"What sin have I committed?" she demanded, with conscious innocence. "Is it a sin to refuse to marry a man you don't want?"

"No-o. But how about—well, not exactly leading him on to proposing—but"—

She favored him with a frigid look. "I beg your pardon, Mr. Ormsby," she observed.

"Well, you needn't," he said quietly. "You expect plain talk from people whose advice you ask, don't you? No man will ever ask a woman to marry him if she doesn't give him the opportunity."

"That is different; but such remarks as you are making now are hardly in the nature of advice, Jack."

"Well, I don't see that there's much you can do," he drawled, and his eyes began to twinkle. "There seem to be but two courses to pursue, and two only"—

"Oh, here's your Sultan and the runabout!" suddenly cried Esther, clapping her hands and springing up. "Are you going to take me to ride, Jack?"

"Well, it's what I came around for, but your tale of woe about knocked it out of my head."

The negro from the stable leaped out and held the big bay's head. Esther ran down to the gate, forgetting the beruffled parasol lying on the veranda. Ormsby followed lazily.

"Feeling pretty gay, isn't he, Jackson?" he asked, pulling on a glove and looking at Sultan, who danced charmingly to the accompaniment of little squeals of delight from Esther.

"Yes, sah; he do, sah."

"Hop in, Essie," Ormsby said, holding out his hand to assist her. Then he added, "Speaking of angels, there's Hallowell now."

A fresh faced young fellow cantered by on a fine horse and lifted his hat seriously. A little way beyond he pulled in the animal and dismounted as though he would come back to speak to the couple at the runabout.

"Do hurry up!" exclaimed Esther under her breath. "What shall I do to get rid of him, Jack? You said there were two ways. What are they?"

"Well," and Ormsby buttoned the glove slowly and put one foot on the step of the runabout, "you might marry him to get rid of him."

"No, thank you!" she exclaimed, pouting and tossing her head. Then she started and looked toward the house. "Oh, Jack—my parasol! I shall want it."

Ormsby had already leaned forward to seize the reins. He glanced at the colored man. "Miss Dingley's parasol is on the veranda, Jackson," he said.

The lines had not been quite within Ormsby's grasp. His foot slipped from the step. He made a leap to reach the carriage, but Sultan swung into a long stride on the [illegible] and fairly snatched the runabout from under his master's grasp.

Thank God, she knew what he meant and seized the lines before they slipped over the dashboard to dangle about Sultan's heels and drive him mad with terror. But the horse knew instantly that an unfamiliar hand held the reins, and he increased his trot to a gallop.

Esther told herself that she would not be frightened, and she drew the lines in firmly and said "Whoa!"

But Sultan saw no reason for "whoaing" just then. There was a long stretch of dusty, sunlit road before him, and he seized the bit in his strong teeth and bolted. He flew by Hallowell's mount with a rush and set that creature to dancing. Hallowell hung on to the leather and stared with round eyes after the runaway.

His astonishment was vastly increased when a second whirlwind reached him. Ormsby went at him as though he was playing football.

He snatched the bridle from Hallowell's hand, and that young man was sent rolling in the dust as Jack leaped astride and set the now frightened animal after the bolting Sultan.

The road for a mile was clear, but where it joined the boulevard beyond Ormsby knew the runaway would burst into a tangle of carriages of all descriptions, and the end would be serious. He didn't know much about the soundness of Hallowell's mount, but he would have made an asthmatic old car horse do stunts just then.

Like the wind he rode, and his mount's nose soon came up to Esther's shoulder. Foot by foot he gained on Sultan, and then, with a swift dive, Ormsby seized the reins, which Esther had continued to cling to with all her little might. A strong pull on both horses, and Sultan instantly recognized the fact that all his fun was over.

He slowed down and in half a block, and just before the junction with the boulevard, stopped, as gentle as a lamb. For a minute they gazed at each other.

"Well," Ormsby said at last, "you came near escaping the pursuit of the villain that time, Essie, for good and all."

Esther's eyes grew luminous. "And you dared suggest that I marry him!" she said, catching her breath.

"Well, you know there was an alternative."

"And that is?" still looking at him.

"That you might marry me to get rid of him. That—that would be effectual, wouldn't it?"

Another breath of silence, and then Esther murmured, "Well, Jack, dear, we might try it!"

Hot Baths.

A German physician advocates in a German paper the frequent taking of hot baths. These, he urges, are much more healthful than the cold plunge, which he thinks few systems can stand. The water should be at a temperature in the beginning of 108 degrees F., this to be increased until the water is as hot as can be borne. The length of the first bath should not be more than five minutes, and at no time should it be longer than is agreeable with no sense of discomfort apparent.

The writer cites in support of his theory the practice common in Japan among all classes of its people of taking these hot baths. The porter walking along with his load and fatigued to the point of exhaustion, drops it for ten minutes while he takes a hot bath at some public bathhouse. He emerges refreshed and strengthened and goes on his way rejoicing.

The writer considers that there is no danger of taking cold after a hot bath and does not even advocate the use of a cold shower to follow the bath. Hot water is known to be an excellent cosmetic for the face, and it is only fair to assume that its revival of skin tissue is not confined to that part of the body.

Unfortunate Chickens.

A farmer who has tried Shanghai fowls and found them wanting gives the following account of their peculiarities. Their true name, he says, is "shank high," and he pronounces them rightly named.

They have no body at all, and when the head is cut off the legs come right apart. I don't see how they can sit on their eggs. My jackknife can sit as well as they can.

They don't sit on the roost the same as other chickens do; not a bit of it. When they attempt to sit as other chickens do, they fall off backward.

They sit when they eat, I know, for I've seen 'em do it. And I've seen 'em try to eat standing, but they couldn't fetch it, for when they peck at a grain of corn on the ground they don't more'n half reach it, but their head bobs right between their legs and makes 'em turn a complete somerset.

I'd as soon see a pair of tongs or compasses walking about my yard as these shank highs.

They crow, too, a long time before day, when it isn't day, probably because their legs are so long that they can see daylight long before a common chicken can.

Postoffices.

In the year 1790 there were in operation in the United States seventy-five postoffices. At that time the population of the thirteen states was in round numbers 3,930,000. This made an average of one postoffice to 52,400 people. Since that time the offices have been multiplied over 1,000 times.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

Moons In the Solar System.

There are at least twenty moons in the solar system. Saturn alone has eight, the biggest of them, Titan, being nearly twice the size of the moon, and Jupiter possesses four, ranging in dimensions upward from Europa, just about as large as the orb of terrestrial night, to Ganymede, greatest of all known moons, with a diameter of 3,480 miles, whereas the moon belonging to this world is only 2,160 miles through.

How the Ancients Regarded Iron.

The ancient Egyptians believed that iron was the bone of Typhon, the enemy of Osiris, and for this reason it was considered impure. No one could make use of it even for the most ordinary requirements of life without polluting his soul in a way that would cause him harm both on earth and in the other world.

THE LAUNDRESS' LAMENT.

Bless my heart! Why was I ever born? Toiling and moiling from morning till night, and never a rest! If man was made to mourn, what was a laundress made for—certainly not to sing. My hands are nearly charred off working in filthy suds, washing other people's clothes, and other people's floors. No wonder soapmakers give prizes with their soaps. Those who use some of the soaps deserve prizes. I would rather do without the prizes and have a whole skin. And as to the mistress' part of the bargain—imagine rubbing ten dollars' worth into the value of five dollars, and then getting a fifty-cent prize for doing it? It makes one laugh—that is, if you haven't to pay for it. But I cannot laugh at my sore hands. Well, well, I suppose what cannot be cured must be endured.

* * * * * *

"Hello, Mary! what's the matter, you seem out of sorts?"

"Out of sorts, Margaret, I should think I am. Life is a burden."

"Oh, nonsense, Mary, you have a fit of the blues—it will soon pass off."

"The blues might pass off, Margaret, if that were all; but my poor sore hands and aching back remain."

"Why, sakes alive, Mary, what has put your hands in that state? What hard thick knuckles you've got, and how ragged your nails are, too!"

"Hard knuckles and ragged nails! Bah! What is that to me, I wish you heard the grumbling I have to stand about hard flannels and ragged clothes after I have washed them. Hard knuckles and ragged nails are not my only troubles."

"Yes, but why should the flannels or your knuckles be hard, or your nails or skin be cut up in that way?"

"Why, surely you know, Margaret, you do washing as well as I."

"Yes, but I hear no grumbling, and see my hands, they are as soft and fresh as any lady's."

"Why, so they are, Margaret; now, how is that?"

"I tell you what, Mary, you want to have a doctor's advice."

"Oh, the doctor may cure my hands, but he won't mend the clothes or soften the flannels."

"Oh, yes, he will."

"A doctor mend clothes and soften flannels! You always would have your little joke, Margaret."

"Seriously, Mary, I am not joking, and I will tell you a secret. Have you ever heard of Sir Charles Cameron? Well, he is one of the highest authorities in England. He was President of the Royal College of Surgeons, and has a whole string of letters at the end of his name. Well, I read a simple statement he made one day, and it cured me of sore hands, hard knuckles, aching back, softened the flannels, and prevented the clothes going so soon to tatters."

"What a funny doctor, and what was it you read?"

"He said there was something he used himself, and he recommended it to women when washing clothes; and I said to myself, I will try that. I found out that Queen Victoria herself used the same in her castles in England, and that further convinced me. You know, Mary, these people have a means of knowing things that we poor people take years to find out."

"Well, what did Sir Charles Cameron say?"

"Well, it was simply this: 'I have carefully analyzed specimens of the Sunlight Soap. . . . The points in the composition of this Soap that are most valuable are its freedom from free alkali, the large percentage of fatty acids which it contains, and the purity of the materials employed in its preparation. I employ the Soap, and from my actual experience of it can strongly recommend it.'"

"I have myself found from experience—and it stands to reason—that soaps loaded with alkali must ruin the hands and destroy the clothes.* I found there was no sense in burning my hands during the day and rubbing glycerine on during the night. They never got time to get better. Sunlight Soap being made from pure oils and fats cannot hurt the hand or the clothes. Imagine the foolishness of rubbing the adulteration of common soaps into the skin and into the clothes, and then having to wash out not merely the original dirt of the clothes, but the soap adulteration as well—that is, washing dirt with dirt. Simple Simon could scarcely do worse."

"Oh, Margaret, I wish I had known of this before. My hands might have been like yours to-day. I will try it in my next washing."

"Do, Mary, and be sure it is Sunlight Soap, and ask for the Octagon bar. It is an ideal shape for the laundry. And just a word before I go, Mary, if you find that your grocer does not keep Sunlight Soap you have only got to send his name and address to Lever Brothers Limited, Toronto, and they will send you a sample of Sunlight Soap without cost."

*NOTE.—This is absolutely a fact, and it means in every-day language that the skin cannot be hurt even if the hands are immersed for hours in the suds of Sunlight Soap, because this soap is made from oils and fats pure enough to eat; and there is none of that burning sensation that is caused by alkaline poisons. 606.

A French lady has sent out to the Cape a number of sheep as a present to the Boers.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grevious ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result, improved appetite. Northrup & Lyman, of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, guaged by the opinions of scientists, this wine approaches nearest perfection of any on the market. All druggists sell it.

FIERCE NAVAL BATTLE.

An Amusing Experiment With Chalk Boats and a Vinegar Sea.

The amusing experiment of a lilliputian naval battle can be made with white chalk and the ordinary table vinegar. Model, say, a dozen chunks of chalk to the resemblance of ships, planing the bottoms evenly and using matches for masts, smokestacks and turrets. The rival forces you can distinguish by coloring the enemy's ships with black ink, leaving your own white.

Having placed them in a pan or plate close to an imaginary dividing line, pour a good quantity of vinegar between the chalk sticks. Instantly you will hear an audible seething, like the hissing of shells in actual warfare, while ships, as if puffing up steam, will begin to move forward in slow revolutions, leaving behind them white streaks of foam such as are observed in the wake of moving vessels. When meeting at the dividing line, they will have attained quite a respectable speed, bumping and cuffing together in the endeavor to push one another farthest from the dividing line. The engagement often proves an exciting one. Of course the side has won which has the larger number of ships nearest the center after the affray.

The chemical solution of this seeming mystery is quite simple. Chalk, being largely carbon, combines with the acid of the vinegar in carbonic acid—the same gases that cause the effervescence of most mineral waters. The gases rise to the surface of the vinegar in small bubbles of sufficient strength to cause the current which turns the chalk.

Since the patriotic youth will want to see the American boats win, it will be well for him to remember that the best quality of chalk contains the largest proportion of carbon. It will also prove of advantage to plane the chalk carefully, so as to permit it to glide easily.—Harper's.

The Cat and the Doughnuts.

This is a true story that my grandmother told me about her cat and dog. She used to find the cover off her doughnut jar and also noticed that her doughnuts disappeared.

One day she heard a noise and found that her cat was on the shelf where the doughnuts were kept.

Then it put its paw in the jar and drew out a doughnut and pushed it off the shelf, and the dog, who was looking up at the cat, caught the doughnut in his mouth and ate it.

When they found they were caught they acted very guilty.—Our Four Footed Friends.

A Hole Through Your Hand.

Not a real hole, you know, but just a simple little trick to make you think you see one. It is what the scientific people call an optical illusion.

Roll up a piece of stiff writing paper so as to make a tube about twelve inches in length and one inch in diameter. Hold this close to your right eye with your right hand and keep both eyes wide open.

Now, open your left hand and hold the side of it against the tube about two inches from the far end, and a hole will appear in the middle of that hand.

No Remainder.

As she ought to be.

HAPPINESS IN THE FAMILY.

Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Mother and Daughter.

Mrs. S. Barnum Tells How Her Backache Disappeared and Her Daughter Found Health.

Madoc, Ont., April 27.—(Special)—The hold those standard Canadian remedies, Dodd's Kidney Pills, are obtaining on this community grows stronger day by day. "Tried and found not wanting," is the verdict awarded to them in dozens of cases where those numerous ailments arising from diseased Kidneys have banished the health and threatened the lives of people till Dodd's Kidney Pills have come to their relief.

And as one who has been benefited from Dodd's Kidney Pills recommends them to another and he or she in turn finds relief and health, it is not to be wondered at that whole families unite in singing their praises. This is what the Barnums are doing. Mrs. S. Barnum says:

"I had been troubled with Backache, one of the first symptoms of the painful and dangerous Kidney Diseases. I had been told that Dodd's Kidney Pills were a sure cure, and resolved to try them. The backache soon disappeared, and has not come back. It is a most satisfactory cure.

"My daughter Annie, too, was run down and out of sorts, and subject to pains. Dodd's Kidney Pills had done me so much good I resolved to try them in her case. The result is her pain is gone and she is in good health again."

A Popular American Consul in Canada Says He Knows of Remarkable Cures Wrought by Paine's Celery Compound

The Great Spring Medicine.

The claim that Paine's Celery Compound is the only honest medicine in the world for the cure of rheumatism, neuralgia, nervous and blood diseases, is fully borne out by the strong and convincing letters of testimony received constantly by the proprietors of the popular medicine. Nothing else has ever possessed anything like the power of Paine's Celery Compound to restore a healthy nervous tone to the entire body and to thoroughly cleanse the blood, making it impossible for rheumatism, neuralgia and other troubles to find lodgement in the system. Ministers, professional men generally, newspaper men, public officials and all brain workers, men whose daily outlay of vitality, because of hard, trying, anxious work, is excessive, find renewed nerve strength and vitality in Paine's Celery Compound. General Wm. W. Henry, American Consul in the city of Quebec, says:

"It gives me great pleasure to endorse Paine's Celery Compound both on account of the results obtained from personal use of the remedy and knowledge of the remarkable cures it has performed. I believe it has no equal in curing diseases of the nervous system and building up those who are weak and out of health. It has cured several friends of mine of rheumatism in its worst forms, and I have no hesitancy in recommending it to all afflicted with that disease."

ANOTHER CRISIS

THE present dilemma of the Government is just another chapter inthe political crisis which has long since become a chronic condition. The present situation is without a parallel and His Honor, the Lieut. Governor, finds himself facing a very startling state of affairs.

In the light of recent developments in connection with the land grant to the Columbia and Western Railway we are at last beginning to learn something of the methods of our legislators. The Oliver investigation is throwing considerable light on the matter and the shifting, shuffling behavior of some of the ministers, and their evident reluctance to appear in the witness box only serves to justify the suspicion that there has been a great deal of intrigue carried on of which the public knows nothing.

His Honor in withholding his signature from the cancellation bill is simply compelling the present ministry to place their resignations in his hands, and at the same time is forcing a general election on the province. In our humble opinion His Honor would do a wise act in signing the bill for the reason that the people of British Columbia are going to refuse to permit any such infamous raids on the heritage of the citizens of the province, and are determined to have that land grant cancelled,

The present session has shown conclusively that C. P. R. domination is at an end forever in British Columbia, but no credit for the reformation can be given to any member of the government, as it was only when pushed up into the corner with stern defeat staring them in the face that the cancellation was wrung from them. It is useless for Mr. Prior to draw any herring across the scent and declare that in the event of an appeal to the country this cancellation bill would be the chief plank of his platform, for the people will not allow the wool to be pulled over their eyes so easily. If Col. Prior was cognizant of the particulars of the deal when he took the helm he should have thrown the mate and the steward overboard, and if he was ignorant of those particulars he certainly did not possess that capacity which is needed for the captainship of the ship of state.

It will require considerable explanation to convince the people of South East Kootenay, or indeed the people of any part of the province that it was just the correct thing to appropriate 625,000 acres of land, than which none more valuable can be found in the Dominion of Canada, for the purpose of enriching one of the strongest transportation companies in America. We are finding ourselves face to face with a condition of affairs ruinous to the best interests of the province. Our Government has forfeited the confidence of the people and has done it best to obliterate the word "responsibility," in its relationship to government, from the English language. The recent loan effected by the finance minister is almost expended and the credit of the province was never so poor as at the present moment. Capital is alarmed at the unsettled state of affairs, and the development of the resources of the province is bound to be retarded. Labor troubles and market quotations certainly cannot be controlled by any government, but careful legislation fostered by common sense, sound judgement, and business-like methods would most certainly have an influence strongly in favor of the betterment of our present condition.

The appalling disaster at Frank has awakened in Fernie much sympathy for those who have suffered. None can sympathize so deeply as those who have suffered similarly. The excited condition of the town on Wednesday reminded us strongly of that memorable day nearly a year ago when our own disaster was discussed in hushed tones on every side. We trust that the report of the investigation to-day will justify the resumption of life in the deserted town and that its chief industry may soon be revived again. We meet tonight to take steps towards raising financial assistance for our afflicted friends in our sister coal town and no further appeal is needed to secure a ready and generous response from the citizens of Fernie.

AMENDMENTS INTRODUCED.

At Victoria in The Coal Mines Regulation Act.

An amendment to the Coal Mines Regulation Act has been brought into the house by the provincial secretary, which debars Chinese or other persons unable to read English, from holding any responsible position in or about the mines.

The amendment reads:

"Rule 34. No Chinaman or person unable to speak English shall be appointed to or shall occupy any position of trust or responsibility in or about a mine subject to this act, whereby through his ignorance, carelessness or negligence he might endanger the life or limb of any person employed in or about a mine, viz: as bankmen, onsetter, signalmen, brakesman, furnaceman, engineer or be employed below ground or at a windlass of a sinking-pit."

J. H. Hawthornwaite, member for Nanaimo, has introduced these further important amendments to the act:

"23B. No person shall be employed underground in any coal mine for more than eight hours from bank to bank in every twenty-four hours.

"23C. Where miners or mine laborers are employed underground in mining, digging or getting coal under contract or by agreement at a given, fixed or agreed price for each ton of coal mined or obtained, then the wages earned or accruing to such mine laborers shall be paid in full at periods less frequent than once in every two weeks."

Section 80 of the said act is amended by inserting after sub-section (7) the following sub-section:

"(7a.) Where miners or laborers are employed in mining or getting out coal under contract or by agreement at a given or agreed price for each ton of coal mined or obtained, then the weight of such ton of coal shall not exceed two thousand two hundred and forty pounds."

"Rule 17b. In places where it is found to be not reasonably practicable to constantly keep a reasonable supply of timber in a working place, then it shall be the duty of the owner, agent or manager to employ skilled men (other than the miners or mine labors employed under contract or by agreement in getting or mining coal at a given or agreed price per town in such working place) to properly and safely timber such working places."

MORRISSEY

From Our Own Correspondent.

Superintendent H. F. Martin, returned this week from a trip to Spokane, where he has been on business in connection with the mines.

The company have a large force of men at work building a new trustle to connect with the new coal bins which will shortly be erected.

Townsite Agent Crahan has had a comfortable office erected in Block 19 near when the depot will be situated. It is 18 x 32 and suitably fitted up to meet his requirement. It is now complete and ready for business.

Mr. Harry Oldland, of Jefferson, Penn., who has the contract for the erection of 250 coke ovens at this place, arrived in town on Monday and has put a force of men to work to make preparations for the work of building the ovens.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Fritz Bachor was the scene of a brilliant surprise party on Monday evening last. The young couple, who but recently were united in marriage, were made the recipients of a beautiful sideboard. The evening was spent in various games and dancing.

The Cedar Valley Improvement Co's. mill at the junction was closed down on Monday and Tuesday owing to a breakage in the machinery. The mill has still about ten days cutting on its present stock of logs. Harry Lever, the energetic manager, is negotiating with the C. P. R. for the purchase of quite a large section of timber on the south side of the track and if this deal goes through the mill will have a big season's cut ahead of it.

METHODISM IN EAST KOOTENAY

First Annual Meeting this week in Fernie—Closed by a Successful Banquet.

The Methodist church held the first annual meeting of the new district of East Kootenay in the Fernie Methodist church on Wednesday and Thursday of this week. Rev. S. J. In all there were present six ministers and probationers, besides a number of laymen.

Ten new appointments have beeu added during the year, making a present total of 18. In reviewing the needs of the work, it was deemed advisable to recommend that conference establish three new missions in the district.

Two new Sabbath Schools were established in the district during the year, which together with growth in those already in operation make a present total membership of 380, an increase of 95.

The financial returns for the district made a very creditable showing, there having been raised during the year $6698. Five new churches have been built and prospects are bright for the erection of several more during the coming year.

Four years ago the B. C. conference appointed Rev. Geo. E. Smith to take charge of a mission in Cranbrook and Rev. R. F. Stillman to Fernie. Both stations are now self supporting, besides having four new missions under their supervision: Moyie and Kimberly under the direction of Rev. S. J. Thompson, of Cranbrook; Michel and Morrissey under Rev. R. F. Stillman, Fernie.

W. J. Reid, Cranbrook and W. C. Liphardt, Fernie, were appointed lay delegates to the annual conference which meets in Victoria on May 14th.

The Epworth League of the Fernie Methodist church tendered a banquet to the members of the district meeting in Princess Hall on Thursday evening. About 125 sat down to the table and all thoroughly enjoyed themselves.

Infringement of a Trade Mark

In an action in the High Court of Justice for Ontario, recently tried before Chancellor Boyd, at Toronto, the Slater Shoe Co., and Chas. E. Slater, president of Montreal, makers of the famous Slater Shoe, obtained a judgment forever restraining F. C. Wilkinson, a boot and shoe dealer, of Owen Sound, from advertising, exposing, or offering for sale or selling boots or shoes not made by the Slater Shoe Co., as "Slater Shoes," "Slater Goods" or the Slater Shoe." The Chancellor, also ordered Wilkinson to pay the heavy costs of the action. The Chancellor, after hearing the evidence, decided that no one except the Slater Shoe Co., had a right to use the name "Slater Shoes," "Slater Goods," "The Slater Shoe," or any similar names in connection with boots and shoes, and that Wilkinson had no right to use any name or names in connection with boots and shoes which might enable him to pass of a shoe not of the company's make, as being of their make, nor in any way to reap the benefit of the reputation which the Slater Shoe has acquired throughout the Dominion of Canada.

The Genuine Slater

Is positively the best shoe value offered for sale in Canada. You may include the United States and that will pretty near cover the world for fine shoe making. There are shoes sold elsewhere at $4.50 and $6 a pair that carry no more style, are no better fitting and will not wear as well as the genuine Slater Shoe at $4. "Why is it?" you ask. "Just because they are branded with an American stamp."

JUDGE HOKE

He Disposes of Two Important Cases

[Copyright, 1902, by R. A. Barrett.]

"THIS court havin' come to order and been duly opened," said Judge Hoke, after rapping on the desk before him with the butt of a revolver taken from the drawer, "I will proceed to say that the first case on the docket is that of Joe Shaw versus Bill Thompson. As a case it don't amount to much. It don't amount to much bekase both plaintiff and prisoner are critters of no account and ought to have been run out of the kentry years ago. I shall do all the talkin' myself, and if either one of 'em has hired a shyster lawyer to do any talkin' he's bound to be disapp'inted.

"Let's see what the case amounts to. Joe Shaw is comin' over Lost mountain astraddle of a mule. He says he gave a claim for that mule, but I'll bet ten to one he picked the critter up somewhere on a dark night. He was headed for this town, calkerlatin' the value of that mule would buy him a keg of whisky, when he suddenly meets up with Bill Thompson. It will surprise most of ye to learn that Bill drawed his gun and ordered Joe out of the saddle. In the first place no one around yere ever saw Bill have a weapon of any sort, and in the next place he ain't looked upon as a man of sand. However, he actually leveled a gun at Joe and bluffed him into gettin' down on the ground and givin' up that mule.

"Joe was also heeled, and accordin' to his own statement he let twenty-three good chances of bowlin' Bill over pass him by in order to come to me just at the busiest hour in the Red Dog saloon and demand jestice. When jestice is demanded, I've got to ladle it out. I issued a warrant, had Bill arrested, and an hour ago I heard his statement of the case. He's powerful good at lyin', but now and then he does hit the truth, and I guess he has in this case.

"Jestice ain't sloshin' around with her protectin' arms thrown over everybody. She calkerlates that every man with a gun has got sand enough to protect his own. It's only the man who has forgot his shooter or has run short of cartridges who has any right to holler for the purtection of jestice. It was an even thing between Joe and Bill from the start. Jestice wasn't in it. She wasn't needed. Bill bluffed and Joe wilted. If Joe couldn't call that hand, he ought to have felt doggoned mean to say anything about it. He might have pulled trigger and recovered his own, but he got down and walked seven miles to demand jestice of me. Well, I'm goin' to give it to him, and Bill as well. The verdict of this court is that both critters be turned loose and run into the bushes by an impetuous population, and if either one of them ever dares show his face ag'in in Sandy Bend he'll need a new frame of bones to hang his shirt on. As for the mule in question, he's valued at $10, and he'll be seized upon to pay the costs of bringin' this lamentable case to a legal conclusion.

"The other case is that of Tom Wright versus Jim Renshaw, and it contains a legal p'int or two on which authorities differ. Tom Wright is a-orkin' a claim over on Dead Hoss Hill. He has a cabin and a wife. Where he got that wife or why she ever consented to marry him is a bladder of putty and is known for fifty miles around as 'Slappin' Sal' is none of my bizness. She and Tom was livin' together like two turtle-doves, accordin' to his story, and Tom had made her believe he was the purtiest thing in the kentry, when along comes Jim Renshaw. Jim was wantin' a wife to run his shack, but was too proud and mean to hunt up one in the regular way. He takes a shine to Slappin' Sal,' and to destroy the happiness of that cabin home he says Tom's mouth is too big, his nose is too long, his hair is off color, his teeth are ready to fall out. He gets the wife to takin' advice of the husband's defects, and in half an hour she rises up on her heels and says she won't live with no such critter a minit longer. In the end she goes off with the handsomer man.

"Tom Wright has two guns. He sees his wife walk off with another man. He turns to his desolated hearthstun and sees nothin' left but the ashes of happiness. Does he follow her and open fire on Jim? Does he whoop and howl or bluff? Not any. He lets the pair go in peace and hoofs it across the hills to see me and demand jestice.

"The first p'int of law in this case is, is a bowlegged, slabsided, knock-kneed critter like Tom Wright any legal right to harness up to a woman at all? Six of the shyster lawyers in town say he has, while this court says he hasn't and is prepared to enter a shootin' match to uphold his verdict.

"P'int No. 2 is, Has a wife a legal right to pack her duds and walk off any time she feels she can do better? Ag'in this court is opposed to the opinions of six shysters. They contend not, but my verdict is that she has the right and will be purtected in maintainin' it.

"Havin' now disposed of the p'ints of law, which haven't caused me to lose any sleep, I will dispose of the case—that is, I have disposed of it. When I was over at the jail an hour ago, a purty fair specimen of a man was hangin' around there with a wistful look on his face.

"'What d'ye want?' says I.

"'A wife,' says he.

"'What sort of a wife?'

"'Most anything that kin fry bacon.'

"It strikes me that the best way out of this muddle is to get rid of 'Slappin' Sal,' so I turns her loose and she goes off with the stranger and is three miles away by this time. The plaintiff and defendant will be turned loose after forkin' over the legal costs, and if they want to foller on and get up a row over in Woodchuck county I haven't the slightest objections. Woodchuck is out of my jurisdiction, and the wabble legged dispenser of jestice for that territory kin handle the case to suit himself.

"As the docket is now clear, we will adjourn court and get across the creek in time to witness the hoss race set for 'leven o'clock. I'm bettin' two to one on the spotted hoss, but it don't legally foller that all the rest of ye must foller suit or be guilty of contempt of court. I seek to dispense jestice, not to barrel up the glorious air of freedom and keep my own mouth at the bunghole."

B. & F. BIBLE SOCIETY

THE BIBLE THE LARGEST CIRCULATED BOOK IN THE WORLD.

Remarkable Work Done by the British and Foreign Bible Society, Which Has Just Celebrated Its Centenary—Printed in a Babel of Tongues—Society's Small Beginnings—Its Circulation Agents.

Of all the books that season by season are poured out from the teeming presses of the world to feed the voracious appetite of the reading public, about one out of three survives a three years' term of life. Of all the books that have ever created a record "boom" few have reached a sale beyond 500,000 copies, and that is enough to make any publisher gasp with a kind of unholy joy, as of a poor man who suddenly finds himself in the presence of a gold mine.

Yet there is one book whose sales are recorded in figures which are almost greater than the average human mind can grasp without a mental dizziness, which has circulated not by the ordinary thirteen to the dozen, not by hundreds, not by thousands, not by millions, but by a book so popular that it is read in the palace, in the manor, in the villa, in the cottage, in the hovel, in the prison; a book so fascinating that men have given their lives to sell copies to others who have not yet read it.

It is a book of no local interest, but it so stirs the heart, whether it beats beneath a white or black or yellow skin, that it has been translated not only into every European language, not only into the chief families of languages spoken by the great races of the East and West, but into strange barbaric tongues, which have never before been crystallized into written shape, into dialects spoken in the bush and in the jungle, in the torrid zones, and in the Arctic regions.

Small Beginnings.

