invest. This amount of capital put into circulation, much of it spent for rolling stock, for raw material, for construction work, accounts in a large measure for the large amount of imports shown in the trade returns during the last year or two. Further than that, we are glad to know that the population of the Dominion during the last eleven years has increased about 1,500,000 as against about 150,000 during the preceding eighteen years. I have a return here which shows that 472,402 immigrants came from Great Britain and 346,990 from the United States, making over 800,000 from these two countries out of a total of 1,169,133, who have come to Canada in the last eleven years. Of the balance the greater number came from Northern Europe, and only from 5 to 8 per cent were what might be classed as undesirable. So that we have assets that will in the very near future cause our exports to increase at a very great ratio. In a country that is growing fast, whose population is increasing and whose development is going on at a rapid pace, the imports must of necessity be somewhat larger than the exports. The United States has been frequently referred to by hon. gentlemen opposite as a country whose exports are greater than its imports; but what do we find in the history of that country? From 1855 to 1873 there were only three years in which its exports were greater than its imports. During that whole period its imports averaged $70,000,000 more than its exports. I might also direct your attention to other great countries of the world—Germany, France, Italy, Belgium, Holland—in not one of which have the exports at all come up to the imports. In fact, in only three or four years during the last thirty years have any of these countries shown an excess of exports over imports. The same is true of Great Britain. So that when the argument is used by our friends opposite that our imports are greater than our exports, we take it that in view of the rapid development that is taking place, in view of the increased flow of capital to our country, in view of the immigrants coming to our shores, we have more than sufficient of assets to compensate for the excess of imports over exports. During the last eleven years we exported $482,981,673 more than we exported during the whole eighteen previous years. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) asked what had become of the surpluses which the Finance Minister has claimed that we have had during the past ten years, amounting to $94,000,000. I am very glad to tell him what has become of those surpluses; and I am very glad to know that this government has had surpluses instead of having to go to Europe to borrow money to carry on the government of the country.

We find that while under the Conservative regime the debt of the country increased from $140,000,000 to $258,000,000 in eighteen years, being a total increase of $118,000,000 or an average of $6,500,000 per year, the present government has provided for expenditures on capital account to the extent of $127,000,000 and yet has had surpluses sufficient year by year to pay for all the expenditures on capital account without going abroad to borrow, except to the extent of $5,500,000 during this period. And were it not for the $17,000,000 which have been spent in the last two years in connection with the Transcontinental Railway, we would have had a sufficient surplus to have liquidated the debt of the country to the extent of $12,000,000.

An hon. MEMBER. What is the debt now ?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. $263,500,000. We are aware that in the near future the debt will be somewhat increased. We know very well that, with the Transcontinental Railway under construction, a considerable amount will have to be expended on the construction of that road. But we also know very well that when the road is constructed, it will be an asset worth what it cost, an asset that will be bearing interest. We know that the government will receive from the Grand Trunk Pacific the interest on the money borrowed to build the road and that all it will cost this country as an absolute outlay—as an absolute gift, so to speak—will be in the neighbourhood of $15,000,000 or possibly $18,000,000. It has been estimated to cost from $13,000,000 to $15,000,000 but it may cost a little more. What is that compared with what the Canadian Pacific Railway cost the country ? What is that compared with the $60,000,000 hard cash and the 25,000,000 acres of land which we gave the Canadian Pacific Railway, besides the privilege of fixing its own rates and of freedom from taxation ? In fact the Canadian Pacific Railway has cost the Dominion some $200,000,000 or $250,000,000 as compared with $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 that possibly may be paid as a gift to the Grand Trunk Pacific.

An hon. MEMBER. Tell us about the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. That is one of the best deals this government ever entered into. If there is anything this government can take credit for above another it is the Saskatchewan Valley land deal. Any one who knows that territory, knows perfectly well that for years it was regarded as a totally arid tract and that on 60 miles of railway running through that country there was not a single station and only three or four settlers. Therefore when the government gave the company a sale of that land at $1 an acre, subject to the conditions that they should put some forty settlers in each township within a certain time, that was the best bargain that could possibly have been made—infinitely better than giving the lands away without any consideration. The condition binding the company to put settlers in that territory was alone sufficient to justify the transaction. When the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company desired a station in that territory, the railway company said no, but if you will pay for the agent, we will put one there. So they put an agent there and got the station. The company built hotels, they brought in settlers, stores were built, business developed, and to-day millions of bushels of wheat are being shipped annually from that district, and we have received many times over the value of that land under the most favourable circumstances. We have received as much as it would be worth to us to-day if sold to-day at the increased value of farm lands.

The full benefit which Canada is receiving under the present tariff is not realized until you compare it with the tariff of 1896. In 1896 our free imports amounted to $38,421,302. In 1907 they amounted to $140,994,207. If we were charging the average rate of duty on these free imports which was charged prior to 1896, we would have paid in duty over $50,000,000 more than we have done. When our hon. friends opposite claim that the tariff is not reduced and that we are paying as much customs to-day as prior to 1896, they are very far astray.

Mr. LALOR. What is the average taxation per head to-day as compared with 1896 ?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. The duties imposed to-day are $3.19 per every $100 worth imported less than in 1896 and prior to 1896.

Mr. LAKE. That does not agree with what the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) says.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. I find that in 1888, for instance, the average duty on dutiable imports was $31.85 per $100 worth of goods imported.

Mr. LALOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. M. S. Schell) did not answer my question—what was the taxation per head in 1896 and what is it now?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. I have given the rate of duty charged, and I will give more on that line. In 1889 the rate of duty was $31.86 per $100 worth of dutiable imports into Canada. In 1891 it was $31.38, in 1896 it was $29.97. From 1896 down to 1907 there was a gradual reduction until, in that year, it reached $26.33, or a reduction of $3.63 as compared with 1896. Taking the whole imports, dutiable and free, we find that in 1888, 1889 and 1890 the rate of duty was nearly $22 per $100 worth of imports. In 1896 it was $19.12. In 1907 it was $16.03, or a reduction of $3.09 as compared with 1896. So when our friends opposite claim that the present tariff is not devised with a view to lessening the duties they are very wide of the mark. They will find that the figures I have given are absolutely correct.

Mr. LALOR. The hon. gentleman has not answered my question as to the taxation per head. Is it not a fact that the taxation per head in 1896 was $5.46 and that now it is $11.50 per head?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. I find that, according to the statement of the president of the Manufacturers' Association, the average rate of wages of the artisan has increased $94 during the last few years. And, if you take the whole population of Canada as a basis for calculating the revenue, I find that somewhat more revenue has come into the treasury in proportion to the population than came in under the former government. But that is because of the increased capacity of the people to earn money. Their earning capacity is nearly three times what it was during the former regime. The hon. gentleman seems anxious to get an answer. I do not mind answering his question. The labouring man gets $94 more than he did prior to 1896, and while he may pay a little more toward the revenue, he has $94 a year with which to pay it.

Mr. OWEN. It costs to live double what it cost in 1896.

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. If we consult the tables showing our exports to the various countries of the world, we shall find that we have been making very substantial progress in every department. The following is a summary:

Statement showing principal articles of export to all countries.

| | 1896. | 1906. |
|---|---|---|
| Animals and their produce | $ 37,404,396 | $ 67,186,175 |
| Agricultural products | 17,974,011 | 60,215,735 |
| The fisheries | 11,183,698 | 16,049,394 |
| The mine | 8,401,760 | 35,706,030 |
| The forest | 27,324,894 | 38,975,543 |
| Manufactures | 10,222,877 | 27,650,278 |
| Miscellaneous | 473,854 | 874,647 |
| Coin and bullion | 4,699,309 | 9,928,828 |
| | $117,684,799 | $256,586,630 |

In other words, our exports have increased over 100 per cent during the last eleven years. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) said this increase was largely owing to the increased value of our goods rather than to the increased volume. Now, the tonnage on a railroad is not calculated on the basis of value, but on the basis of volume, and I find that in the last eleven years a comparison of tonnage in 1886 and 1896 and between 1896 and 1907 shows as follows:

Mr. M. S. SCHELL.

Railroad tonnage.

|---|---|
| In 1886 | 15,670,460 |
| In 1896 | 24,266,825 |
| In 1907 | 63,866,135 |

During the eleven years there was an increase of 39,000,000 tons, or 150 per cent over and above 1896, while their increase during the former like period was only 9,000,000 tons. These figures prove conclusively that the increased volume of business has been even greater than the increased value of the business. I claim that these figures entirely contradict the contention of the hon. member for North Toronto that the figures given in our trade and navigation returns are not a true index of the growth and development of the country.

Mr. OWEN. Does not the hon. gentleman know that we have just passed through ten years of the greatest prosperity the world has ever known? Surely he does not take all the credit of that for the government?

Mr. M. S. SCHELL. I am glad to know that the hon. gentleman appreciates the growth and development that have taken place during the last eleven years. The prosperity has been marvellous, and I think this government is entitled to some considerable credit for it. I know that prosperity has prevailed to a considerable extent throughout the world, but you can name no country that has shown an equal growth and progress to that shown by Canada during the last eleven years. It is recognized the world over that Canada has made greater strides forward than any other country. The optimistic statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister of this Dominion that the twentieth century belonged to Canada, is beginning to be fulfilled. I know that our friends opposite claim that the expenditure of the country is increasing. So it is, and we recognize that in a rapidly growing country we must have increased revenue and increased expenditure if we are going to keep pace with the needs of the time. I am glad to know that this government is not afraid to show enterprise and recognizes the necessity of keeping pace with the needs of the time. We find that the estimates of to-day are considerably more than they were in former years. Our friends opposite are not quite fair in their criticism of the growth of expenditure. They do not call attention to certain items that increase with the growth of the country, certain items which while they call for a large expenditure, bring in a correspondingly large return. These are not properly a charge upon the individual members of the community. For instance, the debt that we now carry is a legacy from our friends opposite. The interest on that debt and the sinking fund call for an annual expenditure of $12,363,247. The estimates for railways and canals this year call for $11,469,-

060. Now that sum is not a charge upon the revenue of the country, properly speaking. Every one in this House knows that the cost of running the Intercolonial and the Prince Edward Island Railway is included in the estimates, and the receipts that are derived from the operation of these railroads are put on the opposite side of the account, and one practically balances the other. While we are spending possibly double the money on the Intercolonial that we spent ten or twelve years ago, we are reaping a correspondingly increased return from it. So there is an amount going to the credit of the country which is not chargeable to income properly speaking. Taking again our Post Office Department. Under the former government they spent four million and a half dollars annually, and at the end of the year they had a deficit of six or seven hundred thousand. That sum was an actual charge. Instead of runing the Post Office Department on a business basis and under proper methods, they were unable to make ends meet, and while they asked for $3,500,000 in their estimates, at the end of the year they had a deficit of some six or seven hundred thousand which had to be provided out of revenue. This government asks for estimates to the amount of $6,000,000, and at the end of the year what do they have? Instead of paying out $6,000,000, we really pay out only $4,500,000, because we have a surplus of $1,500,000 over and above all the expenses of running the Post Office Department. I think that shows a difference in the methods of administration followed by the two governments. Certainly more money is expended at present, we spend a million dollars more on the Post Office, but we reap a profit of a million and a half dollars. I give those instances in two departments, which I think should convince any honest mind that the methods pursued by this government are business methods, and that when such methods are pursued, though we may spend a little more money, we derive a corresponding profit upon the investment, and this country is richer at the end of the year. When our hon. friends speak about the increased cost of running the government, I would refer them for instance to the Customs. We know that the administration of the Customs Department has increased materially enormously in the items of salaries and the cost of collection. But we get increased returns; the business of the country has increased so enormously that the revenue has increased also, though there is a lower rate of taxation. The business of the country has doubled, and naturally the cost of administration has increased. But instead of paying a million dollars for collection of Customs and for administration generally as under the former government, this government to-day is spending in the neighbourhood of $2,400,000. Then there are the provincial subsidies, these are a fixed charge. This government has not the regulating of these subsidies as practically they are fixed under the Act of confederation and they naturally increase from year to year. This year we are compelled to pay over $2,000,000 more than we paid last year. This is a fixed charge and when comparisons are made of the cost of government to-day with the cost under previous administrations, that is entirely lost sight of. The subsidies this year are $9,579,372 and, as I have said, this is a fixed charge.

In expenditures for public works on capital account the government has expended $127,000,000 and has not added a dollar to the debt of the country, while the former government spent but $80,000,000 and incurred a debt of $118,000,000. The estimates for expenditures on capital account for public works this year are $9,110,050. No one can possibly or reasonably object to the expenditures made under this department, when we consider the importance of developing our transportation facilities, improving the St. Lawrence channel, and enlarging our canals in order that our goods may be conveyed to European markets in the best possible condition.

We find that for agriculture $1,258,500 is asked for in the estimates this year, and that this government is expending nearly double what was spent by the former government in the interests of agriculture. Who will object to that? If our friends opposite object to it I am sure it is not to their credit. Expenditures made on behalf of agriculture have been bringing a return manyfold in excess of their amount, and I believe that such expenditures will be supported by every person.

On small subsidies and steamship subventions the expenditure is $1,497,833; on the administration of justice, $1,288,895: on lighthouse and coast survey, $2,717,050. These items which I have enumerated amount to $57,620,346, and I am sure that we are receiving value for every dollar so expended. The expenditures are made in the best interests of the country and when we consider the manner in which the affairs of the country have been carried on by this government and the largely increased revenue that has been derived with a lower rate of duty it must be admitted that the government deserves credit. If the revenue increases, as I hope it will, and the public expenditure increases, as I hope it will in a degree commensurate with the expansion and development of the country, we will witness in Canada a national development of which we have seen only the beginning.

This government has adopted legislation that has been of great advantage to the people of Canada, and we have reason to be proud of that legislation. Look for a moment at the measures that have been adopted by the Department of Agriculture. We have, for example, the pure seed Bill, the Fruit Marks Act, the pure food Bill and others, every one of which has resulted in great good to the Dominion of Canada. Then in the Department of Labour, we have the Lemieux Bill adopted last session. Within one year eleven or twelve very important industrial disputes have been settled under the provisions of that Act. We have on our statute-books the best legislation respecting labour and capital of any country in the world. I make that statement advisedly and unreservedly. In support of it we have the testimony of those who have looked carefully into the subject. We have seen the government of the United States sending a representative from one end of Canada to the other investigating this Bill and its practical working in connection with disputes between capital and labour. We find the government of France also making special inquiry in regard to this measure. We have seen conflicts between capital and labour avoided by its application and this has meant during the last year the saving of thousands and thousands to both the labouring class and the manufacturers or employers of labour in Canada.

Then we have the Sunday Observance Bill brought into effect two years ago. We are advised that under the operation of that Bill one day of rest in seven has been provided for some 75,000 labourers and employees who formerly had not even that one day.

I might refer to other matters in connection with the legislation of this government. I hope that during this session the Bill that has been introduced by the Minister of Justice providing for purity in elections will be adopted. I believe it deserves and I hope it will receive the support of members on both sides of the House.

While we are proud of what has taken place in Canada during the last few years, we have unlimited faith in Canada, its growth and its glorious future. The development of our transportation facilities is one of the most important tasks which we have to face. Steam railroads are an absolute essential for our future development. If it is necessary I for one am quite prepared to support the construction of a railway to Fort Churchill to open the route from Hudson's bay to the European markets. That the time for that has come I am not prepared to say. If some such provision for the building of that road as was suggested by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) can be made, I do not suppose the construction of the road would be open to any special objection. I know, of course, that with the other large projects which are under consideration, the construction of the Georgian bay ship canal, for instance, it is wise for this government to go carefully and cautiously until they have completed the National Transcontinental Railway, but I believe that in connection with the proposed all-red route the Dominion of Canada may well, at any time that the British parliament and the parliaments of Australia and New Zealand are prepared to enter into that project, support it vigorously. I believe it is a project that will appeal to every true Canadian, to every true Britisher. Whether the route be from Blacksod bay on the west coast of Ireland or from Liverpool to Halifax or to Quebec, I care not, but if we have the best Atlantic service, connecting Great Britian with Canada by four and a half days steamers so that passengers may go in nine days from London to Vancouver, and then the very best service across the Pacific, Canada, standing midway between the Occident and the Orient, will derive wonderful benefit from its situation on this great highway. I believe the Dominion of Canada would receive more benefit possibly than Great Britian would or the government of New Zealand or Australia.

I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to detain the House any longer. While we rejoice in the development and growth of the Dominion of Canada, it is well for us to remember that true greatness consists not merely in our wide expanse of territory, nor in the naturally rich resources of our soil, but rather in the devotion of our people to a high and lofty ideal of public and private duty, actuated by a spirit of patriotism inspired by the highest motives; with a love for all that is pure, true, noble and good, and a hatred for all that is false, base and mean; frowning down everything that would make for strife and discord either of creed or of race, and standing for that which makes for amity, and for peace, and for national stability and national integrity.

Mr. A. BRODER (Dundas). I do not intend to detain the House at the great length the last speaker did. I shall deal briefly with some matters which I think may be of interest not only to the House but to the country, and I shall in the first instance correct a statement which was made by the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) in this debate, and which was reiterated by the hon. member from Oxford (Mr. Schell) I do not for a moment say the hon. member for South Grey intended to mislead the House. He was quoting from the 'Farmers Sun' an authority which is generally well informed and which could not have made the statement I refer to in its editorial with a full knowledge of all the facts. I am referring to the importation of Canadian apples to the French market. The hon. member for South Grey was very anxious to eulogize his friends on the treasury benches and the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Schell) was equally anxious, but in this connection their eulogy was misplaced. When the attention of the hon. member (Mr. Schell) was called to the fact he was not stating the matter as it appeared in the record, he said his authority was good and he persisted in the statement, a course which I think was neither fair nor courteous to the House. I have here the tariff of 1907 and embodied in this tariff is : an Act respecting a certain treaty between Her Britannic Majesty and the President of the French Republic, assented to on July 23, 1904, and in article 3 of that Act we find :

The following articles of Canadian origin imported direct from that country accompanied by certificates of origin shall receive the advantage of the minimum tariff matters, shall be enjoyed fully by France, Algeria and the French colonies.

And in that list we find: 'apples and pears, fresh, dried or pressed,' and so these articles have been in the treaty between France and Canada for the last fourteen years, and yet the hon. member would get up and say his authority was good and that they were put in the French treaty by this Liberal government. Now let us see what has been the result of that open market for our apples in France during all that time. I will take two years so as to get a sort of average of the result. According to our trade and navigation returns for 1903 there were $3,982 worth of dried apples went into France and the same year $57,572 worth of green apples went into France. In 1906, $209,131 worth of green apples went into France and no dried apples according to the trade and navigation returns. Now in 1906, there went into Great Britain green apples valued at $3,475,825, and dried apples valued at $12,257. In 1903, dried apples went into England to the value of $25,553 and green apples to the value of $4,379,826.

Now, it is easily seen that even with that open market for fourteen years the apple trade of Canada has not had much advantage in the French market. I have here the American-French treaty of 1898, and I find that American apples and pears went into France under exactly the same tariff as the Canadian apples and pears did. But, if you turn up this tariff in the present French treaty you will find that these same articles are mentioned just as they are mentioned in the Franco-Canadian tariff of 1894, although my hon. friend seemed anxious to give his party, this government, great credit for having negotiated a treaty with respect to them. I am quite willing they should have all the credit they are entitled to, but I do not intend that he should steal any apples off the Tory tree to throw to his friends.

There is another matter I wish to talk about. I am sorry the hon. gentleman (Mr. Schell) has left his seat, because I want to deal for a few moments with a circular which he read. He said that this circular came from the Conservative party to the electors and that it was spread throughout the country suggesting how to manipulate elections in a fraudulent way. I tell the hon. gentleman that he cannot give his authority for saying that Conservatives issued that circular, but I want to say to the House and to the country that the evidence we have in the courts and out of the courts proves that the party in power today are the people who carried out the injunctions in that circular to the very letter. It is pretty easy to understand where the circular emanated from. The people who carried it out to the letter are the Liberals of this country and I intend to give evidence to prove that and I shall give the evidence from their own party friends. I want to read to this House and I want to put upon 'Hansard' the confession of Mr. McNish, and who do you think was a witness to that confession. Why, none other than the gentleman who poses in this country as intending to give us a pure election law, the Minister of Justice, Mr. Aylesworth. Let us see what he put into the mouth of his client in order to get his party out of the coils of the law. Here is the McNish confession addressed to the prosecuting lawyers:

St. Thomas, June 26, 1899.

Messrs. Crothers & Price,
Barristers, &c., St. Thomas.

Dear Sirs,—We beg to advise you that Mr. McNish has discussed at length with his solicitors the charges contained in the petition which has been filed against his return as member of the legislative assembly of Ontario for West Elgin, and that they have to a considerable extent investigated the charges contained therein and other matters which have come to their knowledge in connection with the election. And the subscribers hereto make the following statements and admissions respecting the same:

1. That a large number of persons were specially sent into the constituency by men workng on behalf of the Liberal party for the express purpose of taking part in Mr. McNish's behalf in the election held on January 12, 1899, and we believe that fraudulent and corrupt means were used by some such persons to secure his election.

Carrying out the suggestion to the letter.

2. That several of the said persons illegally and without authority acted as deputy returning officers at the said election, and in at least three cases so acted in the names of reputable local men, having, under assumed names, been introduced to the returning officer by local agents of Mr. McNish.

Further carrying out the suggestion. Let us see what is next:

3. That in many of the polling subdivisions of the riding there were grave irregularities connected with the return of the ballot-boxes and their contents, the voting and the counting of the ballots thereat.

Following the circular again. It is easily seen where the circular came from.

4. That there were large numbers of persons brought into the riding for the express purpose of personating legitimate voters, and assisted by some of Mr. McNish's supporters, such persons did personate qualified voters in voting for Mr. McNish.

5. That the declared number of votes for Mr. McNish largely exceeded the number of bona fide votes cast for him.

Carrying out the circular. We will print more ballots, the circular said.

6. That a large number of ballots cast for Mr. MacDiarmid were in some nefarious and corrupt manner manipulated, whereby the result of the election was rendered doubtful, and that in this connection the voting at Shedden and Middlemarsh, and in the several divisions in St. Thomas, where said strangers so acted as returning officers, merits special mention.

7. That there are good reasons to believe that there are many special and well-authenticated cases where agents of Mr. McNish concealed at their homes some of the strangers, who there paid large sums of money to electors to induce them to vote for him.

Do you want any stronger proof as to who had the circular carried out? Let us see what more there is:

8. That Mr. McNish will forthwith deliver to the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly his resignation as a member thereof for the said electoral district.

(Sgd.) DONALD McNISH.

Witness:
(Sgd.) A. B. Aylesworth.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, two of this gang are now in the employ of this government, one as Indian agent at Parry Sound, and the other as customs collector.

Mr. BRODER. I want to go a little further, and give another little bit of history. What about Mr. J. B. Jackson? He came from South Oxford, the riding of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat; and he attempted to hire men to swear falsely if necessary in order to unseat a Conservative member. What was his reward? Under the hand and seal of the Minister of Trade and Commerce he was sent to Leeds, England, to act as a commercial agent of Canada. No wonder the hon. member for South Oxford finds it necessary to make a long speech in order to have it published and sent among the electors of South Oxford to fortify their consciences. What do we find in the late history of that riding? We find that in the last six months two men have refused to be Liberal candidates for the local legislature. What did Judge Street say of Mr. Jackson, who is in the employ of this government? He said this:

One of the difficulties I have in this case is the knowledge of the improper and reprehensible means and large expenditures which have been proven to have been devoted to absolutely improper purposes. It is impossible to follow the ramifications of such an expenditure, and in dealing with the last case I cannot get out of my mind the possibility of the course of inquiry having been affected by the expenditure of a very large sum of money. Here is Mr. Jackson, a lawyer in Ingersoll. Here is this man of the lowest possible character, as far as appears from what has been said about him, and one knows of the desperate efforts that have been made to prove the charges. Nothing was ever heard in my experience before like it.

Talk about issuing a circular—who has carried out the circular? Hon. gentlemen opposite and their friends have carried it out to the letter. Go to the St. James division of Montreal and you find Mr. Brunet disqualified, and some of his friends disqualified and put in gaol; but the Minister of Justice let some of the parties out. Then go to the St. Anne's division and you find the member elect disqualified there. So I would not talk much about the circular if I belonged to the Liberal party. I do not want to overlook the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who said that Jackson's whole sin was in not looking under the bed and up the chimney and into the garret before he did his nefarious work. When Sir Richard Cartwright was in the House of Commons he spoke of Mr. Jackson being rather zealous, but neglecting to look into these quarters. That is the excuse he gave for sending this man to one of the centres of England as commercial agent of this country. The hon. gentleman spoke of the labouring man getting $94 a year more than he used to. It is a great pity that some of that additional money was not sent to Toronto to help some of the poor people there. Now, I want to deal with the Minister of Agriculture. To hear him and his friends talk on the public hustings, you would think that when this government came to power a new heaven and a new earth were created, and that the Minister of Agriculture was the centre of the system, and everything agricultural revolved around him. What are the facts? I do not wish to detract one iota from the credit which the hon. gentleman deserves; but the Department of Agriculture is conducted under the same system that existed when he came in. Did the hon. gentleman and his colleagues introduce anything new?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, they did—stuffing chickens.

Mr. BRODER. That is a little thing, but they have learned by this time that chickens are able to feed themselves. Who established the experimental farms in this country—the Liberal party? No. In the Auditor General's Report for 1878, at page B—2 you will find that $90,000 was expended to establish experimental farms at Ottawa, Nappan, Indian Head and Brandon. In the same year the department purchased 75,000 of a pamphlet issued by W. H. Lynch, who had visited Denmark and studied the system of dairying there. These were sent out over the country to sharpen the minds of the people with reference to their dairying interests. In 1889, we find in the Auditor General's Report, page B—20, that $90,000 was granted, and the government started an experimental farm in British Columbia in that year. The same year they granted $10,000 to encourage agricultural societies in the Northwest Territories. In 1890 they gave $70,000 to the experimental farm and $4,550 for the development of the dairying interests. In 1890 they appointed J. W. Robinson, dairy commissioner. The whole machinery which has since been operated and has resulted in the development we are so proud of, was started by the late Conservative government. I do not pretend to say that some improvement has not been made. No new country can stand still, but hon. gentlemen opposite talk as if the country would have stood still if they had not come into office. Well, the wheels must move whether they are in power or out of it.

I want now to take up another matter. I see that the present administration have followed out the lines laid down by the Conservative party with reference to the agricultural interests. Let us see what other people are doing with reference to experimental farms. Russia—that country which we think is standing still—has 102 stations; Germany has 80; France, 71; Austro-Hungary, 61; the United States, 60; Sweden, 26; Italy, 22; Belgium, 15; Japan, 15; Norway, 12, and Canada 6, including the last two added to the list by the Minister of Agriculture—one in North Alberta and the other in South Alberta. What about the expenditure? France spends in the interests of agriculture yearly $9,200,000; Austria, $9,270,000; Hungary, $9,400,000, and Russia, $25,280,000. And I want to say here that Russia is our future rival in the English market for many products. Japan spends $3,750,000; the United States, $10,000,000; and Canada, $518,976.56. Those expenditures are taken in the year 1906. I am taking what is granted under the head of arts and agriculture, and I strike out the items that are not in the interest of agriculture. For instance, I strike out the archives, $21,985, for I do not think that should be charged to agriculture. Also census statistics and criminal statistics. I do not think those should be charged to agriculture. Then there is the Year-book—I do not think that that is in the interest of anybody; and general statistics, $14,111.85. Historical data re Acadian families I do not think should be charged to agriculture; and it is after deducting these items that I find we have spent on agriculture during 1906 $518,976.56.

Let me now call attention to this fact, that while we have spent only half a million dollars on agriculture, we have seen fit to spend $4,294,124.62 on militia and defence, charged to income, and $1,299,875.65 charged to capital account, or a total of $5,594,000.27 on militia and defence. In other words, we have spent that large amount on war and only $518,976 on the great avocation of peace—agriculture. In other words, we have spent within a few cents of $11 on war for every $1 we have spent on agriculture.

Let us see what some of the provinces are doing. Ontario spends on agriculture $547,153.23 and Quebec $305,637.23. Let me point out that economy in many of the departments would give millions to the Agricultural Department. The right hon. gentleman could stand up, when our expenditure was $38,000,000 to $40,000,000, and suggest that he could save from $1,000,000 to $3,000,000. Why does he not apply his pruning knife now? He might easily lop off many a million dollars with safety to the country and without impairment of efficiency if proper economy were practised.

I say that the Agricultural Department is not meeting the difficulties and the problems which confront it. That is a serious statement to make, but I shall prove it from the blue-books and documents issued to the public. I have in my hand the dairy and cold storage commissioner's report for the year ending March 31, 1907, and I want to show that while the Minister of Agriculture claims to be making quite an effort to meet the difficulties which confront him—and I do not say that these difficulties are easily overcome—that proper care which should characterize the handling of our perishable products in the markets of the world is not carried out. I have here, on page 97 of the report, some correspondence regarding the handling of our cheese:

Liverpool Service.

Steamship....., sailed May 12.

A number of cheese boxes were broken by using shutes for loading. I went to the foreman and had him place stuffed sacks at the botton of shutes for the boxes to strike against.

Steamship.....sailed June 9.

The cheese stored in No. 6 hatch were very roughly handled quite a number of boxes being broken.

I spoke to the men a number of times, but they did not pay any attention to me until I went to the superintendent, who sent a man down to watch them. They handled them better after that.

Of course, it is not the agent that the Canadian government sends who has control over the ship hands. He ought to have told somebody else. Now, here is another case of a steamship whose name is not given, but which sailed on July 23. I do not see why the name is withheld:

Steamship....., sailed June 23.

Some cheese were handled very roughly with the platform slings. I spoke to the men two or three times, but they paid no attention to me.

They were not responsible to him.

I then went to the superintendent, who came and told the men they were to do as I said or he would discharge them all, which had the desired effect.

Steamship.....sailed July 14.

The cargo on this steamer was handled as carefully as possible. They kept a man at the hatch watching the men stowing the cheese in the ship. I had to speak to the carters several times for breaking boxes, and had to threaten to telephone the firms they were drawing for, which made them more careful.

Steamship..... sailed September 15.

I had to speak to the men a couple of times for handling the cheese roughly, and the foreman threatened to discharge them if he saw them again. I threatened to report a couple of the carters and one helper for throwing the cheese, after which they were handled very carefully.

Now, I come to the London service :

London Service.

Steamship....., sailed September 1.

The cargo on this ship was handed very well. I had to speak to the shore captain about the patent drop, as the men had not fixed it properly, and were dropping the cheese about six inches, thus breaking several of them. He immediately had it remedied.

Steamship....., sailed September 29.

The cargo on this ship was handled a little rougher than usual, as the boat was late, and they were rushing to get her out on time. I spoke several times to the men who were handling the apples and cheese, then I went to the shore captain, who told the foreman to handle the goods carefully and not break them if the boat stayed here a week. After that they were handled very much better.

Steamship....., sailed October 27.

Cargo handled carefully, with the exception of apples from railways by teamsters, who had to be cautioned several times for careless work.

Glasgow Service.

Steamship....., sailed June 14.

Some of the cheese were handled very roughly.

That is the condition of things, as shown by the reports of the department. I say the department is not meeting these difficulties.

Now, there is another matter that ought to concern the public of this country in reference to the handling of our goods. I will only read briefly from the report, but I think the matter is of very great importance. I read from the report of the dairy and cold storage commissioner, under the heading 'Canadian Produce at Ports in Great Britain.' This part of the report refers to Liverpool :

During the season of 1906 some improvement was manifest, but our inspectors' reports show that from June 19 to October 24, 10,045 packages of Canadian butter were left on the docks for two days and that 2,660 packages were left on the docks for three days and over.

What is the use of boasting about our cold storage facilities, if you put the butter in cold storage here and, when it reaches the other side, it is left lying on the dock for two or three days? Here again we see that the department is not meeting the problems before it. I think this boasting about the Minister of Agriculture should cease until he has put matters into proper shape.

Now, there is another matter that is very serious, but to which I will refer only briefly, as I wish to save the time of the House. The reports that I shall read will show that Canadian cheese is going over not in a condition to hold the market. There is some difference of opinion on the point. Some cheesemen of this country say it is not a detriment, but some say it is a very serious detriment. I conclude from what is said by the English correspondents that this is a serious matter and jeopardizes the prospects of our cheese in the English market. I quote again from the report of the dairy and cold storage commissioner :

(From George Little, Limited, Manchester, dated December 12, 1906.)

The condition of the cheese when reaching this market is almost a scandal and points to the fact that cheese are not allowed to mature in the factory, but must be sent forward immediately, on the off-chance of the cheese ripening and maturing in transit. We have during the last few days landed some 1,000 to 1,500 boxes of cheese and there is hardly one that we can send out for immediate consumption. Buyers turn up their noses at such stuff and tell us that they will look at them again in a couple of months' time. The system of buying c.i.f. places an importer at a serious discount, as he literally buys a pig in a poke, and has to trust to the exporter to give him decent value. We have made up our minds to do less importing solely on these grounds and we should be glad if you would place the saddle on the right horse and the blame on the right shoulders, and if at any conference of factorymen or officials in cheese centres, please urge the importance of amending this matter at once, otherwise the quality of Canadian cheese will decline more and more (as it has already done) in the estimation of the British public. Several years of prosperity and increased production may have made the dairy element indolent and indifferent about how their products turn out in this country, but it is a wrong policy to adopt and is inimical to the prosperity of your great country.

When you boast about the Minister of Agriculture and what he has done for this country, what comment are you going to make on that letter? I hope that the department will endeavour to remedy this difficulty. If not the cheese of this country will not be able to hold its place in the English market. The high price may have tided them over serious difficulties for a year or two, but there can be only one result of cheese reaching the market in this shape. And, according to the returns, our exports of cheese and butter are falling off. You can draw a circle around the eastern portion of Ontario and the western portion of Quebec and you have within that circle of a few miles—few as compared with the size of the two provinces—practically the whole cheese industry of this country. What about the other provinces? I do not think there is very much encouragement in this report. I find the following at page 4:

Ontario and Quebec continue to produce the bulk of the cheese and butter made in Canada, and the development of the industry in these two provinces seems to have reached a point where there is not very much change in the situation from year to year, except the fluctuations due to climatic, market and other conditions. There is some multiplication of factories in both provinces, but the territory is now for the most part pretty well occupied, and new factories which are erected have to compete, as a rule, with existing ones for their supply of milk. In the lower lake district of Ontario there is a tendency to convert some of the cheese factories into cream-gathering creameries, and localities in which cheese factories were in operation ten years ago, but have been closed for lack of support, are now being occupied by creameries on this system. There seems to be very little tendency towards the establishment of creameries in that part of Ontario lying east of Toronto.

Now, what about the maritime provinces?

The dairy industry is not making much progress in the maritime provinces. The number of factories remains about the same in Prince Edward Island as for several years past. The production of cheese and butter during the season of 1906 showed some increase over the previous year and there is evidence that the herds are recovering from the effects of the unfavourable season in 1905. At present there seems to be some revival of interest in dairying in the island province.

The dairy industry in the province of Nova Scotia is rather declining instead of growing. There were 33 cheese and butter factories in 1900 and only 17 in 1906, the quantity of milk received in the latter year being about one-third of what it was in 1900.

Dairying shows more progress in New Brunswick. While the number of establishments for the manufacture of butter and cheese has not increased during the past six years, the value of the products has increased considerably. The dairy interest in New Brunswick is assisted and encouraged by expert advisers employed by the provincial Department of Agriculture.

In the western provinces the best development is shown in northern Alberta, which was the last of all the western provinces to engage in dairy work. There are now 41 creameries and 8 cheese factories in that province, and the number is increasing rapidly.

In the province of Saskatchewan there are 6 creameries, but no cheese factories. The creamery industry does not show much progress in the province of Saskatchewan.

In British Columbia there are 16 creameries in operation, and the business is established on a sound healthy basis.

I read from this report to show that the great dairy interests of this country are virtually at a standstill under the administration of the Agricultural Department of this government. Now that should not be so. This great industry which provides an asset to this country of from $20,000,000 to $24,000,000 for cheese alone, ought to be more carefully directed, and assisted if need be, and new territory should be taken possession of by this great industry. Now what is the outcome of the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite? In the official records I find the most serious condition that can face any country. I want to read from one of the government's own witnesses. The only trouble with their witnesses is that they are so old before they reach us that they have lost their memory. I hold in my hand the year-book for 1906, and that gives a record of the occupiers of the soil. I want to call the attention of the House and the country to this very serious fact, that the occupiers of the soil in 1901 were less by many thousands than they were in 1891. The total number of occupiers of the soil in 1871 was 367,862; in 1881, 464,025; in 1901, 620,486; and in 1901—mark the difference—544,688. Oh, but hon. gentlemen say, we have sent a great many men out to the west. Well, in the older provinces there were 75,798 less occupiers of the soil in 1901 than there were in 1891. Surely that is a serious matter. Now let us see what is the condition of things in the west. In 1901 the population of the three provinces was 419,512, and in 1906, 808,863, an increase of 389,351. Where did they come from? We have heard a great deal about the thousands and thousands of people who came into this country from the United States, and the other thousands that were induced to come in from northern Europe and the British Isles. Let us see what the condition of things actually is. Out of all this population in the western provinces in 1901, there were born in Canada 277,755, and in 1906, 444,366. In other words, 55 per cent of the people in the three western provinces are Canadian born. Where did they come from? Some of them were born out in the west. Of 444,366 born in Canada, 1,277 were born in British Columbia, 146,857 were born in Manitoba, 3,514 in New Brunswick, 5,990 in Nova Scotia, 163,962 in Ontario, 2,957 in Prince Edward Island, 19,905 in Quebec, 46,987 in Saskatchewan, 5,400 in the Northwest Territories, and 8,366 not given by provinces. That is to say, that 405,193 of the 808,863 people in those western provinces, were born in the other provinces. So we see that we have not been doing such wonderful things for this country. Take the occupiers of the soil which he gives here. The number in the three provinces in 1906 was 120,439, being an increase of 65,814 since 1891. Take that number from the 75,000 decrease in the other provinces, and not allowing for any further decrease in the old provinces, because they have gone west, there are 9,984 less people upon the farms of this country, including the great increase in the west, than there were in 1891.

Now I assert that the policy of this government is taking people off the soil, and this is an economic question which lies at the very basis of the prosperity and permanence of any country. Any policy that denudes the soil of its population in a new country, is a wrong one and has a wrong tendency. We talk about the tariff, about percentages of trade, while we overlook the greater question of the population that should be fastened upon the soil. I say that whether it belongs to the public men of this country, or whether it belongs to the men who stand in the sacred desks of this country to stay that unfortunate tendency of the population to leave the soil, whoever it belongs to are not doing their duty. Why, we see young girls by the thousand flocking to the centres of trade to stand behind counters in stores and business places, afraid of home making, afraid of motherhood—I say that while that condition exists in this country or any other, that country is in danger. There are problems that our public men should face and should solve; they should sit down in council if necessary and devise ways of arresting this fatal tendency. Look at Russia, with her 146,000,000 people, 20,000,000 of them in cities and towns, and 126,000,000 fastened upon the soil, the great future rival of Canada. Is there no remedy, is there no solution for this evil? It is a pity that this country, a country producing the necessaries of life above all other countries in the world, a country that can send her messengers out into the great trading areas of the world, that can stand in every gateway of the world and cry to the people as they pass by, Here is your bread, here is your butter, here is your cheese, here is your beef, your mutton, your pork. But unless we do our duty and fasten the people upon the soil we will never be in a position to become feeders of the rest of the world. Why should we not add to the curricula in our agricultural colleges rural engineering, farm mechanics if you wish? What is to hinder the Agricultural Department and the experimental farms going among the people in any district, laying out a farm if need be, in order that the rotation of crops may be demonstrated, that buildings may be laid out so as to afford the best ventilation and the greatest economy and other information of this kind may be afforded so as to make farming and the home attractive, so as to fasten the people on the soil, for this is the safeguard and the security of the virtue of the country in the future.

We find that in France and Germany, and recently in England, they have added to the curricula of these institutions what they call farm mechanics. A large warehouse is provided where they have all kinds of farm machinery for the inspection and use of the students. They are educated as to the method of working and taking care of these implements. This all adds to that great asset, the production of the farming community. That might be done by the Minister of Agriculture, he might add to the curricula, as I say, rural engineering or farm mechanics and thus secure credit for something new under the sun during his regime.

I do not say that professors, that scientific men, are exactly all that is needed, but I do say that if you take the history of England, going back to the first half of the 19th century, you will find that there was a combination of agricultural experts, scientific societies and prominent men in England who got together and undertook to do something for agriculture; they gave such an impetus to agriculture that England raised enough wheat to feed 24,000,000 of her people. How many people in England are fed to-day by wheat raised there? Four and a half millions. It shows what is possible and it shows further on what a precarious position the products of a country may be. If the price is raised the world over, to such an extent that it drives the people in England back to the land, England would raise enough wheat to feed within ten millions of her full population.

This country should be on the alert as to the wishes of the great agricultural interests. It is well to have science but I am afraid the Minister of Agriculture has failed to get down to the struggling masses and to learn the philosophy of their experience. You cannot overlook the hard-headed farmers in your calculation, they cannot be dictated to. The minister should take these people into his councils, he could consult with them and should deal with those problems which confront this country in the interests of the people generally.

We want to show the importance of the farming interest. If this matter is properly handled by the federal and provincial governments it will be of untold advantage. I have here an extract from a report given by the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States to the President, Senate Returns, vol. 3, 1903-4:

During the last fourteen years there was a balance of trade in favour of farm products, without excepting any year, that amounted to $4,806,000,000. Against this was an adverse balance of trade in products other than those of the farm of $865,000,000, and the farmers not only cancelled this immense obligation but had enough left to place $3,940,- 000,000 to the credit of the nation when the books of international exchange were balanced.

I want to show you that notwithstanding the adverse balance of trade in that country when you take all industries except agriculture, the great agricultural industry of that country overbalanced that and put to the credit of the nation in eleven years $3,940,000,000. The report continues :

These figures tersely express the immense national reserve-sustaining power of the farmers of the country under present quantities of production. It is the farmers who have paid the foreign bondholder.

Now, Sir, that is the position that this country should occupy, and until the efforts of the Agricultural Department are directed with that object in view, they will fall short of doing their full duty to the people. It is possible to teach the people of this country that the great farming agricultural interests of this Dominion are paramount to every other one interest in the country and we ought to teach our boys and girls that there is no more honourable vocation, no occupation which requires a more varied and intelligent idea of what is required, than the pursuit of farming. There is room for the most varied intelligence in that occupation. The boy cannot go astray if he knows chemistry; he wants bookkeeping, he wants reading, he wants to be a thinker, and I say that the encouragement that ought to be held out by the Department of Agriculture should lead towards placing the people on soil in the interest of the future prosperity of this Dominion. I say to the government that the game of this great country's future cannot be played with the old cards. We must have men standing up with broader patriotism, free from provincialism, men standing as patriotic Canadians to build up this country in the interest of the future and in the interest of the world.

On motion of Mr. Guthrie, the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 11.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 1, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

CRIMINAL CODE—AMENDMENT.

Mr. E. N. LEWIS (West Huron) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 140) to amend the Criminal Code, respecting injuries to persons due to motor vehicles.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Explain.

Mr. LEWIS. The Bill which I have the honour to introduce deals with a special class of bodily injuries caused by a class of vehicle which, at the time the Criminal Code was enacted, was not in common use ; I refer to automobiles. The Bill provides :

Section 284 of the Criminal Code of Canada is hereby amended by adding the following subsection thereto:

284a. The owner and driver and person in charge or owner or driver or person in charge of any motor vehicle, commonly called an automobile, which causes a horse or horses to run away or bolt or shy and thereby occasions bodily injury to any person or persons is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment.

Section 285 of the Criminel Code of Canada is hereby amended by adding the words 'motor vehicle, automobile or other' before the word vehicle in the third line of said section.

Section 284 refers to accidents caused by persons driving too rapidly on the streets and roads. Clauses 273 to 290 in the Code refer to special classes of accidents caused by explosives on railway trains, by wantonly endangering the safety of persons on railways, &c. Section 284, to which the section will be appended, provides :

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who, by any unlawful act, or by doing negligently or omitting to do any act which it is his duty to do, causes grievous bodily injury to any other person.

I can readily understand that there is an objection to special clauses of this nature, but we already have legislation providing for the punishment of persons having charge of carriages or vehicles causing bodily harm to any person under certain circumstances. I have included here the minimum penalty provided under the existing sections which imposed punishment ranging from imprisonment for life down to two years.

There is a strong feeling in the agricultural portion of Canada in reference to accidents caused by automobiles. It is true that the provincial governments have entire control of the roads, but this has reference to bodily injury. To illustrate this feeling I shall, with your permission, read one letter of many that have been received, and I know that the hon. member for North Perth has also received letters upon this subject. This letter is as follows :—

Goderich, March 24, 1908.

E. N. Lewis, Esq.

Dear Sir,—I note with pleasure the stand you are taking against some of the existing evils of the country. There is one great evil about which you have said nothing, that is the automobile nuisance. It is all very well to protect the man who goes out hunting, but he does not have to go hunting. What about hundreds of people who have to travel on our country roads, who take their lives in their hands every time they go on their own road to do any business in the towns? You want to get after the automobiles right sharp and put them off the country road. While parliament——

This I presume refers to provincial parliaments.

—is fooling with the question there are scores of people being injured and frightened off the roads by these automobiles. Now if parliament will not take some action in the matter then the people will take the law into their own hands and treat them as they deserve. There are some who will slow up and let you by, but the majority will dart past and when you are tangled up in the ditch with a frightened horse you are not in a shape to take down the number of the machine. The argument that the farmer will soon be using them is all rot. It will be a sorry day for the country when the farmer takes to the automobile. The argument that horses will get used to them won't hold good as one of the main sources of revenue of the farmer is to raise horses, and as soon as they are matured sell them and break in younger ones. In our case all our horses are young except one. I could say a great deal more about the blooming nuisance but will stop for this time.

Yours sincerely,
THOMAS C. NAFTEL.

I looked up the figures in reference to the horse raising industry in Canada and I find that there are to-day 1,530,515 horses in Canada. The farmers are the mainstay of Canada and should be protected when using their own roads made by themselves for themselves. I trust that if the government do not see fit to allow this Bill to go through or to take it as one of their own the Minister of Justice in amending the Criminal Code will add to it a clause covering the provisions of this Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY RATES.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens)—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. Are the rates on the Intercolonial Railway increased during the winter season on freight to and from Prince Edward Island?
2. If so, when did the change in rates take place in the fall of 1907?
3. If increased, what is the amount of increase over the summer rates?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Excepting as explained below there is no change in the rates.
2. There was no advance in rates in 1907, over those of the previous year.
3. The following explanation affords the best answer: During summer navigation, the first-class rate from Halifax to Pictou on Island business is 20 cents. Winter rate Halifax to Pictou for the same business is 24 cents. From Truro the first-class rate summer and winter to Pictou is 16 cents. From Amherst the rate is the same both summer and winter. In the summer the business for the Island from Moncton goes entirely via Point du Chêne, and when Point du Chêne closes it goes via Pictou. The summer rate, Moncton to Charlottetown, via Point du Chêne is 32 cents; and when navigation at Point du Chêne closes the rate via Pictou is 44 cents. After Charlottetown is closed and business goes by the winter steamer via Georgetown, the rate to Charlottetown, is 52 cents per 100 pounds first-class. It will thus be seen, that owing to the conditions of the different seasons, there are three rates necessary between Moncton and Charlottetown during the year. The Intercolonial Railway gets no benefit of the advance; the highest rate of 52 cents is divided allowing the Intercolonial from Moncton to Pictou 28 cents, steamer 10 cents, Prince Edward Island Railway 14 cents. On the 44 cents rate of Charlottetown, direct from Pictou, the Intercolonial Railway gets 34 cents as against 20 cents, when the high rate is charged.

WHALING LICENSES.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens)—by Mr. Martin—asked :

1. To whom in British Columbia have whaling licenses been granted, (a) when were they granted, (b) for what waters, (c) for what term of years, (d) upon what terms and conditions, and (e) what moneys were received from such licenses in 1905, 1906 and 1907?
2. Are any moneys now due from such licenses? If so, from whom and how much?
3. What penalty was provided for not making use of privileges granted and what steps has the government taken to ascertain if the conditions have been complied with?
4. Can licenses be cancelled in case of non-user?
5. Have any applications for whaling licenses in British Columbia been made to and refused by the government? If so, from whom, for what waters, and why were they refused?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Pacific Whaling Company, 5th of May, 1905, annual license; Pacific Whaling Company, 11th of December, 1905, annual license; Pacific Whaling Company, 7th of December, 1906, annual license; Pacific Whaling Company, 7th of December, 1906, annual license; Dr. Francis Hall, 23rd of July, 1907, annual license; Pacific Whaling Company, 17th of September, 1907, annual license; George A. Huff, 7th of March, 1908, annual license.

(b) The licenses cover the operation of factories ashore and do not essay to cover water areas.

SALMON FISHING LICENSES.

Mr. CHISHOLM—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked:

1. Have any salmon fishing leases or licenses been granted for taking fish from Seymore narrows, Johnston's straits, Massett inlet, Kildalla and Virago, British Columbia? If so, when, to whom and upon what conditions?

2. Have any applications for fishing leases or licenses in Johnston's straits, British Columbia, been applied for and refused by the governement? If so, when, by whom, and for what reasons?

3. Have any fishing leases or licenses been granted for the waters of Barclay sound, British Columbia? If so, when, to whom and for what term of years?

Hon. L. P. BORDEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Unless a motion for a return is made, I could not give all the information sought for, but if it is sufficient for the purpose that the honourable member has in view I may give him the information now for the current fiscal year. For the fishing season of 1907, the following fishery licenses have been issued for these waters:

| Licensee. | Kind of License. | Location. | Date of Issue. |
|---|---|---|---|
| F. W. Rudge | Drag-seine | Virago Sound | January 4, 1907. |
| H. A. Rudge | " | Massett Inlet | " 4, 1907. |
| J. A. Rudge | " | " | " 4, 1907, |
| Frank Burnet | Purse-seine | Seymour Inlet | " 2, 1907. |
| George Young | Drag-seine | Massett Inlet | March 2, 1907. |

| J. H. McLae, H. M. McRae | Drag-seine | " | " 4, 1907. |
| Wallace Bros | " | Kildela Arm | January 4, 1907. |
| Johnston Fish Company, Clayoquot Sound | Purse-seine, three | Barclay Sound | February 12, 1907. |
| Canning Company | Drag-seine | " | May 22, 1907. |
| Alberni Packing Company | Purse-seine | " | August 9, 1907. |

These licenses permitted salmon fishing operations to be conducted with the kinds of nets specified during the legal season of 1907 under the conditions provided by the fishery regulations.

2. Not during 1907.

3. None in addition to those mentioned in the answer to question No. 1.

INVERNESS PUBLIC BUILDING.

Mr. BLAIN asked:

1. Is there a public building erected or in course of construction at Inverness town, Cape Breton?

2. If so, when was the work of construction commenced, is work going on there at the present time, and when will the work be completed?

3. How much has already been expended on the building, (a) for land, (b) for construction, (c) for inspection, and (d) how much more is still to be spent?

4. Who is the inspector of the work, when was he appointed, is he still in that position, how much does he receive per day, and how much has he been paid to date?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes.

2. (a) Work commenced 16th of August, 1906; (b) Yes; (c) Date of completion of contract, November 1, 1907. Original contract completed; fittings and furniture now being supplied.

4. (a) D. McIsaac; (b) August 15, 1906; (c) Yes; (d) $3 per day; (e) $1,602.

ST. BONIFACE PUBLIC BUILDING.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette) asked :

1. When was the land purchased for the site of a public building in St. Boniface, Manitoba?

2. When was the building commenced, when finished, and what was its cost?

3. How much money has been paid over to date, and to whom?

4. Is the government aware if the contract was sublet? If so, to whom?

5. Have the fittings been ordered? If so, at what cost, and when will they be placed in the building

6. Will the building be opened to the public immediately after the fittings are placed therein?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. January 31, 1906.

2. Building commenced April 19, 1907 ; not yet completed.

3. J. McDiarmid & Co., contract, $14,410 ; J. Bourgeau, site, $4,500 ; S. Paquette, superintendence, $639 ; C. H. Royal, legal services and commission, $103.90; C. Goddard, survey, $25 ; advertising, $242.92.

4. Not to the knowledge of the department.

5. No ; plans are now being prepared.

6. Yes.

LITHGOW, GIROUARD AND CONGDON.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What positions have been held by J. V. Lithgow, J. E. Girouard and F. F. Congdon in the Yukon under the government?

2. What was the date of appointment of each, and what was the salary and living allowance, respectively, each year during his incumbency of office?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

J. V. Lithgow and F. F. Congdon have never been employed in the Department of the Interior, but probably J. T. Lithgow and F. T. Congdon are the persons referred to.

1. J. T. Lithgow, comptroller ; J. E. Girouard, registrar ; F. A. Congdon, legal adviser and commissioner.

2. J. T. Lithgow, appointed 14th July, 1908.

DR. HORACE RHINDRESS.

Mr. SPROULE asked :

1. What salary does Dr. Horace Rhindress receive as port physician at North Sydney?

2. How much was paid last year to boats or steamers for conveying Dr. Rhindress to steamers entering the harbour?

3. How much was paid up to date for providing apartments for Dr. Rhindress at North Sydney?

4. How much was paid within the last year for putting in grates, bath tubs, furnishings, furniture, &c., for Dr. Rhindress' rooms or offices at North Sydney, and to whom paid?

5. Who owns the building in which such office or apartments are situated?

6. At whose request was such expenditure made?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) :

1. This department has no knowledge of Dr. Rindress having any position as port physician at North Sydney, but pays him $1,400 per annum as quarantine officer of the port and harbour of Sydney. The station is at Point Edward.

2. $2,300 per annum, the contract price for use of steamer for quarantine purposes. This is one half of an amount paid equally for the use of the boat by this department and the Department of Customs.

3, 4, 5 and 6. This department has no information.

Hon. Mr. PUGSLEY. It seems the last three questions may possibly pertain to my department. I would ask that they be allowed to stand.

Mr. SPEAKER. The last three questions allowed to stand on the Order Paper.

IMPORTS OF UNITED STATES HORSES AND CATTLE.

Mr. SPROULE asked :

Does the government intend to take any steps, by regulation or otherwise, to prevent the importation of cattle and horses from the United States, which are being brought in and sold in such large numbers as thoroughbreds for breeding purposes, but which are not in reality eligible for registration in the Canadian Herd-books?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs):

The regulations for the entry of cattle and horses for the improvement of stock have continued the same as when established by order in council in 1887.

These regulations do not require animals for the improvement of stock to be eligible for registration in the Canadian Herd-books.

The question of amending the regulations is and has been under consideration.

GERALD P. DILLON.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS asked:

1. Did Gerald P. Dillon, veterinary surgeon, enlist in the Northwest Mounted Police? If so, in what capacity, and when?
2. When was he promoted, and to what rank?
3. Did he act as quarantine inspector at St. Mary's, and what was the amount of fees earned by him for services as inspector? Who collected these fees and did the government receive them?
4. Was Mr. Dillon paid for his services as quarantine inspector at St. Mary's, and did he receive any pay over and above his regular pay as a member of the police force?
5. Is not Mr. Dillon entitled to receive the fees earned by him for inspecting stock entering at the port of St. Mary's? If not, why not?
6. Were not Staff-Sergeants Mitchell, Poett and others paid extra for similar services?
7. Will the hon. minister have the records of the police office at Regina examined as to these payments, and as to the fees collected at St. Mary's while Mr. Dillon was inspector?
8. Did Mr. Dillon ever agree to do quarantine inspection for the pay of a staff-sergeant?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. Gerald Pigott Dillon joined the Mounted Police on the 30th April, 1894, as constable.
2. He was promoted to corporal on the 4th May, 1894; to sergeant on the 5th May, 1894; and to staff sergeant on the 1st August, 1894.
3. In connection with his general duties as a veterinary staff sergeant of the Mounted Police he also acted as quarantine inspector of St. Mary's. The Mounted Police Department has no knowledge what fees were collected by him for services as quarantine inspector, they would in ordinary course of routine go to the Department of Customs.
4. So far as the Mounted Police Department is concerned Mr. Dillon received no extra fees as quarantine inspector, nor did he receive any pay over and above his regular pay as a member of the police force.
5. The inspection of stock was part of his duty, and did not entitle him to extra remuneration.
6. Staff-sergeant Poett died in April, 1895. His estate received $109. Staff-sergeant Mitchell and other veterinary sergeants were paid an allowance of $100 per annum for quarantine service. These payments were made by the Department of Agriculture, but all were subsequent to the service of Mr. Dillon in the Mounted Police force.
7. Statements of fees collected at St. Mary's, are on record in the Department of Customs.
8. Yes, he joined the Mounted Police on the distinct understanding that he would perform any duties required of him in the veterinary branch of the service.

GOVERNMENT LAND, BRITISH COLUMBIA, SOLD TO J. W. PATTERSON.

Mr. J. D. REID asked:

1. Were any government lands near New Westminster, British Columbia, sold to one J. W. Patterson? If so, by what department of the government?
2. If lands were so sold, were they Indian or military reserve land, or either of them?
3. What price did Mr. Patterson pay for said lands, if any were sold to him?
4. What date was such sale, if any was made?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). No sale made by the Department of Indian Affairs, nor by the Interior Department.

Mr. J. D. REID. The question I have put has not been answered fully.

Mr. OLIVER. The Interior Department handles the military reserve lands as well as the land administered by the Interior Department. It handles the lands not actually in use under the name of ordnance lands.

Mr. J. D. REID. I want to know definitely whether any government land has been sold.