A century ago "about three hundred respectable persons of different denominations" assembled in the old London Tavern at Bishopsgate. Although the country at that time was in a panic and arming itself to the teeth at the prospect of a great French invasion, these "respectable persons" were busy with a work of peace. On that day the British and Foreign Bible Society came into existence. Granville Sharp was in the chair, William Wilberforce was the orator, and Zachary Macaulay was on the first committee—three brothers in arms who were to win the greatest victory of peace in the annals of our country—the emancipation of the slave—and who were equally zealous in this work of faith.

First in Welsh.

The first task of the Bible Society was to issue a large edition of the Scriptures in Welsh, so that the Welsh people who had hardly been able to obtain them in their own tongue might now have the privilege for which many pious people had long yearned. An eye-witness has described the reception of these Welsh New Testaments when completed in the town of Bala: "When the arrival of the cart which carried the first load was announced the Welsh peasants went out in crowds to meet it, welcomed it as the Israelites did the ark of old, drew it into the town, and eagerly bore off every copy as rapidly as they could be dispersed."

The First Year's Work.

During the first year's work of the Bible Society they spent £691, and thought they had done a great thing. So they had, but they were to do more. Last year they spent £241,-143, and since the foundation of the society they have expended £13,000,-000. Those are large figures, but when translated into numbers of books they are bigger still. The society last year issued over five million copies of the Scriptures, and since its commencement a total of one hundred and eighty millions. Think of it! Ponder over it! 180,-000,000. Seven thousand volumes are sent out from London every day of the week, through every week of the year. The output from all the society's depots, including London, averages 16,000 copies per day. Pile up the issues of one day and they would reach higher than the cross on St. Paul's.

A Babel of Tongues.

Where do all these Bibles and Testaments go? Who buys them? Who reads them? Who pays for them? The answers to these questions are a chapter of modern romance. To know where they go, pay a visit to the packing rooms of the society's depot in Queen Victoria street, London. It is a lesson in geography. The oblong wooden boxes, lined and strongly bound with tin, are labelled with names of places "over the hills and far away"—names which conjure up the glamor of the East, names which bring back memories of old renown and ancient faiths, names which call up visions of horrid bloodshed and dark fanaticism, names of the New World and the Old, of the East and of the West, of the civilized world and of savage lands.

Look inside the covers of these books. What a babel of tongues is here! What strange and unfamiliar characters! Here are pages that read from right to left, from the last line upwards to the first, from the top straight down in vertical columns. Here are 60 different alphabets and two hundred different languages. These little books, penny Testaments and tenpenny Bibles represent the work of hundreds of scholars and hundreds of missionaries and hundreds of natives who throughout the course of a century, in the service of the Bible Society and with the zeal of faith, have translated with painful labor the long tale of the Scriptures.

How They Are Circulated.

And how are these books circulated, how paid for? As a rule Scriptures are granted to Foreign Missions on "missionary terms"—that is to say, the Bible Society sends out the books needed, free of cost and carriage paid, to missionaries at their distant stations; in return the missions remit to the Bible House any proceeds arising from copies which they sell after deducting the expenses of circulation. Only a small proportion of the huge cost of production is received back by sales. To take one instance, each copy of the first Ganda Bible for the people of Uganda, who now number 30,000 Christians, cost the society 6s. 4d. to print and bind, and 10s. 4d. more to convey from London to Uganda—the carriage for hundreds of miles from the coast being on the heads of negro porters. The natives paid their fraction of the cost of these copies in cowrie shells—which do not go very far when translated into English money!

The Bible Society goes on extending its business, cheerfully piling up enormous losses. The greater the losses the more the society is pleased, because it means that Bibles are having a larger circulation among very poor peoples. Nevertheless the society does not encourage giving the volumes indiscriminately free of charge, except in cases of destitution or misfortune. The average man who makes a little self-sacrifice to buy his Bible values it all the more.

All over the world the society has its agents, its colporteurs, its Bible-women. They are not missionaries in the ordinary sense of the word, they are forbidden to preach or teach any creed of any denomination. Their duty is to sell the Scriptures, and in this faith they wander to the uttermost parts of the earth with their little book. Among the Arabs of Morocco, along the valley of the Tigris and in the footsteps of St. Paul, along the highland borders of Tibet, over the Russian steppes, through Siberian snows, among the lumber camps of Ottawa, among the Australian aborigines, in the heart of Darkest Africa, among the people of every race of mankind, the agents of the Bible Society find their way and sell their books.

Martyrdom Is in It.

It is hard work, and martyrdom is sometimes the end of it. But though they may be scorned, beaten, tortured, frozen, starved, killed, the sacred little book is sold, and keeps on selling, one copy being like a grain of mustard-seed, so that where one has been thousands follow. Yet though the Bible Society has circulated one hundred and eighty millions of the Scriptures in languages spoken by seven-tenths of the population of the world, the circulation will increase by leaps and bounds when it reaches those other three-tenths, who represent some four hundred and fifty millions of people, into whose speech no portion of the Scriptures has yet been translated. There is plenty of work to be done, therefore, and much money needed to do it.

At the inaugural meeting to begin its Centenary celebration, the society asked for 250,000 guineas "to meet urgent and pressing claims of expansion."—London Mail.

Beautiful New Leather From India.

Northern India, the storehouse for so many strange articles of commerce has again opened the doors of its treasure chambers to put a new product on the market.

When the nabobs, rajahs and potentates gathered at Delhi from all over India to attend the durbar, to hear Edward VII. of England proclaimed Emperor and to join in the celebration of the great event there came one rajah from the back of beyond, bringing presents of all manner of strange things to the Viceroy, Lord Curzon. Among other gifts were a large number of whole skins of beautifully tanned leather.

The source of the supply was not then divulged; neither was the process by which the skins were prepared explained, and the mystery altogether created a great deal of interest. Tough, and at the same time almost as flexible as rubber, the quality of the skins denoted the highest perfection of the tanner's art. Belts and other articles used for wear or ornament were made and extensively worn, while the product was named, in honor of the Viceroy, Curzon leather.

By some art in the tanning the outer surface of the skin is colored in a great variety of tints. The basic color is pearl grey, while little corrugations on the surface reflect, when a piece of the goods is moved about in the light, a dozen different colors. At one time the piece will take on the coppery tints of the sunset, at another brilliant greens show up, then copper green and gold intermingled, and still again the appearance is similar to that of a piece of frosted silver.

The possibilities offered for making the beautiful stuff into wristbags, belts, automobile bags and other articles for feminine use are unlimited, and already manufacturers are taking advantage of their opportunities.

Famous Shepherd Dead.

The death is announced, says Lloyd's Weekly, at Merton, Norfolk, of John Day, who may be regarded as the most famous shepherd in England. His forefathers had for many generations been shepherds, and his first engagement was with Mr. Jonas Webb, who died in 1862, and was the founder of the Babraham Southdowns. Quitting his service Day became head shepherd to Lord Walsingham, and had charge of his famous Southdowns for 40 years. Day's home is full of certificates and diplomas presented by the Smithfield Club and the Royal Agricultural Society, while he captured a vast collection of champion trophies and cups with Lord Walsingham's noted Southdowns. This magnificent prize stock were shown in Holland, France, Prussia, Austria, and other countries, where at agricultural exhibitions Day's face was quite familiar, and many crowned heads had presented him with medals, duly inscribed, that his family will treasure as heirlooms. He had reached the ripe age of 81.

BRONCHIAL COLDS AND CHEST PAINS

There are many reasons why you should use Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine in preference to any other treatment for diseases of the throat and lungs. Of these the most important one is the fact that it has been tested for years and absolutely proven its right to first position.

Nearly everybody knows of the remarkable value of turpentine and linseed as remedial agents. They have been so combined with half a dozen other ingredients in Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine as to form a most thoroughly effective and at the same time pleasant medicine.

As is frequently the case with an unusually successful article, Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine is imitated. There are now hosts of preparations with names similar to this, and some even go so far as to imitate the bottle and wrapper. It therefore becomes necessary for you to be very careful when buying. Insist on seeing the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase on the wrapper.

We know that Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine will not disappoint you, because it has stood the test of time, and the sales, which are at least triple that of any similar preparation, are steadily increasing year by year.

As a positive cure for croup, bronchitis, asthma, throat troubles, and severe coughs and colds, Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine has a reputation which cannot be stolen by the cheap and off injurious cough mixtures which are offered in place of it by some dealers.

Even the consumptive, who has reached the latter stages of his insidious disease, finds ease and comfort in the use of this preparation, while it is impossible to estimate the countless number of less severe cases which it has actually cured. Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, 25 cents a bottle. Family size, three times as large, 60 cents. At all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

He was a nephew of John Morrison, better known as 'The Song Smith of Harris,' and, like him, was endowed with poetic genius. He was well educated, an accomplished musician, and an excellent Gaelic scholar.

There has died at Newmilns, Ayrshire, the oldest parochial schoolmaster in Scotland, Mr. John Lyon Campbell, who was in his ninety-fourth year. He began his studies in Glasgow university as long ago as 1822, and acted as a parochial schoolmaster from 1857 till 1876, when he retired.

For the first time the electors of Scotland exceed in number those of Ireland. In 1902 the Scottish electors numbered 705,203 and the Irish 721,659. This year the Scottish electors number 712,266 and the Irish 711,761. Yet Ireland sends 103 members to parliament and Scotland only 72.

The motor-car race, or Derby, as it is called, for the Gordon Bennett cup, in Ireland, on July 2, will be over a level course of a hundred miles, the course forming a triangle between the towns of Naas, Abbeyleix and Carlow. A bill permitting the high rate of speed has passed the House of Lords.

In the hills of Donegal a new industry is taking root—the manufacture of carpets by hand. In their method of production they largely follow the well-known Turkish and Persign articles, but will have distinctive design and color value of their own, which, combined with the special textile quality due to production by hand, will, it is hoped, secure them a good market and bring a beneficial stream of money into this wild district.

This murderer, Man Ling Jin, was decoyed into Snuntch Hsien by a man whose father he had murdered, and when he confessed to so many crimes it was decided that decapitation was too lenient a punishment and he was crucified. He was nailed by his hands and feet to a wooden cross and placed on one of the city bridges as a warning to malefactors. He lingered for three days, when he succumbed to his terrible sufferings. After death he was decapitated.

GAMBLING RAID.

PROVINCIAL POLICE MAKE A BIG HAUL.

Three Hundred Persons Surrounded in Hotel Du Canada, Winnipeg, on a Sunday Morning and Many are Arrested - A Great Scramble to Escape.

Seven provincial constables, under Chief Elliott and A. McMicken, police magistrate for the city of Winnipeg and the province, swooped down on the Hotel du Canada shortly after 2 o'clock on Sunday morning. The posse of police entered by the front door and discovered nearly 300 gamesters throwing dice in the fascinating game known in sporting vernacular as "crap shooting." Three hundred scared men can make considerable noise and confusion if they all go mad in a second, and those who were there say that this is exactly what happened. As soon as the alleged gamblers understood the situation there was a wild scramble for back entrances and windows. Several jumped through the latter, kicking frames and glass before them and out of the large number, estimated at 300 only between seventy and eighty were caught.

The seven policemen were hardly sufficient for the purpose and when they had some seventy frightened captives huddled together in a corner, all trying to plead innocence of gambling at the same time they realized the necessity of a patrol wagon. Silence was at last demanded and Mr. McMicken started business on one of the pool tables where he had the alleged offenders led to him one by one. After securing their names he accepted bail for them, and they were released.

One man who got away was a nervous individual, and he jumped through one of the windows on the west side of the hotel. On getting outside he was so wrought up over the shock that he did a marvelous acrobatic stunt and jumped nearly seven feet to the foot of the fire escape on the Merchants bank. He scrambled up this until he got to the top story and there, as he could get no higher without flying, and as he was afraid to go down he crawled into the bank and came down by the stairs. The implicated ones include men of nearly all walks of life, old and young, rich and poor.

MAD MULLAH DEFEATED.

British Force Kills two Thousand of His Followers.

Advices from Aden, Arabia, say: Brig.-Gen. Manning, after an engagement with the Mad Mullah's forces, has relieved Col. Cobbe, near Gumburru, Somaliland, 45 miles westward from Galadi.

About 2,000 of the Mad Mullah's men were killed.

The British loss is not known.

The Somalis losses are reported to have been enormous. The Mullah's forces are reported to aggregate from 3,000 to 4,000 mounted men and about 8,000 spearmen.

On April 25 Major Gough, in command of a mobile column, engaged the enemy near Danop. He lost fifteen killed, including two officers and four officers wounded. The enemy had two hundred killed.

Preserve Declaration of Independence

A dispatch from Washington, D.C., says: The declaration of independence is to be seen no more by the public. An order has been issued that henceforth the historic manuscript shall be kept under lock and key in a great fire and light proof safe. The declaration will never be exhibited again at any of the great international fairs.

This decision is the result of an examination of the document by a committee of the American Academy of Science now in session in this city, who acted at the instance of Secretary Hay, whose attention hah been called to the sad state of the famous document of Andrew Allan, librarian for the state department.

Most of the text of the declaration is still legible, but only one or two of the signatures can be made out. There is only a trace of the autograph of John Hancock, the first to sign.

The committee recommended that the declaration be shut in an air and light tight case and kept from exhibition.

The sculling race between Tresidder and Harry Pearce on the Paramatta river championship course—3 330 yards—for the championship of Australia, was the first big match rowed on that side of the world for quite a long time. In spite of Pearce's performances at home and in Canada, it was considered by no means a certainty that he would defeat Tresidder. After a most exciting race, during which Pearce led for the greater part of the distance, Tresidder finally won by two lengths. William Beach, ex-champion of the world, who acted as umpire during the race, expresses the opinion that if Towns and Tresidder meet, the latter will surely defeat the champion. Tresidder, who is 6 feet 2 inches in height, and scales over 182 pounds, comes from Newcastle, N.S.W.

Mrs. Cook, wife of the British governor of North Borneo, has an infant rhinoceros for a pet. It strayed out of the jungle one morning and was captured. It follows Mrs. Cook about like a dog.

NEWS OF BARR COLONY.

Colonists are not Satisfied With Their Leader.

The all-British colony under the leadership of Rev. Mr. Barr, is in a fair way to become wrecked before they get onto the land. Trouble commenced on board the steamship. The colonists complained of overcrowding, poor food, and excessive charges by Mr. Barr. Arriving at Saskatoon conditions became worse, Mr Barr proving himself entirely unfitted to control such a vast undertaking. Several meetings were held, which resulted in Mr. Barr promising better things, taereby pacifying the immigrants temporarily. But finally the immigration department stepped in and has practically taken charge of the movement. The following is a report of a meeting of the colonists, held on April 23:

'Another meeting was held of the Barr colonists this afternoon. It has resulted in a considerable clearance of the atmosphere. The most pressing of the problems are at least in a fair way to be adjusted. Mr. Barr is still nominally leader, but he has little authority over his people. At the meeting this afternoon he did not appear. Mr. Speers was the controlling speaker.

The breakdown of Mr. Barr's organization is evident to the gopernment, and the immigration department, which has all along been ready for such a contingency, has had to come to the rescue. Three things were dealt with by Mr. Speers at the meeting—employment for men without means to get to the colony, transport for men who need help to get there, and the futility of men going out to the colony in the expectation of securing work. Eighty men said they had less than $50, half of these were married, and ten of them had their wives and families here. One hundred and forty were in need of immediate employment.

Mr. Speers has organized a government employment bureau. He has promised help to transport to the colony those to whom the cost of getting thither would certainly cripple their progress. Employment on railway construction has been secured in Carrot River for those needing immediate employment; work in the timber woods at Prince Albert has also been obtained. The feeling among the colonists is more confident than at any time since their arrival. Their trust in the good will and the power of the immigration department to help them is absolute. Now that the government officials have stepped into the breach, they believe all will be well. Rev. Mr. Lloyd stated at the meeting that he would ask Mr. Barr to go out to the colony at once. He himself will stay at Saskatoon, by the colonists' request, till the last of them have left for the reserve.

A London cable says: The Critic, a weekly newspaper, makes an attack upon Rev. Mr. Barr, founder of the All-British Colony in the Northwest. It calls Mr. Barr an "out-of-work parson" and a "religious tout" and generally condemns him and his scheme. The result is that Mr. Barr is going to enter an action for libel. This means that Canadian officials here will be called as witnesses.

A dispatch from Minneapolis, says: Eugene A. Robb, an Englishman, and his son, who is a midshipman in the British navy, are here, en route to California on a queer mission. Mr. Robb is going to California for the express purpose of buying and shipping to England several million lady bugs, or at least as many as he can get. His immediate objective point is Salinas, Cal., where he has hope of filling the whole order because one of the biggest fruit-growers there has offered to furnish Robb all the ladybugs he can carry away for the trouble of catching them.

Said Mr. Robb: "For the last year or two English rose gardens have been infested with a specially destructive insect that goes after the buds and destroys them before they open. Every conceivable thing has been tried to kill these insects off, they continue to multiply at a rate that threatens to kill every rose tree in the south of England.

"Of the many devices tried to keep these bugs down, ladybugs have been the only successful one."

WHEAT—The American crop prospect is probably the most favorable on record, and the acreage is certainly the largest on record, and an immense yield is suggested. European crops, on the other hand, are not promising well, and it seems to be a foregone conclusion that the aggregate European crop this year will fall much short of last year's yield. Visible stocks in America, on ocean passage and in Europe are all much under what they were at the same time last year, or the year before, and the consumption of wheaten products continues on a large scale. Present prices of wheat are neither high nor low, but should the coming months develop increasing damage to this year's crops, prices would easily go some higher, and on the other hand if the crops continue to do well and the inferior crops get no worse present prices will be high enough to perhaps a little too high. The movement of wheat in the states continues to be larger than at same time last year, showing that prices are satisfactory to farmers and outlook for new crops good. The export demand during the past week has been very good. Argentine shipments are not so heavy as anticipated, but the Black Sea and the Danube continue to put large quantities afloat to importing European countries.

LOCAL SITUATION.—During the past week our local market has practically started into new life owing to the opening of navigation at Fort William and Port Arthur. There has been a good demand for spot wheat, principally of the higher grades, and latterly spot and delivery as far ahead as first half May have commanded the same prices. Since Monday the value of No. 1 hard has stood around 73¾c to 77c, except Wednesday, 76½c was the best. At the close of business Friday prices were: No. 1 hard, 77c; 1 northern, 75½c; 2 northern, 73¼c; 3 northern, 70¼c; and No. 4 wheat; 63; spot, April or first half May delivery. For all May delivery, 1 hard 76¾c, 1 Northern 75¼c; 2 northern, 73; 3 northern 70c and No. 4 wheat, 65¾c, all in store Fort William or Port Arthur, Fort William.

CURIOSITIES OF SOUND.

Every Noise Has its Corresponding Note on the Musical Scale.

In very high or mountainous regions sounds become diminished in loudness so that a conversation cannot be carried on in an ordinary tone of voice. In mines or in a diving bell the reverse of this is the case. Speech becomes so startling that it must be carried on in whispers to be at all endurable to the ear. Sounds of all kinds become musical if the vibrations of air are uniform and rapid enough. It is said that the puffs of an engine would make a tremendous organ peal of music if they could be made to attain the rapidity of fifty or sixty a second. Everything in nature has its keynote, as it were, and attuned to one particular musical sound. This fact can be very easily verified in everyday life. Stand near an open piano and speak in an ordinary tone. While speaking you will suddenly hear a string within reverberate to your voice. The tick of a watch, the sound of every human voice, the bark of a dog, the mew of a cat, the noise of a wagon, the roll of thunder, the fall of rain, the running of water—in fact, everything about us can easily be placed by an attentive ear on its proper musical note, one of the sounds of the scale. This is a most interesting experiment and easily verified.

It is said that the ear can distinguish eleven octaves of sound; but, as a rule, those made by quick, short vibrations are more easily conveyed. For instance, the whir of a locust makes a more distinct impression than the sighing of the wind through the trees. A whirlwind in its approach is noiseless. It is only when it strikes some obstacle that the volume of sound becomes terrific to us. Then we receive the secondary shorter waves from the destruction of this obstacle. Tyndall says all friction is rhythmic. Flames are notoriously sensitive to sound. They will bend and flicker and even respond with a leap of quivering light to a high, shrill sound. This is another interesting experiment. If we use a glass tube with a small jet of gas, by lowering or raising it to certain points we can cause it to shriek out shrilly or to answer sympathetically to its own keynote when sung or spoken by the voice.

If we could only hear the roll of the vast oceans in harmony all around us in our everyday life, we could say with truth, indeed, what the poet only imagined:

"There's not the smallest orb which thou beholdest but in its orbit like an angel sings, still quiring to the young eyed cherubim."

The Shepherd and His Flock.

A certain good bishop was in Italy for his health, and while walking in the country one day he met a small girl who was tending some pigs. The animals were giving her a great deal of trouble, and the good bishop offered to stay and watch the ones that were grunting and rooting in a ditch while the little shepherdess went to catch two runaways that had strayed from the fold. When she came back, the reverend gentleman stroked the unkempt curly head of the child and asked her how much she earned by her hard work and was told that she received 4 soldi a day.

"Do you know," said he, "that I, too am a shepherd? But I earn much more than you."

"Ah, yes," answered the little peasant, "but, no doubt, you tend many more pigs than I do."

Curious Time Recorder.

A naturalist while visiting Great Sangir, one of those islands of the Indian ocean known as the Celebes, or Spice islands, found a curious time recorder lodged at the house of a rajah. Two bottles were firmly lashed together and fixed in a wooden frame. A quantity of black sand ran from one bottle into the other in just half an hour, and when the upper bottle was empty the frame was reversed. Twelve short sticks marked with notches from 1 to 12 were hung upon a string. A hook was placed between the sticks bearing the number of notches corresponding to the hour last struck and the one to be struck next. The sentry announced the time by striking the hours on a large gong.

The Number Seven.

The ancients believed and taught that seven planets ruled the world and its inhabitants, thus accounting for the seven days of the week, the seven holes in the head, the seven colors of the spectrum and the seven senses. The superstition attaching to the seventh daughter of a seventh daughter endows such a person with magical gifts and unlimited good luck.

Among noted events and things that bear this mystical number are the Seven Days' war, the great conflict for German supremacy, the seven churches of Asia, the seven sleepers of Ephesus and the seven wonders of the world.

The Busy Man—Pleasant and Boreson are coming to visit me next week. What shall I do with them? I have so little time.

LIBERAL ASSOCIATION

The following new members were proposed: J. Elliott, E. Hazelwood, Richard McClure, Dr. Morrison and J. Dufore.

A communication from the Rossland Liberal Association was read in which the idea of forming an Interior Association to be composed of the various Liberal clubs in south eastern B.C. was advanced.

In reference to this matter the following resolution was passed:

Resolved that this association endorses the suggestion made by the Rossland Liberal association re holding a convention in Nelson on May 6th for the purpose of forming an Interior Association to be composed of the Liberal clubs of S. E. British Columbia and would recomend that the Liberal association of Revelstoke be included amongst the number and that the delegates from this association be instructed to support the applications of any other association from the interior of the province who might wish to join.

It is felt that by the formation of an Interior Association the Liberal clubs in the mining sections of B.C. will be able to work more in harmony one with the other and at a provincial convention will be able to bring a solid phalanx in support of any of the vital questions which affect us in the interior.

Mr. O. N. Ross gave notice of motion that at the next meeting he would move that the annual fee of the association be increased.

The general expression of opinion seemed to be that the present sum of $1 was entirely inadequate and if the Liberal club of Fernie was to take any active part in the affairs of the party and send its delegate to conventions this amount must be materially increased.

The matter of holding another provincial convention was introduced and it was moved by Dr. Higgins and seconded by R. Coulthard that the secretary be instructed to request the provincial executive to call a convention at Revelstoke at an early date. It was felt that owing to the turn affairs had taken in Victoria an election in the near future was not at all improbable and it was necessary that the Liberal party should be prepared for it by revising its platform in a few particulars which might now be considered out of date and to take some active stand upon the silver-lead question. Any lines of cleavage at present existing could probably be adjusted and the party go to the country united on all issues. The meeting adjourned after the motion was passed.

BOARD OF TRADE MEETING

Frank, April 30, 1903.

Fernie Board of Trade

We would gratefully thank you for any financial assistance yon can render in our emergency.

S. W. CHAMBERS
Pres. Frank Board of Trade.

Immediate action was taken by the Fernie Board. Dodgers were distributed calling a mass meeting for tonight at 7:30 in Joyce's hall to consider the question of raising relief for th s in distress.

Rev. R. F. Stillman leaves for Victoria on Tuesday to attend the Methodist conference. Mr. W. C. Liphardt, who has been appointed to represent the district, at that meeting, will accompany him.

J. W. Fraser of Frank, registered at the Royal last evening. He gives a vivid description of the awful disaster. He got up immediately after the first slide, which preceded the second by about 10 minutes.

Wild ducks in countless numbers are seen these nights flying around the coke ovens, drawn thither, no doubt, by the heat and the light of the ovens. The ducks are on their way north, and seem glad of a rest on their long trip. Several sports have been out after them with their guns, and they report very satisfactory results. Some very curious traits are noticed on the part of the birds. Several have been seen to dart into the coke ovens, and others fly against overhanging wires, and are picked up dead.

Mr. W. B. Ganong deposited $150 with the C. P. R. this week to secure a special train to Frank on Sunday, as a large number of Fernie citizens are anxious to see the wonderful sight at Frank. Mr. Ganong has since been informed by the C.P.R. officials that they will be unable to run the special as the Government has forbidden anyone going to Frank. Considerable disappointment will be felt by those who were anxious to go tomorrow.

Tennis Meeting

A meeting of those interested in tennis was held in Mr. A. H. Cree's office at 8:30 last evening, when it was decided to organize a club, and the following officers were elected:—Pres., C. P. Higgins; Secy, N. E. Suddaby. A committee was appointed to locate suitable courts, and draft by-laws for the club. A meeting will be held on Wednesday evening next at 8:30, in A. H. Cree's office, to which all interested in tennis are urgently requested to be present.

KILLED BY DYNAMITE

TWO GREEKS MEET A DREADFUL FATE AT ELKO ON MONDAY.

Employed on the G. N. R.—Coroner's Inquest—Men Disobeyed Orders in Thawing the Explosive

On Monday morning a fearful explosion occurred at Elko near a rock-cut work by which two Greeks, named Geo. Maharras and Geo. Buckas were instantly killed.

Coroner H. H. Trites received a wire notifying him of the disaster in time to catch the train at 9:30 in the morning and he held an inquest the same day. The inquest brought out the following facts:

Twenty Greeks were employed at this cut under foreman Galligher. These two when they started on the job represented to Galligher that they were experienced powder men and they were given this responsible position after a thorough examination on the part of the foreman had proved that they understood their business. They also were the only two men in the gang who understood English.

On the morning in question they were ordered to bring 15 sticks of dynamite from the powder house situated quarter of a mile from the scene of operations. The powder men had been accustomed to thaw the sticks at a camp fire near the rock cut by placing them in cans of hot water, but this morning they disobeyed orders and took about 50 sticks and instead of going to the camp fire they went to their cabin situated some distance in another direction, to thaw the dynamite at the stove. The morning was raw and cold, which fact doubtless explains the reason for their disobedience.

Shortly afterwards a terrific roar announced to the frightened workmen and the alarmed village that a dreadful explosion had occurred. The dynamite had gone off presumably while the men were thawing it at the stove. A hurried examination revealed the fact that both men had been killed instantly. One of them was found with his head nearly severed from his body while the other had part of his head entirely blown off. The cabin was completely wrecked and its contents were scattered everywhere. About 15 sticks of the explosive that was well wrapped up miraculously withstood the concussion and were picked up afterwards. A badly twisted frying pan was found which went to show that the unfortunate men had probably been warming the explosive in it at the time of the accident.

The evidence of the foreman showed that these men well understood the responsibility of their work. He had them under an experienced man for a few days after they went on the job and during that time they proved themselves to be thoroughly efficient and trustworthy. A verdict in accordance with the above facts was rendered.

The bodies were buried at the Elko cemetery on Monday afternoon. The Greeks recognize none but their own form of worship and they were anxious to send the bodies to Spokane for interment but the expense attached to such a plan was shown to be heavy and they consented to the above arrangement.

COMMISSION'S REPORT.

The Provincial Mining Association have published the report of the Conciliation Committee through whose efforts the late strike in the Crow's Nest Collieries were brought to a successful termination. In part it is as follows:—

"The commission organized for the work Monday morning, March 9th, President Keen, of the association, acting as chairman and W. G. Gaunce being elected secretary. The situation was found to be very serious over 1,300 men being out on strike, and expressing confidence in the justice of their position. The employing company, on the other hand, expressed equal assurance of the tenability of its positiou, and no thought of concession was anywhere apparent. The gravity of the situation and the effect of the industrial disturbance became daily and hourly more impressed upon the commission by the receipt of telegrams and otherwise of its far reaching results. From the mining and smelting industries of Rossland, Nelson, Trail and the Boundary district, came reliable news of distress and injury, mines and smelters being closed, and large forces of men being thrown out of employment by the cessation of the fuel supply from this point. The commission early recognized the heavy responsibility of the task imposed upon it and set to work with the conviction that tact and patient effort alone could relieve the situation and bring about what was highly desirable—a lasting peace founded on equitable terms.

"The coal company afforded the commission every facility to get at the facts of the case so far as the wages paid was concerned, giving it free access to the company's books; while the local union represented through their executive and the district union executive, met the commission in a most trustful and becoming spirit and pledged assistance in the work undertaken. Mr. G. F. Dougherty, president of the district union No. 6, W. F. of M., was present the entire time, advising the committee of the striking miners in their deliberations, and while showing himself the spokesman and champion of organized labor, revealing himself at the same time as the friend of justice to all. His evident devotion to the cause entrusted to him must have made every member of the executive his trusty admirer, even as it made every member of the commission his friend.

"The alleged causes of the strike were multiplied and may be summarized briefly as follows: A distrust of the company's management, quite as much that of the company's inferior, as of its superior officers; a failure on the part of the company to recognize the different local and district unions, and to treat with their officers and committees; the disinclination of the company to sell or lease lands at Morrissey and Michel to the unions upon which to erect places to meet; a system of espionage in the various local and district unions practised by the company; the system of back-hand labor in vogue and the existence of a definitely arranged wage-scale whereby men were unable to earn equal wages. Lesser subjects of complaint were washhouse charges, tare of cars and conditions of management which made earning capacity of the miner ineffective. The eight and one half hour day required of the men in underground work was also a cause of complaint.

The commission held thirty four sessions of its entire body, and many interviews through sub-committee, with the management on one hand and with the men on the other; made a visit to the Coal Creek mines, and looked into the matter of complaint as to the size and weight of cars and rules governing washhouses and lamps, and examined on request of the district executive commiitee thirty-one witnesses under oath.

"The result of the commission's investigations justified the position taken by the men in some matters but not in others. Your commission believes that in the aggregate good wages are being paid by the company to the miners and employees outside of the coke oven men and further more believes that with the amended practices in view and promised by the company the former will be more equitably distributed and the wages of the coke oven men increased.

"From time to time during the progress of the work the district executive committee and the mine management were brought together through the medium of this commission, and feature after feature of the causes of irritation were discussed. The entire matter was finally adjusted, and resolved into an agreement between the contending parties, duly signed on March 30th by John H. Tonkin, general manager; Thos R. Stockett, jr. general superintendant; representing the Coal Co. and Geo. F. Dougherty, president Canadian association, district No. 6 W.F. of M.; Phillip Christopher, president of district union No. 7 W.F. of M.; Wm. H. Evans, John E. Ryan, and Henry S. Bell, representing the miners. The agreement was duly witnessed by the entire membership of the conciliation committee. Afterwards it was signed by the remaining five members of the executive.

"It will be observed from the text of the agreement: (a) That a definite understanding between the parties has been arranged. (b) That several matters of complaint have been redressed. (c) That the unions have been fully recognized, and that as a result intercourse between the men and the management will be hereinafter facilitated. (d) That a fixed wage scale and term of agreement have been reached which promises prolonged peace and improved conditions (e) That the usefulness of your association has been fully demonstrated."

STARTLING EVIDENCE

REVELATION IN THE S. E. KOOTENAY LAND SCANDAL.

Details of Gigantic Steal made Known—Members of Government and Legislature Under a Cloud.

The Oliver investigation commission appointed to look into the Columbia and Western Land Grant question has during the past week been hard at work securing important evidence from members of the old Dunsmuir government and W. J. Taylor of the law firm of Eberts and Taylor. Last Saturday the first sensational evidence came out before the committee, and since then every day adds much to the long tale of corruption enveloping the whole transaction.

Ex-premier Dunsmuir was the man who started the ball rolling. He was in the witness stand and under the pointed examination of Oliver facts were disclosed which told of a plot to rob the country on a wholesale plan.

He had been asked by Oliver what caused the cancellation of the order-in-council making the grant of blocks 4,593 and 4,594 in lieu of the earned lands properly contiguous to the Columbia & Western line.

This question he refused to answer, but being pressed, he said:

"It was in consequence of statements made by honorable Mr. Wells upon his return from Montreal, where he had gone to see Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, and when he expected to make delivery of the grants."

The statement he preferred that Mr. Wells should communicate to the committee, so Mr. Wells was recalled and was asked to give the facts.

Wells who was obviously embarrassed, declined to answer. It was an executive matter, he explained, and as such, strictly privileged.

Then he was pressed to say if he had known of any reason before he went to Montreal sufficient to prevent the carrying out of the proposed arrangement.

He confessed he had not.

Had he considered the information he obtained in Montreal of such a nature as to justify him in refusing completion of the pending statement?

The chief commissioner answered that he had.

Then it was not an executive matter, but developed out of a conversation in Montreal?

It was, said Wells, but that was a confidential conversation.

Mr. Oliver appealed to the chairman that such a communication could not be privileged.

The chief commissioner still refused to talk.

"Then I'll tell it myself," said Mr. Dunsmuir.

He explained that the information had first been received by him from Prentice, to whom the chief commissioner had imparted it. Afterwards, Mr. Wells himself had fully confirmed and repeated the statement at his (Mr. Dunsmuir's) house. It was to the effect that while he was in Montreal discussing with Sir Thomas Shaughnessy the matter of these grants, he had been visited at the Windsor hotel by Mr. W. J. Taylor, of the firm of Eberts & Taylor, of which the attorney-general is the senior member. Mr. Taylor had pressed him to give up the deed or grants, completing the settlement desired, to the C.P.R. The promise was given that if he would make delivery he would himself receive some 30,000 acres, it being arranged to form a private land company of 20 men to take advantage of the opportunity of the grant, those 20 including two members of the legislature, besides ministers of the crown.

It was in consequence of this information that Mr. Wells had considered there was too great an element of danger in his proceeding further in the matter and he had returned to Victoria, bringing the grants back with him. This information had subsequently been reported to the executive and fully discussed at the meeting when the cancellation was made by order-in-council.

Mr. Dunsmuir having made this statement, Wells was recalled and fully corroborated the startling information.

On Monday the Lieutenant Governor, Sir Henri Joly, formally assented to all the bills passed this session, including No. 16, the famous cancellation bill.

Premier Prior moved that the house adjourn for a week to give the investigation committee a better opportunity of prosecuting its work. Notwithstanding some opposition from several members the motion readily passed as did another empowering Mr. Oliver to employ counsel to assist the commission. During the discussion Smith Curtis was ruled out of order for stating that if the sworn allegations made by Dunsmuir and Wells were true, criminal prosecution was imperative under section 131 of the code where it is prescribed that 14 years imprisonment may be inflicted upon any one attempting to bribe a legislator—and also for saying that ministers thus brought into possible disrepute should tender their resignations pending an investigation.

Quite a different coloring was given to the whole plot on Tuesday when W. J. Taylor was asked to tell what he knew about the Columbia and Western land grant. He denied that he had had anything to do with the matter directly or indirectly. He had been approached by Mr. Wells in Montreal. The later had told him that he had the land grants with him and that before the company got them they should "do something" for him, as he was in a "very peculiar position."

Taylor inquired what he meant, and Wells said the company should do something to help the government politically. He (witness) had presumed such as building the line to Spence's bridge. He (witness) had then observed that it was a peculiar position for the government to make a contract with a railway company by which a subsidy was to be received by the company for one piece of road and then have one of the ministers "go dubbing around" sparring for a better bargain. Wells had then remarked that there should be twenty or thirty thousand acres apiece in it. He (Taylor) had jocularly replied that "by the time they had got around the crowd of nineteen or twenty with twenty or thirty thousand acres each there would not be much left for the company out of the 600,000 acres." By the nineteen or twenty he had meant the members of the government of the day and their supporters. Wells had then said there was "a better thing in it," which was to cancel the grants and have the lands relocated, to which witness had replied that it would be hard to explain such a transaction satisfactorily. Wells said that was all right; he had fixed matters in advance with Dunsmuir. He (Taylor) had said the public would not be content with a simple explanation, and Wells had added that he would see Shaughnessy any way and see what he intended to do. He (witness) had not gone to Montreal on a pass, or in connection with the Canadian Pacific in any way. He had made the remark that there would not be much left after giving twenty or thirty thousand acres to each of the nineteen or twenty in the crowd, as he supposed Wells "would play fair and cut up even with all his friends in the house." He had also remarked that after this deal was executed it would not be a happy and contented political family, all living together in peace and harmony. He (Taylor) defied anyone to prove he had any connection with the transaction in any form. He was never identified with the Canadian Pacific or with Geo. McL. Brown in his official capacity.

"Personally," he added, "he is a friend of mine, and a good friend. I am as proud of his friendship as I am ashamed to be acquainted with Wells."

The next morning Taylor was cross-examined but his evidence was not materially weakened.

He had told Wells, after commenting upon the spectacle of a minister sparring for better terms, that if he wasn't careful people would take his action for an attempted hold-up. Wells intimated to him that he was making two conditions for the delivery of the grants: 1, That a line to Spence's Bridge should be built, and 2, that there should be 20,000 or 30,000 acres apiece for some one.

His own idea was that Wells was throwing out feelers to entrap him (Taylor) and ultimately catch Eberts in a snare, as he had done before in suggesting a retainer from him (Taylor) to use his influence upon Eberts, as his partner in order to secure the abandonment of the prosecution of a certain foreman in the upper-country charged with fraud in placing fictitious names upon the payroll.

He (witness) had said to Eberts that he had better look out for that little man, that Wells was trying hard to get him in a hole.

Both George McL. Brown and Eberts, among others, had talked with him as to Wells' statement, of his (Taylor's) suggesting a deal by which Wells might profit through the delivery of grants.

He knew nothing about the passing of the cancellation order, and had not gone to Dunsmuir about the matter.

Prentice testified that the cancelling

FRANK IS NOW SAFE.

EARLY REPORTS OF FURTHER DANGER WERE EXAGGERATED.

C.P.R. and Mine Officials Resume Operations—Former Residents will go Back—Transfer Effected.

The last seven days at Frank have been heavily charged with intense excitement and suspended anxiety. During the beginning of the week fears of another slide rivalling in extent and damage that of the 29th of April, were very strong. These fears were aroused by engineers who had taken measurements from the level of the valley and on Saturday evening upon the return of the committee of experts who reported the danger to be imminent their worst fears were confirmed.

The experts consisting of Messrs. J. C. McCarty, F. L. Byron and F. B. Smith made a lengthy report of their trip to the mountain top on Saturday. In part it read as follows:—

"Coming back from the edge of the cliff, a break in the mountain was observed, which might at any time break away and envelop the whole lower end of the village, although this part of the probable danger may take an easterly direction, as the weakest point is to the east, but from the fan shape that the last slide took, the town is certainly in some danger from this highest western peak.

Coming about 100 feet back from the highest part, and looking to the south across the great cavern that had been formed by the last slide, there is a very decided gap of at least from 10 to 20 feet wide, and can be seen following the trend of the mountain for at least 500 yards. This break is about 250 feet back from the face.

Again, another decided break is seen about 250 feet behind this, well into the mountain, but not so prominent in width. This latter break has probably a width of five feet, and extends for some distance.

Following this report all those still residing in the town were ordered by the Government to leave the town and accommodation at Blairmore was taxed to its utmost, tents being utilized everywhere for sleeping purposes.

On Monday another and fuller examination was made of the mountain top and as a result reassuring reports were sent out in all directions relieving the fears that had been felt for the safety of the remaining property in the town. These reports were sent by Supt. J. G. Taylor, of Cranbrook, to General Superintendent R. R. Jamieson, of Calgary.

Frank, N.W.T., May 4th.

To R. R. Jamieson, Calgary:—

The party of 15 who climbed Turtle mountain today returned at 16:30. Have seen Gebo, Spriggs and one of the miners. They all agree that report of 2nd instant, was greatly exaggerated. There is a large lot of loose rock to come down, but no large body can possibly come down to reach half way to the river. Apparently it will come as at present from the top view there is a large tableland to receive it. This bears out my statement that since the first large slide no rock has fallen into the river. Of the party of 15, nine of them were miners, who all volunteered to go to work at the mine tomorrow if the government will allow them. Will see Haultain later and advise you again.

(Signed), J. G. Taylor."

Frank, N.W.T., May 4th.

To R. R. Jamieson, Calgary:—

Premier Haultain left this evening for Regina after having visited the top of Turtle mountain. Mr. Haultain authorizes the statement that it is doubtful if rock will fall in a body sufficient to damage the town to any appreciable extent. He prefers that the inhabitants reiman out of the town until his engineers make complete observations by transit and decide definitely if there is any movement in the mountain. Mr. Haultain will return to Frank before the end of this week and determine what course to pursue. He does not consider that any rock that slides from Turtle mountain could possibly reach the track.

(Signed), J. G. Taylor."

The experts agreed that the disintegration of the mountain top had progressed to a stage where the lime stone rock would for a time continue to crumble and come down in small slides that could do no damage to the town. The premier decided as a precautionary measure to keep the town closed another week, during which time further examinations by engineers and surveyors would be made to ascertain more particulars as to the condition of the town. Ascents have daily been made and the opinion is steadily gaining ground that no further danger threatens the town. Occasional minor slides are taking place and the face of the mountain at the top is gradually but surely changing its form.

Preparations are now under way to resume former industries. The Canadian-American Coal and Coke Company are arranging to open up the coal mine again An up-to-date plant has been ordered which will be a great improvement on the old one. It is stated that this will be placed some distance from the mouth of the tunnel on the opposite side of the railway track, and connect with the mines with an overhead tramway. The miners have expressed their willingness to go to work again.

The C. P. R. is by far the heaviest loser from the disaster. Its loss will be tremendous as the indirect loss sustained by suspended traffic will far exceed the actual cost of repairing the road. After much labor a 5 mile wagon road was built around the slide and on Thursday the first regular transfer was made. The passengers, express and mail are taken in wagons from one train to the other. A change has been made in the time-table of the railway to meet the changed conditions caused by the transfer. The railway company is pushing the work of repairing the road; about 300 rock men are now at work clearing the way.

The rocks lie deep over what was formerly a beautiful townsite and little available room is to be had for building purposes as the site now stands. The town is practically deserted but it is expected that an order will soon be issued by the government permitting the return of the people to the town.

REPORT FOR APRIL.

C. N. P. COLLIERIES MAKING GOOD PROGRESS

Second Highest Monthly Report—Improvements under way at Three Collieries.

The returns of the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Company for the month of April are very gratifying when it is considered that work was only resumed on April 1st after the long strike. Michel again reaches its highest mark and far exceeds each of its competitors in the output of coal for the month. The figures for the three collieries are as follows;

Morrissey	12,000
Coal Creek	16,000
Michel	20,037
Total	48,037

This monthly output has been exceeded only once in the history of the Company the highest record being in January, 1903 when 54,600 tons were mined.

Morrissey colliery broke its previous record on April 25th. On that day 810 tons of coal were mined, being considerably in access of any previous day's work. The average for the month was 521 tons. At the begining of the month the output got as low as 292 tons which seriously effected the monthly average. The average for the last two weeks of April reached 700 tons.

Michel's figures present a curious coincidence as in the month of January exactly the same amount was mined in this colliery—20,037 tons. This is the highest record at this point and the highest daily output was reached during the month when 1136 tons were taken out. The average for the month was 801 tons. Indications now point to a record for May at Michel. In two weeks the Company expect to have a daily average of 1000 tons. One of the chief reasons why the Michel mines are doing so much better than the Coal Creek colliery is that the former were kept in good shape during the strike, while in the latter, work was seriously retarded by the water filling No. 3.

At Coal Creek the average was 640 tons per day. The output at this point should materially improve this month as No. 3 is again in shape, the water having been pumped out. The repair work in No. 2 mine is making verp rapid progress and it is estimated that this mine, which has not been producing since last May, will be in good working shape by July. Several improvements are being introduced in connection with this mine, chief of which is a tail rope haulage engine which was purchased by Mr. Stockett when he was last in the east. This engine is a monster, being larger than anything in these parts. The foundation, which is now being built, is 26 feet square. This system will supercede the motors, as the electric wires are considered unsafe in the mine beyond the point in the tunnel where the air is split into different channels. The grades in this mine can also be overcome more easily by means of the rope system. This big engine has four drums which will draw the cars over double track. As many as forty and fifty will be taken out at a time. Tunnels 4 and 5 are being developed rapidly with three drifts in each. A box-car loader is now on the ground at Coal Creek and will be put in place as soon as practicable.

The haulage and air tunnels connecting tunnels 8 and 9 at Michel are just completed. This contract was taken by Jas. R. Wilson and Sons who have pushed the work through rapidly. No. 9 is now in good shape and it will be exporting coal as soon as a track can be built.

IMPROVEMENTS AT MORRISSEY MINES.

At Morrissey Mines extensive improvements are in progress. A huge steam double compound air compressor is being installed which will supply motive power to all the mines for drilling and hoist purposes, where it is unsafe to use other power. The air is conveyed to each of the mines in 6 inch pipes at a pressure of 100 lbs to the inch. The engine is a very powerful one with a capacity of 17,000 cubic feet per minute and it weighs 57,000 pounds.

No. 2 tunnel is being rapidly developed and made ready for a double track. It is estimated that the remaining 240 feet of development will be completed by August 1st when the mine will be in a position to ship coal.

A large double endless rope haulage rope engine is being put in to operate the switching in the yards above the incline at Morrissey Mines. The yards here are 800 feet long and contain 4 tracks. The yard work was formerly done by the locomotive, and the new system will relieve the latter of such work as feeding the coal bins and taking away the empty cars.

A 50,000 gallon tank is being built above the mines as a reserve for boilers or any other urgent necessity in case the regular pipe system should for any reason refuse to work. Important improvements are also contemplated in the water system. The present 6 inch main pipes will be replaced by 10 inch or probably with 12 inch pipes and the present pipes will be used for distributing purposes. The system will be extended to the new town of Morrissey Mines at an early date.

A large fan similar to that recently put in at No. 4 has just been installed at No. 1 mine and another will shortly be put in at Nos. 2 and 3 mines. These fans are very large and have a tremendous capacity.

The coke ovens at Morrissey are now under way and they are contracted to be finished by Oct. 1st. Many will be ready for use before that date.

Under the steady improvements going on at Morrissey Mines it is expected that the daily output will reach 1000 tons by the middle the of month.

ON LETTER WRITING.

NOTHING SHOULD OBSCURE ONE'S RATIONAL JUDGMENT THEN.

THE FOLLY OF QUICK SIGNING.

When Writing Is Made and Signed It Is Very Difficult, If Not Impossible, to Draw Back When Mistake Has Been Thus Committed—Rev. Dr. Talmage's Arguments and Illustrations.

Chicago, April 26.—In this sermon the preacher shows by argument and illustration the folly and danger of writing letters, when the mind is influenced by anger or otherwise so excited and disturbed as to obscure the rational judgment. The text is Daniel vi, 8, "Now, O king, establish the decree, and sign the writing, that it be not changed."

King Darius was about to be caught in a trap. The jealous state officers, who had long been plotting against the young prime minister, had at last found a way in which they thought they could destroy him. "Aha!" they chuckled. "We will make the king sign this young upstart's death warrant. He will not know that he is doing it. We shall play upon our royal master's vanity and ask him to send forth a public letter and sign it, so that the decree cannot be changed."

This public letter, or proclamation, was a singular document. It was dexterously devised to exalt the king's supremacy and was well calculated to please an oriental despot by making him appear to his subjects as the exclusive source of all good. It prohibited every subject making any request of God or man, save to the king only, for a period of thirty days. These plotters knew that Daniel was in the habit of praying to God every day, and they were sure that he would continue to do so in spite of the king's proclamation. He would thus become an offender against the law and would incur the penalty, which was to be cast into the den of the lions. "Now," they would say when the king signed the paper, "we shall destroy that prime minister. We could not do it by the sword, but we shall do it by the king's impulsive pen." Their plot operated as they expected, and Daniel was thrown into the den of lions. We know how the king lamented signing the letter, but how powerless he was to recall his signature.

How many people have had similar cause for regret! How often words written under a hasty impulse have recoiled on the writer! Spoken words may be forgotten, but written words do not change. They may be used to condemn the writer long years after they were written; aye, after he himself is dead.

Never write an important letter until you have had plenty of time to think it over. Foolish would be that lawyer who would quickly give a decision upon any important matter. After hearing all the statements of his client the wise lawyer says: "Wait until to-morrow, or next week, and I will tell you what I believe you ought to do. I do not wish to answer you without consideration. I wish to think this matter over very carefully."

Do you suppose King Darius would have sent forth that decree, or public letter, which condemned his Premier, Daniel, to the lions' den if he had only stopped to think? Supposing the King after he had written that public decree had placed it under his pillow and slept upon it, what would have been the result? Would he not naturally have scented a fatal conspiracy in that request? And, my brother, if you had only waited one or two days before you sent that important letter which did you so much harm would you have sent it? Would you not have destroyed it?

Never write an important letter which you would not be willing for the whole world to see. Many statements that are perfectly proper and rightly understood by those who know us will not be rightly construed if placed before the eyes of the world at large. There are many thoughts that I might write to a friend or a brother which would be entirely misinterpreted if read by an enemy or a stranger. It is very important that one should never write a letter which would be capable of misconstruction if that letter should ever fall into the hands of a bitter foe.

Pertinent illustration: Some years ago an admiral of the United States navy was being bitterly assailed by his enemies, who took from the private war files a certain letter. In that letter he had discussed the principles which, in his opinion, should govern promotion in the navy, and had insisted that courage alone did not qualify a man to be a commanding officer. Reminding the Government how often, as in the case of the Franco-Prussian war of 1870, an act of discourtesy had precipitated a conflict, he pointed out that a brave officer lacking education, training and diplomatic tact might involve the nation in serious difficulties. It was therefore wise in making promotions to consider the character and antecedents of the man. The admiral's advice was sound, but his letter was published at a time when there were other questions relating to his own record under discussion, and it created a prejudice against him which conduced to the premature termination of a brilliant career.

Furthermore, you should not write a letter which cannot be rightly read by the whole world at large, because you do not know how soon the friend to whom you have written may become your enemy. Oh, how easy it is to snap the ties of friendship which bind human heart to human heart. Brothers, who once slept in the same cradle and played in the same nursery and were the subjects of the same prayers can become so bitter in their hatred that they will even fight a mortal combat over their parents' graves. Friends who once loved as a Jonathan and a David may come to hate each other as Cain hated his brother Abel. Then the friend who has now become the enemy will nearly always try to destroy you by the evidence of the unguarded letters which you have written in times of love.

My father used to impress this thought upon me by the recollections of an awful night which he passed in an ordeal of indescribable horrors. A very near and dear relative of his was his intimate associate for many years. They were to each other as intimate as brothers. They confided in each other everything. Time passed on, and there was a rupture. The friendship was broken. What did that relative do? He immediately took all the letters which my father had written and handed them over to the newspapers for publication. The night that my father heard of the despicable act, as he has often told me, was the most awful night of his life. He knew that he had done no wrong, but he was afraid that in a confidential correspondence of many years he might have written something which in the eyes of the world might be imprudent. All that night he tramped the floor. When the first ray of daylight told that the dawn was near, he went out to buy the morning newspaper which contained the published private correspondence. He read these published letters in the street. When he returned, the first words he said to mother were: "Thank God, there is nothing compromising that I have written! Thank God! Thank God!" That is not the only illustration which might be given where a friend has turned upon a friend. Then, my brother, to either friend or foe alike, never write anything which may some day not be able to stand the test of the public print.

Never write a letter with a vengeful pen, dipped into an ink well filled with hatred. When one has been unjustly attacked, it is very easy for an injured man to say: "I wish I could see that man. I wish I could give him a good piece of my mind. I wish I could tell him in plain, blunt language what I think of him and his actions. As I cannot see him, I will just sit down and write him a letter." Then he hastily sits down and writes a Demosthenian philippic. Vituperations and denunciations, contemptuous excoriation, stinging ironies, bitter epigrams and whole verbal avalanches of invective are gathered together upon the letter sheet at the pen's touch. Then he rushes away to the postoffice and buys a special delivery stamp. He pounds it upon the envelope with a blow that sounds like a foundry in full blast. Then he goes home, saying to himself: "There, I have relieved myself of that matter. I have told that man just what I think of him and his actions. If he should ever repeat the offence, I shall not only write to him another letter, but I shall expose his actions to his employers, his wife, children and to the public at large."

Now, my friend, in one sense it may ease your mind to write a revengeful letter, but what good does a revengeful letter do? Does it make your enemy feel any kinder or more gentle to you? Does such a letter ever make a man feel any kinder or more gentle to the great world at large? Have you made him a better man? Have you made yourself a better man also? In fact, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred does not such a letter damage your neighbor and also do more damage to the sender than it does to the man to whom it is sent?

Never write a letter without realizing that in it you have the mightiest opportunities of testifying for Jesus Christ. We have all studied the farreaching effect in a literary sense of letter writing. The private correspondence between individuals fills some of the brightest and most interesting books of literature. The love letters of Elizabeth Barrett and Robert Browning, the tender words which were sent east and west across the Atlantic Ocean when Thomas Carlyle, the mighty sage of English letters, and Ralph Waldo Emerson, the gentle sage of Concord, corresponded, the letters of Robert Louis Stevenson, to his friends, scattered all over the world; the letters of Cicero and of the younger Pliny, letters of Julius Caesar to the Emperor Constantine and letters of Sidonius Apollinaris—these letters are the more fascinating, because, like the mountain streams, they sparkle under the overhanging evergreens of the affections. They were murmuring for the most part into the ears of only one nightingale and moistening the throat of but one songster or songstress.

Many have studied the effect of letter writing in a political sense. We know the power of Samuel Adams' pen in fomenting Revolutionary strife. George Washington by letter writing after his retirement from the presidential chair practically directed national legislation. We know how the famous "Letters of Junius," written against the British ministry, mightily changed the reading upon the pages of English history. And if we are able to study the influence of letter writing in a literary and political sense can we not study its influence in a spiritual sense?

Let us first see the spiritual influence of letter writing in your own life. Strange to say, you do not remember much about your mother's life. I mean as you sit there, you have forgotten exactly how she looked and the tone of her voice. She has been dead many years. Then you have forgotten to a great extent her words of advice in the home, but you have never forgotten her letters. Somehow, after you left home, the words which she wrote to you made a far greater impression than the words which she spoke. If I should go into your home and ask for your most valuable collection of papers you would in all probability show me a collection of old yellow letters. They were written by her hand. You have read them over and over again. Some of those letters are stained as though the children had spattered water upon them. They are stained with your tears as well as perhaps with hers. The gospel advice in those letters which you were able to read in the quietude of your own room is to-day the sweetest lesson that your mother ever taught. What has been true in reference to your life is also true in mine. The greatest lesson that my father taught me was not by the lip, but with the pen. Though I had lived with him for eighteen years he never so overwhelmingly affected me as on the day I left for college. He placed in my hand a letter. He told me to read it in the train. In this letter, on one half sheet of paper, he write these words: "In college you will find two groups: Group the first, boys who go to college because their fathers send them there. Boys who drink and smoke and who cheat at their examination. Failure. Group the second, boys who go to college to prepare for life's struggle; boys who study hard and go to church and the prayer meeting, especially the prayer meeting. Success. 'Them that honor me, I will honor. And they that despise me shall be lightly esteemed.'" That was all he wrote, but those written words, far more than any spoken words my father ever uttered, burned themselves into my innermost being. That letter of his illustrated the power of a spiritual pen, wielded in a Christian home.

But why circumscribe this thought within the four walls of a home? The spiritual power of gospel letter writing is seen everywhere that it has been tried. To what could Maltbie Babcock's wonderful spiritual influence be mostly attributed? He was without doubt one of the most successful ministers in the American pulpit at the time of his death. To his marvelous and yet simple eloquence, which Sunday after Sunday crowded the famous Brick church of New York city to the doors? No, not chiefly. To his sweet and winsome personality in personal contact? No, not principally. The greatest part of his influence was won by the power of personal letter writing. One of his old classmates and most intimate friends told me that Dr. Babcock never let a member of his congregation get out of his reach. He kept a book filled with dates. On the birthdays of his boys at college he would drop them each a short letter, telling them to improve their opportunities and how much their parents and pastor were thinking and praying for them. On the sad anniversary of the death of children he would drop a sympathetic note to the broken hearted parents, telling them how thankful they ought to be that their little ones have now been able to spend one or two years in heaven, telling them how happy they ought to be that the partings would not be very long. When the anniversary of a young girl's advent into the church came, he would drop her a letter, hoping that her year of faith in Christ had been a happy year. In this way Dr. Babcock reached out everywhere and bound his people to him with links of steel. By this system of simple gospel letter writing the late pastor of the Brick church was able to make his Christian influence felt all over America. My brother and my sister, you and I have wasted many a glorious opportunity for gospel letter writing. Will you not here and now consecrate your pen to do for Jesus what you can? Will you not consecrate the pen as well as the voice and the sense of touch? Remember, Paul's epistles were only Paul's gospel letters, written to his absent friends. We by the power of gospel letter writing can accomplish on a smaller scale what the tired traveling missionary by his pen did on a hemispheric scale.

Oh, the infinite influence of a gospel pen! Infinite in reference to time! Some of us have seen the Assyrian histories written upon the slabs of burnt brick by pens thousands upon thousands of years ago. We have seen leaves of grass upon which the Greeks used to engrave their laws, and the shoulder blades of a dead sheep's skeleton upon which the ancient Arabs used to write poetry. The sides of the Egyptian obelisks are covered with hieroglyphics of the ancients. The first pen wielded by man was a chisel, and the first leaf was a sheet of solid rock. But, though such writings may last hundreds of years, yet they will not last as long as the gospel words written upon the human heart by a gospel pen. Such words shall last long after this earth is dead and our souls have passed cycles of eternity in heaven. Infinite in reference to wonders accomplished! In our national museums some of us have seen pens worth a thousand times more than their weight in gold. They are the pens that have been held in the hands of presidents and kings—pens of peace or of war, pens of liberation or enslavement, pens which decided the material advancement or retardment of nations. But the sacred pen of gospel letter writing may be even greater in its farreaching results. It may be the means for the liberation of immortal souls from sin, for their coronation in the heavenly redemption.

Thus, in closing, I would impress upon you all the influence of a consecrated pen. May you learn to use for God aright that pen which as a schoolboy you once held in your chubby fingers when it would sputter and twist and try to squirm out of your hands. Use aright that pen by which as a young man you used to record the secrets of your heart when the old, old story of love became a new story to you in the springtime. Learn to use aright for Christ that same pen with which you have again and again written a name upon a black bordered envelope. Use aright that pen with which you can win immortal souls to Jesus Christ in the gospel invitation of private correspondence.

STOPPING RUNAWAYS

HOW THE NEW YORK PARK POLICE HORSE ENJOYS THE WORK.

The Story of a Glorious Run That Was Only an Incident in the Life of Skipper—A Race That Ended In the Capture of the Runaway Roan.

For half an hour at a time he would stand just on the edge of the roadway and at an exact angle with it motionless as the horse ridden by the bronze soldier up near the mail. Reddy would sit as still in the saddle too. It was hard for Skipper to stand there and see those mincing cobs go by, their pad housings all a-glitter, crests on their blinders, jingling their pole chains and switching their absurd little stubs of tails. But it was still more tantalizing to watch the saddle horses canter past in the soft bridle path on the other side of the roadway. But, then, when you are on the force you must do your duty.

One afternoon as Skipper was standing post like this he caught a new note that rose above the hum of the park traffic. It was the quick, nervous beat of hoofs which rang sharply on the hard macadam. There were screams too. It was a runaway. Skipper knew this even before he saw the bell-like nostrils, the straining eyes and the foam flecked lips of the horse or the scared man in the carriage behind. It was a case of broken rein.

How the sight made Skipper's blood tingle! Wouldn't he just like to show that crazy roan what real running was! But what was Reddy going to do? He felt him gather up the reins. He felt his knees tighten. What! Yes, it must be so. Reddy was actually going to try a brush with the runaway. What fun!

Skipper pranced out into the roadway and gathered himself for the sport. Before he could get into full swing, however, the roan had shot past with a snort of challenge which could not be misunderstood.

"Oho! You will, eh?" thought Skipper. "Well now, we'll see about that."

Ah, a free rein! That is—almost free. And a touch of the spurs! No need for that, Reddy. How the carriages scatter! Skipper caught hasty glimpses of smart hackneys drawn up trembling by the roadside, of women who tumbled from bicycles into the bushes and of men who ran and shouted and waved their hats.

But she did run well. Skipper had to admit that. She had a lead of fifty yards before he could strike his best gait. Then for a few moments he could not seem to gain an inch. But the mare was blowing herself, and Skipper was taking it coolly. He was putting the pent up energy of weeks into his strides. Once he saw he was overhauling her he steadied to the work.