Mr. OLIVER. Let the motion stand as a motion for a return.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). My hon. friend from St. John asked a question the other day which was afterwards changed to a notice of motion. Every object can be served by answering the question in a new form, and I would ask my hon. friend to put it on the Order Paper as a question. It would read:

How many claims for damages to property or for personal injury or loss or damage on the Intercolonial Railway have been settled since January 1, 1908?

I would ask my hon. friend to put it on the Order Paper in the form of a question for the next day.

Mr. DANIEL. I will put it on as a new question.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—SUSPENSION OF OFFICERS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Before the orders of the day are proceeded with, it is my duty to inform the House what action has been taken by the government on the report of the Civil Service Commission. The House is aware that on two previous occasions I stated that the report, in so far as it concerned the Department of Marine and Fisheries, called for consideration and action by the government. My hon. friend who is in charge of that department has been engaged for some time, as far as his other duties would permit him, investigating his department so as to determine in what respect it could be reformed. In the discharge of that duty, one of the officers of that department was suspended by him some few weeks ago. Since the report of the commission has been laid on the table, my hon. friend and colleague has come to the conclusion that he should also put under suspension two other prominent officers. It is only just to the deputy minister of that department that I should say in this connection that on two previous occasions he tendered his resignation to the minister and this morning again pressed his resignation, and that matter is in the hands of the minister for consideration. The House is aware that the report made certain very grave statements with regard to the honesty of the officials in that department. The matter is of such a serious character that the minister did not think it advisable for him to deal with that part of the report, but he has thought it advisable to recommend that a Royal Commission should be issued to deal with that part of the report of the commissioners, in order to have the state of facts which they say exists in the department properly investigated. It has pleased the administrator of the government to accede to this view and to appoint as commissioner Mr. Walter Cassels, judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada.

Now, the report is a very broad and general one. I may simply remind the House that last year, the government being aware that the civil service question was one which engrossed the attention of the country generally, thought it advisable to appoint a commission of men whom they had reason to believe to be absolutely impartial and disinterested to look over this question and give them the benefit of their views. The House is aware that this commission has made a report which is pretty general and broad. It is the intention of the government to deal, as soon as possible, with the various questions brought to the attention of the country in this report. I cannot say that, during the present session, it will be possible, perhaps, to go very far. Having sat now for something like four months, and all being more or less anxious to get to the blessing of a prorogation, if such a thing can be effected during the year 1908, at all events, it is the intention of the government to proceed as far and as speedily as it is possible to go during the present session. There is the broad question of civil service reform as it is generally understood. I understand that the commissioners have made a general representation upon that point—though, so far as I am concerned, I must say I have had no opportunity to read the report except as I have seen it in the newspapers—but there is this general recommendation. But everybody has noticed that, while the members of the commission have made a recommendation on that line, they have not embodied their views in the shape of a Bill as they did on the question of superannuation, for instance, and, therefore, the idea having been brought here without more specification than this, it may require some time before a Bill can be prepared on that line. All I have to say at this moment is that it is the intention of the government to deal with the question and all the questions brought up by the report of the commission as speedily as it is possible to do.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). I would like to ask whether the Royal Commission which has been issued to Judge Cassels is to deal with the department generally or is to deal solely with the matters which have been discussed in the report of the Royal Commission? I am referring, of course, to the Department of Marine and Fisheries to which the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) alluded. So far as the question of civil service reform is concerned, I would like to inquire whether or not the government have come to the conclusion that, as a matter of policy, they will adopt the system of competitive examinations by an independent commission?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. With regard to the first question of my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden), the best way to answer it is to bring down the order in council. This I hope to do before the end of the present sitting. With regard to the other question, I think it better that, before the government make any announcement, the House should have the benefit of having the report before it.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Have all the documents, notes and memoranda upon which was based the report of the Civil Service Commission been laid upon the table of the House? There are several of the most important conclusions arrived at by the commission which are based upon memoranda and notes, and I do not think that these documents have been laid on the table——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They have—everything received from the commission.

Mr. MONK. It seemed as if some were missing, and I thought, that perhaps in the hurry with which the report was brought down some of these notes had been mislaid.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. When the report of the commission was placed in our hands, we noticed that certain memoranda alluded to in the report had not been received. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) asked Mr. Courtney, president of the commission, to have these included. Mr. Courtney sent a certain bundle of papers. These things have been all placed on the table and they are now in the hands of the printer.

PRIVILEGE—MESSRS. BENNETT AND FOWLER AND 'LE CANADA.'

Mr. W. H. BENNETT. I desire to call attention to an article published in 'Le Canada' of Montreal of this date. There is a half column of adulation of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur)—I have no quarrel with that myself——

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand this is a question of privilege.

Mr. BENNETT. What I object to are certain words referring to myself. The article says :

This, in any case, does not constitute a charge against Hon. Mr. Brodeur, whose honesty is uncontested, except, perhaps, by tainted persons who have boodled in the funds of the Foresters,—like Geo. E. Foster, G. W. Fowler and Bennett.

I wish to make this statement without equivocation, and fully and roundly : I have never had any dealings of any kind or nature with the Independent Order of Foresters. I am not even a member of that association. The statement contained in this paper, therefore, is a deliberate untruth.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (Kings and Albert). I wish to say the same with respect to myself. I have never had any dealings with the Independent Order of Foresters, and the statement made in this paper, so far as I am concerned, is an absolute lie.

PRIVILEGE—MR. PRINGLE AND THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE.

Mr. R. A. PRINGLE (Stormont). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. On the 2nd March last I spoke to a resolution relating to certain amendments to the Banking Act, and in doing so I made certain statements. I spoke generally in regard to the strong position of our Canadian banks. I did, however, in advocating certain amendments to the Banking Act, which I hope to have the pleasure of advocating when the adjourned debate on the motion is again taken up, make certain statements in regard to a particular bank. The hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) handed me a copy of a letter which he will, no doubt, give to the House, a letter addressed to him by Mr. B. E. Walker, president of the Canadian Bank of Commerce. I understand from this letter that Mr. Walker takes exception to my statement in regard to the Bank of Commerce being a gambling bank. I should regret exceedingly doing an injustice to the Canadian Bank of Commerce or any other bank. Mr. Walker in his letter states :

The criticisms you refer to which were made on the floor of the House are, we hope, due only to a misunderstanding of facts and not to malice, but they are in any event absolutely without foundation.

I may say, Sir, that I was not actuated by any malice. My relations with the Bank of Commerce are most friendly, in fact I have no business whatever with the Canadien Bank of Commerce. But while I was not in any way actuated by malice, I cannot altogether accept the alternative that my remarks were due to a misunderstanding, except to this extent : I have looked more carefully at my speech and I may have said that the Canadian Bank of Commerce is the biggest gambling bank in the Dominion of Canada. When I was looking into the material in connection with my proposed amendments I had occasion to read the evidence that was given before the Royal Insurance Commission, I had occasion to read the report, and I found in that report that the president of the Bank of Commerce, the general manager of the Bank of Commerce, the Bank of Commerce itself, and others, formed a pool in 1903 for the purpose of dealing in Dominion coal stocks. Upon that report I based my statement that the Canadian Bank of Commerce was gambling. Mr. Walker does not for one moment say that my statement is untrue, because quite properly he could not say so because his name and the name of the Hon. George A. Cox, and the name of the Bank of Commerce are shown there as being members of that pool. But I have to say that I am pleased to hear that that was the only time that the Canadian Bank of Commerce indulged in stock speculation. But it has been explained to me, and I am bound to accept the explanation in perfect good faith, that it was a very critical time in the finances of Canada, and it was felt by Mr. Walker that they were perfectly justified at that time in purchasing the large blocks of stock which they did in the month of April, 1903. He further says :

On the basis of three actual transactions in purchasing shares, the reasons for such purchases being unknown to him, Mr. Pringle calls the bank a gambling institution.

I am free to admit that the reasons were not known to me at that time, the reasons are known to me now, and it is not for me to judge whether it was wise for the Bank of Commerce to purchase the stock as they did at that time. Now I may say that I have always had a high regard for Mr. Walker as being one of the ablest and cleverest men in Canada, and it struck me as being rather peculiar that Mr. Walker should have been one of the syndicate, and also been a party to the purchase of these shares of stock, and it was for that reason I made the statement I did. But I now say that I am pleased to hear, by the communication sent to Mr. Kemp, that the Bank of Commerce, except on that isolated occasion, have not in any way been dealing in stocks. Now in a further part of his letter he says :

Mr. Pringle conveys the impression that we charge enormously high rates of interest in the west, and he refers to a certain lawsuit in evidence.

I did refer to the case of the Canadian Bank of Commerce vs. Donald, in which twenty-four per cent was charged. I am quite satisfied with Mr. Walker's explanation that that was in the Yukon where they had to get very high rates of interest, and I only referred to it to show that there should be some restriction as to the contractual rates that banks may charge throughout this country, and I am not now satisfied that some of our banks are not compelling their customers to contract for a higher rate of interest than they should. There are one or two other matters I desire to say a word about. He also goes on to say in his letter that I make a comparison between the Canadian Bank of Commerce and other banks as to the amount of assets, or rather to put it in exact language, the ratio of assets to liabilities to the public. I stated that the proportion of the Bank of Commerce was 117 per cent. I am glad to see by Mr. Walker's letter that I was quite correct and that the proportion of the assets of the Bank of Commerce to the public liabilities is 117 per cent. He gives also the proportions of other banks, which are exactly in accord with the statement I made. It is only fair to say that such proportion is not always a criterion of the strength of a bank, because as a bank's business increase and its liabilities increase, the ratio sometimes diminishes. Then he says :

Perhaps the least excusable statement is that we have been losing deposits in some peculiar degree. This winter, for the first time in many years, all banks have found that depositors, especially ordinary business depositors, have drawn from their balances in a much closer manner than when money was easier.

I did refer particularly to the amount of deposits that were being lost by the Canadian Bank of Commerce. It is only fair to say that other banks have been losing their deposits, owing to the great stringency in the money market. Now, Sir, as I have said, I would regret exceedingly that any remarks of mine should be misconstrued. I know that the Hon. Geo. A. Cox is not now president of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, and it was the Hon. Geo. A. Cox who was being dealt with more particularly by the Royal Insurance Commission. I know that Mr. B. E. Walker is now president of the Canadian Bank of Commerce ; I did not know that the change was made, but the change has been made ; and Mr. Laird is the general manager of the Bank of Commerce. We know that it has a very strong board of directors composed of some of the best business men in the city of Toronto. We know that the Bank of Commerce has a paid up capital of $10,000,000, and a rest of $5,000,000, and I am bound to take Mr. Walker's word for it that there is no gambling. That is all I desire to say in regard to this matter. I do not take back anything that I have said in support of my amendments. If I have created an impression that the Canadian Bank of Commerce is now a gambling bank, I want to correct that impression, because I am bound to take the statement of Mr. Walker that they are not now indulging in the practice of buying and selling stocks in the public market. At a later date I hope I will have an opportunity of urging my amendments.

Mr. A. E. KEMP (East Toronto). I do not intend to make any remarks with regard to the subject which has been introduced by the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Pringle), but I think perhaps this House is entitled to know the nature of the correspondence which the hon. gentleman referred to between myself and Mr. Walker; and all I intend to do is to read this correspondence with the indulgence of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the House permits it.

Mr. KEMP (reading) :

March 27, 1908.

Dear Mr. Walker,—Your attention has likely been called to a debate which took place in the House of Commons a few weeks ago upon a resolution which I may say had been upon the Order Paper for several weeks previous, dealing with the question of banking.

In the course of the debate certain statements were made, as you doubtless are aware, by the mover, Mr. Pringle, which appeared to reflect upon certain transactions, specifically mentioned, of the Canadian Bank of Commerce.

I have not observed any reference, on behalf of the bank, to these statements which were made in the House of Commons, either through the public press or elsewhere, and believing, as I do, that the Bank of Commerce conducts its affairs on strictly conservative banking principles, would say that if you think it advisable to make a statement in reference to the part of the debate dealing with your bank, I shall be pleased to bring the same to the attention of parliament.

I remain,

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) A. E. KEMP.

Byron E. Walker, Esq.,
President Canadian Bank of Commerce,
Toronto.

This is the reply :

The Canadian Bank of Commerce,
Head office, Toronto, March 31, 1908.

Dear Mr. Kemp,—I have to thank you very sincerely for your letter. It is true that we have heretofore preferred not to reply to criticisms which are clearly due to misapprehension or based on errors as to facts, and which are sometimes also clearly meant to be unfriendly.

The criticisms you refer to which were made on the floor of the House are, we hope, due only to a misunderstanding of facts and not to malice, but they are in any event absolutely without foundation.

On the basis of three actual transactions in purchasing shares, the reasons for such purchases being unknown to him, Mr. Pringle calls the bank a gambling institution. He even suggests that important events in this bank's history, such as the absorption of other banks, were brought about as part of a policy of speculation in stocks. These statements are all utterly unfounded. The Canadian Bank of Commerce does not now and never has at any time made a practice of buying and selling stocks in the public markets or otherwise. It does not now nor has it ever speculated in stocks, and its history and reputation as known throughout Canada and in foreign countries are such as to entitle it to immunity from criticism of the nature of that in question.

Mr. Pringle also conveys the impression that we have charged enormously high rates of interest in the west, and he refers to a certain lawsuit as evidence. The case in point, however, occurred not in the west but in the Yukon, where the prices of food, rent, wages and everything else were on an enormously higher level than in any other part of Canada, and higher interest rates were therefore unavoidable.

He also makes a comparison between the Canadian Bank of Commerce and the newest of our banks, in order to show that we have a less percentage of assets in proportion to our liabilities to the public than the bank just started. But surely any one who gives the matter a moment's consideration will understand the fallacy of such a comparison. Any new bank on this basis is making its position worse with each addition to its customers. The figures properly used are the strongest evidence of the esteem in which the Canadian Bank of Commerce is held, because they really indicate the extent to which the people of Canada do business with this bank. In order to illustrate what I mean I give you below the proportion of the assets of several banks to their public liabilities as at the end of January:

| | Per cent. |
|---|---|
| Canadian Bank of Commerce.. .. | 117 |
| Bank of Montreal.. .. .. .. .. .. | 119 |
| Dominion Bank.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 124 |
| Merchants Bank of Canada.. .. | 126 |
| Bank of Nova Scotia.. .. .. .. .. | 127 |

Perhaps the least excusable statement is that we have been losing deposits in some peculiar degree. This winter, for the first time in many years, all banks have found that depositors, especially ordinary business depositors, have drawn upon their balances in a much closer manner than when money was easier. All banks have experienced the same natural result from the greater scarcity of money, but this bank has had no experience different from other banks, and the statement referred to was wholly foundationless so far as it was intended to apply to this bank alone.

You are at liberty to use this information in any manner you may think best.

I am, yours sincerely,

B. E. WALKER,
President.

A. E. Kemp, Esq., M.P.,
Toronto.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. As the Minister of the Interior is not present, I desire to ask the First Minister or the Minister of Finance about a return which I moved for on February 26, regarding some lands in the Peace river district.

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of the Interior is not present at the moment but he desired me to say that the return is in course of preparation and will be brought down within a few days.

Mr. FOSTER. I gave the Prime Minister a memorandum the other day with regard to two or three papers which are wanted, has he had a chance to look them up?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, I have given orders to have it attended to. I think one of them, the report with regard to finances, is hardly included with the others.

Mr. FOSTER. That was an independent return ordered by the House, it happened to be in the same memorandum, I would be very glad to get it.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. CLEMENTS.

Mr. H. S. CLEMENTS (West Kent). Before the orders of the day are called, I desire to rise to a question of privilege and to refer to an item which appeared in the Chatham 'Daily News' of last Saturday, in reference to a meeting held by the hon. Mr. McKay the leader of the opposition in Ontario. I regret that I cannot read the article because twenty minutes after this newspaper was placed upon the file this morning, the two pages I wanted were torn out, but my reference is to certain remarks which were made by my hon. friend from East Kent (Mr. Gordon) at that meeting. In fairness to the hon. gentleman I should say that I do not believe he made his remarks with any wrong intent, but I want to point out he was misinformed. Speaking of the original document question which was debated in this House some few days ago, he said that Mr. Clements had also to make an apology to the House for having held for a number of months an original document belonging to the House. I want to say, as I stated in the House a few days ago, that I never had any original documents; that the return with which my name was connected was simply a return of the imports and exports that any member of this House could have got in twenty minutes if he wanted to have got it himself. I may say that the return was left on my desk and disappeared a few minutes after I left it there just as the two pages I wanted to refer to in this newspaper disappeared this morning.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding, 'That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty.'

Mr. HUGH GUTHRIE (South Wellington). Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer some remarks upon the question which has been occupying the attention of the House for a number of days past, and in rising at this stage of the debate I do not do so with the idea that I may succeed in impressing either my opinions or my conclusions upon hon. members opposite, but more for the purpose of justifying the faith which is in me and of giving what appears to me to be good reasons for the support which I propose to give to the general financial administration of the present government. The hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) remarked in regard to the speech of my hon. friend from South Oxford (Mr. Schell) that the hon. member was apparently talking for the benefit of 'Hansard' and for his own constituents. I do not know that there is any great impropriety in such a course, even if that were his only object. I find and I have no doubt the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) and many of the rank and file on both sides of the House have found, that it is very difficult to bring those sitting opposite us to our views or our conclusions in regard to many of the political questions which are debated in this House. It is very difficult also for the rank and file of either party to obtain anything more than a very brief notice in the newspaper press of the country; so that if our constituents are to know our ideas on the various subjects, if they are to know our reasons for holding theses views the only means of giving them that information that I know of, is by delivering speeches in this House expressing those views in order that they may become matters of record.

The hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) waxed warm on the contents of a well worn greasy looking pamphlet which he held in his hand, and which I think is a pamphlet called 'The Deeds of the Other Fellows,' published by the Conservative association and purporting to set forth the electoral misdeeds of the Liberal party in both local and federal by-elections throughout Canada.

Mr. BRODER. Does the hon. gentleman dispute the statement I read from that pamphlet?

Mr. GUTHRIE. I do not dispute your statement. I had always given the member for Dundas a good deal of credit as a man who was inclined upon all occasions, to make a very fair and not a one-sided statement to the House. Last night, however, I think he was fired by some particular zeal or nettled by some statement which had been made by the hon. member who preceded him on this side (Mr. M. S. Schell). He waxed eloquent upon the electoral misdeeds of the Liberal party in provincial matters, in the by-elections in West Elgin some eight or nine years ago, and also in the election in South Oxford at about the same time. Bearing the reputation which he does for fairness and candour in such matters, I think it would have been better had he made some like reference to similar matters that have transpired on the other side of the House. Why should he refer at such length to the misdeeds of Liberals in West Elgin and say nothing whatever about another matter mentioned by the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. M. S. Schell), the colossal election frauds perpetrated by the Conservative party and known as the Manitoba election frauds of 1896? Why should he bring forward the electoral misdeeds committed by Liberals in South Oxford, and not be fair enough to say a few words upon the Conservative misdeeds in South Ontario a few years ago? Why should he refer in such scathing terms to one Jackson of South Oxford and say nothing whatever of one William Smith, ex-Conservative member of parliament of South Ontario? Why should he give us comments of the late Mr. Justice Street upon the Jackson case and say nothing of the comments of the late Mr. Justice Ferguson upon the Smith case? Why does he tell us that the Liberal party and the Liberal government have given Jackson some minor office in the service of the government, forgetting to inform the House that the great Conservative party made Mr. William Smith its standard bearer at the Dominion election after he had been found guilty? I mention these matters not that I think we should gloat over what we know to be election corruption upon whichever side of the House it may happen to be, but merely to emphasize the fact that if there is any real idea, any conviction, that something should be done at once if possible to stamp out electoral corruption and dishonesty as it has prevailed throughout Canada in the past, then it can be done and can best be done by joint action of both sides, and that the cause is not advanced one whit by pointing to the political misdeeds of the other fellows and drawing a blanket over the misdeeds of your own side.

In reading the excellent memoir of Sir John A. Macdonald, written by Dr. Parkin, a most excellent work and a tribute to a great man, my attention was again directed to a scandal that has become notorious in Canadian political history. The only blot, the only drawback the only cloud in that whole biography is referred to by Dr. Parkin in language which can only lead one to feel that a most gigantic political fraud was enacted by the Conservative party in 1872, in the case of the Pacific scandal. Then we know of another gigantic political fraud which was committed by that political party in Ontario. Instead of going to the constituencies to buy up the electorate they went into the legislative halls of Ontario to buy up with cold cash sufficient members of the Liberal party to upset the government of the day.

Mr. BRODER. You do not pretend that that was done by the Conservative party ?

Mr. GUTHRIE. I say it was.

Mr. BRODER. It was done by an American lumberman.

Mr. GUTHRIE. And I will not take back one statement. I say further that leading members of the Conservative party were arrested and tried on the charge and through a political jury were acquitted. We hear in this House and in the country and read in the press charges levelled against the Liberals on account of the expending of public money on what we maintain are necessary public works, but what hon. gentlemen opposite are inclined to say are constructed simply on account of the influence they may have on this, that or the other constituency throughout Canada, through the expenditure of that money. Hon. gentlemen opposite state in this House and out of it that this is nothing more nor less than a bribe to the constituency affected. I submit that that is not fair treatment nor do I think that it lies in the mouths of hon. gentlemen opposite, simply because they are opposed to this government on political lines, to say that any government or any great party in this country would be guilty of deliberately spending large sums of money of the people for the purpose of bribing a constituency. But, if they do say that, what a terrible example has been set them by their own leader in the last few months in the course of his memorable tour of the west ! What do they think of the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), when in British Columbia last fall, boldly telling the people of British Columbia that if he were returned to power he would see to it that increased subsidies were granted to that province from the federal treasury ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the hon. gentleman's authority for that statement ?

Mr. GUTHRIE. Merely newspaper reports.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No such report, to my belief, ever appeared in any newspaper, and if it did, it is absolutely false.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I accept, as I am bound to accept, the denial of the leader of the opposition. I do know, that in the public press from one end of the country to the other that statement was repeated and I have never heard it denied until to-day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No such statement to my knowledge was in any paper; certainly it was not published by the press of the country generally or I would have seen it. The statement which I did make in British Columbia was that if the Conservative party came into power they would grant a commission to ascertain whether or not the special conditions in British Columbia would justify consideration of the claims of that province.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I think I was fairly within the limits——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I feel that I fairly stated the case in the language which I have used. I shall go further and say that in the statement which the hon. member makes of what he did say in British Columbia he did precisely that which hon. members opposite say this government should not do. He held out special inducements to a single section of the country. I think, however, that there is this mitigating circumstance about that statement of the leader of the opposition that should be taken into consideration, that it was a rather safe statement for the leader of the opposition to make, for he is not able to deliver the goods. I do not think that such statements will have very much effect upon the people of British Columbia, who are a knowing and shrewd people, and, unless they possess the faith of Abraham and the patience of Job, nothing will come of it. I merely mention these things for the purpose of showing that if there is a real desire on the part of hon. members opposite—I know there is on this side of the House—that a better condition of affairs should exist in regard to the means and methods whereby elections are conducted in this country, the sooner we get together, and calmly discuss the question and take hold of the work, with the intention of improving those conditions, the better.

The hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) who preceded me, directed his remarks particularly to agricultural questions. I should gather from the general tone of his remarks that he himself is not a farmer, but an agriculturist. In the county of Wellington from which I come, and where we are presumed to know a good deal about agriculture, the people draw a sharp distinction between a farmer and an agriculturist. They say that a farmer is a man who works a farm and an agriculturist is a man who works the farmer.

Mr. BRODER. What about the present Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. GUTHRIE. I think the speech delivered last night on agricultural questions by the hon. member for Dundas places him fairly within the definition of an agriculturist as understood by the people of Wellington. I could not follow his argument, although I tried to do so. He undertook to prove by the Year-book, which he said was of no use to anybody, and by the recent census statistics of the Northwest Territories, that the agricultural population in Canada was actually decreasing. I have not endeavoured to verify the figures which he gave, but I accept them. On the other hand, he said that the administration of the Department of Agriculture of this government has been costly and has been a failure—that instead of helping agricultural interests, it has hurt them. On the other hand, the hon. gentleman must realize that if there are fewer farmers in Canada to-day, through some influence they produce more than double what the greater number of farmers did ten or twelve years ago when the hon. gentleman's friends were in power. There must be some reason for that. I submit that the real reason is to be found in the administration of the Department of Agriculture, administered as it is for the first time by an educated, practical and progressive farmer. I do not wonder that hon. members laugh at that statement, but it is a fact nevertheless. It was not so in their day. They thought the Department of Agriculture should be presided over by a practising physician and surgeon for some time, by a lawyer at another time, and for many years by a western Ontario brewer. Is it any wonder that hon. members do not like the statement that that policy was changed, and that a practical farmer was put at the head of that department, and has introduced into it modern business methods? Is it any wonder that if the number of agriculturists in the country has decreased, the products of the agriculturists have more than doubled in ten or twelve years. Lastly, the hon. member for Dundas must have imagined that the hand of the clock had passed the hour of midnight on the 31st of March, when he held up Russia as an example for this great Dominion of Canada, and that he must have reached the 1st of April.

Mr. BRODER. I think my hon. friend adjourned the debate just as the clock struck twelve.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I am well aware that it was only the 31st of March when he made the statement, but I am afraid that he thought he was making it on the 1st of April. He speaks of Russia as a modern progressive country, and he gives statistics to show the condition of the peasants there —darkest Russia, the land of serfdom, the land of ignorance, the land of degradation, the land of wretchedness and misery; yet the agriculturist member for Dundas says boldly in this House that the people of Canada should take Russia as their example, and must look out in the near future or Russia will be their chief competitor in the markets of the world. I have nothing more to say in regard to the speech of the hon. member for Dundas.

And now, Mr. Speaker, rising as I do somewhat late in the debate that has been going on for some time, and in which a number of very able and exhaustive speeches have been made on both sides of the House, I recognize that it is very difficult for any one who desires to make a connected and concise argument, to avoid some repetition of the cardinal facts and figures with regard to the general standing of the country or the financial policy of the administration. I shall endeavour, however, to make my remarks as brief as I can in regard to these matters of repetition. This is called the Budget debate, which I understand originally applied only to questions of fiscal policy and the financial administration of the government. Latterly, both here and in England, the greatest latitude has been given to members to discuss in this debate almost any subject. I merely wish to say that silence on the part of hon. members on this side of the House in regard to a great many of the matters which have been discussed by hon. gentlemen opposite, must not be construed as any recognition of the statements or arguments which they have made, or of the conclusions which they have been able to draw on any of the irrelevant questions which they have seen fit to discuss in the course of this debate. Our omission to notice such matters must not be construed into an admission of the correctness of their statements or their conclusions, which it would take up an enormous amount of the time of the House to deal with or to categorically deny. One cannot do so in the course of an ordinary speech, and I do not propose to attempt it on this occasion. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) in an able and exhaustive speech, made reference to a great many matters which I have neither the time nor the desire to discuss. I do not think this is the proper occasion on which to discuss such matters as the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, which the hon. member for North Toronto discussed at considerable length. That is a matter that has been thoroughly threshed out on more than one occasion in this House.

I do not think it necessary to touch upon the Yukon Railway or the administration in the Yukon to which the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) gave his attention. I shall say nothing upon the question of the Crows Nest Pass Railway, the Drummond County Railway or perhaps the National Transcontinental, nor shall I concern myself, as did the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) with the question which seemed to exercise him considerably, as to whether one Donald Fraser is in the employ of the Customs Department and whether he has or has not been prosecuted. Nor shall I attempt to discuss another question raised by that hon. gentleman regarding the Autonomy Bills and the lands in the new provinces or the question as to whether there was or was not a controverted Elections Act governing the new provinces when they were created. Nor shall I follow him into a discussion of the question of clover seed. These are matters which are all fit subjects for discussion if brought up in the proper time, but I submit they are not matters which ought to be dealt with on a debate on the budget. I have no doubt however that in proper time satisfactory answers will be given on this side of the House to all the charges contained in the various matters I have just enumerated.

There are many important matters however which have been brought up, and properly brought up, in this debate and to which I propose to devote the time at my disposal. In the first place, I propose dealing for a few minutes with some of the statements made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). I regret that he is not in his place, but I am not responsible for his absence and cannot be expected to avoid a discussion of the points brought up by him because he does not happen to be present. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) occupies to some extent a unique position in this House. He is greatly admired and much respected by a large section of the Conservative party occupying as he does a very important place in the counsels of that party, and being looked upon as a sort of financial oracle by his followers and the Conservative newspaper press. Every statement and utterance of his therefore, whether serious or trivial, is given the greatest prominence throughout the press and on the platform; and I have no doubt that when he delivered his exhaustive five and one half hours speech at the opening of this debate, he attained the purpose he had in view, namely, that of producing a sort of political guide book or manual of tactics for the Conservative party in the ensuing general election. I desire to comment particularly upon some of the statements he made. After using a good deal of diligence and time, I have been entirely unable to verify these statements in the public records, can only characterize them as artificial, inaccurate and misleading. This prophet and oracle of the Conservative party, the real if not the titular head of that party, is never tired of informing the House that the Liberal party gained office at a time when the country was in a very fair condition as regards trade and finance. His object of course is to detract from the achievements of the Liberal administration. Let me point out, in the first instance, that the statements made by the hon. gentleman regarding the condition of Canada in the few years prior to the advent of the present government are entirely erroneous and misleading. The statistics he gave are the result of special selection and arbitrary rule, under which the hon. gentleman selects the lean years when they suit his purpose and the fat years when it suits him better to quote them. Talking of the conditions prior to 1896, he said on page 5332 of 'Hansard':

> Take some comparative statistics. The fall from 1890 to 1894 in the exports of Great Britain amounted to £47,000,000; in France, £19,000,000; in Germany, £8,000,000; in the United States, $140,000,000; in Australia, £19,000,000. The fall in the imports of Great Britain in that time amounted to £12,000,000; in France, £13,000,000; in Germany, £10,000,000; in the United States, $170,000,000, and in Australia, £19,000,000. But, Sir, in that period when trade was falling both in imports and exports in all these great countries of the world Canada came through that period in what way?

This is particularly what I wish to draw attention to:

> She came through with an import trade just about stationary and with an increase of exports in that period of $17,000,000. Her savings increased in that period by $46,000,000; the mileage of her railways increased 2,700 miles; there was a largely increased business in passengers of 1,100,000; in freight of 750,000 tons; there was an increased shipping return in and out (excluding coasting) of 640,000 tons; an increased coasting trade of 2,700,000 tons. Industries were well sustained; the imports of raw material in their principal parts were very nearly doubled in that time. The exports of manufactured goods increased in that time 35 per cent; the exports of agricultural products were $22,000,000 in 1890 and $36,000,000 in 1895, an increase of 65 per cent, and in agricultural and animal products there was an increase in the exports in that time of 35 per cent.

Why did the hon. gentleman select for comparison the years 1890 to 1894? His first allegation is that during that period the imports of this country remained practically stationary, and the figures he gave are substantially correct. But if the imports to-day remained anything like stationary, one would not say that they were stationary but that trade was stagnant or that retrogression had actually set in. But on the other side of the page, he said that our export trade increased during that period by $17,000,000, showing an annual increase in four years of $4,500,000. Why did he stop at 1904? Because in 1895 the imports did not remain stationary but fell down some $13,000,000 and the exports did not show an increase but fell off $3,000,000. One may well wonder why so experienced a parliamentarian, so capable of critic and so great a leader, should lay before the House such artificial, specially selected figures in proof of a statement which he knew, when he gave it, could only be misleading.

Take his next allegation :

Her savings increased in that period by $46,000,000.

That is correct approximately. The amount of the deposits in the chartered banks did increase in those four years approximately $46,000,000, which would be an average annual increase of $11,500,000. Well, I heard the hon. member for North Toronto make that statement in those days and it then sounded like a pretty substantial increase in the deposits of the people ; but judged in the light of modern experience, if the hon. gentleman should to-day give an increase of $46,000,000 in four years in these deposits as an evidence of the prosperity of the people hon. members on both sides would be inclined to laugh at him.

Let me give the House a statement of the increase during the Liberal administration give an increase of $46,000,000 in four years in deposits from 1890 to 1894. In 1896 the deposits in the chartered banks of this country were, in round numbers, $183,000,000. The following figures show how those deposits increased during the first five years of Liberal administration.

Deposits by the people in the chartered banks since 1896.

| Year. | Deposits. | Increase. |
|---|---|---|
| 1896.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $183,769,992 | $17,371,696 |
| 1897.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 201,141,688 | 70,000,000 |
| 1898.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 227,063,343 | 25,921,655 |
| 1899.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 258,402,340 | 31,338,997 |
| 1900.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 277,256,716 | 18,854,376 |
| 1901.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 315,775,429 | 38,518,713 |
| Average from 1896 to 1901.. | | $25,401,085 |

This is the average increase for each year during this first five-year period. Now, take the next period of five years of Liberal rule:

| Year. | Deposits. | Increase. |
|---|---|---|
| 1902.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $344,949,901 | $29,174,029 |
| 1903.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 378,937,458 | 33,987,557 |
| 1904.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 423,574,030 | 44,930,572 |
| 1905.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 468,571,648 | 44,697,618 |
| 1906.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 536,769,519 | 68,197,931 |
| Average from 1902-1907.. .. | | $44,190,143 |
| 1907.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 589,456,889 | 52,690,370 |

Mr. GUTHRIE.

Thus we see, in the second period of Liberal rule, there has been an increase of over $44,000,000 each year as against the $46,000,000 in four years, which was deliberately announced in this House by so great an authority as the member for North Toronto as an evidence of the great prosperity which Canada enjoyed for some years prior to the advent of the present administration.

I turn now to the next statement. That statement was that the railways of Canada had been increased by 2,700 miles. That statement is approximately correct. The next statement was that there was a largely increased business in passengers of 1,100,000. These figures are substantially correct, as showing the increase in the passengers in four years. But that would scarcely account for the number of people who took the train and left Canada during that period. The next statement is, I think, the most appalling one of all, to be formally and deliberately made in this House and spread abroad throughout this country—that there was an increase in freight of 750,000 tons. I was thunderstruck when I heard that statement and afterwards looked at 'Hansard' to see if I correctly understood the hon. member. I had understood hitherto that his statistical statements might well be taken without particular inquiry. But, on this occasion, I deliberately made some inquiry about it. I find in the report of railway statistics up to June 30, 1907, in the tables on page 13 and page 15, the figures printed there in plain, bold, black type show that from the year 1890 to the year 1894 there was not an increase of 750,000 tons as the hon. gentleman said, but an absolute decrease of 66,000 tons in the railway tonnage of this country. I say I was amazed at the hon. gentleman's statement. I could not understand it, and I do not understand it yet. I looked at the schedules given to the House by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) in the budget speech, and find that the figures I give are substantially correct and the figures given by the hon. member (Mr. Foster) are entirely misleading and erroneous—I cannot say more concerning them within the rules of this House.

Now, I pass to the next statement, which is to the effect that there was an increase in the shipping. These figures either as to coasting or as to ocean shipping I have not inquired into, but I think they are substantially correct. The hon. gentleman goes on:

Industries were well sustained; the imports of raw material in their principal parts were nearly doubled in that time. The exports of manufactured goods increased in that time 35 per cent.

That, I submit, is a wholly misleading and unfair statement. When an hon. member sets out to give figures, and then deliberately departs from that system and gives percentages without the figures, he does so only for the purpose of misleading and because the figures are not satisfactory to him. In this case the figures are not satisfactory to the hon. gentleman. What meaning is conveyed by the statement that there is an increase of 35 per cent in exports? If there were an export of $100 one year and of $135 next year, there would be an increase of 35 per cent. I remember an instance in my own city of Guelph. I asked the American consul there what poultry trade there was between the port of Guelph and the United States. He gave me the answer: 1 pair of game chickens, value $5. A year or two after I asked if the poultry trade had increased. He said: 'Yes, I have reported to my government an increase of 120 per cent—2 pairs of game chickens, price, $11.' So, a statement giving only percentages may mean something or nothing. It is given here as a percentage because the figures would not warrant giving it in any other way. But what are the figures? I take the figures from the trade and navigation returns. These returns show that the export of manufactured goods in 1890 amounted to $6,388,064, and, four years later, in 1894, they amounted to $8,336,312—an increase in four years of $1,948,248—not 35 per cent, but 30 per cent, but in four years, less than $2,000,000, or less than $500,000 a year during those four years. And these same exports of manufactures to-day, after ten years of Liberal administration, have reached the splendid total of $28,000,000.

Now, I come to another of these statements which I cannot fathom, the difference between us is so great. In taking the unrevised 'Hansard' I feel somewhat insecure, but I consulted the revised 'Hansard' and I find no difference. I would not like to charge the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) with making a false statement—I could not charge him with doing so—but I seek for my own information to know what the difficulty is. He said:

——the exports of agricultural products were $22,000,000 in 1890 and $36,000,000 in 1895, an increase of 65 per cent.

In the first place, why does not he stick to his comparison of 1890 and 1894? Why did he start off with a four-year period to avoid the lean year 1895, and, when it comes to agricultural products, make his comparision not with 1894 but with 1895? Is that fair and honest dealing with the House? Is it honest to make such statements for the purpose of having them go to the press of the country and furnish the hon. gentleman's followers with campaign arguments which are unfounded? I do not know where he got his figures, I am giving my figures as the government got them up.

Mr. SPROULE. If 1895 was a lean year, that would tell worse against them.

Mr. GUTHRIE. That is a point I cannot fathom. I took my facts from the Trade and Navigation Reports for those years, and these Trade and Navigation Reports were prepared under the Conservative administration of that day. For greater certainty I will give the exact references. For the year 1890 the exports of agricultural products were $17,245,575; that will be found in the Trade and Navigation Report for 1890, at page 784. For the year 1895 the total exports of agricultural products were $18,992,503; that will be found in the Trade and Navigation Report for 1895, at page 520. The figures show an increase in these five years of $1,746,928, and the hon. member for North Toronto, in his speech, shows an increase of $14,000,000. It may be that he has taken something else into his calculation, perhaps the products of the forest, the products of the mines, or the products of the fisheries. He may have had some way of calculating that I am not aware of; but I know his figures are $13,000,000 or $14,000,000 out of the figures which the Department of Trade and Commerce in his own administration, gave to the people of this country, and which I submit are correct. Then his next statement is equally misleading; you cannot place your hand on it, you cannot verify it. He says in the next place,

In agricultural and animal products there was an increase in exports at that time of 35 per cent.

No one knows better than the hon. member that there is a clear separation, in all the reports and statistics of this House, between agricultural products and animals and their products; and the hon. member for North Toronto cannot crawl out of the difficulty by saying that he has mixed animal products and agricultural products together. He is too old a hand at statistics to do anything of the kind. The last point I want to make with regard to his statement is this: He has endeavoured to bolster up his case by an authority on political economy which he quotes with great approval; he quotes from the writings of the Hon. David A. Wells, late of Connecticut and New York, and now deceased. He says that Mr. Wells is probably one of the greatest writers on economic subjects, and he quotes a paragraph from a published article of Mr. Wells in the 'Forum' of 1904, to the effect that in the Dominion of Canada there were better conditions than existed for some years prior to 1894 in the United States. Mr. Wells so stated in his article in the 'Forum,' and the reason he gives is that we had no disturbing money question on this side of the line. Mr. Wells' opinion was that the question of bi-metallism was then and for some years prior had been a disturbing question in the United States, which was aggrevated by the agitation for the unlimited free coinage of silver; and that these causes had created distrust among the financial institutions in the east, and led to a tightness of money.

That, he alleges, was the real cause of the financial disturbance in the United States. But he says that in Canada, on the other side of the line, we were not bothered with these questions. Now, while Mr. Wells was a very high authority upon economic questions, I would like to say to the hon. member for North Toronto, if he were in the House, that it might be well for him to read some of Mr. Wells' theories, arguments and conclusions in regard to what is known as the balance of trade between imports and exports in regard to the question of shipping, of mercantile marine, and of high protection. If the hon. member is willing to quote with approval Mr. Wells' opinion in regard to financial questions in Canada and the United States in 1894, I trust he will quote with the same approval those articles to which I refer in the other writings of Mr. Wells. I had the pleasure on one occasion of meeting Mr. Wells, on another, of hearing him speak; and I think I have read pretty much all that he has ever written on these subjects, at all events a great many of his works, to some of which I intend to allude. Now if we are to find a starting point for the purpose of making comparisons, or for the purpose of ascertaining whether this government has or has not well and ably administered the affairs of this country in the interests of the people, we must strike upon some ground which is not controverted, and the only ground that we can select is the public records and documents of this country, which settle these facts for all time. I am willing to go with the member for North Toronto at any time and take those records as the starting point for an argument upon that subject. Of course he may speak of surrounding conditions, he may speak of special circumstances but these are matters we cannot establish by statistics. Now if my recollection of the years preceding the advent of the Liberal administration in 1896, if my recollection of that gloomy, dismal and distressful period, is to be put side by side with the somewhat glowing picture which the hon. member for North Toronto always sees fit to draw of that same period, and if this House is to decide between my recollection and his of that period, then I must remind the House that his testimony is in the nature of the testimony of an accessory and an accomplice, for he himself was one of the chief actors in that melancholy drama, almost a tragedy, which was enacted throughout Canada. But there is a common ground upon which we may start, and I defy the hon. member for North Toronto or any other hon. member, to controvert the figures which I give, and the references which I make in regard to those figures.

Now I state at the outset that the few years, the three, four or five years, as you like to choose, preceding the change of government in 1896, were years of falling revenue and of rising expenditure; page 20 of the Public Accounts will demonstrate the proof of that statement. I state, secondly, that the years preceding the change of government in 1896 were years of annual deficits; page 21 of Public Accounts will demonstrate the proof of that statement. I state in the third place that during those years which immediately preceded the change of government, the government of this country received annually in revenue a sum equal to $7.20 per capita for every man, woman and child in the country, and expended money at the rate of $7.26 per head upon the estimated population which that government made of 5,086,061 souls. In the fourth place, I say that those were years of heavy annual increases to the public debt; page 18 of the Public Accounts will prove that fact. In the next place, I say that those were years of absolute trade stagnation. We had descended into a state of chronic trade stagnation, and but for the change of government we might have suffered in this country from an attack of acute retrogression instead of stagnation. To verify the truth of that statement turn to page 1414 of the December, 1907, Trade and Commerce Report. I say those years were years of heavy business failures, and for larger amounts than in previous years; they were years of higher taxation than the taxation we now have. These are facts which I propose to establish, if necessary, by exact references to the various blue-books and reports of the House.

Let me at the outset, and as quickly as possible run over the financial condition of the country as we had it in the past and as we have it now. I have prepared these figures and I am willing to stand by them, and when I speak in round numbers I do not pretend to speak in exact figures, but where I do give exact figures I mean these to be exact in every respect. Here are the figures as I have tabulated them:

* Surplus.

Now, we find that during the present year the government has made a capital expenditure of $17,750,000 upon the National Transcontinental railway. This is a great work which has been adopted and approved by the people of Canada in a general election. It is an extraordinary expenditure of the government it is a capital expenditure, and if any expenditure can be considered extraordinary in any sense of the word this expenditure surely is. Had we not had to expend that $17,750,000 this year the actual record up to the present time of the Liberal government with regard to the finances of this country would have shown a net decrease in the public debt of Canada of $5,750,000 instead of an increase of $12,000,000.

I want to say a word, and I shall make only a brief reference to it, as to what we know as capital expenditure. There is a misapprehension in this country and I have many times been spoken to about it, and even by members of this House I have been asked questions as to the manner of book-keeping pursued by this government and by former governments of Canada. I do not desire nor shall I attempt to educate the members of this House as to how government book-keeping is done or should be done but I make this statement: That the system so far as the principle goes, is the same system precisely as is adopted by any ordinary citizen, or any private individual, or business man. It is the system adopted by every private corporation, by every municipal corporation, by every province and it has been the system in force here since confederation at all events. The system is simply this: That all the revenue in the nature of annual revenue which comes into the treasury of this country is put to an account which is called Consolidated Fund Revenue Account. The recurring annual expenditure of the country is put to another account called Consolidated Fund Expenditure Account. One side of the ledger is revenue and the other expenditure. Then in addition to this we have the great expenditures on public works which are not annual expenditures. If the government desire to build a railway they do not tax the people for the total cost of that railway in a single year. If we have to build the Georgian bay canal the government would not ask the people of this country to pay up $100,000,000 in any single year. These are works which do not recur but which are put to capital account as permanent improvements to the country; the money is borrowed in the money markets of the world and the interest upon the borrowed sum is an annual expenditure of the country. Now when the expenditure is not as great in any one year as the revenue, we have a surplus, and when in any one year the expenditure is greater than the revenue we have a deficit. And when the Liberals say in the newspapers and on the platform that they have spent $127,000,000 in capital expenditure and they only added $17,000,000 to the debt of the country in the last ten or eleven years some people ask, how could you have done that? It is done in this way: Take the whole period during which the Liberal administration has been in power and you will find that they have had surpluses aggregating from $110,000,000 to $112,000,000. All that money has been applied in permanent improvements in this country in expenditure on capital account, and $17,000,000 has had to be borrowed making the total capital expenditure by the Liberals $127,000,000. Apart from the $17,000,000, all the rest has been saved by a judicious expenditure on a bountiful revenue, the difference being the surplus which has given us the money to create many of these great public works. Now, I know that the government has been criticised because it treats the bounties which we pay on iron and steel and binder twine as capital expenditure, whereas the late Conservative government treated these bounties as annual expenditure. A good deal is to be said in favour of each system and much is to be said against each, but rather than take up the time of the House in arguing for one system or for the other, I think it is better to give the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and his friends the benefit of their contention and simply to say: Take all the bounties which we have paid since 1896, amounting as the hon. member (Mr. Foster) says to between $10,000,000 and $12,000,000, take them all from the surpluses, and instead of having a surplus of $110,000,000 or $112,000,000 we will have a net surplus of about $100,000,000 for the ten or eleven years the Liberal government has been in power. Whichever way you look on it the showing of the present government on the financial side of the page has been a magnificent showing. And nothing proves the sterling quality of that administration so well as when it is put in comparison with the experience of this country under preceding Conservative administrations. The Conservatives spent largely in regard to capital account as well as the Liberals, but there is this difference between the two —during the last eleven years of Conservative rule in this country they spent $80,000,000 in permanent works, but where did they get the money? Why, they went to the money market in London and borrowed on the bonds of Canada $62,000,000 and the other $18,000,000 they secured from their annual surplus. Now, during the past eleven years the Liberal government has spent $127,000,000 on permanent works and up until the present year it only had to go to England to borrow $5,000,000. Compare the records of the two governments in that respect.

Then, let me point as another comparison to the question of the net debt of the country. A good deal turns on the question of the net debt of the country and a good deal turns on just what particular way you view that net debt. It is argued by many people that instead of spending $127,000,000 in permanent works and improvements in this country, that money should have been paid in reduction of the debt. Well, that is one way of looking at it. If you had applied that $127,000,000 which you spent in public works towards reducing your debt your debt would have been just that much less than you will find it to-day, but you would not have had the public improvements and the permanent works which this government has erected in Canada. You cannot both have your cake and eat it. How has the debt increased? What has been the record of the two parties in regard to the public debt?

Between 1878 and 1896, while the country was governed by the Conservative party, the net debt of Canada increased by $118,000,000, an annual increase of $6,500,000.

From 1897 to 1907, during ten years of Liberal government, the net debt of Canada increased by $5,000,000 or an annual increase of $500,000. In the whole eleven years of Liberal administration the total increase has been $17,000,000 and the annual increase $1,545,000, less than $1,500,000. That is the record of the two parties in that respect. The Conservatives had an annual increase in the public debt of $6,500,000 while the Liberal government have had an annual increase in the public debt including the heavy expenditure on the National Transcontinental Railway of less than $1,500,000.

One point always strikes me as peculiar when the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) discusses the budget. He has never failed, so long as I have been in the House with him—and I have been here for some time when he was not here for reasons best known to him and to the electors of New Brunswick and North Ontario—he has never failed in speaking on the Budget to refer with great particularity and great anxiety and concern, to the maturing obligations of Canada. I notice that on the present occasion he not only questioned the Finance Minister in the course of the Budget speech on that particular point, but in his own speech he dealt to a considerable extent with the question of our maturing obligations, and demonstrated quite conclusively that between now and 1911 this country will be called upon to pay in round numbers $100,000,000 of borrowed money. When you pause to think that the hon. member for North Toronto is the man who, as Finance Minister of Canada, borrowed every dollar of that money and spent it, you must wonder at the peculiar amount of concern and anxiety he expresses as to how another is to pay his debts. This is not the first occasion on which Conservative obligations have been met; during the past ten years the Minister of Finance has met them on many occasion, some to pay, others to arrange, others to extend, others to convert, and I think the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster? may let his head rest on his pillow quite calmly at night in the belief that the Finance Minister who has piloted us safely through the last ten years will successfully care for that $100,000,000 of Conservative debt maturing during the next few years.

I beg to call attention to certain trade figures, as they are to be found in the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce in regard to the rate of taxation. On all goods entering Canada for home consumption, the average rate of duty in 1896 was 18·28 per cent and in 1907, 15·73 per cent, a reduction of 2·55 per cent, or in other words a reduction of $2.55 upon every $100 worth of goods entered for home consumption in this country.

On dutiable imports, the average rate in 1896 was 29·97 and in 1907, 26·33, a reduction of 3·64 per cent, or $3.64 reduction upon every $100 worth of goods imported.

On the total imports in 1896 the average rate was 19·12, and in 1907 it was 16·03 per cent, a reduction of 3·09 or $3.09 on every $100 worth of goods that entered into Canada in those years.

In the face of these figures it is a far-fetched argument to declare that this government has increased the rate of taxation. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) referred to a phrase, used I think by Sir Richard Cartwright, in speaking of the Conservative taxation, that the people of the country had been bled white with taxation, and he said that if there was occasion for the use of that expression in the Conservative days, there was much more occasion for it to-day. Do the facts bear him out? The rate of taxation is actually lower by from $2.50 to $3 on every $100 worth of goods imported into Canada in the present year of grace as compared with 1896.

Any one will realize why we have more revenue; it is because the people are in a position to buy more goods, they want more goods, they have more money with which to buy them, and as they buy them they pay more taxes into the revenue. It is idle for any one to attempt to argue to-day that the Liberal party has, in the slightest degree, increased the rate of taxation in Canada.

I intended discussing the statements or misstatements that have been made in regard to the cost of the construction of the National Transcontinental Railway, but I waive that as it has been so fully dealt with by hon. gentlemen who have preceded me. There is, however, one point on which I wish to speak, that is that portion of the argument of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) which I think is entitled to be called an argument, a very fair and candid expression of his own opinion upon the somewhat involved and difficult problem which we all understand by the expression

'balance of trade.' I listened with great interest to what he had to say in that regard while I am unable to come to his conclusion, if he expressed any—and I do not think he did express a definite conclusion—still I do think, and I say it with all respect to his great ability and experience, that from his point of view, he argued the question very carefully and fairly. The hon. member starts out with the proposition that we are face to face in Canada with this problem, that we are importing annually $104,000,000 worth of goods more than we export. He says that this is not a good trade condition for any country to experience, and that the $104,000,000 of difference has to be met by this country in gold when the balance is struck. That is the theory of a modern school of high protectionists and it has been argued very well by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster); but unfortunately that theory has not shown to any advantage in any country in the world, so far as I am aware, unless it be under special circumstances and conditions in the United States. Taking his figures of $104,000,000 of excess of imports over exports, he must deduct from that such items as settlers' effects. I think he will agree with me in that. This year they amounted to $9,340,000, last pear to $5,500,000. Nine million dollars worth of settlers' effects come into this country and no money goes out in return. We are that much richer so that instead of increasing our exports by $9,000,000 to offset this we should double the $9,000,000 in arriving at the balance of trade and make it $18,000,000. We spend nothing for that $9,000,000, the wealth of the country is increased by that amount. In order to get any fair idea of how our trade is made up and how the balance should be struck, it would, I think, be necessary to go through practically every item in the imports of this country.

A serious factor in this question is raw material, how is that to be treated? We import, in round numbers, between $40,000,000 and $50,000,000 a year of raw material, or what is to the manufacturer raw material, that is material which is actually raw, or a partially finished product used in the factories of Canada as raw material. The heavier items are made up of such articles as cotton, sugar, bituminous coal, linseed, flax, partially manufactured iron and steel and metal ores. Then, we must also give special consideration to those goods which are not produced here, and which will never be produced here. The item of foreign fruits runs into heavy figures; anthracite coal runs up to nine or ten millions; Indian corn runs up to about five millions and three-quarters. I am well within the mark in saying that from fifteen to twenty-five millions of the imports of the country are in goods which we do not, cannot and never will produce. Another observation which I have to make, and it is a very important one, is that if you take a statement of the total imports and exports of Canada for the last twenty years, divided into five-year periods, you will find that conditions, as to industry, trade and progress in every respect, have been better in those periods in which the imports have been largely in excess of the exports. On that point I give the following statement, which I have prepared with considerable care :

| From | Exports. | Imports. | To Balance. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1887 to 1891.. | 464,074,423 | 580,837,676 | 116,763,253 |

I think I am within the mark when I say that the most progressive period in the history of this country under Conservative administration was in the five years from 1887 to 1891, when the imports exceeded the exports by $116,000,000, and the worst period was in the next five years, when the exports and imports were almost equalized, and that the best period, the most progressive and richest, under the Liberal administration has been the last period, when the imports have exceeded the exports by $162,000,000. There is another way of looking at the facts. If you take the total exports of Canada from the year of confederation down to the close of the year 1907, that is, during a forty-year period, you will find that they were $4,257,000,000 in goods and $120,000,000 in gold coin and bullion. During the same period we imported into Canada a total of $5,000,000,000 worth of goods and $150,000,000 in gold coin and bullion. During that period, while our imports exceeded our exports by the enormous total of $473,000,000, we received from other countries $150,000,000 in gold coin and bullion as against $120,000,000 in gold coin and bullion that we sent out. These figures, I am free to say, involve the question very much, and make it one of great difficulty. I agree with the statement made by the hon. member for North Toronto that we cannot find any rule in regard to the question of the balance of trade that is applicable to all countries. It is all very well for the hon. member for Wentworth to affirm that the old doctrine of the balance of trade, as expounded in England forty or fifty years ago, is only to be found in musty books and is entirely superseded now, but when you come to study the question, you will find that it is surrounded with some of the greatest economical problems in regard to commerce among the nations of the world.

I have looked into the figures to see how the matter stands with respect to other nations, and I would like briefly to give the result. Before doing so, I want to say in regard to the statement made by the hon. member for Wentworth that, after searching with due diligence, as I assume he did, and after taking the same record, as I have no doubt we both did in regard to the trade of Japan, Mexico and the Argentine Republic, I find in regard to Japan that the figures do not bear out his contention. Japan show a great excess of imports over exports, and still the hon. member for Wentworth pointed to Japan as a modern, up to date, progressive and successful nation. But in regard to the Argentine Republic, in which he said the conditions compared very well with the conditions in this country, the exports considerably exceed the imports, and any one who knows anything about the Argentine Republic knows the reason why. I have a good many friend there, and I have discussed the question with a great many people who were born and bred and live there. For many years a number of the better class of Argentine people came to the agricultural college at Guelph for their education, as many as thirty or forty being there at a time.

From my conversations with people acquainted with that country and articles I have read, I know something of the conditions existing in the Argentine Republic. Its people are a people of very simple habits and tastes, who live very simple and inexpensive lives. They do not import or manufacture very much but live largely upon their own agricultural products. They have their own weaving looms and wear their own homespuns. Their great industry is cattle and sheepgrazing and the raising of wheat so that when we find that their exports of cattle and sheep and wheat comprise pretty nearly all their exports ,we are not surprised. Their imports are comparatively small, and the balance shows a large preponderance of exports. That is not therefore, a fair comparison, the conditions there being so very different from what they are here. But take other countries. The only other country of any account which shows a balance of exports over imports is the United States, which has an annual balance of exports over imports of $522,000,000. Take Belgium, Denmark, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Great Britain and France. Every one of these countries shows a heavier import than export trade, Great Britain especially showing a tremendous balance in favour of imports. True in Russia the figures are the other way, but I do not like to give Russia as an example, especially in view of what I said regarding her in the beginning of my remarks. Russia is one of the most impoverished countries in the world. She is a tremendous debtor in every money market of the world to-day yet her export trade considerably exceeds her imports. But I refuse to take Russia as an example regarding the question of balance of trade, as I have refused to take her as an example in the matter of agriculture. But let me give the figures as we find them in other countries:

| — | | Imports. | Exports. |
|---|---|---|---|
| United States | 1906 | $1,226,562,446 | $1,743,864,500 |
| Belgium | 1905 | Francs 4,426,400,000 | Francs 3,849,700,000 |
| Denmark | 1905 | Kroner 622,526,000 | Kroner 533,543,000 |

In France the conditions are peculiar. Up to 1906 her imports exceeded exports very largely but for the year 1906 the figures are as follows. With regard to goods of French origin and imports for home consumption—the unit being a million francs—the imports were 5·229·4 and the exports 5·043·6. They are almost equal. General commerce, 6·061·5 imports, and 6·302·3 exports.

| — | | Of French origin and imports for home consumption. | |
|---|---|---|---|
| France—Home consunption | 1906 | (Million fr.) 5,229·4 | 5,043·6 |
| France—General commerce | 1906 | 6,061·5 | 6,302·3 |
| Germany | 1905 | (1,000 Mks.) 7,436,263 | 3,841,817 |
| Italy | 1905 | Lire 2,078,380 | 1,707,368,000 |
| Netherlands., | 1905 | 2,584,000,00012 Gulders to £1 | 1,994,000,000 |
| Norway | 1905 | Kroners 312,236,300 | 217,960,100 |
| Switzerland | 1905 | Francs 1,458,321,700 | 1,007,822,756 |
| Sweden | 1905 | Kroners 582,084,457 | 450,211,733 |

In Austria the figures are a little the other way. They are given in units of one million florins. Imports 1905, 1,073.1; exports 1,121.9. Lastly Great Britain, 1906, total imports £607,987,893 sterling; exports £460,836,304 sterling, showing a heavy balance of imports over exports.