Just as Skipper was about to forge ahead Reddy did a queer thing. With his right hand he grabbed the roan with a nose pinch grip, and with the left he pulled in on the reins. It was a great disappointment to Skipper, for he had counted on showing the roan his heels. Skipper knew after two or three experiences of this kind that this was the usual thing.

Those were glorious runs, though. Skipper wished they would come more often. Sometimes there would be two and even three in a day. Then a fortnight or so would pass without a single runaway on Skipper's beat. But duty is duty.

An Anecdote of Dumas.

Speaking of Alexandre Dumas, a writer says that his chief characteristic was his utter disregard of money. He made millions, but never had a franc at his command. "For example," said he, "upon one occasion Dumas had invited company to dinner, and, finding that he did not stand possessed of a single cent, drove to a friend's and asked him to lend him 2 louis. This his friend readily did, and as Dumas was taking his leave suggested, as he had just been getting some very fine pickles, he would be glad to give him a jar to add to his dinner. The servant was sent for the pickles, and when he put the jar in the carriage, Dumas, having no other change about him, dropped the 2 louis in the man's hand."

Caution.

"Well, bub, what is it?" asked the druggist of the small boy with a bottle in his hand.

"Please, sir, but here's the medicine I got for me mother an hour ago."

"Yes, and what's the matter with it?"

"You didn't write on the bottle whether it was to be taken eternally or infernally, and she's afraid of making a mistake."

RICH BLOOD THE ESSENTIAL

To Health, Strength, Vitality and Even Life Itself.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Is Above All Else a Blood-Builder.

The complexion tells the quality of the blood and acts as a thermometer of the health. A pale, sallow skin and pallor of the eyelids, lips, and gums bear unquestionab,e evidence that the blood is thin, watery and vitiated. Poor, weak blood fails to supply the nervous system with proper nourishment and day by day the system breaks down and disease finds an easy victim. There can be no cure, no permanent relief, until the blood is made pure, rich, and self-sustaining.

Pale, Bloodless Girls.

Woman's system demands a plentiful supply of pure, healthy blood. Growing girls, especially when merging into womanhood, become pale, bloodless, weak, and run down because af an insufficiency in the quality or quantity of the blood. As a result feminine irregularities and derangements come upon them and sometimes affect their health and happiness all through life.

Just at this period Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is of inestimable value because it actually creates new rich, blood, builds up the system, forms new tissue and flesh and increases weight.

Nursing Mothers.

In later life, during the trying expectant period when two lives are to be nourished, and after baby's coming, when nursing woman's system must have an unlimited supply of blood. At these times Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is woman's best friend, because it gives her in condensed form the very elements that are required to form new blood and it is so gentle in action as to be perfectly safe and pleasant to use.

Ninety per cent. of woman's ills are due to thin, watery blood, and weak, exhausted nerves. By overcoming these weaknesses Dr. Chase's Nerve Food makes thorough and lasting cures. 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50. At all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto

Insane on One Point.

Erskine mentions a case where a person who had been confined in an asylum prosecuted his brother and the proprietor for imprisonment and false duress. The prosecutor, himself a witness in support of the indictment, was put into the witness box and examined. When Erskine came to cross examine him, he tried to discover some lurking alienation of mind, but during a cross examination, conducted with all the skill and sagacity of which he was master, for nearly an hour he was completely foiled.

But a gentleman who had come accidentally into court whispered in Erskine's ear that the witness thought he was the Saviour of mankind.

On receiving the hint Erskine made a low bow to the prosecutor, addressed him in terms of great reverence, respectfully begged to apologize for the unceremonious manner in which he had treated a person of his sacred character and called him by the name of Christ. The man immediately said: "Thou hast spoken truly. I am the Christ."

TO PREVENT PNEUMONIA.

Now this means a lot. Pneumonia, once established, must run its course and when statistics show us that more people die annually throughout the Northern, Middle and Western States from this, than from any other disease, it becomes us to stir ourselves and ascertaio what remedies we can adopt to prevent a cold developing into pneumonia. I give you these right here:—Dr. August Koenig's Hamburg Breast Tea and St. Jacob's Oil, the former taken hot on the approach of the first symptoms of a cold—for pneumonia does not come first, it is a neglected cold and exposure that precedes pneumonia. In conjunction apply St. Jacob's Oil across the top portion of the chest and throat, cover with oil silk, on top of which put hot flannel cloths; place feet in hot mustard and water, take a hot lemonade with a dash of Jamaica (not Medford, oh dear no) rum, and you will be all right, most likely in a day or two.

THE "BADGER" GAME

MONTREAL MERCHANT IS VICTIMIZED.

A Couple Named Barber, Hailing From Winnipeg, Play a Bold Trick on an Elderly Merchant—Held Prisoner for Two Days.

A man giving his name as C. A. Barber and a woman, who says she is his wife, appeared in the police court at Montreal on April 29. The complainant is Delphise Brosseau, a wealthy wholesale grocer of that city, and he told a remarkable story to the police.

According to his story Brosseau last week advertised that he had a safe to sell and intending purchasers were requested to call at his office. On Saturday afternoon a middle-aged woman of neat appearance suggested that she could sell the safe if she could get a commission for so doing. He agreed to this and as a result Mr. Brosseau accepted an invitation to call upon her at her residence in Westmount. Her residence was given at that time as 5 Thornhill avenue, and Mr. Brosseau made a short call upon her, afterwards agreeing to go to 21 Chesterfield avenue, Westmount, on Monday morning between 9 and 10 o'clock there to meet the party who wanted to purchase the safe.

Brosseau, according to appointment turned up and Mrs. Barber welcomed him. Leading the way to the parlor, she bade her guest be seated on a comfortable sofa, and in a short time she seated herself beside him, and was not long in starting an interesting conversation. Suddenly the door of a wardrobe in the side of the room immediately in front of them opened, and out stepped a man of fierce countenance, armed with a revolver in one hand and a big knife in the other. "Now I have got you," he shouted. "I will teach you to act in this way with my wife. I will kill you." This, with a flourish of the revolver and a swing of the dirk, which made a slight wound, struck terror in the man's heart, and made him pray for mercy. Finally the mysterious man agreed to save the old man's life for a ransom. The latter agreed to the terms, and the supposed husband, placing a pair of handcuffs on his victim's wrists and taking care of some of his clothing, proceeded to write out a "confession, acknowledging improper relations on the part of the old gentleman with the woman, and also promising to sign certain notes, which should be incontestable at the banks and payable out of the funds of the estate at periods of a few weeks apart. This confession, he says, he was compelled, on pain of death, to sign. A number of promissory notes were produced for sums aggregating $13,000, and the old man was compelled to sign these also.

Accarding to his story, Brosseau was left a prisoner in the house until Tuesday morning, when his captor locked up all his clothes and left him handcuffed and tied in the house, while he came to the city to see about negotiating some of the notes. Brosseau, being left alone, managed to break free and secure most of his clothes. Then he jumped out over the balcony and escaped to the city. He at once notified the banks not to cash the cheques or notes, and then proceeded to Chief Detective Carpenter, to whom he told his remarkable story.

The notes were found by the detectives in the Molson's bank, and then the search for Barber and wife commenced. The man was arrested on the street, and the woman was found at Westmount. On the man's person was found a thousand dollar cheque, and a search of the house led to the discovery of the handcuffs, revolver and knife.

Barber and his wife pleaded not guilty when arraigned in court. After Brosseau had told his story the hearing was adjourned.

Little is known of Barber and his wife. The man came to Montreal eighteen months ago and opened up business as agent for ropes and fire extinguishers. He stated he came from Winnipeg.

North Dakota Liquor Law.

A dispatch from Grand Forks, N. D., says: It has just been discovered that a peculiar condition of affairs will exist affecting the druggists of the state in connection with the Shiels bill, passed at the last session of the legislature. The law goes into effect July 1, and all permits to sell liquor must be in at that time.

The application for renewal cannot be made before that date and the law provides that a 30 days' publish-notice must precede the hearing before the county court, before the applications can be acted upon.

This will leave the druggists for an entire month without authority to sell a drop of liquor for any purpose whatever.

As $50 reward is offered for evidence that will convict a druggist of violation of the law this state without doubt will be practically liquorless for thirty days. The peculiar situation has aroused great interest here, but the legal lights can discover no way around the difficulty.

FURTHER DETAILS.

Cause of Disaster at Frank, Alta., was a Land Slide.

Frank, N.W. T., April 30.—The cause of the trouble at Frank is a huge slide, no explosion whatever. It was of such large dimensions that the cloud of dust was taken for smoke, and the minor slides coming down were taken for inside explosions. The whole east end of the mountain, extending from the tipple east, has gone out. It was 4,400 feet high, and slid across the entire valley, blocking the track to the French mine.

This track is about 40 feet higher than the C. P. R. track, and is distant about three-quarters of a mile from the mine entrance. The slide extends from a point about 200 feet east of Frank station to a point one and a half miles east. This tract is covered with rock of all sizes, from the size of a marble to the size of a large double deck boarding car.

About ten houses in the east end of the town were destroyed, and the entire families wiped out, one of which was Mr. A. Leitch, three of his children escaping, but the parents and four others were killed. The youngest child was thrown out of the house in some miraculous way and not injured.

In the house of Sam Innis were quietly sleeping Innis, his wife and three children, the house was overturned three times and yet the occupants were practically uninjured. This was the only house caught in the slide in which the occupants survived, the stables of the Canadian-American Coal and Coke Co. held fifty horses, and of this immense building not a vestige remained. It is covered by fifty feet of rock. A tiny terrier pup was the only creature saved. In the home of one of the Finn miners a baby came some three months ago. The slide wiped out the lives of seven occupants. None were found save the wee babe, who was discovered in a cruise one hundred yards from where the house stood, naked, but alive, unhurt, and crying with exposure.

Alex. Leitch and his wife were killed in bed, and their baby of seven months, which lay between its parents, was unhurt.

There are many theories as to the cause of the slide. Some declare that there was an eruption, and that it shook the mountain sufficiant to start the rock; others declare that the quality of of the rock, being almost pure lime, the great heat of the last week caused the snow to melt, and that the water worked its way down into the lime and slacked it, thus causing the start. Again there are some who hold to the gas theory stories of the slide.

Explosion Near Fernie Results in the Death of Two Powder-M

A dispatch from Fernie, B. C., says: A very heavy explosion occurred at Elko, about twenty-two miles west of here.

A party of twenty Greeks under Foreman F. B. Galligher, was employed in widening a cut on the Great Northern track at this point. Of these only two were able to speak English, and these two were employed as powder men. A large quantity of powder and stick dynamite were used for blasting purposes and this was kept in a powder house about half a mile from the scene of operations. These powder men, named George Maharras and George Buckas, were sent to bring fifteen sticks of dynamite to the camp fire, where they were accustomed to thaw them in warm water. The morning being cold they disobeyed orders and took at least fifty sticks to their cabin, which was situated some little distance in another direction. A terrible explosion was the first intimation that orders had been disobeyed. The explosion shook the village near by and was heard a long distance. The cabin where the disaster occurred was completely demolished and the men were badly mangled. One was found with his head nearly blown off, and the other with part of his face taken away from the force of the explosion.

Russia Makes More Demands.

A dispatch from the Pekin correspondent of the London Times says that in addition to the demands concerning Manchuria already enumerated, Russia, in another dispatch, demands that the navigation of the Liau river, which, under the inland navigation rules is open to vessels of all nations, shall be restricted to vessels flying the Russian and Chinese flags. Russia also demands that all engagements entered into by the Manchurian provincial authorities with the Russians during the Russian occupation shall be recognized by China.

"China's refusal of the Russian demands," concludes the correspondent, "is simply a stereotyped refusal and does not change the situation. Even if Russia withdraws her demands, the facts remain unaltered that only force will prevent Manchuria from becoming a Russian province.

"Admiral Alexieff has published a proclamation declaring that as Russian troops have been withdrawn, foreigners may now travel in Moukden province without Russian passports. In view of the fact that Russia never was in more complete military control of that province than at present, and that she is increasing her strength there daily, this proclamation is apt to be misleading."

Arrangements for the settlement of the Boer colony in Mexico have been completed. Eighty-three thousand acres of ranch land has been secured in the state of Chihuahua. Gen. W. D. Snyman will bring on fifty families now in New York. He expects to settle 1,000 more in Mexico an another tract.

THE KING IN FRANCE

EDWARD VII IS LIONIZED IN PARIS.

King Edward arrived in Paris on May 1, and was accorded a hearty reception to republican France. His Majesty's welcome at the Dauphine railroad station by President Loubet and chief officers of state, and his drive through the avenues, the Bois de Bologne and the Champs Elysees presented a continuous succession of brilliant spectacles. Everywhere the populace gave the king an enthusiastic greeting. The demonstration at the Palace de l'Etoile and the Place de la Concorde becoming tumultuous. King Edward, smiling and bowing, showed the keenest appreciation of French goodwill. Only scattered shouts of "Fashoda" and "Kruger" were heard and they were lost in the tremendous volume of approval. Vast crowds filled the boulevards from the early hours. People struggling to gain the vantage points along the route to be followed by the royal procession.

On the square fronting the railway station was asurging mass of humanity. A detachment of the First Cuirasseurs in showy uniforms, with glittering breast plates and helmets and waving plumes held back the crowds. The front of the station was elaborately draped with crimson and gold hangings, and the interior was transformed into a superb reception room hung with Gobelin tapestry having crimson and gold furnishings and decorated with flowers and plants. On the balcony was stationed the band of the Republican Guards.

President Loubet, surrounded by the cabinet ministers, the presidents of the senate and the chamber of deputies, the grand commander of the Legion of Honor, the military and naval dignitaries and the diplomatic corps presented an imposing appearance.

As the train entered the station the trumpets sounded a royal salute and the band played "God Save the King." King Edward descended from his car and advanced slowly and alone, smiling and saluting. He wore the scarlet uniform of a British field marshal. President Loubet stepped forward and grasped the King's hand. The meeting between the sovereign and the prseident was cordial, almost demonstrative. M. Loubet welcomed the King to France, and his Majesty, smiling, responded in French, expressing his thanks for the splendid manifestation in his honor.

King Edward and the members of his party, entered the carriages with gorgeously clad postillions and outriders, and escorted by a regiment of cuirassiers, drove to the British embassy. The route of the procession was through the beautiful Avenue du Bois de Bologne and the Avenue des Champs Elysees, arched with chestnut trees in full bloom. The lowering clouds which marked the earlier part of the day had broken up and the sun came forth to add to the splendor of the spectacle. The avenues were lined with solid ranks of Dragoons and cuirassiers, horse artillery field batteries and infantry, guns, helmets and other trappings gleaming in the sunlight.

Behind these martial walls the people were banked in solid masses and all the trees, windows, balconies and housetops were crowded with spectators. It was estimated that half a million people gathered along the line. At the Arch de Triompe the scene was majestic. Long shimmering lines of soldiery, a forest of waving banners, blaring trumpets and rolling drums and succeeding bands taking up "God Save the King."

The president and King were continually acclaimed as they passed through the living walls of soldiery. Among the populace occasionally discordant shouts were heard, but the prevailing sentiment was strongly friendly. When the line reached the Place de la Concorde, a battery of great guns crashed forth in a royal salute. King Edward rested at the British embassy on the Rue du Fauborg St. Honore, where sumptuous apartments had been prepared for him, including a throne room, furnished in the art treasures of Borghese palace. Above the embassy, the royal standard of Great Britain was raised.

Paris was given up to elaborate festivities, the government encouraging feats similar to those of the 14th of July. The boulevards were ablaze with colors, floral arches and artistic devices symbolical of royalty. Street amusements and dancing were proceeding everywhere, and the cafes teemed with joyous customers. Some of the kiosks displayed caricatures of King Edward and anti-British badges were seen, but in the main the sentiment of the people was most friendly and no notable manifestation of hostility was recorded.

CANADIAN BUTTER.

Why it Does Not Bring as Much as Other Makes.

Mr. H. A. Hodgson, of Montreal, cheese and butter exporter, has just returned from a visit to England, where he has been studying the other end of the exporting business. Canadian cheese, he says, is about as good as possible, but the butter has fallen off in quality in the last two years. The butter which brings the best price in England is English butter. It is made under conditions of absolute cleanliness that we do not approach in this country. The cow's udder is scrubbed with a rubber brush just before milking, the teats are washed with a special solution, the milkmaid's hands are clean, and immediately after milking the bucket is emptied and washed. The feeding of the cows is also carefully attended to, while in this country a farmer will often feed a cow turnips just before milking and so give the milk a bad flavor. Turnips may be fed just after milking without hurting the milk. Besides, in England, under the farm system, each large farm has its own dairy, so that every man's milk stands on its own merits, while in Canada, under the factory system, one man may keep back his cream, or send in tainted milk, so as so spoil the flavor of the whole output of the factory. A very little bad butter does a great deal of harm in England, for the English buyer, who works from ten to two, has not time to try every box of butter, but buys entirely from sample.

The general appearance of the package has a great effect with the English buyer, too. New Zealand butter comes smoothly packed in double parchment paper, in oblong boxes, and this gives it a great advantage. Canadian boxes are often too weak, so that they bulge, and are sometimes made of wood that is not properly kiln-dried, and has the germ of mould in it before the butter is put in. This, and parchment made of wood pulp instead of rags, often give the outside of the butter a bad flavor. Canadian packers often make patterns on the top of the butter when it is packed, but the English buyer prefers a smooth top. These may be small things, but they affect the price of our butter, so that the Siberian and even the Argentine products sell higher than Canadian. There is no reason why Canada should not have the same pre-eminence in butter as she has in cheese.

Forestry and Irrigation.

In the last report of the United States commissioner of the general land office the following statement is made:

"Irrigated agriculture, as representing the leading industry of the future of a vast portion of the country, and in particular of the arid region, is rapidly forcing to the front the question of irrigation as one of the great national issues of the day, since without water there can be no agriculture, and in like manner the need for irrigation is equally forcing to the front the question of forest preservation, since without forests there can be no water. Forests are an essential factor in any scheme of irrigation of sufficient magnitude to contemplate the reclamation of our six hundred or more millions of acres of irrigable lands which are now arid."

That irrigation depends upon the water supply, and that the water supply depends upon the forests is potent, and the necessity of maintaining the forests for this if for no other reason is equally apparent. There are substitutes in plenty for wood in the construction of buildings, of barns, and of fences, but there can be no substitute for agriculture. We must have wheat and corn and vegetables. The necessity of forest preservation for the reclamation of the great areas of public lands now wholly arid in the new states and Territories finds an equal demand in the older states, where land now arable is in danger of becoming arid by the destruction of the forests. If the fertility of our soil is to be maintained, the forests must be preserved.

Smallpox Germ Discovered.

A dispatch from Boston says: The announcement of the discovery of the cause of smallpox was made on April 28 by Dr. W. T. Councilman, professor of pathology in the Harvard Medical school, at a meeting of the Boston Society of Medical science.

The announcement is the outcome of the investigations conducted by Dr. Councilman, Dr. George Burgess McGrath and Dr. Walter Brinckhoff, with the co-operation of the Boston board of health during the recent epidemic of the disease in this city. It has been determined that smallpox is caused by a micro-organism representative of the lowest form of animal life. This fact serves to relate the disease with malaria, and to distinguish it from infectous disease caused by minute forms of vegetable life known as bacteria.

Mr. Guthrie presented a petition in the house of commons at Ottawa on April 28 from the corporation of Guelph, Ont., against a subsidy of any kind, land or other, being paid to the Grand Trunk Pacific railway. Another petition was presented from the Guelph city council asking that necessary measures be taken for acquiring by voluntary purchase, or if necessary, by expropriation, coal mines and property in Canada sufficient for the purpose of controlling the price of coal.

MARKETS.

(Compiled from The Commercial)

There has been rather a quiet time in the wheat markets during the past week until Friday, when markets became stronger. At the same time there has been an undertone of nervousness and uncertainty in the situation, which might have broken out into violent action on any day, had the right turn of the screw been given by some one. In the speculative markets the position is believed to be very much under the control of the Armour company, at least so far as the Chicago May and contract cash wheat is concerned, and scores of traders are trying to watch the Armour operations and from that make their guess what to do. It makes a very unhealthy kind of a market. Then the weather for the time of the year is backward over the American continent, and this also creates feelings of uncertainty, as a continuation of cold, unseasonable weather may mean damage to the winter wheat crop, and it is causing delay in the planting of corn and oats; and while there is time enough yet for such farm work to be done satisfactorily, and for a good crop to follow if the later weather is quite favorable, it in the meantime tends to add to the uncertain and nervous feeling. Snow's report and that of the Modern Miller both speak of unfavorable symptoms seemingly caused by insects or dry weather, and both reports are moderately pessimistic. It should be remembered, however, that the winter wheat crop in the United States might be damaged ten per cent. and still result in the largest yield on record. Meanwhile a steady consumptive demand is wearing down the breadstuffs, and by the time the new crop is ready in any large quantity stocks are likely to be very moderate, if not even small. Nevertheless, as we stated in our last week's review, present prices are not such as would be considered either high or low. Unty, therefore, the prospect of a decided shortage for another year's supply is established the present range of prices may be high enough as regards wheat for early delivery, but the price at which wheat can be bought in the American markets for September delivery may be looked upon as moderate and reasonably safe. The latest reports from Europe do not indicate any change in the crop situation there except that where damage has occurred it can be more certainly noted. Russia and the Danube country continue to export large quantities every week, and with Argentina also shipping freely, there is no lack of wheat to supply current requirements. India has not begun to ship her new crop yet, but she expects to have about 21,000,000 bushels for export. Recent weather in Australia has been showery and favorable for preparing for the new crop there. Weather in the American and Canadian Northwest spring wheat country has been cool and dry and very favorable for wheat seeding. Acreage under wheat in Manitoba and Northwest Territories may be increased 20 per cent.

There is little to report in the market for Manitoba wheat. It has been quiet and firm all the week witn the demand not so good as last week. The price has varied a little, according to the fluctuations in the American markets. At the beginning of the week, spot, 1 hard sold for 76⅞c but most of the week the price held at 76½c. With the advance in American markets Friday the price advanced to 77c, and we quote values at close of business Friday as follows: 1 hard 77c, 1 nor. 75⅞c, 2 nor., 73½c; 2 nor., 70c, and No. 4 wheat 66c, spot or delivery first half May, in store, Fort William or Port Arthur. For delivery first half May, 76⅞c., and for June 76½c, basis No. 1 hard.

Andalusian Specter.

Upon a mountain in Andalusia quaint spectral forms are frequently seen. Whenever there is a heavy mist and persons are ascending the mountain they appear in all their ghostly splendor and sometimes so suddenly as to strike dismay into the hearts of those who see them for the first time.

Of course it is all a trick played by the sun. When a mist partially shrouds the mountain, the sun is naturally obscured, and then he revenges himself by projecting the shadow of any person who is ascending the mountain until it assumes the form of a gigantic specter.

SYMPATHY WITH STRIKERS

Montreal Volunteers Refuse to Turn Out—Longshoremen Encouraged.

A dispatch from Montreal says:—The longshoremen have gained confidence as a result of the action of the Teamsters and Heavy Carters and Baggage and Freight Handlers' union, who have notified the transportation companies that they will no longer handle merchandise unloaded from the ships by non-union laborers. The victory of the carpenters in securing all they asked from their employers will also encourage them to hold out.

Local militiamen have been sent out to bring into camp a large number of volunteers who have not reported for duty as required by the Militia act. Many of the men are members of labor unions, and have openly boasted they will not turn out to the detriment of the labor unions. They are being arrested wherever found.

Outrages in Turkey.

Advices from Constantinople say that a state of siege has been proclaimed at Salonica (where the Ottoman bank was destroyed by dynamite and the Turkish post office and other buildings were attacked by bands of men armed with bombs) and extraordinary military precautions have been ordered throughout the empire as it is anticipated that similar anarchistic outrages may be attempted at Constantinople and elsewhere.

The greatest indignation has been aroused. The action of the Macedonian committee in directing attacks on foreign property evidently was with the view of provoking the intervention of the powers. It is feared the outrages may lead to massacres of Macedonians and Bulgarians by Mussulmans, who are in a state of dangerous excitement. An Italian naval division has been ordered to sail immediately for Salonica.

Steamships on Dead Sea.

Consul Winter reports the following: "The Dead Sea, which has been for thousands of years a desert-place in the midst of the wilderness, and on whose billows for centuries no oar has been seen, will soon have a steamship line. Increasing commerce and the stream of tourists necessitates a shorter route between Jerusalem and Kerah, the ancient capital of Moab. The first small steamboat, which was built in Hamburg, is about 100 feet long, and is on its way to Palestine. A second boat has already been ordered. The one which is already on its way is named 'Prodromos,' (forerunner). Besides being a freight boat, it has accommodation for thirty-four passengers. This new enterprise has been undertaken by the monks of a Greek monastery, while the administration lies in German hands.

Stole $42,000.

A dispatch from Mexico City says: The fact that the Wells Fargo Express Co. was robbed of $42,000 at Silac last Thursday has just come to light. A small safe, usually carried from the through Mexican Central train to the office and thence to the Guanajuato train by courier. On the morning of the robbery the express messenger warned the men to be careful of the safe, telling them it contained a large sum of money. Instead of taking the safe to the office the courier is said to have taken it to his home, called in a number of his friends and opened it. The money was extracted and distributed. About forty persons were arrested and all but $11,000 was recovered.

Sepoy Regiment Doomed.

A London cable says the Indian government are about to replace gradually all the Madras Sepoy regiments by the better fighting material to be found among the races of Upper India. The Second Madras Lancers will now be mustered out, and a new Indian lancer regiment will replace it. This is to be raised and commanded by Major and Brevet Lieut.-Colonel G. J. Younghusband, of the Guides Cavalry, a distinguished officer who has earned a great reputation in campaigns in Afghanistan, the Soudan, Burmah, Chitral and South Africa.

Disastrous Fire.

A disastrous forest fire raged in the Laurentian woods, 75 miles north of Montreal on April 30, wiping out the village of Morrison, which contained twelve houses and saw mills. The inhabitants had to flee for their lives, leaving farm implements and live stock to be destroyed. The fire covered an area of 45 miles.

The British post office telegraphic department has been experimenting for some time between Glasgow and London with a typewriter, an electrical instrument which, attached at the receiving end of the wire, delivers messages transmitted by the Wheatstone system at a rate of upward of 160 words per minute, typewritten in ordinary fashion on folio sheets. The experiments are said to have been attended by complete success.

Dr. Emily Howard Jennings Stowe, the first woman to practice medicine in Canada, passed away on April 30 at the residence of her daughter, Dr. Augusta Stowe-Gullen, in Toronto, after being ill three days.

CAUGHT RED HANDED.

The Oliver investigation commission have supplied a vast amount of interesting reading this week to the citizens of British Columbia. Sensation after sensation have been caused by the marvellous revelations brought to view and the astonishment and indignation of all thoughtful and honest people have been growing as steadily. The apparent contradiction as told by the different parties only adds perjury to fraud and intensifies the situation. That the Government at Victoria is, and has been, corrupt has long been the subject of general belief, but few dreamed that this corruption could be so easily detected or that the day of reckoning was so near at hand.

The action of His Honor, the Lieut. Governor in with holding his assent to the cancellation bill is now better understood since the results of the Oliver investigation are becoming known. His Honor is an astute politician, and probably had very correct suspicions regarding the whole transaction. By allowing the bill to remain unsigned greater influence was brought to bear upon the case and facts were thus brought to light which might otherwise never have been exposed. We believe that His Honor at no time was opposed to the measure, but so strongly favored it that he took this means of assisting the commission to expose the scandal.

B. C. has a well-defined scandal of its own now, beside which the famous Gamey case pales into insignificance; for, while the latter deals with thousands of dollars the former involves millions, and while suspicions in Ontario point strongly to only one man, our scandal includes high officials of the C.P.R., members of the government, private members of the legislature and other residents of the province. The recent exposures brought out by the commission made an adjournment of the house a necessity and the minority who opposed Col. Prior's motion to that effect have shown their disregard for gross violation of honor and principle. The house is now adjourned and the commission has full scope for prosecuting their investigations.

The plot is thickening and as each new revelation is brought out it becomes more difficult to fathom the depths of corruption into which at least some of our ministers have sunk. It is imperatively necessary that the inquiry be continued to the end and that advantage be taken of the present golden opportunity to purge our legislative halls of wholesale fraud, perjury and robbery. Sin

The stories told by Taylor and Wells agree in one respect at least,—as to the outline of the gigantic steal. The government would cancel the grants and the 600,000 acres would be given to a company of 20 men selected from the ranks of the two parties involved—the legislature of B.C. and the C.P.R. "When thieves fall out honest men get their due" is a wise saying which applies at the present juncture, and it is more than probable that fuller information as to the originator of this proposition will soon be gained.

Dunsmuir's evidence in the investigation apparently clears him of any actual personal dishonesty but he certainly has been guilty of gross negligence in taking so much for granted and in giving way to his colleagues, as well as in shielding the guilty parties after he became aware of the attempted steal.

Eberts, as attorney general and partner of Taylor who acted for the C.P.R. is in an unenviable position, and from present information it looks as if he had been one of the prime movers in the transaction, but with characteristic cunning he managed to get someone else to do the dirty work for him.

The plot itself is a very clumsy one and had it materialized it would have been only a matter of a short time until the facts would have leaked out. The people of the province would require to know why 600,000 acres of the most valuable land in the Dominion had come into the possession of a company of 20 individuals, and a hazy explanation would not be sufficient. The scheme certainly lacked brilliancy but it nevertheless deserves deep probing. The downfall of the present government is inevitable but no undue haste in precipitating the crisis, which might curtail the investigation, should be allowed. The infamous exposures will we trust, not only result in the dismissal of the present government but will prove a warning for years to come against political intrigue and fraud in the legislative halls of B.C.

THE bust up is at hand!

* * *

THE Prior Government cannot survive the shock.

* * *

IT requires a clever rogue to fool all the people all the time.

* * *

BENGOUGH is only a visitor to the province but he apparently understands the political situation pretty thoroughly.

* * *

* * *

The strike of the Montreal longshoremen is assuming serious proportions. The influence of American Union agitators is said to have stirred up the trouble and behind it all is the weight of the American shipping combine. The Montreal Board of Trade has prepared a bill to be introduced in parliament making it a criminal offense for any man to belong to a labor union which has not secured incorporation from the Dominion Government.

* * *

W. A. Galliher, M. P., make a strong appeal for lead protection in the house of Commons last week, while speaking on the budget debate. While admitting that the bounty system suggested by Fniance Minister Fielding would materially assist the lead miners he contended that it would not fully or permanently meet their requirements and he strongly urged the government to take steps towards raising the tariff to two and one eighth cents per lb. on pig lead and seven eighths of a cent on corroded lead.

* * *

THE Rossland Miner criticises the inactivity of E. C. Smith in the legislature. The Miner is fond of finding fault, but it has shown poor judgment in selecting the present time to chastise our member. Mr. Smith has, we believe, done more than any other member to bring this big land scandal to the eyes of the world. He is not a talker and he prefers to act, and leave the talking for abler men. He has been in close touch with Mr. Oliver and Smith Curtis all the way through but few will ever realize the important part he has taken.