How does the system work out? The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) says that every three, six, nine or twelve months, the balance of trade has to be paid in coin. Well, that is not the conclusion at which political economists of some repute have arrived. They argue that the system is a continual one, that the balances are self adjusted, and that where the exports exceed the imports there must have been some anterior obligation. The balance, they say, is self adjusting, and the payment is not made in coin or bullion at all because the system is a continuous one. Take the figures given by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) regarding conditions in Canada. The hon. gentleman quoted from the work of Mr. David A. Wells. Let me draw his attention to the opinion of that writer on the subject I am discussing. On page 13 of his work entitled 'Ships and Bounties,' the first portion of which deals with the decay of the American mercantile marine, he makes the following statement regarding the United States:

But in thus shutting out the products of other nations, we have at the same time necessarily shut ourselves in. For all commerce —foreign and domestic—is simply the exchange of products; so that he who won't buy can't sell, and he who won't sell can't buy.

The attempts to invalidate these conclusions seem almost puerile; but, nevertheless, as they continue to be made by respectable journals, it is expedient to notice them. It is asserted, for example, that it is not necessary to import in order to export. But that is equivalent to saying that a nation can or will go on selling to other nations without receiving pay for what it sells, which ignores the economic axiom, that in the long run the exports and imports of every nation must pay for each other, or the trade will cease—a fact that would practically appear in every national trade statement, but for the circumstance that imports, as in the case of England, are often made for the purpose of paying interest on foreign investments which represent long antecedent exports; or obligations of the indebtedness (in the shape of bonds) are exported in the place of merchandise to pay for imports, as is often the case with the United States.

Again at page 19 of the same work, the learned writer says:

The evidence is thus complete, that so long as we maintain a commercial policy that seeks to restrict or prevent commerce with other nations, so long ships will not come back to us; for opportunity for their employment would be limited, even if they were placed as free gifts at our wharfs.

My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) rather sneered at the statement made on this side early in the session that by means of barter and exchange, the wealth of the country was increased. He said you take your ship from London to France and from France to Egypt and so around the world, the old theory is exploded of an increase in the value of the goods. Well, I commend to my hon. friend the doctrine and argument laid down by the authority he himself has quoted and to which I have just referred, and he will come to the same conclusion, namely, that it is barter and exchange which really results in increasing the wealth of any nation.

Now, as to the export of scenery. That question is dealt with by economic writers; it has some effect, no doubt, on the balance of trade. The statement made by the hon. member for North Toronto is that, while the imports to Switzerland exceed the exports, yet Switzerland is a most prosperous country, but, in order to account for this prosperity of Switzerland, the hon. gentleman says that they export scenery among the many tourists from the United States who spend millions of dollars there, thus adjusting the balance. It is all very well to speak of spending millions, but I am satisfied that I am within the mark when I state that the tourist trade from the United States to Canada exceed in the ratio of 5 to 1 the tourist trade of Switzerland. Take the conditions in Canada as we know them to be. Look at the activity of our railways and shipping lines and summer hotels during the tourist season, not in one part of the country alone, but from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The whole shore of Nova Scotia is crowded; Prince Edward Island is crowded; St. John, N.B.,—I have been there in summer when you could not get into the hotels on account of the number of tourists; the shore of the St. Lawrence attracts many; we know how it is in the northland of Ontario and in the Thousand Islands; and out in the west and British Columbia the same is true. I believe I am well within the mark in saying that $5 is spent by American tourists in Canada for every $1 spent by American tourists in Switzerland. If the export of scenery is to be taken into account in the case of Switzerland, the same must be done in our case as well. My conclusion, the only conclusion I can come to, after examining the case as carefully as I can, is that we are safe in going on at the present ratio. No harm has come to us in years when there has been a heavy excess of imports. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) laughs at my statement. If he can show me, from the figures of this country or any other country save the United States, that the contrary is the fact, I shall be prepared to take his statement.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. May I ask the hon. member (Mr. Guthrie) a question? Has he ever found a year since confederation equal to the past year for excess of imports over exports ?

Mr. GUTHRIE. And I do not think our export trade has ever been so good as in the past year.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Our exports have fallen and our imports have increased by $100,000,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE. But what I submit is that there is a self-adjusting balance in all these cases, and, while it may fluctuate, it will settle itself and trade will balance trade. That is the experience of every country in the world, the figures of which I have given. The most pointed remark I can make is that when there has been the greatest balance of trade—adverse balance they call it—we have ever had in Canada, no matter what government is in power, we have enjoyed the greatest prosperity, and when the figures are most nearly equalized, we have found ourselves in the greatest financial adversity we have ever known.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Will the hon. gentleman say this is the most prosperous year we have ever known ?

Mr. GUTHRIE. Does the hon. member refer to last year?

Mr. COCKSHUTT. What about the stringency?

Mr. GUTHRIE. The stringency—I had intended to say something about that and I will deal with it now. I am willing to admit that there has been a stringency within the past few months in Canada. But, in addressing the Canadian Manufacturers' Association within the past few months, the brother of the hon. member for Brantford, who is president of the association, stated at the annual meeting that, notwithstanding the stringency, there was greater prosperity in the industries of Canada than ever before. But that is not the point. There are reasons and very good reasons why we should suffer from stringency. The stringency has been caused, if we may believe so high an authority as Mr. Clouston, of the Bank of Montreal by too much prosperity. The argument is that, enjoying too much prosperity, the people have become reckless in regard to money. There has been over speculation, there has been over production. But that which has been the real cause of stringency in this country is beyond the power of any government to prevent, and it is that Providence has not favoured Canada with its average annual yield from the great plains in the west and the province of Ontario. You may talk of over-speculation and financial stringency and of artificial causes of the stringency at the present time ; but, getting down to the root of the question, getting down to the bottom of the matter, you will find that the real cause of the depression, if depression we have in Canada to-day, is that we are so many millions of dollars short in the crop of this country ; and, until we have a revival, until Providence is more kind to the country, as I hope he will be this year, I do not look for any great revival in trade. Talk as we like of prosperity, Canada's great natural source of wealth is agriculture. We are all glad to see the strides that manufacturing has been making ; we are glad to know that the manufacturers have added greatly to the wealth of the country and the value of their own products during the last few years, but we know that they can prosper only so long as the great wheat fields of Canada yield their grain and so long as other agricultural pursuits are well rewarded.

I do not know that it is necessary to say anything more about the stringency. But I would point out that only one member of this House on the opposition side, so far as I know, continually harps upon the question of the unemployed and their condition, and that is the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt). I have heard that hon. member say that the Toronto 'Globe' has done the same thing and that that newspaper has printed in large letters the condition of the poor people of Shacktown. There is this distinction between the statements of my hon. friend (Mr. Cockshutt) and the statements of the Toronto 'Globe,' that the statements of the Toronto 'Globe,' were made in the cause of charity, and were made successfully in that cause, and the hon. member's statements are made solely, only and directly for political cause and to gain a political advantage.

But I will give one or two more comparisons which I have and then will allow some one else to continue the debate. Take the case of our railways, which was mentioned by the hon. member for North Toronto. Here are some figures concerning them :

Railways.

| | 1896. | 1907. | Increase. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Miles in operation .. | 16,270 | 22,452 | 6,182 |
| Tonnage .. .. | 24,266,000 | 63,866,000 | 39,600,000 |
| Earnings.. .. | $50,545,000 | $146,738,000 | $96,193,000 |

There is another statement, which, I think, perhaps, better illustrates the condition of the country than any other that one can give and that is the statement of the banks. I have here some figures showing the progress made by our banks since 1891 :

Banks—Capital invested.

|---|---|
| 1881.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $59,000,000 |
| 1891.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 60,000,000 |
| 1907.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 96,362,000 |

Deposits.

| | 1896. | 1907. |
|---|---|---|
| Chartered banks .. .. | $183,769,000 | $589,459,000 |
| Govt. Savings banks.. | 61,259,000 | 90,264,000 |
| Total. .. .. .. .. .. | 245,028,000 | 679,723,000 |

Now, what are the increases? There has been in that period an increase in the deposits of the people in the chartered banks and the savings banks of $434,000,000. What is the average deposit per capita? In 1896 the average per head for every man, woman and child was $48.80, and for a family of five, $244. In 1907 the average deposit for every man, woman and child was $110.40, and for a family of five, $551. Look at the question from another point of view, and see what you could do with that money. You could pay the entire debt of Canada at the present moment and leave for every man, woman and child in the banks $67.56 per head on deposit. If you had attempted to do that in 1896 you would have wiped out every dollar of deposits in the chartered and savings banks of Canada and still have a net debt of $13,000,000. There has been tremendous progress also in the industrial progress of Canada. The figures given by the interim census cannot be too much emphasized. They show that in the year 1906 the number of factories in Canada was 15,796; the number of employees, 392,000; capital invested, $846,000,000; wages paid, $165,000,000; value of product, $718,000,000. In the year 1900—to show the progress that has been made—the average wages paid to employees was only $334 a year; during the year 1905, or five years later, the average wages paid was $422, or an an increase in the average wages paid to ever mechanic and every artisan, including boys and apprentices, of $88 a year. Take the number of factories employing 5 hands or over. In 1900 those factories employed 339,173 hands; in the year 1905 the same factories employed 385,920. In 1900 in these factories there was paid in wages $113,249,000; in 1905 there was paid in wages $162,155,000. But the point of the matter is that, that during those five years, while the number of employees has increased but 13 per cent, the increase of wages has been at the rate of 43 per cent, showing better than anything else what has been the actual condition of the great industrial producing classes of this country.

Now, I have a last reference to make, and I make it in deference to the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), who I believe is to follow me, and that is in regard to the Post Office Department. I do not know that I can tell him anything in regard to that which he does not already know, but if he will look up the figures in regard to the Post Office Department he will find perhaps the greatest achievement of the Liberal administration of this country, or of any administration in any country, in the short space of ten and three-quarter years. In the year 1896 the revenue of the Post Office Department was $2,964,000, and the expenditure $3,665,000. But they were short in their accounts or had a deficit of between $700,000 and $800,000; I will put the figures at $700,000, for the purpose of my argument. Well, what were they to do? They could not make the Post Office pay for itself; they spent more than they received, and finally they quietly went to the member for North Toronto, then Minister of Finance, and told him that they must have more money, and he quietly went to England and floated the bonds of this country and borrowed money to pay the adverse balance in their running of the Post Office Department. How do the figures stand now? In the year 1907 the total revenue of the Post Office was $5,061,728 and the expenditure $3,979,000, showing a surplus of $1,082,171, and I believe that for the present year which closed yesterday the surplus will be well nigh a million and a half dollars. Now, how has that state of things been brought about? The great point I wish to emphasize is this, that while the post office service has been increased, while a great number of new post offices have been established, while the salaries of all the country postmasters and postmistresses have been increased, and in many instances more than doubled, while new mail routes have been established in every portion of the country, while the domestic postage has been reduced one-third, from three cents to two cents, and the imperial postage from five cents to two cents, notwithstanding the increased expenditure and the reduction of postage, the Postmaster General is able to come down to the House in this year of grace with a surplus of nearly a million and a half to the good, as against an adverse balance of $700,000 in the year 1896. Now, it may be argued by my hon. friend who will follow me that the Conservative party could have done that too. Well, if he will turn to the 'Hansard' for the year 1894 he will see how they view it. I have not got the page of the 'Hansard,' but it can be found in the discussion of the Postmaster General's estimate for that year. Sir Adolphe Caron, then Postmaster General, was asked in the House if he would consider a reduction in the rate of postage from three cents to two cents, and what was his answer? No, the government has no intention of considering the question; if we make the reduction, he said, we will lose by it $700,000. That would have made a deficit of $1,400,000 instead of $700,000.

Now, the hon. member for Lambton is one of the gentleman who professes to be greatly taken with that plank in the Halifax platform of the opposition known as free rural mail delivery. I had the pleasure of listening to the hon. gentleman when he made his speech on the address at the opening of the present session, and I listened with great attention to the statistics he gave upon that occasion. But I do not think his material was complete by any means, though I commend him for his industry and for the statistics which he presented. I have myself for a long time looked into the question with a great deal of care and have given it a great deal of thought, and while I am in favour of the government adopting the policy, to some extent at least, I realize the importance of the question and the tremendous expenditures in which it might soon involve the government. But believing it as I do and feeling that the day for it will eventually come, I cannot consider it a matter of so vital, of so paramount, of so transcendental importance that I should vote want of confidence in the government on account of it. The hon. member for East Lambton moved a resolution in this House by way of amendment to the reply to the speech from the Throne, which was a want of confidence motion in the present administration. Now, when he brings that matter forward by a want of confidence motion, I will frankly say that, strongly as I am in favour of such a measure, I shall not vote want of confidence in the government on account of it. I will not discuss the subject at greater length to-day, as I believe there will be another opportunity during the present session when the question of rural mail delivery, whether free or partly free and partly paid, will come up for discussion, and I will reserve any further remarks until that opportunity arrives.

Now, that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) is in his seat, I will make one more reference, because his face on this occasion recalls to my mind the cheerful countenance he presented in the city of Guelph in the month of May, 1896. It is in regard to the total exports and imports of Canada that I desire to speak. I wish to give the total figures in regard to exports and imports under the Liberal administration and under the Conservative administration. From the year 1897 to the year 1907 the total export and import trade of Canada, increased, in round numbers, by $360,000,000. It was $257,000,000 in 1897 and $617,000,000 in 1907. For the last ten years of the Conservative administration, from 1886 to 1896, it had increased by $50,000,000, but taking the whole period of Conservative administration from the year 1878 down to the year 1896 it increased by $66,000,000. Now, what I want to point to is this: That there was a general election impending in the month of May 1896, and I remember at that time attending a meeting in the city of Guelph where the speakers were the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale). The meeting was held in the Opera House. At that time as now I considered myself to be a good Liberal while I listened with very great interest to the remarks of the hon. member for North Toronto, and upon that occasion (though he does not seem to cling to that opinion now he tried to persuade that audience of whom I was one, that trade in Canada at that time was really in a prosperous condition. He not only gave to the people upon that occasion the figures in regard to the deposits in chartered banks in Canada, but he gave them a dissertation upon the question of export and import trade. And he told the people of Canada that during the eighteen years of the Conservative administration they had increased the export and import trade of Canada by $66,000,000, and we wondered at him and some of us cheered him and thought that a tremendous increase, and he gave that as one of the evidences of the satisfactory condition of Canada at that time. Take the figures as he presented them, take the figures as they are to-day. In eighteen years of Conservative rule the increase of our export and import trade was $66,000,000 or an average annual increase of $3,600,000. Under Liberal rule there has been a total increase of $360,000,000 or an average annual increase of $36,000,000, an average monthly increase of $3,000,000, an average daily increase of $100,000 for every day of the year Sundays and Saturdays included from the day the Liberal administration took power in 1896 down to the present time. Now, if the argument of the hon. member (Mr. Foster) meant anything then, how much more does it mean to-day than it did then? But I remember that last year when discussing the budget the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) took other grounds. If I remember his speech correctly (and I always pay attention to his speeches when I can), if I remember his speech correctly the ground he took then was this: That the export and import trade is not a fair index of the condition of the country; that at all events it is not a true index. He stated in effect that you could build up an export and an import trade and still have ruinous conditions at home, and I agree with him. He says. If you export all you produce and import all you consume you will have an enormous foreign trade but you will not have a healthy condition in trade matters at home. Now, has that been the experience of Canada for the last ten years? Have we had an enormous foreign trade and nothing doing at home industrially? Has that been the experience of Canada? No. Why, during the past five or six years the industries of Canada, every one of them almost, have been gradually enlarging and increasing from year to year both in capacity, in employment of labour, and in the output of manufactured goods. We have had a greater home trade, a greater interprovincial trade than ever was dreamed of in the melancholy days which preceded the year 1896. But, at the same time we have had a tremendous foreign trade built up of exports and imports, and when you combine the two together; when you look to your railway tonnage to see that it is not a case simply of increasing values but of increased commodities; when you look to your bank statements to see that it is not mystical figures but a real increase which shows in the deposits of the people in the chartered banks, then surely one must say that look at it from where you will and how you will there is only one conclusion to come to, and that is that after ten or eleven years of Liberal administration in this country, the fiscal conditions of the country, the whole financial administration of the government of the country, the trade and commerce of the country are in a condition so eminently satisfactory that they are practically beyond criticism. I think that this is now the opinion even of hon. members opposite, I think that is their conclusion honestly. And in order to get away from the facts, in order to avoid facing these facts at the coming general election, whenever that election may come, they have set out upon another tack in another direction in the hope that they may excite the public mind either rightly or wrongly by a number of so-called scandals, allegations, insinuations and the like, to keep the mind of the people from the real facts which should be presented to them when an appeal is made. I am now going to summarize what my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) gives in the course of his speech in connection with this matter. It would appear that the hon. gentleman on the occasion of the budget speech, thought he should deliver a sort of political compendium, a code book or hand book, a manual of field drill for the election armouries of the Conservative party at the next election, and in that compendium he has picked out the following choice articles as matters which he thought worthy of comment in the course of his reply to the budget speech. He referred to what is known as the Arctic scandal and he put it down at $400,000; he referred to what is known as the North Atlantic Trading Company, and he put it down at $370,000; the wharf at Grande Vallée, $80,000; Chicoutimi piers and booms, $50,000; St. Joseph's wharf $40,000.

Mr. FOSTER. No, wrong; $17,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Very well we will take it at that. He referred to the purchase of property at Kentville, and if I understand his argument he put that down at $42,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Twelve thousand dollars and a little more.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Then he referred to the cost of the Pearson purchase for the Intercolonial Railway, and I cannot find from reading 'Hansard' just at what he charges the government with being extravagant there, but I take it that it is about $28,000.

Mr. FOSTER. That is right.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Then he puts down the Lodge transaction at Moncton at about $8,500.

Mr. FOSTER. Too low, it is more.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I will put any figure the hon. gentleman pleases to put on it; I will double it if he likes.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be too much.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Then on the question of the Merwin purchases he put it at $400,000, and on the question of the Falconer accounting, if I understand him correctly he says that about $42,000 too much was paid, and totalling these various items which I have taken from 'Hansard' I find that the grand total amounts to $1,438,500.

Mr. LENNOX. What about the Quebec bridge, is that not there?

Mr. GUTHRIE. I did not know that was referred to as a scandal.

Mr. LENNOX. I think it is.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Perhaps it will develop into a scandal between now and election time. Anyhow the aggregate of the amounts mentioned by the hon. member (Mr. Foster) was $1,438,500. But, I do not think the hon. member (Mr. Foster) would for a moment say that all this expenditure was extravagant; he says that part of it certainly was extravagant, and he says that there has been too much paid and allowed as commission to middlemen. Well, his first item is the 'Arctic,' $400,000. But that is the total cost. I was not in the Public Accounts Committee, but I have heard the question of the 'Arctic' most fully discussed in this House, and I am prepared to deny in toto that there was any extravagance, and to argue from that standpoint. But, I am willing to take the figures of hon. gentlemen opposite in that respect. What does the hon. member say? Was it all extravagance? I take what was said by the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) last night in referring to the Merwin purchases, and he does not put that $400,000 as being all extravagance; he says, take 25 per cent off it. How much will you take off the 'Arctic'? Will you take 10 per cent or 40 per cent or 50 per cent or will you take it all off; I care not which for the sake of my argument.

In regard to the North Atlantic Trading Company, the whole question at issue seems to have been; To whom was the money paid? The real question was whether the money was earned or not earned; if it was earned and properly earned, it matters not one whit, so far as I can see, to whom it was paid, so long as there was no breach of the Independence of Parliament Act. The amount involved there is $370,000. How much of that is excessive or extravagant? Let us wipe it all out. Let us wipe out the whole amount of the cost of the wharf at Grande Vallee, $80,000, let us wipe out the Chicoutimi piers and booms, $50,000, although I do not know how much of that the hon. member challenges, let us wipe out the whole amount of the cost of the Kentville property, $42,000; let us wipe out the amount of the Pearson purchase for the Intercolonial Railway, $28,000; let us wipe out the Lodge transaction at Moncton, $8,500; let us wipe out Merwin's purchases, $400,000; let us wipe out Falconer's account, $43,000, and assume for the sake of my argument that they were all extravagant. Now, how does the matter stand? Since the Liberal party came into power in 1896, there has passed through their hands and been paid out by them on current expenditure about $650,000,000 of the people's money. In addition to that there has been paid by the government on capital account $127,000,000, making a total payment of money passing through the hands of the government and paid out by them of something like $750,000,000 or $800,000,000, and of that tremendous amount of money, about $1,500,000 has been challenged by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). Not that he says there has been a dollar paid corruptly or dishonestly, but he says it has been paid extravagantly and that middlemen have been allowed too much commission. Wipe it all off and what is the percentage? It simply means that the hon. member has challenged about $1.25 or $1.50 out of every $800 spent by this government. Apply that method to the business of any municipal, railway or other corporation in this country; go to any township council that has $800 to spend, and if it spends all of that but $1.25 or $1.50 in the interest of the people, if they have had value for all but $1.50 of that amount, then I submit the people have been well served. It would be a very different question if it could be shown that the money had been dishonestly or corruptly spent, that would place an entirely new face upon the situation. If it could be shown that ministers of the Crown or members of parliament had been guilty of receiving portions of that money, the whole situation would be changed, and I ask hon. gentlemen opposite to mark this, that when the Liberal party were in opposition and charged gross wrong-doing by the Conservatives then in power their charges were based not upon extravagance or upon commissions to middlemen, but upon actual dishonesty that had taken place.

I leave these figures just as the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) left them with the House. I presume he has raked the whole matter from top to bottom. We all respect the hon. member with his great eloquence, his great powers of endurance, his great political experience both in office and out of office. I may tell the hon. member that he has more than one admirer on this side of the House, although I do not think he actually courts admiration from this side.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very fond of it.

Mr. GUTHRIE. And there are many members on this side who can respect him. I always listen with interest to what he has to say. I like to hear him argue a question, particularly when he pretends to argue.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE. But I cannot take and hereafter and particularly I do not propose to take all he says, especially when he deals in statistics, except 'cum grano salis.' But as one who can speak to him as an admirer and a man who respects him, I would say, that he is a very difficult problem for me to size up. I look upon him as a sort of political paradox, if I may be permitted to use the expression, as a sort of political Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. While in office in the late Conservative government a sort of political Mr. Hyde, and while in opposition in the present House, the bland, genial smiling well-mentioned, well-intentioned Dr. Jekyll of Robert Louis Stevenson's famous book. Mr. Hyde, of course, was an assassin and did murder, kill and slay—although we do not charge the hon. member for North Toronto with anything of the kind——

Mr. FOSTER. I am not so sure of that.

Mr. GUTHRIE—but in order to carry out the simile I may say that we do charge him with perhaps having been guilty of some attempted political assassination in his time.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not do it under the shadow of a Royal Commission.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I know the hon. member has trained his tongue very glibly to pronounce the words 'political faith,' 'political good faith,' 'political honour;' but I know that when he was in the Conservative administration he was one of the guilty participants in a conspiracy of very bad faith and very bad political honour towards his own leader in the House of Commons in Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps my hon. friend does not know as much about that as the actors in it.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I do not, but I think I know a gentleman who now sits in the upper chamber who does know all about it.

Mr. FOSTER. Doctors will differ.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Another passing strange thing to me is the facility with which the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) seems to be able to adapt his principles and his opinions to the peculiar situation in which he finds himself for the moment. It is rather odd that in no measured terms, in very strong and cutting language, he should condemn members of this administration for doing what he says is a great wrong, for drawing money from one account in one department in anticipation of the actual vote of the House of Commons for payment of expenses or something of that kind. I think he spoke of this with reference to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) and I thought his language very cutting, needlessly harsh. What then must I have thought, as an admirer of the hon. member, when a few moments afterwards I heard that he himself, when in power had done the very same thing.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman ought to get at the facts of the case.

Mr. GUTHRIE. In the absence of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) during the earlier portion of my remarks, I got at a good many of the facts of the case and I was sincerely sorry he was not here to throw some light if possible, upon some of the facts that I could not get at.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the hon. member a question? Following out his argument as to a small percentage of, we will say, laches in the conduct of a large amount of business, granting he said that $1,000,000 and more had been wrongfully administered, that it had been open to worse than that term, it was only the small percentage of a very vast expenditure. Would he take up either of two positions:

1. That the small proportion of which he speaks, which had been brought out under very great difficulties, was all that could be inferred to have been wrongly administered in that very large amount? or,

2. Suppose a bank manager had passing through his hands a bank business of several million dollars in the course of a year and he only wasted away or worse wrecked twenty per cent of it? You consider that he had a good case for not being dismissed from the management of the bank?

Mr. GUTHRIE. These questions, Mr. Speaker, are so long and so involved that I would probably have to refer to 'Hansard' to-morrow to answer them. I thought it suddenly struck the hon. member for North Toronto that this was the 1st of April, and he was trying to play a joke on me. But, if I understood the first question aright, I would not infer wrong-doing unless I had more facts from which to draw an inference than I have in anything that has been up to the present before the Public Accounts Committee or before this House. In the next place, if the shortage or mismanagement was the result of carelessness or error and not of dishonesty, I would not consider it a good cause for dismissing an otherwise competent official. If it was the result of dishonesty or improper dealing, I would think otherwise.

I do not know that I will pursue the subject further. I have spoken at very much greater length than I intended; but when one starts at accumulating figures, one hardly knows where one will land. For my part, I think the people of Canada will be very well satisfied with the administration of the present government during the last ten or eleven years. The hon. member for North Toronto, whom I place high in command of the Conservative party in this House, whom I call the real leader though not the titular leader of the Conservative party of Canada, may never be the titular leader, greatly as he is admired and esteemed by his friends. If he were made the titular leader of the Conservative party, I believe the first question that would be asked throughout Canada would be: Who is this man? Have we not had him before? The leopard has not changed its spots, and we will have no more of him. While, by reason of his experience, parliamentary knowledge and ability as a debater and critic, he is probably entitled to the highest place that the Conservative party can grant to him, still on account of past performances I am satisfied that the people of Canada would not entrust to him any very great further responsibility in the administration of their affairs.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to this debate, and I appreciate the fact that it is an important debate. The Minister of Finance can take very little comfort from the facts that have been brought out by the last speaker and others in regard to the present condition of the finances of our country. When we have to face a greatly reduced revenue, as he assured us we shall in the coming year, with an increasing expenditure and a large increase in the public debt, we cannot look to the future with the bright hopes that the hon. member who has just taken his seat wishes us to do. The furnishing of ways and means is a very important part of the functions of this House, and when we consider the extravagant expenditure of money in the different departments of this government, we cannot criticise too severely their management of those departments. The members of this House who have been defending this government have had a very difficult task to perform, and in listening to them one cannot help coming to the conclusion that they are merely trying to talk in the way of bluff and bluster instead of dealing with the facts as they exist. I cannot help thinking that that has been the course of the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Guthrie). Generally speaking, we have regarded that hon. gentleman as one who discusses in a reasonable way the questions that come before the House; but today he has given us an exhibition of a style that would be naturally used by a member who is making a bid for a seat in the cabinet. He goes back to the year 1872 for a good deal of his information. Mr. Speaker, we are not living in the year 1872. Let the hon. gentleman come down to the present time, and talk of the extravagance in every department of this government, and of their corrupt acts, and he will find sufficient to convince him or any reasonable man that this government is the most corrupt that has ever entered the halls of this parliament. When the hon. gentleman was called to account for the statement he made in reference to the leader of the opposition, and the leader of the opposition got up and denied the statement, the hon. gentleman did not take the manly course of withdrawing the statement and saying that he was sorry for having made it, but I was surprised to see him try to wiggle out of it by every possible means. Then he referred to the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) and rather made fun of the men who are trying to promote the interests of the farming industry of this country. If the hon. gentleman will take that speech of the hon. member for Dundas, and examine it carefully, he will find that that hon. member gave us a lot of valuable information in regard to the development of the great agricultural industry of our country—that it was full of splendid suggestions to the Minister of Agriculture. During the eleven years that the Minister of Agriculture has been working for the farmers, what has he done? If I had time to go into the subject, I could show that he has not been carrying out the wishes of the people in developing that great industry as it should be developed; but I do not intend to discuss that subject to-day. The hon. member for South Wellington devoted considerable of his time to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). I do not need to defend the hon. member for North Toronto in any way; but the hon. member for South Wellington was unable to point to any part of the speech of the hon. member for North Toronto, in regard the corrupt dealings of this government in many departments and in the handling of the finances, that was not absolutely true. The hon. member also dealt with the speech of the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. E. D. Smith) in regard to the agricultural interests of the country. The speech of the hon. member for Wentworth was full of statistics which are most condemnatory of the present administration of the Depart- of Agriculture. In referring to the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) I cannot help thinking that the hon. member for South Wellington was also most unfair. However he took a great deal of comfort out of the theory, in connection with the balance of trade, that the imports should exceed the exports. But he was very careful not to cite the statistics of some countries which are situated very much like our own. Let me call his attention to a few statements which are to be found in the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce for the year 1907.

|---|---|---|
| Australasia.. .. .. .. | $206,000,000 | $274,715,138 |
| New Zealand .. .. .. | 69,608,700 | 86,823,017 |
| British South Africa.. | 145,317,067 | 206,377,880 |
| British India.. .. .. .. | 363,188,874 | 512,500,492 |
| Newfoundland and Labrador.. .. .. .. .. .. | 10,125,190 | 11,910,007 |
| Argentine Republic .. | 260,521,553 | 282,024,945 |
| Brazil.. .. .. .. .. | 144,775,176 | 216,668,088 |

Take Japan, the country in which he tried to convince us the balance was on the wrong side, that they were importing more than they were exporting, had he looked at the reports for 1907 he would have found that the imports were $208,078,515 and the exports $208,754,060. He made a comparison between Canada and Great Britain and Germany and some of those other countries which are large importers and which have large shipping and commerce whereby they gather the money, large quantities of which they expend in foreign countries, so that the income from these expenditures have grown to enormous sums and add materially to the general advancement. That is particularly the case with Great Britain which is the largest lender of capital. But the hon. gentleman was not fair in that comparison. Let me refer him to the Argentine Republic, which in population, climate and resources very much resembles this country. They imported $205,000,000 and exported $322,000,000, showing $117,000,000 on the right side of the ledger. But what was the contention of the member for South Wellington regarding that country? He gave us to understand that its people were not progressive, that it had not many cities, and that it was not being developed to any great extent. But what are the facts? Why, he will find in the Argentine Republic the city of Buenos Ayres, with a population of 1,000,000 souls, and one of the most progressive cities on the continent. That country exports $7,189,254 worth of living animals; $133,793,732 animal products; $5,584,308 agricultural prepared products, and $3,462,672 agricultural residue, or a total of $311,000,000 of agricultural products exported out of a total export of $322,000,000. Compare that with the Dominion and see the small amount of agricultural exports that we export. And in 1895 the population of the Argentine Republic was 3,900,000, whereas to-day it is over 6,000,000.

The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) talks about the prosperity of this country, but he did not tell us about the many unemployed who are walking the streets of our towns and demanding assistance and work from the mayors and the charitable institutions.

Talking of the scandals, he said that those which this government have been guilty of are small, that they only amount to about $1,500,000 all told. But, Sir, when we come to investiagte we find that instead of these scandals only amounting to $1,500,000, that represents but a small portion of the scandals which have been unearthed in this House from time to time.

I just want to spend a few moments referring to the remarks of the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. M. S. Schell). He argued that the British preference was a means of prosperity to our agriculturists, that it was the means of putting into the pockets of our people over $30,000,000 every year. He contended that by reducing the tariff one-third on the imports from Great Britain, we were able to bring back into the Dominion $30,000,000 and put that into the people's pockets. Why then did he not advise taking off the whole tariff between Great Britain and Canada and bringing back $90,000,000 and putting it into the people's pockets? The hon. gentleman would no doubt close up many of our factories and have thousands of men put out of employment, but that would not matter so long as he could bolster up an argument in favour of the free trade policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. In dealing with the British preference, I wish the House to take notice of this particular point, that a large portion of the goods brought into Canada from England come from Germany. All that the tariff requires, to entitle an article to the preference, is that 25 per cent of its workmanship should have been done in Great Britain. The other 75 per cent may be done in any foreign country. Well, the Finance Minister was compelled to admit last session that a large portion of the goods coming to Canada, under this preference, are made in foreign countries but shipped through British channels of trade and sent into Canada by middlemen.

Now, we cannot but believe that a large portion of the increased trade of Great Britain coming into the Dominion of Canada is owing to the goods being manufactured in Germany, sent into Great Britain and so finding their way into Canada under the British preference, the people of Great Britain deriving no great benefit from their manufacture. In 1896 this government said: Put us in power and we will open up the market of the United States so that you may not be confined to your own people, but may have the market of the 85,000,000 people to the south. But we find that they have been unable to redeem this promise. Even in relation to Great Britain they have given us only a jug-handled preference. It is not, as many of the people would like to believe, a free trade preference, and does not advance in the direction of free trade doctrine, but is opposed to it. It actually restricts our movements, compelling us to trade in one market, so that we are unable to secure the benefits we could secure in the markets of the world. The adoption of the preference was a distinct violation of the most favoured nation clause. When this government came into power we were a favoured nation in the eyes of Germany and most other foreign countries, but you find our position in the German markets to-day most humiliating. Germany with its 60,000,000 of people imports $1,800,000,000 worth of goods, including over $200,000,000 of agricultural products such as Canada is producing, and yet we are unable to get into that country with any fair proportion of our products owing to the surtax levied by Germany. On the other hand, these gentlemen tell us, as the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. M. S. Schell) told us the other day, that we have a wonderful advantage in the British market over any foreign country. Let the hon. gentleman attempt to sell our goods even on sympathy on the British market, and he will soon find that the consumer there will frankly tell him that he is concerned with quality and price and that sympathy has nothing to do with it.

We had a few words from the hon. member from South Grey (Mr. Miller). That hon. gentleman is always ready to defend this government, no matter what their dealings are. There is no steal too big for him to defend, no corrupt act of this government too bad for him to uphold. Day after day we find him ever ready and willing to devote his best energies to defending even the most corrupt acts of which this government has been guilty. He simply says, in effect, as did the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie): Sail on, you great Liberal party; plunder and plunder as much as you like; take from the people their rights in their timber lands and other resources and we will stand by you, we will defend you in all your notorious acts, no matter what they are. The hon. member for South Grey told us that a large portion of our goods were going to the old country in a wonderfully advantageous manner. He told us that practically every package of perishable goods we were sending to Britain was going in cold storage chamber. I asked him a question in order that I might make sure of his statement. When I turned up 'Hansard' of 1905 I find that in reply to a question I asked it was shown that only a small portion of the goods go in cold storage. For instance, here is the showing what was done in 1904:

| — | In cold storage. | In cooled air. | In ventilated (ordinary) storage. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cheese....Boxes. | ..... | 102,238 | 1,908,867 |
| Butter....Pkgs. | 487,182 | ..... | 2,516 |
| Eggs.....Cases. | 1,000 | ..... | 78,625 |
| Bacon ... " | ..... | 18,072 | 68,720 |
| Apples..... Brls. | 5,450 | 1,521 | 321,749 |
| Apples ...Boxes. | 827 | 1,003 | 21,478 |

So, the great bulk of the perishable products of this country are not going under the cold storage system. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) has tried to lead the people to believe that his wonderful cold-storage system has brought about a revolution in our methods of transportation. Let him investigate and he will find that the transportation facilities for our perishable products are not satisfactory. He will find that, though he has expended tens of thousands of dollars in attempting to improve the service on railroad and steamship, he is powerless to effect an improvement. The reason is to be found simply in the blunders he has made in years gone by when he entered into contracts with the different steamship companies for the transportation of these perishable products. He did not compel the transportation companies to enter into a contract in which a certain temperature should be maintained in cars and in boats crossing the Atlantic. In the same reply from which I have quoted the minister makes this statement:

The bulk of the butter discharged from each steamer is removed within a reasonable time, but the balance is allowed to remain for days before delivery is taken.

Let the hon. gentleman investigate and he will find that our transportation facilities are not what they should be and are not at all equal to those of the Argentine Republic or New Zealand or Australia. They carry perishable goods from Argentine, 6,000 miles, and from Australia, 12,000 miles, and deliver them in the British market in perfect condition. Let the hon. gentleman investigate and see the demoralized condition of this service at the present time. Let him investigate practically every part of the great industry of which he is the head and he will find that his management has been of no great advantage to the development of this great agricultural country.

Well, the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) did not tell us about some of the wonderful things that the Minister of Agriculture has attempted to accomplish. If I had time I could tell about his chicken fattening stations, his scissors policy, his meat regulations that are not being carried out, and his Fruit Marks Act that has been the means of putting our fruit in the markets of the old country in a damaged condition. Practically every undertaking the Minister of Agriculture has gone into has proved a detriment to the agricultural industry rather than a benefit. The hon. member for South Grey said that we were getting more for our apples in the old country than the United States exporters were getting for some of their apples. He did not take into consideration the fact that the United States barrel is much smaller than ours; had he done so he would have found that instead of our apples being sold at a price greater than those of the United States, they are bringing a lower price.

Now, I must hurry along and pay some attention to the speech of the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton). I admire the demand made by the hon. gentleman for civil service reform. The House is acquainted with the exposures made by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House of corrupt acts in various departments of this government. I believe the time has come when we should have a thorough investigation into all charges of corruption, we should have a commission that will not only investigate the charges against the Department of Marine and Fisheries, but against every other department of this government. The time has come when we feel it our duty as members of His Majesty's loyal opposition to urge upon this government the necessity of a thorough overhauling of all the departments. The member for Brandon referred to the Department of Trade and Commerce, and suggested a new department in connection with the trade and commerce of this country. I do not see any need for a new department, but I do see a need of changing the methods of conducting the present department. For years the opposition has been calling upon the Minister of Trade and Commerce to give us more information regarding foreign markets, and regarding the trade and commerce of foreign countries. It is true that to some extent we have succeeded in getting more information than was formerly granted us, and that is particularly true of the report for the last year. But it does not begin to go far enough. What we want is a complete change in the method of administering the Department of Trade and Commerce. I have here a few suggestions which I would like the Minister of Trade and Commerce to take into his serious consideration:

1. The department of Trade and Commerce should include officials conversant with every country with which Canada has any trade, men who are thoroughly posted on the commercial conditions existing in those countries, and who would be competent to give advice on all questions relating to foreign tariffs, &c. Further, these men should be fitted to participate in government commissions appointed to negotiate commercial treaties, and capable of furnishing practical advice and information to the business men of the country.

2. There should be a division of the Department of Trade and Commerce devoting its entire attention to foreign tariffs, trade reports and commercial relations. This information gathered carefully should then be given all possible publicity so that business men in general might benefit thereby.

3. Boards of trade throughout Canada should be required to make regular reports to the department covering all matters of trade pertaining to their district. In return for this the boards of trade should be supplied with the fullest information as to trade openings abroad, as well as all changes in tariffs, &c., and each member should receive a copy of weekly letter. In this way every business man in Canada could be kept well informed on trade affairs. In exactly the same way, the agriculturist could keep in touch with the world's markets. These reports would be issued weekly, and would contain the greatest amount of information relating to foreign trade.

Now, I do not suggest any such reports as are contained in the weekly letters that we are getting. Few of us can find in the letters that come to us week after week anything of very great advantage, not only to ourselves as containing information about foreign countries, but to the manufacturers in Canada, who I believe are not satisfied with them. The press of this country will bear me out I think in saying that they get in these letters very little information that is useful to the public. I believe further that the day is coming when no government will be permitted to select a cabinet minister from a body such as the Senate, whose members are not in close touch with the people. I will not go further on this point than to say that I believe this is one of the chief causes of the present condition of the Trade and Commerce Department. What confidence can we have in men like Preston and Jackson as representatives of this great country in foreign lands? Yet we find this party, who would like to be called a party of purity, sending men over to Europe who are not fit to represent us in any particular, let alone pretending to represent the Trade and Commerce Department of this country.

Now a few words in regard to mutual preference. I am glad indeed that the leader of the opposition has seen fit to place in his platform a plank to the effect that the Conservative party stands by a mutual preference. We cannot too strongly emphasize the fact that Canada stands for a mutual preference; let that be well known both in Great Britain and in this country. What would a mutual preference mean to the Dominion of Canada? There is no doubt in the mind of any man who has investigated this subject that mutual preference would mean increased value to every farm in the Dominion, and increased prosperity to every industry and every trade. There is no doubt that under an improved immigration policy immigrants would voluntarily flock to our shores by the thousands, and we would not be obliged to pay any bonus at so much per head to induce them to come. In addition to that, we would be able to exercise more effective supervision over the class of men coming to Canada. For the past eleven years this government have been trying to deal with the question of mutual preference, and those of us who have followed the course of this government in Great Britain at the colonial conferences can come to no other conclusion than that these gentlemen have not put forth any great effort to bring back to Canada a mutual preference. Anybody who makes a thorough investigation of the last colonial conference will find that the Prime Minister of Canada did not make a reasonable effort to obtain a mutual preference for the Dominion, while on the other hand the premiers of all the other colonies did their utmost to obtain such a mutual preference for their colonies.

On motion of Mr. Armstrong, the debate was adjourned.

At six o'clock the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 2, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 141) to incorporate the Anglo-Canadian and Continental Bank—Mr. Guthrie.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. AYLESWORTH moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 142) to amend the Bills of Exchange Act. He said: The purpose of this Bill is to correct a clerical error which has crept into the present statute in the section relating to the effect of the endorsement of a Bill. The law is declared to be that the endorsement of a Bill precludes the endorser from denying the validity of the Bill to his immediate or a subsequent endorsee. As the statute has been printed it reads: 'endorser,' an 'r' being substituted for an 'e' and this Bill is to correct the error.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—'THE OCEAN LIMITED.'

Mr. FORGET—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. On what date, in 1907, did the 'Ocean Limited' begin to run, and on what date did it stop running?
2. How many trips were made between Halifax and Montreal, and how many between Montreal and Halifax?
3. How many times did it arrive on schedule time in Montreal, and how many times in Halifax?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). My hon. friend had better allow this to stand as a notice of motion for a return.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as a notice of motion for a return.

DR. SPENCER'S REPORT ON NIAGARA.

Mr. BOYCE—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. What has been the cost to the country of publishing the report entitled 'The Falls of Niagara,' by Doctor Joseph William Winthrop Spencer?

2. Who authorized the publication of this report?

3. Was the report carefully examined by the Minister of Mines before sanctioning its publication?

4. Was the report submitted to Dr. Low, Director of the Geological Survey, for his opinion upon it? If so, what was his opinion?

5. Was the opinion of Mr. Brock, the present acting director, asked as to the expediency of publishing the report? If so, what was his opinion? If not, why not?

6. Was the editor of the geological survey publications authorized to revise the manuscript, or to report upon Doctor Spencer's paper? If not, why not?

7. Has the government seen the following criticism upon the report from the 'Mining and Scientific Press'?:

The public that reads technical literature is often imposed upon by having to digest half-baked productions likely to cause mental dyspepsia. In recent years nothing quite so bad as Doctor Spencer's report has been published. We marvel that such a volume of cool egotism, muddy thinking, and wretched writing should have been issued from the office at Ottawa, for we believe that the regular editor of the Canadian survey was a mining engineer of some repute, possessed of an excellent literary style, and the necessary good taste in matters of this kind. The book is well printed, and beautifully illustrated; in fact, the manner of it is disproportionate to the matter. As a warning and example of bad writing we quote seven paragraphs.

The history of Niagara river is only the expression of that of the lake region in all its complicated parts. The investigation of one feature imperceptibly leads us afield until we pass the bounderies of our original topic; thus it is here. But the new observations react and more fully explain the phenomena.

In a general way the recession of the falls depends upon three factors—their height, their volume, and the character of the rock formations, which are being channelled by the stream. The falls have retreated across a very level country underlaid by almost horizontal rock formations, having a great degree of uniformity as was noted even so long ago as 1789.

Few people have supposed that the recession was not uniform; fewer still would think that the story had not all been told concerning a commonly known natural feature. The history had been partly anticipated in the discovery that the volume and descent of the water have not always been the same, and that some of the features have changed to a degree.

The old floor of the park is so nearly 180 feet above the river in the channel below, or 280 feet above lake Ontario, that this height may be taken as effective in the excavation of the gorge with the river at present level, thus making allowance for its increased velocity.

The thickness of the underlying shales is constant. As I have found the character of the falls during the middle portion of this long stage, these corrections will approximately cover the case although their precise amounts are not determined more closely. I do not believe that the apparent error will ever be found to reach ten per cent, with the rainfall during the recession being approximately the same at present.

The age of the Falls of Niagara, which are post-glacial, is one of the great questions of geology having a world-wide interest. The complexity of their history, which meets one on investigation, disappears in applying precise methods and carrying them sufficiently far. It was principally due to a failure in understanding the nature of the differential uplift of the land, and tilting of the water-basins, so as to change the height of the falls and their volume; and to previous failure in making the determination of the work of the falls at the different stages in their history.

There need be no suspicion that underlying hypotheses have been developed as I have none to uphold, except what might come from the facts inductively. The problem has been a long one to solve, so that no one who has not at least examined the investigations is entitled to call in question the features of the falls, gorge, &c., as to their furnishing evidence in bringing us near the age of Niagara, even though he may be bewildered by the great mass of facts brought out by methods that had to be specially developed for this solitary problem.

This is the delit our trimmings of scientific literature; as you read it you wonder if you have lost senses, you suspect the Welsh rabbit (not rare rabbit) of last night and you vow to stick to mineral water in future. Yet we would be disinclined to be so severe, if the author had not put himself on a pedestal. According to him, all previous writers on Niagara were fools, although we remember a modest pamphlet by G. K. Gilbert, who managed in 29 years to give more facts, and to have illuminated them better, than Doctor Spencer in his 490 pages. Surely the geological survey of Canada can use its funds to better purposes than to issue scientific balderdash sumptuously printed. One purpose the book can fulfil: It illustrates every kind of error in arrangement of evidence, in sequence of thought, in connection of sentences. If you want to write an essay on a scientific subject, you can at least learn what to avoid by reading 'The Falls of Niagara.'

8. In view of the adverse criticism of the 'Mining and Scientific Press' and other scientific publications upon this work, is it the intention of the government to suppress it?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Mines):

1. The cost of printing and publishing the report on 'The Falls of Niagara' has been $5,148.69.

2, 3, 4, 5, 6. Dr. Spencer was engaged to study the falls and write a report for the survey embodying the results of his investigations which the survey was to publish. This agreement with Dr. Spencer was made in 1905 by Dr. Robert Bell at the time acting director of the Geological Survey. When Dr. Low became director in 1906 the advisability of publishing the report was questioned, but it was found that it had been agreed upon that the result of the investigation should be promptly published. Dr. Low was therefore of the opinion that the survey was in honour bound to publish the report. The report was handed to the editor of the survey on being received, who found it could not be revised without the presence and co-operation of the author. Owing to the absence of the author in England and other causes this was not found practicable and finally the author undertook to have it put into good English and properly published, agreeing to absolve the survey from any criticism as to form and matter by inserting the following sentence after the contents bill 'The author assumes responsibility for the statements, opinions and phraseology in this report.' The Minister of Mines examined the report and in consenting to its publication in its present form gave due consideration to opinions of several hon. members expressed in this House that the report should be published without delay and in Dr. Spencer's own form. The report was in print before Mr. Brock became acting director.

7. Yes.

8. It cannot be suppressed, and in addition no matter what criticisms may be offered it does contain some valuable information.

INDEX CARDS FOR ARCHIVES.

Mr. BOYCE—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. During the years 1906-7 and 1907-8 what quantity of index cards were purchased by the Archives Department?

2. From what firm or firms were such cards purchased, and what were the prices per thousand paid by the department?

3. Were tenders asked? If not, was there competition of any kind? If so, what?

4. Under what items of the Auditor General's Report for years mentioned do payments for such cards appear?

5. About how many of such cards are required annually in the Archives Department?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) :

1. About 206,000 index cards have been purchased by the Department of Agriculture for the Archives Branch, ordered in lots of 25,000 as required.

2. They were purchased through the Government Stationery Office from L. W. Hutchison, E. R. McNeill, the Office Specialty Company, the Library Bureau and Geo. W. Miller & Co.

The price varies in accordance with the size and thickness of the cards. The average cost is $2.51 per thousand.

3. No. Tenders are not asked by the Stationery Office for amounts under $100. No competition. Cards purchased at regular wholesale prices.

4. Auditor General's Report, 1906-7, page 8—D ; 'Stationey Office, Ottawa, sundry books and stationery, $3,784.10.' The cost of the cards is included in this item. The Auditor General's Report part 'T,' pages 9, 10 and 11 also gives details.

The amount paid for cards purchased 1907-8, will be included in the expenditure of the Stationery Office in the Auditor General's Report for that year when issued.

5. The number of cards required annually by the Archives Branch will depend upon the progress made with the classification. The documents are indexed on paper and when the final clssification is made the index is typewritten on cards.

It is estimated that during the present year from two to three hundred thousand cards will be required.

FISH ISLAND LIGHTKEEPER.

Mr. LEFURGEY—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Who is the present lightkeeper at Fish island, entrance of Malpeque harbour, what date was he appointed, and what is his salary?

2. Who was the previous keeper of above light, what was his salary, when did he cease to be keeper, and the reason therefor?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Patrick Gould. Appointed temporarily 7th December, 1906, at $200 per annum.

2. William Sinclair, $250. Dismissed because he left Prince Edward Island without leave, sub-letting his work as lightkeeper.

POSTAL PRIVILEGES AT ARTHABASKA.

Mr. LOUIS LAVERGNE asked :

1. Is it true that application was made for the privileges of the mails by a newspaper called 'La Gazette d'Arthabaska'?

2. Were such privileges granted, and to how many copies of the above named paper?

3. Is the department aware that the postmaster of Arthabaska has been granting the privileges to the whole issue of the paper, regardless of instructions or the law regarding such privileges?

4. If the department is aware of such violation of the regulations, what action does it propose to take as regards the postmaster?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General) :

1. Yes.

2. Yes, to 21 copies addressed to subscribers.

3. Yes.

4. The question as to why the postmaster granted the privileges of the mails to this paper illegally is now being inquired into, and the treatment to be accorded the postmaster will be decided on when the necessary information is available as a result of the inquiry now being conducted.

MR. JOHN E. SCOTT.

Mr. LALOR asked:

1. Has John E. Scott, deputy superintendent of the Welland canal at Dunnville, resigned?

2. Has the government accepted the resignation of John E. Scott?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways). No.

INSURANCE COMMISSION.

Mr. FOWLER asked:

1. Were any copies of the evidence taken by the Royal Commission on Insurance sold by any official of the government for his private profit?

2. If so, what is the name of the official, and to which department does he belong?

3. Were such copy or copies, if any, sold before or after the evidence was laid on the table of the House?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). No.

THE QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING. Before the orders of the day are called, I would ask the permission of the House to correct, or perhaps, rather, supplement an answer which I recently gave to an inquiry concerning the Quebec Bridge Company. In the course of the budget speech one or two questions were asked which I answered off-hand. The hon. member for North Toronto, having asked me what was the amount of the bank's claim, I stated it at $5,016,453, to which interest was to be added. That amount had been stated by the bank as their claim against the bonds, upon payment of which the bonds would be delivered to the government. It appears, however, that apart from that, the bank advanced $155,000, which went into bridge construction. Certificates covering this and other outlay on the bridge were issued by the chief engineer of government railways with a view to the government making advances as contemplated by the Act of last session. But, as the bridge disaster occurred immediately afterward, further action was not taken on these certificates. The additional amount mentioned remains due to the bank.

The rate of interest, as to which I spoke with some uncertainty, was 5 per cent.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would draw the attention of my hon. friend, the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham), to some papers which are lacking in a return brought down regarding the construction of a branch canal from Balsam lake to the head of Gull river waters. To my personal knowledge, as far back as 1891, there were surveys sent in to the department by engineers, and I cannot find any reference to them in any sense in the return. I call the attention of the hon. minister to this, so that he may have these brought down.

Mr. GRAHAM. I shall look into the matter.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—MR. JUSTICE CASSELS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask my right hon. friend the First Minister whether or not Mr. Justice Cassels has accepted the duties proposed to be imposed on him by the order in council which has been laid on the table, and also why the three officers, mentioned yesterday as having been suspended, were so suspended, having regard to the fact that no particular officer was mentioned, so far as I am aware, in the report of the Royal Commission. The report of the Royal Commission was a condemnation of the department as a whole, including, as I would understand, not only the officials but the head of the department. Therefore we ought to know for what reason the government have selected certain officers, whose names have not been given, for suspension.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I may say that one of the officers was suspended some time ago and his suspension had no reference at all to the report of the commission. As to the two others, Mr. J. F. Fraser and Mr. Gregory, I made some investigation myself, as was stated yesterday by the First Minister, and I found that some orders which I had given had been disregarded by those officers. That is the reason why I suspended them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then they were not suspended as the result of the report of the Royal Commission, but on the minister's own independent inquiry.

Mr. BRODEUR. I started that inquiry immediately after the report of the commission, and in studying the files of the department, I found that certain instructions I had given had not been carried out.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the hon. gentleman have any objection to laying on the table copies of the instructions which were disregarded?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, I will get all the papers.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As regards Mr. Justice Cassels, I received a communication from him just as I was coming to the House and have not taken the opportunity of reading it. I will give communication of it to the House to-morrow.

Mr. BLAIN. How many copies of the Royal Commission report will be available for distribution to each member? There is a very great demand for them, and it is important that a large number should be printed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The printing has been going on as the manuscript has been received. I cannot tell my hon. friend how many copies have been ordered.

Mr. FIELDING. The matter is rather under the control of the Printing Committee. We have given no special orders since concerning it.

Mr. SPROULE. I take it that would be due to the regulation requiring so many copies of each public document to be printed for each member.

Mr. FIELDING. Whatever is the usual rule I presume will apply. We have given no special orders.

Mr. BLAIN. I want to draw the attention of the Finance Minister to the fact that there are a very large number of inquiries for this report, and I hope he will see that a sufficient number of copies are printed for distribution.

Mr. FIELDING. It is not the practice of the government to give the order; but attention having been drawn to the matter, no doubt the Printing Committee will consider it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) permit me to ask him just one other question? He has given the date of the suspension of two officers and he told us the other was suspended some time ago. When was he suspended and what were the grounds?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not remember exactly the date when Mr. Owen was suspended, but it was about two or three weeks ago. He was suspended on account of his conduct.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was it?

Mr. BRODEUR. I would not like to prejudice him. He has written me a letter alleging the mistake he had made. I do not know what interest would be served by giving the reasons. If my hon. friend wants them privately, I have no objection to giving them to him. As to the others, they were suspended the day before yesterday.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. WHITE. I would like to call attention to the return I moved for on February 18, 1907, regarding W. W. B. McInnis, ex-Commissioner of the Yukon. That return has not been brought down.

QUEBEC TERCENTENARY.

Mr. SPEAKER. I desire to inform the House that a joint meeting of the members of the Senate and the House of Commons will be held in the Railway Committee room to-morrow (Friday) morning at the hour of eleven o'clock, for the purpose of considering what action, if any, the individual members of the respective Houses shall take for the purpose of promoting the success of the movement to celebrate the 300th anniversary of the founding of Quebec by Champlain and the reclamation and preservation, as a permanent national park, of the battlefields of the Plains of Abraham and St. Foy.

The meeting will be addressed by several prominent members of each House.

I am asked to request that every member of this House, who can find it convenient to do so, will be present.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding: That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the House to go into committee to consider of the ways and means for raising the supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). When the House closed at 6 o'clock yesterday, I was calling the attention of the government to the importance of a mutual preference arrangement between Great Britain and Canada. I also made the statement that this government were not putting forth any effort to obtain that preference. In fact the First Minister, at the last conference in Great Britain rather threw cold water on the scheme. These ministers have not taken the active interest in this question that we had a right to expect them to take. In a comparatively short time, probably, the politics of Great Britain will be changed. It is expected that within two years the unionist party will have control of the affairs of that great country; and I believe it is our duty to impress upon the government of Great Britain the necessity of taking up this most important question of granting to the colonies a preference in return for the preference granted to Great Britain. I would like to ask this government, who have been handling this question for eleven years, how it is that in the imperial conference they did not make special effort to obtain for us a mutual preference. These hon. gentlemen often tell us of the benefit the people of Canada have received from the one-sided preference we have to-day. One hon. gentleman says that our people have $30,000,000 in their pockets owing to this preference. As I said a few days ago, if by taking off one-third of the customs duties on goods coming in from Great Britain these gentlemen can benefit the people of Canada to the extent of $30,000,000, why do they not take off the other two-thirds and give the people the benefit of the free trade policy which they proposed. But there is another side to it: as a result of this one-sided preference, over a hundred woollen mills in this country have closed, and thousands of men have been turned out of employment who otherwise would have added to the home market and helped to consume home products. And, after all, how much cheaper are the goods to the consumer as a result of this preference? And why is it that, when the colonies are giving to Great Britain a preference, the goods of other colonies are going into the markets of Germany under the most favoured nation treatment while Canadian goods going to Germany are subject to a surtax? This is a matter which it is the duty of this government to explain. Have they made special effort to put Canada on the same footing in the German market as other colonies of Great Britain ? There can be no doubt of the fact that the goods of Great Britain and of other colonies than Canada, are going into Germany on the most favoured nation basis while the goods of Canada are subject to the surtax. If the surtax is imposed on Canada because she has granted to Britain this preference in her market, why is it that other colonies that have granted a preference to Great Britain still receive the most favoured nation treatment ? I say it is the duty of the government to explain why we are placed in this humiliating position ?

Let me call attention to the further important fact that, when the preference debate was carried on in the imperial conference, the Prime Minister of Canada (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) did not urge upon the conference the necessity for a mutual preference as between Canada and Great Britain. So far as the present government of Great Britain are concerned, I do not believe it is their intention to grant Canada a mutual preference. All we can hope for is to assist in educating the people of Great Britain to the necessity of granting a preference to the colonies. But we must take into consideration some of the statements made at the imperial conference. Let me quote from the remarks of the present acting Prime Minister of Great Britain, Mr. Asquith, who is expected, in a short time, to become Prime Minister.

I would rather refer at a little more length to the other two tariffs which have been brought before us—the Canadian tariff and the proposed Australian tariff. As regards the Canadian tariff, I acknowledge that it has been beneficial to British trade, and particularly, I think, to our textile industries. I think it has been beneficial perhaps more in the way of arresting a threatened decline in trade than by actually increasing the volume of the trade, or at any rate the proportion of British trade to the rest of the trade done with Canada. But I should like to call attention, not in any controversial spirit at all, to the Canadian tariff for the purpose of showng how in framing arrangements of this kind the country which frames them is inevitably constrained to look to its own peculiar local and economic conditions.

Now, referring to this tariff he says :

Thirdly, in regard to the Canadian tariff, if you take all goods, dutiable as well as free, altogether, the average ad valorem rate after allowing for the preference on United Kingdom goods is 19 per cent and on United States goods 13 per cent. In other words it is 6 per cent lower ad valorem on the total importation from the United States than it is on the total importation from the United Kingdom. . . .

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Quite right.

Mr. ASQUITH. Even with the tariff constructed in that spirit and with that intention and by such skilled hands the net result is that we are at a disadvantage as compared with the United States of America, and we are paying 19 per cent import duty as compared with only 13 per cent.

I will quote also a few words from the closing of Mr. Asquith's address. And, if any one will take the pains to read that address, he cannot but come to the conclusion that, so far as Mr. Asquith is concerned, and so far as the party he represents is concerned, they have not the first intention of granting to this country a mutual preference. He closes his address with these words :

I can assure you, and I am speaking quite sincerely, that it is a most thankless task for a minister in my position to combat propositions which are concurred in by so large an amount of representative opinion in different parts of the empire. It is not an agreeable duty at all, but it is one I am bound to perform to my colleagues, and to the House of Commons, and to the country.

And I believe it is my duty to place on Hansard a few of the remarks of Sir Wm. Lyne, Minister of Trade and Commerce of Australia :

Sir WM. LYNE. Lord Elgin and gentlemen, I have listened with attention to the speech which has just been delivered by the Chancellor of the Exchequer and, from his standpoint, I must admit that it was an able speech, and affords food for reply; perhaps not reply on the instant but I feel when it sees the light of day—I do not know when it will—it will be replied to pretty vigorously. I cannot help saying, my lord, that the whole tenor of that speech, if I may be allowed to use the term, and I scarcely like to use it, was alien to Britain's colonies, it was treating the British colonies on a par with foreign nations. When one remark was made regarding the desire on the part of Great Britain to be allowed to deal with her tariff as she desired and to deal with her domestic questions as she desired, I could not help thinking that that was equivalent to saying that the colonies were not on a par or not part of the domestic empire of Great Britain.

This merely goes to show that, so far as the representatives of the British government are concerned, they do not seem to appreciate the preference granted by this country and other British colonies, and they received encouragement, I may say, from the Prime Minister of Canada in the statements he made at that great conference. For, when you come to look at his speeches on the different occasions—and I shall be very brief on making quotations—you cannot but come to the conclusion that he did not put forth any effort but the very opposite to try to obtain for this country a mutual preference. The next resolution is in these words, quoted by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, at that conference :

That the prime ministers of the colonies respectively urge on His Majesty's government the expediency of granting in the United Kingdom preferential treatment to the products and manufactures of the colonies, either by exemption from, or reduction of, duties now or hereafter imposed.

Then Sir Wilfrid said :

My friend, Mr. Deakin, speaking on behalf of Australia, has proposed to go one step beyond this and to adopt this resolution:

That it is desirable that the United Kingdom grant preferential treatment to the products and manufactures of the colonies.

Is there anything unreasonable or unfair in that proposition? Is it unreasonable for any one advocating a mutual preference to accept a proposition of that kind? But Sir Wilfrid Laurier went on to say:

Perhaps, on consideration, Mr. Deakin would agree with us, that it would be preferable not to force this, but to keep to the resolution of 1902.

The resolution of 1902, when we come to examine it thoroughly, practically means little or nothing. We find further that another part of the resolution that Sir Wilfrid Laurier was asked to accept as Prime Minister of Canada was this :

That the prime ministers present at the conference undertake to submit to their respective governments at the earliest opportunity the principle of the resolution, and to request them to take such measures as may be necessary to give effect to it.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister why it was not possible for him to place before this House the resolution I have just read; I would like to ask him why he did not take a stand in that conference enthusiastically in favour of a mutual preference being granted to Canada. At the close of that great debate we find this recorded :

The following resolution was agreed to by the members of the conference, with the exception of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who was absent, and whose vote was not recorded, of General Botha, who did not support it, and of the representatives of His Majesty's government who dissented:

That while affirming the resolution of 1902, this conference is of opinion that, as the British government, through the South American Customs Union—which comprises Basutoland and the Bechuanaland Protectorate—do at present allow a preference against foreign countries to the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and all other British possessions granting reciprocity, His Majesty's government should now take into consideration the possibility of granting a like preference to all portions of the empire on the present dutiable articles in the British tariff.

I do not think that was an unreasonable resolution to ask the Prime Minister of Canada to give his assent to. I think it is his duty to this country to give some explanation why it was that he did not advocate at the colonial conference in a stronger manner the granting of a mutual preference by Great Britain to Canada. There is no doubt in my mind, judging from his remarks, that he was not taking any step forward in the direction of advocating a mutual preference. Practically he was the only man outside of the premier of the Transvaal, the only representative of the colonies in that great conference, who did not come out boldly and state his position on this important question. We know that he was there and listened to the remarks of Mr. Deakin, the premier of Australia, and of the other premiers, and he knew the splendid records they made on behalf of a preferential tariff being granted to the colonies, but after all these earnest efforts by the representatives of other colonies, we find the Prime Minister of Canada rising up and attempting to throw cold water on the proposition of granting an imperial preference to the colonies. I would like to ask the Prime Minister again, seeing he is now in his seat, why, although other colonies of Great Britain have not granted a preference to Great Britain in their markets they at the same time are allowed to send their goods into Germany under the favoured nation clause? I want to impress upon him the importance of the German market to the Canadian people. The development of this country depends largely on the development of our agricultural products, and when you consider that Germany is the second best market in the world, and that last year she imported over $200,000,000 worth of agricultural products such as we produced in Canada, I cannot understand why the Prime Minister of this country does not take sufficient interest in that great agricultural industry to endeavour to procure for us the same advantage in the German market that the other colonies have. There is no reason, so far as I can understand, except the bungling mismanagement of this government in regard to our commercial relations with Germany; that is the only reason that we have not obtained admission into the German market. If the other colonies are sending their goods into Germany under the favoured nation clause while our goods go in there handicapped by a surtax, is it not reasonable and fair that we should discuss this question in the House, and ask the Prime Minister to interest himself in regard to it and endeavour to secure an arrangement under which our agricultural products may enter Germany on a better footing than they do at present. Last year $66,000,000 worth of wheat went into Germany from outside countries, $34,000,000 worth of barley, $17,000,000 worth of rye and $5,000,000 worth of fruit, the very products we are raising in this country, and would it not be of great advantage to the people of the Dominion to get access to that market? But instead of getting a share of that $200,000,000 market you find us to-day only getting $1,000,000. Last fall we saw the spectacle of nearly 60,000 barrels of Canadian apples placed on the British market, with the consequence that the home market was demoralized by that large import, while at the same time apples were selling in the German market at a considerably advanced price, but our exporters were unable to send apples into that country.

Now, I have tried to call the attention of the government to the necessity of advocating a mutual preference. At the present time the preference we are granting is not only working to the detriment of Canadian manufacturers, but we find that German goods are being filtered into Canada in large quantities through English middlemen under the eyes of the Minister of Customs. The bulk of the increased imports from Great Britain into this country are largely goods that are manufactured in Germany and filtered in here under the British middlemen. Look at the position we are in. The Finance Minister says that only 25 per cent of the articles has to be manufactured in Great Britain, the other 75 per cent can be manufactured anywhere else, and these are allowed to come in under the preference. The consequence is that when you come to investigate the trade of this country, and find what kind of goods are coming to our shores, you will see that the bulk of the increase in British imports is foreign goods that are manufactured largely in Germany. Now, that is not as it should be. Our goods are shut out from Germany. Instead of our getting access to that market, instead of our agricultural products going in there under the favoured nation clause, as they were when this government came to power, they are now going in there with a surtax placed upon them.

Let us take a glance at Great Britain to-day, and the condition of her trade and commerce. Look at the decline in British trade and see what great encouragement there is for us to constantly devote our time and attention to the upbuilding of our trade with Great Britain, instead of attempting to develop it with other countries. It may be all very well for this government to say: We are doing our utmost with Japan and China to develop a trade for the products of the farm. What I claim is that you have to educate the people of Japan and China up to a taste for such products as we are producing while, here in Germany, is a market already created for the products that we are producing. Two hundred million dollars worth of the very same kind of products that we are producing in the Dominion of Canada in the greatest quantity Germany is ready and willing to buy and is compelled to buy from outside sources. Let us look at the decline in British trade. From 1870 to 1874 the annual per capita average was £7 7 3; 1880 to 1884, £6 13; 1885 to 1889, £6 3 7; 1890 to 1894, £6 2 10; 1895 to 1899, £5 19; 1902 to 1906, £6 13 3. Surely that is not an encouraging position for Great Britain to be placed in. There is not a man in this House who has investigated the trade of the different countries of the world but feels that in so far as Great Britain is concerned she is compelled to change her position in regard to the tariff and the protection of her industries. We hear hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House tell us what preference has done in Canada compared with what it has done in foreign lands because it has increased our exports to and imports from Great Britain to a marvellous extent. I would call the attention of the House to the trade which other countries are doing with Great Britain. Take the Argentine Republic, which is not granting to Great Britain a preference and you will find that the increase in the imports from Great Britain to the Argentine Republic amounted to £7,700,000 in the six years from 1900 while the increase of imports into Canada only amounted to £4,600,000 during the same time. We were able last year to present to the House the reports of the representatives of Canada in Great Britain who distinctly stated in their letters to the Department of Trade and Commerce that in so far as goods coming into Canada under the preference were concerned the bulk of them were coming from Germany and other foreign countries and were being filtered into Canada under the preference.

There is just one more statement that I wish to call to the attention of the House and the right hon. Prime Minister and that is in connection with the intermediate tariff. The statement was made by Dr. Jameson, premier of the Transvaal, that in so far as that tariff was concerned it was likely to cause a great deal of trouble in connection with the possibility of any of the colonies entering into a mutual tariff arrangement with Great Britain. This is what he said.

> I was alarmed, if Sir Wilfrid Laurier will allow me to say so, to see that in the Canadian parliament there is an intermediate tariff proposed.

He goes on to say that in so far as that tariff is concerned, entering into an arrangement such as we have entered into with France in the last few weeks, it is going to materially interfere with the course that can be pursued if any government take advantage of the opportunity to grant our country a mutual preference. Until near the close of the nineteenth century Great Britain was the pioneer in industrial development and in the extension of trade and commerce. We know that her ships were going to every foreign land and that her commerce was greater than the commerce of the whole world. But, what do you find to-day? You find Russia subsidizing her ships, you find Germany subsidizing her ships and railways to carry her products to the countries of the world, you find Japan doing the same, and, instead of Great Britain being in the position that she was some years ago, she is fighting for her existence upon the seas. It is time for this Dominion to wake up to its position and realize that it is our duty to look after our own interests in connection with the development of our trade with foreign lands. When Great Britain is changing her fiscal system, as I believe she will in the next few years, I wish to urge upon the government the necessity of exerting an effort in behalf of a mutual preference being granted to the Dominion of Canada and the other colonies. We can never get it by the weak arguments that have been used. We are bound together by strong ties which closer trade relations will make still stronger. Great Britain gives to the world a free market of 45,000,000 people, while other nations have their own markets and the British market as well. The United States, for instance, has 85,000,000 people as a market for its manufactures and producers in that country and in addition it has that market of the 45,000,000 people of Great Britain, giving it a market of 130,000,000 of people, while as I say, Great Britain has only a market of some 45,000,000 people. Great Britain gets nothing in return for giving her markets to her rivals. Practically every other country, by subsidies, bounties and regulations has stimulated its exports and by a tariff wall protects its home industries. Nearly every European country has erected restrictions. Great Britain and her colonies purchase in the neighbourhood of $800,000,000 worth of goods per annum. Great Britain alone purchased £565,000,000 last year and would it not be a great advantage to the colonies to have access to that market under favoured conditions such as a mutual preference would grant to them? Just a word in regard to our position with Germany and I am through. I believe it is my duty to call the attention of this government to the importance of the German market. I know that in so far as the Finance Minister is concerned he will take a great deal of delight in telling us that he does not agree with our argument on this question.

I believe it is not only my duty but that it is the duty of the members of this House to take into consideration this important market, for you must consider that Germany, situated as she is, is bound to be for years to come a purchasing country, and that Canada situated as she is cannot be in any other position than that of a large exporter of the raw material. Germany fifty years ago was a weak and poor nation commercially and industrially speaking, but to-day you find her in the front rank of the nations of the world, both commercially and industrially. Fifty years ago Germany was divided into many weak states undeveloped and lacking in enterprise. The fertility of her soil was far below that of neighbouring countries, and her mines were undeveloped and her industrial enterprise practically dead. Germany to-day, is a great unified, powerful empire whose prosperity, great industry and technical skill is recognized by all nations. In the last twenty-five years a revolution has been brought about in Germany, in industry, mining development, the arts and sciences, and trade and commerce. In 1879 Germany abandoned her free trade ideas, protected her industries and assisted her railways, and her trade and commerce to expand. Her population in 1850 was only 35,000,000, while to-day it is over 60,000,000. Germany is and will be a distinctly manufacturing country, she cannot extend in territory like Russia or like the United States, and so she cannot help but be a very large importer of the very products that we are producing in the Dominion of Canada. I believe, Sir, it is well for us not to lose the opportunity of getting into the German market and obtaining some of the advantages of that market, because no matter how soon we get into that market it will take years for us to develop a trade with that country. Then, Sir, on account of the present regulations of this government, within the last eleven years the immigration into Canada from Germany has been little or nothing, and I am sure there is not a man in this House but who realizes the importance of a German community in any country such as Canada. Instead of us assisting immigrants to come from southern parts of Europe it would be well for us to get into better relations with Germany and to obtain at least a reasonable proportion of the immigrants that leave that empire. Germany must be a heavy importer of bread stuffs and raw materials, and Canada has both. Why not get a share of that market ? For a moment let me call your attention to this position that Germany's total production of grain last year amounted to 15,000,000 tons ; that Germany consumed in that year over 20,000,000 tons leaving 5,000,000 tons to be imported and that 5,000,000 tons means over 200,000,000 bushels of grain. And here we are in the Dominion of Canada expanding in the great west, and our prairies are telling us that in the near future we will have hundreds of millions of bushels of grain to be exported, and we hear men on the other side of the House telling us what wonderful advantages Canada will derive from the development of this great agricultural wealth. And yet in the very face of all that this government have not been able to open up trade relations with the second best consumer in the world of the very agricultural products which we produce. This government no sooner came to power than they practically gave a slap in the face to the German people, and instead of our trade increasing with Germany year after year as it certainly would have increased under a favoured nation clause, it has gradually diminished and diminished until to-day our trade with that country is a paltry million dollars. And when you come to compare our trade with Germany with that of other countries, Canada is in the most humiliating position. Let me call your attention to the fact that the little Argentine republic sent into Germany last year over $48,000,000 worth of goods and $45,000,000 out of that $48,000,000 was practically of agricultural products which were produced in the Argentine republic. Compare that with the paltry few thousand dollars worth of Canadian agricultural products that go into Germany. That is certainly a most humiliating position. But let us look a little further. If the British market were better than the German market for the Argentine republic and its people, why do they not send their goods to the British market instead of sending them to the German market? I would like some of these gentlemen opposite to explain how it is that these countries that are producing just the same kind of raw material that we produce in the Dominion of Canada are sending into Germany such great quantities of it in place of sending it into the British market which is just as free and open to them, and much easier of access to them than the German market is. But what I claim is that so far as Germany is concerned we find from the reports published from time to time that these products are selling to better advantage in the German market than they are in the British market to-day and have been for years past, and that is the reason these countries are trading with Germany to a great extent. Brazil sent $20,000,000 worth of goods to Germany last year, Chili $21,000,000, Australia $28,000,000. How is it that Australia, a British colony sent $28,000,000 worth of goods to Germany and did not send these goods into the British market if they are receiving such a wonderful advantage in the British market? British West Africa sent $10,000,000 worth of goods to Germany, India sent $51,000,000, the United States sent $236,000,000 and Canada a paltry $1,000,000.

Now, Sir, the argument is often used that from the countries from which Germany receives a large portion of her imports Germany is importing her goods in large quantities. I want to point out that the very opposite is the case. Take for instance the Argentine republic that sends $48,000,000 worth of goods to Germany and she only imports from Germany $11,000,000 worth. Brazil which sends $27,000,000 worth of goods per year to Germany only imports $10,000,000 from Germany. Chili which sends $21,000,000 worth of goods a year to Germany only imports from Germany $7,000,000. Australia while sending $28,000,000 worth to Germany only imports $10,000,000 worth per annum. British West Africa while sending $10,000,000 worth of exports to Germany only imports $1,800,000 worth. British India while sending into Germany $51,000,000 worth of goods only imports $13,000,000 worth. The United States sends into Germany $236,000,000 worth of goods annually and she only imports $106,000,000 from Germany. But look at Canada that has only sent a paltry million dollars worth of goods into Germany and she is importing from Germany in spite of the surtax that this government placed on German goods, $7,000,000 worth of goods a year from Germany, again showing the balance of trade on the wrong side of the ledger. I do not believe that this question is receiving the attention of this House that I think it should receive. Canada, without a trade in Germany and with her citizens paying a surtax on these $7,000,000 worth of goods, certainly must feel that so far as she is concerned she is getting no advantage in that market. But as I said before, German goods are coming in under the British preference. After an inquiry made in England, the Minister of Finance had to admit last year that there was practically no examination made to see whether any of the goods that were brought in here under the British preference were not goods coming from foreign countries. Then, Sir, Germany's outside interests are very great. She has invested in foreign stocks and bonds over $5,000,000,000 and her return from that investment last year amounted to over $275,000,000. And when I hear men talking about exports and the balance of trade being on the right side, I fear they do not take into consideration that in these older countries a large portion of the money they receive for carrying on their affairs is brought in from foreign investments.

As I have said, this government for the past eleven years have been dealing with this question in a half-hearted manner. They do not seem to have attempted to negotiate with the great German empire, and to obtain for our people some consideration in that market. I believe it is high time that we should impress upon this government the necessity of dealing with this question and, instead of continuing to neglect it or maintaining the position assumed by the Minister of Agriculture who says that as far as he is concerned, if Germany cares to come and treat with him he will listen to the appeals of that great nation, let these gentlemen deal with it in a broadminded business-spirit, deal with it as if they meant to obtain for the people of Canada some recognition in the German market.

My object in bringing this matter before the House is to impress on the government its great importance and to urge on them the necessity of dealing with it immediately. I believe it is my duty to bring its importance to the notice of the House. My doing so may afford an opportunity for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to call me unpatriotic and to deal out harsh words in regard to the statements I have made; but these statements are founded upon fact and it is our duty as legislators to deal with these questions in a business-like manner, instead of in the haphazard, careless manner in which the government have been dealing with them for the last eleven years.

Mr. J. B. McCOLL (West Northumberland, Ont.). Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House has made a characteristic Conservative speech and the first observation that I have to make, which will apply not only to the speech just delivered but to the various speeches that have been made by members of the opposition during the present debate, is that although they have indulged in the most adverse criticism of the policy of the government both as to its constructive features and to its administrative features, not one of them has, so far as I have been able to ascertain, suggested what changes should be made to remedy the condition with which they seem to find fault. They criticise the taxation; they say it is too high, but they do not say in what way they would reduce it. They claim that the expenditure is too large, yet they have not, except perhaps by inference, pointed out where that expenditure should be reduced. They have claimed that the balance of trade is very much against us yet they have not suggested any means by which that balance might be turned to our favour.

The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), who is the acknowledged financial critic of the opposition, addressed this House for something over five and a half hours, and although he indulged in criticism of every part of the policy of the government, I was not able to ascertain throughout all his speech one element of what we might call constructive policy or one element of constructive statesmanship. His speech from beginning to end was of an eminently destructive character. He claimed that because the revenue of the country has increased, therefore the taxation of the people has increased. This, I think, is a most transparent fallacy. Hon. gentlemen opposite have claimed that because we now collect a larger revenue than we did in years gone by, therefore the taxation upon the people has increased. I maintain that the true test as to whether or not the taxation of the people has increased is not the gross amount of revenue that we may collect but the rate of taxation that is imposed. They admit that the rate of taxation has been decreased and yet they claim that the people are more heavily taxed than they were under the late Conservative government. One reason why we have in increased revenue is that the present tariff has been placed upon a revenue basis while under the old national policy which they laud so highly on every occasion, the tariff was, as they claim and admit upon a distinctly protective basis. Another reason and the main reason why the revenue which they call taxation, has increased, is that the country is much richer, it is doing a far greater amount of business than it did in days gone by and the people, as my hon. friend has suggested, are relatively much richer than they were.

That brings to my mind the difference between a revenue tariff and a protective tariff and also the question as to whether the present tariff is a revenue or a protective tariff. It is, I suppose, universally admitted that any tariff, however small, even a low revenue tariff, carries with it a certain amount of protection; but when we come to consider whether any particular tariff is a revenue tariff or a protective tariff, we should consider what is the guiding principle, what are the leading features of that tariff and judge it upon that basis. I maintain that the tariff that has been in existence under the present government is distinctly a revenue tariff and not a protective tariff. One proof of that proposition is the results, and I would point out here another difference and a condition that prevailed under the old national policy, that is that while the taxation under the national policy was at a higher rate than it is to-day, the result of that taxation, the revenue from it, did not appear as large as it would to-day because a large portion of that taxation being upon a protective basis would go into the hands of the protected interests and not into the public treasury. That is one reason why even if we had to-day the same rate of taxation as we had before, we yet would not have the same amount of revenue, and according to the contentions of hon. gentlemen opposite, as they base what they call taxation upon the amount of revenue, the taxation would appear to be greater to-day although in fact it is much lower. They have also very strongly criticised the expenditure. A reference to the trade returns shows that in 1896 the total trade of Canada was something less than $240,000,000. In 1907 the total trade of Canada was between $600,000,000 and $700,000,000 and if we add to that the invisible trade, the invisible exports of which the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) spoke, I feel certain that if we had statistical information showing the exact amount of all these invisible exports, the total trade of Canada to-day would be at least three times what it was in 1896. What does that mean? That means that we are to-day doing three times the amount of business that we were doing in 1896. Increased business means increased expenditure. That is a proposition which will apply to any private business as well as to the public business. I would like to ask any hon. gentleman who is engaged in business whether, when that business increases, his expenses do not also increase.

Another consideration is this. It is well known that the prices of labour and materials have increased, and that it costs much more to-day to do the same amount of work than it did in 1896. In fact any public work constructed to-day would probably cost 50 per cent more than it would if constructed in 1896. That is another element which should not be lost sight of in accounting for this increased expenditure.

What were the reasons for increasing our expenditure? When this government took office, they found the public services of the country in a starved condition. I know particularly that was the case in my own riding. But since that time, these public services have been very much improved, which entails increased expenditure. But while the opposition have greatly criticised this increased expenditure, there is one thing which has occurred to me and it is this, namely, that the true test of the sincerity of their criticism is whether they ever objected to any of the items. Take all these different expenditures, how many of them did they move to have struck out or reduced? I have been a member of this House since 1900, and I do not recollect one instance in which any member of the opposition ventured to move that an item of expenditure be struck out. That, it appears to me, is a true test of their sincerity and a fitting reply to their objections. Then considering the fact that we are doing three times as much business now as we did in 1896, would it be surprising if the expenditure had increased three-fold? As we all know however, although it has increased materially, it has not increased in proportion to the increase in business.

Then comes the question of the adverse balance of trade. In that connection the first point that occurs to me is whether there is really against Canada an adverse balance of trade. Because the trade returns show that we import more goods than we export, hon. gentlemen opposite argue that the balance of trade is against us and that, if such a condition continues, it is only a question of time when we shall become involved in great financial straits. But when we look around the country and when we find that in every line of trade the country is prospering and has been prospering during all the years this balance of trade has been against us, it occurs to me that in reality the balance of trade is probably the other way. There are some elements which enter into consideration of that question that have been referred to by other speakers. My hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) referred to the fact that settlers' effects brought into the country should not be considered in determining that question, and he gave the figures. In my opinion, when considering whether the balance of trade is against us or not, we should only take into consideration that portion of our yearly imports which are actually consumed in that particular year. Any imports that become the capital of any concern should not be considered, because we have them as an asset. Such imports are not consumed in that particular year, and the same distinction should be made with regard to them as we make between capital and ordinary expenditure in other matters. Suppose a manufacturing concern brings in any class of goods that are not consumed in the particular year but become a part of its stock or capital asset, they should not be considered in determining this question. Then there is another element. If we had the statistics to show what that amounts to, I feel certain it would have a very important bearing indeed on the question of balance of trade and would help us to determine whether the balance was really against us or not. Reference has been made to our tourist trade. When referring to Switzerland, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) said that they exported their scenery. If I understood his contention aright, it was that a large number of American tourists were attracted to Switzerland by its scenery, and while there they expended a large amount of money, and that country was the richer to the extent of that expenditure. That contention I believe to be perfectly true, but why did the hon. gentleman not apply it likewise to Canada? If he did, I feel certain he would find that it amounts to a greater sum than we have any conception of at present. Let us see how it works out. Americans come into Canada and bring with them large sums of money. They spend, many of them, not only a few days at a hotel but months—practically the whole summer months here. Many have summer homes in this country which they occupy five or six months every year and which are kept up, not by Canadian, but by American money. That money is expended in consuming our cheese, butter, bacon and other products that would otherwise naturally be exported. If we did not have that portion consumed by that foreign element, we would have that much more for export and it would appear in the trade returns to the credit of our exports. But when it is expended in the way I have indicated, it comes under the head of that class of exports for which we do not get credit in our trade returns.

There is another feature of that trade. These people who come to this country and live here temporarily buy a large amount of imported goods. For instance, there are men who come, year after year, to the town of Cobourg, and who buy practically their whole year's supply of clothing in that town. The reason is that they can purchase in Canada imported goods at much lower prices than in their own country, and when they return to their own country, they take in that clothing as personal wearing apparel free of duty. So, whatever it amounts to, there is in that way a certain quantity of goods imported into Canada and these goods remain in Canada only temporarily, being imported, not by the Canadian consumer, but, in reality, by the foreign consumer. We have no statistics to show what that trade amounts to; I wish we had. But I feel safe in saying that it would represent a much larger sum than we now have any idea of. When we consider the number of people coming to all parts of Canada—to Niagara-on-the-Lake, Hamilton, Toronto, Cobourg, Port Hope, the Thousand Islands and all along the St. Lawrence, to Muskoka and other northern districts of Ontario, to many places in Quebec and the maritime provinces and also to many places in the West—I say, when you consider this great annual influx of people, you can form some idea of the extent of the trade to which I have referred.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. McColl) a question? Does not he think that Canadians spend as much money abroad as is spent by foreigners visiting Canada?

Mr. McCOLL. Certainly not. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) ventured the opinion that Canadians spend abroad as much as Americans and other tourists spend in Canada. I believe that if the hon. gentleman would inquire into the matter, he would find that he is entirely wrong. I do not believe that the expenses of Canadians in other countries would amount to one-twentieth part of what is spent in this country by the tourists who visit it—an hon. member beside me suggests that it would not be one-hundredth part. Therefore, so far as this question of the balance of trade is concerned, I believe that if all the elements were taken into consideration, if we had the full statistics before us, it would be found that the balance of trade is not against us. Even if it is, then I say that there are no bad results from that cause, for it is an acknowledged fact that we have had for years unprecedented prosperity in this country.

I do not propose to discuss to any extent the policy of the government. The government's fiscal policy was very ably stated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) The criticisms of that policy have been, I maintain, completely answered by hon. members on this side of the House; and, to enter into a discussion of the points involved, would mean repetition which I do not propose to go into. There is one thing, however, upon which I might venture to say a word. The Prime Minister of Canada (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) before he came into power made the statement that when his party had the direction of the country's affairs, it would not be necessary to quote figures to show that Canada was prosperous, but that the people would know it from the jingle of the coin in their pockets. I maintain that that prediction has been literally fulfilled, for it is undeniable that we have in this country, and have had ever since this government came into power, unprecedented prosperity.

But, while I do not propose to follow that matter any further, I do propose to discuss for a short time the fiscal policy of the opposition since 1896, or since they became in opposition. And, on that point, the first remark I have to make is that the whole fiscal policy of the present opposition has been a combination of contradictions and inconsistencies. When the Fielding tariff was first brought before parliament in 1897, what criticism was made of it by the then leader of the Conservative party, Sir Charles Tupper? I propose to read the words delivered by him on that occasion. He said:

> The result is that this tariff goes into operation and the hon. gentleman knows that the industries of this country are already paralyzed in consequence, while hon. members gloat over the destruction of Canadian industries. I was reading the wail, the sorrowful wail, of those industries in the Montreal 'Gazette,' where one manufacturer after another declared that those industries were ruined, that their mills must close, and that they saw staring them in the face a return to the deplorable state of things that existed when the hon. gentleman who last addressed the House was in charge of the fiscal policy of this country. I say that a deeper wrong was never inflicted upon Canada.

And he goes on:

> I feel that, so far from rejoicing at it from a party standpoint, I deplore from the bottom of my heart the ruin that is going to be inflicted upon the best interests of Canada and upon its great industries. Still, I unhesitatingly say that, from a party point of view, the hon. gentlemen are doing our work; they are showing the people of this country that no reliance can be placed upon the most solemn declaration that they make either in the House or out of it; they are showing the people of this country that, having obtained power, which was all they wished for, they are now prepared to abuse that power at a cost of a sacrifice of the industries of Canada.

The Fielding tariff went into operation. Instead of the dire calamities falling upon us which were predicted by Sir Charles Tupper, the very opposite occurred; instead of the dismal wail that he predicted, we heard rejoicing over unprecedented prosperity. When the election campaign of 1900 came around, what position did we find Sir Charles Tupper taking then? Why, when he saw that the country had prospered under the policy of this government, he claimed that it was the old national policy. I myself heard him in the town of Cobourg make a declaration to that effect. Upon that occasion he was accompanied by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr.

Foster), and also by the Hon. Hugh John Macdonald, and Sir Charles Tupper referred to the policy of this government in these words: 'That Sir Wilfrid was then mounted upon his (Sir Charles Tupper's) national policy horse.' Well, Sir, when the elections came on the government was overwhelmingly sustained, the leader of the Liberal-Conservative party went down to ignominious defeat, and when parliament assembled for the session of 1901 a new leader appeared, the hon. gentleman who still retains that position. Then what did we find as one of the acts of this new leader with regard to a fiscal policy? Although the people had so strongly pronounced in favour of the tariff that was then in existence, we find him session after session moving an amendment to the budget and complaining of the unsatisfactory condition of the present tariff. He wound up his resolution by what he was pleased to call a declaration for adequate protection. Now, Mr. Speaker, what that hon. gentleman exactly meant by 'adequate protection' I have never been able to ascertain. However, that resolution was moved session after session. Whatever it meant, the policy of the opposition in 1901 to 1904 was adequate protection. I do not know that the hon. gentleman ever defined adequate protection. I was under the impression that that resolution was framed in an indefinite way designedly to mislead the people of Canada. It was a resolution that he could take to the maritime provinces and say that adequate protection meant one scale of duties; he could go up to Ontario and Quebec and say that adequate protection meant another scale of duties, and he could go to the west and say that adequate protection meant still another scale of duties. I always thought that it might properly be called adequate humbug, or perhaps more properly still, inadequate humbug, because it did not succeed in humbugging the people of Canada. Well, the elections of 1904 came round, and the opposition went to the country on the policy of adequate protection. We know the result; again the government was overwhelmingly sustained, again their leaders went down to ignominious defeat. Since that time what have we seen? One thing is certain, we have not heard anything more about adequate protection. I have not heard during this parliament, that expression used once by members of the opposition. That has been abandoned.

Mr. BLAIN. May I suggest that it is still the policy of the opposition?

Mr. McCOLL. The hon. member says adequate protection is still the policy of the opposition. Well, this is the first time I have heard that statement made during this parliament, and I would like if the hon. gentleman would, at his convenience, give me a definition and publish a definition of what he means by adequate protection. I would like to ask him if he means by adequate protection an increase or a reduction in the custom duties?

I have already referred to the fact that since this parliament opened we have not heard anything about adequate protection, but the policy of the hon. gentlemen has been, from the first session of the present parliament up to the present moment, a policy of slander and abuse of their political opponents, a policy of insinuation, of innuendo and calumny, of slander and detraction.

Last year the leader of the opposition thought it advisable for him to make a tour of the country, and in order to prepare himself it was necessary to construct some sort of a platform upon which he could stand. That platform has since been known as the Halifax platform. Now, when I turn to the fiscal policy of that platform, what does it say?

A fiscal policy which will promote the production within Canada of all useful articles and commodities that can be advantageously produced or manufactured from, or by means of, our natural resources, having due regard to the interests of the consumer as well as to the just claims of our wage-earning population.

Now, I would ask my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) when he comes to give a definition of adequate protection, if he would try and elaborate that plank I have just read and tell me exactly what it means; tell me what scale of duties he would introduce if he had an opportunity. Why, Sir, that plank I have just read is just as indefinite, is just as elastic, as was the old resolution for adequate protection. I think the people of Canada will require them to define it a little more clearly. As I have the Halifax platform before me, there is another plank in it, not applying particularly to fiscal matters, but which perhaps it would not be out of place for me to mention. It is the plank in reference to the reformation of the laws regarding the civil service. That is a very prominent question before parliament and the country. But, Sir, when I first read that plank in this platform, some time during the month of September last, the first thing that occurred to me was the use that the opposition made of the civil service when they last had an opportunity of dealing with it. It will be remembered that after the election of 1896, after the Conservative government had been defeated at the polls, but before they had resigned, they made an attempt to fill all the party offices with their party friends. It will be remembered that there were something like 400 orders in council passed which the then Governor General refused to ratify, but left to be dealt with by their successors. Then in addition to the 400 orders in council appointing their friends to office, there was a considerable number of departmental appointments which they were able to get through without going before the Governor in Council at all and of which we have no record. In order to make 400 appointments to office there would have to be 400 vacancies provided in some way, or 400 new offices established. The fact is that there were 400 vacancies that were made.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the hon. gentleman including in that number the 300 Queen's Counsel who were appointed at that time?

Mr. McCOLL. I was referring to the orders in council.

Mr. BENNETT. I think they were included in that number.

Mr. McCOLL. I did not know there were 300 included in it.

Mr. BENNETT. Between 250 and 300 were included in that 400.

Mr. McCOLL. But I would ask my hon. friend whether he and his friends ever considered or made any inquiry into the trafficking in offices that took place at that time in order to create these vacancies and to make new appointments. What I say is that trafficking in offices, that constituted a violation of the Criminal Code, took place at that time and I would like to ask the hon. leader of the opposition if, when he framed this platform, he had in his mind that fact, and if one of his reasons for desiring a reformation of the civil service laws is that in future he may be able to prevent or perhaps facilitate what they were unable to accomplish in 1896 ?

I have gone briefly over the Conservative fiscal policy since 1896, and when we consider, in the first place, the predictions of Sir Charles Tupper, his change of attitude within the next three or four years, the uncertain, indefinite and elastic 'adequate protection' resolution, then the indefinite and uncertain policy at present set forth in the Halifax platform, when we consider all these changes and the inconsistent positions hon. gentlemen have taken, at one time claiming that the present government has adopted the old national policy and at another time claiming that it is something entirely different, I think we are justified in characterizing them as the offspring of minds which are a strange mixture of recklessness, presumption and inconsistency with low artifice and cunning. One other matter has occurred to me and that is the difference between a political platform and a political party policy and the definitions I propose to give are based upon the present position of the Conservative party. A political party platform is something placed on paper, arranged into paragraphs, called planks, embodying high ideals, some of which, perhaps all of which, are utterly impracticable and impossible of being carried out. A political party policy is the course of action practised and pursued by that political party. Now, Sir, if we are to make the Halifax platform conform to the policy of the party, as we see it demonstrated in this House, it will require the addition of several planks. In the first place, Sir, it will require a plank involving the principle of unreasonable, silly, parliamentary obstruction. Then, they will require a plank involving the principle of slander, calumny and detraction. Then, they will require a plank involving the principle of hypocrisy and inconsistency, and Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might say that they will require a plank which would be called the pipe stem plank. It will be remembered that not long ago, during the present session the hon. leader of the opposition, standing in his place in this House, made the statement that he would remain there, like a pipe stem, if what he was contending for was not then granted. I have thought that perhaps that declaration was made in a moment of weakness and that upon reflection the hon. gentleman will not, in fact, place that plank in his platform. However, I sincerely hope that he will not. I am sure that it would be a very undesirable spectacle for hon. members on this side of the House to see sitting opposite them a party composed of pipe stems. Now, I do not propose to detain the House any longer and in conclusion I have just one word to say to the opposition.

Mr. BENNETT. Now, go easy.

Mr. McCOLL. It will only apply to certain members of the opposition. I do not claim that it will apply to all but to those to whom it does apply I desire to address these few words. In the language of the beautiful prayer recited by you, Sir, before opening the proceedings of this House day after day, may truth and justice, religion and piety be established amongst those members of the opposition. May they discontinue their silly practice of parliamentary obstruction; may they abandon their policy of slander, calumny and detraction; may they, for the balance of the session, apply themselves to their proper and legitimate duties as members of parliament and thereby to some extent make atonement for the wrong and injustice so far inflicted upon the members of the House and upon the country.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). The hon. gentleman (Mr. McColl) who has just taken his seat is I think a modest man; he certainly does not speak often in the House and I would not have had anything much to say in reference to what he has said were it not that in my opinion the language that he has used to-day is such as will not commend itself to members on either side of the House. I think that an hon. gentleman in addressing this House ought not to attribute motives to as honourable men as there is in the House, and I am sure that the respected leader of the opposition bears as high a character amongst members on both sides as any man who has ever been in this parliament. And yet the hon. member (Mr. McColl) accuses the leader of the opposition with intentionally trying to deceive the people of the country and being dishonest in his motives. That sort of language is certainly unbecoming from the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. McColl). The hon. member said that we on this side of the House found a great deal of fault with the government but that not one of us ventured to explain how we could reduce the expenditure. Surely if the hon. gentleman has been reading the newspapers lately he would see how the public expenditure might be reduced. If he has read the report of the Civil Service Commission he will find that we have been paying in numerous cases at least 100 per cent more for the goods bought by the government than should have been paid. And he would see that that is the legitimate result of the patronage system, which, in one case in the City of Quebec, was such that only one flour dealer was placed on the patronage list and all flour had to be bought from him no matter at what price. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McColl) would also have seen that a great deal higher price was paid for flour in Quebec than the same flour could be bought for in the city of Halifax. The hon. gentleman might also have discovered had he tried to, that in the city of Quebec, pork was bought for the Department of Marine and Fisheries at $24 per barrel when the same pork was selling in the city of Halifax for $17.50. Here was a difference of $6.50 a barrel on the pork purchased. And who called attention to this? It did not come from this side of the House alone. Attention was called to it by Mr. Owen, a civil servant, and he has been suspended.

Mr. BENNETT. Serves him right for exposing the government.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McColl) will find a great many ways in which the expenditure of the country can be very easily reduced. He can easily see that if the government would only advertise for such commodities as they want and if they refuse to recognize party and political pressure things would be honestly done and a great deal of money saved to the country. I venture to say that the members of this House would buy supplies for their own home, or the merchants in this House who buy merchandise, do not ask their own party and political friends to tender, and exclude every one else from the competition. I think it is the duty of this government as it should be the duty of this government as it should be the duty of every government to do business on business principles. The system of excluding the general public from tendering and confining tenders only to political friends should be at once discontinued. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McColl) proceeded to say that the tariff now in force was not a protective tariff but that it was a revenue tariff. On that question I need only refer the hon. member (Mr. McColl) to the speech of the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) who declared the other day in this House boldly, that the present tariff in force was a protective tariff. I wonder if the hon. gentleman (Mr. McColl) thinks that a duty of 30 per cent on boots and shoes is free trade in boots and shoes or a revenue tariff either. Is it not high protection? The hon. gentleman (Mr. McColl) referred to Sir Charles Tupper, and the only wonder I have is that after his long experience Sir Charles Tupper thought the Liberal party was honest. I remember once when I was but a young member of this House walking up the street in Ottawa with Sir Charles Tupper and he said to me: It is a pity that any party should be so long in opposition that they would loose hope, because the Liberals are making statements that they will have great reason to regret in after years, and statements which are detrimental to the best interests of the country. Sir Charles Tupper supposed that the Liberals of that day were honest when they professed to reduce the expenditure of the country. When the right hon. leader of the present government told us that if the Liberals came into power they would give us free trade as they have it in England and when Sir Richard Cartwright said: We will cut the head off protection and trample upon its body; do you think the people of Canada had a right to expect there would be a tariff brought into force which would give an average of 16 or 17 per cent on both dutiable and free goods? Do you think they have any such tariff as that in England? Why it is simply absurd to make any such supposition. What I am astonished at is that Sir Charles Tupper, an astute statesman, did not size up the present government better than he did. He might have known that they had a platform only to get in on, and they had but very little intention of carrying out their promises. My own impression is, but I hardly like to say it because I do not like to make strong statements, but I must say that I think that when these gentlemen opposite made the statement that they would reduce the expenditure of this country three million dollars or four million dollars a year, they were not sincere in their profession. They must have known that this country was developing and that as it developed a larger expenditure would be required. Now, nobody finds fault with a moderate and honest expenditure of public money. Nobody on this side of the House would criticise that. But it is the rascality that is going on: it is the thieving if I may use so strong a word; it is the dishonesty that has apparently permeated the whole service that causes the people all over the country to talk about graft and about the way this government is conducting our affairs, and we have a specimen of it to-day when three officials in one department alone have been suspended. Then we have the spectacle of the government appointing a commission to investigate the report of their own commissioners as it were. Is that not a nice spectacle? Here is a commission composed of straight party men, of men of high standing, men whose ability nobody will doubt, men who occupied high positions and whose fitness to make such an inquiry was recognized——

Mr. FINLAY. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Yes, two or three of them if you like.

Mr. FINLAY. Were not these three officials who were suspended appointed in the Conservative times?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I don't know when they were appointed and I don't care.

Mr. FINLAY. That is what I am told.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I don't care by whom an official is appointed, if he is dishonest I would not hold up one finger to keep him in office. What the country wants is honest men, and what I do think is that the conduct of any official will be explained by the conditions with which he has been surrounded. How can you expect a man to buy at the very lowest price if he is obliged to buy what is wanted from just one man who is a party friend of the government. Do you think that he will be able to get goods at bottom prices? The Civil Service Commission points out that the government should no longer buy goods retail but that they should buy wholesale and get the ordinary besiness discount the same as business men do. Does not the hon. gentleman sell at wholesale a great deal cheaper than he does at retail?

Mr. FINLAY. It would depend on circumstances.

Mr. U. WILSON. Would it? I have been in business for forty-five years and if a wholesale merchant tried to sell goods to me at retail prices I do not think he would sell many nor would the hon. gentleman sell many goods to dealers if he asked them retail prices. If he was selling to the present government I suppose he would get almost anything he asked, judging from what has transpired.

The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) yesterday found fault with the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) for talking about scandal, and he said that that hon. member should have referred to Conservatives who had violated the laws and given rise to scandals as well as to the Liberals whom he mentioned. He had not a word to say of the member for South Oxford (Mr. M. S. Schell) who had read a circular whose authenticity had been denied over and over again so far as the Conservative party was concerned. The hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder), I think pointed out that it was a private circular emanating from the Liberal party inasmuch as they have liberally carried out what is recommended. More than that, the hon. gentleman himself resumed his seat without finding one word of fault with any Liberal wrong-doer. If we criticise men on one side we should criticise evil doers on the other side as well.

He also criticised the Conservative government because of the kind of Ministers of Agriculture they had appointed; he said that they had a brewer, a lawyer and a doctor, but that this government had made a great improvement by selecting a farmer. It would have been more accurate if he had said an agriculturist, using his explanation of an agriculturist as they understand it in Wellington.

Mr. FISHER. That is just the distinction.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. A man that works the farmers. I wish to say for Sir John Carling that there are perhaps few men in this country who have taken as much interest in farming as he has. While a member of the Ontario government he was the means of establishing the experimental farm in western Ontario and then after becoming a member of the Dominion government, he established all of the Dominion experimental farms except two. The farmers, I think, have little fault to find with men like Sir John Carling who has devoted so much of his time to their interst and has caused the establishment of experimental farms in Canada.

The hon. member referred to conditions in Russia; he spoke of darkest Russia, the land of serfdom, of ignorance, of degradation, of wretchedness, of misery. He should have whispered to the Minister of the Interior that it was not a wise policy to offer $5 a head for these Russians coming to this country who are members of the farming class, farm labourers, carters, stable men, gardeners, railway men and miners. Is it not too bad that this government should continue to offer a bonus to bring in men of the character described by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie)? Is it not too bad to locate them amongst our people and to pay $5 a head bonus upon them? This is sufficient condemnation of the government's policy, so far as it concerns immigration from Russia.

Then Sir, he talked about taxation and like all the speakers on that side of the House, tried to make us believe that we are not taxed so much when we are paying $73,000,000 a year as we were when we paid $27,000,000 a year. That is the theory advanced by my hon. friend, and I am astonished that any man should take that view. We find the taxation of the people in 1896 and in 1906 was :

| Year. | Taxation. |
|---|---|
| 1896.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $27,759,285 |
| 1906.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 51,565,585 |
| Increase.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 23,806,300 |

But Sir, there is worse to come, as for the very next year, 1908, the taxation is to be $73,359,108, or $45,599,823 more than it was in 1896, when these hon. gentlemen assumed office. This is the way they have carried out their promise to reduce the taxation on the people and have fulfilled their claim that they would be able to run the government for $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 less than the Conservative government spent. The right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), speaking in Toronto, declared that they could administer the government for $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 less but the Hon. David Mills, I think, said over $4,000,000 less.

The hon. member (Mr. Guthrie) said further that the expenditures to which the Conservative opposition have taken exception amounted to only $1,500,000, and that this is a mere trifle, a mere bagatelle, out of $750,000,000, and that any corporation would be satisfied if their expenditure was as well managed as that. I dare say we would be fairly well satisfied if we were getting value, but when we pay 100 per cent and in some cases over 100 per cent more for goods than the current price, we think there is grave ground for complaint. We see this man Merwin, who apparently has had the ear of the Minister of Marine continuously and who seems to have it still, for the government are still dealing with him. Only the other day I saw an account for the use of a tug owned by him. A larger tug was hired by the government for $30 a day including crew and fuel, but Merwin came along and had the government take his tug for $25 a day, the government to furnish the fuel and pay the men, this to include Sundays and days when the boat was laid up for repairs. In one season he received within a few dollars of the amount he paid for that boat. The great Conservative party and that great statesman, Sir John Macdonald, were hounded from pillar to post by the Liberals who talked about his extravagance, his corruption and all his bad deeds. I believe that these gentlemen now feel to-day that they made a mistake, that if they said what they think about him to-day they would declare that he was one of the greatest and most economical statesmen we have ever had in this country. I have here a record for eighteen years showing the amounts to which the Liberals when in opposition objected. These amounts are as follows :

| Year. | Amount. | Vote. | Challenged on motion of |
| | $ | | |
| 1879..... | 70,000 | Civil Government..... | Sir Richard Cartwright. |
| 1880..... | Nil. | ..... | |
| 1881..... | Nil. | ..... | |
| 1882..... | 8,000 | Damages to steamer 'U. C. Upper'..... | Mr. Mills. |
| 1883..... | Nil. | ..... | |
| 1884..... | Nil. | ..... | |
| 1885..... | Nil. | ..... | |
| 1886..... | Nil. | ..... | |
| 1887..... | Nil. | ..... | |
| 1888..... | Nil. | ..... | |
| 1889..... | ..... | Manitoba Penitentiaries, to be reduced by $10,526.. | Sir Richard Cartwright. |
| 1889..... | ..... | East Pictou river improvement, to be reduced by $500..... | Mr. McMullen. |
| 1898..... | ..... | Expenditure on I.C.R., to be reduced by $200,000.. | Sir Louis Davies. |
| 1889..... | ..... | Department of Interior, to be reduced by $95,748 .. | Sir Richard Cartwright. |
| 1889..... | 50,000 | Immigration account..... | Mr. Somerville. |

The vote that year for immigration was $202,499.26. How does that compare with this year? This year we are asking $920,000 for immigration and nobody has moved to strike any out. But I am strongly of opinion that we are spending altogether too much on immigration especially when we find men starving on our streets and filling our asylums. Then there was a motion to strike out the salary of C. C. Chapman, $2,300 made by Mr. McMullen. These votes all occurred in 1889. In 1890, nil; 1891, nil; 1892, nil; 1893, nil; 1894, nil; 1895, nil; 1896, nil. The total amount that the Liberals moved to strike out of the estimates in eighteen years was $437,074. What would that amount to on an expenditure of $603,000,000? My hon. friend said that all we had moved to strike out was $1.50 on every $800. Well, all that the Liberals moved to strike out in eighteen years was 58 cents on every $800. How does that compare with the state of things at present? I think this comparison shows very clearly that these people are much more extravagant than were their predecessors in office.

I wish to say a few words with reference to the statement made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Schell). That hon. gentleman made a long speech and absolutely refused to be corrected at all, even if we had the books in our hands to show that he was wrong. The first thing he criticised was the Canadian Pacific Railway. He found fault with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) because he had said something against this government for having allowed that case to drop after it had been decided by the Supreme Court of Canada. My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle thought it should have been appealed to the Privy Council in England. But the hon. member for South Oxford thought otherwise. The reason he gave was that the matter was one which had taken place under the predecessors of this government and he asked why this government should try to get the people out of trouble when the other government got them into it. I do not think that was a good reason. If he had stood up in his place and said that on the best advice the government could get, they found it would be unwise to appeal to the Privy Council, that would have been a fairly good reason.

Mr. LAKE. They delayed too long and consequently were not allowed to appeal.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. That puts a different aspect on it. That surely makes this government responsible. They did try to take the case to appeal but they had delayed so long that the time for appealing had expired and the Privy Council would not receive it. Then he found fault with the cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He said that we gave them $200,000,000 or $250,000,000. He did not seem to mind a trifle of $40,000,000 or $50,000,000, well, I wish to refresh his memory by just recalling what the Mackenzie government did in that connection. That railway is in the neighbourhood of 3,000 miles long. The Mackenzie government offered 20,000 acres a mile to any company that would build the road. That would be 60,000,000 acres. Then they offered $10,000 cash per mile besides. That would be $30,000,000. Then they offered 4 per cent on an amount to be agreed upon over the $10,000 per mile for twenty-five years. I am of the opinion that a road built on these terms would not be a cheaper railway than the one we got. But the Mackenzie government could not get a taker. They had little faith themselves in the enterprise. I believe that Mr. Blake said that British Columbia was a sea of mountains, and another of their leaders said the railway would never earn axle grease. That probably was what they really believed but they were not well informed. Sir John Macdonald, however, who was more far seeing than these gentlemen determined to build the road and did succeed in having it built on much better terms than they offered.

The hon. gentleman said that this government had only disposed of 6,400 square miles of timber limits since they had been in office while their predecessors had given away or sold 26,000 square miles. That statement is absolutely unfounded, and I can prove its inaccuracy by the statement of the Minister of the Interior himself (Mr. Oliver). It would be just as well if hon. members, when they make speeches in the House, would stick closely to the facts. On the 5th February, 1908, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) asked:

1. Of the timber limits granted in Manitoba and the Northwest, between the 4th of February, 1878, and the 17th of August, 1896, inclusive as per list given in sessional paper No. 66a, brought down on 22nd April, 1904, how many berths were retained by the original grantees or their legal assigns, and

2. What was the total area represented thereby?

To this question the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) replied:

To question No. 1, 80. To question No. 2, 1,720·73 square miles.

That should settle once and for all these reckless statements about the amount of land that was given away to friends of the late government. But on that point, I have this much to say. We might just as well say that we gave away the whole of the Northwest, which is under free grant, because every man who wants to take up a farm on the free grant land can have a farm on condition that he complies with the homestead law. But with regard to these timber limits, there were certain conditions imposed by the late government. People then could not get hundreds of square miles as they do to-day and let them lie there unworked. They had to put up sawmills on them. The hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has told us how this thing was managed. When the late government parted with any timber limits, the purchaser had to put a sawmill on it with a capacity of 8,000 feet a day.

Then we had the scandals in the west. It is not necessary for me to say anything about the circular which the hon. gentleman read, for my hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder) has completely disposed of that. He pointed out that the thing had been totally denied, that it bore the imprint of the Liberal party and that they had it in their possession and evidently carried it out.

My hon. friend also said that the Liberals had brought in a new policy. Well, I do not know what it was, unless it was graft. It certainly was not a fiscal policy. If the difference between 2½ per cent or 3 per cent is free trade, then I do not understand the case. But, an hon. member who is as well qualified to give an opinion on such a matter as any member of this House, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) said—and I think he was right—that it was correct to add the bounty paid on the different articles to the duty. And that would make it a little higher than it was in 1896. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Schell also said that the earning capacity of men in those days was about three times what it was in 1896. That does not need any contradiction from me. I think anybody who employs men knows that he does not have to pay them three times the wages he had to pay in 1896. Then the hon. gentleman went on to try to prove that the Grand Trunk Pacific would be built without cost to the country.

Now, I want to take up another matter which is of some interest to me, whether it is to the House or not. I want to show what was said by some hon. members opposite away back in 1893 when they had their convention here in Ottawa. I am glad the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is in his place, because the first quotation I want to give is from his own speech at that convention. He may say, as Mr. Blake once said to a man who was quoting his words, that the quotation is the best part of my speech.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not say that.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) speaking in the Liberal convention of 1893 said :

Under Mr. Mackenzie the city of St. John was swept by a disastrous fire. I assert in your presence, without fear of successful contradiction, that the national policy has done more to injure the city of St. John than the great fire.

If that is true, how does the right hon. gentleman justify his conduct for the last twelve years in maintaining practically the same policy as was in force at that time ? In fact, he has gone in the opposite direction from that which he promised. For instance, he has raised the tariff on boots and shoes by 5 per cent, making it 30 per cent. I protested against it, because I did not think it was free trade. The hon. gentleman said further :

There is, as you know, a universal consensus of opinion among all classes and among all parties in this country, that the tariff that now prevails in Canada is a burdensome tariff, that it is an oppressive tariff, and is known at one time as the national policy, has been found to be a fraud and a failure.

I have several other extracts from the right hon. gentleman's speech, but I do not think it necessary to read them. There is only one, that, as it is very brief, I may give. They say, by the way, that these old books, the report of this convention, have been destroyed, but I happen to have one. At page 33 of that report the right hon. gentleman said :

I say the policy should be a policy of free trade such as they have in England.

I do not think he has ever carried out that policy—and I do not think that anybody else thinks so either. I heard the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) say the other day that since coming into power his party has carried out every plank of their platform except one, and that was the reform of the senate. I heard the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) discuss that question, and he was quite at sea—and admitted it. He thought to reform the senate by putting Reformers in it, but the Reformers did not seem willing to reform. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was at this Liberal convention, and he moved the following resolution :

We cannot but view with alarm the large increase in the public debt and of the controllable annual expenditure of the Dominion and the consequent undue taxation of the people under the government that has been continuously in power since 1878, and we demand the strictest economy in the administration of the government of the country.

Though they demanded it then, they don't seem to demand it now, but seem to think the more extravagance the better, for, instead of the expenditure being $44,000,000, or less, it has been for the year just closed $110,000,000, on a falling revenue, and next year a much larger expenditure is anticipated.

Now, I want to show how some of this money is spent. I have here a summary of what has been paid to the Manitoba 'Free Press,' a newspaper that is well known. And I will give the year and page of the Auditor General's Report so that hon. members may, if they please, satisfy themselves that this is a correct statement :

For details see Auditor General's Report, L—25 to 27, 1907; L—25, 26 and 27, 1906; L—26, 27 and 28, 1905; and L—26, 27, 28 and 29, 1904.

This shows where some of the money goes. Now, I have some facts here with regard to another matter that has been very badly managed; I refer to the Quebec bridge. This government gave a charter to a company to build that bridge. That company had a capital of only $200,000, of which $62,000 was paid up. I saw it stated in a newspaper that the company had not money enough on hand out of its capital stock to pay for the plans and specifications of the bridge. But our government came to the rescue. They first gave them a bonus of $1,000,000. Of course, they could not get through for that. After they had paid out $374,353, these people came back and the government guaranteed their bonds to the amount of $6,678,200, making the bridge company cost the Dominion of Canada $7,052,553. And where is the bridge now? It is at the bottom of the river. And the loss of the money was not the worst loss that was suffered. There was an appalling and most regrettable loss of life.