* * *

THE action of the Board of Trade in seeking government aid to strengthen the bridge over the Elk River is timely. This bridge had a narrow escape last year and it is a foolish policy to risk the whole structure to save the small amount that would be required to make it comparatively safe. West Fernie contains a number of settlers, and large lumber interests are located on that side of the river. The carrying away of the bridge by the floods this year would involve very serious loss beyond the mere value of the bridge itself. The next difficulty, and judging from past experience it may prove a serious one, will the government make the necessary appropriation for this work as recommended by Mr. Armstrong?

* * *

Some action should be taken by the authorities to prevent dogs that ought to be tied up from running on the streets. This is a most embarrassing nuisance. We do not know that there is any particular law dealing with this specific annoyance but there should be no difficulty in convicting the owners of such objectionable dogs of causing a public nuisance. A more summary manner of ridding the town of this plague is to shoot the offending dogs down in their tracks. We believe our constables would not be overstepping their rights in taking such action. It was done during Ex-chief Barnes' regime and no exception was taken to his interpretation of the law. Common decency demands the lessening of this evil upon our public streets.

Will Build a Drain.

Government agent J. F. Armstrong was in town yesterday. While here he was interviewed by some prominent citizens on the necessity of a ditch being built to drain the low wet places in the blocks north and west of the corner of Hanson St. and Victoria Ave. Mr. Armstrong looked over the situation and decided that something should be done at once. He will ask for an appropriation of $200 for the purpose. The ditch that he has in view will extend from the FREE PRESS corner north for a couple of blocks beyond the hospital where there is a dip of some fifteen feet. The matter is an important one, and while an open ditch will not be a very elaborate way to drain a town the size of Fernie, it will certainly be a great source of satisfaction to have our mud holes drained dry "Any port in a storm." This must answer the purpose until the town is placed under a government of its own and as beggars cannot be choosers we are forced to accept with as good grace as possible the crumbs that fall from the legislative table at Victoria.

The Wisconsin Mining Company is at work. A. S. Trow is expected to arrive about the first of the month. They expect to put on a large force of men as soon as they have their saw mill on the ground.

Much regret is expressed in South East Kootenay over the death of John Grassick which occurred at Fort Steele on Friday last. Mr. Grassick was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1844, and came to Canada early in life.

Alex. McKenzie left yesterday for Pittsburgh, Pa., to attend the annual convention of conductors of Canada, United States and Mexico, as representative of the Crow's Nest division. He will be absent several weeks.

It is said that the place known as Meadow Creek, where the East Kootenay Lumber Company has one its mills is to have a station and agent, and be named Ryan by the C. P. R. in honor of "Uncle Jim" Ryan, chairman of the board of directors of the lumber company. William Simmons, now in charge of the freight shed here will be agent.

Cinderella Ball.

The ball held on Monday evening Mar. 4th was a very successful event. About 80 people were present and all enjoyed the event very much. The Cinderella ball was gotten up by the same committee who arranged for the Easter ball, the surplus funds of the latter being used to defray expenses. As the name implies, the party broke up early in the evening and the regular refreshments were considered unnecessary.

Died of Pneumonia

James Scott, formerly of Cranbrook died at the Fernie hospital on Saturday evening. Mr. Scott had gone to work for the C.P.R. at The Loop and had only been there one day when he contracted pneumonia. He was delayed by a slide and he was brought the last five miles on a hand car. When he reached here he was in a hopeless condition and he lived only four hours. He was buried by Rev. D. L. Gordon on Monday. He was a young man of 27 years, but little more is known of him here.

Roads and Bridges.

The executive of the Board of Trade met in Joyce's hall on Wednesday evening. The matter of improving the bridge across the Elk River was taken up and a committee comprising Messrs. Joyce, Rennie and Cree were appointed to interview Mr. Armstrong with a view to having something done before high water. They were also instructed to represent to Mr. Armstrong the advantage of building the road to Morrissey on the west side of the Elk river on account of the settlers on that side. This committee will report to the general meeting Monday evening. We understand that the Government Agent favors the raising of the bridge and that he will take necessary action at once. He is opposed to changing the route of the Morrissey road and it is altogether probable that no change will be made this year.

To Build Electric Line

The work of building the line for the electric light current from the mines to the town will be commenced on Monday under the supervision of W. W. Brown. The poles for this line were distributed last Fall but the approach of Winter delayed the construction. It is estimated that eight weeks will see the line completed and the town lighted from the new power house. A vast improvement is looked for in the new power for the lights. The power of the present system is limited to 1,300 lights while the new dynamos have 5,000 light power. An advantage will also be gained by the use of the alternating system instead of the direct system now in use. The latter gives a much better light near the power house than in more remote places, while in the alternating system 110 volts are transformed at different points thus distributing the power evenly.

Bengough Concert

J. W. Bengough, the famous cartoonist and lecturer, delighted a Fernie audience on Tuesday evening in Princess hall. Mr. Bengough is a clever manipulator of the crayon and considering the short time at his disposal in Fernie to gather local material for his sketches the results were marvellously true to nature. The sketches were interspersed with a running fire of wit and humor. Two political cartoons were very interesting. The first entitled, "I raise you $500 represented Sir Wilfred Laurier playing a game of poker with John Chinaman. Sir Wilfred wears a very determined expression and he is saying, "I raise you $500", to the much frightened Chinaman. The second dealt with B.C. politics. The C.P.R. land scandal was represented to be a large bomb in the act of exploding, the force of which throws Premier Prior high into mid air. The gallant Colonel wears a hopeless expression, quite becoming the title, "A Bust Up." The concert was a financial success. Mr. Bengough may always be sure of a hearty welcome to Fernie.

Infringement of a Trade Mark

In an action in the High Court of Justice for Ontario, recently tried before Chancellor Boyd, at Toronto, the Slater Shoe Co., and Chas. E. Slater, president of Montreal, makers of the famous Slater Shoe, obtained a judgment forever restraining F. C. Wilkinson, a boot and shoe dealer, of Owen Sound, from advertising, exposing, or offering for sale or selling boots or shoes not made by the Slater Shoe Co., as "Slater Shoes," "Slater Goods" or the Slater Shoe." The Chancellor, also ordered Wilkinson to pay the heavy costs of the action. The Chancellor, after hearing the evidence, decided that no one except the Slater Shoe Co., had a right to use the name "Slater Shoes," "Slater Goods," "The Slater Shoe," or any similar names in connection with boots and shoes, and that Wilkinson had no right to use any name or names in connection with boots and shoes which might enable him to pass of a shoe not of the company's make, as being of their make, nor in any way to reap the benefit of the reputation which the Slater Shoe has acquired throughout the Dominion of Canada.

The Genuine Slater

Is positively the best shoe value offered for sale in Canada. You may include the United States and that will pretty near cover the world for fine shoe making. There are shoes sold elsewhere at $4 50 and $6 a pair that carry no more style, are no better fitting and will not wear as well as the genuine Slater Shoe at $4. "Why is it?" you ask. "Just because they are branded with an American stamp."

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. EROMBURG.

The face under the straw hat was somewhat thinner; the fresh red of the cheeks had faded to a delicate pink, the brown eyes seemed to have become larger, but they did not look so questioningly into the world; there was in them an expression as if longing for something.

She wore a dark, simple, but exquisitely fitting dress; gloves and boots were faultless; and in her hand she he'd a parasol with an ivory handle that Hortense had bought for her in a bazaar in Florence.

The gentleman beside her, in a gray traveling suit, a field-glass hanging over his shoulder on a strap, and his straw hat in his hand, now turned his blonde-bearded face toward her, and springing up, cried:

"Is it you, fraulein? And here I have been sitting ever so long near you without any suspicion of who it was. You must blame this wonderful 'Madonna' for it, and pardon my seeming rudeness."

"Oh, heavens! is he here too?" she thought.

He still stood before her. "When did you ladies come to Dresden?" he asked.

"We changed our minds and went to the Italian lakes. We have been here four weeks."

He laughed merrily, and raised his finger in a threatening manner.

"That is what they call, in military tactics, doubling on the foe."

Behind the playfulness in his sparkling blue eyes lay a certain earnestness of purpose. "What I wish I carry through," Lucie seemed to read in them.

"How long does Frau von Lowen intend to remain here?"

"It is very undecided," she returned, rising, and with a slight bow she turned toward the door. In the next room Hortense came toward her looking very bright and happy. She was just rolling her linen apron together.

"Come," said she, "I should enjoy a walk!"

They were descending the broad stairs arm in arm when Lucie felt the young baroness's arm tremble, and looking in her face saw she was deathly pale. Coming toward them was a tall man; he wore a handsome brown summer suit, had dark eyes and hair, and in spite of his civilian's clothes, unmistakably belonged to the army. On the broad landing of the stairs they all met. Lucie noticed that he turned aside with a very low bow, and a deep red flush passed over his countenance.

Hortense did not seem to have noticed his bow; she had turned her head in the other direction.

At the foot of the stairs she turned hastily toward the cloak-room and took her light jacket on her arm.

"Come," she said to Lucie, and tried in vain as she was walking to draw her gloves over the trembling fingers.

"What is the matter with you, Hortense?" asked Lucie, anxiously. "Who was that gentleman?"

"Wilken," was the reply, in a lifeless tone.

Lucie involuntarily seized her arm as if to support her, and so they crossed the square to the hotel.

"The carriage is waiting, Frau Baronne," said the porter.

"I am not going to drive," said she; "pay the man and send him off—unless—perhaps you will drive, Lucie?"

The girl looked at her reproachfully.

"I stay with you."

Hortense threw her things down in the salon, and seated herself in the corner of the sofa.

"My poor Hortense!" said Lucie, tenderly.

Frau von Lowen motioned hastily with her hand for her to be quiet.

CHAPTER XV.

The floor seemed to burn under Lucie's feet; if she only could, she would make Hortense pack her trunks at once and go away with her, even to Vienna—only go!

Just then there was a knock at the door, and the waiter entered with a visiting-card.

"The gentleman wishes to pay his respects to the ladies."

Lucie looked hesitatingly at Hortense.

"Do you wish to receive a visit?" she asked.

The young baroness grew pale.

"Who is it?" she gasped.

"Waldemar Weber—our traveling acquaintance of Venice." She sunk back.

"I regret very much," she said; and the waiter disappeared.

"I was going to tell you, Hortense," began Lucie, "that he is really here. I met him by the Sistine Madonna; he seemed quite vexed that we had sent him on the wrong track. Heaven knows how he has discovered where we were."

Hortense did not answer. So Lucie went over to her, bent down and looked in her face. "Now it is I who beg you, Hortense; let us go to Vienna, but at once. Yes?"

May She Fare Well.

The conductor said, "Lady, your fare!"
She paid him, and so
On his way did he go

A DOG IN THE PROFESSION

By Lovett De Wolfe

Copyright, 1901, by T. C. McClure

The call of fifteen minutes had been given long ago, and Jimmy must be tied up. The girl who was going to be an actress looked doubtfully about the small dressing room in quest of an immovable piece of furniture. Jimmy had an impetuous disposition which had not yet adapted itself to the limitations of the stage, and the girl felt that therein existed a bond of sympathy between them. She had received her name of the "girl who was going to be an actress" from the leading man. It was somewhat surprising, coming from him, for the title was flattering and sounded clever, and the leading man, being a decided genius, was emphatically the reverse of clever.

The girl finally concluded that the water faucet was the only thing in the room to which she could safely attach the dog's chain, and she picked Jimmy up in her arms to explain the matter to him. She was invariably courteous in her dealings with animals and the prompter, though at times offhand with others.

"I'm afraid you won't like it, Jimmy, dear," she said. "You never do like being tied, for some reason or other, and the worst of it is that if you jump and pull, as you generally do, you will turn on the water, and that will worry you, because you won't understand it. In many ways, Jimmy, you are a very human dog, you see." She put him down gently and fastened the chain to his collar, while he licked her hand. "But I shan't be gone long, Jimmy, dear. This is a short act, and you can enjoy yourself thinking of how glad you'll be when I come back."

The girl fastened the other end of the chain to the faucet, and as she did so came the call of "Orchestra!" Glancing at herself in the glass, she laughed. "I worship you, Jimmy, but I can't conscientiously say that you're a help when one's making up."

Jimmy stared up at her in wrapt adoration as she gave her chin a saucy touch with the powder puff. This accomplished, she stooped and kissed him on the nose. Then she hurried out of the dressing room, forgetting with proper artistic negligence to pull the door to.

The leading man was surveying the house through an eyehole in the curtain. By and by he came over to her. The leading man was Jimmy's owner, and when he remembered it the responsibility weighed on him.

She looked up at him. She was ready for the rising of the curtain and was sitting in the approved ingenue fashion on a footstool in front of an electric light fire.

"Quite safe," she answered, "since he is tied to the water faucet. But he is probably in a state of active rebellion by this time, having been alone fully five minutes."

The leading man nodded like Hamlet at the skull, "Jimmy's a social being." Then the orchestra began the curtain raiser, and he slipped into the wings. His entrance was not until later. The girl began to think of her first lines, for she opened the act. She also opened the next and was always afraid she would begin the play at the second.

As the girl was standing on the plain deal side of a purling fountain during the second scene, listening for her cue, the villain came up to her. She knew the cue would be given in a moment and therefore did not wish to engage in conversation, so she smiled at him vaguely and not encouragingly. But it was no use, because he was not a polished villain, but a villain of the deepest dye. "I'll tell you a joke," he whispered. "Jimmy's loose!" The girl listened for her cue no more.

"What?"

The villain nodded. "Be funny, won't it, if he follows Penfield on at his next entrance? It's that tragic one of his."

The girl looked around. There was no one near to search for Jimmy or get word to the leading man. The latter was on the stage, happily unconscious of the impending canine anticlimax. Suddenly she realized that her cue was being given. She pulled herself together mentally and went on.

During the scene her mind worked double. The only person she had to act with was the villain, and she knew it was useless to appeal to him. Her one hope lay in finding Jimmy during a five minutes' exit she had later, when she would reappear in hat and coat. Her scene with the villain never seemed so long, and she made her exit with a more exuberant sense of relief than even on the opening night, when every scene finished was bliss unspeakable.

She came off on the left and rushed over to the leading man's dressing room, which was on the stage, but on the right side. The door was ajar, and the girl whistled. Then she called, "Jimmy, Jimmy, darling," she murmured beguilingly, but there followed no impetuous rush of little paws, so she knew he was not there. She ran back across the stage, searching anxiously for the dog, and then upstairs to her own dressing room. She snatched up the hat and cape which she was to wear, and as she put the hat on and ran the hatpin through her hair continued to look about for Jimmy. No, he was not there, but the chain was. The girl clinched her teeth angrily. Some one had unfastened him.

She ran down again and stopped at her entrance door, and while she listened to see how far off her cue was she looked for the basket which she was to carry on. Yes, there was the basket, and her cue was easily three minutes away. The leading man had not yet begun his famous business of walking up the stage in silence, flinging open the center doors and holding that position for the applause which always followed his picturesque calisthenic effort. After this he would deliver a sentimental speech preparatory to the girl's entrance.

She ran across behind the stage again. Jimmy might have wandered into the property room, Props being a particular friend of his. The property room, however, held nothing more interesting than Props himself, who was smoking a peaceful pipe, with his feet elevated against the sign, "No Smoking Here." Props had a sardonic sense of humor and no respect for the manager of the house, who had had the sign placed there.

On her way back the girl stopped for a last despairing little whistle at the leading man's door and as she did so noticed that all was still on the stage. The leading man must be—yes, just at that moment the doors were flung open, and she could see him standing before the opening, his shoulders heaving with the agitation of high class melodramatic emotion. The girl caught her breath in alarm. As the applause came she started to cross behind the "road drop," which backed the open doors. She would just have time to reach her entrance, but as she turned she saw that another admirer of the leading man had seen him and that the grand catastrophe was at hand, for Jimmy was trotting from the other direction straight toward the actor and the sentimental speech was just beginning!

The girl was back across the stage behind the "road drop" in a flash. The leading man was pathetically declaiming that life was not worth living and that he would seek death in a foreign clime by the very next steamer. Jimmy was already coming down the little passage formed by the drop and the back of the set before the big doors were reached. She knew she could not call, for to do so effectively she would be obliged to pitch her voice above the actor's.

There was but one way, and if she missed the dog!

She made a step into the passage and, setting down the basket, threw herself as quietly as possible at full length on the ground. She had not missed. She clutched Jimmy as his nose was within four inches of the door.

And the next moment she realized what she had entirely forgotten—that the speech was the last before her entrance and that her cue was near.

With Jimmy locked in tightest amorous embrace she picked herself up and got round to her entrance. Although she did not express her hopes in language, she had a conviction that Providence had selected some one to drop from the clouds and take Jimmy, now that she had so gloriously captured him. She slipped her basket on her arm and looked round wildly and as she did so observed that every one was on the stage but herself. Surely, surely some stray scene shifter would—And then she heard her cue being given. The girl who was going to be an actress lifted the lid of her basket, thrust Jimmy in and walked on.

The leading man saw her liberate Jimmy after the act, and so she had to tell him the story. He was furious with wrath of elaborate eloquence.

Next night he came to her again when she was sitting on her stool before the electric light fire and made the solemn announcement:

"I've given Jimmy away."

The girl had loved Jimmy, but perhaps it was for the best. "Poor little Jimmy!" she said softly. "I'm afraid a dog is out of place in the profession."

"Perhaps because there are so many of them there already," said the leading man, his eyes shooting lightning in the direction of the villain. And the girl nodded.

The curtain raiser was beginning. The leading man slipped into the wings, and the girl who was going to be an actress began to think of her opening lines.

Staggering the Lecturer.

His audience was inclined to be skeptical, and there was quite a flutter when the lecturer spoke of the distance between the earth and the moon.

"That feller's a fule," whispered the village wiseacre to his next door neighbor, "and Aw'll prove it when 'e's done spouting!"

Accordingly, when the lecture came to an end, the old villager rose to his feet and declared his intention of "axing a question."

"Very well, fire away!" smiled the lecurer.

"Wot Aw wants to know is, how far is it frae here to N.?" mentioning the name of another little village at some distance.

"Really," gasped the lecturer, "I couldn't tell you. I've never been to N."

"Just soa!" came the triumphant retort. "Then hoo mony toimes has ta been to the moon?"—London Tit-Bits.

TOM DAWSON, Private Secretary

By W. H. DURHAM

Copyright, 1901, by W. H. Durham

Thomas Dawson was private secretary to the head of a downtown wholesale house. Old Jackson used to say that the house could not get along without Dawson, yet that personage had been in the employ of the firm only a short year, was but twenty-four years old and knew nothing of the business when he entered. But he had been a reporter and a good one. That means, as everybody knows, that he knew a little of everything in the world and a great deal more. So when he applied for a position with one of the most unique letters old Jackson had ever received the old man, after struggling through a wilderness of bad writing, broke into a hearty laugh and sent for him.

"You think you can fill the position that is open, do you?" growled old Jackson at Dawson when that young gentleman appeared. "Do you know that this is a most confidential place and that, while knowledge of the business and lines we handle is not absolutely necessary, yet to a man of not more than average intellect who is inexperienced the position is impossible?"

"Why, of course I can hold it. Do you suppose I would come snooping around here if I didn't think you needed me?"

Jackson had been so used to having men quail before him, especially when seeking a position, that this breezy answer floored him. But he liked it.

"Well, young man, I will just give you ten minutes' trial."

It was nearly noon when Dawson had presented himself, and he now said:

"Very well. I will spend the ten minutes getting lunch and then return."

He was gone before the old man could stop him. He left the door open as he went out, a trick for which a man had been fired only the day before. Old Jackson seemed to shrink into himself until he was almost sitting on his back, staring out the open door at the stalwart back of his new secretary as it went down the long aisle and out the front door.

"Bang!" went the old man's fist on the bell. A huge negro, dressed like a comic valentine, sprang into the office.

"Dolefulness," roared the old man, "did you see that young fellow go out?"

"Yes, sah; I saw him," said the black.

"Well, when that fellow comes back kill him."

Dolefulness disappeared as rapidly as he had come, and the old gentleman went out to lunch. When he returned, Dawson was seated at a desk looking over the mail which had just arrived.

"What the dev— Where's that Dolefulness?"

"Who—the nigger?" said Dawson, continuing to sort the mail. "He's in the closet."

With a bang the door of the coat-room in the old man's private office hit the wall. Dolefulness, bound and gagged, tumbled on the floor.

"Well!" gasped Jackson, sinking into a chair and mopping his forehead. It was 10 degrees below zero outside, and he had been kicking at the firemen all day. "What does this mean?"

"Oh, nothing," said Dawson. "The nigger got kinder gay when I came from lunch, and I just put him on ice. Shall I release him?"

"Dolefulness," Jackson thundered when the negro got on his feet, "what does this mean? Didn't I tell you to kill this man if he came back again?"

"Yes, sah, yo' did, but he seed me fust just as I was goin' to hit him wid my billy."

"What did he do?"

"Jest grabbed me by de collah; he held me wid one hand and tied me wid de odder."

"Stand up," to Dawson. He saw that the negro was a foot and a half higher than his private secretary. "That'll do, Dolefulness. You may go."

"Now, sir," said Dawson, "if you will be so kind as to give me a word or two of advice I will proceed with business. I have stacked the letters marked personal on your desk and sent the others to the heads of the various departments. Is that right?"

"Say, you—you, who's boss here, you or me? How did you know who the heads of departments were?"

"That's easy. I noticed the names of them, together with their departments, emblazoned in box car letters on the doors of their offices in the hall."

"Do you mean to tell me that you have only passed down this aisle three times and know all the heads of departments by name?"

"Certainly. What else are my eyes for?"

Jackson didn't answer. He looked at his new employee a moment, took his seat and began to open his mail. Dawson picked up a paper and began to read. Directly he said:

"By the way, Thomas."

"Yes, sir," said the new secretary.

"I wish you would go and tell Miss Agnew, the stenographer I always have, to come here. You may spend the time looking over the store. Come back in an hour."

Dawson looked the store over from top to bottom in that hour. He introduced himself to every man in the place and brought a smile to the face of each. A thinly veiled compliment here, a well told bit of his newspaper experience there, made every man his friend.

When he reached the office, Mr. Jackson was gone, but on Dawson's desk reposed a note.

"Well," he said, "I guess it's up to me. I supposed from the way the old man acted that he was going to keep me, but he concluded that he could write better than he talked after all, and here is where—wow!"

Dawson had opened the envelope, and the last exclamation was caused by the following:

Mr. Dawson—You have intruded yourself into this office and shoved my nigger ("put that n-i-g-g-e-r," Mr. Jackson had said to the stenographer) into the closet. You have also made yourself familiar without any warrant or direction with my whole store. You are retained at a salary, to begin with, of $5,000 per year.

EBEN JACKSON.

All this had happened a year ago. Now the old man was furious. He arrived at the store fifteen minutes early and cursed every man in the place black and blue.

Dawson's first duty in the morning consisted of sorting and opening the mail, and he had so arranged matters with the postman as to meet him at the door, taking the mail to his desk himself. That caused him to be ready for business as soon as there was anything doing. He followed his plan this morning.

"Good morning, Mr. Jackson!" he said cheerily as he took his seat. "This is certainly a fine day."

There came a gurgle from the old man's throat, not unlike a column of water through a pipe too small. "For funerals," he at last managed to say.

Dawson was used to this and continued to sort the mail. Finally he took the personal ones across the room and laid them on Mr. Jackson's desk.

"Thomas," the boss said, "take a seat. I want to hold a heart to heart conversation with you."

"Here's where I get it," sighed the boy.

"My daughter"—Dawson started—"has told me that you have proposed marriage to her and that she has accepted you. Is that true?"

"I never dispute the word of a woman, sir."

Mr. Jackson had been holding in pretty well, but this was too much.

"Do you mean to tell me that you have dared"— Thus far he got and choked. Sput, sput, sputter came from his throat until Dawson said:

"Par-don me, sir, but some day that fit will kill you."

"I want you to go, sir! This instant you leave my employ! Go!"

"Certainly, sir," was the reply. "But before I go"—here he reached behind his desk and produced the same rope with which he had tied Dolefulness—"just a minute."

He grasped Mr. Jackson by the collar, swiftly bound his hands, thrust a handkerchief into his mouth and anchored it with one abstracted from Mr. Jackson's pocket, thrust him into the closet which had proved so useful before, locked the door, and Mr. Jackson heard him whistle.

It was only an hour that the boss had to stay in his cooped up jail, but it seemed a year. He suddenly heard the whistle again and was ready to get down on his knees to his unruly employee when the door suddenly opened. He happened to be straining upon it at the time and as a consequence fell headlong into the room. He was quickly released by Dawson.

"That's all right, my boy," faltered the employer. "I won't fire you again—not until I get a corps of policemen."

"That's all right, sir. If you desire that I go now, I will do so; only"—and he poked his head out of the office door and brought in the girl who was at the bottom of the trouble—"allow me to introduce my wife."

The old man was too full for utterance. Finally he reached out and grasped them by the hand. Pulling one on each knee, he began to pat them on the back, while a smile of contentment stole over his face.

The Movement of Population.

If the progress of population had been continuous from the remote periods of antiquity, it is evident that the numbers of mankind would be much greater than they are, and the globe would be already overstocked with human beings. But other causes not less mysterious in their operation have checked that progress. Many of the populous countries of antiquity have become depopulated and apparently unable to support life. It is uncertain whether at the present moment the population of the globe is greater than it was 2,000 or 3,000 years ago. There is congestion in Europe, in India and in China. There are innumerable tribes in central Africa on whom even the slave trade makes no perceptible impression.

But the vast plains of Asia, which swarmed with men under the Assyrian, Babylonian and Persian empires, are deserted. The civilization of Europe is no longer threatened by the eastern hordes which swept over the Roman empire in the earlier centuries of the Christian era. But that prodigious migration laid the foundation of the states of modern Europe.—Edinburgh Review.

Napoleon and His Belief.

Napoleon, man of iron though he was, gave great credence to the tales of the supernatural and was very superstitious. He placed great faith in an amulet charm which he always carried about with him. Another of his superstitions was to hum the famous air, "Marlborough s'en va-t'-en guerre," whenever he mounted his charge for battle. Strangely enough, at the hour of his great conflict M. de Las Cases tells us that the dying man hummed the old air. The Empress Josephine shared her husband's belief in magic, all the more because the predictions made to her in her creole childhood were fulfilled to the letter in a manner calculated to impress even the most hardened skeptic.

AN OPEN LETTER TO MOTHERS.

We are permitted to make public the following letter, which is a fair sample of hundreds written by mothers throughout Canada praising Baby's Own Tablets:

Dunbar, Ont., March 18, 1903.

Several weeks ago my baby was very crose and ill owing to troubles common to children when teething. A correspondent highly recommended Baby's Own Tablets, saying she would use no other medicine for her baby. I sent for a box, used them according to directions and must say that I have found them the best medicine for a teething child I have ever tried. One Tablet every other day keeps my baby well and I am sure of my rest at night. I echo the words of my friend and say "they are just splendid."

THAT WEARY SPRING FEELING

Is Quickly Disposed of by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Nearly everyone needs toning up in the spring. Some are altogether ill, others just feel fagged and worn out. They have little inclination to work and less to eat. They are simply useless.

Did you ever stop to think that there is a reason for all this, and that if the complaint is attacked intelligently it will yield readily, the lazy feeling will depart and in its place will come vigor and energy and place will come vigor and energy and appetite.

It is the kidneys that are not doing their work. They need to be toned up with Dodd's Kidney Pills Why? Because they are being overworked and need help.

In the winter the bady fortifies itself against cold. With the coming of spring it throws off this fortification which consists of extra tissue, and additional waste matter is given to the blood to carry away. If the Kidneys are in condition to do extra work this waste material is quickly expelled from the body in the usual way.

But if the Kidneys are tired or worn out the waste remains in the blood and the circulation is clogged. The remedy is simple. Dodd's Kidney Pills put the Kidneys in good working order. The Kidneys in good working order insure pure blood and good circulation—ensure brightness and vigor and energy. Thousands of people will tell you so, can tell you so out of their own experience.

Many a true word is spoken in jest, and many a false statement is made in deadly earnest.

MUSCLES OF THE EYE.

A System of Exercise by Which They May Be Strengthened.

"Are your eyes sore? After reading do they feel as if they were crossed and does it seem as if a numb swelling nestled between the brows?

"In three cases out of five of eye trouble there is no ailment with the orb itself, but only with the muscles which control its movements," said a noted oculist. "The eye muscles have become flabby and weak and require toning up and strengthening. This may be done by eye gymnastics.

"Whenever the eye is in use its muscles are brought into play. Look at an object in the distance or look at another at close range, and the eye performs an imperceptible movement either of sinking deeper or of rising out of the socket in order to adapt itself to the range, exactly as a telescope is lengthened or shortened for various distances. Every time the eye turns to the left or to the right or upward or downward it is controlled by muscles that perform merely the mechanical part of turning the organ of vision. It is in the decline of these muscles where most people ought first of all to seek their complaint.

"Nothing is simpler than to remedy this evil. Stand erect, gaze straight ahead and throughout the entire exercises hold the head in this position, making it necessary for the eyes alone and not the muscles of the neck to come into play during the ensuing gymnastics. Hold a dime between two fingers and extend the arm straight in front as far as possible, at the same time riveting the gaze on the coin. Always looking at the dime, approach the coin gradually until it is within four inches of the eyes. Then extend to the original position and repeat the movement. It will strengthen the muscles controlling the eyes on range adjustment.

"For the second exercise keep the head in the same rigid position as before and, holding the coin extended, keep the eyes fastened on it and move the arm as far to one side and as far to the other as the eye can follow the arc of the sweep.

"Holding head and arm and coin as at first, raise the arm so high that the eyes are unable longer to see the coin unless by an elevation of the chin. Then lower the hand with the coin similarly until it disappears from vision.

"Perform these exercises faithfully, and in two or three days the eyes will be brighter and the sight better. Crow's feet will disappear, and the youthful vigor when the eye was in its highest state of efficiency will be restored."

What Causes Shyness.

The manner in which shyness shows itself differs greatly in different people. Sometimes it is caused by inexperience and the want of self confidence that comes from knowing little or nothing of the ways and customs of society, and sometimes, too, it arises from self consciousness and is simply vanity under another name and in a different guise. It may sound harsh to say that the shyness of many people is caused by their conceit, but it is a fact all the same. They are always thinking of themselves, wondering if they are making a good impression or looking their best. They imagine that every one is remarking them, and if not quite certain of their surroundings they get hot and nervous, flurried, awkward and uncomfortable. If they would only think less of themselves, they would be far happier and also far pleasanter companions.

Food For Nervous Individuals.