I think myself that was the greatest loss, although the other was bad enough to the people of this country. We have the proof of that in the speech given by the Prime Minister when he introduced his Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Bill, and it is a pretty good speech from his standpoint. It went a good way towards convincing his friends that he was pretty nearly right. When he introduced that Bill he took the precaution not to put any resolution before us, because that would have given the leader of the opposition some chance to get information; he first introduced the Bill and the resolution afterwards. I thought that was very unfair, and the leader of the opposition never got a copy of that Bill until after the Prime Minister had got through speaking upon it. He made a speech in which he said that all this railway would cost the people of Canada was $12,000,000 or $13,000,000, that was every cent. Now he did not say that the road could be built for that, but he said that was all it would cost the people of Canada. I think if you come to consider that they have already paid out $26,000,000 on it, and that we are going to be asked this session for $30,000,000 more, and when you come to consider the interest, interest for the five years that are past, and the interest for another five years as it will probably be five years before this road is done, I think the minister can easily double the cost that he said it would be to this country then. Not only that, but his statement was used in the general election. It was put into the political literature that was circulated throughout Canada, and they said: What a splendid bargain this country is going to get a Pacific railway from ocean to ocean, all on Canadian soil, and it won't cost Canada one cent more than $13,000,000. My goodness, they said what a bargain that is. Well, it would have been a pretty good bargain, but I think that the government was in too big a hurry, they had to go on with the railway long before they were ready, and I think they will find that this railway will cost a great deal more than they or most or other people estimated when the Bill was before the House.

Now there is the question of bounties paid by this government on iron, steel and other articles. I would like to define my position on the bounty question; I have done it before, but I think I cannot do it too often. I am prepared to encourage any industrial development by a moderate amount, until it can be demonstrated that the article can be profitably made or not then I think the government should drop it. Last year I was in favour of trying the experiment of smelting iron ore by electricity. If that can be done successfully, it will be a great thing. But I am not in favour of continuing that year after year, and allowing men to make millions at the expense of the people generally. I have in my hand a copy of a return brought down to the House showing the bounties paid from 1896-7 to January 13, 1908. We have paid in bounty on pig iron during those years, $5,108,223.95. I think most of that money was thrown away so far as any advantage to this country is concerned. I think that as soon as it was demonstrated that pig iron could be profitably made in this country, the bounty should have ceased. The bounty paid on puddled iron bars amounted to $108,061; bounty on steel ingots, $4,459,525; bounty on steel billets, $30,408; bounty on articles manufactured from steel, $1,241,473; bounty on manilla fibre, to make binder twine, I presume, $94,601; bounty on lead, $742,843.63; bounty on silver ore, $30,000; bounty on crude petroleum, $1,204,135. Total bounties paid since hon. gentlemen took office, $13,019,273.29. Now I think it is high time that this part of the business should be stopped.

I intended to say something about immigration, it would not be a speech of mine if it did not contain something on that subject. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) said there was no complaint of corruption in regard to the North Atlantic Trading Company. I think there have been very serious complaints of corruption, the charge has been made over and over again. Now when the contract was made with these people on November 28, 1904, they were not incorporated, they were no company at all, nor were they a company until the next June. Then they did not get incorporated in England, because they would get too much published, and so they went over to the Isle of Guernsey. The members of the company, as we now know, were people in very ordinary circumstances, they only had one share each, though they pretended to have great capital behind them. I want to say something with reference to their refusing to give their names, and the report made to Lord Strathcona, though perhaps that has already been put on the 'Hansard.' Lord Strathcona sent a man by the name of Charles A. Allen to Amsterdam to get these names. He felt that there was great demand in the public mind of Canada to know those names, and so he sent a special messenger over there for the purpose. And this is what he sent back to Lord Strathcona, dated June 5, 1906:

Just received letter from company, as follows: begins, very utmost we are able to do is to allow Mr. Preston to show names to Premier, Hon. Mr. Fielding, and if absolutely necessary also to only one Liberal and only one Conservative member of confidential committee, on condition that they each give a sworn declaration in writing never to mention names either verbally or in any other way and on condition that Premier takes full responsibility that these sworn declarations are kept, as disclosing names would result in some prominent members committing suicide.

We have had another motion recently that is on a par with that. The government do their business in such a way that they are afraid to give names; they try to hide behind the pretension that some great calamity will befall the country. My impression is that when men of honour do business they are not afraid to have everything exposed, they are willing to show their hand, and I think that is the right way. I think that the motions moved here the other night ought to have carried and it is simply a standing disgrace to this country that a condition of this kind should be permitted. Here is a company that got $367,000, and recently a return was brought down showing that they got $7,000 more which makes $374,000 of the public money in about two years; still we do not know who they are and the government is afraid to tell us their names for fear that some of them will commit suicide. It was a most astonishing position which the government took in inserting a clause in this contract that these men were not to violate the laws of any country in which they operated. It is my opinion that we should not protect these men in any way. I have here a clipping from the 'Evening Journal' which shows the kind of immigrants we are getting:

Dr. Clarke, superintendent of the Toronto asylum, says: Of 362 admissions of lunatics last year 136 were foreign-born, the majority recent arrivals. Those that the province will never get rid of amount to about 40. Each patient retained will cost the province $6,000.

Mr. U. WILSON.

That is a lamentable state of things. But, I have a pamphlet here that I want to show to the Prime Minister. Here is a pamphlet written by one Mr. Walker who is the assistant superintendent of immigration in London and which is issued by the Minister of the Interior. What does is show? It shows that we got from the city of London 12,336 immigrants that were sent out here by charitable organizations with the aid of small amounts contributed by the government. Do we want that kind of immigration? I have a statement here from one of the asylums that shows that about 40 per cent of the inmates since opened have been of the immigrating class who might have been detected if a proper examination had been made when they landed in this country. But, how can you expect a proper examination when they are examined in batches of a thousand or when several thousand are imposed up on an inspector in one day. Mr. Walker's statement is as follows:

|---|---|
| East End Emigration fund.. .. .. .. | *6,096 |
| Self-help Emigration Society.. .. .. .. | 506 |
| The Salvation Army.. .. .. .. .. .. | 406 |
| The Church Army.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 1,595 |
| The Church Emigration Society.. .. .. | 663 |
| The Central Unemployed Body.. .. .. | 2,842 |

*The above figures include those sent out by the East End Fund for the Central Unemployed Body.

Then we find that:

No pretense is made of assisting the emigration of a man, however competent, however industrious, however ambitious so long as he is in employment.

This man says that they get these people from the most thickly settled part of the city of London and these are the people that are sent out to us.

With regard to the state-aided and rate-aided, these are the products of the distress committees and of the workhouses. The distress committees are bodies in large centres of population, permitted under the terms of the Unemployed Workmen's Act, to levy a small rate as a tax upon the public for the emigration, and for provision by employment, or otherwise, of the unemployed in such communities.

We have had from the Minister of the Interior the statement that there was such a demand for people that the government had taken no pains to try to check emigration, but I think that it is a very great shame, after these things have been called to the attention of the government, both in this House and through the public press, that heretofore they have not taken any pains not only to see that a better class of people came, but to stop the stream before it became a great burden upon the people. We are feeding at the present time thousands of people.

I am satisfied that an extremely large proportion of the non-successes in English emigration is due to the unreasonable proportion of that class of emigration sent to Canada.

That is to say the unreasonably large number of the pauper class.

In my humble judgment the time has now come when the department should devise rigorous and effective measures to, first, discourage and, secondly, to supervise such charitably-aided emigration.

Then he goes on to state that we had over 12,000 from the city of London alone and I think myself that the time has come when the government should decide that no more bonuses shall be given to immigration agents to induce people to come to this country more especially from countries which send us such immigrants as were described by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) yesterday. I think the time has come when we should very closely scrutinize the people who come to our country and that the inspection should be rigorous.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that we were paying on all immigrants who come here from Russia ?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I did not say so. I gave the classes that were paid for—farmers, farm labourers, gardeners, stablemen, navvies, railway men and miners.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that we were paying on all farmers that come from Russia ?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. All who come are paid for.

Mr. SINCLAIR. They are ?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I say that any authorized agent of the Immigration Department who induces a farmer to come to this country is entitled to $5 for his services. If my hon. friend will read the orders in council he will understand them. It was only in January last that the government passed an order in council increasing the bonus on immigrants from Europe from $2.50 to $5 and from $1.25 to $2.50. Anybody can see that if he reads the order in council, it is not a statement I am making, and I hope that the government will in the near future see its way to take action upon this matter and abolish bonuses altogether.

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.). Mr. Speaker, some of the hon. gentlemen to your left who have taken part in this debate, particularly the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), have wandered far afield, have gone back some years in Canadian history and instituted comparisons between this and former administrations. I think that in pursuing this course, these gentlemen acted unwisely, but perhaps, after all, it is natural for gentlemen who have had something to do with former governments and who now find that they have not very much influence in public affairs and whose prospects for the future are not illuminated by many rays of hope to dwell in the past. I believe, however, that young Canadians will prefer to think of and live in the future, with all its great and glorious possibilities and its golden opportunities. But since these gentlemen have harked back to the past and have instituted these comparisons we must of necessity follow them and we do so without any reluctance because we have nothing to fear from comparisons. During a portion of last session and more particularly during this session, the Conservatives in parliament and in their press and in the country have organized and inaugurated a campaign of exaggeration, misrepresentation, villification, insinuation, innuendo, slander and abuse unparalleled in the history of this country, without once having the courage to make a manly, definite charge against any minister of the Crown, or any member of parliament and sending it home as honourable men should do. There is a commandment in the decalogue, which says : Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour. Evidently the Tory party in this country have never heard of that commandment because their whole stock in trade is the bearing of false witness against their neighbours and slander and abuse ; they have no other ressource. How they expect to avoid the consequences of such conduct,—I was almost going to say the eternal consequences of such conduct—I do not know, unless it be in the way that it is stated a notorious character named Tom Pepper avoided such consequences by getting kicked out of Hades because of his monumental mendacity. Old Nic, the Emperor of the place, who was no mean hand at that sort of thing himself, saw that his throne and reputation would be endangered if he allowed Tom to remain in the place, and those gentlemen may hope to escape in the same way. But it is dangerous to rely too much on that, the policy of the place may have changed since Tom was turned out of doors, and if that is so, the Lord help that gentleman who sits in the press gallery and writes those letters that are sent out to the weekly Tory newspapers throughout the country, for instance the Summerside 'Journal' and the Charlottetown 'Herald.'

although they must have known that the available clerks in all the departments, working overtime, working 10 or 12 hours a day were not able to prepare and bring down the returns as fast as they were demanded. They have asked for the production of so many original documents that the ordinary work of some of the departments was seriously interfered with, not that they cared so much to see these documents, but that they hoped and expected and believed that under the circumstances some of the ministers might refuse to bring them down and they would therefore have an opportunity of raising their voices in all sorts of denunciations of the government for trying to burk investigation. In this they were disappointed, because all the documents, original and otherwise, that were asked for were brought down, brought down in such quantities that I am convinced not half of them were read. Since the Christmas holidays the Public Accounts Committee has sat almost daily, on an average four days per week, a thing unprecedented in the parliamentary history of the country. Officials of the departments have been examined, witnesses by the hundred from all over Canada have been examined under oath, cross-examined and re-examined, and the Conservatives have been forced to admit that the rulings of the chairman of the committee, Mr. Clarke, were fair and impartial. And what has been discovered after all this examination and investigation? Some irregularities it is true, some misconduct perhaps, some errors of judgment; but irregularities such as might be found in any large business or shipping house, in a bank, railway corporation, insurance company or Trust company, and when those irregularities were found they seemed generally to be in those departments which had retained the services of the clerks and officials who had been trained under Tory administration. Why, Sir, no better proof can be given of the insincerity of the hon. gentlemen who made such a noise in parliament and in the country and in the press of their desire to see a clean administration and an honest and efficient departmental service than the fact that the present Minister of Marine, who has done certainly more than any other minister in that department since confederation to have honest and competent officials in that department, has in consequence of this effort, met with the opposition of some of the officials of that department and apparently with the undying enmity of the opposition.

But, let us examine the other side of the shield, and here in truth we have an unsavory pot from which I would rather not remove the lid were it not that the circumstances of the present time and the policy of the opposition compel me so to do. When we remember that the Conservative party held power in this country, practically from confederation down to 1896, we will see that they were therefore clearly responsible for any wrong-doing, for an evil, for any misconduct, for any dishonesty that grew up in the departments or in the public life of the country. And as far back as 1873 we find the then Conservative government driven out of power because of their dishonest manipulation of a large public franchise and their attempted debauchery of the electorate of the country. It is true that some five years after, taking advantage of the universal depression that then prevailed and holding out delusive, false, vain expectations and hopes to the people, they obtained power and retained it for 18 years afterwards. But by what means? By the employment of every device that perverted human ingenuity could make use of, till the Conservative party and government fell in 1896 like Milton's angels overwhelmed in utter and irretrievable ruin and confusion. In 1891 Sir John Macdonald dissolved parliament on the specious plea that he wanted to obtain a mandate from the people to enable him to negotiate a reciprocity treaty at Washington as to which he pretended to have an invitation from the then Secretary of State, Mr. Blain, but this turned out to be a pure fabrication. The real reason for the dissolution of parliament at that time was to avoid the horrible disclosures, which, however, was made in the first session of the next parliament, and which the Conservatives in 1891 knew were impending. The trick succeeded, however. The Conservatives were returned to power, but their term in office was not prolonged. Their end was approaching; Nemesis had overtaken them; their cup of iniquity was full to overflowing, and finding their end approaching and finding that they could no longer prey on the country they turned upon and tried to rend one another. Sir Mackenzie Bowell has left us a record of the last sad days of the Conservative administration, of the plots and intrigues and the cabals which make so regrettable a chapter in our national history. I would not refer to this if it were a Liberal who made this statement, but Sir Mackenzie Bowell had been for many years a colleague of these hon. gentlemen, for a time he had been their Prime Minister and leader, and he ought to know the character of the men he was dealing with and describing. And he has left this statement on record with regard to them:

> A disgusted electorate upon the first opportunity thereafter relegated them to a forced retirement from office to the opposition benches where they will remain, if I can interpret public opinion, so long as they are recognized as important factors in the Conservative party.

Well, Sir, the Conservatives were successful in 1891, but that did not save them from the disclosures and from the consequence of their misconduct for so many years. Early in the session of 1891 the Liberals promulgated their charges and I will tell you how they proceeded. They were not content with insinuations and innuendos. On the 11th of May, 1891, Mr. Tarte, then member for Montmagny, from his place in the House made this formal charge against the then sitting member for Quebec West, the Hon. Thomas McGreevy, and the then Minister of Public Works, Sir Hector Langevin, and this is the opening paragraph of the charge :

That J. Israel Tarte, Esq., a member representing the electoral district of Montmagny in this House having declared from his seat in the House that he is credibly informed and that he believes he is able to establish by satisfactory evidence, that, &c.

And he charged the member for Quebec West and the Minister of Public Works of that date with misappropriation of the public funds to a colossal extent, with the connivance of the officials of the Public Works Department, the chief engineer of that department and he asked for a committee of the House to make an investigation, and the matter was referred to the Privileges and Elections Committee. And what was the result? The Hon. Thomas McGreevy was driven out of parliament; Sir Hector Langevin had to retire from public life, and officials of the department had to be dismissed because every allegation and statement charged by Mr. Tarte was abundantly proven before the committee. Then the Conservative government began to take alarm. They feared that if this was allowed to go on something would happen. I find that charges were made against other members in a similar way. On the 23rd of September, 1891, Mr. Lister rose in his place and made this charge against the then Postmaster General, Mr. Haggart :

In accordance with the notice I gave yesterday I beg to move that James Frederick Lister, Esq., member representing the electoral district of West Lambton in this House, having declared from his seat in this House that he is credibly informed and that he believes he is able to establish by satisfactory evidence, that, &c.

Mr. Lister then refers to a contract with certain gentlemen for certain railway construction and his charge continues :

The said contract and the works in connection therewith were completed by the said contractors, to whom they were a source of great profit.

During the whole period covered by the said contract, the Hon. John G. Haggart, now Postmaster General and a member of Her Majesty's Privy Council for Canada, was a member of the House of Commons for the south riding of Lanark, and still is such member.

That the said Hon. John G. Haggart became and was beneficially interested in the profits of said contract which accrued to the share thereof standing in the name of the said Peter McLaren, and has received large sums out of the said profits, and has otherwise derived direct and substantial pecuniary benefits therefrom.

Mr. Lister concluded by asking that the charge be referred to the Committee of Privileges and Elections. But was that done? No ; that was refused. Notwithstanding the fact that a member stood up in his place in the House and taking the full responsibility upon his shoulders of such a charge and asking that it be referred to the Privileges and Elections Committee, that motion was refused by the then Conservative government and Conservative majority in this House, and I find amongst the members who voted that there should be no investigation into this charge, the names of the two Conservative members then representing the county I now represent, and I find the names also of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule).

I wonder if a Conservative member would rise in his place and make such a charge as that on his responsibility as a member of parliament and if the government should refuse to grant him investigation, what the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) would say.

Mr. SPROULE. I was not listening to the hon. gentleman. To what is he referring ?

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I am referring to the charge of James Frederick Lister, member of parliament, against the then Postmaster General. An investigation was refused by the Conservative government of that day. I was pointing out that should a similar charge be made from the opposite side to-day and this government were to refuse an investigation, the English language would not be strong enough to express the indignation of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). Coming to the session of 1892, I find that Mr. Edgar, in his place in parliament, formulated a definite charge against the then Postmaster General, who was, I think, Sir Adolphe Caron. This is how Mr. Edgar proceeded:

On April 6, 1892, James D. Edgar, the member representing the electoral district of the west riding of Ontario, in this House, having stated from his place in this House, that he is credibly informed and believes that he can establish by satisfactory evidence, etc.

Then follows a long list of charges of corrupt association with a railway company in the province of Quebec, from which large sums of money, upwards of $100,000, were obtained for the corruption of the electorate of several districts in that province, and he asked that the charges be referred to the Privileges and Election Committee. Was that motion granted ? No, Sir, it was voted down by the government and their supporters, and again I find among the Conservative members who voted down that motion the names of the hon. members for Kings, P.E.I. (Macdonald and McLean) the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). All these gentlemen voted down the motion. That was the way they showed their faith in pure administration and full and impartial investigation. But notwithstanding all the opposition made by Conservative members in the Public Accounts Committee to the efforts of the opposition of that day, notwithstanding all the attempts of the Conservative majority to stifle inquiry, so much was exposed that it shocked every civilized country in the world that knew anything about Canadian affairs. So discreditable were the revelations that Canadians residing abroad were ashamed of their country. The publicists of the old country cannot be accused of partisanship or political bias regarding Canadian affairs and they were not sparing in their comments. Let me read a few extracts from the leading British journals to show how public opinion in the old land was excited over the conditions that were shown to exist in this country :

The London 'Times'—Here in the mother country there can be only one feeling, that of deep regret for the wrong done to the fair fame of the eldest of her daughters.

London 'Graphic'—It is no longer possible to doubt that corruption in its worst form is rampant in a large portion of the Canadian civil service.

London 'Telegraph'—Enough, unfortunately, is already known in England to make it clear that only the most resolute and drastic purification can redeem public life in Canada from the taint of corruption, the like of which we have not seen in our own country for hundreds of years.

Birmingham 'Gazette'—Rascals out of office defraud the public in order to bribe rascals in office, and rascals in office prostitute themselves, sacrifice their honour and forsake their trust in order to keep on good terms with the rascals out of office.

London 'Echo'—No country can prosper where public departments are in league with fraudulent contractors, and where ministers are open to offers.

'St. James Gazette'—The existence of an organized system of corruption among public officials in Canada has been conclusively proved, and like everything else on the American continent, the bribery has been colossal.

The 'Graphic Despatch'—Even Tammany Hall smells sweet and clean in comparison with the huge stink-pot of the Conservative government.

Look upon that picture and then upon this. Look upon those days and then upon these.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. To-day the public men of Canada are respected in every country in the world and are commended in the mother land for the work they are doing. To-day Canada has become a Mecca to which the surplus population of Europe are flocking. To-day there is not a Canadian, whether he be Conservative or Liberal, who is not proud of her public record and her public men, if he wishes to declare what he honestly believes. But that was not the case in the days to which I have just referred. These are comparisons that we are not afraid to make, and they are comparisons which some hon. gentlemen opposite very unwisely induce us to make by the course they now pursue. So much for that part of the subject.

Our Conservative friends challenge the policy of this government particularly on two points. They say that our revenue is too large and that our expenditure is extravagant. Let us consider this question a few moments. The revenue of this country is large and it has largely increased since the Liberals obtained power, but the taxation of the country has been reduced since then. The rate of taxation has been reduced by some 14 per cent; and if we consider the fact that the taxation has been increased on spirituous liquors, tobacco and cigars, we will find that the taxation on the necessary and useful things of life has been reduced much more than 14 per cent, more likely 20 per cent. That is a very respectable reduction. I would like to see it greater, but it is very respectable, and it has been followed, as the Liberals in opposition predicted it would, by a great increase in revenue.

It is a strange thing that hon. gentlemen opposite should take exception to the large revenue and to the taxation as it now stands, and yet that during the eleven or twelve years they have been in opposition they have not once moved a resolution in this House that the taxation on any article should be reduced ; on the contrary, they have moved resolutions at various times that the taxation should be increased, and some of them have gone so far as to say that the taxes should be so increased that not a single article that can be made in this country could be imported. I think it was the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) who said, in the course of one of his speeches, that the duty ought to be 100 per cent if necessary to exclude imports. Even this year, during the consideration of the French treaty, one of the objections brought by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) against that treaty was that it would reduce the taxation on several articles coming into this country and cause a falling off in the revenue of $400,000. While blaming the government for having so much revenue and so high a rate of taxation, these hon. gentlemen declare that, if they had power, they would increase the taxes. I cannot understand the position these hon. gentlemen take ; that position is the best possible proof of insincerity and inconsistency, that could be given to the country. They are the descendants of Rehoboam of old. They say : The elder Tories chastised you with whips, but give us power and we will beat you with scorpions. Do they expect that the people of this country will be so foolish as to give them that opportunity ? They must surely give the people credit for having less intelligence than children. I think I can leave the question of taxation and revenue there.

Now, I come to the expenditure. If the expenditure is large, if it has increased under this government, it is because the government has provided liberally for the public service, whereas the public service was starved under the late administration. But let the people bear this well in mind—it is a fact familiar to every member of this House, but not known to all the electors—that not a dollar of that expenditure can be made until it has been voted by a committee of the Whole House at which every member of parliament is or ought to be present ; and every member has the right to object to any item in that appropriation and to move that is shall be struck out if he thinks it should not be there. And, during the twelve years that hon. gentlemen opposite have been in opposition, they have not moved to strike out one item in the appropriation Bill with the exception, that one year I believe they moved to strike out some $60,000. But, on the other hand, these hon. gentlemen have risen in their places time after time and year after year and declared that the appropriations are not large enough. Only a few days ago, when the estimates for the Militia Department were going through the House, member after member on the opposition side rose and said that the appropriations should be larger, that drill sheds and armouries should be built here and there all over the country. But even that is not all : A few days ago when the hon. member for North Toronto was speaking on this subject, he addressed himself to the enormous development in our foreign trade under the present administration. He said that, comparing the records of this year with those of 1896, inasmuch these returns are kept in dollars and cents and not in pounds, bushels, tons and yards, and as there had been a great advance in the prices of all commodities during the last decade, it was not fair to take the returns as made up in dollars and cents and compare them with the returns of 1896 without allowing for the increased value in the products of the country. I thought there was something reasonable in that statement—and I want to give hon. gentlemen opposite credit for every statement they make that is reasonable. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) made calculations to show that there had been an increase in the value of commodities to the extent of 28 per cent. So he deducted 28 per cent from the total returns, and said that the balance was what should be fairly compared with the trade returns for 1896 in order to make the comparison a fair one. Well, there was enough left even then to show an immense increase, a larger increase than at any other period in our national history—there was enough left to satisfy any Liberal. And I notice that some of the hon. gentlemen who sit behind the hon. member for North Toronto took their cue from him and said that our trade was not as large as it appeared to be from the returns. But they did not consider that, if this argument be sound, it completely cuts the ground from under their feet when they charge the present government with extravagance in the expenditure. For, if it is fair to make the deduction on one side, it is equally fair to make the deduction on the other side. Then, let us take the estimated expenditure for this year, the largest in our history. The estimated expenditure on consolidated fund account is $77,500,000. Deduct 28 per cent, and you bring the expenditure down to $55,800,000. Is this the only deduction that should be made in order to make a fair comparison ? No. The present government is called upon to make expenses that the previous government had not to provide for, and, in fairness, these should be deducted. I will not go over all these, I will take only two items. The subsidies to the new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan and the increase of subsidies to all the provinces means an increase of expenditure of $4,800,000. There is also the expense of keeping up the garrisons at Halifax and Esquimalt—about $2,000,000 more.

An hon. MEMBER. And the Yukon.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Yes, there is the Yukon, which is a new field of expenditure since this government came into power, but I will leave that and many other items aside. The two items I have already given make a total of about $6,800,000. If these be allowed for, the expenditure is brought down to $49,000,000. Is that an extravagant expenditure, considering the growth of the country ? If that is extravagant, then the late government, which expended $37,000,000 or $38,000,000 on consolidated fund account must not only have been guilty of gross extravagance, gross waste, gross prodigality, but even of gross dishonesty, for the public service at that time was starved and the government had to provide for comparatively little.

Why, Sir, it would not be unreasonable to suppose that the present expenditure of the country should be double or treble what it was in 1896. Take my own province for instance, with the conditions of which I am most familiar. We find the present government providing for a public service requiring twice the expenditure of the late government. For instance, we have two ice-breaking steamers now where we had one before; it would be only fair therefore to expect that the expenditure under that head would be twice as great as it was. We have two dredges now where we had one before, dredging our harbours and rivers, a service that was greatly needed, and the new dredge is larger, more powerful and does better work than the old one. It would be only fair therefore to expect that the expenditure under that head should be twice as much as under the late administration. Take aids to navigation; lighthouses, buoys and all that kind of thing have been greatly improved. Take the Post Office Department. New post offices have been opened in many places, there are daily mails where there were tri-weekly or bi-weekly mails before, and there are tri-weekly mails where there were bi-weekly mails before. It would be only fair therefore to expect that the expenditure under that head should be greatly increased. Take the Railway Department. The late government in eighteen years built eleven miles of railway in my province, and they did practically nothing else with regard to railways. The present government have built sixty miles of railway, and have constructed one of the largest railway bridges in the Dominion of Canada, built costly and valuable terminals at Charlottetown and other places; it would be only fair to assume therefore that the expenditure under that head should be twelve, fifteen or perhaps twenty times greater than it was under the previous administration. And so I might go on through all the other services and all the other provinces, and particularly in the west, where conditions demand still greater expenditures perhaps than in the east. Yet we find using the argument of the hon. member for North Toronto, that the increase in the expenditure under the present administration, for the twelve years, has been eleven or twelve million dollars, or about a million dollars a year; and I find in looking over the public accounts that has been just about the increase for each year since confederation. Yet these gentlemen charge extravagance against the present administration, a charge that I think these figures completely refute. I cannot help mentioning a remark of the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) who stated that the hon. member for North Toronto had made the campaign speech for the the Conservative party, and had brought forward everything that his fertile imagination and keen analytical mind could find against this government, and though he charged extravagance against them in every possible direction, he could only find in the whole twelve years about a million and a half dollars that he could fairly set down as extravagant or indefensible sums, or about one-twentieth of one per cent of the whole expenditure. The hon. member for South Wellington well said that if there was any government in the world that could produce a better showing than that, if there was any municipality or manager of any corporation who could come before his dirctors and make a better showing than that, he would deserve the thanks of his shareholders and directors.

Now, Sir, I wish to say a few words on another matter that was referred to, and that is the public debt. Here we have a record under the present administration that is unique in the history of this country. The public debt has actually been reduced some seven or eight dollars per head during the last ten or twelve years. The hon. member for North Toronto stated that that was a condition of affairs that should not exist; he stated the government should raise the taxation so high that it would be prohibitive upon certain articles, and thereby obtain a small revenue, and go abroad to borrow the money that would be required for the capital expenditure of the country. Of course he had to approve of that position, because he practised it when he was in power. But I find that the Montreal 'Gazette,' another leading organ supporting hon. gentlemen opposite, absolutely condemns that policy. It says that the revenues of this country should be so large that we would not have to borrow any money at all for any purpose, and that all the capital expenditure should be raised in the country. It is hard indeed to follow the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. Every man seems to have a policy of his own. If you have ever been down by the seashore and watched four or five boys out in a boat trying to learn to row, each one dipping in his oar when it suited himself and splashing the water over everybody else, nobody in charge and everybody giving orders, and going astern as fast as ahead, it would fairly illustrate the position of the Conservative party at the present time. Each one has a policy to suit himself. The so-called Halifax platform hinted at public ownership of public utilities, and several other things of that kind. The Montreal 'Gazette' condemns that with bell, book and candle. The Toronto 'World' thinks it does not go quite far enough. The member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), the railway critic of the opposition, never heard of it. The Montreal 'Star,' a moderate supporter of the present administration, declares that it is nonsense. And so on, you can find anything you like in the policy of the Conservative party. Well, the record of this government as concerns the public debt is one that Liberals must certainly be proud of. It is a comparison that we like to make every time that we get a chance, because the previous government in eighteen years ran into debt to the extent of $118,000,000, or at the rate of six and a half millions each years, on which the present government has had to pay interest, and the people of this country will have to pay interest probably for many years to come. That is the reason these loans have to be renewed, and that is the reason why the present minister has got to go to the markets of Europe and borrow money to meet the obligations and pay interest on the debt incurred by the previous administration.

Now I wish to say a word or two with regard to the much talked-of balance of trade question. It is a question that I do not think we can settle very readily; at all events, as hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House have discussed it, perhaps I might say a few words about it too. I had the temerity to make a few observations on that question in the early part of the present session, and they have been criticised somewhat. I also put a question to the hon. member for North Toronto relating to that subject, and he said he would answer it later on, but I think he forgot to do so. At all events the hon. member for North Toronto, I must say, has the soundest views upon that question of any member upon that side of the House. Referring to the question of the balance of trade he made this statement:

> We have got to pay our balances; we cannot run credit from year to year on them. Now, they can only be paid either in goods or in gold, and whichever it is it is our export trade which in the final analysis has to pay our bills and we have nothing else to pay them with.

I take that statement as being correct, and I presume that the hon. gentleman will not question it; now it goes to prove that all our imports are paid for, consequently we are not in debt. We have not exported gold to pay for them; we have not drawn upon our reserves to pay for them because we find that our reserves, public and private are increasing very rapidly. We find that the gold reserve of the country is also increasing very rapidly. The gold reserve in the banks and with the government in 1896 was only $18,562,000, while last year it had reached the figures of $67,186,000, or nearly four times as much. Now, Sir, it will take a great deal of figuring by the political economists of Brantford and Wentworth to prove to a merchant who found that he was doing business that he was increasing his stock, that he was increasing the sale of his goods, who had his goods paid for, who found that the balance at his credit in the bank was largely increasing that he was doing business at a loss. The hon. member for Brantford made some very peculiar remarks upon this subject, and I think I will pass them over, because to do the hon. gentleman justice I do not think he understands the question. But the hon. member for Wentworth also had some remarks to make; he dwelt upon this subject at great length and he made a veritable discovery. These gentlemen, when they undertake to speak upon this question, find it very difficult to support their contention with reference to the balance of trade, as they call it, when the imports of all the progressive countries in Europe are much larger than the exports, while in the non-progressive nations the exports are larger than the imports. They find it very difficult to explain that away, particularly in regard to Great Britain. But the hon. member for Wentworth made this discovery: He said that from 1750 down to 1850 the exports of Great Britain were very much larger than the imports and he made the discovery that in 1840 or 1850, or thereabouts, the people of Great Britain had $4,500,000,000 to invest. He said that money invested at four per cent would double itself every twenty years; he went on to make a calculation and he doubled that money to $9,000,000,000; he doubled it again to $18,000,000,000, and I think he would have gone on further had he not run out of figures. But where he found that $4,500,000,000 no man knows. He did not tell us on what authority he made the statement. Any person who would seriously make a statement that the commercial prosperity and financial standing of Great Britain anti-dated the Repeal of the Corn laws or anti-dated the time when the imports of the country greatly exceeded its exports—well, there is no use arguing with him. He should be given in charge of a kindly keeper who would be told to be good to him. Why, Sir, does not every man know that the arguments—the unanswerable, irresistible arguments—of Cobden, Bright and their associates would not have prevailed with the people and the government of Great Britain at the time they did were it not for the universal distress which existed, the financial ruin that was impending and the starving masses of people who cried for bread when bread could not be found for them? The whole commercial and financial prosperity of Great Britain dates from 1850 or thereabouts; everybody who knows anything at all about the history of Great Britain will admit that, and any man who makes a contrary statement does not know or does not care what kind of a statement he makes.

There is, however, one country in the world which affords hon. gentlemen opposite some consolation. For many years the exports of the United States of America have been much larger than the imports and it has been one of the great, progressive nations of the world. But the progress of that country, I hold, is not due to its foreign trade, but due to the enormous internal development, the development of almost illimitable natural resources and the exceedingly large immigration into that country of the best blood of Europe, the young, the strong, the vigorous, the hardy, the energetic and the ambitious from every country in the world. But the hon. member for North Toronto has supplied an argument which will go a long way to show why the exports of that country are greater than its imports. The people of the United States have become very wealthy in consequence, I believe, of their internal trade and their great internal development. The hon. member for North Toronto referred to that. Wealthy Americans are now residing permanently abroad or travelling in large numbers. The hon. gentleman said that millions upon millions went out of that county every year to support these gentlemen in other countries. All the bills of exchange which are drawn upon London banks generally and which are sent to these gentlemen to support them in the various countries of Europe, or in Canada, or wherever they may reside or travel, have to be met by the exports of the country. That is the argument of the hon. member for North Toronto. It is not original, but it is sound. It would be difficult indeed to tell how many millions this sum amounts to. There is another large item to which the hon. member for North Toronto did not allude. I have reference to the millions of people, young, energetic, vigorous, ambitious, strong, healthy, hardy, coming from every country in the world, but particularly from Europe, who make their homes in the United States of America. They generally succeed there and they generally leave behind them poor, needy, indigent relatives to whom they send monthly, quarterly, or yearly remittances. These remittances may be small in individual cases, but in the aggregate they amount to immense sums. I know some banks in Boston and New York which have not much other business except the selling of these small drafts which are remitted to European countries, and yet these banks do a very large business. How many million dollars go out in that way I do not know, but it must be met by the exports of the country. Whether these two items will be in themselves sufficient to account for the balance of trade, I do not know, but I do know they would be sufficient to account for a very large part of it. So much for the balance of trade. When we find ourselves with our reserves increasing; with the deposits in the savings banks and the chartered banks increasing also, with an increase in the manufactured products of this country and in the manufacturing plants which turn out these products; when we find an increase in farm machinery, an increase in capital of every kind and degree; when we find that going on all over Canada we can very safely assume that we are doing a profitable business.

Now, Sir, a word or two with regard to the Transcontinental Railway. Some of these hon. gentlemen opposite have been so unfair as to try to make it appear that the right hon. the Prime Minister stated that $13,000,000 would build the Transcontinental Railway. Of course they know better. They know that was a misrepresentation of the grossest kind on the part of whoever accused the Prime Minister of making such a statement. Even the member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) in speaking upon the question and in referring to this very case said that he believed the cost would be nearer $30,000,000 than $13,000,000, and taking it for granted that the hon. member (Mr. Foster) was right let us consider what we will have for this $30,000,000 when we have the Transcontinental Railway. Compare that bargain with the bargain made by the Conservative government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. They gave the Canadian Pacific Railway 25,000,000 acres of land, over $63,000,000 of dollars in cash and completed railway ; they gave the Canadian Pacific Railway an empire in land and the revenues of a kingdom in cash. And besides the Conservative government gave the Canadian Pacific Railway other enormous privileges such as the privilege of exemption from taxation of all the property of the railway for ever in this country; they gave the Canadian Pacific Railway the privilege of exemption from taxation on all their land for 20 years after the patents had been issued ; they gave them the privilege of importing free of duty all the material that entered into the construction of the road. And, Sir, when the railway was completed we did not own a rail or a tie of it, and we denuded ourselves of control over the freight rates until the Canadian Pacific Railway had reached the point when it earned 10 per cent on its capital. On the other hand take the bargain that the Liberal government made with the Grand Trunk Pacific and even supposing the cost of it to be $30,000,000 as stated by the hon. member for North Toronto; still that is less than two years surplus under Liberal rule. And what have we got for that? We have got a railway from ocean to ocean opening up town sites, and bringing into development millions of acres of mineral lands, and timber lands, and rich agricultural lands, and along whose line hundreds of thousands of Canadians will settle and make homes, and become producers and consumers and return to the exchequer of this country many many times over, the cost of that railway. We have not given a grant of one acre of land to the Grand Trunk Pacific outside of what is absolutely necessary for the road beds and terminals, and when that railroad is finished we will own it from Winnipeg to Moncton, and it will be an asset of this country for all future years. Compare that bargain made by this government with the bargain which the Conservatives made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Sir, I do not think there is any one thing which will show the present government to better advantage than will that comparison. I believe that Canadians yet unborn and cities yet unbuilt will do honour to the memory of the man who had the courage, the knowledge, the wisdom, the prescience to conceive and carry through this great scheme; a scheme that actually gives us another Canada that gives transportation facilities to the great west, that opens up the hinterland of our country, and which will contribute largely to the greatness of the noble country Canada is destined to be.

Mr. A. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.) It was not my intention to take part in this debate, for indeed I was of the opinion some days ago that it had already extended beyond the usual term of debates on this very important question. But, when I heard my learned friend from Kings (Mr. J. J. Hughes) make such a halting and rambling speech about some things which he knew very little about and some other things which were not exactly to the point, I thought I would say a few words in reply to him. He commenced by talking about Sir Mackenzie Bowell and his cabinet of some years ago.

An hon. MEMBER. Ancient history.

Mr. A. A. MARTIN. Very ancient history. He gave us some ancient history which was not very true and some modern history which was not history at all. Just think of comparing the cabinet of Sir Mackenzie Bowell with the Liberal cabinet which has existed since 1896. Why, Sir, the men who were in the cabinet of Sir Mackenzie Bowell left a record which stands high in the history of this country and they went out of power without any one ever thinking of making charges against them such as have been made and proven against members of the Liberal cabinet. Then, the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. J. Hughes) referred to the balance of trade. Now, I believe it to be true that when a man knows very little about a thing he can talk for a long time about it, and the less he knows about it the longer he will talk. An American statesman was once asked how long he could speak on a certain subject and his reply was: If I know a little about it, I would only speak for fifteen minutes, but if I know nothing about it I could speak for three days. That is the position of my hon. friend (Mr. J. J. Hughes) in regard to the balance of trade. His first statement amounted to this, that the larger the balance of trade against a country the more prosperous that country would become. I suppose, if the hon. gentleman were a member of the government he would have a paragraph in the speech from the Throne, put into the mouth of the Governor General to the effect: We are most pleased to see that the balance of trade against us is largely increasing every year; we are also pleased to see that the imports have largely increased, that the exports have largely decreased and we look to the day when the exports will vanish altogether and the country then will be prosperous indeed. I suppose these are the happy days my hon. friend would be glad to see. I suppose if he ever gets into the cabinet he will have that statement in his speech from the Throne, although I have not yet made up my mind as to whether he is looking for a portfolio or a seat in the Senate, but I think from the prosy speech he has delivered to-day the Senate would be the proper place for him.

An hon. MEMBER. What about the tunnel?

Mr. A. A. MARTIN (Queens). The hon. gentleman did not mention the tunnel. He was strong on the transcontinental railway but he never said a word about his own province. In season and out of season he is here praising this government and I suppose they will have to reward him. If not they ought to. I wish to point out something which is very remarkable in his speech. He said that the revenue and the expenditure of the country had increased nearly three-fold but the taxation had decreased 14 per cent. Can you, Mr. Speaker, can any member of this House, can any sane member or any insane member for that matter, lay down the proposition that the revenue has increased nearly three-fold and the expenditure fully three-fold, and the taxation has decreased 14 per cent. I do not think I need dwell very long on that. The hon. member spoke of the stringency, he steered clear of it, but he would tell us that this country is very prosperous. I beg to give him some recent figures as to the financial condition of this country. I have here the latest returns of business failures in Canada. They show a heavy increase in the number of failures and in the liabilities of the insolvents. I shall read these returns to the House to show just how much the hon. gentleman knows about the financial situation:

Insolvencies in Dominion of Canada during the first quarter of 1908, according to returns of R. G. Dun & Company, were abnormally heavy, exceeding the returns for the corresponding month in every year of the preceding decade, and there was also a new record as to number of failures.

Liabilities heavy.

The 512 defaults for $5,036,993, compared with 320 failures last year, when liabilities were $2,976,695. Manufacturing failures numbered 133, against 89, and liabilities were $2,195,463, against $1,491,296. There were 362 trading failures for $2,732,318, against 229 last year, when the amount involved was $1,255,149.

Other commercial failures numbered 17, against 7, and liabilities of $109,122 made the only favourable comparison with last year's returns, when the amount of defaulted indebtedness was $230,250.

Ontario leads list.

Comparison by provinces shows an increase over last year's figures in every instance as to amount of liabilities, the chief difference occurring in Ontario, Quebec and Alberta.

Failures in Canada.

| Province. | Number. 1908. | Number. 1907. | Liabilities. 1908. | Liabilities. 1907. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Ontario.. .. .. | 200 | 129 | $2,040,840 | $1,476,689 |
| Quebec.. .. .. | 216 | 135 | 2,059,746 | 1,190,575 |
| British Columbia.. .. .. .. | 12 | 11 | 101,630 | 81,389 |
| Nova Scotia .. | 14 | 12 | 80,800 | 39,580 |
| Manitoba.. .. .. | 9 | 11 | 209,100 | 57,300 |
| New Brunswick .. .. .. | 10 | 12 | 102,500 | 67,812 |
| Prince Edward Island.. .. .. | 1 | 1 | 25,000 | 2,300 |
| Alberta.. .. .. | 50 | 9 | 417,287 | 61,050 |
| Total.. .. .. | 512 | 320 | $5,036,903 | $2,976,695 |

The hon. gentleman might well attribute this great increase in the number and extent of the failures to the balance of trade against the country not being large enough. I need not dwell on these figures, comment is unnecessary.

The hon. gentleman spoke of what this great government is doing but he carefully refrained from referring to live issues. I would suppose from hearing him speak that he felt it necessary to speak in order to say something in favour of the government, so that the government at the proper time would reward him for the praise he has so lavishly bestowed on them in season and out of season. He did not refer to the Quebec bridge, to the Civil Service Report, to Merwin, to the 'Arctic' or to graft, but he said that the government had decreased the duty on tobacco, cigars and cigarettes. I was not aware that they had reduced the duty on tobacco. I think the Finance Minister this year announced in the House that they had reduced the duty on cigarettes. It may be that by the French treaty they have reduced the duty on French wines.

I expected that a gentleman from my province would, as I have said, have referred to some live questions. There is, for instance, the coasting trade in the maritime provinces, a very live question. Did the hon. gentleman refer to it? He was as silent as an oyster in regard to it. Did he refer to the minute of council passed by the government of Prince Edward Island of which he is an ardent admirer and supporter, taking this government to task for non fulfilment of the terms of confederation in respect to that province? Did he refer to the grievances of Prince Edward Island which are questions of intense interest there? I hold in my hand a letter addressed to me by the legislative council of Prince Edward Island on this subject. These are live questions. My hon. friend has just left his seat; I hope I did not drive him away, I tried to treat him as leniently and kindly as I possibly could under the circumstances and I thought he would stand fire. This letter refers to a matter in reference to which he might have been of some service to his province. This letter reads:

Mr. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.).

Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island,
March 27, 1908.

Alex. Martin, Esq.,
House of Commons.

Dear Sir,—Acting under instructions of the legislative assembly of this province, I beg to inclose a copy of a resolution unanimously adopted by this House, and am requested to ask that the matter referred to receive your most earnest and immediate attention.

Yours respectfully,
R. H. MONTGOMERY,
Clerk of the legislative assembly, Prince Edward Island.

I have here the resolution adopted by the legislature of that province. One would suppose from listening to the hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Mr. J. J. Hughes) that there is nothing wrong in the province of Prince Edward Island, that all that is wanted is that the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. J. Hughes) should be properly looked after himself and if he gets all he wants the province may whistle, as far as he is concerned. I intend to rise in my place and advocate the wants and needs of my province, in season or out of season. Here is a copy of the resolution:

Resolution passed unanimously by the legislative assembly of Prince Edward Island, March, 1908.

Resolved, that this legislature, recognizing the difficulties and loss entailed to owners and charterers of sailing vessels, also to the commerce of coal in this province, on account of the preference habitually given to steam tonnage as distinguished from sailing vessels, at the piers of the leading collieries in Nova Scotia, in the matter of loading coal cargoes, respectively request the government of Nova Scotia to exercise such powers as may be within its rights, to secure fair and equitable treatment for the sailing vessels at such piers and if those powers be inadequate to the end proposed, recommend that said government have recourse to the federal authorities, with a view to securing the rights and privileges in question.

Further resolved, that this legislative assembly respectfully request the federal government to pass such legislation, if necessary, as will give to sailing and steam tonnage equal rights in their proper loading turns at the coal ports in Nova Scotia.

Now, this is a live question, but my hon. friend (Mr. J. J. Hughes) left aside all such questions and went into ancient history. There is nothing that he asked for Prince Edward Island. His speech is in effect: The government is doing just lovely. He talks about the Grand Trunk Pacific and the service it is doing. What service is it doing for his own province? Has he been sent up here to advocate the Grand Trunk Pacific at this late day? And has he told us of the increased cost of the Grand Trunk Pacific—that it has increased ten-fold? He talks about having this railway from the west to Moncton. He says, further, that the government are going to provide a new steamer for Prince Edward Island; and he accounts for the increase in our public expenditure from $40,000,000 to $110,000,000 by the fact that the government are going to build this new steamer for Prince Edward Island. Did you ever hear anything so logical as that, Mr. Speaker? Mind you, this expenditure has not yet been made, and this new vessel not yet provided. And I am not sure that we are any nearer to having the vessel now then we were three years ago when the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) was in office. The whole expenditure, when it is made, will be about $300,000 or $400,000. And such an expenditure which has not yet been made, is used by the hon. gentleman to account for an increase of $60,000,000 or $70,000,000 in our national expenditure.

Nor did the hon. gentleman say anything about the fact that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) was anxious to go to Toronto, which is a good Conservative city, and survey for a tunnel to serve a small island having on it about fourteen voters—at least, that is what I have heard. My hon. friend, apparently, is quite willing that the government should survey for a tunnel between Toronto and this island with fourteen people and do it at once. And why? Because the president of the Reform Association, Mr. Haney, accompanied the deputation here. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. J. Hughes) had not anything to say about survey for a tunnel under the straits of Northumberland which was promised to the province of Prince Edward Island some thirty-five years ago. This is a fair sample of what the hon. gentleman stood up to speak for. It is evidently a speech to get him in good graces of the ministry, so that if there is a vacancy—But I do not know whether they would take him in or not, but there may be a vacancy somewhere else. I had not intended to speak, but I thought that a few words in reply to the hon. gentleman for Kings (Mr. J. J. Hughes) would be in order.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Ways and Means.

An hon. MEMBER. Call in the government.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). We had understood that there were several gentlemen yet to speak, and the officials, not anticipating the close of the debate, are not here at the moment. We have sent for them.

Mr. TAYLOR. I had just arranged with the Whip on the other side that the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) was to follow the last speaker.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not offering an opinion as to who ought or ought not to speak——

Mr. TAYLOR. And then we had a gentleman ready either to speak or move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. FIELDING. We are not objecting. We are quite content.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is the arrangement that was made.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I was not aware of the arrangement. I should have been very happy to proceed on it.

Mr. TAYLOR. We on this side are very much surprised that hon gentlemen opposite did not keep on obstructing by putting up gentlemen to speak for three or four hours each, as has been done for the last few days. We limited our speeches, but apparently hon. gentlemen on the other side wanted to obstruct the business. We are glad that they have come to their senses.

Mr. FIELDING. It is proposed to take up the proposed resolution of Mr. Templeman in relation to the tobacco duties.

On the resolutions:

Resolved, that it is expedient that the Inland Revenue Act be amended as follows:—

1. That section 275 of the said Act be repealed and the following substituted therefor:—

275. The person in whose favour a license for manufacturing tobacco or cigars is granted, shall, upon receiving such license pay to the collector the sum of fifty dollars.

2. That section 279 of the said Act be repealed, and the following substituted therefor:—

279. There shall be imposed, levied and collected on tobacco and cigars manufactured in Canada, the following duties of excise, which shall be paid to the collector as by this Act provided, that is to say:—

(a) on all chewing and smoking tobacco, fine-cut, cavendish, plug or twist, cut or granulated, of every description—on tobacco twisted by hand or reduced into a condition to be consumed or, in any manner other than the ordinary mode of drying and curing, prepared for sale or consumption, even if prepared without the use of any machine or instrument and without being pressed or sweetened—and on all fine-cut shorts and refuse scraps, cuttings and sweepings of tobacco made from raw leaf tobacco or the product in any form, other than in this Act otherwise provided, of raw leaf tobacco five cents per pound actual weight;

(b) on common Canada twist, when made solely from tobacco grown in Canada, and on the farm and premises where grown, by the cultivator duly licensed therefor or in a licensed tobacco manufactory five cents per pound actual weight;

(c) on all snuff made from raw leaf tobacco, or the product in any form of raw leaf tobacco, or any substitute for tobacco, ground, dry, scented or otherwise, of all descriptions, when prepared for use, five cents per pound actual weight;

(d) snuff flour, when sold or removed for use or consumption, shall pay the same duty as snuff, and shall be put up in packages and stamped in the same manner as herein prescribed for snuff completely manufactured—except that snuff flour not made for use, but which needs to be subject to further processes, by sifting, pickling, scenting or otherwise, before it is in a condition fit for use or consumption, may be sold by one tobacco manufacturer directly to another tobacco manufacturer, and without the payment of the duty, under such regulations as are provided in that behalf by the department;

(e) on cigars of all descriptions, made from raw leaf tobacco, or any substitute therefor, two dollars per thousand;

(f) on all cigars, when put up in packages containing less than ten cigars each, three dollars per thousand;

(g) on cigarettes made from raw leaf tobacco or any substitute therefor weighing not more than three pounds per thousand, two dollars and forty cents per thousand;

(h) on cigarettes made from raw leaf tobacco or any substitute therefor, weighing more than three pounds per thousand, seven thousand dollars per thousand;

(i) on all foreign raw leaf tobacco, unstemmed, taken out of warehouse for manufacture in any cigar or tobacco manufactory, twenty-eight cents per pound, computed according to the standard of leaf tobacco as hereinbefore established;

(j) on all foreign raw leaf tobacco, stemmed, taken out of warehouse for manufacture in any cigar or tobacco manufactory, forty-two cents per pound, computed according to the standard of leaf tobacco as hereinbefore established.

3. In all tobacco manufactories where less than fifty per cent of Canadian raw leaf tobacco is used and where ten per cent or more of other materials is used, such materials shall be subject to a duty of sixteen cents per pound actual weight.

4. All stemmed and unstemmed raw leaf tobacco and all materials and articles the product in whole or in part of raw leaf tobacco which are in process of manufacture in any tobacco or cigar manufactory licensed to use foreign raw leaf tobacco shall, in addition to the duty already paid upon the raw leaf be subject to the difference between the rate so paid and that hereby imposed and all other materials in stock in any factory at the time this Act comes into force shall under the conditions of subsection 2 of this section, be subject to the rate of duty therein mentioned; and the quantity upon which such additional duty shall be paid as well as the quantity upon which the percentage of such other materials shall be based shall be determined in such manner as the department directs.

All manufactured tobacco and cigars in bond at the time of the coming into force of this Act shall be subject to the rates of duty thereon now existing, and such rates of duty shall remain in effect so long as any goods to which they apply remain in the bonded warehouse of the manufacturer or any person.

5. That sections 280 and 281 of the said Act be repealed.

6. That an amendment be made requiring manufacturers of wood alcohol to take out a license and to pay therefor an annual fee of one dollar.

7. That the rates of duty hereby imposed shall come into force and effect upon such day as the Governor General by proclamation directs.

Mr. BERGERON. Was there a deputation here the other day to see the goverument about changes in the excise, and what was the answer of the government?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. A delegation of cigar manufacturers presented their views, more in respect to the effect of the withdrawal of duty on exported cuttings than with regard to any other portion of the resolution. I heard all they had to say; they were very fair in their views, and on the whole I think approved of the resolution as printed. I have already explained to the House that the object of the resolution is to collect the tax on the raw leaf tobacco rather than on the manufactured article. We are to have now one stamp and one license for manufacturers. It was felt that the exchange was in the interest of the tobacco growers of Canada, because the effect of the present regulations was to discourage the growing and consumption of Canadian tobacco by reason of the fact that the use of three labels operated prejudicially against the use of Canadian tobacco. That is the object of the change in the method of collecting the revenue. The change will not impose any new taxation whatever, rather there will be a slight reduction. Calculating the revenue collected under this proposed arrangement and comparing it with the revenue collecetd in 1906, taking the same quantity of manufactured tobacco as was taken in that year, the loss of revenue will be $30,000 or $40,000, divided between cigars and tobacco. The object kept in view in fixing the rates of duty, as given in the resolution, was to collect the same amount of revenue, not to increase it or diminish it in any way. On the whole, I think the duties will be slightly lower than they were before, but not to any appreciable extent.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the revenue be less or more?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Less by $30,000 or $40,000.

Mr. BRISTOL. Has the department any protest from anybody against this change on the ground that the purchaser would not be able to tell whether he was buying a Canadian cigar or an imported cigar?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No, not in the way the hon. gentleman puts it. The proposal to abolish the four coloured stamps has been before the country for a long time. At one time, and up to a recent date, the manufacturers of foreign tobacco did certainly object to the proposed change, inasmuch as they thought that the removal of the four stamps, or the use of one stamp instead of four, would militate against their particular product. The manufacturers of foreign tobacco, for instance, have a black stamp. Up till last year they objected to the use of only one stamp, but this year the leading tobacco manufacturers, or some of them, came to Ottawa and represented that in so far as their opposition to the one stamp was concerned they withdrew it, inasmuch as they recognized the fact that one stamp would inevitably have to be adopted. But so long as the changes in the duties did not increase the amount of taxation they had to pay, they would have no longer an objection to the adoption of one stamp.

Mr. BRISTOL. I have had a strong protest from one or more cigarmaking unions objecting to the change to one stamp.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I have been speaking rather of the manufacturers and holders of licenses. It is quite true that from one or two cities, I remember London particularly, we have received some protest against the adoption of the one stamp.

Mr. BERGERON. Any protest from Montreal?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We might have had some, but, as a matter of fact, some of the manufacturers of tobacco in Montreal have been strong advocates of the one stamp, just as the farmers both in Quebec and Ontario have been strong advocates of this proposed change. The change is made in the interest of the growers of Canadian tobacco. The opposition to the one stamp has been practically removed. I presume the union men who make the cigars feared that the manufacturers of Canadian tobacco and cigars would make a cheaper article, and a cheaper article would imply lower wages.

Mr. BERGERON. It will have the effect then of encouraging the cultivation of a better Canadian tobacco in the raw leaf than before? What is the object of the change in the law? Perhaps the Minister of Marine and Fisheries could explain the situation.

Mr. BRODEUR. The object of the change in the law is to give the Canadian growers of tobacco a better advantage. We have had heretofore four stamps affixed upon tobacco. There is a blue stamp affixed upon tobacco imported from foreign countries; then we have a black stamp which is affixed upon foreign tobacco manufactured in this country; then we have the red stamp which is affixed upon tobacco composed of foreign leaf and Canadian leaf; then we have the Canadian leaf upon which we put a green stamp.

Mr. BERGERON. The colour of the stamp would show the purchaser what kind of tobacco it was?

Mr. BRODEUR. Not necessarily, because under the law as it exists to-day, the tobacco manufactured may contain not only foreign leaf, but also Canadian leaf.

Mr. BERGERON. That will be against the law.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, it is according to the existing law. Providing the manufacturers pay the duty levied on foreign leaf, they can use Canadian leaf with it. It is to a certain extent a deception on the people. The first question that may be raised in connection with that is this: Is it advisable that the government should put upon a manufactured article a trade mark, or is it advisable that the trade mark should be provided by the manufacturers themselves? To-day, manufactured tobacco bears a stamp which, in some cases, as in the case of the blue stamp, shows that it is a foreign article, but in case of tobacco manufactured in this country the black stamp put upon the tobacco does not necessarily show that it is manufactured entirely of foreign leaf. Is it advisable, I repeat, that the government should maintain, upon tobacco, what I might call a trade mark? This is not a question appertaining to the government; it is a matter which the manufacturers themselves should see to. If they want to advertise or to make a certain manufactured article well known let them adopt a trade mark, and put their product upon the country with that trade mark, but I do not think it is advisable that the government should themselves provide the trade mark for this article. We do not do it in any other case. With respect to woollens or any other manufactured article there is nothing in the law which permits the government of the country to put a trade mark upon these articles. The present arrangement has been to a certain extent detrimental to the Canadian article. Formerly Canadian tobacco was not perhaps as good as it is to-day. It was covered by the green stamp and the idea prevails in many parts of the country that when you see a plug of tobacco or a box of cigars covered by the green stamp it means that it may be interpreted as not being a good article, although I may say in all fairness to the Canadian producer that Canadian tobacco has been greatly improved. This prejudice which existed against Canadian tobacco has been detrimental to it and there is no reason why the government should continue to maintain that prejudice by continuing the use of that stamp.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it on account of the colour of the stamp?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. The green stamp?

Mr. BRODEUR. The green stamp.

Mr. SPROULE. Well then, why not make it orange?

Mr. BRODEUR. Perhaps that is a good suggestion.

Mr. BERGERON. They would not smoke it on St. Patrick's Day.

Mr. BRODEUR. It would be a good mixture. The question has been brought up what kind of a stamp would be used in future. I do not think the department has decided what kind of stamp will be used, but there will be only one stamp for all kinds of tobacco. I think that is an improvement upon the late law and it will prove of great benefit to the Canadian grower.

Mr. MONK. There is no doubt that the substitution of one for the three different stamps that existed before has been sought for a long time in the interest of the growth of Canadian tobacco, and there is no doubt that the invidious distinction between the stamps was detrimental to Canadian tobacco. The removal of the distinction, is, I think, a step in the right direction. I want to ask if the change in the duty itself is intended to secure any advantage for the Canadian grown tobacco or is it just a change without that object in view and how it is proposed to attain the object by that change ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The advantage that it will be to Canadian grown tobacco is that hereafter there will be but one license and all tobacco, Canadian and foreign, can be taken into the same factory and mixed up in any way the manufacturers please. They can either make all Canadian cigars or tobacco or all foreign, or a combination of both, putting any percentage of either of these tobaccos into their manufacture they please.

Mr. BERGERON. The smoker will have to be the judge ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The smoker will have to be the judge, according to the quality of the tobacco, the size and the name of the manufacture. I do not believe that smokers of cigars are very much influenced by the label. To some extent they may be but we all know that blue label cigars are supposed to be the best because they are manufactured in Cuba almost altogether and imported into this country. Notwithstanding the blue label there is an enormous lot of very poor cigars sold under that stamp and we now propose to let the smoker decide from the manufacturer's name, or the brand rather than from the colour of the label. One stamp will apply hereafter. The manufacturers of cigars will sell their goods under the stamp and name of the manufacturer and not by the fact that they have a particular inland revenue label upon them.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you no provision to make them indicate what proportion of Canadian and what proportion of foreign leaf these goods contain ?

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. None whatever.

Mr. SPROULE. Can they manufacture Canadian tobacco and sell it under the name of foreign ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Certainly ; they can put any brand they please upon it. It will simply be tobacco. The invidious distinction referred to by my hon. friend lies in the fact that Canadian tobacco cannot be taken to-day into factories licensed to manufacture foreign tobacco because we could not collect our revenue. The reason why three or four different stamps are required is because the rates of duty are different on foreign and Canadian grown tobacco.

Mr. BLAIN. There was a reference made to a reduction of duty on tobacco by an hon. gentleman in the discussion to-day. May I ask the minister if this change will have any effect upon the price to the consumer ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No, the rate of taxation is practically the same as it was before.

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask also how it will affect the production of cigarettes ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It will bring about the same revenue as we derive from cigarettes under the operation of the existing law.

Mr. BLAIN. We understand then that the changes that the minister is making will in no way affect the price either of cigarettes or tobacco to the Canadian consumer ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think that is right.

Mr. BRISTOL. Do I understand the minister to say that he has fully considered the protests of the cigar union workers and is of the opinion that this will not affect the wages of the makers of cigars ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes, that is my conviction.

Mr. BEATTIE. A number of my constituents are very much interested in the cigar manufacturing business, and I think I am safe in saying that they are opposed strongly to the new regulation which the government proposes to introduce. I may say that London is the second largest cigar manufacturing city in the Dominion and I have here a document signed by the cigar manufacturers of that city and of other cities, protesting against this new policy of the government. It is pointed out that the purchasers of cigars, under this new regulation will not be able to tell, as far as the stamp is concerned, whether they are buying cigars made from Canadian tobacco or cigars made from partly Canadian and partly foreign leaf, or cigars made altogether from imported leaf. In future the man who buys a cigar will have to depend altogether upon the word of the merchant who sells it, unless indeed it so happens that the purchaser is an expert judge of tobacco. I am not much of a smoker myself, but I know the hon. minister is and probably he might be able to tell of what particular tobacco a cigar is composed, but the ordinary man will have to buy his cigar and light and test it before he is able to tell the quality.

Mr. BRODEUR. In future the cigars will be sold on their own merits.

Mr. BEATTIE. That may be true, but nevertheless the change which is being made is represented as inconvenient and detrimental to the interests of those gentlemen who have forwarded this document to me. I would point out to the minister that Canadian apples, Canadian cheese, and Canadian butter when sent to a foreign market are branded so that the consumers of these articles may be assured that they are of good quality, but in the case of cigars and tobacco you apparently leave the door open to the encouragement of deception. It would appear to be a reasonable proposition to say, that our own people have just as much right to protection with regard to the quality of the articles they buy as have the consumers in foreign countries. This is the petition to which I refer:

The cigar manufacturers, who use foreign leaf exclusively, have learned through the public press that it is the intention of the Dominion Government to consider the advisability of changing the duties at present levied upon raw leaf imported into Canada and the excise duties upon cigars made in Canada; and to consider also the advisability of substituting a uniform stamp for the different stamps now in use. In view of these statements they desire respectfully to lay the following facts and considerations before your Honourable Commission:

1. For many years the government has issued blue stamps for cigars imported into Canada, black stamps for cigars manufactured in Canada, wholly from imported leaf, red stamps for cigars made of a mixture of foreign and domestic leaf, and green stamps for cigars made wholly of Canadian tobacco.

2. Canadian public has become acquainted with the uses to which the various stamps are applied, and know the character of the cigars by the colour of the stamps.

3. In the year ending June 30, 1905, 2,262,400 cigars were manufactured in Canada wholly from Canadian tobacco and 7,221,760 from a mixture of foreign and domestic leaf. Five per cent of the cigars made in Canada were composed wholly or partly of tobacco grown in the country; and the number so composed was less than the number made in the previous year.

4. In 1905 the cigars made in Canada wholly from foreign leaf numbered 176,626,617.

5. The cigars manufactured in Canada from foreign tobacco are made chiefly of Havana fillers, binders purchased in the state of Wisconsin, and wrappers grown in the Island of Sumatra.

6. The substitution of a uniform stamp for the distinguishing stamps now in use would work very serious injury to manufacturers and also to consumers of cigars. The distinctive character of the various classes would not be, as new, apparent to the purchaser, and the imposition would be easy. Unscrupulous dealers could 'and some doubtless would' deceive customers as to the character of the cigars offered them.

7. All manufacturers are earnestly desirous that the growth of tobacco in Canada should be encouraged and the character of the Canadian product improved; but the manufacturers are of the opinion that many years of experiment and encouragement must elapse before satisfactory results can be attained. It is certain that domestic tobacco will be used just as soon as its quality warrants such use; but the fact that domestic leaf is now being used for cigar making in lessening quantities is proof that the article now grown in this country does not commend itself to consumers. It would be a mistake to endeavour by legislation to force upon the public tobacco of a grade they do not desire. The object should be, not to compel the people to use inferior tobacco, but to improve the article until it shall be satisfactory to consumers.

8. The manufacturers are decidely of opinion that the government should conduct experiments in tobacco growing in order to determine the quality of seed best suited to our soil and climate, the nature of the soils and the parts of the country in which the best tobacco can be grown, the fertilizers needed, and the methods of growth and of curing which ought to be followed. The magnitude of the interests involved, and the results likely to follow, would undoubtedly warrant the expenditures necessary for such experiments.

It would appear from this document which is signed by 79 manufacturers, that the cigar manufacturers are strongly of opinion that the policy of the government in this respect is not conducive to the best interests of their trade. I know personally from them that they are very strongly of opinion that this change should not be made. The cigar manufacturers wish to remain in just the position they are at present, and if the government can see their way to allow the present condition to continue I am sure the manufacturers would be very much pleased.

Mr. CLARKE. I regret that I cannot agree in this matter with my hon. friend from London (Mr. Beattie). I think the very best argument in favour of the change proposed by this resolution is the fact that it is opposed by the manufacturers of foreign leaf.

Mr. BEATTIE. They are not manufacturers of foreign leaf altogether; they are manufacturers of all kinds of leaf.

Mr. CLARKE. I understood that the petitioners were manufacturers of foreign leaf tobacco.

Mr. BEATTIE. I believe they manufacture all kinds of leaf.

Mr. CLARKE. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that they manufacture Canadian leaf ?

Mr. BEATTIE. They manufacture the different kinds of leaf, I think.

Mr. CLARKE. Would my hon. friend mind stating which of them manufacture Canadian leaf ?

Mr. BEATTIE. I think Line, McDonald & Company, of London, and John McNee & Sons, of London, do.

Mr. CLARKE. I understood my hon. friend to speak for the manufacturers of foreign leaf. With all deference to my hon. friend I think he will find that Line, McDonald & Company are manufacturers of foreign leaf tobacco.

Mr. BEATTIE. They are, I understood you to ask me if they were manufacturers of foreign leaf.

Mr. CLARKE. I will accept my hon. friend's word if he says they are manufacturers of Canadian leaf, but I will be surprised to find that there is a manufacturer of Canadian tobacco who is opposed to the proposed regulations. I have yet to hear of a single individual who is interested in Canadian tobacco either as a grower or manufacturer who is not most desirous of having the changes proposed in this resolution made.

Mr. BEATTIE. That is exactly what I meant to convey. The representation is made that the manufacturers of Canadian leaf will sell their goods on the market and that you cannot tell the Canadian leaf from the imported leaf cigars. That is what the cigar manufacturers are opposing.

Mr. CLARKE. I understood my hon. friend to say that those who signed the petition which he has read were manufacturers of Canadian tobacco.

Mr. BRODEUR. The heading of the petition says that the petitioners are manufacturers of foreign leaf exclusively.

Mr. CLARKE. I think it will be found that those who are opposed to these regulations are the manufacturers who confine their operations to imported leaf.

Mr. BERGERON. That is what I understood.

Mr. CLARKE. I cannot imagine that those who manufacture Canadian leaf would be opposed to this proposal of the government because they consider that this system of having three separate stamps has been the bane of their operations in Canadian tobacco. Last week the matter was investigated by the Committee on Agriculture, and we had before that committee tobacco growers from Essex, and from Kent, and from the province of Quebec. The growers were unanimously in favour of the regulations now proposed by the government. It was pointed out that in the past the trade had been very much hampered by the fact that the manufacturer had to have three separate buildings, that the holder of a license for Canadian tobacco was not allowed to bring in imported tobacco, that the holder of a license for combination tobacco could not bring in foreign leaf, and that there had to be a separate license for the manufacture of foreign leaf tobacco. It is proposed now to have one uniform license so that the domestic leaf or the imported leaf may be brought into the one factory. I do not know of anything else in the regulation of trade by government, in which the government discriminates against the Canadian grown article except in the tobacco business. Heretofore the policy with regard to tobacco has been in effect a discrimination against Canadian tobacco. It was pointed out in the Agriculture Committee by Mr. Charlin, the tobacco expert, who has given the subject a great deal of care, that in the past there was a good deal of inferior tobacco grown in Canada, but that now a very material improvement has taken place in the quality. Concerning chewing tobacco which is made from the white Burley leaf. Mr. Charlin pointed out that this Canadian tobacco had now attained a very high degree of perfection, and that although the McDonald factory still confines its operations to foreign leaf; yet, the tobacco which is made from white Burley grown in Canada is quite as good in quality as the chewing tobacco made from foreign leaf.

We find that even in ten or twelve years the manufacture of Canadian tobacco has grown from $500,000 to $5,000,000. That I think is good evidence of the fact that a decided improvement is being made in the quality of Canadian tobacco. Experiments have been made in Ontario and Quebec by Mr. Charlin, the expert. Two varieties which are grown in Wisconsin, called Zimmer Spanish and Comstock Spanish, are used for binders by Canadian cigar makers, for instance, by the Tucketts, of Hamilton, the largest manufacturers of cigars in Canada. We import some 4,000,000 or 5,000,000 pounds of that tobacco, and the evidence of the expert is that the tobacco of these varieties grown in Quebec is almost, if not quite as good in quality as that which is being imported from Wisconsin by the Canadian manufacturers in Canada. That grown in Essex and Kent in the past year has not been quite as satisfactory as that grown in Quebec owing to the nature of the season. The expectation is that the quality of Canadian tobacco will mature and be quite equal to the tobacco which is now being imported from the United States for this purpose. The unanimous opinion of those who are interested in the growth of Canadian tobacco is that these regulations are precisely what is required in order to remove the prejudice which has prevailed in the past against Canadian tobacco and which is to-day without foundation.

Mr. BERGERON. What does my hon. friend think of the loss of revenue?

Mr. CLARKE. I do not understand there will be any loss.

Mr. BERGERON. I understood the minister to say that the loss would be about $30,000 a year.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is a bagatelle.

Mr. BERGERON. I am asking my hon. friend's opinion.

Mr. CLARKE. If there is loss to that extent it is a small matter compared to the benefit which will accrue to the growers in Canada and to the tobacco industry. It has become a very important industry; tobacco is a most profitable crop and the tobacco growers are entitled to encouragement.

There is this to be said in favour of these regulations, that there is a considerable difference in duty on the unstemmed and the stemmed leaf. The duty on the unstemmed leaf is 28 cents and, I think, that on the stemmed leaf is 42 cents. The object and I think the result of that will be to encourage the bringing in of tobacco in the unstemmed condition, which will give employment to cigar men who will do the stemming in this country. The difference in the rate on these two, it seems to me, will force those who import tobacco to import it unstemmed and the result of that will be that the labour of stemming that tobacco will be performed by Canadians and those employed in the Canadian factories, so, to that extent, the labour men employed in foreign leaf factories will derive a decided benefit from these regulations.

One gentleman who was before the Committee on Agriculture the other day, a manufacturer of cigars from foreign leaf tobacco, welcomes these changes. He says that in a foreign leaf factory they are now allowed to put in Canadian tobacco, the only difference being that they would have to pay the increased excise. His difficulty was that if they bring Canadian tobacco into a foreign leaf factory they lose the benefit of the rebate on the cuttings. As I understand the proposed regulations, the rebate will be entirely abolished, so that the foreign leaf factories will be as free as any others. The tobacco will be manufactured, the same stamp will be put on it all, no brand will be placed upon it to the disadvantage of the Canadian tobacco or the Canadian manufacturers, and tobacco will be sold, as every commodity should be, upon its merits. If people want a particular brand, let the manufacturer furnish it. If he has a brand which is well known on the market and is a valuable brand, surely that brand is a sufficient protection to him. It seems to me to be manifestly unjust that the government should undertake to put a brand upon tobacco which will prejudice the growers and prejudice our home product.

Mr. BRISTOL. How long has the present system been in force?

Mr. CLARKE. For a very long time; I do not know when the old regulations were passed. I understand that the present system was not inaugurated in order to protect the smoker, it was for the purpose of raising the revenue. Heretofore there has been a difference in the excise tax; it has been five cents a pound on the home grown leaf and 25 cents a pound on the foreign leaf. Stamps of different colours have been placed on the manufactured tobacco to distinguish the Canadian from the foreign leaf. I do not know the reason for adopting these different stamps, nor can I imagine why parliament should adopt the system of putting on different stamps and so discriminating against the producer and manufacturer of home-grown tobacco. That has been the result of the present system. It seems to me it is high time that state of things should be done away with. The people in my county have petitioned for this change for two or three years and a year ago a large delegation from the counties of Montcalm and Joliette asked for the same change. I doubt very much if among the growers and manufacturers of Canada you will find a single individual who does not heartily welcome and ask for this change.

Mr. BRISTOL. I fancy the fact of the matter is that if the Canadian tobacco was to-day the best tobacco, the Canadian brand on it would not be a detriment to it, but would be very much in its favour; in other words, if it happened to be the best kind, the brand would protect the smoker.

Mr. CLARKE. Will you allow me to say this——

Mr. BRISTOL. I wanted to point out how this works out. We do not have to brand Montreal melons as they are known to be the best in the world, or No. 1 hard wheat.

Mr. CLARKE. The consumer has not yet been educated to a proper appreciation of Canadian tobacco. A great many still believe that the foreign leaf is best. There is a foreign leaf factory in Quebec that is using Canadian tobacco in the manufacture of cigars. Under the law it is permitted to put these on the market as foreign. The black stamp goes on them and they go out to the public as foreign leaf cigars, although a very great proportion of the tobacco in them is Canadian. The people do not know the difference and they pay 10 cents for these cigars, whereas if they knew they were Canadian, they probably would not pay 5 cents. The man who holds the license, in order to get a better price, pays that additional excise of 20 cents a pound, the rate on foreign leaf, although it is Canadian tobacco.

Mr. BRISTOL. I am glad to know Canadian tobacco is so good.

Mr. CLARKE. I hope you will preach it.

Mr. BRISTOL. I certainly shall. I want to call the attention of the minister to a document which I hold in my hand and which purports to be signed on behalf of the Cigar Makers International Union. It comes to me from Cigar Makers Union No. 27 of Toronto. I do not know if the minister has received a copy of this document or not, but I wish to place it before him. The document reads :

Some reasons why cigarmakers object to a uniform excise stamp on cigars.

Under the present system there are four different coloured stamps issued.

A blue stamp on imported cigars, the black stamp indicates cigars manufactured in this country from foreign leaf, the pink stamp a mixture of foreign and domestic tobacco, and the green stamp indicating all Canadian tobacco.

Under this system the cigar manufacturing industry of this country has grown to its present proportions. Cigars of domestic manufacture from foreign leaf will compare favourably with the best imported article, and in consequence of this trade being built up employment is given to first-class cigarmakers at fair wages in many factories using foreign leaf. One great factor in the upbuilding of this trade in fine cigars, is in the protection afforded the consumer through the different revenue stamps in use; he knows now by the stamp that he is getting a cigar made from foreign leaf or if he prefers the flavour of Canadian tobacco that he is getting what he desires.

Take away the different stamps and substitute one stamp for all and what is likely to happen? The consumer is unable to determine as to the nature of the tobacco used and is at the mercy of unscrupulous manufacturers who will all too readily substitute the inferior Canadian tobacco in whole or in part and advertise the product as made from foreign leaf.

Another result of the change, if carried out, would be to encourage the smoking of the imported article, as the consumer would have no guarantee of getting a clear Havanna cigar of domestic manufacture when he asked for it.

The general result would in our opinion be the degrading of the cigar industry in Canada. The quality of the cigars manufactured would be degraded by the introduction of the inferior Canadian leaf, and as the grades of cigars are cheapened, the tendency will be to lower the prices paid the cigarmaker. Cigars now made from Canadian tobacco are sold as low as $14 per thousand; many of our cigarmakers are paid that much per thousand for making some grades of cigars, and other grades are paid a higher price.

No one who is a smoker of cigars desires to smoke inferior tobacco—we do not object to Canadian tobacco because it is Canadian but because it is at present utterly unsuitable for cigars, the growers have been growing it for quantity not quality; let them reverse this policy and in the near future there will not be needed government action for to force it upon the people, nor will it work any injury to the cigarmakers who work it.

Respectfully,

J. PAMPHILON,

Representing Cigarmakers International Union.

I merely desire to place the matter before the minister because the government must take responsibility for its action in the matter.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We have received petitions from certain union cigar makers and we may have received the one read by my hon. friend. The arguments in it are much the same as those in other papers of the same kind presented to the department. I do not admit for a moment that any of the fears expressed by the members of the union will be realized. I cannot conceive that the effect will be to palm off on to the consumer worse cigars than he now smokes, and I do not think that the rate of wages—because after all that is what the union men fear—will be reduced, because the cigars made from Canadian tobacco will have to be sold at less price than those made from tobacco imported from Cuba or the United States. Under proper conditions of curing the tobacco and handling and packing it, as good tobacco can be grown in Canada as in any portion of the continent outside probably of Cuba. In British Columbia we have a very large area of land upon which tobacco can be grown as good as most of the tobacco imported into Canada. That has been demonstrated already by experts. What our farmers require is to have capitalists take hold of the tobacco after the crop is gathered and cure it and put it on the market in proper condition. By this resolution the quality of Canadian tobacco will be greatly improved, and while some cheap grades of Canadian cigars may be made, a very large percentage of first quality cigars, at 10 cents to 12½ cents, will be put on the market made wholly of Canadian tobacco. Cigars have been made recently from tobacco grown in British Columbia which are equal to some of the very best Cuban tobacco sold in Ottawa today. If my hon. friends had read the evidence given before the Agricultural Committee a few days ago by several experts, men well versed in the growing of tobacco and the making of cigars, he would be impressed with this fact, that the Canadian tobacco has been very materially improved within the last ten years and that Canada to-day can grow as good tobacco as can be had on the continent of America. And with further education along the lines of growing it and packing it and handling cigars made from Canadian grown tobacco, we will have as good product as any that can be obtained elsewhere. In this view, we will be doing the right thing in removing the discrimination which exists against the products of our own soil.

Mr. MONK. If the present state of the law with regard to labels constitutes, as the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Clarke) has said, a manifest injustice, the government has been very slow in remedying that injustice. Since the twelve years I have had a seat in this House, we have been asking from year to year for the removal of that grievance. More particularly, when the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) was Minister of Inland Revenue, great pressure was brought from the province of Quebec to remedy what I think is an injustice. But that pressure was unsuccessful. If we were not very near the general elections probably that injustice would have lasted some time longer. The real reason for this delay is undoubtedly the fact, of which we have had proof this evening, that there is a strong public opinion in favour of the maintenance of those distinctions, but I think the balance of the argument is entirely in favour of taking away that handicap which quite unnecessarily weighs on our home grown tobacco. The same remark applies to the permission which, under these resolutions, will be given for the introduction of the home grown leaf into the ordinary licensed factory. That also has been often petitioned for but up to the present no attention was paid to that request. I cannot however entirely agree with what my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Clarke) says nor with what has just been said by the minister, namely, that these two changes will materially improve the quality of Canadian tobacco. Why will the removal of these two handicaps improve the quality of home grown tobacco? The truth is that at present we produce—at least two years ago we did—quite a sufficient crop to satisfy the demand in Canada. There was a large production of tobacco either last year or the year before sufficient to satisfy the home demand. Our chance of making money is in the export trade. Of that there can be no doubt. We must make our tobacco suit the demand for export. There is the key of the situation, according to those who know something about it. We must learn how to cure tobacco for export to Europe and how to pack it. Then the immense demand that will be created for our home grown tobacco will make it a very paying industry. How are we to do that? Five years ago, in order to satisfy the demands repeatedly made, the government sent a man to England, Belgium and Holland with samples of our tobacco. This man came from the county of Montcalm. He reported that if our tobacco were properly cured and packed and grown under certain indicated conditions, we could not furnish enough of it to satisfy the European demand.

He could not furnish enough of it in Europe for the Belgian market and the Dutch market. And, even going back to Liverpool, he saw representatives of some large factory there, who told him that, under conditions which they indicated, the very tobacco samples of which he then had with him, could be sold in any quantity to-day in England. Therefore, since at this moment, these markets—the Belgian market for instance—are so entirely absorbed by exportations from Wisconsin, Connecticut and other states that have studied the foreign market conditions, it seems to me that what we have to do is to learn how to cure our tobacco for the needs of these immense markets on the other side of the Atlantic. We need to learn also how to pack the tobacco. The packing for the market of any country, in Europe, as everybody knows, is a matter of the utmost importance. We need to learn also some points in regard to the cultivation. The expenditure of a comparatively small amount of money to bring experts from states like Wisconsin and Connecticut, where the tobacco is cured and packed for the foreign market, would enable us to learn how to prepare our tobacco for that market so that we could have an unfailing demand. What would that mean? It would mean the expenditure, probably of $30,000, $40,000 or perhaps $50,000. In the Connecticut region, they spent over $30,000,000 before they brought their tobacco culture to the point of perfection it has reached to-day; and in Wisconsin they spent a large amount before they could prepare the tobacco to be sent under constant demand to European countries. Now, Mr. Charland is an expert, and, since he came to this country, he has examined our tobacco and made experiments in relation to it, which, no doubt, are of very great use. But it seems to me that our efforts ought to tend in that direction. How much are we wasting in the province of Quebec on dredging and public buildings? Why, with a small percentage of what we spend on utterly useless works of the kind I have mentioned in the province of Quebec, we could acquire a valuable science which would make our tobacco product every year sell at a price which would not diminish. For I am told that if the price goes below 9 cents per pound in Quebec, tobacco ceases to be a profitable culture, because it requires so much cultivation and so much care in drying and curing that it cannot be sold at a profit for less than 9 cents per pound. I mention this because it seems to be assumed by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Clark) and the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) that these changes—of which I approve—are going to produce a revolution in the prosperity of our home-grown tobacco trade. I think this is a step in the right direction. I think it removes a handicap and renders justice to people who have been claiming it for many years. But if we are to develop our Canadian tobacco industry in the matter it ought to develop, we must go a step further, and I think that step ought to be in the direction I have indicated.

Mr. BRODEUR. As to the last point referred to by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that hon. gentleman is aware, I suppose, of the steps that have been taken by my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) to increase the curing and growing of tobacco. While I will not say that very large sums of money have been spent for this purpose, a great deal of work has been done in this direction. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) secured an expert from France, a gentleman who was connected with the French cultivation of tobacco, to come to this country to study the situation and to try, by all means possible, to improve our cultivation of tobacco. This expert has been at work and has been giving lectures in different parts of the country, meeting the farmers and discussing with them the best ways of improving the cultivation of tobacco. I think that since he has been giving these lectures, and publishing them in the newspapers, and especially the papers connected with agriculture, great improvement has been made. If I mistake not, some seeds have been distributed among the farmers in order to improve the quality of their tobacco. Now, this change which has been made is going to simplify immensely the manufacture of tobacco and the administration of the department. Formerly the manufacturer was obliged if he wanted to manufacture Canadian and foreign leaf, to take out what we call a combination license. If he wanted to manufacture Canadian tobacco, he was obliged to get a license for the manufacture of that kind of tobacco, and if he wanted to manufacture foreign leaf, he was obliged to take out a new license. He had to carry out his manufacturing operations under these different licenses in different establishments. He could not use the same machinery for both classes of manufacture, but had to have separate sets of machinery for the manufacture of foreign leaf, Canadian leaf and what we call combination leaf.

Mr. BLAIN. Would that apply to cigars as well?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. And by these laws, the manufacturer was obliged to make expenditures detrimental to his own interest.

Mr. TAYLOR. What machinery is used for the manufacture of cigars?

Mr. BRODEUR. Of course a cigar is made mostly by hand. But there are machines required for certain stages of tobacco manufacture. This is going to disappear and the manufacturer will not be obliged to have three sets of machinery as formerly. I think that, in that respect, the Bill is a step in the right direction. Also, the department will not be obliged to have the same number of employees to supervise these factories, because the tobacco will go into the manufacture, and, if it is foreign leaf, it will be prepaid before it is used in the manufacture. There will be a uniform duty of $2 on the cigars. Formerly, if a man had three factories the department was obliged probably to have three different officers to look after them; while in future all that can be done in one factory. That will bring into use, as I have said, a larger quantity of Canadian tobacco. Now in the petition presented by my hon. friend from London (Mr. Beattie) it was stated that the black stamp was used only in cases where foreign tobacco is exclusively used. I think that is a mistake. Section 338 of the Inland Revenue Act provides that the licensed manufacturer of foreign leaf tobacco can use Canadian tobacco, provided, however, that he pays a duty of 25 cents a pound upon his Canadian leaf. The section reads as follows:

> When any raw leaf tobacco of Canadian growth has been taken into a licensed warehouse in which there is foreign leaf tobacco, or which is used for storage of foreign leaf tobacco, such Canadian leaf tobacco shall hereafter be deemed to be foreign leaf tobacco and shall be dealt with accordingly.

Under this provision of the law a licensed manufacturer of foreign leaf tobacco could import Canadian tobacco and bring it into his factory, pay a duty of 25 cents a pound, and afterwards he could put a black stamp on the manufactured article and say that it was made with foreign leaf, when in fact he might have used both foreign leaf and Canadian leaf; and under these circumstances he practised deception upon the public.

Mr. BLAIN. Why was that permitted by the department?

Mr. BRODEUR. It was the law, and there was no objection. The law has been in existence for many years because I see this section is reproduced from the revised statutes.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. What would be the penalty if a man did that, selling tobacco as foreign leaf?

Mr. BRODEUR. The penalty is provided in the law. But if it is sold as foreign leaf tobacco and sold on its merits, then I do not think it would fall under the provisions of the Criminal Code.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Supposing there was in a pound of tobacco both foreign and Canadian leaf, what would be the penalty if a man sold it as foreign leaf?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am not sure whether that would fall under the disposition of the Criminal Code as constituting a fraud upon the public. If a man advertise goods as foreign and they are not foreign but native, perhaps he is subject to a penalty under the Criminal Code ; certainly he would be subject to pay damages under the civil law.

Mr. BLAIN. I understood that the regulation went further, and that the black stamp represented cigars made in Canada out of foreign leaf.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is not correct. Under this section 328 a man licensed as a foreign manufacturer is supposed to use exclusively foreign leaf tobacco ; but at the same time the law permits him to take some Canadian leaf into his factory, and if he uses the Canadian leaf and mixes it with his foreign leaf and puts a black stamp upon it, then he will have to pay a tax of 25 cents a pound upon that article.

Mr. BLAIN. As I understood it, the former regulation meant that if a manufacturer of cigars in Canada put a black stamp upon them, it meant that the cigars were made out of foreign leaf.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, that meant that he had a foreign license, and that he was obliged to pay 25 cents a pound upon the Canadian tobacco he had used. It was strictly for revenue purposes.

Mr. BLAIN. So far as it was for revenue purposes it was all right ; but the fact remained that the manufacturers in Quebec to which my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Clarke) referred, were manufacturing cigars out of tobacco that was grown in Canada and were putting a black stamp upon then, when that stamp meant that the cigars were manufactured out of foreign leaf.

Mr. BRODEUR. Not necessarily. I think that in those circumstances that was another justification for the government to take the step we are taking. The black stamp simply shows that this tobacco had paid 25 cents excise duty.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Could not section 328 be evaded, and could not any person who had a license for foreign tobacco mix it with Canadian tobacco and put a black stamp upon it and thereby defraud the public ? Any man who had a foreign license could take his Canadian tobacco into the factory which was used for the storage of foreign leaf, he could mix them together and make a compound, and commit a fraud upon the public, and this law would justify him in doing so.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. If the object of the label was to indicate a brand of cigars, my hon. friend would probably be right. But the label is simply to show that the Inland Revenue Department tax has been paid on that box of cigars or tobacco.

Mr. BLAIN. What did the black stamp represent, then ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The black stamp indicates that the manufacturer of foreign leaf has paid a certain duty on the product of his factory.

Mr. BLAIN. That is what it meant, but the effect is that it ws a misrepresentation to the public, for the reason that the black stamp as in the case to which the hon. member for South Essex referred, represented that the cigars were made in Canada of Canadian leaf.

Mr. BRODEUR. When I was in the Department of Inland Revenue several cases were brought to my attention of manufacturers who had what was called a foreign license and were using Canadian leaf. It was not confined to one part of the country but it was found to exist in several parts of the country.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Is it not a fact that the producer of tobacco, say chewing tobacco, is in a worse condition under these regulations than he was before ? I figured it out here that he is about $2 worse off, that he has 33 per cent protection now as against 35 before.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, there is, under this clause, no reduction in duty. If the hon. gentleman will take into consideration the cuttings he will find that the Canadian grower is better off than under the old law. I will give an illustration : Foreign tobacco which was used formerly was paying ten cents per pound duty before it was used in the factory. Then, after it passed through the factory an excise duty of 25 cents per pound was paid. It was sent to the warehouse and the duty was not paid until it reached the consumer. Now, the duty will have to be paid by the manufacturer before using the tobacco and instead of it being 10 cents it will be 28 cents.

Mr. CLEMENTS. He must pay that much duty when it is entered ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, immediately, and the law will therefore work advantageously to the Canadian grower.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I figured it up in this way : At the present rate 100 pounds of foreign leaf tobacco will have to pay a duty of $10. One-third off for stems, leaves 63⅔ pounds and the excise at 25 cents will be $16.66. The liquid balance of 33⅓ pounds at 25 cents will be $8.33 or a total of $35 per 100 pounds. The proposed rate of 28 cents on 100 pounds would be $28. The excise levied on the liquid balance and stems at 5 cents a pound would be $3. It amounts to $33, instead of $35. Of course, I understand it will be an advantge that the manufacturers pay the duty immediately.

Mr. BRODEUR. It will be an advantage to the Canadian grower. It is true that the duty to be paid was 25 cents per pound, but it took so long a time to collect it that the Canadian grower did not have the benefit which this duty might otherwise have afforded him, We must take into consideration also this fact: A pound of tobacco goes into the factory and pays 10 cents and is manufactured. To-day it will have to pay 28 cents before the article is manufactured. Formerly they were not paying 25 cents on the pound of tobacco, which went in but they were paying 25 cents on the part of the tobacco which was used.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. There is an impression that where there are three kinds of tobacco manufactured three factories are necessary. If you want to manufacture Canadian tobacco you must have one factory, if you want to manufacture foreign tobacco you must have another factory and if you want to manufacture a combination of these two kinds of tobacco you must have another factory. Section 328 of the Inland Revenue Act provides that if you take Canadian tobacco into a factory which is used for foreign leaf you must not take such tobacco into that factory without the knowledge of the officers of the department.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. The rule then provides that:

All leaf tobacco and other materials are, as soon as received and an account of them taken, to be placed in the warehouse provided for that purpose and secured by Crown lock, the key thereof being in the possession of the officers in charge.

I would like to ask the minister if that rule is carried out and if the officials are there? I fail to see how a man who has a license for the manufacture of foreign tobacco can introduce Canadian leaf into that factory without the knowledge of the officials of the government. Yet, that is being done every day in Canada. It must be done with the knowledge of the officials and I want to tell the minister that this combination is sold with the black stamp on it. It must be with the connivance of the officials of the department. These rules have been made by the hon. gentleman's department and he must himself have a knowledge of this breach of the law.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. What breach of the law?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. If the department have a knowledge of this fraud they should punish the party guilty of it.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I have no knowledge of what fraud you are referring to.

Mr. CLARKE. It is not a fraud.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. It is a fraud.

Mr. CLEMENTS.

Mr. CLARKE. How is it a fraud if they comply with the law?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. They do not comply with the law.

Mr. CLARKE. The law says that it may be done.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. The law says that it cannot be done without the knowledge of the officials.

Mr. CLARKE. Well, the officials know it.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. No, the officials do not know it. I understand that it is being done all over Canada, and it is either done with the connivance of the officials or they have been neglecting their duty.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Where is the fraud upon the revenue?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. The Canadian leaf cannot be taken into a foreign leaf factory without the knowledge of the officials of the department and if it is taken there without their knowledge it is a violation of the law. It cannot be done without the knowledge of the official because the Inland Revenue officer has the Crown key. If the tobacco is taken into the foreign leaf factory, manufactured, and a black stamp put upon it, there is a fraud upon the public and there is a fraud which is connived at by the officials of the Inland Revenue department.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. The object of this regulation, as I understand, is not to guarantee to the public that the tobacco they are getting is foreign tobacco or combination tobacco or domestic tobacco. The object of this stamp is to regulate the amount of duty to be paid to the department. The idea that the public have when they see a black stamp is that the article is composed of foreign tobacco, but, that does not show whether it is foreign or any other kind of tobacco. It only shows that the manufacturer has paid 25 cents a pound excise upon it.

Mr. BLAIN. What does the black stamp indicate?

Mr. CLARKE. The black stamp is put on tobacco which is manufactured in the foreign leaf factory. If they use Canadian tobacco with it they must pay excise upon it to the amount of 25 cents a pound, whereas if they were using Canadian tobacco in a domestic or combination tobacco factory they would only have to pay five cents a pound. It must be pretty good tobacco when the manufacturer is willing to pay 25 cents a pound instead of 5 cents and no one can detect it from foreign tobacco. It may be that the public who do not understand the law will be deceived. But ignorance of the law is no excuse; numbers of people are deceived because they do not understand the law. If they would read it they would know, because the law is perfectly plain. It says that Canadian tobacco may be taken in. The manufacturers know it, but the reason it is not done to any great extent is that they have to pay an extra 20 cents per pound before they can put a black stamp on it.

Mr. BLAIN. Did the hon. gentleman not give an instance of a cigar manufacturing establishment in the province of Quebec which was doing that?

Mr. CLARKE. Quite so, they are doing it all over and the law allows them to do it.

Mr. BLAIN. Does my hon. friend not regard that as very misleading to the public who are consuming these cigars?

Mr. CLARKE. Not at all. I would say this: It would be misleading if the government undertook to say to the public that they guaranteed the kind of tobacco that stamp was on, but the law does not say anything of that sort. The law says you may use Canadian tobacco in a foreign factory, but if you do use it you must pay an additional 20 cents a pound excise, and all the stamp indicates to the public is that the excise paid on that tobacco is the excise payable in respect to foreign tobacco.

Mr. SPROULE. What about the regulation in clause 6 in regard to wood alcohol?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The purpose is to license the manufacturers of wood alcohol in the future so that we may get them under control and compel them to label wood alcohol as poison under regulations to be provided by the department.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I suppose these regulations will come into effect at once?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not think it will take us long to bring them into effect.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I have long advocated in this House the scheme advocated by the government, and although they have taken a long time to wake up to the necessity of this policy I want to give them whatever credit is due them. For the last five years I have been hammering as hard as I could to bring about this legislation with regard to Canadian tobacco, and at last the government have decided to do so. The argument of my hon. friend from Essex in answer to the hon. member from Prince Edward Island is only another proof of what I have always contended, namely, that the Canadian tobacco is as good as any imported tobacco, and as the factories which have been using it have proved the quality is all right.

Mr. CLARKE. It is getting better all the time.

Mr. CLEMENTS. My only regret is that there has not been a duty of 35 cents per pound straight customs duty imposed instead of 28 cents, but half a loaf is better than no bread, and I am satisfied with it as far as it goes.

Resolution reported, read a second time, and agreed to.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 143) to amend the Inland Revenue Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. Several resolutions and Bills on the Order Paper; the resolution respecting the French steamship line, the Bill respecting immigration, the resolution respecting patent medicines, if time permits, probably the Dry Dock Bill, and then Supply when the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture will probably be taken up.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 3, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

WINDING-UP ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 144) to amend the Winding-up Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The whole purpose of this Bill is to remove all possible misunderstanding with regard to the section of the Winding-up Act which provides that an execution issued against the company in course of winding-up shall not be effective to create any charge upon the property of the company if the winding-up intervenes before the execution has been perfectly carried out. In the framing of the section as it now stands in the Revised Statutes there has been a very slight alteration in the order of the wording and the Chief Justice of the Court of Appeal in Manitoba, noticing it, felt that possibly some obscurity was created in the meaning of the section by the arrangement of the wording. In that view it was thought well to remove all possible doubt by re-enacting the section which this Bill proposes to do.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION REPORT.

On the orders of the day being called:

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the Prime Minister had an opportunity of reading the letter to which reference was made yesterday ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I have received, as I stated yesterday, a letter from Mr. Justice Cassels in which he declared in substance that he would only undertake to assume any duty imposed on him by parliament on conditions, first that there should be no extra consideration beyond the salary of his regular office; and secondly, that the performance of such extra duties should not interfere with his duties as the judge of Court of Exchequer. I shall bring down the correspondence on Monday.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to make a few remarks upon the delay in bringing down the report and to be in order, I shall ask leave to move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The matter of urgent public importance which the hon. gentleman desires to discuss is:

The urgent and public importance of having printed copies of the report of the Royal Commission on the Civil Service placed immediately in the hands of members of this House, and the still greater importance of effective action by the government and parliament to redress the defects and abuses disclosed by that report.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I desire to detain the House only a very short time. This report was brought down and a motion made for its printing a week ago yesterday, on the 26th day of March. The report has not yet been printed and the delay seems altogether undue. Enterprising newspapers in the country had a very considerable portion of the report printed by the next morning, and for that purpose such portions of the report were sent all over the country by telegraph. The report itself could not possibly be more than about half the length of an ordinary number of 'Hansard,' which is placed on our desks every morning at 11 o'clock. The right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) takes the ground that it is not a matter for the government but a matter for the House and for a committee of the House. The best answer to that is that the printing of this document is performed by a government department of which the government have full control and that the committee of the House to which reference has been made, is a committee which is controlled always by the government of the day ; the excuse therefore does not seem to have very much force. I am not pretending to impute any blame to the King's Printer, I have no doubt that he may be doing the best he can ; but I venture to suggest that it is in the power of the government to expedite the printing of this report, and I think it is in the public interest and in the interest of the government itself that the report should be laid upon the table in printed form and made available to the members of this House at the earliest possible moment.

It has rather been assumed by gentlemen speaking from the treasury benches that this report concerns only the officials of the department who happen to be mentioned therein. I do not at all accede to that principle. There seems to be a curious attempt to dissociate the government and even the ministers of the different departments from any responsibility for the conditions disclosed in that report. Let me, in the first place, point out that so far as any particular department is concerned, it is the political head of that department in this House and not the officials of that department with whom this House is concerned. This principle is so well recognized that I wonder it could have escaped the recollection of hon. gentlemen as it seems to have done. Mr. Todd in volume 1 of his well known work on parliamentary government in England, at page 628, uses this language :

As a necessary consequence of the division of the civil service into political and non-political officers, and of the acknowledged supremacy of the members of the administration over all the subordinate employees, it is required by our parliamentary system that every branch of the public service should be represented, either directly or indirectly, in the Houses of parliament. This duty is performed by the political heads, who are themselves solely responsible for every act of administration down to the minutest details of official routine. Having entire control over the public departments, they are bound to assume responsibility for every official Act, and not to permit blame to be imputed to any subordinate for the manner in which the business of the country is transacted, except only in cases of personal misconduct, for which the political chiefs have the remedy in their own hands.

Therefore it is an axiom of responsible government that this responsibility is the responsibility of the minister in the first instance and as I shall show of the whole government eventually for any mal-administration, defects or abuses that may prevail in any department of the government.

But these matters concern not only the political head of any one of the departments involved in the report of this commission, but the government as a whole. The theory of the collective responsibility of the cabinet is so familiar to hon. gentlemen in this House, and Mr. Todd's words with regard thereto are so familiar, that I almost hesitate to quote them again. Just one sentence I may read—quoting from volume II. of Todd, Parliamentary Government in England, page 143 :

It is also distinctly understood that, so long as the different members of a cabinet continue in the ministry, they are jointly and severally responsible for each other's acts, and that any attempt to separate between a particular minister and the rest of his colleagues in such matters would be unconstitutional and unfair.

Then on page 402-3 :

In tracing the origin and development of the rule which requires political unanimity amongst the ministers of the crown, we have seen that it has become an acknowledged principle that, as long as a minister continues to form part of a government, he shares with his colleagues an equal responsibility for everything that is done or agreed upon by them.

Perhaps the theory of cabinet responsibility could not be put better than it has been put by Mr. Morley, in his Life of Walpole. At page 154 of that work, I find the following :

The principal features of our system of cabinet government to-day are four. The first is the doctrine of collective responsibility. Each cabinet minister carries on the work of a particular department, and for that department he is individually answerable.

In addition to this individual responsibility, he shares to a very large extent a collective responsibility with all other members of the government, for anything of high importance that is done in every other branch of the public business besides his own. The question whether the mistakes or misdeeds of one minister involves all the rest, is of course not quite independent of the position of the minister, or of the particular action. The censure and impeachment of Lord Melville, for example, was so purely personal in its bearings that it did not break up the government of Mr. Pitt. But as a general rule every important piece of departmental policy is taken to commit the entire cabinet, and its members stand or fall together. The Chancellor of the Exchequer may be driven from office by a bad despatch from the foreign office, and an excellent Home Secretary may suffer for the blunders of a stupid Minister of War. The cabinet is a unit—a unit as regards the sovereign, and a unit as regards the legislature. Its views are laid before the sovereign and before parliament, as if they were the views of one man. It gives its advice as a single whole, both in the royal closet, and in the hereditary or the representative chamber. If that advice be not taken, provided the matter of it appear to be of proper importance, then the cabinet, before or after an appeal to the electors, dissolves itself and disappears. The first mark of the cabinet, as that institution is now understood, is united and indivisible responsibility.

And Mr. Hearn, in his well known work on constitutional government puts the same idea even more forcibly. I quote from page 218 of the second edition :

It is a further consequence of this corporate character of the cabinet that the responsibility which attaches to the acts of any one member extends to the whole body.

And further on :

But it is not unreasonable that in ordinary matters of policy the conduct of each minister should bind his colleagues. For the ordinary details of the business of each department the other ministers rely upon the discretion of its chief. They have deliberately associated themselves with him; and if they doubted his competence they could have declined his alliance.

And a little further on :

Each minister therefore acts in his own department as the recognized agent of his colleagues in the particular department, subject, however, to inquiry and control by the whole body. But in all cases on which any difficulty is likely to arise, each minister, from motives not merely of prudence but of honour, takes the opinion of the cabinet. When this precaution is taken, the measure becomes of course the common act of the ministry. All its members have either expressly approved of it, or have at least sanctioned it by their acquiescence.

Under these authorities, it is therefore absolutely unquestionable that the abuses disclosed by the report of the Commission on the Civil Service are matters which affect not only the minister of the particular department in which these abuses arose, but the government as a whole. I, for one, therefore do not at all agree with the curious attempt at disassociation which has been put forward by hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches when they refer to these abuses.

Now, let us consider the minute of council and of the proposed action of the government. Let me say, in the first place, that so far as Mr. Justice Cassels is concerned, if you are to go outside the commissioners who have already made investigation, if you are to go to any man upon the judicial bench, I am sure there is no one who would not come to the conclusion that the government had made a very wise selection in choosing Mr. Cassels. That leaves wide open the question whether men occupying judicial positions should be selected to make inquiries of this kind ; and it also leaves wide open the question whether or not there is any reason on account of which this government, after a report has been made to them by men selected by themselves, should appoint another gentleman, however eminent, to investigate, in effect, the commissioners who have just now made that report. Let us look at the order in council which has been brought down by the Prime Minister—and brought down without any previous notice to this House of the intended action of the government.

The minister——

That is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

—observes that some statements are made in that report which affect the honour and integrity of the officers of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

On page LXI, of the report the following paragraph appears:

There would also seem to be a lack of conscience. In connection with the enormous expenditures which are deemed necessary, the word 'discount' never appears. It is tacitly assumed there is no such thing; but the whole commercial world knows otherwise. If no one gets any benefit from trade with the government, except the trader, then it must be clear that in these great purchases made for the government, without discount, its officers must be assisting the trader to get better prices from the government than he can get anywhere else; for everywhere else he has to give a discount. In other words, some of the government officers are serving two masters and apparently succeeding with both—Scripture notwithstanding.

The minister further observes that it is assumed by that statement that commissions are received improperly, or enhanced prices paid through dishonesty on the part of officials of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. But, unfortunately, the report does not mention any names which would enable him to take definite action concerning these officials. It is, however, in the interests of the Department of Marine and Fisheries and of the country that immediate steps should be taken in order to determine what officials (if any) deserve condemnation and to give to all an opportunity to meet the charges implied.

Now, I would leave it to the judgment of any hon. member of this House if that portion of the order in council which I have just read would not logically lead up to the conclusion that some further inquiry should be made by the three gentlemen who framed the report. Here are gentlemen who have spent six or seven months in making a certain investigation; they have made a certain report and have presented it to the government. The gentlemen upon the treasury benches understand that that report reflects upon certain officials of that department, although it does not name them. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries declares that it is necesary to ascertain who these officials are, and instead of going back to the commissioners who have made that investigation and know these facts, the gentlemen by whom any further inquiry and investigation should be made, it is proposed to pass these gentlemen over and to appoint another gentleman, a very able gentleman, to make that investigation which should be made by these same commissioners themselves. What is the meaning of it all? What is the reason, if a further inquiry is deemed necessary, that the men who have made a very painstaking and thorough investigation, and who have made a very elaborate report, should not be at least consulted as to these statements in their report before any further investigation is made? Although the logical conclusion of the first part of the order in council is what I have just now stated, the order in council goes on to say:

The minister therefore recommends that he be authorized to appoint the Hon. Walter Cassels a commissioner under part 2, chapter 104, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, to investigate and report upon the foregoing statements contained in said report of the Civil Service Commission reflecting upon the integrity of the officials of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, or of any of them.

There is another remarkable peculiarity about this order in council. If any further investigation of that department is required, why should its scope be restricted to so very narrow limits? The government is simply taking the same course that it took two years ago. Certain statements were made in the House with regard to the expenditure upon the steamship 'Arctic.' The Prime Minister brought down a resolution to this House which was intended in effect to limit the investigation to the question of whether the capacity of that vessel was sufficient to enable all that cargo to be put on board. I then moved as an amendment to the right hon. gentleman's motion a resolution that the scope of that committee should be widened and should be made to include a thorough investigation of this very department of Marine and Fisheries. What was the Prime Minister's answer? That any such suggestion as that was mere froth and wild talk. I do not know whether he regards the report of this commission as froth and wild talk. He did not see fit to broaden the scope of that investigation and every gentleman on the other side of the House who had heard repeated responsible statements made of excessive prices paid to middlemen and others stood up and voted to restrict the scope of that inquiry just as the Prime Minister had suggested, and the scope of the inquiry was restricted accordingly. Now following the course taken on that occasion, the same attempt is made to meet the trend of public opinion throughout this country by selecting one paragraph out of a report of 76 or 77 pages and selecting one department out of several which are involved in the censure of the commission, leaving all other abuses untouched. I do not think the course the government has taken is a wise one, or one which is conducive to the public interest; and for that reason I have taken this opportunity of discussing the subject upon a motion to adjourn the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. On a previous occasion when a motion was made by my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Maclean) that notice should be given at least two days in advance of all questions which were to be brought to the attention of the House, I understood from my hon. friend that there was no necessity for the rule, and that it was quite sufficient for us to rely upon the courtesy which is exchanged from one side of the House to the other, to give notice of any question which it was intended on one side or the other to bring forward. I have to observe to my hon. friend that on this occasion he did not live up to the standard of his own rule. I never had the slightest intimation that he intended to bring to the attention of the House the important question which he has brought forward. If I had known that my hon. friend intended to make such a motion, I should have prepared myself by at least looking up authorities to controvert some of the opinions which he had expressed. With regard to the question of printing the report, I do not think, in view of the observations of my hon. friend himself, that there is much to be said; I suppose that he referred to it merely as an introduction to what followed afterwards. The report is in the hands of the printer. I understand, it is a rather voluminous document, not so much the report itself as the appendix which is part of it. This it is which has caused the delay, not very long, of five or six days in presenting the report.

Mr. SPROULE. Ten days.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is not my information. I think it was referred to the printer last Thursday night. At all events, in view of the broader question which the hon. gentleman has brought before the House, I think that is of very little consequence. Two questions are now to engage the attention of this House in view of the observations which my hon. friend has just made. First of all, what is the extent of the responsibility of the administration for the condition of things which is said to exist in one of the departments of the administration, according to the report of he Civil Service Commission. Let me say first of all to my hon. friend that there is a wide distinction to be made between the government and the civil service. The civil service is not the government, the government is not the civil service. I am quite prepared to admit, however, that the government is responsible, and ought to be responsibility, for any delinquencies which may occur in the civil service. That is the reason we have appointed the commission, that is the sole reason d'etre of that commission. We wanted to ascertain how far certain rumours which were filling the air were true, and we wanted to know absolutely the conditions which prevailed in certain departments whose officials we should deal with under the responsibility which properly belongs to us. The reason we have appointed this commission is simply to ascertain to the fullest extent the responsibility which weighs upon us, or upon any gentlemen who are advisers of His Excellency, that is to say, we wanted to see that the business of the country was properly carried on. The business of the country must be carried on by means of a civil service, and it follows as a matter of course that the men who are entrusted with the confidence of the people must see to it that the functions of that service are properly discharged. That is why we accept to the fullest the responsibility which rests upon us. But I must go further. I do not think my hon. friend himself will, on reflection, be prepared to admit the consequences of the position which he has taken and the principle he has laid down. If I understood him aright, he lays down the principle that the government as a whole are responsible for anything which takes place in the administration.

I admit that, but to what extent? Does he mean to say that the responsibility is to be placed upon the government whether or not they take any precautions, or any action to correct the abuses which may take place? The limit and the extent of the responsibility which weigh upon the government are to see that the business of the country is properly carried on, to see that every officer does his duty properly, that every minister does his duty also to the country, but, if it so happens unfortunately that an officer fails to do his duty or is delinquent—I will say more—if it happens that a minister is delinquent, if he fails to do his duty, does it follow that the government is to be condemned absolutely and collectively for the mistake or mis-doing of that officer or of that minister? My hon. friend does not pretend any such thing I am sure. He cannot do it. It would not be common sense. The government as a whole would be responsible, if, being informed and apprised of the delinquencies that may have taken place somewhere, or of the wrong-doing which may have been going on somewhere, they failed to take the necessary precautions and measures to correct the abuses which may have crept into the government. I will give to my hon. friend an example that happened—I am sorry to speak of it this way, but what I speak of now is a matter of history. In this House, in the session of 1891, not an officer, not a deputy minister, not a subordinate, but a minister of the Crown, a member of the government, was accused on the floor of this House by an hon. member of certain delinquencies in office. The matter was referred to a committee, investigated and found to be true. To that extent the government were responsible, but that was the limit of their responsibility and they discharged their duty when they saw to it that this minister received—what shall I say?—at all events when he was dealt with and forced out of the government. If, that minister having been found guilty of a grave political offence, had been kept in the government then, certainly, the whole government would have been responsible and they would have been as guilty as he was himself. But, the duty of the government was discharged the moment they took the means of seeing that this man was no longer allowed to remain in the government. That is the doctrine which was laid down at that time, and it seems to me that the expression of opinion upon the subject to which I will call my hon. friend's attention in a moment, enunciates a principle which need not be supported by authority but which appeals to the common sense and fairness of every man who will reflect upon this subject. In March, 1861, Sir Charles Wood, speaking with reference to a matter of this kind in the English House of Commons, used the following language:

The duty of the House of Commons is to hold those responsible who are the ministers of the Crown. If those ministers find that any of the other officers of the department do not work well under them, then it is their duty to devise some remedy for the inconvenience; but the responsibility should not be divided; it should be imposed only on those who were able to answer for themselves in the House.

That is to say we should not hold the officers responsible to this House. It is the ministers who are to be responsible to the House, but, Sir, the ministers have discharged their duty and met the full responsibility which weighs upon them when they have devised some remedy for the inconvenience. Well, that is what we have done. We have tried to find a remedy for the inconvenience. We have appointed a commission to investigate what may be wrong in the department and to advise us of the abuses which they find so that we may be put in a position to remedy the inconvenience. The commission which we have appointed have fulfilled their duty; they have reported to this House. It was stated to this House, not that in all of the departments, as stated by my hon. friend—I do not admit that statement to be correct—but that in the Department of Marine and Fisheries there were some officers who, they said, had no conscience and who did not discharge their duty properly. They gave no names; they were not in a position to state who were guilty of these delinquencies. How are we to discharge the responsibility which devolves upon us? We have to take action upon this report. What action should be taken except the action which we took which was to decide that we should have a further investigation. My hon. friend cannot controvert the position which I take that this was the proper thing to be done. I have to quote the words of his own colleague, the hon. gentleman who sits next to him, who, when this matter was brought up, spoke as follows:

Now, Sir, that is not that kind of a commission or that the kind of a committee that the people of this country will wish to see or will be satisfied if they do not see. A royal commission or a committee of independent members of this House clothed with authority to go into the whole administration of that department covering the term of the minister preceding the present minister and his own term at least; that is the least that can be done to satisfy the people of this country.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

In the report which was made by these three commissioners they complained of two things—the inefficiency of the officials and the dishonesty of the officials. In regard to the inefficiency of the officials I have to take this position that it is the duty of the minister in charge to look after them. It is for him to see that the officers do their duty efficiently and if it is found that they are not doing their duty efficiently then it is for him to take such action, as his responsibility to this House will require him to take. But, when it comes to a matter of dishonesty, when it comes to the fact that the honesty of these officers is put in question, when you find it stated in the report that there has been dishonesty and want of conscience surely another investigation should take place. That is what had to be done and that is what we have done.

Now, my hon. friend takes another exception. He says: If you have an investigation, why do you not entrust the same duty to the commission who were entrusted with that duty before? Why do you not employ the three commissioners whom you employed before? The answer is very obvious. The powers which were conferred upon the commissioners whom we appointed to inquire into these matters were exhausted when they handed in their report. They made their report to us, they stated that there was a lack of conscience in the Department of Marine and Fisheries and that there were some officers in that department who could not be trusted. They gave no names. They might have gone beyond that but they did not do so; they chose to stop where they did stop. They chose not to go beyond and therefore they exhausted their powers. They told us practically that they did not want to investigate the matter further. It is a duty which is not a pleasant one for anybody to undertake. This commission spent several months, from May of last year to April of this year in the discharge of their duties. Perhaps they did not think that they would be called upon to go any further, and since they have discharged their duty, since they have exhausted the authority which we have given them, we think it would not be fair to allow them to assume other duties. If the power of the commissioners had been exhausted by efflux of time, if they had told us that they had gone thus far and that they had no more power to go farther it would have been our duty to have asked them to go on, but when they told us of their own volition that they did not want to go beyond that, that they desired to limit their inquiry to that point, would it be fair or just or equitable or advisable to ask them to go farther, to say no, we want you to go farther and continue this investigation ? That is the reason we have to give for asking Mr. Justice Cassels to assume these duties since we thought, and I maintain, rightly thought, that we could not ask the other commissioners to go beyond that, they having themselves exhausted their authority. I am proud to say that we have the endorsement of my hon. friend himself for the selection we have made and who agrees with us that we could not have made a wiser selection. We have asked Mr. Justice Cassels to make a through and impartial investigation which will give to the people of this country the true condition of things without fear or favour and which will disclose the whole truth, no matter what the truth may be. It is only in that light that we look upon this matter. We have appointed this commission to discharge this duty because we thought it advisable to do so. We have selected a gentleman to discharge this duty in whom we have the utmost confidence. It does not matter to us who the guilty parties are, if there are guilty parties, it does not matter to us upon whom the blows may fall, if blows are to fall, but in discharging the duty that we owe to the people of this country our only idea is that we shall get the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. It does not matter to us upon whom the blow may fall, if any should fall, we owe it to the people, in the discharge of our duty, that we should have the truth and the whole truth and nothing but the truth, and that is what we want.