As a rule salt meat is not adapted to the requirements of nervous people, as nutritious juices go into the brine to a great extent. Fish of all kinds is good for them. Raw eggs, contrary to the common opinion, are not as digestible as those that have been well cooked. Good bread, sweet butter and lean meat are the best food for the nerves. People troubled with insomnia and nervous starting from sleep and sensations of falling can often be cured by limiting themselves to a diet of milk alone for a time. An adult should take a pint at a meal and take four meals a day. People with weakened nerves require frequently a larger quantity of water than those whose nerves and brains are strong. It aids the digestion by making the food soluble, and seems to have a direct tonic effect.

The Organ of Taste In Insects.

The antennæ of insects do not appear to contain any organ of taste, for wasps and ants quite readily took into their mouths poisonous and unpleasant food, even swallowing enough to make themselves ill, while some bees and cockroaches fell a prey to the temptation of alum, epsom salts and other nauseous foods placed in their way. These substances were not, however, swallowed, but were soon spat out, the creatures sputtering angrily, as if disgusted with the taste.

A Shallow Subterfuge.

"Why is that congressman so opposed to beautifying the city of Washington?"

"Well, he's constantly posing as a servant of the people, and he's afraid his constituents will get an idea that the servants' quarters are too luxurious."

Patient.

"Well, Jones is certainly a patient man, with a temper hard to ruffle."

THE SPRING FEELING.

There are few people who have not experienced what is aptly termed the spring feeling. Languor and weariness, loss of appetite, touches of indigestion, pimples and irritation of the skin. They all come with the spring. All these ills are banished by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They enrich the blood, brace up the nerves, and charm away all spring weariness Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the best tonic medicine in the world. They make new, rich, red blood; strengthen men and women and make the roses of health bloom on pallid cheeks. Here is proof: Miss Catharine Johnston, Gardner Mines, N. B., says:—I was very much run down and so weak that I would frequently have to lie down. My appetite was poor and food distasteful. I often suffered from headaches, and the least exertion left me completely used up. I used a few boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and since then I have felt like a new person. I do not know of any medicine equal to these pills."

In this climate a tonic is an absolute necessity in spring, and health will be gained and money saved by using only Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Don't take a substitute or something else said to be "just as good." If in doubt, send to Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and the pills will be mailed post paid at 50c per box or six boxes for $2,50.

MORRISSEY

From Our Own Correspondent.

J. Manning and his crew are putting in an other compressor this week.

Jas. Kane, a locomotive engineer from the G.N., is running the new locomotive to the mines.

Mr. Tompkins, of Seattle, Wash., has moved his family here where they will reside in future.

Messrs. Tonkin and Stockett were business visitors to Morrissey Mines in the middle of the week.

Since the disaster at Frank, a number of miners from the illfated town have come here seeking employment in the mines.

Rev. Stony organized a Sunday School last Sunday at the residence of Mr. Hal pin. The school will be under the auspices of the Church of England.

The coal company will commence work in the near future with a large force of force of men on the new water works system to supply the town with water.

Notices are posted announcing a meeting of the miners at the C.P.R. camp on the 10th. The notice states that they will be addressed by prominent union men.

Mrs. Halpin has been around with a subscription soliciting funds with which to buy literature for the new Sunday School. She has been very successful in this line.

Mr. C. Simister, mine manager for the coal company at Morrissey Mines, was in Fernie on Wednesday and Thursday as a witness against John Krall charged with having tired a shot in the mines contrary to the rules and regulations governing mines.

(From The Despatch)

E. Wrigglesworth of Fernie left on the 6th for Michel where he has the contract for the erection of 150 coke ovens. The work will be commenced at once When in full blast he will have 50 men on the job and the work will be completed by Oct 1st. Mr. Wriglesworth will personally superintend the work during the summer. He took about twenty men with him from Fernie.

Wm. Dick who with several men and horses has been employed at cutting cedar posts at Coal Creek near Fernie, moved his outfit to Morrissey Mines on Tuesday where he will be engaged in general team work. At present he is busy excavating the cellar for the Windsor Hotel. The tie-up an the C P.R. at Frank has prevented Mr. Dick from shipping his posts to the prairie as he was counting on.

A deal which involves considerable capital took place on Monday between the Hayes Lumber Company, of Elkmouth, and Coward & Son, of Fernie. An arrangement has been entered into by which the latter takes over the output of the former's saw-mill at that point. The machinery from the Coal City Planing mill at Fernie will be transferred to the new plant that will be erected in close proximity to the saw-mill at Elkmouth as soon as the orders on hand are rushed off which may take a week or ten days. The Hayes Lumber Company have during the winter gathered together an immense pile of logs, which, it is estimated, will make 5,000,000 feet of lumber. Their saw-mill is thoroughly up-to-date and has a capacity of between 35,000 and 40,000 feet per 10 hours. The planing mill by running extra time will be able to dress the lumber. Messrs. Coward & Son have the disposal of their output and being on the Northern and within a few miles of its junction with the C. P. R., splendid markets are within easy distance, and Morrissey Mines will also be a good market this summer for building material.

POLICE COURT

Constables Walker, Routh and Kummer made a raid on the houses of ill-fame on Wednesday night and captured nine frequenters. They were placed in the lock-up and came up for trial before Stipendiary Magistrate Forbes on Thursday morning. One was allowed to go on suspended sentence and the others were all found guilty. Seven were fined from $5 to $25 each according to their guilt and one who is an old offender was given two months at hard labor in the Fernie lock-up.

Jos. Goulet was arrested by Constable Walker in the Waldorf Hotel on the charge of theft. Goulet who had been employed as porter in the hotel, was discharged. Suspicion was aroused by the large sized bundle he was taking away as his personal belongings and an examination of it by the constable revealed a large quantity of goods belonging to the proprietors of the hotel. Among other things were a lamp and 2 boxes of cigars. He was tried before Magistrate Forbes on Thursday and was given two month in the Fernie lock-up.

Harry Schultz and M. Toll went fishing one day this week and were so successful that they commenced selling their surplus fish of which they had nearly 400 lbs. As they had no licences they were asked to explain their action before the magistrate on Thursday. They pleaded ignorance of the law and were allowed to go with a warning.

The man brought in by Constable Henderson from Michel last week suspected of being a lunatic has apparently recovered his mental balance. He has been confined in the jail and Dr. Higgins who closely watched him has almost concluded that his temporary derangement was caused by alcoholic drink.

Firebrick Manufacture

We have seen some excellent specimens of firebricks made from silica obtained from Mr. Todhunter's silica claim at Marysville. Some of these were made by experts in Chicago who claim that the bricks are second to none. They have been subjected to the severest tests and have proved all that could be required of firebricks. Mr. Todhunter has also manufactured some very good specimens in the coke ovens, where the heat is not as gradual as it should be for the best results. An industry of this nature would prove one of great value to this section as a large supply is required for coke oven manufacture.

Morrissey Mines, B.C.

Owned by the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co., Which Includes James J. Hill.

The new town is situated at the noted Morrissey Coal Mines to handle the product of which, the Crow's Nest Southern railroad was constructed from Jennings, Montana.

In addition to the immense pay rolls of the Coal Co., a few years hence the government reserve of 50,000 acses will most likely be thrown open and developed, which will give Morrissey Mines a large additional pay roll and substantial increase in population.

The first day's sale of lots amounted to over $45,000 and the bulk of this money was invested by local people, who have had a chance to make a thorough investigation of the merits of the new town and surrounding country.

Persons seeking investment should call and look over the ground.

STARTLING EVIDENCE

order-in-council was passed with the full executive council present, viz: Dunsmuir, premier; Wells, Eberts and himself. He was not present at the meetings on the 2nd or 10th of August, when the B. C. Southern grants were cancelled. The executive was attended by Turner, McBride, Wells and Eberts Prentice was not present when the question of transferring the B. C. Southern grants to the Columbia & Western was discussed. The instructions to Wells by three of the four ministers then composing the government, and given by the then premier (Dunsmuir) were positive that he should not surrender the grants unless a line was guaranteed to Spence' Bridge and certain surrender of other lands made; in other words, unless the province received a very good quid pro quo, in view of the fact that these lands proposed to be granted were then known to possess an extra value. It was on account of the knowledge of this extra value that the government had refused to grant these as lieu lands for the B. C. Southern. He was away when Wells returned, but when he (Prentice) returned, he learned that the company had refused to accept the terms authorized by Dunsmuir, and Wells had brought back the grants. The delay occurred in cancelling the grants because Wells was ill. The Canadian Northern matters were receiving special attention, and this matter was allowed to drift.

On March 15th, Dunsmuir was pressing Wells to deliver the grants to the company, and in explanation of his reluctance to do so, Wells had confided to him (Prentice) how he had been approached in Montreal, which statement he (Prentice) at once communicated to Dunsmuir, who ordered the cancellation in view of this information. He had understood that negotiations ended when the company failed to accept the conditions presented by Wells and could not explain how Dunsmuir was afterwards pressing for the delivery of the grants to the company.

A SERIOUS CHARCE.

John Krell, of Morrissey Mines. Carried Matches into Mines, also Fired Shots Without Authority—Got 1 Month.

For some time past it has been known that shots were being fired in one of the mines here without the knowledge and authority of the firebosses and on May 1 last a Slavonian named John Krell was caught in the act. Constable Tranter immediately went to Fernie and procured a warrant for his arrest and ou Tuesday he was taken into custody and placed in the jail at Fernie.

Krell was brought up for trial before Stipendiary Magistrate Forbes on Wednesday. He admitted his guilt and stated in defence that he had asked the shot-lighter to come and that he had refused to come. He was given one month at hard labor in the Fernie jail.

A Farmer Cured of Rheumatism

"A man living on a farm near here came in a short time ago completely doubled up with rheumatism. I handed him a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and told him to use it freely and if not satisfied after using it he need not pay a cent for it," says C. P. Rayder, of Pattens Mills, N. Y. "A few days later he walked into the store as straight as a string and handed me a dollar saying, 'give me another bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. I want it in house all the time for it cured me.'" For sale by all druggists and dealers.

BOARD OF TRADE MEET

WANT MORRISEEY ROAD ON WEST SIDE OF THE ELK RIVER.

Bounty for Silver Lead Industry—Report of Committee that Interviewed Government Agent Armstrong

The regular meeting of the Fernie Board of Trade was held on Monday evening in Joyce's hall and was fairly well attended. President Rennie occupied the chair. Four new candidates for membership were accepted; they were, N. E. Suddaby, C. Stephens, Dr. Barber and Dr. Morrison.

Mr. Bentley read a wire from CranbrookBoard of Trade asking co-operation in agitating for bounty on silver-lead production.

The principle of direct government aid to industries in the shape of bounties did not meet with the approval of the meeting but in view of the fact that the government had turned down the proposition of increased tariff on imported production and had promised to bonus the industry the board decided to fall in line. The following resolution was drafted to be forwarded to Finance Minister Fielding:

Resolved, that we, the members of the Fernie Board of Trade, do hereby respectfully urge the government of Canada to grant to the lead miners a bonus of $15 per ton (of 2000 lbs) of lead in the ore mined; such bonus to be paid to the miner irrespective of where the ore is smelted or refined and that the smelter returns duly certified, shall be prima facia evidence of the lead contents of such ores, for the payment of said bonus; and that a duty of at least 30 per cent. ad valorem be placed on corroded lead."

This resolution is in substance the same as that passed by the Silver-lead Mine Owners' Association at Sandon on May 4th.

The secretary, J. S. T. Alexander read a reply from the Attorney General acknowledging that a former resolution asking for increased jail accommodation had been received and that it would receive the immediate attention of his department.

The committee appointed to interview Government Agent Armstrong re raising the bridge across the Elk river and changing the course of the road to Morrissey from the east to the west side of the river reported that the former matter was satisfactorily arranged and that the work was already under way. Mr. Armstrong gave them no encouragement on the other subject. $2,000 out of the $17,000 appropriated for the district was set aside for the purpose of improving the old road and he did not think anything would be done this year by the government towards building a road on the other side. Considerable discussion followed. It was shown that the appropriation for this district was entirely disproportionate to the revenue derived by the government, and the opinion was freely expressed that a good road should be constructed on the west side of the Elk. Mr. H. Bentley showed that a good road had been built as far as the Cedar Valley Improvement Co's. mill and that the government would not only have the use of this but the route on the west side was shorter than the east by about two miles. It was admitted that the former would cost more than the latter on account of the low land but this route would open up a good country rich in timber and petroleum as well as agricultural lands. Mr. O. N. Ross stated that three years ago he had opened up the tote-road on this side of the river and he was well acquainted with every foot of it between Fernie and Morrissey. At one place about four miles from Fernie a rock-cut projects out to the river bank and to build a wagon road past this point it would be necessary to either take the road over the bluff, a height of 275 feet, or penetrate the rock. The road could not be completed for a sum far short of $10,000 and it would then be much less beneficial than a road on the west side.

Many who spoke favored the view that no action should be taken to discourage the expenditure on one side or the other of the promised $2,000. Finally the following resolution was adopted:

Moved by Mr. F. Stork, seconded by Mr. H. Bentley that an estimate of the amount paid yearly to the Provincial Government by the district to be served by the hereinafter mentioned waggon road be forwarded to the Commissioner of Lands and Works at Victoria showing the percentage such district is paying of the total revenue of East Kootenay and that this body do respectfully request the said government that in expending any money in building a waggon road from Fernie to Elko, the same be expended for the building of such wagon road on the west side of the Elk river for the reason that such road would give access to the government lands, and lands owned by private parties, and also for the reason that such waggon road would be shorter by two miles than a waggon road built on the east side of the said river; and that the secretary of this body be instructed to forward a copy of this resolution to Mr. E. C. Smith, M.L.A., and to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works at Victoria.

No further business of importance was brought up and the meeting adjourned.

BUSINESS AMALGAMATION.

An important business amalgamation is taking place in Fernie by which two large stores are merging into one. These are the Crow's Nest Trading Company and John Poblielancik. The preliminary arrangements were completed a fortnight ago and since then stock taking has been done in both stores. The business will be conducted under the name of The Crow's Nest Trading Company and in the premises formerly occupied by this Company on the west side of Victoria Avenue. These premises will be enlarged by taking in the building occupied as a drug store by Mr. Bleasdell. Some improvements will be made by removing and altering partitions and the grocery department will be conducted there. Mr. Bleasdell has rented the building formerly occupied by Mr. Podbielancik in the Fernie Hotel block and he will open up his drug business there. The transfer of goods is being effected this week.

TRANSFER OF ALLEGIANCE.

Miners Unions of the Valley drop the W. F. of M. and Become Affiliated with the United Mine Workers of America.

The miners' union of the Crows Nest Pass Coal Co's. collieries have recently withdrawn their allegiance from The Western Federation of Miners and have affiliated themselves with the United Mine Workers of America.

For some time past this movement has been on foot and last week organizer Bonsfield, of the U. M. W. of A., arrived in Fernie to discuss the matter with the men. A meeting of Gladstone Union was held and the visiting organizer addressed them. The union finally decided to surrender the charter of the W. F. of M. and form a branch of the United Mine Workers.

Mr. Bonsfield in addressing the men discouraged the principle of useless strikes. The miners claim that their change to allegiance of the sister organization will have no bearing on the recent settlement between the union and the Coal Co., and that the terms of agreement will be rigidly followed out.

Meetings were subsequently held at Morrissey Mines and Michel where similar action was taken, and the three camps henceforth will be controlled by the United Mine Workers of America.

The reason for this change is said to be dissatisfaction with the treatment accorded them by the W. F. of M. in the recent strike. It has been opened stated that the cause of the coal miners was sold by the Federation and the present action is largely the result of strong feeling on this account.

NO STRIKE ON GREAT NORTERN

The rumors of a strike of the railway employees of the Great Northern have been circulating all week but up to the time of writing no definite action has been taken. The negotiations between the committee representing the men and the officials of the road, which were broken off on Tuesday, have been renewed, and the outlook is assuming a much more encouraging aspect for an early settlement.

Certain concessions have been offered by the company but it is not known just what those concessions are. That they are more favorable than any previously offered is believed from the fact that the strike has been deferred, awaiting further developments.

Later despatches show that the trouble is at an end. The committee of the men and general manager Ward signed a formal agreement. The men gain an average of 15 per cent in wages. One of the chief differences causing the dead lock was the running of double-headers. This grievance was particularly noticeable on the Morrissey Branch. The company receded from their position in this point and agreed to limit the system as much as possible to mountain district.

FRANK IS RE-OPENED.

WM. BLAKEMORE DISCUSSES CAUSE OF SLIDE---MOUNTAIN NOT SAEE.

Coal Company Making new Developments —Hotels and Stores again doing Business—Feeling of Insecurity Exists.

The town of Frank was re-opened on Monday by order of Premier Haultain. The merchants and hotel men who were mostly staying at Blairmore have again taken up their lines of business and Frank once more has assumed some semblance of activity, though under vastly different surr undings than be or. Very few others have ventured back to the ill-fated town and among those who are now there a feeling of insecurity and uncertainty exists, for the opinion is prevalent that at any time another slide may occur that will wipe out the remainder of the town.

Mr. Frank, the owner of the coal mine there, is still in the town and is stopping with Ex-Manager Gebo. Extensive plans for new development are being made. About three quarters of a mile from the old workings, on the north side of the track, another shaft is being sunk to connect with the seam in the old workings by driving in underneath. These operations will recover about one mile of coal lying at the extreme south east corner of the property. Very few of the miners are willing to work under the uncertain conditions and development is proportionately slow.

The operations of the French Mines at Gold Creek have been entirely suspended. The railway spur from Frank to these mines is rendered useless, as a mile and a half of it is buried under rock, at some places 50 feet deep. It will be necessary to build a spur from Blairmore in order to avoid the rocky path of the slide. Mr. Fleutot, the manager of this company is at present in Nelson on business connected with his mine.

MR. BLAKEMORE'S OPINION

Mr. W. Blakemore, C. E., of Montreal, arrived Friday and leaves today for western points. He spent several hours in Frank and walked over the slide and made an inspection of the surface conditions. His opinion is that the danger is not yet over and that any resumption of mining operations will almost certainly precipitate another catastrophe. Mr. Blakemore from the first scouted the reports of volcanic or seismic disturbances of any kind as being entirely outside the reasonable probabilities and he strongly deprecated the sending out of such sensational reports as calculated to do injury to the financial interests of the west. His impression as given to the Montreal press when the first telegraphic advices reached there was that a huge mountain slide had been caused by the mining operations and having examined the slide he now confirms this view. His theory is that the workings in the Frank mine have removed what was practically a natural barrier at the foot of the mountain. This had induced a squeeze resulting finally in a collapse bringing down a slice of the mountain which had been gradually fissured and released for months past. This theory is entirely consistent with the surface indications as now exposed and with the evidence given at the inquest as to the "squeezing" inthe mine and no other explanation is necessary to explain all that has happened. Mr. Blakemore considers that there is imminent danger of another slide as far back as the crevices reported by the experts and especially of the projecting peak to the east. If the latter should fall the whole town would be buried He also thinks the Dominion Government which owns the coal areas in North West territories should in the interests of human life prohibit further mining in the seam recently worked, and in any other seam similarly located.

Frank was re-opened on Monday by order of Premier Haultain, of the northwest government, and the town, which has been completely deserted for nine days awaiting momentary demolition which did not come, is tonight a scene of life and activity.

Premier Haultain arrived at Frank this morning to receive the report of the commission which has been making observations for the government, upon which to base a decision, as to whether the town could with safety be re-opened again for occupancy. The premier also consulted with the members of the geological survey party, here for the Dominion government, and as a result of the joint report decided to throw the town open.

The conclusion reached by the experts was that slides will continue on the mountain for some time, but to what extent there was no means of judging. These might come down in small quantities, and be of frequent occurrence, or there might be a big slide that would wipe out a part of the town, but it was problematic whether there was danger of further damage to the town.

Premier Haultain caused a meeting of citizens to be assembled, and stated that while there undoubtedly existed danger from future slides, still as there was a possibility that none of a serious character might occur, he did not feel like permanently closing the town, and if the people chose to return at their own hazard the government would raise no opposition. He therefore declared the town open.

The merchants immediately opened their stores, and the hotels prepared to entertain guests and a few residents returned to their homes. It is likely that most of the business institutions will resume, but the greater number of people will doubtless make their home at Blairmore for the summer.

R. McConnell and R. W. Brock, of the geological survey, who are here to investigate the disaster for the Dominion government, and to establish the cause of the great slide, expressed the opinion today that whatever the cause may have been, it no more than accelerated the occurrence, as in their opinion, the mountain would have fallen in time from the great extent to which disintegration had progressed.

SALVATION ARMY WORK.

The well-known Self-Denial week of the Salvation Army will be observed by that body from May 24 to May 30. Unusual activity has taken possession of the Army's energetic members in anticipation of this great event.

The Army's beneficent operations are maintained purely by the free will offerings of the people.

The needs of its vast missionary labors among the heathen abroad and the downfallen at home are chiefly met through the agency of Self-Denial.

The Army is doing splendid work in its Industrial Homes, Rescue and Maternity Homes, Men and Women's Shelters established in different centres in this country, while the world over the Army has 500 similar refuges for the fallen and destitute.

The enthusiasm with which the Salvationists themselves enter into the Self-Denial week is remarkable and it would probably be hard to find a wearer of the uniform who has not in addition to pecuniary sacrifice, denied himself some luxury or partial necessity of food or clothing by way of discipline. The Self-Denial fund is considerably augmented by assistance from outside friends far and near and this worthy effort should not be forgotten by those who are in a position to assist.—Com.

DIED FROM HIS INJURIES.

George Harding Fatally Injured While Working in Coal Creek Mines.

An accident occurred in No. 1 mine Coal Creek on Tuesday which resulted in the death of Mr. George Harding. The victim of the disaster was at work with his partner and was standing at the side of the track. He did not hear a rapidly approaching car and he was struck in the breast and crushed between the car and a post. He was immediately attended by comrades and Dr. Ker was called. Upon the arrival of the injured man at the hospital everything possible was done for his relief but the doctors at once understood that nothing could save his life. Four ribs were broken, his chest bone was crushed in and his lungs were badly lacerated. He died after much agony on Friday morning. Mr Harding was an elderly man of 53 years of age. He was from Staffordshire but had spent many years in this country where he was well known as a prospector.

Mr. Underwood who was working with the deceased at the time of the accident had a narrow escape as the car knocked him down and nearly ran over him.

The funeral took place this morning at 11 o'clock and was conducted under the management of the Gladstone union of which the deceased was a member. A large body of the union marched from their quarters at Joyce's hall to the hospital and thence conducted the body to the cemetery. Rev. D. L. Gordon officiated.

Scarlet fever has broken out in town again. Two children of Dan MacDonald contracted this dread disease this week.

ENQUIRY CONTINUES

BROWN, WELLS AND EBERTS GIVE EVIDENCE.

Sir Thomas Shaughnessy and other C. P. R. Officials will Testify—They will Press Their Claim to Disputed Lands

The commission of enquiry into the land grant is steadily continuing the work this week. On Monday upon the re-assembling of the legislature the commission reported that they would require until the 20th to finish and the legislature adjourned until that time, but before doing so the lieutenant-governor gave his assent to the following bills: The Vernon & Nelson Telephone company; the Kootenay, Cariboo & Pacific railway; the Adams River railway; the Morrissey, Fernie & Michel railway; the Pacific Northern & Omineca railway; the Pacific Northern & Eastern railway; the Flathead Valley, B.C., Northern & Mackenzie Valley railway, and the Quatsino railway. To amend the land act and to incorporate the Fort Simpson General Hospital.

Geo. McL. Brown, former executive agent for the C.P.R., and Chief Commissioner Wells were the principal witnesses during the week. Mr. Brown seemed to be troubled with a short memory and when questioned closely on many important features of the case he pleaded forgetfulness of the circumstances; on several points his evidence was flatly contradictory to that previously given by Mr. Wells. He said:

"After Wells returned from Montreal I continued pressing him as well as Dunsmuir and Eberts for the delivery of the grants. The grants were withheld nevertheless. There is no possible doubt now, that the person who prevented the delivery was Wells. There was no question whatever but that it was he who stood between the province and the railway company preventing the completion of the transaction."

E. P. Davis, counsel for the C. P. R., was permitted to cross-examine Wells. Little new evidence of importance was gained but sufficient hints were dropped by the lawyer to make clear the apparent course of action of the C. P. R. in dealing with the Columbia and Western land grants.

The company will follow up their claim on blocks 4593 and 4594, by assenting to the complete delivery of the grants as made by Wells at Montreal. Sir Thos. Shaughnessy and several other high officials of the C. P. R. are on their way west to testify as to subsidy matters generally and it is arranged to have their examination take place on Monday and Tuesday of next week. They have been instructed to produce at this enquiry not only fragments, but all documentary evidence in Columbia and Western and B. C. Southern matters within the company's possession.

The government will emphatically oppose the claim of complete delivery as put forth by the C.P.R. and for this purpose letters from Brown and his own sworn depositions will be used.

Brown, it will be remembered, reminded the chief commissioner by letter on March 22nd last year, that the settlement had been completed, "except for the delivery of the grants." When asked before the committee to harmonize this statement, with the subsequent claim of a completed transaction Brown declared that his meaning was, that while technically completed, there had been "no manual delivery." Now comes the flatly contradictory declaration of the company, according to the instructions of Mr. Davis, that the grants were actually delivered in Montreal to Oswald, secretary of the Columbia & Western railway, that they were deposited in the vault at C.P.R. headquarters, and at Wells' solicitation they were returned to him the following morning, without any receipt being given, so that he might take them back with him to Victoria and return them to Shaughnessy, when certain cabinet vacancies had been filled.

Besides Sir Thos. Shaughnessy two other important C.P.R. witnesses will testify. It is said that Oswald will swear that the grants were actually given into his possession and that he had them over night and loaned them to Wells who wanted them for political reasons. Creelman, solicitor for the company, will swear that he witnessed this delivery. The Chief Commissioner denies that the deeds left the Windsor Hotel and he claims that the story told by the C.P.R. men is wholly false.

On Wednesday Wells, under cross-examination by Helmcken and McPhillips, admitted that the Columbia and

A MAN'S USE OF LAW

APOSTLE PAUL AS A LAWYER.

Rev. Dr. Talmage Uses Paul's Forensic Gifts as the Basis of a Defence of "The Whole Profession of the Law" —Another Side to Sir Hartley William's Cnyical Comment on a Pious Lawyer Who Prayed For Clients.

Chicago, May 3.—The temptations of the legal profession as well as its highest opportunities are set side by side in vivid contrast in this discourse, which has an interest for all classes. The text is I Timothy i, 8, "The law is good if a man use it lawfully."

Paul had all the mental qualifications of a great lawyer. When he stood before Felix and as his own advocate tore into pieces the charge made by the prosecuting attorney, Tertullus; when he argued before King Agrippa until the king admitted he was "almost persuaded;" when he pleaded upon Mars hill with the jury of Greek scholars until at last even that central seat of Athenian culture was shaken to its very foundation by his proclamation of the "unknown God," we find the highest development of forensic training and legal acumen. As one schooled in the law, Paul knew the mighty and majestic power of the law, both spiritual and temporal. Therefore he lays down the broad proposition that law is good for the community and that it is needed not only for the vindication of the right, but for the punishment of wrongdoers, whether the laws that they break are human or divine.

But, though the legal profession offers such wonderful opportunities to defend the weak and punish the bad, there are some cynics who profess to believe that an honest lawyer does not exist. Sir Hartley Williams, a celebrated Australian judge, once pessimistically commented upon the fact that there was a pious lawyer in his circuit who used to regularly pray that he might get clients. "Imagine," said the judge, "the insult to the Almighty contained in the request that God should stir up strife among the people, foment discord and promote litigation, just to serve the selfish purpose of this pious solicitor?" But that cynical comment of the learned judge might have been entirely wrong. That lawyer might be innocent of any desire to foment strife and only anxious to have the opportunity of serving his fellow men and be able to redress the wrongs of some injured person.

The noble profession of the law is often unjustly maligned. Like other professions, it has in its ranks unworthy men who disgrace it, and there is no profession in which trickery and rascality reap so rich a harvest. But it has also in its ranks noble, honest, sterling men, whose knowledge and talents are devoted to the cause of right and justice. I want to say to all young men who are entering that profession that if they set before themselves a lofty ideal and hold fast to Christian principle they may win success in it, serving God faithfully and keeping their character unstained. Let me try to give you briefly my conception of the principles of a Christian lawyer.

He will never champion a cause that he knows to be dishonest. Why? Because he would be aiding one man to deprive another of his rights. Oh, the wrongs that are perpetrated by the rich and powerful! Oh, how many there are who suffer all their lives at the hands of unscrupulous foes! For years in the French Bastile was confined a state prisoner known as the "Man With the Iron Mask. He died in 1703. This prisoner was supposed by many writers to have been a twin brother of Louis XIV. He was confined in his living tomb with an iron mask over his face lest he should come forth and claim the French throne and thus cause a revolution. The iron mask concealed the face because the prisoner was supposed to be facially an exact duplicate of the reigning King. If this story be true, it brands Louis XIV. as one of the most stony hearted monsters who ever sat upon a throne. No matter what his own rights may have been, to protect those rights he was not justified in practicing a lifetime injustice upon a brother. How many men are trying to deprive their brother men of his rights! The lawyer who helps them in their nefarious attempt is a partaker with them in their crime. I am not here contending that it is wrong for the lawyer to defend a criminal in court. Every man is entitled to a fair trial. Even the wretch Czolgosz had his rights before the law, and justice required that those rights be protected

Yet there are a great many lawyers who affirm that they have nothing to do with the honesty or dishonesty of a client. All that they must do is to present the best side of a civil suit, and then the judge or the jury will decide whether a cause is just or unjust. If a drunkard by his own carelessness falls off a moving electric car, they will bring suit against the street car corporation for $10,000 and not have one qualm of conscience. If a distant relative by a technical flaw can break a will, they will help him do it and divert the money of a rich man into a channel where it was never intended by the testator to go.

There is an old saying that "nothing is more deceptive than a column of figures. There is an another old saying, "Nothing is more unjust than law." Any lawyer who prostitutes his brain and energy to plead the dishonest civil suit of a client becomes a party to the corrupt purpose. The lawyer himself by that advocacy becomes a dishonest man. Abraham Lincoln won the appellation "Honest Abe." How? He would never allow himself to get mixed up in a dishonest suit. Many years ago a man went to his office in Springfield and wanted him to be his attorney for a certain case. After Mr. Lincoln had studied all the facts he turned to this man and said: "My friend, by a technicality of the law you can win that case, but I will not argue it for you. You are dishonest in your attempts to win that money. If I stood before a jury to plead for you, every word I uttered would seem to echo in my mind this sentence: 'Abe, you are pleading for an untruth; Abe, you are a dishonest man!"

The honest lawyer never uses false means to plead for a justifiable cause. He never produces false witnesses to an alibi, no matter how much he may believe in the innocence of the defendant. He never believes it honest to be dishonest or to tell a falsehood, no matter how good the cause may be for which that falsehood has been told.