Mr. HAGGART. The right hon. gentleman finds fault with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition for lack of courtesy in the way in which he introduced the resolution we are now discussing. Well, Mr. Speaker, the report of the Civil Service Commission has been on the table since the 17th March last. It is open to any member of this House to have that report read at any moment. The government of course have read it, and it is open to any member to bring up a discussion on it, and in doing so he is not guilty of any act of discourtesy. This motion is not one which comes under the category of motions in amendment to Supply, concerning the intent of which the government may have no conception. Here however is a report which has been before the country the last fortnight, and a discussion upon which the government should be prepared for and have not the slightest reason to object to. The right hon. gentleman attempts to defend the order in council which he has brought down, appointing Mr. Justice Cassels, Royal Commissioner, for the purpose of reinforcing the report of this commission. It is a novel feature to have the right hon. gentleman and his supporters so much in love with royal commissions. Any one who has been a member of this House a number of years can remember how these hon. gentlemen, led by Mr. Blake, thundered against the appointment of royal commissions for the purpose of inquiry. But these hon. gentlemen, when they get into power, completely ignore their past professions and fall into the old Tory doctrine of appointing royal commissions for the purpose of defending malfeasance in office. We do not hear them now preach the doctrine of ministerial responsibility. I remember when there was a defalcation in the department, which I was administering at the time, and in which one of the officials combined with a contractor for the purpose of defrauding the people. I suspended every officer who had the least connection with the matter. I ordered the parties implicated to be arrested and brought before the criminal court. But that was not sufficient for hon. gentlemen opposite. They then relied entirely upon the doctrine of ministerial responsibility. That is an entirely different doctrine from what the right hon. gentleman is advocating to-day. To-day he disclaims any ministerial responsibility. He charges the opposition with not taking a particular course. What other course could we take than we have done? Again and again, during the last three or four years, we have charged that in certain departments, presided over by certain ministers, the officers were at least slovenly in the performance of their duties, and we have had that charge confirmed by the report of the Royal Commission. We are told, however, that we did not pursue a manly course. A couple of members—one from Cape Breton and another from Nova Scotia—have got up in this House and said to us : When you have accusations to make against a minister and the officers of any department, why do you not make it in a manly way and risk your seat if you do not prove your case? This is a new doctrine laid down by this couple of gentlemen who seem to have control and dictation, not only in this House, but in the committees of this House. I am not aware that any hon. member risks his seat when he makes an accusation. But what I say is that the minister in charge of the department implicated cannot escape the responsibility for the situation, and neither can the government, because again and again in this House have different members, both on the floor of the House and in the Public Accounts Committee, charged the government with the frauds that have been committed in that department, and on every occasion both in this House and in the committee the government majority have stifled any inquiries. Just look at the position in which the right hon. gentleman stands at present, and in what position does he put a judge of one of our superior courts. He appoints that judge for what purpose? The Civil Service Commission have reported that frauds have been committed in a particular department. The right hon. gentleman cuts out a small part of that report and refers that to a judge. For what purpose? To find out who the criminals are. Fancy a royal commission being appointed for the purpose of searching and hunting out who the parties are who are stealing in a department. Is that a part of the duty of a royal commission? But they have now the report of the Royal Commission on the Civil Service. Why do they not adopt that report or refuse to adopt it? Why do they take out a small portion of it and refer that to a judge? For what purpose? To find out who the criminals are who are guilty in some transactions in the Marine Department. But were there no reflections on any other department? What about the Militia Department and several others which have been commented on in that report? Are they to escape free? Is there to be nothing done with reference to them? Are we to be told that in their case it is only a petty affair after all? Are we to be told that all, except the particular matters referred to Mr. Justice Cassels, are of no consequence? We have every reason for believing that some of the officers in the Marine and Fisheries Department have been peculating. That has become notorious throughout the country, and the hon. gentlemen who are administering the affairs of this country know it. They know that frauds and everything which debases and corrupts and demoralizes the public service has been carried on under their aegis and protection. Again and again that fact has been brought to their attention and now we find them doing what they denounced in the past. We find them appointing a royal commission for the purpose of covering their own delinquencies. There is to be no free, open inquiry, as their former great tribune, Mr. Blake, would say. Why appoint a royal commission? Is this House not competent to make the inquiry? An inquiry by this House would be open to the public. Every member of parliament could attend and hear every bit of evidence. Every member of parliament can go and hear every bit of evidence that is given there. Let us have no royal commissions. Let us have a free inquiry, and if evidence is stifled there the public will know it. I simply rose for the purpose of drawing attention to the peculiar and anomalous position of hon. gentlemen opposite, who in former years denounced royal commissions as being for the purpose of shielding ministers, and who are now going back on their record in doing what they formerly condemned.

Mr. SPEAKER. Does any other hon. member desire to speak to the motion before the mover exercises his right of reply?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a very few words. I have sometimes observed that when my right hon. friend is in rather a tight place he becomes pathetic and blames this side of the House for alleged discourtesy. If we come to the question of courtesy, perhaps it would have been only fair for the right hon. gentleman to have sent us a copy of the order in council in advance, and to have brought it down under such conditions that there could have been discussion upon it. There are certain privileges granted to the leader of the House by the courtesy of the House. My right hon. friend availed himself of that custom when he brought down this order in council and spoke as no other member of this House could have spoken, by the courtesy of the House, without giving the slightest opportunity for discussion. One would have supposed that when he brought the order in council down he would have understood that it would come under the discussion of the House at a very early day, even if he did not see fit to bring it down under such conditions as would then permit that discussion which ought to take place in such a case. There is a question of discourtesy and there has been no discourtesy. The resolution of the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. A. K. McLean), to which he has referred, would not have the slightest bearing on this case even if it had passed.

With regard to the responsibility of the government, the right hon. gentleman says that I have taken singular ground. I have taken only such ground as has been laid down by Todd, Hearn and Morley, and have made very little comment of my own. I have read the words of these men, whose words are authoritative in every part of the world where representative institutions prevail, and I have pointed out the collective responsibility of the government for departmental misdeeds. The right hon. gentleman speaks of hardships; he says how hard, how unendurable it would be that a whole government should suffer for the default of one minister. Does not the right hon. gentleman know that if one minister has acted without the consent and concurrence of his colleagues, it becomes his duty to resign from the government and take the whole blame upon himself, and then the rest of the administration do not suffer? That course has been followed over and over again, notably in the case of Lord Russell on his return from Berlin, and in the case of Lord Ellenborough, who disclosed prematurely a confidential despatch to the Governor General of India. In both of these cases the minister involved resigned from the government, and his resignation obviated consequences to the government that would otherwise have ensued. That is the answer to my right hon. friend in that regard.

My right hon. friend refers to the remarks of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) with regard to the Royal Commission. Well, I do not imagine that the hon. member for North Toronto has said his last word on that subject. The discussion that has taken place up to the present time, including that of to-day is of course only prediminary to that which must come when in course of time, perhaps in the month of November next, the government see fit to lay that Royal Commission in printed form on the table of the House. The discussion will come then. But to suggest, as the right hon. gentleman did, that any language of the hon. member for North Toronto justified for one moment the action of the government is so far beyond my conception of any reasonable meaning which could be drawn from the words of that hon. member, that I really think my right hon. friend must have been joking when he made that suggestion. What did the hon. member for North Toronto suggest? He suggested in the first place that there might be need of a royal commission. Has there been a royal commission? No; there has been a mere departmental commission. The commission to Mr. Courtney and his associates was one issued under the first part of chapter 104—a royal commission in the true sense of the term. The commission issued now is a mere departmental commission, issued under the second part of chapter 104 by the minister himself under the authority of the Governor in Council, but not issued by the Governor in Council. Further than that, did the hon. member for North Toronto suggest that you should take one paragraph of this report and confine any further investigation to that? No; he suggested that, if there were to be any further investigation, it should be even more thorough and sweeping than that which has taken place. There is no doubt that the gentlemen who made this report placed a fairly wide and comprehensive construction upon the terms of the Royal Commission which was issued to them, though I do not for one moment say that they placed upon them too wide and comprehensive a construction. But if there is need of any subsequent investigation, so far as the terms of their report has been made known to the House, it is not necessary to limit the scope of that commission, but to widen and broaden it to the fullest possible extent, so that the whole question of public expenditure, yes, and beyond that, perhaps the question af the alienation of the public domain of this country, shall be inquired into by men who have the courage of their convictions and are not afraid to express what is in their minds when they come to make their report on the evidence before them. The right hon. gentleman has said very little about this commission——

THE ROYAL ASSENT.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received from the secretary of His Excellency the Governor General the following communication :—

Ottawa, March 17, 1908.

Sir, I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Administrator, will proceed to the Senate Chamber this afternoon at 4 o'clock, for the purpose of assenting to such Bills as have passed the Senate and the House of Commons.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was dealing with the question of the scope of this report. I repeat that the order in council brings the proposed investigation down to what is comparatively a very small matter simply the question of discounts which is alluded to in this report, and there is no pretense of a thorough investigation by another commission. If there is to be another investigation it should certainly be very much wider in its scope than is proposed by the government.

The right hon. gentleman rather disputed the statement that other departments of the government besides the Department of Marine and Fisheries are involved. The Department of Militia has been already alluded to. The summary of this report as published in the 'Free Press' on Friday morning, March 27, contains the following passages:

> They condemn the influence of politics in the Customs Department and cite many instances of the power of the political pull. They urge that the department be absolutely divorced from political influences and that all appointments should be made on a basis of merit. The same criticism applies to the Inland Revenue Department. The Railways and Canals Department is passed over with little comment, but that is favourable. The Interior Department is also passed over with the remark that it would have taken months to thoroughly inspect it.

And so on. So it is by no means the case that only the Department of Marine and Fisheries is censured by this report. That report calls for a thorough investigation not only of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, but of many other departments of the government, and demands that that investigation should be of the most thorough and searching nature. The very remark of the commission which I have just read, that it would take months to inspect the Department of the Interior is a distinct and positive invitation to this government to have this department investigated fully and fearlessly at the earliest possible moment.

The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in effect declared that his best reason—I have no doubt it was his best reason—for passing over the members of the commission whose report has been laid on the table of the House was that the commission was tired and unable to continue its work. If three men, business men of experience and of ability, have become tired in investigating four, five or six departments of the government, what does that indicate as to the condition of these departments? As a matter of fact it is not the commission who are tired but the government, and I very strongly suspect that that is the reason why they have seen fit to pass over these gentlemen and to delegate to another tribunal that which properly should be referred back, if it is referred at all, to the same commissioners. These gentlemen report certain conditions in the Department of Marine and Fisheries to which this order in council relates. Where could the government expect to get the information asked for as easily as through the efforts of the men who have been conducting the investigation of that department? Can there be any question in the minds of any reasonable man as to that? Here are men who for months have been delving into the operations of the Department of Marine and Fisheries and have made a damaging report. That report, in the opinion of the government, calls for further investigation, but the government propose to pass those men over absolutely, and not to utilize their knowledge as to the working of the department and the conduct of its officials; they issue an order in council directing Mr. Justice Cassels of the Exchequer Court to make a departmental investigation. The Prime Minister did not see fit to defend that part of the order in council at length, he passed it over in a very slight way. I think that perhaps in this he was wise. When parliament and the country come to consider this question in the aspects which have been presented this afternoon, they cannot fail to conclude that the government has not acted wisely in the public interest and that the proper course, if any further investigation were demanded would have been to call for an investigation by the men who have already done so well in the public interest during the past few months and whose report we hope to discuss before the session is very much older.

Motion of Mr. R. L. Borden negatived.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I wish to inquire about two returns I asked for on January 29, one with regard to the Hillsborough bridge and the other with regard to Public Works expenditures in Prince Edward Island for a stated period.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Immediately on the latter return being ordered directions were given that the information should be prepared as speedily as possible. It is in course of preparation and I think will be laid on the table very soon.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would also call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the fact that Summerside harbour is now practically free of heavy ice and ask him if he would send the 'Stanley' there to open a harbour so as to open communication between Summerside and Tormentine.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). This is a matter which is left entirely to the discretion of the captains of the vessels. They decide where the boats shall go. It seems to me that when they leave Georgetown and Pictou their best course would be to go to Charlottetown and Pictou.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I understand they are running to Charlottetown and Pictou now.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is a matter which is left entirely to the discretion of the captains.

CANADA-FRANCE STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to enter into a contract for a term not exceeding ten years with any individual or company, for the performance of a steamship service between a port or ports in Canada and a French port or ports, on such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council deems expedient, and to grant therefore a subsidy based upon a minimum service of eighteen round voyages a year, and a subsidy therefor not exceeding one hundred thousand dollars, and so in proportion for a more frequent service.—Mr. Brodeur.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). The object of this resolution is to improve and extend the steamship service now existing between France and Canada. Some years ago, I think in 1901, the sum of $100,000 was voted and the government were empowered to make a contract for ten years with an annual subsidy of $100,000. The minimum was for eighteen round trips and the subsidy $50,000, with additions for a more frequent service. This amount was not sufficient to induce any person to undertake the contract. It may be of importance to the House to know the history of this subsidy for the establishment of a Canadian French line. In 1889, the sum of $500,000 a year was voted by parliament to establish a service between Canada and England via a French port. As this subsidy was not found large enough, I suppose, to induce any company to take the contract, it was increased to $750,000 in 1894. In 1896 the vote of $750,000 was maintained for a direct service between Canada and England and $50,000 was added providing for a five years contract with a fortnightly service between Canada, France and Belgium. As a matter of fact, this is the first time money was voted for the establishment of a direct line between Canada and France, but this subsidy was not taken up by any company —or it might be more correct to say that some attempts were made but without success. In 1901, this government provided a subsidy of $100,000——

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not the fact that a provisional contract was made by Sir Charles Tupper before he went out of office?

Mr. BRODEUR. For a direct line between Canada and England.

Mr. SPROULE. Did it not include calling at a French port?

Mr. BRODEUR. I thought that the negotiations with the Allan line covered only the service between Canada and England. It is some years since this matter transpired, and my memory of it may not be quite correct. At all events, 1896 was the first year when a sum of money was voted for a direct line between Canada and France. In 1901, this sum was increased to $100,000. No company seemed to be ready to make a contract to carry on the service and earn the subsidy. In 1903, the present government increased the subsidy to $133,333.33. It was provided that $100,000 should be paid for eighteen round trips and proportionately for a more frequent service. On the basis of $100,000 for eighteen round trips, that meant $5,555.55 for each trip. Under this law passed in 1903, nobody undertook to provide a service until 1905, when the Allan line undertook to have vessels running directly between France and Canada. The contractors were the owners of the steamers 'Laurentian,' 'Pomeranian,' 'Sardinian' and 'Buenos Ayrean.' By contract made on February 9, 1905, they undertook to carry on, for three years from the opening of navigation in 1905, a regular direct steamship service between France and Canada. They had, however, the privilege of calling at London. I believe the service they are giving to-day is one by which their vessels call at Le Havre, thence to London, and, returning, call again at Le Havre. This contract has practically expired, because it ceases with the opening of this year's navigation, which is at hand. It is of great importance that we should provide for the maintenance and improvement of this service. My principal reason for thinking this is important is to be found in the new treaty between Canada and France which, I am glad to say, has been to-day assented to by the representative of His Majesty in Canada. By clause 8 of the treaty, it is provided that Canadian goods, in order to be admitted to France under the minimum tariff of that country, must be imported direct from a Canadian port to a French port. These goods, of course, might be exported and transhipped to France and still come under the minimum tariff, but they would be subject also to what is called the surtax d'entrepôt.

Mr. BERGERON. What is that?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is the law of France that all goods exported from America—I am not sure about the other continents, but I am sure so far as America is concerned——

Mr. BERGERON. I could understand that in the case of shipment from Canada to any other country but England, for transhipment to France. But the commercial relations between England and France must be on a better footing than those between Canada and France. The hon. minister has told us the case as he understands it, but what I cannot understand is why there should be surtax d'entrepôt upon our goods going through a country between which and France commerce must be on a better footing than even between Canada and France.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am not in a position to give the reasons why the French law is so framed. The French law requires that goods shipped from America to France, if instead of going direct, they pass through England or Belgium or Germany, that is to say, countries enjoying the benefit of the French minimum tariff, then these goods are subject to the surtaxe d'entrepot.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not quite understand how goods passing through England should be on the same footing as goods passing through Germany or Belgium. There are no goods exported from Canada to France that pass through the ports of Germany or Belgium. The only country through which our goods would pass in going to France is England. Now the treaty between England and France is more liberal than a treaty between any of those countries and France, because England is a free trade country, and we all know that she gives greater advantages than any other country.

Mr. BRODEUR. The law with regard to the surtaxe d'entrepot is the same regarding commerce between France and Germany and Belgium, that is to say, that on all goods which are shipped from America to France, or to Germany, Belgium, England or Spain, there is a surtaxe entrepôt when those goods reach France. When I was on the other side I discussed the matter with several French authorities, and I found that the reason why French legislation is so framed is with a view of encouraging shipbuilding in France, as if all the goods going from America were imported directly to France, it would increase French shipping. I understand that is the reason why this surtaxe d'entrepot is imposed.

Mr. SPROULE. A steamer going from Canada to France and calling at a British port before landing in France, but without unloading the goods, would that be regarded as a direct shipment to France ?

Mr. BRODEUR. If goods are exported from Canada, and the ship calls, for example, at Southampton and then goes on to France, without the goods being unloaded at Southampton, that would be considered as a direct shipment, and vice versa. So in virtue of this clause of the treaty which has just been assented to, it is provided that goods, in order to enjoy the benefit of the French minimum tariff, will have to be exported direct from Canada to France, or exported from Canada to a country enjoying the benefit of the French minimum tariff. But in this latter case, when goods are not exported direct, they are subject to the surtaxe d'entrepot, which generally speaking is 3 francs and 50 centimes, equivalent to about 70 cents, for 100 kilos. I may say in this connection that the French tariff is a specific tariff, and the duties are based mostly upon weight or size of the goods. That is the reason why the surtaxe d'entrepot is established. Now if we do not maintain any direct line between Canada and France we will lose the benefit, in many cases, of the French minimum tariff ; at all events, we will be obliged to pay the surtaxe d'entrepot. Then is it not advisable that Canada, as it has been the policy of this government for several years, should pass legislation subsidizing a direct steamship service between Canada and France ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is the minister able to tell us the amount of goods that have been exported to France direct previous to this treaty, and what is the estimated amount that we are likely to export to France?

Mr. BRODEUR. I will come to that question shortly.

Mr. LENNOX. At this point perhaps the minister will explain a provision in this order in council. Will vessel owners be compelled to sail direct from Canada to France and back again, or will they be complying with the subsidy conditions if they first sail to England, then to France, and from France back to England and then to Canada ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have just explained that if goods are exported from Canada to France, and if the vessel stops at Southampton for instance, and the goods are not unloaded there, then they will enjoy the benefit of the French minimum tariff ?

Mr. LENNOX. I mean will a steamship company be tied down to a direct passage from Canada to France and from France to Canada, and will it be prevented from taking any English port ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Provided the goods are not unloaded at the English port, the benefit of the tariff will be absolutely enjoyed by Canadian exporters or importers. Now coming to the question put by my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), when I was in France I discovered a situation which proved to me that we were losing a great deal of the shipping of goods exported from France. I saw by their statistics that the value of the goods exported from France to Canada in the year 1905, that was the last year of which they had complete returns, were valued at about $2,000,000, whereas the value of those same goods, according to our own statistics, was about $7,000,000. How is it that our statistics were giving $7,000,000 when their own statistics were only giving $2,000,000? I have given the matter some consideration and I have come to the conclusion that most of the goods exported from France to Canada, instead of being exported direct, were exported through the United States. One of the provisions of the new treaty is that goods, in order to get the benefit of the intermediate tariff or of the rates of duty provided in the treaty, will have to be imported direct from France to Canada. There is good reason to believe that this $5,000,000 worth of goods, of which no record is given by France, have probably been exported through Belgium or Germany. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) said a few minutes ago that there were no exports of Canadian goods through Antwerp to the French market. I think he is mistaken, because I have ascertained that the lines that we have subsidized to Antwerp have carried a large quantity of goods for the French market and the same thing applies to the return cargoes. A large quantity of goods exported from France to Canada pass through Belgium. But, for the sake of argument, it does not matter. It is to be expected that, while to-day apparently there are only $2,000,000 worth exported direct from France to Canada, in the future large quantities of goods will be imported direct, probably $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 worth. It therefore becomes imperative for the government to provide for this increased amount of traffic and consequently it is proposed to pay a maximum subsidy of $200,000 instead of $130,000, as at present.

Mr. BERGERON. The resolution provides for a payment of $100,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, the resolution goes further and provides for a subsidy not exceeding $100,000 'and so in proportion for a more frequent service.' The resolution is based upon a service of eighteen round trips calling for a subsidy of $5,555.55 for each trip, but this subsidy may be increased and the intention of the government is to increase it to $200,000 if the requirements of the trade demand. We start with the idea that we are going to have eighteen round trips, but the service may be increased to thirty-six round trips which will make the subsidy $200,000.

Mr. BERGERON. You cannot do that.

Mr. BRODEUR. We do not know. To-day, probably nobody would take that subsidy but we are providing for a certain number of years.

Mr. BERGERON. Does my hon. friend think that they can make more than two trips a month?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have just explained the reason why I think there is going to be a much larger traffic. As I have said the statistics issued in France show that there are only $2,000,000 worth of goods exported from France to Canada, when the total exports from France to Canada are really $7,000,000. There are $5,000,000 worth to be provided for which will give an increased traffic, and consequently we must make provision for that increased traffic.

Mr. SPROULE. What accounts for the difference between the trade and navigation returns of France showing the business done between Canada and France and our trade and navigation returns?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think it is because our statistics are kept in a different way from that in which they are kept in France. In France, if goods are exported by way of Antwerp to Canada they will not be entered as being goods exported to Canada but as goods exported to Belgium, while in Canada we exact a sworn declaration for the purpose of showing where these goods are found and we find, by reason of the rigid requirements of our customs officers with respect to information, that the results of this trade are greater insofar as our statistics are concerned than those shown by the French statistics.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman seems to arrive at the conclusion that there are about $5,000,000 worth of goods that this new line would carry that are now carried by boats coming from other countries.

Mr. BRODEUR. From other countries. This is a very important point because if the goods, instead of being exported from France direct to Canada, are exported from Belgium to Canada, they will not enjoy the benefit of the reduced duty.

Mr. BERGERON. That would be a bad thing for the French goods.

Mr. BRODEUR. It would be a bad thing for Canada too because we would have to pay the larger rate of duty.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) some time ago, informed us that the loss of revenue to Canada would be in the neighbourhood of $400,000. We are now making provision for subsidizing transportation between Canada and France which will possibly amount to $200,000. The French government, I understand, contributes nothing towards that subsidy. It seems to me strange, and I rather think the ministers who negotiated this treaty did not secure all that they should have secured from France. Why did they not stipulate that no matter how little went from Canada to France, whether by direct communication, or through England or in some other way, we should be relieved of this surtax d'entrepôt. I think it would have been a fair thing to have asked the French government and, I think we would have been entitled to it in consideration of what we are surrendering in revenue and in consideration of the very large sum that we propose to pay to assist transportation between Canada and France. I have wondered that the ministers made no attempt to secure better terms with France, or terms which, I think, we ought to have secured. The minister has told us that the only reason why better conditions were not obtained was that it was contrary to the law of France, but we were making a treaty with France and I think that under the conditions the French republic was fairly entitled to modify its regulations or laws. I do not suppose they are like the laws of the Medes and Persians, that they never can be changed. I think it is something that they should have met the Canadian ministers on and that they should have given us the privilege of entry into France simply under the minimum tariff no matter whether our goods went to France direct, or through England, or whether after breaking bulk in England or in any other country. I have been wondering if the ministers made any attempt to secure those conditions in view of the fact that we are giving so much to France, because the French republic is going to get very much the better of this treaty. True we are to get cheaper silk, but we shall lose the revenue. True we are to get cheaper wine, but I do not know how far that will be an advantage to this country if we have to sacrifice our own industry of wine making. I think that on the whole the French republic have got the best of the treaty and they do not seem to have sacrificed anything. I wonder if the minister asked them to surrender anything. They should have accorded to Canada the right to send its goods to France either directly or via some other country without having to pay any surtax, because that surtax will nullify to a great extent any benefit we are to get from the treaty. Was that matter discussed or was it overlooked ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We obtain absolutely the same advantages as those given other countries. Take the case of the Republic of Argentine, which is doing a big business with France. That country has the benefit of the French minimum tariff on some articles, but the goods have to be exported direct. If they are not, they do not enjoy that benefit. We are absolutely in the same position. What we were negotiating upon mostly was the question of the tariff. This question of surtax d'entrepot is outside the tariff. It is a general law which applies to all countries except European countries. Its object is to encourage the carrying of cargoes by French vessels. The subject was discussed, but they showed us that it was their general law which they have never changed. With regard to the other points, I consider that the advantages we get under the treaty are greater than those we give. It would not be fair to state that we are going to lose a revenue of $400,000. It would be a fair comparison to take the difference in duty between the French minimum and the French maximum tariff, and my hon. friend will find that the percentage of reduction is very much larger than the percentage of reduction on the French goods between our intermediate tariff and our maximum tariff.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have made no calculation whatever as to what the real difference would be. But I remember my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) asking the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), at the time the treaty was brought down, what would be the probable loss of revenue to Canada, and he said about $400,000. We have given up that much revenue, and I doubt whether we are going to be very great gainers considering the fact that we have to contribute a cash subsidy of from $100,000 to $200,000 in order to secure the advantages that we expect to get in the French market. Then we only get those advantages when we conform to a certain restriction. We are not permitted to send our goods to France except in a certain way. We must subsidize a vessel to send them direct. If we send them by a vessel sailing direct to Great Britain, we must make sure that there is a full cargo as it were and that the vessel will sail again from England and France and unload her goods there practically without breaking bulk. In order to secure this entry into France under the minimum tariff, very onerous conditions are imposed. It seems to me that we shall be obliged to pay this surtax in a good many instances. It might be that when we send a full cargo direct to a French port we can escape that.

Mr. BRODEUR. It can go to some English port.

Mr. HENDERSON. But if that vessel should unload those goods in an English port and the goods be then transhipped to France, we shall be subject to the surtax and the benefit that would accrue to us from the treaty would be reduced by the amount of this surtax. The hon. minister said it was about 70 cents for 220 pounds. That is a very considerable tax, and in many things to be relieved from that would be all the advantage we could get. I would not be surprised if that surtax should be nearly all the advantage we would get out of the treaty. I think the hon. ministers who negotiated the treaty failed in their duty when they did not insist that we should have free entry into France on the minimum tariff no matter how our goods go in. We pay enough surely for this. We subsidize vessels to go direct to France; we give up a large revenue and the ministers should have exacted the condition that we would not in any case be subject to that surtax. Of course the treaty is now signed, sealed and delivered, and whether it be a good treaty or not time alone can tell.

Mr. LOGGIE. When the matter was discussed I understood that if we shipped goods to France via London and transhipped them at London so that they could be identified, they would enter France at the minimum tariff.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend is perfectly right. When the goods are shipped from Canada to France, passing through London, and being there transhipped from one vessel to another, they enjoy the benefit of the French minimum tariff; but in that case they are liable to the surtaxe d'entrepôt. But, as I have already explained the surtaxe d'entrepôt is a small tax. Our goods, on entering France, enjoy the benefit of a reduction of about 35 per cent. That is one of the reasons why we should encourage the establishment of a direct line, in order to avoid the surtaxe d'entrepôt. I may say, however, that this question of the surtaxe d'entrepôt is reciprocal. We have the right under the treaty to establish a similar tax if we so desire.

Mr. MONK. There is no doubt that by the terms of the treaty we have reserved the right to establish a surtaxe d'entrepôt; but that system of taxation does not exist in this country, and will not be resorted to. As to the French surtaxe d'entrepôt, it is much larger than my hon. friend thinks. It is 60 cents per kilo on certain unenumerated articles; but that is the very lowest rate. It is absolutely prohibitive on a great many other goods which we would be likely to export to France.

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. MONK. Certainly. It goes up to over 100f. per kilo in certain cases.

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. MONK. Yes; my hon. friend will find that in the blue-book which he has brought down. What I want to ask is, why did not these plenipotentiaries ask for the right to enjoy in full the minimum tariff of France on goods shipped through England? The record of what they asked is in the blue-book which has been brought down, and they did not even ask for that. They did not ask that we should have the right to avail ourselves of the use of British shipping, the largest shipping in the world —we who are a dependency of Great Britain, and incorporated in that country in a certain sense. Why did they not take the trouble to ask the French Republic that in the case of shipments through England we should not be subjected to the surtaxe d'entrepôt? They asked that shipments should be direct. This condition of the treaty was not exacted by France; it was asked by my hon. friend at a time when he knew that we must necessarily establish and subsidize a direct line to France. If this condition had not been inserted in the treaty by the request of our own representatives we would have had the benefit of all shipments through England. I am not against our establishing a direct line to France; I am in favour of it, I think it is a good thing, and I am sure the House is in favour of it, if it is really going to produce valuable results. Our representatives might at least have asked for exemption from the surtaxe d'entrepôt for goods shipped through three British ports, which would have given us the advantage of competing rates; but we have no evidence whatever of any such demand having been made. So that at present, under the condition that shipments must be direct to obtain the benefit of the minimum tariff, we are in this position, that we have to establish a direct line to France at a cost of $200,000. Will the hon. minister explain to the committee why he did not ask the French Republic to share in that expense? We all know that France is the richest country in the world, and that the French government have made heavy sacrifices in the way of subsidies to encourage their own shipping. Why were they not asked to contribute, if not one-half, if we are so rich that we can be lavish, at least one-third or one-fourth of the subsidy which we have now to pay alone? It was not asked. I feel convinced for my part, from the language used by Mr. Pichon in the French Chamber, that such a proposal would have been listened to by France; but it was not even made. Now, under the terms of this resolution we are asked to vote this subsidy, and we are asked to vote it unconditionally. Therefore for rates of freight we shall be practically entirely dependent upon the subsidized line. If there are articles on which we can expect to enjoy the benefit of the minimum tariff, they are very few in number; but trade must be encouraged. If there are articles which we can expect to export to France, the rates of freight on them will be fixed absolutely by this company, a monopolistic company. Therefore I submit that we should insert in this resolution a clause having this purport, that the freight rates on all goods shipped from Canada to France or from France to Canada direct should be subject to the approval and control of the Governor General in Council. Since we are narrowed down under the terms of the treaty to this direct line, it seems to me that we should have the same control over its freight rates that we have always had in the case of railways, if we are to derive any benefit from the treaty; because we must see the possibility of this line, having a very limited direct trade between Canada and France, raising its freight rates beyond a point that is just and reasonable. It is a matter of regret that we did not press for the inclusion in the favours of the treaty of two or three important ports with which we are continually trading. There is no doubt that the French Republic would have assented to that extension. France does far too large a trade with England and is on far too friendly terms with England to permit us to suppose that it would have refused that slight extension, which would have enabled us to ship through those English ports. The condition might have been abandoned that the transhipment would have to take place in the port or on the docks of the port without penetration into the interior of the country. Under those circumstances we would have had an immense advantage in regard to our freights to France. These plenipotentiaries seemed to have proceeded in this way. We must make the shipments direct in order that we may be in a position to subsidize a line of steamers. That was not the position to take up, it was a trade treaty and it should have had as its object the doing of everything possible to facilitate and extend trade.

Mr. SPROULE. The proposal appears to me to be very defective at least in some respects. First I think that the term of ten years is unusual and is too long.

Mr. BRODEUR. The statute provided for ten years although the contract was for only three years.

Mr. SPROULE. With the possibility of renewal, but, if my memory serves me, the contract was only for three years.

Then there is no provision as to the rate of speed, they might take the 'Arctic,' which would require thirty-five days to go across, so that this service may be of little use as a passenger service. Then there is no control over freight rates, we practically give them a monopoly of this freight trade and we may be sure that they will charge what will give them a good profit. So far as I know there is no provision either for cold storage or for the proper carrying of perishable goods to France.

This means to the Consolidated revenue of Canada a charge practically of $600,000 a year. We are first told that we will lose $400,000 of revenue on account of this treaty and then we pay out of the same fund $200,000 a year to subsidize this line, so the consolidated fund will lose to the extent of $600,000 a year. This amount would pay all the extra duty on goods passing between France and Canada and pay a liberal tax during the whole time. The question, of course, is whether we can cultivate a trade that will offset this in some other way, but it appears to me we are paying too much for the benefit we will derive. Of what benefit is it to us and to France that there should be such a treaty like this? Whatever benefit we derive owing to the reduced cost to the consumer of goods coming from France will be enjoyed in equal degree by the people of France, through the operation of this treaty. But while France derives an equal benefit she does not join with us in paying the cost of this new transportation line, so that Canada pays both considerations, the benefit enjoyed by Canada and that enjoyed by France.

I think, in view of the considerations which I have advanced, we are paying a high figure for the benefit we are likely to derive from this service and this treaty.

Mr. BRODEUR. As to the length of time provided in the statute this is in exactly the same terms as the previous statutes; it was always provided that we could enter into a contract for ten years. I do not know whether we will have to make a contract for that period of time because it is not always easy to get a company to institute a service. As I have explained, we had great difficulty in finding a company to establish a service because it was not a paying proposition.

Mr. SPROULE. If the reduction of duties will increase the trade tenfold, then it ought to be a paying proposition and this should be a strong inducement.

Mr. BRODEUR. We do not know yet. I am speaking in the light of the facts we had before us and our previous experience. Provision for a subsidy has been made since 1889, but it was only in 1905, sixteen years after, that a company was bold enough to undertake the establishment of that service. It was tried repeatedly. The Ligne Bussière tried it and lost money and I think Mr. Clergue also tried to establish a direct line but had to abandon it because it did not pay. It was only in 1905 that the Allan line, with characteristic energy took up the service and entered into a contract with us. They would not contract for a long time. The statute provided for ten years, but they made it three years because they were not sure whether or not there was anything in it. I am not sure whether they have made money with the direct service.

Mr. BERGERON. How many trips did they make and are they subsidized by the trip or by the year ?

Mr. BRODEUR. They are subsidized by the trip.

Mr. BRODEUR. In 1905, they made 17 trips ; in 1906, 22 trips ; in 1907, 20 trips.

Mr. BERGERON. Not by direct route, but touching at a port in England ?

Mr. BRODEUR. They start from Montreal and go to Le Havre, thence to London, thence back to Le Havre and so to Montreal. My hon. friend objects that no conditions are attached as to cold storage, &c. It is the intention of the government to provide for these matters, but the resolution is so framed as to leave these conditions to be negotiated by the government. It is provided under the present contract that there shall be cold storage facilities, and these cold storage facilities have been furnished. I know that it is the intention of the government also to provide that the freight rates between Canada and France shall be no higher than the freight rates between New York, Boston and similar American ports and France. But we cannot state all these conditions here, because of the enormous difficulty there has been in finding a line that will undertake to make a contract with the government. It will be a question of negotiations.

Mr. SPROULE. Why must they be left out here if they are to be provided later? Is the minister going to deceive the company, by leaving these matters unmentioned and putting them in the regulations afterwards?

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) will see that, under the resolution, a contract is to be made on conditions to be determined by the Governor in Council. There must be negotiations between the government and the company that is bold enough to undertake this work. It may be that we shall not experience this year the same difficulties as in former years. But it is not a very paying proposition, as the quotations I have given show.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the contract with the Allans expired?

Mr. BRODEUR. Practically so—it expires with the opening of navigation this year.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it expected that the Allan line will continue the contract under the new terms?

Mr. BRODEUR. We expect they will be able to continue the work. It will be a matter of negotiation.

Mr. DANIEL. Does the minister know the form of the contract he intends to ask the contractor to sign?

Mr. BRODEUR. It will be about the same as the present contract, except that the government will try to have a clause providing that the freight rates shall be no higher than those between American Atlantic ports and France.

Mr. DANIEL. That will be the only important addition?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the matter of choice of ports be left as in the old contract to the line accepting service?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no decision as to that; it would be a matter of negotiation. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) stated that the surtaxe d'entrepot would affect most of our goods going to France. And, by the way, I may state that I was mistaken when I gave the minimum as 3 francs 50 centimes—it is 3 francs 60 centimes. But the hon. gentleman will see that most of the goods mentioned are goods we do not export. For instance, sugar—we do not export much of that to France. Coffee, cocoa—we do not export much.

Mr. MONK. Not a very large quantity.

Mr. BRODEUR. Cloves, cinnamon—I do not think we export much of that. Pepper, vanilla, tea, tobacco, balsams, roots, herbs, leaves, flowers and barks for medicinal purposes other than cinchona bark, medicinal fruits, sponges, tortoise shell, mother of pearl, guano, mineral oils, borax, cochineal, lac in dye or in trochisci, indigo, isinglass, and so on through a considerable list. But here is one which does enter under this maximum rate of 100 francs. It is tissues of silk.

Mr. MONK. But the hon. minister (Mr. Brodeur) knows that the French surtaxe d'entrepôt is practically prohibitive.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have quoted to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) the articles which are subject to a less rate of surtax than 100 francs.

Mr. MONK. It is $7 a ton at the lowest.

Mr. BRODEUR. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) indicated that the surtaxe d'entrepôt was an enormous one and would affect all the articles we exported. But I have quoted to him a list of articles which are not subject to the maximum surtax. So, evidently, the hon. gentleman is in error. He had not the document before him, and so I cannot blame him if his statement is not correct.

Mr. CLEMENTS. In answer to the hon. member for Northumberland, N.B. (Mr. Loggie) the hon. minister (Mr. Brodeur) stated, with regard to shipments to France by way of London, that the surtaxe d'entrepôt was a trifling tax. But, as I figure it, it will be 20 cents a bushel on wheat and 30 cents a hundred on pork.

Mr. MONK. It is a prohibitive tax.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is another argument in favour of the direct service——

Mr. HENDERSON. But if the minister had insisted, when making the treaty, that there should be no surtaxe d'entrepôt, the difficulty would not exist. We surely gave the French republic enough to secure entry under the minimum tariff.

Mr. FIELDING. The surtaxe d'entrepôt is a matter to which the French government attach great importance, and if you say you will not make a treaty with the French government unless they will abolish that tax, you will probably make no treaty. The idea that this government can insist upon what it wants, as my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) suggests, is a mistake. This is a very important feature of the commercial policy of France, and I know from repeated discussions with gentlemen of that country that they attach great importance to it and would not be willing to waive it.

Mr. MONK. We have on record, whatever may be the disposition of the French government, that this matter is not enumerated among the things asked from the French government.

Mr. FIELDING. Because the matter had been so often discussed that there was not the shadow of a chance to secure it.

Mr. MONK. We have the record to show that it was not asked. I have some knowledge of what the disposition of the French government in these matters is, and I repeat that we have no means of knowing that they would not have excepted from the surtax such ports as London, Bristol, Liverpool and perhaps one or two other English ports from which it would have been possible for us to ship.

Now, my hon. friend makes light of the surtaxe d'entrepôt. That means practically $7 a ton. But anybody who knows anything of French commerce knows that in addition even to the minimum tariff, the surtaxe d'entrepôt amounts to a prohibition, if it did not amount to a prohibition French legislation would not be in that sense. Their policy, by their surtaxe d'entrepôt, is to prevent the shipment of goods from any other countries of the world to France through European ports. They want to encourage their shipping, and they have so framed their laws that they have effectively stopped it. You cannot possibly meet that charge of $7 a ton and other charges connected with the surtaxe d'entrepôt and you cannot ship through a European country—the Americans have tried it—to French ports. I am prepared to admit that if this line is confided to the Allans, who have undoubtedly made sacrifices and have done a great deal to favour trade with France, the probability is that we will be fairly treated with respect to the matter of rates. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries says that they intend to stipulate in the contract that the same rates shall prevail as they have between American ports and France. I think that is a very unwise stipulation, because how do we know that those rates are fair? How do we know that we could not allow our shipping men to retain a profit and ship at lower rates? I prefer to incorporate in this resolution the conditions I mentioned, and I beg to move to add to the resolution:

Provided that the freight rates on all goods shipped to and from France shall be subject to the approval and control of the Governor General in Council.

I think that is only fair. If the line happens to fall into the hands of men whom we do not know, we will be in a position at any rate to control the rates and to keep them within the bounds of fairness.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It seems to me that the same improvident bargain was made in this case that the government makes almost every time it undertakes to deal with any foreign country. I find in this commercial relations pamphlet presented by the government, a clause bearing upon this matter which evidently makes it part of the French treaty. Clause 8 reads as follows:

To enjoy the benefits of the aforementioned tariff advantages, Canadian products shall be conveyed without transhipment from a Canadian port or from a port of a country enjoying the French minimum tariff to a port in France, Algeria, the French colonies and possessions and the territories of the Protectorate of Indo-China.

Now that was evidently put in there for a purpose, and the purpose was that we were going to be called upon to pay this large subsidy which the resolution calls for. I agree with my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that the French government should have been asked to bear at least one-half the expense of this subsidy. The arrangement is supposed to be one for mutual advantage so the hon. gentleman told us; it is presumed that the treaty was negotiated for mutual advantage, that is equal to France and equal to Canada. If that is the case, why should we be called upon to subsidize a line of steamers in order to get the advantage of the treaty, the whole subsidy being paid by this country and not one dollar being paid by France? So far as we can see, the plenipotentiaries who went over there made no request to the French government to participate in the expense; if they did, they have not yet told us so. That would have been a very reasonable thing to do. No request was made, therefore the French government are not in this at all. We are asked in this resolution for an immediate sum of $100,000, with the probability that in the near future it will reach to $200,000. It is $100,000 for eighteen round trips, or in round figures, about $6,000 per trip. It is not to be expected that the goods these ships carry will yield such immense profit that we can afford to pay out of the coffers of this country $6,000 for every shipload that goes from here to France, and every shipload that comes in from France to Canada. The subsidy will amount to $3,000 perhaps each way; therefore, even if this trade turns out to be all that the hon. gentlemen expect, does it not appear that to pay $3,000 for every shipload going each way will be a very large handicap, or at least will greatly reduce the profit upon those goods? It means that the people who are shipping those goods will receive that much less for them. Certainly I think this is a matter that should have attracted more attention when the French treaty was going through the House. I endeavoured to point out at the time that this was one of the features of the treaty that ought to be considered really a part of the treaty, because we cannot enter into the advantage of that treaty without paying out this immense subsidy. The subsidy is going to increase, eighteen trips is the minimum with the possibility of the number being double and that will make thirty-six trips a year, or three trips per month. That is not a very large number of trips. Perhaps it will be more. It seems to me that our representatives should have made an earnest effort, if they were looking after the interest of this country, to get the French government to participate with us, and they should have been asked to pay at least one-half the subsidy. If the advantage is mutual the expense should be mutual, and this country being ever so prosperous, the government should have made an effort at least to get one-half that subsidy out of the French government. I think this is a very improvident resolution. It is really an adjunct of the French treaty, and ought to be considered as such.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Cockshutt) omitted an important point. This provision regarding direct shipment which he treats as something new, something designed for the special purpose of meeting a demand for a subsidy, that precise condition is in the old treaty, was in force for many years, and the hon. gentleman never yet saw anything wrong with it.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I have never been called upon to discuss it.

Mr. FIELDING. Then the hon. gentleman should not have treated it as something entirely new. This provision is substantially the same as in the old treaty.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I understand the provision is not new. But this is a new treaty, or at least these gentlemen say it is, and what I am pointing out is that they are derelict in their duty in that they did not raise the question with the French government of bearing part of the subsidy. The old treaty is now abrogated and we have a new treaty. If the other items of the old treaty have been taken up and discussed seriatim, why should not this item also have been taken up? Why did not the minister ask the French government who are receiving half the advantage, according to his own statement, to pay half the expense of carrying out this treaty, of which the resolutions form part? That evidently was not done. I believe that the French government being a reasonable government, and seeing that the advantages were mutual, would have consented that the burden of the treaty should be mutual.

Mr. LALOR. I hope the Minister of Finance will be equally prompt in calling his own friends to time when they speak upon this old treaty, as he has my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt). The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) spoke about the immense increases that would likely come on account of this treaty in the exports of apples, both green and dried, and he said that the trade would now double and quadruple in this particular line, but when we come to inquire we find that these articles are the same under this treaty as under the old one. I hope that when his friends make mistakes of this kind the hon. Minister of Finance will call their attention to them. The subsidy that the government are asking for is going to put a tax upon the country far in excess of the benefits to be derived from this treaty. We are told that this subsidy will be $200,000 for ten years; that is, $2,000,000. We also lose in revenue $400,000, which makes in ten years $4,000,000; so that the country will have to pay in ten years $6,000,000 for this treaty that we are now negotiating with France. Probably I can speak more feelingly in connection with this treaty than some others, because I am interested in a business which is detrimentally affected by the treaty and which business is also engaged in by the farming community. I went into a store down town yesterday and I found upon the shelves of that store cans of French peas which were selling 2 for 25 cents, or about as cheap as the Canadian product can be sold for. The young man in charge of the store told me that they expected to be able to import them at a lower rate and that their business in these goods would increase. These peas are not as good as the Canadian peas, but they are more sightly; they are highly coloured and on each tin there is written in plain letters that they are coloured with copperas. I do not understand why the hon. Minister of Finance and his associates should allow the duty to be reduced on an article that is not only consumed by the people of Canada and which is detrimental to their health, but the importation of which in large quantities is going to affect a great industry in this country. In Ontario there is hardly a town from Windsor to the Bay of Quinté that has not two or three canning factories, each doing a large business, employing a great many people, canning the fruits and vegetables grown by the farmers of these districts and paying out to these farmers a large amount of money. This treaty directly affects this business. My hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Marshall) and myself went into a wholesale house the other day in Ottawa and we were shown strawberries, raspberries and fruit pulps of different kinds that were imported cheaper than we can buy them from the farmers of this country and put them up. In order to encourage the importation of that class of goods directly in competition with the farmers, the treaty has placed those goods under a lower tariff. As this treaty injuriously affects the interests of a great many farmers in this country, grape producers, wine producers, fruit producers generally and those engaged in the canning business it would be very much better if it had never been brought into effect. I believe the treaty is detrimental to the country and I am opposed to subsidizing a line of vessels even if that line is to run direct to France for the purpose of bringing goods to this country to the detriment of our own people.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I take an entirely different view from that of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Lalor). I have every reason to believe that this treaty is going to be of great benefit to the manufacturing industries of this country. When this treaty was first introduced one of the largest manufacturers in Canada came to Ottawa to inquire minutely into the whole situation. One of the important matters was the question of freight rates from Hamilton to France. We interviewed Mr. Allan, president of the Allan Steamship Company, and he guaranteed this manufacturer as good rates by the ports of Montreal in summer and St. John in winter as we could get via New York or any American port. The manufacturer was perfectly satisfied on that line I trust that the government will make arrangements with the steamship compny by which Montreal will be the port in summer and St. John in winter. I would be very sorry if they made Halifax the port in winter. It is too far away from the manufacturing centres of Ontario. The hon. gentleman said that the subsidizing of this line would cost an additional $100,000, but at the present time we get eighteen round trips for $133,000. If we are to-day getting $2,000,000 worth of goods and if this extra $100,000 will bring the other $5,000,000 worth which we import through other ports directly to this country from France via our own ports it will be a very small appropriation indeed.

Mr. BERGERON. But will it do that?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. There is no doubt that with the French treaty in operation these goods will have to come through Canadian ports. I want to ask the minister what port in France the boat will stop at?

Mr. HENDERSON. It may be taken as a good old protectionist argument which the hon. gentleman is repeating that if you increase the industries of the country you are going to benefit the farmers because the more mouths you get to feed the better will be the market that you are going to have. To that extent I think the hon. gentleman is right provided we do not pay too much for it. There is an important proviso. If we export agricultural implements to France the farmers of this country have to put their hands in their pockets and contribute to make up the rebate of duty that is allowed on these agricultural implements that are exported to France. We give back 99 per cent of the duty that is collected from the manufacturers in Hamilton on the material which enters into the implements that are exported to some other country. And the government of Canada is so generous that it gives back 99 per cent of that duty. Who pays it? The farmers of this country. It is just a question which way the balance will be, whether the farmer will get the benefit or perhaps pay more than it comes to.

Mr. BRODEUR. How does the farmer pay that?

Mr. HENDERSON. Because he pays his share of the tax.

Mr. FIELDING. If the manufacturer pays it and then gets it back, how does the farmer pay it?

Mr. HENDERSON. It is paid out of the consolidated revenue of the country and the Minister of Finance knows that he gets a considerable portion of that revenue from the farmers. When the hon. member for Hamilton says the farmer is to be benefited so much by the export of agricultural implements, I ask him to consider whether the farmer is not going to pay most of the duty.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. These goods are largely the articles that farmers use, and our manufacturers will be able to make them so much cheaper that the farmers will pay less for them than they do to-day.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

FORT WILLIAM TERMINALS.

House in committee on Bill (No. 101), respecting the Fort William Terminal Railway and Bridge Company.—Mr. Macpherson.

Mr. HENDERSON. Where is the promoter of this Bill? Nobody seems to be in charge of it. You had better follow the rule, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The Bill has been reported from the Railway Committee, and if my hon. friend from Halton has no special reason why the Bill should not proceed——

Mr. LENNOX. I think there is a very good reason. As introduced, it had only one section, but it now appears to have three or four, and it is necessary to consider them. The Bill has been reprinted, but has not been distributed so far as I know.

Mr. HENDERSON. As the promoter does not seem to think it worth while to attend to this Bill, I do not see why we should.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Does the hon. member move to report progress ?

Mr. HENDERSON. The Minister of Railways can do that.

Mr. GRAHAM. So far as I am concerned, I do not wish to urge proceeding with the Bill.

Mr. LENNOX. In looking over the Bill as reprinted, I have very great doubt whether we can put it through at all or not. There has been such a decided alteration in it that I doubt very much whether the advertisement would cover it. By the third clause there is a change of location and by the fourth clause there is a change as to the manner of expenditure. So that this Bill will have to stand for the present at all events.

Mr. GRAHAM. The real history of the Bill is this. It was introduced originally in a form to which the municipality of Fort William objected. The promoters of the Bill and the representatives of the town of Fort William came together, and agreed on the redrafting of the Bill in a form to meet the wishes of the municipality of Fort William. One of the objections was that the location of the line was near the water-front, and I think a change has been made to place the location under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners. Another change is in regard to the charging of tolls on the bridge. I am not pressing the Bill ; it can stand until the promoter comes; but that accounts for the changes.

Mr. LENNOX. I think it would be very desirable, when Bills are reprinted, to have the attention of the House called to the fact by a copy of the Bill being put in the box of each member. As it is, our attention is not called to it until it comes before us at eight o'clock, when every member is hurried. Promoters of Bills should be here to explain them, and they should see that members have notice of important alterations. I have not a copy of this Bill as reprinted, and have only seen it now for the first time. It is a new Bill practically.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Does any one move to report progress ?

Mr. LENNOX. I move to report progress.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

QUEBEC AND NEW BRUNSWICK RAILWAY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 128), respecting the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company.—Mr. Michaud.

Mr. MICHAUD. I move that the Bill stand till Monday.

Progress reported.

PACIFIC COAST FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 40), respecting the Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Macpherson.

Mr. LENNOX. This is a very extensive Bill, and the promoter is not here, and there is no person representing the Justice Department of the government here. When Bills of a very technical character like this one are going through, I submit that it is absolutely necessary, if we cannot have the Minister of Justice, to have at least the Solicitor General present. Members of the opposition are here to watch as well as they can, but they are not specially learned in matters of this kind. In adition to moving that we report progress on this Bill, I wish as one individual member to give that intimation.

Mr. HENDERSON. I note that both the Chairman of the Banking and Commerce Committee who could give us information and the promoter of the Bill are absent. We are expected to put this Bill through in the dark. I do not approve of that kind of legislation.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not agree with my hon. friend as to the special duties of the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General in this matter. However, his point that the promoter of the Bill is not here, I have no reason to object to. I do not wish to press the Bill against the wish of anybody.

Mr. LENNOX. I have the greatest respect for the opinion of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, but, speaking for myself, I wish to say as distinctly as I can, and I will take occasion from time to time to repeat it in the hope of getting in time the attention of the country to the matter, that I believe it is the duty of the government to have some one who is learned in the law to watch these technical Bills as they go through. For my part I shall take occasion frequently to call the attention of the House to the fact that we are from time to time putting through a class of very dangerous technical legislation without having the benefit of the advice and the responsibility of the Law Department of the government, which we should have in the interest of the country.

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid I do not appreciate as much as I should the necessity of the legal profession everywhere, but I have no objection to this Bill standing. Every insurance company's Bill passes under the review of the Superintendent of Insurance who happens to be a lawyer. However, I have no desire to press the Bill.

Mr. LENNOX. I am only speaking generally.

Progress reported.

STANDARD PLATE GLASS INSURANCE INSURANCE.

Hous in committee on Bill (No. 41) to incorporate the Standard Plate Glass Insurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Macdonell.

Mr. FIELDING. Of course the Minister of Justice is not here for this Bill either.

Mr. LENNOX. I think the same remarks apply.

Mr. HENDERSON. This I think is a very exceptional case. We have the promoter here, he is a good lawyer and will be able to explain everything without the assistance of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not objecting.

Mr. HENDERSON. My object in raising that objection is to insist that members who have charge of legislation should be in their places.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not object to that.

Mr. HENDERSON. If we put through legislation without their presence it only educates them to the propriety of going home and trusting to others to put their legislation through.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

DOMINION GUARANTEE COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 127) respecting the Dominion Guarantee Company, Limited.—Mr. Pringle.

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Chairman, I drew your attention to the fact that the promoter of this Bill is not present.

Mr. LENNOX. Let it stand.

Progress reported.

WESTERN ALBERTA RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 125) respecting the Western Alberta Railway Company.—Mr. Macpherson.

On section 1—extension of time.

Mr. HERRON. I opposed the passage of this Bill in the Railway Committee the other day, and I still oppose this extension of time and the reviving of this charter. I do so in behalf of the people who are most directly interested in the building of a railway in that part of the country. The charter of this company was granted in 1898, and there has never been any work done on the railway or any attempt towards construction. This is a section in which a railway is badly needed. I may say that there is also a subsidy in connection with this railway. The road is to run from the international boundary to a point on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway near the town in which I live, a distance of about 50 miles, passing at or near the town of Cardston which is one of the most important towns in that part of the country to the south of the Crows Nest Pass Railway. I have had several protests from the people all along the line who asked me to oppose this extension of time. I wish to read a resolution from the Board of Trade of Cardston on this subject:

The following resolution was unanimously adopted at a meeting of the Cardston Board of Trade held February 12, 1908:

Whereas, the Western Alberta Railway Company in the year 1898 obtained a charter for the building of a railway through this section of southern Alberta, and

Whereas, a subsidy was granted in the year 1899 to assist in the building of fifty miles of the said proposed railway, and

Whereas, both charter and subsidy have been extended from time to time, and

Whereas, as yet no construction work on the said proposed railway has been commenced, and

Whereas, at the last renewal of the subsidy (chapter 43, statutes of Canada, 1906) this board of trade was led to believe that construction work would be commenced without delay, and

Whereas, we now observe the said railway company is again seeking extension of time for the commencement and completion of the proposed railway, and

Whereas, other proposed railways holding charters over much the same territory might be induced to proceed without unnecessary delay under the same privileges as now enjoyed by the said Western Alberta Railway Company;

Therefore be it resolved, that in the opinion of the Cardston Board of Trade, no further extensions should be granted the Western Alberta Railway Company, either in the matter of extension of charter, or a renewal of subsidy, with reference to that portion of the proposed railway, running from the international boundary to a point on the Crows Nest Pass Railway.

That is only from the town of Cardston, but the people all along this line of railway hold the same opinion regarding the extension of time of this charter. The situation of this proposed railway is rather a peculiar one. It runs parallel to the foot of the Rocky mountains, and where they propose to intersect the Crows Nest Pass Railway is in a farming district just outside the mountains. It runs parallel to the mountains through a good locality thickly settled with farmers the whole way through, probably as good a section of farming country as can be found in the whole province of Alberta. The distance from thet town of Cardston to the point where they propose to join the Crows Nest Pass Railway is forty-five or fifty miles. The only railway they have from the boundary line in that section of country starts from Cardston, running east instead of running west; it practically starts toward northetast and runs away to Lethbridge, a distance of sixty-six miles, then from Lethbridge back to Crows Nest Pass to Pincher Creek, a distance of about seventy miles; so it runs nearly 140 miles in this roundabout way. Now practically all the produce raised in that country from Cardston to the boundary line and from Cardston to Pincher Creek finds its market in British Columbia, therefore the Crows Nest Pass towards British Columbia is their natural outlet. If the farmers had this railway they could take their freight from Cardston to the junction on the Crows Nest Pass Railway a distance of fifty miles, whereas in going by the roundabout way the distance is about 140 miles, and I must say is a very expensive route over which to transport freight. Freight has to pass over two railways, that is the Coal and Navigation Company's Railway, sixty-six miles, and this Crows Nest Pass Railway. Now there are three or four charters covering almost this same ground and I believe that if this subsidy was granted to some of the other railways, we would have a railway such as we desire. I believe we would have a railway over that ground were it not for the fact that the gentlemen holding this charter have also a subsidy with the charter. When I say that we would get a railway I believe I am quite correct, we would get a railway perhaps this year over that very country. The people of that country, I might almost say, are starving for the want of a railway. The farmers produce excellent crops but they have no way of getting them to market. I think it is too bad that people in a good section of country like that, a thickly settled section, should be debarred from a market simply because certain gentlemen who hold a railway charter come here every two or three years, as they have since 1898, and ask for a renewal. I see the Minister of Railways in his place, and I would like to ask him to state positively whether the renewal of this charter would carry the renewal of the subsidy that goes with the charter. If it did not, of course it would not make so much difference. But the railway is so badly needed in that country that I would recommend the minister and the government to grant a subsidy to the first company that is prepared to build over that section.

Mr. GRAHAM. In reply to the hon. gentleman's question I may say that the renewal of the charter in no way renews the subsidy.

Mr. HENDERSON. What does the minister say about keeping the subsidy alive if these people do go on and build the road?

Mr. GRAHAM. There is no subsidy now, the subsidy has lapsed.

Mr. HERRON. The charter is not dead yet, I understand the time does not expire until June of this year, so the subsidy still holds good.

Mr. FIELDING. This Act has no relation whatever to the subsidy. The Subsidy Act stands on its own merits. If the time for the subsidy has not expired, it remains. But the passing of this Act in no way affects the subsidy. Whether the subsidy is voted to this particular company or to the line of railway——

Mr. HERRON. To the company.

Mr. MACPHERSON. To the line of railway.

Mr. FIELDING. If it is voted to the company by name it can only be granted to that company, and the effect would be that this company would be put in a position to make a contract. The government of course would still be free to exercise their discretion as to whether they would approve such a contract, if none has already been made.

Mr. HERRON. I feel that a railroad is needed very badly in that country, and I hope the government will see their way either to grant a subsidy or to give some other assistance to some new company which is prepared to build a railway in that part of the country. I think it is unfortunate that people holding that charter come here from time to time and ask for renewals and never make an attempt to build the railway. If this charter was not renewed would the bonus lapse?

Mr. FIELDING. If it were not renewed there would be no company.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I understood the Minister of Finance to say that this would not affect the subsidy. Now it certainly does affect the subsidy inasmuch as if the charter were not renewed there would be no subsidy coming to them. If they show no disposition to go on with the work there is no reason why the charter should be renewed. If they come here every few years for a renewal it is to prevent some other persons from taking hold of it and building the road, and would do it if they were granted the aid these people have been promised.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think the matter now is pretty plain. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron), to my mind, has made out a very excellent case calling for government intervention. It appears that the subsidy may not be granted to this company. Perhaps it is granted for the construction of a railway along this route. I understand the hon. Minister of Finance to say that the subsidy may be given to any company that has a charter for a railway along this route. It would be important that we should find this out. If such is the case, if this charter is renewed and this company make no progress whatever it seems to me that it is a matter of government policy as to whether it will allow the subsidy to stand and allow this company to claim it when they are taking no action. If they can hand over that subsidy to another company then I think it would be a matter of wisdom to do it on account of the special demand there is for railway communication through that country.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I think that the hon. member for Alberta has given us a good reason for granting a charter to this company. They need the railway. This company are in the position of some other companies that have been before the Railway Committee for a renewal of their charters. They have not succeeded in getting all the money necessary for the construction of the road. The road is necessary, so necessary that the government recognized the fact by granting a subsidy for a line through this territory. This company received a charter in 1898, but I am informed that they are now prepared to go ahead with the construction of this line. The custom of the Railway Committee has been to give companies a renewal of their charters. Any other company can start in and build this railway. It is the company that first files its plans. The hon. member for Alberta desires to see the road built. These people tell me that they are anxious to go ahead. I do not think that the hon. gentleman could do better than allow this Bill to pass.

Mr. HERRON. I dare say that the hon. member for Vancouver gives the guarantee in good faith that these gentlemen are prepared to go on and build this road.

Mr. MACPHERSON. I am not guaranteeing anything. That is what they told me.

Mr. HERRON. Well, I want to say to my hon. friend that I had that same guarantee two years ago from the gentleman in charge of this Bill. A solicitor from Toronto came here on behalf of the promoters and stated positively that they were in a position to go on and build this road. They got a renewal of their charter and there has not been the slightest effort made to begin its construction since that time.

Mr. LENNOX. This Bill differs in two respects from a good many others that come before us. We have been renewing charters without much objection probably on account of the alleged stringency in the times. In those cases the railway companies were depending on their own resources entirely, there being no subsidy. But here is a subsidy awaiting this company as soon as they commence to build the road. In this case there is an objection set forth in a very strong petition from the parties in the neighbourhood who are interested which was read by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron) and which should be taken into the serious consideration of this House. I am inclined to think, that, having reference to the circumstance that the government have offered a subsidy for the construction of this road, the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) could very well devise a method of securing action by this company. If this matter were held in suspense for a short time and the Minister of Finance gave this railway company to understand that upon their activity would depend the question of whether they should get the subsidy or not I think that we would probably see some distinct undertaking that the promoter of the Bill is not prepared to give, that this railway would go on right away. I understood the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Macpherson) to say that if this company did not build some other company could build, that this charter did not block the way. I presume there is no other railway company that has a charter, is there?

Mr. MACPHERSON. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron) says that there are two other companies.

Mr. HERRON. There are other charters covering the same ground.

Mr. LENNOX. The Minister of Finance suggested that very likely this subsidy would not go to this railway company by name, but that it was a subsidy voted for the construction of a railway along that route, and if so it seems to me that this is an occasion on which the government could very well help the people of that locality by stepping in and ascertaining when this road would be built, or rather giving an intimation to this company that if they want a renewal of the charter they must undertake to do something for these people who are so badly in need of a railway.

Mr. FIELDING. I find that the provision of the statute of two years ago grants the subsidies to this company by name. It grants a subsidy to the Western Alberta company for a line from a point on the United States boundary for 50 miles of railway.

Mr. LENNOX. How long is that good for?

Mr. FIELDING. The general provision of the Act is that they shall commence within two years and finish in four. The effect of the amendment would be to put the company in a position to make a contract with the government, if the government see fit to make one and then, of course, the government ought to be satisfied that the company seeking a contract are in a position to do the work. I do not know whether they have a contract outstanding or not.

Mr. LENNOX. Do they need a contract?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, the subsidy acts are simply what our legal friends call enabling Acts authorizing the government to enter into a contract when they are reasonably satisfied that a company means to carry on the work. If this company have a contract already, then, under this subsidy Act, it will stand for some little time, but if they have no contract the effect of the amendment will be to put them in a position to come to the government and seek a contract. Then it will be for the government to satisfy themselves that the company are in a position to do the work.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

OTTAWA, BROCKVILLE AND ST. LAWRENCE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. GRANT moved second reading of amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 74) respecting the Ottawa, Brockville and St. Lawrence Railway Company.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways). The amendment made by the Senate consists in striking out an amendment made by the Railway Committee of this House. The Railway Committee inserted an additional section in the Bill providing that the company shall not dispose of or distribute power or electrical energy in any municipality owning and operating a power plant without the consent by by-law of the council of such municipality. In the various Bills we have been dealing with in the Railway Committee, we have inserted an amendment such as this for the protection of the municipalities which own and operate their own light and power plants. This clause was put in this Bill because there is on the route of the proposed line the town of Brockville which owns and operates its own public utility, and for the protection of that and other municipalities, we placed the same clause in this Bill that we did in others of a like nature. I beg to move therefore :

That the amendment of the Senate be disagreed to for the reason that clause 4 which the Senate have stricken out is considered a safeguard to municipalities which own and operate their own light and power plants, and that the municipal autonomy in that regard should be respected.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask the Minister of Railways if this is the same amendment that was put in the Hamilton Radial Railway Bill in regard to St. Thomas ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senate did not interfere with that, did they ? They must have two policies on railway legislation—one for the Minister of Railways and another for the Hamilton people. I think when they allowed the other to go through, they should allow this to go through.

Motion agreed to.

VANCOUVER ISLAND AND EASTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. SLOAN moved that amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 87) to incorporate the Vancouver Island and Eastern Railway Company, be read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. LENNOX. What are they ?

Mr. SLOAN. The one is to increase the borrowing power from $30,000 to $50,000 a mile for the mountain section of the road. Another is to give the company power to borrow money on bonds on the ferry which they propose to establish.

Mr. LENNOX. How is it that the Senate has increased the borrowing power ? Did not the application ask for enough in the first instance ?

Mr. SLOAN. No, it was no considered sufficient.

Mr. LENNOX. Was that asked in the Railway Committee ?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. Was it refused by the Railway Committee ?

Mr. SLOAN. No.

Mr. LENNOX. If it was asked for and not granted, it was practically refused.

Mr. SLOAN. It was not asked for, but was considered at the time the Bill went through that the borrowing power was not sufficient, and when the Bill went before the Senate it was decided to increase it, only in the mountain section.

Motion agreed to.

RELIEF OF EDITH MAUD ROSARIO GAMMELL.

Mr. SLOAN—for Mr. Galliher—moved second reading of Bill (No. 139) for the relief of Edith Maud Rosario Gammell.

Mr. LENNOX. I might call the attention of the committee that is going to deal with this Bill to the fact that although the evidence is pretty satisfactory on most points, there does not seem to be any clear evidence of identification of the husband. A gentleman came from England, but there has been no attempt to identify him as the party referred to by the applicant for divorce.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. Did not the woman swear that she had seen him ?

Mr. LENNOX. The wife swore that she had seen her husband in Saskatoon in the company of a lady whom she did not know. There were others who swore to the facts would establish sufficient ground for dissolution of marriage.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. I would have more doubt about that evidence than as to the identity.

Mr. LENNOX. There was no cross-examination to test that evidence, and there was no attempt to show that the person spoken of is the husband of the applicant for divorce. It may be supplemented. The circumstantial evidence is very strong, I admit.

Motion agreed to, on division, and Bill read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 103) respecting the Eastern Trust Company.—Mr. Guthrie.

Bill (No. 132) to incorporate the Standard Accident and Guarantee Company.—Mr. Macdonell.

Bill (No. 134) respecting the Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway Company.—Mr. Marcil.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 137) respecting the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Bill (No. 138) respecting the Pacific and Atlantic Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Bill (No. 141) to incorporate the Anglo-Canadian and Continental Bank.—Mr. Guthrie.

CANADA-FRANCE STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

House again in committee on the proposed resolution of Mr. Brodeur and the amendment thereto proposed by Mr. Monk.

Mr. TALBOT. I am somewhat surprised at the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier. He seems to take very strong exception to this treaty between France and Canada and the conditions attached thereto.

Mr. MONK. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I did not take any exception to the treaty at all.

Mr. TALBOT. To the conditions, I say. My hon. friend should be aware of the fact that we have a statute of Canada, 52 Victoria, the second section of which reads as follows :—

The Governor in Council may grant to any individual or company, to whom there is granted by the government of the United Kingdom the aid hereinafter mentioned, a subsidy not exceeding the sum of fifteen thousand pounds sterling per annum, for a monthly steamship service, or a subsidy not exceeding the sum of twenty-five thousand pounds sterling per annum, for a fortnightly steamship service, between British Columbia and China and Japan, such subsidy to be granted for such term of years and on such conditions as the Governor in Council considers expedient; provided always, that during such term the government of the United Kingdom grants to such individual or company a subsidy of not less than forty-five thousand pounds sterling per annum for the monthly service, or of not less than seventy-five thousand pounds sterling per annum for the fortnightly service above mentioned.

Mr. LENNOX.

This statute has been in existence since 1889, and I do not know that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier ever took exception to it. If we read the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce with reference to the trade between Canada and China, what do we find ? We find that the total trade between Canada and China is $804,257. If we go further, and refer to the total trade between Canada and Japan, we find that it is $2,197,343 ; that is, the total trade between Canada and these two countries amounts to about $3,000,000. In the same report we find that the trade between France and Canada is over $8,000,000. Yet our friends take very strong exception to the payment of a subsidy to a line of steamers between France and Canada to carry direct trade between the two countries. We do not admit the citizens of Japan and China to Canada, we will have nothing to do with them, and we have heard eulogies from hon. members on both sides of the House in regard to immigration from France. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier says that the government is not to be commended but is rather to be blamed for giving a subsidy to any line of steamers that will facilitate this trade of over $8,000,000 between the two countries, yet neither he nor any other hon. member opposed the steamship subventions to the two countries whose citizens we will not admit to this country. It would be worth his while to explain his position on these two points.

Mr. MONK. I do not know where my hon. friend was when I spoke before six o'clock, whether he was in China or Japan I do not know, but I did not take that exception at all. I mentioned that I thought that under any circumstances it would be a wise policy to subsidize a line to France. Did my hon. friend hear me when I said that ? I said it loud enough to be heard. What I said was that if we established a direct line with France, as we must do in order to benefit by the treaty, that would be the only line plying between the two countries, and this line would consequently have a monopoly of the shipping to France, and that if we gave $200,000 a year to that line we should be able to control its rates of freight. Does my hon. friend object to that and does he think that if we give this $200,000 a year and if, as my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) says, we are losing $400,000 a year of revenue, so that we are actually the poorer by $600,000 a year, it is exorbitant to demand in our contract with that company a proviso that their rates of freight should be approved and controlled by the government ? Is there anything unreasonable in that ?

Mr. TALBOT. The unreasonableness of the hon. gentleman's position lies in the fact that it is Canadian and British bottoms that are going to get the benefit of this subsidy ; not a cent of it is to go to any French ships, either in subsidy or in transportation.

Mr. MONK. I do not know what my hon. friend means, but I know what he is driving at. It is the same old thing, to go down to the province of Quebec and say that Mr. Monk, with Dr. Sproule and Col. Hughes, opposed the French treaty, did his best to prevent our having a direct line of communication with France and that consequently, while the Liberal party were benefiting the province of Quebec, the Conservative party deserves condemnation. That is my hon. friend's object.

Mr. TALBOT. Is my hon. friend sure of that ?

Mr. MONK. I have a very, very strong suspicion. I would not like to impugn the motives of my hon. friend, but I am like the old fox, I have so often been treated to this in the province of Quebec——

Mr. TALBOT. So often been caught.

Mr. MONK. As to this law passed a long time ago the hon. gentleman is again pursuing the same policy. What was enacted years ago and before I came to this parliament does not concern us. We are met with the same kind of argument from gentlemen on the other side with regard to immigration. Immigration conditions which existed 20 years ago, according to these hon. gentlemen must exist to-day ; it does not matter if the circumstances are changed, if the current of immigration is different, if there are reasons for changing our policy. At any rate anything that was done before 1896 has been condemned by my hon. friends.

Mr. TALBOT. This statute is in existence to-day.

Mr. MONK. If my hon. friend will move to amend that law, which I never heard of until this evening, so as to give control over freight rates to any government that pays 16,000 or 20,000 or 25,000 pounds sterling a year to any line of steamers, I promise him my cordial support.

I wish to correct a statement I made before recess. I said that the French surtax of 3 francs 50 centines per kilo represented $7 a ton. In that I made a mistake, it would amount to between $3.50 and $3.75 a ton. But of this I am perfectly certain ; the object of the French surtax is to prevent indirect shipping from any port of the world through European ports to France. That is the reason of that French legislation which is peculiar to that country and which has been enacted in order to encourage direct shipping to French ports. I repeat that if our plenipotentiaries who were so lauded and praised on their return and for whom we incurred so much expense, had placed before the French plenipotentiaries a demand that the surtax should not be imposed on shipments from Canada even with transhipment through certain British ports that demand would have been immediately acceded to. I repeat that it was our plenipotentiaries who demanded direct shipment and the object of that demand was to ensure the subsidizing of a line. I do not think that was wise, I do not think it was statesmanlike. I think we should not have insisted on direct shipment.

Mr. FIELDING. I am sorry my hon. friend has repeated that statement. As far as I have any means of learning the facts, it is entirely inaccurate. I do not know what possible ground the hon. gentleman can have for stating that the French government would have been willing to wave the surtax if we had asked them to do so, or what ground he has to say they were not asked, still less what ground he has to say what was the motive in the minds of the ministers in dealing with the matter. All I can say is that this surtaxe d'entrepôt is deemed by the French a very important part of their fiscal policy. It has been repeatedly discussed between the French government and ministers from Canada and we have never had the slightest intimation that they were willing to give up the surtax. When the hon. gentleman implies that all we had to do was to ask the waiving of the surtax in order to receive it, I can assure him there is absolutely no warrant whatever for any such statement.

Mr. MONK. My ground for saying we did not ask for it is, if we are to believe the documents placed before us at the time we considered the treaty, that our demands as stated by our plenipotentiaries in the blue-book, did not contain that request. Moreover, when I stated here this afternoon that we never asked from the French plenipotentiaries the extension of that favour, my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) did not contradict that statement but seemed to accede to it. That is the ground I have for stating that if we had made that demand it would have been granted. I believe so, it is my impression that we did not ask it. Had we asked it, it seems to me, in view of statements made by M. Pichon in the French Chamber, that rather than abandon the important privileges obtained by the French Republic by this special list in the treaty, they would have waived the surtax for three or four British ports, and therefore we would have had competition in freight rates which would be an immense advantage. I am told that we could ship indirectly through the port of Liverpool or London to France cheaper than it will ever be possible for us to ship directly by the subsidized line.

That is the information I have. And, under these circumstances, since we have not asked for it and have not it in the treaty, I think it is fair, in spite of what my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) has said, that we should insert a clause in our contract with the steamship company, keeping control of freight rates. I am against monopoly in this as in everything else.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member (Mr. Monk) speaks from impression, but I speak from knowledge gained from frequent discussion of the subject, not only recently, but years ago, with representatives of the French government, and they were absolutely satisfied that the French government would not waive the surtax and therefore there was no use in discussing it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I made reference to this matter this afternoon. I knew nothing at that time of the position taken by the French government. But it did seem to me very reasonable that our plenipotentiaries should have asked the privilege of having Canadian goods enter without the surtax. I do not see any harm in asking it and expressing an opinion in favour of it. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has told us that opinion in France was opposed to anything of that kind. Still I think we had a good case. We were surrendering a very large amount of revenue and proposing to subsidize a line of steamers, while France was contributing nothing towards this subsidy. I think our ministers had a splendid case to go to France with. They could say: We are doing all this, and are not asking you to contribute anything to cheapen the transportation between Canada and France, and we think it only reasonable that you should give us better terms than you may have given to some other countries. I have but a limited knowledge of the question, but I think that would have been a reasonable proposition. Of course, I accept the minister's statement that it could not be done. The reflection I made was that I thought the ministers might have asked for it. Possibly they had good reasons for not asking for it. The Minister of Finance tells us that he was aware years ago that France would not concede it. But, although he had that knowledge, I think he might have asked for it. Were I trying to make a bargain of that kind, I would advance every argument I could think of that would work in my favour, whether I believed it would result in my getting what I wanted or not. I would at least put my best foot forward. I would endeavour to impress the other party with the soundness of my case. If my requests were refused—well, I would have done my best at any rate. I think the two ministers would stand now in a better light before the country if they had done this.

Mr. LOGGIE. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) objects to the resolution largely because there will be a monopoly. I would remind the House that during the last season we have had two lines of steamers running directly from Canada to France. We have now the Furness line running out of St. John, subsidized to London, but calling at Havre. So there will be at any rate two lines. And, so far as I am concerned, I shall be quite satisfied if we have a guarantee that the ocean rates shall not exceed the ocean rate from the French port to New York. As a matter of fact, rates from France to New York in the past have been somewhat less than from Montreal to Havre, or from St. John to Havre.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Do I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Loggie) to say that these boats were running directly to France at regular intervals and not subsidized by the Canadian government?

Mr. LOGGIE. I did not say that the Furness line was running directly to France and not subsidized by the Canadian government. What I said was that they were subsidized as a London line from the maritime provinces, and that, on the way to London, they called at Havre, thus avoiding the surtax d'entrepot which is to be in existence under this treaty as it has been in the past. I have known cases where the steamship company made an error and sent goods by London boat, and when the goods were transhipped from London to Havre the surtax had to be paid. For this reason the Furness line for a number of years have run a direct boat, calling at Havre to discharge cargo before going on to London. So I do not think we need be much afraid of monopoly, provided that there is a guarantee that our ocean rate does not exceed the ocean rate between New York and French ports. While I am on my feet, I have a grievance in this regard that I would like to bring before the minister. When he is arranging the subsidies for the London boat from maritime ports, I think he ought to have in the contract a clause to the effect that the rates between St. John and Havre and St. John and London should not exceed the rates between New York and Havre, New York and London. I find that, as a matter of fact, maritime province ports and maritime province towns are not fairly dealt with in this regard. Through freight that comes via St. John and is to go through to Brockville, Toronto, Hamilton and other places is carried at a much less rate than to places within a hundred miles of St. John. I know that the steamship line claim that they have a right to give the long haul a lower rate in proportion because it competes with the New York route. But, in future, we cannot have our French goods come via New York without paying more duty. It seems to me that it would be fair to look out for maritime province towns that are exporting their goods that they do not have to pay an excessive rate—but lower rates than in the past. For example, the ocean rates from St. John to Havre have been considerably more than from Montreal to Havre. If the guarantee provided for regarding this steamship line is provided for in the case of the Furness line as well, it will meet the difficulty. It would be only fair to the maritime province ports to have this done. As I understand from the minister, this line of steamers will run from Montreal via the straits of Belle Isle in summer. In that case, we in the maritime provinces will have no opportunity to ship by that line unless we railroad the goods up to Montreal, making the total freight rate from the maritime provinces much higher than from Montreal.

I think it would be only fair to the maritime provinces, under the circumstances, to see that the ocean rates from their ports are as low as they are from Montreal. That seems to me a reasonable proposition, and when the contract is renewed with the Furness line I would suggest to the minister to take that matter into consideration. Now regarding the point mentioned by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) as to our losing $400,000, and refunding to the manufacturers the duty paid on the materials going into the articles manufactured. It seems to me that argument does not apply here, because it is expected that there will be an increased manufacture of these articles, and consequently an increased duty paid, and if only the duty is returned that is paid in, it seems to me there can be no loss in that respect. Regarding the surtax, as I understand the matter, the French government were not willing to enter into this treaty unless that clause was inserted. If that be the case it seems to me it is only fair trade that the same provision should apply to goods coming into Canada. As for goods going from Canada to France, that has been the law for many years. I think there is one change now, that is to say that we cannot ship now via New York and escape the surtax. Am I right in that? Suppose we ship a carload of lobsters to Havre via New York, do we escape the surtax? At the present time we do, there has been no surtax during the past year on shipments via New York. I do not understand why it it so, but as a matter of fact there has been for a number of years no surtax on shipments via New York, but there has been via London. But recently nearly all our shipments have been going by the Furness line and the Allan line.

Mr. LALOR. We have heard discussed the question of the surtax that is imposed on German goods coming into Canada, and our goods going into Germany meet with a surtax. The hon. gentleman says that a shipment of lobsters via New York may escape the surtax. I am largely interested in evaporated apples and the products of evaporated apples, and I know that for years, in exporting these goods via New York to Germany, I have, like my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Loggie) escaped the surtax. That is because they go to New York, and apparently are shipped as American goods. But the French do not seem to understand that they come from Canada.

Mr. MONK. The reason why the surtax is not charged via New York by the French authorities is that it only applies to goods shipped from any part of the world and going into France through some European country. If you ship via New York there is no surtax. But the Minister of Finance has denied that we get the benefit of the treaty if we ship via New York. I think my hon. friend from Northumberland is inclined to agree with me that we ought to control the rates, but he seems to want to limit it to lobsters.

Mr. LOGGIE. No, my hon. friend wants to leave it for the Governor in Council. I say put it in the agreement and make it the same as the New York rate.

Mr. MONK. Is my hon. friend satisfied with the New York rate as it is now?

Mr. LOGGIE. Yes.

Mr. MONK. But who will say that it won't be changed, and won't become unreasonably high? If we are paying $200,000 in a subsidy, why should we oblige that company to conform to a foreign rate over which we have no control and lose control ourselves? Does my hon. friend from Northumberland know when the contract with the Furness line terminates?

Mr. LOGGIE. I think it is a yearly contract.

Mr. MONK. Then we are exposed to a monopoly.

Mr. BRODEUR. In answer to the point raised by my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Loggie), the surtaxe d'entrepôt only applies to goods that are shipped to France through a European country. With regard to the question raised by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), the condition he wants to put into the statute has not been embodied in any previous statute. In the statute passed in 1896 where for the first time, a direct subsidy has been provided for, it is stated that the Governor in Council is empowered to make a contract upon conditions which may seem expedient. That statute was passed by the late government, and why was that provision made? Because conditions vary, and it is not easy to find companies who would undertake to carry out a contract carrying a subsidy if we impose too onerous conditions. Take the case we have now under consideration. From 1889 the Canadian government has had a law on the statute-book granting a subsidy for a French service. In spite of the offer which has been made since then, nobody has come forward to make a contract and take the subsidy. Why? Because it is not a paying proposition. I have quoted two cases where I know that companies which have tried to establish that service have been obliged to discontinue it. So we cannot easily find people who are ready to embark in that service. It is a subject of negotiation between the government and the companies. Now what would be the result if my hon. friend put into the statute the condition which he suggests? The result might be that no company would undertake the contract.

I may go farther; a company stated to me that they would be willing to establish a service, but that they would not be willing to take the subsidy because they were bound by the subsidy in such a way that it might turn out a losing proposition. The adoption of the resolution of my hon. friend would mean that a company which might otherwise be prepared to establish that line would not be subjected to that condition. If we did not find a company willing to undertake that service the benefits of the French treaty would be lost. We would not be able to have the benefit of the reduction of duty on goods which is provided for by this treaty. It would be a most serious thing. The contract is going to expire in a few days. In a few days there will be no more obligation on the part of the Allan line to continue the service between France and Canada. It is of the greatest importance that this service should be continued, but if we put in a condition like the one my hon. friend is proposing we may kill the project. I am sure that is not what my hon. friend has in view. Why should we put a condition in the statutes to-day that has not been put in before? Let my hon. friend read the statutes of 1889 and 1896 which were passed by the previous government. These statutes give to the Governor in Council power to negotiate upon the basis of a subsidy of so much, the conditions being left entirely subject to negotiation between the company and the government. I appeal to my hon. friend. I know that he does not desire to kill the project. I know he is anxious that this direct service should be continued and I am sure that he would not like to put in a condition which would prevent this contract from being carried out. It is the intention of the government to press upon the companies which may be willing to negotiate with us the condition that the rates should be the same. If we can find a company that would be willing to accept the condition which my hon. friend puts in his resolution I would be very glad but I am almost sure that we would not be able to find a company which would accept such a condition. If my hon. friend is willing that we should make this contract and maintain this service he will not insist upon the proposition which he has made being part of the contract. The statute of 1903 provides that:

The Governor in Council may enter into a contract for a term not exceeding ten years with an individual or company for the performance of a steamship service between a port or ports in Canada and a French port or ports on such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council deems expedient, and may grant therefor a subsidy not exceeding one million three hundred and thirty-three thousand three hundred and thirty-three dollars.

Provision is made in the statute by which a contract for two years may be made. It was to our advantage then to induce some company to accept that contract at that time, but nobody would accept it. They did not know whether it would be a success or not. We were very glad that the Allan line were willing to make a contract for three years. They would not accept a ten-year contract because they were afraid of serious loss which might be incurred in establishing that service. My hon. friend wants to impose a condition which I am sorry I cannot accept. However, I will assure my hon. friend and the House that the intention of the government is to try, in the negotiations, to get an assurance that the rates will be fair, and if any company is willing to accept the condition which my hon. friend is now proposing I will be very glad, but I fear there will not be many people who will be willing to accept that condition. I regret, therefore, that I cannot accept this amendment.

Mr. MONK. I do not know under what circumstances this House adopted legislation in the eighties. I do not know what were the conditions which prevailed at that time. Our hon. friends on the other side are always citing to us as models the perfected things that were done long before the parliament of 1896 existed, but it is difficult to know what the circumstances were at that time. But, this much strikes me as rather significant. My hon. friend declared this afternoon that he intended placing in the contract that the company should conform to the rates of freight obtaining between New York and La Havre. Does he find this condition more acceptable by a company than the one I have suggested? For my part I would look with a great deal of suspicion upon a company which, receiving $200,000 subsidy from the government, would not be prepared to submit their freight rates for the approval of the government. It seeems to me a very fair proposition and the condition seems a more acceptable one than the one mentioned by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. It seems to me that ship owners would bind themselves to something much more indefinite and rigorous under the terms of a contract to conform to the rates of freight which may exist at any time between New York and Havre than if they accepted the condition to submit their rates to the approval of the government which subsidized them to the extent of $200,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. I would be very happy to see this condition put in but I would be rather inclined to think that we could not get anybody to tender upon it.

Mr. MONK. What is the difference between a condition that says to a steamship company: You must be willing to conform exactly to the freight rates between New York and France, and saying to the company: We reserve the right of approval of rates?

Mr. BRODEUR. I have no objection. It will be a matter for my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I will be glad to report the discussion which we are now having to my colleague and I am sure he will give it his most serious consideration, but I am afraid that if we put in such a condition we cannot find anybody who will make a contract. I might perhaps succeed in having this clause inserted, but if we make it a condition immediately, I am afraid we would not get any company which would accept it. The only promise I can make is that the matter will be the subject of negotiations with any company which we can find disposed to enter into a contract with the government. This assurance ought to be acceptable to my hon. friend because I am sure he would not like to defeat the line that exists now between France and Canada.

Mr. MONK. If my hon. friend gives the assurance that he will see that the rates of freight will be protected in some way or other, I am very glad to take note of his declaration. We are very anxious to see this line established. I am sorry my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) is not here to take a note also of this declaration of the hon. minister. For my part, I would be prepared to withdraw this resolution although it seems to me a reasonable one.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) or the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) or whoever it may be that undertakes the preparation or supervision of this contract should pay a good deal of attention to the stipulations of the contract. I remember a debate in parliament some three or four years ago in which it was clearly demonstrated that steamers subsidized by the Canadian exchequer were carrying goods from Chicago and other points of shipment in the United States at a lower rate than they were carrying goods from Canada across the Atlantic. The contract was so unfortunately framed that there seemed to be absolutely no remedy, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), who was then a member of this House, was obliged to admit that such a condition of affairs did exist because indisputable evidence was brought of the fact. I would like also to know from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries what is the proposal of the government regarding a system of cold storage. It is anticipated that certain Canadian products, which require specially a system of that kind, will be exported to France in largely increased quantities under the French treaty. If the treaty and this subsidized line are supposed to work together, surely the minister must see how extremely important it is that cold storage accommodation should be provided on board these steamers; and while the stipulations and terms and conditions cannot be set out in a resolution or a statute, we ought to understand what the policy of the government is in that regard before we pass this resolution.

Mr. BRODEUR. In the existing contract there is a clause which provides for cold storage facilities, and of course it is the policy of the government to provide the same facilities in any future contract.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I hope the facilities will be more efficient than some I have heard described in this House, especially by my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Smith). My hon. friend pointed out in a very forcible and convincing speech this session that the conditions contained in the contract with the government have not been very useful. There has been absolutely no control by the government over the temperature; and consequently, owing to these defects in the contract made by the government with certain steamship companies, the cold storage accommodation has been almost altogether useless in some cases at least. Would it not be possible to remedy that? I have not heard any answer to the indictment of my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Smith), at least none that would satisfy me. If his charges were well founded, surely the government should endeavour to so frame the new contract that these conditions may not continue.

Mr. FISHER. All the contracts for steamship subsidies, for a number of years back, contain the condition that the steamer shall supply adequate cold storage facilities. Those facilities have been such as to meet the requirements of the trade. It may be that occasionally the temperature was a little higher or a little lower, but the general conditions of the cold storage chambers in all subsidized steamers going out from Canada have been such as to meet the requirements of the trade. There are, of course, a number of vessels going out from Canada which are not subsidized and over which the government have no control, but in the subsidized steamers the cold storage facilities have been sufficient. When the trade has made any complaint of any kind, the Department of Trade and Commerce has immediately drawn the attention of the steamship owners to the complaints and has had them cleared up, and in all such cases the Department of Trade and Commerce refers to the Department of Agriculture for advice. I happen to know of one of the complaints made not very long ago regarding one of our lines of steamers, and there was some little discussion going on in the Department of Trade and Commerce with that line in which the owners of the steamers submitted evidence as to what actually occurred and claimed that they had fulfilled the necessary conditions. I cannot offhand give the details.

Mr. BERGERON. Who would be the judge?

Mr. FISHER. The Department of Trade and Commerce. If the conditions were not fulfilled, that department has the power to withhold the subsidy.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. In what way has the department control? There is no agreement in the contract with these steamers that they must carry goods at any stated temperature or at any temperature subject to the approval of the government.

Mr. FISHER. There is no temperature stated in the contract, it is true, but the conditions are in general terms. They are obliged to provide adequate facilities for cold storage and the Department of Trade and Commerce is the judge, and that department is generally advised by mine.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. It is very easy to provide facilities but it is quite another thing to provide that they be properly carried out. I see nothing in the contract which gives the government any control or enables them to compel the companies to operate these cold storage plants at any given temperature or in any manner the government may dictate.

Mr. FISHER. There is no doubt that there is no definite condition, but the parties with whom the contract is made have to carry on their service to the satisfaction of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He is the judge and he can at any time hold back part of their subsidy or fine them for not having provided facilities adequate for the purpose. To go into details in a contract and state just what temperature would be required in every chamber would be practically impossible. The matter has to be dealt with in general terms, and the department must judge whether the service supplied is adequate for the necessities or the trade.

Mr. BERGERON. Are these cold storage facilities costly?

Mr. FISHER. The insulation of the chambers and the installation of the machinery to keep them cool are quite costly.

Mr. BERGERON. The government do not contribute to this.

Mr. FISHER. Not for many years, but we require all our subsidized steamers to be provided with cold storage facilities. I may say that the Department of Trade and Commerce, when any question arises, refers to the officers of my department, who are more familiar with cold storage matters. That is why I happen to know something about the cases that have arisen.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. That only applies to steamers at present receiving subsidies, which are only a limited number, are they not?

Mr. FISHER. We are speaking of the line of subsidized steamers sailing to Japan Steamers receiving subsidies must provide cold storage facilities.

Mr. E. D. SMITH. My criticism has always been in regard to those steamers that received subsidies for providing a cold storage plant. These have expired.

Mr. FISHER. That is another matter. Any steamer that receives a subsidy from the government of Canada is now and has been for a good many years required to provide such cold storage facilities as are necessary for the trade.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. From what port of Canada do these steamers proceed ?

Mr. BRODEUR. There are no places fixed as ports of call, either in Canada or on the other side. That will be the subject of negotiation.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that the steamer 'Parisian' of the Allan line was engaged in the service between Canada and France. Does my hon. friend know whether she has cold storage facilities according to the regulations?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. BRODEUR. In the report of the Minister of Trade and Commerce it is stated that each vessel shall be fitted with such amount of cold storage accommodation and under such regulations as the minister may require, and to be at all times subject to the approval of the minister. It is the intention of the government to provide for the same thing in the contract to be made under this resolution.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there any inspector in the Department of Trade and Commerce to see that these vessels are built as they should be, or does the department only act after receiving a complaint?

Mr. BRODEUR. I think the department has some means by which it can ascertain whether or not the obligations of the contract in that respect are being fulfilled. I do not know how it is done, but I am very sure it is done.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. Minister of Agriculture said that when the department heard of a complaint they would see that it was attended to.

Mr. FISHER. I am not in a position to state exactly what arrangements the Department of Trade and Commerce has for the inspection of the vessels. I take it, however, that when a contractor offers a vessel to the department for the carrying out of the contract, he has to describe the vessel and show that it has cold storage accommodation. I may say that the cold storage plant is not always in operation, but only when there are any cold storage products offered for freight. If it is not then operated the department would see to it and would no doubt immediately call the contractor to account.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It seems to me that in regard to cold storage the Minister of Agriculture is simply placing himself in the same old position that he has occupied for several years. Several years ago he spent hundreds of thousands of dollars getting vessels equipped with cold storage plants, but took no control over the temperature in those boats, and, judging from his remarks, he is in the same position now. He is prepared to grant to this company a subsidy for merely installing a cold storage system in their boats by which they can take care of their food or other materials, but they will not look after the perishable products which are being shipped to France. These vessels carry only a very small portion of the perishable products of Canada to the markets of Europe in cold storage chambers, and we may expect the same thing to occur under the contract which we are now providing for, unless the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will in some way compel the contractor to come under government regulations in regard to the temperature that should be maintained in those chambers while the vessels are crossing the Atlantic. There is no reason why we should pay out money for the equipment of steamers with cold storage accommodation which is so small that it will only take care of the food of the passengers. I cannot impress too strongly on the minister the fact that though he has been spending hundreds and thousands of dollars in helping to install cold storage equipments in vessels crossing the Atlantic, they have not been giving the satisfaction to the shippers of perishable products. A very small portion of the perishable products are carried in these cold storage chambers, and the minister knows it. If he refers to the splendid system of cold storage in the boats coming from the Argentine Republic, Australia and New Zealand, and compare it with the system we have, he will find that we are in a most humiliating position in that regard. I wish I could impress upon him the importance, when entering into this contract, of providing that the government shall have control over the temperature in these chambers and also over the rates. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Loggie) gives us to understand that there is to-day direct communication between Canadian ports and France and that the service is reasonably satisfactory to our people, except that the rates may be excessive. If the present service is fairly satisfactory, now that the Minister of Marine is going to double the subsidy it is only reasonable and fair that we should ask that some consideration should be given to the shippers of Canada, not only as to cold storage, but as to reduction of rates.

Mr. LOGGIE. The present service from the maritime provinces is only a monthly service and certainly Canada is entitled to a better service to France. I wish to say a word in defence of the steamship lines having cold storage. Both the Allans and the Canadian Pacific Railway have first class cold storage accommodation. I know as a matter of fact that on several trips they have taken over as much as forty or fifty tons of frozen salmon during August and September and it has arrived in first-class condition. I can speak with some assurance and I say that the cold storage plant on these two lines is satisfactory.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. On that one product.

Mr. LOGGIE. If they can carry that they can carry anything because it requires such a low temperature.

Mr. MARSHALL. During a previous discussion I stated that French peas were artificially coloured. I have here a tin of French peas bearing on the label a statement that they are coloured with copperas. There is no mistake about that. I would like to know what the Minister of Agriculture is going to do. You allow these goods to come in coloured but you will not allow Canadian packers to colour their goods.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that the Act which applies to Canadian goods applies to all canned goods exposed for sale in Canada, these imported goods will be subject to exactly the same restrictions as Canadian goods.

Mr. BRODEUR. I made a statement the other day that possibly may not have been quite clear. I said that the Adulteration Act applied not only to Canadian goods but also to imported goods, I think the law reads that all goods offered for sale are liable to be inspected and to be analysed, and if they are found to be adulterated the person offering them for sale is liable to a penalty under the Adulteration Act.

Mr. HENDERSON. Would this be effective against the French treaty ?

Mr. FISHER. No, but it would be against the man who attempted to sell adulterated goods in this country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The question is when you find them what will you do with them.

Mr. FISHER. We will apply the Canadian law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It does not seem to be applied very hard.

Mr. FISHER. It can be at any time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The question is whether the policy of the government is that it can or will be. The pure food law is supposed to be for the public benefit. If it amounts to anything it should be enforced by the government.

Mr. FISHER. Let me take issue at once. My hon. friend knows perfectly well that there are regular inspectors of the Inland Revenue Department to enforce the Adulteration Act, but as far as the Canned Goods Act passed last year is concerned, it is not contemplated that the government shall set to work and prosecute everybody all over the country. The Act is to a large extent like the Fruit Marks Act, it defines what may or may not be sold, and there are certain government inspectors to, if I may use the term, frighten the dealers in these goods, and who can be called on to inspect goods in any case, but there is no expectation or intention that every package of goods in the country shall be inspected or marked or tagged and it is the same with the Adulteration Act. If adulterated goods are sold my hon. friend or any one else can take action against the person offering them for sale, but the inspectors cannot possibly inspect all the goods in the country and mark them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was not suggesting that every one throughout the country should be prosecuted but only those who expose for sale an article that I understand is injurious to health. The allegation has been made in this House without contradiction that articles of food which are coloured with this very ingredient, sulphate of copper are injurious to human health.

Mr. FISHER. I should think so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not dealing with the specific terms of any Act, but with the policy, and I say that such a case comes exactly within the terms of the pure food law. If you undertake to enforce the pure food law, you should punish those violating the Act.

Mr. FISHER. Should we not prosecute the buyer?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Not unless he bought to sell again.

Mr. FIELDING. Should we not prosecute the hon. gentleman who has produced this tin of peas ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend has brought this tin of peas here in order to instruct a somewhat ignorant government in their duty.

Mr. FISHER. There are a number of articles that are said to be adulterated or coloured by injurious matters.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I speak of things injurious to human health.

Mr. FISHER. I understand.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know the statement referred to, but I believe it is that certain peas are coloured with copperas.

Mr. FISHER. Does the can indicate that the peas are coloured with copperas?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to have the opinion of a medical expert as to whether it is injurious to health, as I think it is, and I would say that any goods marked 'coloured with copperas' ought to be prohibited.

Mr. BARR. I do not think it requires even a medical man to know that sulphate of copper is a most injurious poison, and it is impossible to colour goods as these goods are coloured without using a quantity of copperas which would be injurious to health. I think the officers of the law are not doing their duty when the sale of these goods is permitted. There is no question that they are injurious and that the large numbers of persons using them are running the risk of injury. Now it is very much to the detriment of the Canadian canners that they should be compelled to compete with these goods. They are not permitted to put out goods coloured in that way. But there is no doubt that goods coloured in that way are much more attractive than the ordinary canned peas. We know that the dealers endeavour to explain it away, saying that the quantity of colouring matter used is so small as not to be injurious, and thus many are induced to purchase. But I believe it is the duty of the officers of the law to see to it that these articles are not sold to the public. If there is sufficient of this colouring matter used to colour the peas, it is injurious to the consumer.

Mr. FIELDING. Since the announcement is stamped on the can that the peas are coloured with sulphate of copper, would it not be a fair presumption that only such a quantity is used as is held not to be unwholesome? We can understand the use of dangerous colouring matter when the fact of its use is concealed, but, when the fact is stamped on the can, the ordinary observer would imagine that the colouring is not held to be unwholesome. I merely throw out that suggestion.

Mr. BARR. I know that the ordinary observer may come to that conclusion. But that just shows the wisdom of those who sell the goods—by putting it on the can they make the public believe that the colouring is not injurious, though, in fact, it may be known to be injurious by those who put up these goods.

Mr. MARSHALL. I think that the reason the statement concerning colouring the peas is stamped on the cans is to be found in the pure food law of the United States. There used to be quite a lot of French peas shipped to the United States, but, under the pure food law, this trade could not be continued unless the label showed what the goods were coloured with.

Mr. FIELDING. Are these goods French or Italian?

Mr. MARSHALL. French, I believe.

Mr. FISHER. The name is an Italian name.

Mr. MARSHALL. I notice that there is an import into Canada of $65,000 worth of canned goods from France in the year. I have never yet seen a can of French corn or of French tomatoes in this market. Therefore, I think practically all these imports must be of peas.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman speaks of these as coming from France, but the label is in English and the name seems to be an Italian name.

Mr. MARSHALL. I think they are from France. I think it would have been only fair for the ministers to consult the canners before they arranged for a reduction of this duty. Large sums have been spent by the Canadian canners to put their business in shape to put up peas and corn, and, as a matter of fact, the canners of this country can pack double the peas that they can find sale for. Our market is confined to this country. We can undertake to ship goods to the United States, but we are met with a duty of 48 cents per dozen, to say nothing of the fact that in the United States also they pack more than they can find sale for. The ministers have reduced the duty by 16 per cent. But we are glad, very often, to sell goods at a profit of 5 per cent.

Mr. ELSON. I desire to say a word on this resolution and also on the French treaty. These are so closely connected that one is little use without the other, and it seems to me that the resolution should have been discussed about the same time as the treaty. I speak from the standpoint of the farmer, and shall not touch any other line. I cannot agree with the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Schell) and the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) concerning this French treaty, that a large trade will be likely to be worked up between Canada and France as a result of the treaty. I had thought there would be an effort on the part of the plenipotentiaries to make a treaty that would be beneficial to both countries. But it seems to me that our plenipotentiaries did not give due consideration to the interests of our farmers. See how the French government protect the agricultural interest of their country. Note how careful Germany is to protect her farmers and the products of the soil. Consider the United States, close beside us, how particularly careful that government is to protect its farming class. But, apparently, our plenipotentiaries overlooked the farmers of this country. They seem to have regarded our farmers as hewers of wood and drawers of water in years past, and, as the farmers did not complain, these gentlemen seem to have thought that the condition might safely be continued. But I believe the farmers are awakening to their own interest, and that they will expect the government, whatever side of politics it may represent, to give them fair play and justice. Speaking from the standpoint of the farmer, I wish to allude to some articles covered by this first schedule 'a.' The first article is horses. I believe that Canada is a splendid country for raising first class horses. We have men who understand thoroughly the business of horse breeding, and we have the pasture fields and the feed to raise horses to maturity. I think I may be pardoned if I am somewhat elated upon this subject. For some horses raised in the riding which I have the honour to represent in this House were shipped over to England last year to the great exhibition there, and I am glad to say that these Canadian horses from the constituency I have the honour to represent swept the first prize in competition with the world.

Canada is an excellent country for raising horses, and France is a great importer of horses. She imported in 1905 $2,397,000 worth of horses, but not one of them came from Canada. Although this treaty has reduced the duty on horses, it is still prohibitory, $30 on a horse is a prohibitory duty; so I feel that this treaty is no good to the Canadian horse raiser. Then look at cattle. Is not Canada a magnificent country for raising cattle ? Does she not raise vast numbers of sheep and steers which bring great sums of money into our country ? But what chance have we of dealing with France ? Take oxen, for instance, the first item mentioned in the schedule, and what is the duty upon them ? An ox, I suppose, would be a steer six or seven years old that has got his growth, in good condition, and would weigh probably 1,700 or 1,800 pounds at least. The duty upon an ox is 20 francs per hundred kilogrammes. We will reckon the franc at 20 cents, which is a little above the mark ; that would be $4 upon every hundred kilogrammes. Now, an ox weighing 700 kilogrammes would meet a duty of $28 going into France. There is no chance of selling them there. Then take cows. France is a great importer of cows, she paid nearly $2,000,000 for cows in 1905, but not a dollar came to Canada. We did not send a single cow to France. There is no chance of doing it even now, because a cow is supposed to weigh 1,200 or 1,300 pounds, that would mean about 600 kilogrammes, or $24 duty on a cow. No possible chance of sending in cows. Then take steers which we take so much pride in. They would weigh probably 1,500 pounds or 700 kilogrammes, and the duty would be $28. So there is little chance of finding a market in France under the French treaty for our cattle. I must say there was a small number of young cattle went into France, to the value of $113,000. But that is a very small item in the vast sum of nearly $2,000,000 which France paid for young cattle.

Now, Mr. Chairman, here is another thing I would call attention to. I notice that sheep are not mentioned at all in this French treaty. Let me say again that I feel a little dignified, because the constituency I have the honour to represent has turned out some magnificent sheep. Large numbers of them were taken over to Chicago and exhibited there in the past two or three years, in competition with the whole world, and again Canadian sheep swept all the prizes. Yet sheep are not mentioned at all in this French treaty. What is the reason of that ? I will tell you why. I remember a speech that was made here last year by an hon. gentleman who had been up to the experimental farm and had seen the sheep there. I remember hearing him say from his place in this House : I have seen scabby sheep, but of all the scabby sheep I have ever seen those at the experimental farm were the scabbiest. Now, what does the Minister of Agriculture think of that? I think probably that was the reason why our plenipotentiaries did not mention sheep in this French treaty. Now, there is poultry. Canada is a fine country for raising poultry, and I am pleased to say that about 15 years ago, in the time of Sir Charles Tupper, poultry was on the minimum tariff ; yet no poultry has been sent from Canada to France, although France buys a large quantity. Then again there is fresh meat, none of that goes into France, mutton being 3 cents a pound, pork and beef about the same. Salted pork and beef, France only took $10 worth. There doesn't seem to be a possibility of getting a trade there. Bacon and ham, nearly 3 cents a pound ; France buys about a million and a half dollars worth of that. Pork, $10 per hundred kilogrammes. France buys $700,000 worth of that, but we get none of it. Dead poultry, that is also under the old treaty. France buys a great deal of that, but we get none of it. Canned meat was also under the old treaty, and we only exported to France about $5 worth ; no chance of working up a trade there. Then in the matter of eggs, France is a great importer. In 1905 she bought no less than $7,300,000 worth of eggs, yet Canada gets none of that. Cheese—now there is something of great importance to the farmers of this country. Since the wheat fields of the west have been doing so well they have crowded out the farmers of the older provinces, shifted them to one side as it were in the matter of raising grain, and our eastern farmers have gone into dairying. Yet we find that nothing at all has been done in this French treaty to admit cheese into France. It is the same as under the old treaty of 14 years ago. Now, France bought in 1905 $9,720,000 worth of cheese, yet none of it comes to us. Butter about the same way. Then wheat, Mr. Chairman, is not our country noted for its excellent wheat fields ? Look at the Northwest we are so proud of, and its wheat fields of which we boast, hoping and expecting that they will become the granary of the world in the course of time. But, Sir, where is the chance of sending much wheat to France under this treaty ? No chance worth speaking of considering that France is purchasing $37,000,000 worth of wheat annually while she only takes from Canada $45,000 worth. What is the duty upon wheat? It is under the old treaty; this present treaty does not touch it at all and yet, if you figure it out you will find that the duty upon wheat is 36 cents per bushel. We cannot expect to work up much trade under conditions of that kind. It is the same with oats. France is a great importer of oats, she purchased no less than $10,000,000 worth in 1905, and yet she takes none from us. The present duty does not make any change whatever but leaves the duty, under the old general tariff, the same as it was fifteen years ago. Oatmeal, rye and barley are much the same. Then, there are canned tomatoes and corn. My hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Marshall) alluded to peas. Tomatoes in cans imported from France in 1905 amounted to $55,000 in value. The old duty was 1½ cents and it is now reduced to 1¼ cents. What chance will our farmers and vegetable growers have to raise tomatoes and corn? Surely we ought to raise all the vegetables we require for the supply of our own markets. On account of cheap labour in France they can send these goods in cheaper than our growers can raise them and our canners can put them up. This is an injustice to the farmers and vegetable growers of Canada. I do not see very much benefit in the French treaty as far as the farmer is concerned. It is true that we may be able to get our wines and champagnes a little cheaper but our farmers do not indulge to any great extent in luxuries of that kind, and it is well that they do not. The treaty in this respect works an injustice to the grape growers of our own country. Now as Canada will lose about $400,000 revenue in addition to the subsidy granted, and as France buys from Canada only $1,400,000 in goods and Canada buys from France $6,500,000 per year, it seems to me that France should pay at least half the subsidy instead of nothing, as now proposed. A few days ago the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) in his speech said that in his part of the country the farmer was looked upon as the man who worked the farm and the agriculturist was the man who worked the farmer. When that statement was made there was a tremendous pounding of desks on the other side of the House; it seems to me almost like a roar of musketry. I felt at the moment as if it were rather a reflection upon the farmers of the country, but when I recall the fact that it was the first of April I looked upon it as a little bit of a joke. The hon. member who made that remark knows perfectly well, so does every hon. member of this House and so do the farmers whom he represents, that the agriculturist and the farmer are one and the same man. There was one exception made yesterday to which I shall not allude. But as a general thing the farmer and the agriculturist are one and the same man and instead of the agriculturist working the farmer it seems to me that it is this extravagant Liberal government that is working the agriculturist or the farmer for all he is worth. I sincerely hope that the government of the day will see to it that the agricultural interest of the country shall be fostered and that everything will be done by the government that they can do to encourage young men to stay upon the land and thereby to increase the wealth of the country.

In regard to the proposed motion before the committee, I would like to see it amended just by the insertion of a small syllable, or, falling that, of one word. For instance, it reads 'that it is expedient.' I would propose that before the word 'expedient' there should be inserted 'in' so that it would read that it is expedient'; or, if that be not suitable, that the word 'not' should be inserted before the word 'expedient.' That is about the way I look at the proposed resolution. However, if the government decide to pass the resolution I would certainly feel like voting for the amendment of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, because it will improve the resolution. But, at the same time I would like to see it dropped altogether.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. With the permission of the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Marshall) I will order that an examination be made of this can of peas. I, of course, do not know whether sulphate of copper is deleterious or not, but I will submit it to the analyst of the department who has charge of the adulteration of foods branch.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. That is not sulphate of copper; it is sulphate of iron.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The can is marked 'sulphate of copper.'

Mr. T. CHISHOLM. Some hon. gentleman spoke about copperas. Copperas is not sulphate of copper.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. As my hon. friend the Minister of Finance said the appearance of the words 'coloured by sulphate of copper' upon the can would indicate that its use was believed to be harmless, but I will have it investigated, and if it is a contravention of the Adulteration of Foods Act, as was suggested by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) we may have some prosecutions.

Mr. HENDERSON. It would scarcely be fair to have this sent to the analyst in the name of my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Marshall) because he is not the man who sold these goods. In case that my hon. friend may be reported all over the country as dealing in a class of goods that are poisonous I think it would be well that the minister should get the name of the person from whom my hon. friend from East Elgin purchased these goods. He could go down to Sparks street and find the name at once.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. One of the greatest difficulties that we find in enforcing the Adulteration of Foods Act is to get evidence against the parties selling. The evidence we produce in court is that of the inspector of the Inland Revenue Department who purchases from the dealer the articles supposed to be adulterated. That inspector has to go into court and testify that he bought a particular article from a particular individual. I do not for a moment suppose that we will use the hon. member for East Elgin for that purpose. We could get some of our officials to procure further samples.

Mr. A. M. McLEAN. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Loggie) stated that the ocean freight rate from St. John was greater than the ocean freight rate from Montreal. I am informed by shippers in the maritime provinces that they can ship lobsters from points on the north side of the St. Lawrence to Montreal and get a cheaper rate from Montreal to Havre than they can from St. John. It should be provided in any contract that the rate from St. John shall be the ruling rate, if the company will not take the New York rate. I do not think that shippers from the maritime provinces should pay a higher rate than do shippers from Montreal. I know of my own personal knowledge that men who ship lobsters to France can get cheaper rates by way of Montreal than by way of St. John. There should be a uniform rate from the maritime provinces and all other points in Canada.

Mr. BRODEUR. I shall make inquiries of the Trade and Commerce Department, and if we can get the right to control the freight rates, that will be a matter to be dealt with by that department.

Mr. LENNOX. Has the minister announced the assent of His Excellency to this resolution.

Mr. BRODEUR. The announcement was made when the resolution was introduced.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time and agreed to.

Mr. BRODEUR moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 145) to amend the Act relating to Ocean Steamship Subsidies.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PROPRIETARY AND PATENT MEDICINES.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution :—

That it is expedient to bring in a measure providing for the inspection and the regulation of the sale of proprietary and patent medicines.—Mr. Templeman.

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). I think it is generally conceded that there is some need for legislation on this matter. The various provinces have attempted to legislate on it on numerous occasions during the past four or five years, but in almost every instance that legislation was withdrawn because it was felt that any Act of this kind should be of a Dominion character. Two sessions ago a committee of this House took evidence and reported that legislation should be enacted to regulate to some extent the sale of patent medicines. Last session a Bill was prepared and I think distributed, but it was not passed owing to the fact that we wanted to bring the session to a close. The Bill of last session was of a rather drastic character, and after numerous interviews with representatives of the wholesale and retail trade and of the manufacturers of proprietary medicines, it was found very difficult to frame legislation which would safeguard the public interests without at the same time committing injustice to the business interests. The Bill I am about to introduce is a new one. It does not altogether follow the line of the Bill of last session. It proposes to define what constitutes a proprietary medicine and will exempt from its operation all patent or proprietary medicines which bear a label giving the formula of the remedy, thereby giving publicity to its various ingredients.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Does the hon. gentleman say that a retail merchant can put up a cough mixture for sale provided he places on the bottle a label giving the ingredients ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Any one can put up any medicine for sale provided he publishes the formula on the bottle. The Bill provides also that the use of cocaine shall be absolutely prohibited. The use of an unusual quantity of alcohol is also prohibited. Another clause provides for naming on the label any deleterious drug which the medicine may contain, and a list of drugs considered deleterious is given in the schedule. These are the main features of the Bill. It does not go as far as some gentlemen may want, but I thought it better to go slow and enact some law and have it in operation a year or two in order to ascertain how it works, and then later amendments may be made.

Mr. THOMAS CHISHOLM. Will the formula be given in Latin or English ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I certainly think it ought to be in English.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has the hon. minister considered the advisability of inserting a clause forbidding the importaton or sale of absinthe ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would it not be wise to have an amendment of the kind ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We are prepared to accept amendments that will improve the Bill.

Mr. BERGERON. The suggestion of my hon. friend from Huron (Mr. Chisholm) that, if a formula is to be published on the bottle, it should be in a language the people understood, is certainly one that ought to be adopted.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I understood by the Bill of last year that a fee was attached to each patent medicine, and a retail merchant, on paying that fee, might put up a special medicine himself. Is that eliminated ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There is practically no fee. There is a registration fee of $1 for one firm or individual, and on paying that $1 they may put up as many medicines as they please.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would emphasize the necessity of some clause being put in the Bill which will prohibit the use of absinthe in this country altogether.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. It is not a proprietary or patent medicine.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time, and agreed to.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 146) respecting proprietary and patent medicines.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 11.07 p.m.