But, though this may be all true, the temptations before honest criminal lawyers are very great. Believing in the innocence of their clients, they know as no other class of men how many innocent victims have been sent to the penitentiary or the gallows through an unbreakable chain of false circumstantial evidence. In one of our large cities of the east a man was aroused one night by a noise. With lighted candle and cocked revolver, he descended the stairs and was shot dead. An ex-convict was arrested and charged with the crime. His lawyer believed him to be innocent. He did all in his power to save him. He was hanged. Some years after the execution a dying convict confessed to that crime and thus proved that an innocent man had his life choked out by false circumstantial evidence. I once said to the warden of Sing Sing penitentiary, "Warden, do you believe there are any innocent men in this prison who have been sent here unjustly by circumstantial evidence?" "Lots of them," he answered. "I believe there are lots of them." "Now," says the honest lawyer, "I believe my client is innocent, and yet this false chain of circumstantial evidence will convict him unless I break it. Is it not right to fight fraud by fraud? Am I not justified in using any means to deliver this innocent man?" In such a crisis the temptation is overwhelming to present any evidence available, even though it is known to be false. He argues himself into this position because he believes he is justified in doing a wrong to win a right.

But, my legal friend, two wrongs never make a right. No lawyer in any capacity is called upon to lie. A falsehood is a falsehood, no matter how it is told. If you believe in justice, your own hands must be clean when they touch hers, nor must you contaminate your own lips when you would woo her to protect the life of your client. If a lawyer is willing to lie for a good cause, the time will not be very far distant when he will be willing to tell a falsehood to win a bad case.

The righteous lawyer tries to keep his client out of litigation if possible. That means he does for his client exactly what the honest doctor would do for his patient. The family physician, coming to the bedside of an invalid, does not say, "How long can I keep this man sick, so I can make as much money out of him as possible?" He says, "How soon can I make this man well? The sooner the better. Better for me; better for the patient."

Practical illustration: A man comes to his lawyer and says: "I have been unjustly treated, and I want $5,000 damages. I want you to bring suit right away." What does that honest lawyer do? He looks all over the details of the case. Then, if he is conscientious, he says to his client: "My friend, you have sufficient grounds for damages; but, as your lawyer, I am going to advise you as I would my own son. Do not get mixed up in this case unless you must. The lawyers' fees may in the end cost more than you would make. Then there is no telling what a jury may do. You might lose everything. I would compromise. I would take what I could get and let the rest go. It will be cheaper in the end. That is my advice."

"But," you say, "that is not the way a young man can build up a practice. It is what he does in court, and not outside of it, that wins him fame." No, my friend, you are wrong. The public is not as stupid as you think. If that public once hears a whispering that you are trying to keep clients out of trouble instead of pushing them in, you will have all the clients you want. Study the history of Mayor Jones of Toledo, O., who has just been re-elected for his fourth consecutive term. He is generally called "Golden Rule" Jones. I know nothing about Mr. Jones' private life, nothing about his politics, but this I do know—the people, the common people of that city, believe that Mr. Jones is their friend and is trying to help them as far as he is able to do. Every newspaper in that city was against him. During the campaign they would not even print his name The Republican and the Democratic organizations were against him. Each party had its separate candidate. Yet "Golden Rule" Jones went quietly ahead. At the public ballot boxes he received an overwhelming majority, his vote being 70 per cent. of all the votes cast. Why? The people, the common people, believed he was trying to lighten their burdens instead of getting them into deeper trouble. What is true in reference to politics is true in the lawyer's office. One of the best recommendations a lawyer can have is that he always conscientiously and faithfully makes his clients' interests his own.

The high principled lawyer protects the weak as well as the strong. The young graduate from a legal school is likely to take any case which comes in his way. It is not so much then a question of money as of getting something to do. He will spend as much time over the case of a pet dog which has been poisoned in a back yard as he will twenty years later on a $100,000 suit. But after awhile that young man works his way up the legal ladder. His brain becomes keener, his experience greater. He stands in the front rank of his profession. What is the result? He ceases, as a rule, to deal with cases involving small fees. He is a railroad attorney or a rich man's advocate.

My legal friend, now is your opportunity for heroic self sacrifice. Do you know of a case in which a poor man is menaced with injustice? Do you know of a man who is charged with a crime of which he is innocent? The glory you win in championing his cause is better to you than a $1,000,000 fee. The great corporations and the wealthy men have reserved for their services the strongest legal brains of the country. I ask, who are going to look after the legal interests of the poor and the helpless? You know just as well as I that the critical time in the young man's life is just after he has committed that sin which he did thoughtlessly and without realizing its heinousness. You know that if he is at once convicted and sent to the penitentiary and herded in with a lot of old criminals he will become one of the blackest of the black. Will you leave him to the care of one of those legal incompetents who are found hanging about every court room, waiting like vultures to pounce upon the helpless and the slain? Or will you, in the front rank of the legal profession, give you time and services to save that young man? You know as well as I do that that little child who had her leg cut off by the cruel wheels of the electric car through the carelessness of the motorman will get nothing unless a man of your brain plead her cause. You, with your legal ability, could win for her a verdict of $20,000 cash. Will you let that little child be sent to a cripples' home and pass all of her life there in poverty because you, a successful lawyer, are not willing to plead her cause?

Shall the strong lawyers only look after the strong clients and not after the weak? No, no. That is not what they ought to do. Surely the lawyers should be just as self sacrificing in caring for the helpless unfortunates as their brother professionals, the surgeons and doctors. The poorest in our cities can have if necessary the services of the very best surgeon or oculist or aurist or lung specialist. All a man has to do is to go to the hospital clinics, and the best medical and surgical skill is at his command free. Can it be that the lawyer is not ready to sacrifice as much for humanity's cause as the physician or the surgeon? Besides that, my able legal friend, you know your success has brought you plenty of money. You know the reason you do not retire from practice is simply because you cannot bear to be idle. Then why not give a part of your time to helping the weak and downtrodden?

Some people are foolish enough to suppose that a lawyer demeans his office when he champions the gospel, just as a minister nearly always degrades his spiritual office when he becomes embroiled in the bitternesses of local politics. When Sir Thomas More used to visit his old home on the Sabbath day, he could always be found in the Episcopalian chancel taking part in the service as a lay reader. A state officer one day came to him and said: "Sir Thomas, do you think you are casting a slur upon your official position under the king? Ought the English chancellor to perform the humble duties of a lay reader?" "Yes," answered the great statesman, "a chancellor always serves his earthly king better when he is truly serving the King of kings." The lawyer who honors Christ above all is the lawyer who will be the most faithful to his earthly clients.

The noble Christian lawyer is most anxious to serve aright his associates in a spiritual and in a temporal sense. Why? He knows that some day all the acts of his life shall be passed upon by the greatest of all supreme courts, the great judgment seat of Christ. A lawyer is always more careful of a case if he thinks that case is going to be appealed to a higher court. One misstatement in a brief or the lack of the sworn testimony of a witness may mean the revisal of the lower court's decision. How much more, then, should the fact be ever present to him that he will one day have to stand at the bar of God.

Some young lawyers in the impulsiveness of their youth do not stop to consider this. One day a professor said to a wild college lad, "My boy, what do you intend to make out of life?" "Well," answered the boy, "I intend to spend four years at college." "What then?" "Then I intend to enter the law school and work hard and make my mind a great repository of legal lore." "What then?" "Oh, then I shall throw myself, body, soul and mind, into my work. I shall force myself in the front ranks of the great lawyers of my time. I shall be known, I hope, as a man with eloquence and power. My fees will be large; my circle of friends greater." "What then?" "Why, then I shall turn my attention to politics. I shall stand upon the rostrum. Perhaps I shall be able to plead in the United States senate or sit as chief justice upon the supreme court bench." "What then?" "Then in my old age I shall retire from work. I shall have a country and a city home. I shall be known as a sage and live in quiet and ease." "What then?" said the professor. "With the way you are living in sin shall your life never be brought into review and passed upon by God?" Then the young man hung his head, for he could say nothing. So to-day I force this truth upon every one here present. I will state not only what the noble Christian lawyer believes, but also what we are all compelled to believe. Every act, every deed, every hope and prayer and sin of our earthly existence must some day be passed in review by the great assize. So live that, with Christ as your Advocate, you can win the verdict of everlasting life.

MORLEY ROBERTS.

M.A.P. Talks of the Author's Very Adventurous Career.

In a sketch of the adventurous career of Morley Roberts, the well-known author, M.A.P. says:

Although as a boy he had woven thrilling romances and written poetry as a young man, he had no idea of literature as a profession until his two friends, Mr. George Gissing and Mr. W. H. Hudson, the eminent Argentine naturalist, put it into his head. By the courtesy of Messrs. Chatto and Windus I take the following from Mr. Roberts' article in "My First Book," wherein numerous celebrated authors relate the history of their first-born: "I was ignorant, and astonished at the wild idea of writing anything salable. However, in desperation, for I had no money, I began to write, and went ahead in the same way I have so far kept to. I wrote it without notes, without care, without thought, save that each night the past was resurgent and alive before and within me, just as it was when I worked and starved between Texas and the great Northwest. Each Sunday I read what I had done to George Gissing; at first with terror, but afterwards with more confidence as he nodded approval, and as the end approached I began to believe in it myself." "The Western Avernus," containing over 90,000 words, was written in less than a lunar month! . . . He is fairly tall, muscular, though in no wise bulky, with brown hair, brown eyes, very keen and lively, and brown moustache; he has rather a hard-bitten air. One feels that he has seen and done strange things; that he has looked for a moment behind the veil. A restless being and a man of moods, now jovially humorous, now sardonically bitter, especially when he talks of modern life, now frankly pessimistic. Although the tempestuous days of youth are past, the old spirit of revolt against contention and cant, the old love of freedom and fresh air, are just as strong in his breast as they were nigh thirty years ago, when he went down to the sea in ships and took death by the throat, and, looking in his eyes, flinched not.

Patti's Peculiarities.

"Mme. Patti, the famous singer, who will tour again in Canada and the Republic this year," said Marcus Mayer, her former manager, to a reporter, "is not a woman of caprices. When she does not sing, it is because her voice is not in condition.

"On the day of a concert she does not speak to anybody, and in conversing with her on these days she will either nod her head or shake it in replying to questions.

"If she should have a crying spell, she will be unable to sing. Only once during my management of her last tour do I remember this to have happened. She has a woman companion who has been with her for the past thirty years, and on one of our trips Mme. Patti was so upset by her companion she shed tears and could not sing that evening.

"Mme. Patti sings only twice a week and is more careful of her voice than she would be of a child if she had one. She has for a pet a small dog that she takes with her on her travels."

Mr. Hare's Favorite Stories.

The late Augustus W. Hare, the English writer, used to tell a story of Dean Stanley, who was a cousin of his. Stanley was proverbially absentminded. On one occasion he was driving in Sicily with a friend. It was bitterly cold. Stanley had his traveling bag with him and decided to put on an extra wrap. Roars of laughter from the street urchins awoke Stanley at last to the fact that he had put on a nightshirt over his coat. Mr. Hare was fond, too, of repeating a story of the Khedive Ismail of Egypt. Nassau Senior was to be received by his highness, who had been warned that Senior kept a diary. "Oh, yes, I quite understand," said Ismail. "M. Senior is the trumpet and I am to blow down it." Every story teller has his favorite schoolboy's answer. Mr. Hare's was this: "A lie is an abomination unto the Lord, but a very present help in time of trouble."

Not So Pressing.

"Mehitabel," said Archibald, "now that we are engaged we should have no secrets from each other, should we, dear?"

"No," replied Mehitabel, after she had assured herself that her mother was not listening in the next room.

"Well, then," he said, "do please tell me just how old you are?"

"With pleasure," said Mehitabel. "But first, Archibald, please tell me just how much you get a week?"

Archibald pondered. His mind ran ahead into the future.

"Forgive me, Mehitabel," he responded; "it was none of my business to ask."—Tit-Bits.

Kidney Trouble and Lumbago.

Thirty Years of Backache and Rheumatism—Winter Season is Especially Severe—Attributes Cure to

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS.

This season of the year is especially trying on the older people. The pains and aches grow more severe in the cold and changeable weather, the kidneys get out of order, rheumatism and lumbago torture their victims, there are aching backs and limbs, stomach derangements, urinary and bowel disorders and serious, painful, and fatal maladies.

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are particularly suited to the needs of persons of advanced age. They regulate and invigorate the liver, kidneys, and bowels and prove effectual when ordinary medicines fail. This letter from Mr. Robert Jackson, gives some idea of what this treatment is accomplishing every day.

Mr. Robert Jackson, ship carpenter, Port Robinson, Ont., states:—"I was afflicted with kidney trouble and lumbago for about thirty years. The winters were always very severe on me, and I was many times incapacitated with all the serious symptoms of both troubles. I had backache, biliousness, rheumatism, headache, and constipation, and was wrecked physically. I used all sorts of medicines, and have been treated by the medical profession to no purpose.

"In the spring of 1902 I began using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and from the start received great benefit. I continued the treatment until I fully recovered good health and vigor, my old trouble being a thing of the past. I am seventy-five years old, and, if at my advanced age, I have received such grand results from the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills after years of unnecessary suffering, there can be no doubt of their efficacy in the treatment of younger persons. I recommend them to every one. I have tried to think of words to express my gratitude, but it is beyond expression, for they have done more for me than I could have believed."

A Marble Slab.

A writer in London Nature describes a white marble slab 2 inches thick and 35 by 70 inches, which is supported on stone posts and sags in the middle three inches out of level. It furnishes evidence that marble is in reality a fluid of enormous viscosity. This has some bearing on the question of the frigidity of the rocks composing the crust of the earth and the gradual adjustment of the earth's contour under gravity. The slab was placed in its present position in 1853.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. HIMMBURG.

"Why?"

"Because Dresden must be unpleasant for you, poor heart!"

"I do not know why," said Frau von Lowen, slowly, as she stood up. "I—I shall stay here."

She walked up and down the room several times, trying to master her agitation. Then she took up Weber's card. "Fool!" she said, and threw it down again.

"There is the name of his estate which we never could understand," remarked Lucie. "Castle Wottersdorf, Thuringia."

Hortense suddenly became attentive.

"Wottersdorf? Ah, yes, it must be in the neighborhood of Gotha. Several years ago it was for sale. I think that the Counts of P—, who had owned it for centuries, became bankrupt. Papa once wanted to buy it. I was quite taken with it; it is the greatest mixture of architecture that you can imagine. Then I forgot all about it, and later I heard that a Frankfort merchant had bought it. That must be this very Waldemar Weber."

Lucie, who was glad to see the young baroness able to talk again, embraced her warmly. "Hortense," she said, mischievously, "this Waldemar Weber makes me anxious. Do you know, he is overwhelmingly in love with the idea of making you the chatelaine of his castle."

Hortense actually laughed a little. "I? If he only meant you! Any way, he would have to take us both; and that might not suit him, so we will let him go." She put her hands up to her temples again, and with the other motioned the girl to go away. "Leave me! leave me; I have a headache."

"Do lie down, Hortense," begged Lucie.

She shook her head, and took two theatre tickets from the waiter, who had just entered. "We will dine up here to-day," said she to the blonde, faultlessly shaven young man.

"Very well." He disappeared, and returned in a few minutes with a trayful of china, which he balanced in the coolest way upon one hand.

Hortense stood still by the window while the table was being laid; suddenly she turned round. "Is Rittmeister von Wilken staying at this hotel?"

The blonde man's nose went into the air, and he half closed his eyes. "Wilken? Wilken?" said he, as if he must think. "Rittmeister von Wilken—quite right, madame, he lives here, one flight of stairs higher. Number 29." He went again to the table, moved the chairs, pulled at the table-cloth, and disappeared, with the assurance that he would be back at once with the soup.

Hortense stood motionless; she did not come to the table until the waiter had served the soup and disappeared. She sat before her plate, white and still, but did not touch the food.

"Do eat, Hortense," implored Lucie.

She shook her head and examined the two theatre tickets that were lying by her plate.

"Had we not better stay at home to-night?" said the young girl.

"No," was the brusque response.

The dinner passed in silence. The dessert remained untouched. Hortense now proposed that they should take the drive that they had given up in the morning, and soon they were sitting silently by each other in the carriage driving through the street of the Grosse Garten.

It occurred to Lucie that Hortense had put on an unusually handsome costume, and in returning she stopped at a shop in the Prag Strasse, and came back with a bright-red parasol.

"The newest thing," she said, smilingly, to the young girl, using her new possession as a protection against the spring sun. "Do you like it?"

"No," said Lucie, "I do not like such bright colors."

"Nor I," returned the young baroness, whose pale face seemed quite changed with the reflection of the parasol. "I do not either, but," and she held the parasol over Lucie, "it answers the purpose, I see."

When they returned to the hotel they hastened to dress for the theatre. Lucie was very soon ready; she came over into her friend's bedroom, as she often liked to do, to see if she could be of any assistance to her. Hortense, in a black lace dress, was standing before the large mirror, on a little table near her were various boxes with flowers and feathers; she had just been arranging a butterfly made of gold filigree and different colored stones in her hair; now she pulled it out impatiently, and threw it on the table.

"To-day is one of those days when nothing goes right," she muttered.

"Why don't you take the fresh yellow roses?" asked Lucie, "they suit you so well."

A Lost Necklace.

Quantities of ornaments are lost each year at the drawing rooms or courts at Buckingham palace, and only a very small proportion is recovered.

A very strange story is still told about a diamond necklace which was found at one of the state balls some years ago. It happened that one of Queen Victoria's ladies in waiting picked up a diamond necklace from the floor. As she stood with it in her hand a lady came quickly forward and claimed it.

The finder was very firm, however, and declared it was her duty to give it in to the lord chamberlain's office, as this was the rule with regard to anything found in the palace. The lady protested in vain, but the oddest thing was that this necklace never was claimed and is probably still at the lord chamberlain's office.

INVISIBLE PASSING.

HAROLD BEGBIE HAS A CHAT WITH SIR OLIVER LODGE.

Achievements of Psychical Research—The Mighty Atom—The Election and How It Is Made Real to the Ordinary Man—The Great Misunderstood—The Invisible Is Passing to Modern Science.

I found myself at dinner the other night seated next to the man who first set Europe thinking of wireless telegraphy. Oliver Lodge is not merely a likeness, but he is the express image of Lord Salisbury twenty years ago; a huge, massive creature, with mountainous head, quiet, cautious, and watchful eyes under a great dome of brow; the same stoop of the head, as though under its own great weight, and the same curious effect of the hair growing outward from above the sloping neck and high, broad shoulders. If Sir Oliver cared to flour his iron-gray beard and to brush his hat the wrong way, I am convinced he might walk into the House of Lords and tell the peers that the British Constitution is not odapted for business purposes.

Our talk began about "electrons," those invisible charges of electricity which are said to be the ultimate subdivision of the atom—the last thing in matter, I asked for some kindergarten figure that would make the electron real to me.

The Mighty Atom.

The professor stroked his beard. "Imagine," said he, speaking with incisiveness, as becomes the head of Birmingham's University, "a church 200 feet long, 80 feet wide, and 50 feet high, and scattered throughout the interior of this a thousand electric charges, each the size of the ordinary full-stop of a newspaper. That is how electrons feel inside the atom!"

"Room enough for each to expand into quite a handsome semi-colon," I said.

"Yes, there is plenty of room; but they occupy the atom, nevertheless, as soldiers occupy a country; they make it impenetrable by reason of the forces they exert. They are violently energetic."

"And this electron is really the last thing in matter?"

"So far as we know. Splendid work by J. J. Thomson of Cambridge and others has helped us to our present knowledge on the subject."

"You haven't got to the last thing in the spritual kingdom at present?"

"I am not sure that we have got hold of the first."

I said how great and comforting a thing it was that psychical research should be in the hands of such men as himself, Sir William Crookes, Mr. Arthur Balfour, Prof. Barratt, and the Bishop of Ripon.

"For the life of me," said Sir Oliver, "I cannot understand the man in the street's attitude toward the Psychical Society. Why is it that the man of business and the man of hard-headed sense regard the psychical investigator as a ghost-hunting crank? Are we to stick to the visible world, and leave the invisible out of account? Is the optic nerve to be the linch-pin of the wheel of progress? If so, let astronomy stick to the 6,000 stars visible to man's eye, and forget the 100,000,000 revealed to us by the telescope and the photographic film. Even our dear little friend the electron must go, and the sternest materialist will have to go into mourning for his atom—'though lost to sight, to memory dear,' with a vengeance."

The professor has a shrewd humor—another likeness to Lord Salisbury.

The Great Misunderstood.

"No, a great deal of nonsense is talked about things invisible. Physical science has long been groping and stumbling in that world, and psychical science is only following its example. The modern tendency of science is toward the invisible kingdom. The more we exhaust the physical world the fuller our hands become of ions and electrons, the more shall we find ourselves pushed into the other territory. Science is something like poor Jo—not my friend in Birmingham—to whom the policeman of progress is continually approaching with his order to move on.

"Science is not unlike poor Jo in other respects. It has had rather a rough time of it in the world. The Church did not go out of its way to be kind at the start, and it has never been a very enthusiastic godmother. And, mark—every branch of science has been ridiculed at its beginning, so that we must not expsychical science to appeal so forcibly to the popular imagination as a novel by Mr. Hall Caine or the servant problem. Nevertheless, I cannot see why the man in the street, the man in the omnibus, and that extraordinarily brilliant fellow, the man in the club, should dispose of the Psychical Society in a single word as 'cranks.' If he would take the trouble to read our proceedings or get a talk with Alfred Russel Wallace, he would discover that there really are some things in the world which 'no fellow can understand.'

"And, you see, the Psychical Society has demolished more superstitions and laid more ghosts than any other body in the world! So it is a little unfair of our good-natured friend, the man in the street, to rail and sneer and, shrug his shoulders. He has got to recognize, sooner or later, that psychical research—that is to say, inquiry into the occult phenomena of existence—is as much a science as surgery or botany."

"You think that the sympathy of the world is necessary?"

"Not positively necessary; but the sympathy and thought of the world is a propelling energy, and the phenomena only occur to human beings, so they are an essential factor in the problem. If there was more of this sympathy at the back of learning, for instance, the Treasury would be empowered and compelled to do more for higher education. It is one of the big pities of life that Englishmen do not devote a portion of their extraordinary zeal for religious dissension and party politics to the unifying cause of knowledge. We ought to have grown out of bickerings by this time; everything that splits the country or divides its energy is to be deplored. Unify; unify. We want an intellectual Bismarck in this country—a man to bind up all the disintegrating forces into one body pushing straight ahead for truth."

Toward the Invisible.

"And the tendency of science itself is toward the invisible?"

"Yes, you call it the invisible, but you might equally call it the unsmellable. Our sense organs are very limited in their scope, and scientific study enables us to transcend them in all sorts of directions. I should call it the insensible—unless that is ambiguous; the insensible which is as much part and parcel of existence as the sensible.

"Astronomy, you see, is more and more studying the vast universe of invisible stars, and the invisible ether is now harnessed to the service of man. Why should we stop here? It isn't as if psychical research went outside the world in quest of mysteries; the mysteries are here, all about us, as densely populated as the atom is with electrons. You may turn the blaze of the sun into a key for unlocking the mysteries of winds and waves, rain, hail, rivers, and all the manifold activities of the earth; but you will have to blow into that orifice till your cheeks crack before you will get it to turn in the lock of life. Science, so far, remember, cannot account for the life of the simplest cell barely visible under the microscope."

"And the search now is for the master key?"

"Well, we have examined the lock pretty thoroughly, and I think it is about time we cast about for the key."

"That is the tendency of modern science?"

"We are moving on."

"It would be well to hammer this fact upon the public consciousness; it helps to exalt life."

THE HILL OF TARA.

For 300 Years the Centre and Heart of the Irish Monarchy.

Mr. Bryce, M.P., spoke recently before members of the Irish Literary Society on "The Hill of Tara," Tara, he said, for three hundred years had remained the centre and heart of the Irish monarchy, or what was understood as a monarchy. It was the scene of the triennial assemblies, like those at Delphi, where the poets sang, the lawyers argued, and the harpists harped, and also, as the poets had described, where everyone drank all the week. (Laughter.) Tara was about twenty-two miles northwest of Dublin, in County Meath. The top of the hill was nearly 500 feet above sea level, and is raised about 200 feet above the surrounding country. Although there were places of interest to antiquarians, such as Stonehenge, Avebury, Penrith, and Orkney, which had a history later than that of Taea, there were no data concerning them. They knew more about Tara, for events of the second century were clearly indicated. Tara remained the centre of Irish Government down to 560 A.D. It was recorded that St. Patrick visited there in 433 A. D., and there succeeded in alienating the Gaelic people from their old belief. After that the place was cursed by the priests, and finally abandoned. The Kings of Ireland still, however, retained the name of Tara in their official designation. The hill was the capital of a kingdom which should make people realize the many-sided life of a primitive people, the home of the ecclesiastic, the legal, the political and festive life of a nation. He could not understand how it was an ignorant, spiteful, private owner should be allowed to spoil and destroy that which ought to belong in reason and equity to the whole people.

Charles Lever's Characters.

Whence did Charles Lever get his rollicking Irishman? Prof. Oman, in his preface to the re-issue of William Grattan's "Adventures With the Connaught Rangers," discloses the secret, says The London Outlook. It was clearly,he avows, from the domestic annals of the old Eighty-Eight Foot in Peninsular days that Lever drew the greater part of the good stories which made the fortune of "Charles O'Malley." Many of the characters in that romance appear in the flesh in Grattan's reminiscences. Notably:

"The eccentric surgeon, Maurice Quill, whose fame was so great throughout the British army that the novelist did not even take the trouble to change his name. His colleague, Dr. O'Reily, was almost as great an original. Many of the humors of Micky Free seem to be drawn from the doings of Grattan's servant, Dan Carsons.

"Comparing the real thing," Mr. Oman goes on, "with the work of fiction, one is driven to conclude that much of it was only a photographic reproduction of anecdotes that he had heard from old soldiers of the Connaught Rangers."

Enough for One Day.

A very subdued looking boy with a long scratch on his nose and an air of general dejection came to his teacher in one of the large London board schools and handed her a note before taking his seat and becoming deeply absorbed in his book, says Tit-Bits.

The note read as follows:

Miss B.—Please excuse James for not being there yesterday. He played trooant, but I should think you don't need to lick him for it, as the boy he played trooant with an' him fell out, an' the boy licked him, an' a man they sauced caught him an' licked him, an' the driver of a cart they hung to liked him also. Then his pa licked him, an' I gave him another one for saucing me for telling pa; so you need not lick him until next time. I should say he thinks he'd better keep in school hereafter.

Mrs. Ruggles disapproved—hysterically. James Anstruther said less, but thought more deeply. But in the end Elsa triumphed.

There were so many things, she insisted, that she would need for their little home when the wedding occurred in October—things without which she could not keep house, but which her mother's limited income would not permit her to buy. Seven dollars a week and her three meals daily, with absolutely nothing to do but hand out keys and mail! The hotel was within walking distance of their home, so she could save every cent of her salary, to say nothing of what her mother could save on their table in her absence.

Mrs. Ruggles had the old fashioned southern prejudice against business life for women. In a vague way she realized that it was perhaps a particularly perilous position in which to place her pretty daughter. Then, too, she looked forward with dread to the three meals alone each day. Little did her daughter realize how much she would save on the table, how seldom she would set forth for herself more than tea and bread and fruit.

Anstruther felt the rooted objection which every good, manly fellow must make at thought of his sweetheart working for her daily bread. He wanted to assume that burden himself, but Elsa had insisted upon waiting until every cent was paid on their home nest. Moreover, he disliked the publicity of it all, the phase of life which she must inevitably see day after day. But Elsa alternately pouted and cajoled until she won her point and was duly installed as key and mail clerk at the Stuyvesant House.

At first she was radiantly happy in her work. The manager of the hotel, Mr. Paxton, had been her father's friend and took more than passing interest in his new employee. It was pleasant to wear her long, trailing black skirt and a fresh, dainty shirt waist every day and to sweep into the dining room, where well trained waiters served her. And pleasanter still it was to buy certain little luxuries she had long wanted to add to her wedding outfit.

But by and by the serpent of envy raised its head in her new found Eden. The regular guests passed her in such a bewildering variety of frocks that her own simple outfit turned rusty in her eyes. Out of town people, in for a few days' shopping, sent home C. O. D. packages that made her own purchases look absurdly small. She discovered that what appeared like luxuries to her were the everyday necessities to the majority of Stuyvesant House guests. And why should these women who carried their beautiful gowns with such poor grace be given all the good things of life while she had so little to set off her natural attractions? There were the two daughters of a Butte mine operator who wore rings outside their gloves and tipped the waiters with crisp bills. They had actually offered her a tip one day as she handed out their keys. Thinking of it all, a fever sometimes burned in her veins that even the overworked electric fan above her head could not counteract.

Many of the guests tried to patronize her, but she kept herself proudly in hand. As for the men, she vouchsafed them only the demurest "good morning" when they made frequent and often unnecessary trips to her desk. This—until Ainslee came. Ainslee represented a prominent New York importer, ordered his clothes from a Broadway tailor, knew life and how to enjoy it and had been a privileged guest at the Stuyvesant ever since he had been on the road. He was a special favorite with Mr. Paxton, who granted him the unusual favor of an introduction to the new clerk.

Ainslee was to stay a week this time. When Mr. Paxton heard it, he regretted the introduction. Ainslee convinced the head waiter that it was the diplomatic thing and likewise a pecuniary advantage to that dignitary to give him a seat at Miss Ruggles' table. Later he assured his pretty table vis-a-vis that she was looking peaked and pale. Her position was too confining. She needed more fresh air in the evenings. Now, the very next night he must run out to Lake Placid to meet a customer. Would she go along? It meant a lovely trolley ride, dinner with music on the piazza and a summer spectacle at the Casino. It would take him but a short time to go over business details with his customer, and in the meantime she could be drinking in that much needed fresh air.

Elsa consulted both her mother and her fiance, but with an air of finality that showed the futility of objections. A note of complaint sounded in her voice. She never went anywhere, while everybody at the hotel seemed to live for pleasure. Anstruther might have reminded her that last year they had gone everywhere together, but that now he was denying himself every pleasure to make the final payment on their home. Instead he kissed her long and tenderly and said he felt quite sure that Mr. Paxton would permit her to meet no one who was not a fit companion.

It was a great evening for the unsophisticated Elsa, who did not realize that the money Mr. Ainslee lavished was his firm's and was used to entertain the customer rather than herself. In reality she was merely a side issue, a reward that Ainslee felt he deserved for the efforts he was putting forth to secure a new line of trade. It would all appear in his expense account.

Then Ainslee was so different from her own quiet lover. She wondered if all New York men would be like this—so excessively watchful of her comfort in small things, so entertaining in their persiflage and delicate in their flattery. She wished that Anstruther had accompanied them. Lately he had seemed so preoccupied and was less mindful of her little needs when in public. Yet when she reached home she was not entirely sure that she had enjoyed the evening. Perhaps the serpent of discontent had raised his head too boldly this time.

The next evening as she was leaving her post Mr. Paxton came to her, wearing an anxious expression. The night clerk had been taken ill, and the chief day clerk had been called to the bedside of a dying sister. Could she, would she, stay on duty until he could secure some one to relieve her? He would gladly do so himself, but he had a political dinner on hand. Elsa promptly sent word to her mother, also a message to Anstruther to call for her shortly after midnight, when some one would surely be able to take her place.

It was her first experience with night work, and she was entertained by this new phase of hotel life—the late arrivals, the theater parties (for some of the playhouses were still open), the tired tourists returning from trips up the lake. Midnight came, but no Anstruther. The head porter offered to relieve her on watch and send her home in a cab, but she insisted upon remaining, feeling sure that something had detained Anstruther.

One o'clock—and 2! A slight commotion echoed from the main corridor, and a group of men entered noisily, Ainslee in the center. They stopped and blinked uncertainly at the circle of light surrounding the office; then Ainslee, with a remnant of the grace she had admired the night before, strolled to the desk and stretched forth his hand. His companions watched him with wavering, watery glances.

"Youghter been 'long tonight. We turned Lake Placid red—bright red. It's shame for pretty girl like you"—

Something in Elsa's horrified gaze checked his flow of words, and a hand crunched down upon his shoulder. It was Anstruther, white to the lips, with the delayed message in his pocket and wrath in his soul.

Fairly throwing the intoxicated man into the arms of the head porter, who had been roused from his nap behind the telegraph desk, he strode round to the door leading into the office. There his manner changed. Elsa's trembling figure and frightened face caused a revulsion of feeling. Very gently he reached for her hat and gloves. With gentle deference he offered them to her and held open the door for her to pass out. To the porter as he passed he spoke a few curt words. To the girl he said nothing until they reached the street—then:

"We must have a cab, dearest. You are still trembling."

Oh, the wealth of love and tenderness and protection in his tones! She clasped his arm lovingly.

"No, no; let us walk. I want to have time to think before I see mamma. She must never know the truth; it would grieve her so, and I must find some reasonable excuse to offer her for leaving the hotel at once."

And so, arm in arm and in the blessed silence of those who once more understand each other perfectly, they walked away from the glare of the entrance into the shadowy street that led toward—home.

An Independent Miller.

When Frederick built his famous palace of Sans Souci, there happened to be a mill that greatly hampered him in the execution of his plans, and he asked the miller for how much he would sell it. The miller replied that for a long series of years his family had owned the mill, which had passed from father to son and that he would not sell it for any price. The king used every solicitation, offered to build him a mill in a better place and pay him besides any sum he might demand, but the obstinate miller still persisted in his determination to preserve the inheritance of his ancestors.

Irritated at last by his conduct, the king sent for him and said in an angry tone:

"Why do you refuse to sell your mill notwithstanding all the advantages I have offered you?"

The miller repeated his reasons.

"Do you know," continued the king, "that I could take it without giving you a penny?"

"Yes," returned the miller calmly, "if it were not for the chamber of justice at Berlin."

The king was so flattered by this answer, which showed that he was incapable of an act of injustice, that he dismissed the miller without further entreaty and changed the plan of his garden.

Baby Carriages and Indians.

Colonel Bill Sterrett used to tell about a man who went into the Indian Territory to sell baby carriages.

Everybody said he was crazy. It was admitted that there was a fine crop of babies in the territory, but no one could see what the squaws, who were used to packing their offspring on their backs, could do with baby carriages.

Still orders began to come back, first for dozens and then for carloads, and finally Sterrett went up to investigate. He went into one of the Indian villages.

"And I'll be dashed," said Colonel Bill, "if I didn't see a dozen big fat Indians sitting in baby carriages, all scrouged up, while the squaws were pushing them around. The baby carriage man had made the Indians believe that baby carriages were the right kind of pleasure rigs for the noble red men."—New York World.

THE C. P. R. CLAIMS.

The turn that events are taking in the Columbia & Western investigation will not tend to make more comfortable the position of the cabinet ministers involved. Wells in his first sensational statements vaguely accused the C. P. R. of improper actions in connection with the deal. These reports aroused the indignant ire of President Shaughnessy who demanded an immediate retraction of those statements. This Wells hastened to do, with an evident desire to prevent the president's threatened appearance at the enquiry.

But the retraction was worded about as vaguely as were the charges, and Shaughnessy who evidently is determined to remove every suspicion from himself as president of the C. P. R. is now on his way to Victoria to give evidence in his official capacity. It now appears that the C. P. R. are not only determined to clear themselves of any fraud but will urge the legality of their claim to the two blocks over which the present scandal has arisen. This claim may be stronger than is generally supposed. The ministers who have given evidence admit that the deeds were duly signed. Sir Thomas will go one better and will swear that they were actually handed over to Secretary Oswald of the Columbia & Western and that they were kept in the C. P. R. vaults over night. This evidence will be supported by Oswald himself and solicitor Creelman who witnessed the delivery. Sir Thomas will, it is said, go on to say that Wells asked as a personal favor to have the papers back for a short time which was generously granted. Sir Thomas Shaughnessy is not travelling across the continent for his health, his time in the east is very valuable at the present time, and if there was a shadow of a doubt in his mind that his evidence would not be believed he would not volunteer to appear at this enquiry. He is confident that he can not only successfully prove the charges made against the C. P. R. to be false but that he can prove that his Company has a legal right to these blocks.

If such be the case what is the position of the Province? Suppose that a government duly elected by the people have deliberately given away these lands; have signed, sealed and delivered the deeds transferring these properties to the C. P. R.; what redress have the people of British Columbia against such an outrage? We fear but little. If the legality of those claims are proved, and the ministers on the other hand cannot connect the company with any fraud, there does not appear to be any other method of holding the lands than by repudiating the action of a previous government, which is not an honorable course to pursue.

One thing is certain; if the incalculably rich lands of blocks 4593 and 4594 become the property of the C.P.R. the people of this province will demand the the political lives of those who are responsible for the base transaction. Such a wave of indignation will rush across the country as will sweep with terrible suddenness all those from our legislative halls who have helped in any way to sell their country for the sake of personal gain.

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE blinding, penetrating clouds of dust which swept through the streets on Wednesday afternoon caused by the high wind which struck the town, was anything but pleasant to all living in the town. In these storms the dust readily enters every open door, is even forced through every small crevice and settles on the shelves in the stores, and on the furniture in private houses, becoming a source of loss to the merchant and of annoyance to the thrifty hnusekeeper. A street sprinkler for the town would relieve this distressing condition of affairs. It is not a costly appliance and no town the size of Fernie should be without this means of settling the dust and absorbing the heat of the snmmer's sun. With an appropriation of only $17,000 for this district there is, of course, no hope of obtaining such a luxury from the government, and the citizens of the town have so often been required to make personal contributions toward public funds that it is scarcely to be expected that they will grapple with this question. The benefit of incorporation is seen in this instance as in dozens of others. While the cost of a cart would not be great or the expense of keeping it in use would not be heavy it requires a local government to look after the details of such public institutions and until we have a town council appointed to govern Fernie there is no reason to hope for even such a glaring necessity as a watering cart.

* * *

ANOTHER matter that has come to our notice this week shows up the helplessness of the town, under present conditions, to put down common street evils. The chief of police has been making inquiries as to the law on the complaint made against certain dogs last week in these columns. He learns that under the statutes nothing can be done with them. This is a question intended to be left to the judgement of municipal governments and no town the size of Fernie is supposed to be without such a form of government. Were Fernie incorporated we, the people of Fernie, would have the privilege of saying what would be done with such nuisances, and by-laws affecting this as well as many other nuisances could be rigidly followed.

* * *

THE drain spoken of last week has been curtailed and its usefulness will not be more than half as great as supposed. With only $17,000 to satisfy all demands for public works in his district this year Mr. Armstrong certainly has his hands full. The real trouble lies at Victoria. The amount is totally inadequate to the needs of the district and disproportionate to the revenue supplied to the government from this district. The Fernie district lying in the extreme south-east corner of this big province, is one of the richest sections of the province and the government derives a rich harvest of royalty fees, license fees, and regular taxation from its many sources of revenue. In return for all the support rendered by the district we receive in return the smallest amount of government assistance in the way of public works. Apparently the government works on the principle that the farther the district lies away from the capital the less deserving are its cries for help and the greater their right to exact taxation.

EXPERTS who calculate the precise day and minute at which the coal supply of the world will be exhausted, have received a shock through the recent discovery of a new coal field in Pennslyvania estimated to contain three hundred million tons of coal. It is nothing to the shock they will receive when they begin to take British Columbia into their calculation.—Morrissey Despatch.

A SOCIAL EVENT.

The beautiful and spacious home of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Rennie on the corner of Howland Avenue and Hanson St. was the scene of a brilliant and extremely enjoyable party on Thursday evening of this week. This social event, which was one of the pleasantest ever held in Fernie, was attended by a large circle of friends. Their large residence which is splendidly adapted for such occasions easily accomodated the numerous guests. The floor was in fine condition for dancing and many availed themselves of this pleasure throughout the evening while those who sought other amusement found ample opportunity in games of cards in the other rooms, both upstairs and down. Daintily prepared refreshments consisting of sandwiches, cakes, salads, tea and coffee, were served shortly after midnight. Every detail was perfectly arranged by the host and hostess, thus ensuring a most pleasant evening to all. About seventy guests were present.

DUNSMUIR ON UNIONS.

WORK OF THE DOMINION LABOR COMMISSION PROGRESSES SLOWLY.

Dunsmuir Says Labor Unions Should Incorporate Before They Demand Recognition.

The Nelson News yesterday has the following despatch from Victoria dealing with the work of the labor commission appointed by the Dominion Government to investigate labor troubles.

Victoria, May 14.—Dunsmuir would not accede to the proposal for a settlement of the strike situation made by the royal commissioners.

He says the commissioners approached him on the matter, and that the initiative was not taken by him. The Commissioners acted, he has no doubt, in good faith, in trying to get the matter settled, but he could not act.

The commissioners were appointed, he holds, to enquire into the causes of labor troubles generally, and not to act as a conciliation board in this particular instance.

The question of a settlement is a broad one. If the unions want recognition, it should be on condition that they incorporate.

He advocated legislation being introduced, by which trades unions could become incorpoaated and only then should they be recognized.

Under these conditions labor unions would be responsible for their acts the same as other incorporations.

At the beginning of the investigation the miners and the company each presented a statement to the commissioners. The miners made the following complaints.

1. The mine owners' refusal to employ men affiliated with the Western Federation of Miners.
2. The mine owners' refusal to employ men connected with any union.
3. General hostility to any form of labor organization.
4. The mine owners insisting upon all workmen residing at Ladysmith as a condition of employment.

The present difficulty has not arisen from a dispute between the company and its employees respecting the amount of wages paid to, or the quantity or kind of work required from its employees. All questions of that nature have heretofore been amicably adjusted between the company and its employees without the intervention of any outside authority.

The employees are now insisting on their right to affiliate with a foreign union, commonly known as the Western Federation. They have also demanded that the company should recognize and treat from time to time with the said union.

The company without pronouncing any opinion on the right of the men to associate themselves with the Western Federation, have declined to recognize that body in the management of the company's property here.

The reasons which have induced the company to take this stand are, among others, the following:

1. That the society is a foreign association. Its headquarters are situate, and its executive meet, in places outside the territorial limits of Canada.
2. The business of the federation is so conducted that the men who come under its control may therefore be ordered on strike, although no grievance arises in the course of their own employment. They may be willing to work, yet they can be compelled to leave their employment in order to further the interests of the organization in some particular matter which is being agitated in a foreign country, and with which the owners of mines in Canada have no control whatever.
3. If the company recognize the federation they cannot consistently object if a strike is ordered according to the constitution, yet, for the reasons above stated, the company would, in such a case place its undertakings in jeopardy in respect of matters with which it has no concern, and over which it can exercise no control.
4. An organization such as the Western Federation, if recognized here, may be used to close the mines in this country, not for the benefit of the men employed but in order to increase the business or raise the price of coal produced by operators in the United States.
5. It is difficult to avoid differences leading to strikes in any trade or undertaking. It is admitted that strikes are disastrous from a commercial point of view, and therefore, on the broad ground of the general welfare and prosperity of the country, the company considers it unpatriotic to accentuate the evil caused by labor disputes, by recognizing the right of a foreign authority to assume the position of a dictator in the industrial affairs of British Columbia.

WANTED—Competent organist, for Christ Church, Fernie. Applications, stating salary required, will be received by the undersigned up to the 20th inst. J. H. MCMULLEN, E. H. BIRD, Churchwardens.

W. R. Ross spent several days this week in the Fort Steele district looking after his interests in the Perry Creek mining property. He left again this morning for Nelson where he will attend to the spring assizes.

The water in the river has been gradually rising all week. The soft winds followed by warm rains, have had the effect of cutting down the snow in the mountains. The water on Thursday was within four feet of the high water mark.

Messrs. Mott, Son & Co., who have been installing their new machinery in their new mill for some time past are in shape for business and will settle down to steady work next week In our next issue we will give our readers a description of this up-to-date plant.

The Trites-Wood Co. will remodel their store at Coal Creek. The store will be connected with the store house behind it and the space between will be taken up with offices with a glass partition between the butcher shop. Mr. J. A. Broley who has the contract will commence the work on Monday.

A fire which threatened to get beyond control was started on Wednesday on A. H. Cree's lot which is situated near the river bank in the north west corner of the townsite. The high wind made it extremely dangerous and Mr. Farquharson took the prisoners down to put it out. After some hard work the flames were conquered.

The spring assizes will be held next week at Nelson. Several cases from Fernie will come up, among them being Jagger and Moody for theft and Palco for stabbing. The attorney-General has notified the authorities here that all those sent up for being in the Coal Creek mob of March 19th will be tried together under the charge of "unlawful assembling."

The town is being improved by the construction of more sidewalks. Mr. Farquharson with his gang of prisoners has laid two plank sidewalks this week, one runs along Howland Avenue north from the school house corner and the other extends along Baker Street to the Queen's Hotel corner. These walks are much needed and will be appreciated by the townspeople. The material is supplied by private contribution.

Word was received on Monday by Messrs. Louis Carosella and C. O. Demaurez from the Attorney-General's office that they would be required to pay $250 each, the amount of their bonds for the appearance of Otto Alfred Ruben, who was accused of taking part in the mob at the Coal Creek mines in March. Ruben left the town unceremoniously without waiting for his trial. Clerk of the Peace Forbes has received instructions to make the collection.

Fined for Assault

W. M. Stewart, of the Grand Union Hotel, Morrissey, was fined $50 for assaulting a carpenter by the name of Higby, who lives at that place. It appears that Higby under the influence of liquor used indecent language in Stewart's hotel last Friday evening and the latter attacked Higby with a piece of lead pipe, inflicting nasty bruises over his head and arm. Chief McMullin served a summons on Stewart and he was up before Stipendiary Magistrate Forbes on Wednesday, with Mr. Harvey, of Fort Steele, defending him. It was contended in defence that the accused was justified in using violence under such provocation but the magistrate thought differently and imposed a fine of $50.

BIG FIRE AT WARDNER.

Million Feet of Logs Burned. Heavy Loss to C. N. Lumber Company.

On Thursday afternoon a huge pile of logs estimated at one million feet of lumber was burned on the west bank of the Kootenay river and about six miles above the town of Wardner.

The logs were the property of the Crows Nest Lumber Co., of which Messrs. Breckenridge & Lund are the chief shareholders. The loss will be heavy, probably $8000, as all the logs were burned.

The bank at this point is about 200 feet above the water and the logs were piled close to the track ready to be rolled into the river and afterwards to be floated down to the mill at Wardner.

The C. P. R. track was considerably injured as the intense heat had twisted the rails. A crew was sent down from Cranbrook to repair the track and traffic was not long delayed.

Later reports estimate the logs at 500,000 feet and the loss at $5,000. The flames are said to have reached a height of 200 feet and were visible from Fort Steele, a distance of 22 miles.

LEGISLATION RE STRIKES.

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years imprisonment who, being a person not a British subject, whether residing in or out of Canada, does in Canada incite, urge or induce workmen, by any act or means whatsoever, to quit any employment in which they may be engaged, or to enter upon any strike with the object of enforcing additional wages or terms of employment from their employer."

Infringement of a Trade Mark

In an action in the High Court of Justice for Ontario, recently tried before Chancellor Boyd, at Toronto, the Slater Shoe Co., and Chas. E. Slater, president of Montreal, makers of the famous Slater Shoe, obtained a judgment forever restraining F. C. Wilkinson, a boot and shoe dealer, of Owen Sound, from advertising, exposing, or offering for sale or selling boots or shoes not made by the Slater Shoe Co., as "Slater Shoes," "Slater Goods" or the Slater Shoe." The Chancellor, also ordered Wilkinson to pay the heavy costs of the action. The Chancellor, after hearing the evidence, decided that no one except the Slater Shoe Co., had a right to use the name "Slater Shoes," "Slater Goods," "The Slater Shoe," or any similar names in connection with boots and shoes, and that Wilkinson had no right to use any name or names in connection with boots and shoes which might enable him to pass of a shoe not of the company's make, as being of their make, nor in any way to reap the benefit of the reputation which the Slater Shoe has acquired throughout the Dominion of Canada.

DASHED TO PIECES.

DARING ATTEMPTS TO REACH SHORE.

Thrilling Disaster Resulting in the Drowning of Fifteen of the Crew of the Gloucester Schooner Gloriana Fifty Yards from Shore—Three Saved.

A dispatch from Halifax, dated May 6, says: The Gloucester schooner Gloriana was dashed to pieces on the rocks at White Island near Canso at 1 o'clock this morning. Captain Stoddard and fourteen men were drowned, and of the total crew of eighteen only three—John Richard, Eugene Lablanc and Frank Nickerson reached land in safety.

The story of the wreck is one of the most thrilling in the history of Nova Scotia marine disasters. Death stared the eighteen men in the face from the very moment the vessel struck the rocks. Dories were immediately launched, but the frail craft could not live in the terrible sea and were broken to pieces almost as soon as they were lowered over the vessel's side.

The angry waves were breaking over the rocks with a terrible roar and a strong wind drove the doomed vessel hard and fast on the rocks. There was no hope of getting ashore in boats and the unfortunate men were quietly driven to the rigging. The three survivors managed to crawl out on the bowsprit, and made a daring leap for the rocks, landing safely before a receding wave carried the vessel off again. They hastily scrambled over the rocks and reached the shore. Then, in sight of land the fifteen remaining men clung desperately to the rigging. Their piteous cries could be heard on shore, but all efforts to rescue them were unavailing.

The schooner swung broadside on and commenced to pound heavily. Lines were repeatedly thrown ashore but were almost instantly broken or torn from their fastenings in the rocks by the surging of the vessel. Although within fifty yards of the shore nothing could be done to rescue the helpless men. The vessel turned partly over and a great wave commenced to wash over her. One by one the unfortunate seamen were swept overboard and either drowned or battered to death on the cruel rocks. All made a gallant fight for life, but none succeeded in reaching land. At daylight one man was seen still clinging to the wreck and renewed efforts were made to rescue him, but he was soon carried away on the crest of a sea. Shortly afterwards the Gloriana broke up.

MOBILIZING TROOPS.

A Clash Between Turkey and Bulgaria Now Seems Inevitable.

A dispatch from Constantinople of May 6, says: The irritation in Turkish official circles against Bulgaria is constantly growing more acute and the government of that principality has been formally notified in rigorous language that the porte holds it responsible for the outrages arising from the freedom of action which the Macedonian agitators living in Bulgaria have been allowed.

It is reported that the porte has decided to mobilize the whole of the second and third army corps stationed at Adrian and Salonica respectively.

The police of Constantinople have arrested about sixty Bulgarians and have made numerous domiciliary visits, including one to the residence of the secretary of the Bulgarian diplomatic agency, whose papers were seized. They were, however, subsequently restored, as nothing promisquently restored, as nothing compromising was discovered therein.

Alarming reports are in circulation regarding outrages which are said to be projected here today. The military and police guards in this city and its suburbs have been considerably strengthened. In the district of Prisrend, Albania, twenty-two Albanian chiefs, leaders of the opposition to the reforms, have been arrested. The sultan's reform committee is still at Ipek, Albania, on which place Turkish troops are advancing with the object of dispersing the hostile Albanians in the vicinity.

Advices received here from Salonica say that notwithstanding the fact that hundreds of Bulgarians have been arrested, street fights are constantly taking place. Women and children, especially young girls, take a prominenet part in these disturbances. It is asserted that the bomb outrages have been planned in all the towns of Macedonia. Bombs have been discovered in houses at Uskub, European Turkey, (one hundred miles from Salonica); where the Turkish population is greatly fearing a massacre.

A Fatal Drop.

A very sad accident occurred on May 6 to four bricklayers employed at the new distillery at St. Hyacinthe, Que. Taey were working at a brick chimney when the scaffolding suddenly gave way at one end, precipitating all four to the ground, a distance of 63 feet. J. A. Roy and his son were instantly killed. The other two named Hobart and Pariseau, were picked up in an unconscious state and will likely die. It is surmised that the bolting in the brick must have suddenly given way.

The mechanism can be adjusted so as to explode in an exceedingly short time, a long distance, or immediately after penetrating a resisting substance, such as a ship's armor plate or a fortification wall. The new fuse is regarded as being especially useful in exploding shrapnel shell.

A BRAVE GIRL.

She Died in an Effort to Save Her Father From being Shot.

A dispatch from Medford, Mass., says: Miss Nellie Sturtevant, aged 25, daughter of Treasurer James J. Sturtevant, of Medford Co-operative bank, was shot and killed at her home by an unknown man, who attempted to rob her father as he was returning from a bank meeting with a satchel filled with checks and money. The assassin then jumped on his bicycle and escaped.

An Italian who answered the description of the murderer, was arrested two hours later by officers in Boston on suspicion, and is held for the Medford officers.

Mr. Sturtevant reached his hame about 11.30 last night, having with him a satchel well filled with money and checks belonging to the bank of which he was treasurer. As he stepped upon the piazza of the house his wife and daughter opened the door and a few words of greeting passed between them. At that moment a rough appearing stranger appeared on the piazza, and, revolver in hand, ordered Mr. Sturtevant to throw up his hands.

The order was not immediately obeyed and Miss Sturtevant stepped in front of her father to shield him from harm just as the intruder fired, the bullet entering her body with fatal results. The men then snatched the satchel from Mr. Sturtevant and jumped upon a bicycle which he had conveniently near, rode off rapidly in the direction of Boston.

G.T.R. to Enter Winnipeg.

That the Grand Trunk Pacific promoters had definitely decided to abandon the project of building across the narrows of Lake Superior and would have their transcontinental line run through the city of Winnipeg was announced on May 6 by R. S. Logan on behalf of the management of the Grand Trunk.

The official explanation of the company's line was that, contrary to expectation, it had been found impossible to build right through Winnipeg. From this point the line will run in a northwesterly direction through the Saskatchewan district to Battleford, where a branch line will be built to Calgary and the main line to Edmonton.

From this point the company will build two lines to the coast, one through Yellowhead Pass to Butte inlet, and the second through the Peace river pass to Port Simpson. From the latter line an extension is proposed north to Dawson.

NO KNOT NOW.

There is a boy in Brandon who should be punished. Last Sunday evening he crawled under the sofa, having taken care to provide himself with a piece of strong cord, and, while his big sister and her best young man were sitting as close together as possible, this innocent lad tied their feet together.

By and by Mary's pa came into the parlor to fetch his pen and ink, and then it struck Mary and Adolphus that it would look more seemly if they occupied separate seats. The young man fell over the centre table and Mary sat down upon the floor with a two-hundred-to-the-square-inch-concussion.

The old gentleman thought that Adolphus was not in a condition in which he should be visiting respectable houses, and hit him with a cane several times before he could get himself loose and fall out of the window.

The match has been declared off.

DASHED INTO A CROWD.

Grand Trunk Flyer Kills Fifteen People and Injures Thirty.

A dispatch from Detroit, dated May 4, says: The Grand Trunk American flyer from Chicago ran into a crowd of 1,000 people at the corner of Dequinter and Canfield streets, at 8.30 this evening, killing ten to fifteen men and seriously injuring about thirty more. The majority of the killed and wounded were from Toledo.

Fifteen hundred Polanders from Toledo came up to Detroit on a special Lake Shore train to celebrate a holiday. They left the train at the corner of Dequinder and Canfield streets and went over to St. Joseph's church where they spent the day with the congregation. The Lake Shore tracks run out Dequinder street, and a special train was to stop for the Toledo excursionists at Canfield avenue at 8.30. Accompanied by hundreds of their local friends waiting for the train, the excursionists jammed Canfield avenue some time before the train was due, in readiness for it. When the train was sighted the crowd pushed across the bulances in the city rushed to the Lake Shore, just as the Grand Trunk Pan-American flyer came thundering from the west.

The people were thrown into the air and dashed to either side of the track. Many of them were ground under the wheels. The police department was notified and all the ambulances in the city rushed to the scene. The victims were scattered along the tracks for a distance of two blocks. Lanterns were procured and the work of rescue began immediately. The scene reflected by the light of the lanterns war horrible. Gradually the mangled and crushed bodies were recovered and sent to the hospital when there was a flicker of life left, and to the morgue when there was none. At ten o'clock when there was none.

Increased Cost of Railroading.

The increased cost of operating railroads in America is shown in an article which appears in an eastern paper. The Boston & Maine Railway is given as an example, the facts having been obtained from the company's officials, and the comparisons demonstrate that with the increase of business, the expense of maintaining the road has grown surprisingly large.

During the past year the company purchased 61 locomotives at a cost of $411,550, if purchased at the prices prevailing in 1899 they would have cost $683,261. This shows an increase in cost of $128,289, or about 60 per cent.

During the six months ended March 1st the railroad purchased 599,271 tons of locomotive coal, paying therefor $2,747,211.32. In 1899 the same quantity would have cost $1,890,700, showing an increased cost $856,511.33—54 per cent

The price of steel rail in 1902 advanced 52 per cent over that of 1899 so that while $427,000 was paid for 14,000 tons of steel rail in 1902, this same quantity would have cost in 1899 but $280,000, showing an increase of $147,000.

Spikes in 1302 cost 50 per cent more than they would have at 1899 prices; that is, in 1902, 10,000 kegs cost $48,000, which in 1899 would have cost $32,000, showing an increase of $16,000.

in 1899 this same quantity would have cost but $10,680, showing an iocrease of $8,544—80 per cent.

Iron bridge material has advanced 50 per cent in the last five years, so that while 1,700 tons were purchased in 1902 at a cost of $127,500, in 1897 the same quantity would have cost but $85,000. This shows an increased cost of $42,500.

British Millers Talk Combine.

A London cable says. An investigation of the report that negotiations are on foot here for a combination of the London flour mills with a capitalization of $12,500,000, with the object of driving American flour out of the market, shows the corn exchange does not look upon its seriously and believes the combination is impossible of accomplishment.

The matter is being engineered by small millers, and it is said the big millers will not entertain the proposal to form a combination.

A corn broker said: "Even if the combine is effected it could not drive out the Americans, who have much greater milling capacity than the British millers, and who have a large surplus which they could afford to ship here at any price they could get."

SLAVERY IN CONGO STATE

A dispatch from London says: Rev. William Morrison, of Lexington, Virginia, a member of the American Presbyterian mission, who is here on his way home after six years' work along the Kassai river, about 1,200 miles in the interior of the Congo state, fully confirms the stories of the abuses in the Congo administration.

He has furnished an exhaustive report on the situation of the Congo state authorities to the American and British ministers at Brussels, and to Foreign Secretary Lansdowne, detailing the results of his personal investigation, and showing that the situation is daily growing worse, as a result of the rubber monopoly's introduction of forced labor, virtually amounting to slavery.

On his way to the coast the Rev. Mr. Morrison covered 800 miles of the Kassai river, formerly thickly dotted with villages, and he says there are now less than a dozen villages there, the people having fled into the forests to escape the tyranny of the whites. The missionary declares it is impossible for the natives to get any redress from the Congo State officials for the flagrant abuses and cruelties to which they are subjected.

Artillerymen Deserting.

A dispatch from Kingston says:—says: Desertions from the Royal Canadian field artillery are daily growing more common as a result of the miserable wages paid by the government, a rank and file driver or gunner getting but forty cents a day. The strength of A and B batteries combined is now but 98 whereas one battery alone should be 150. The men will not work unless wages are increased. They claim they are out of all proportion to those paid in other walks of life. Some of the men are enlisting in the United States army for this and no other reason.

Floods in the Klondike.

A dispatch says the most destructive flood in the history of the Klondike region is now sweeping down Bonanza creek in the Klondike, flooding cuts opened for summer work, inundating road houses, along the way, creeping into piles of dirt heaped up from the winter's work, and spreading devastation in its path for many miles.

Expensive machinery and equipment, costing thousands of dollars, have been destroyed by the rush of waters, and the injury to sluices will reach big money. The flood is caused by fast-melting snow and ice from the Eldorado gusher having filled the bed of the creek to an unusual depth.

Main street at Grand Forks is under water, and the flood is creeping into the stores and houses of the town. The inhabitants are preparing to move to higher ground.

Dumps containing an aggregate of $2,000,000 in gold, piled on ice, have been undermined and washed away. Recovery is practically impossible. There seems to be no abatement in the flow of the water, and great excitement prevails among the miners along the creek.

Immigration Record.

The vigorous immigration policy which is being pursued is shown by the returns of the interior department for the four months ending April 30. These figures show that the arrivals in Canada from Great Britain alone for the four months have increased by three times those for the same time last year, and no less than five times those for the same period in 1901. The arrivals for April alone number 21,254, as follows: British, 9,400; continent of Europe, 4,796, and from the United States, 7,058.

	1901	1902	1903
British	3,347	5,186	16,487
United States...	5,031	9,820	14,770
Continent of Europe	5,015	7,476	10,445
Total	13,393	22,482	40,672

The homestead entries for the first four months of 1903 totalled 10,254, compared with 5,022 for the same period in 1902.

Mammoth Land Deal.

It is reported that another gigantic deal in Western Canada has just been consummated which involves the purchase of about a million acres.

The land in question is in the famous Carrot river district, and a large portion of the area includes much of the best land in that country. The price paid per acre is said to be $2.75.

The parties concerned in this deal are those who successfully floated the Saskatchewan Valley Land company, Col. A. H. Davidson, of Duluth, and his associates. These include a large group of American capitalists, and one of the number, Mr. F E. Kenaston, of Minneapolis, was recently in the Northwest in connection with the deal.

If the deal is consummated, as reported, it will be a great thing for the Carrot River district, as the men behind the Saskatchewan Valley company have proved themselves to be about the greatest colonizers in the business.

Latest advices from the Orient indicate that war between Russia and Japan is inevitable.

Presence of Mind.

A gentleman on a visit to an asylum was walking in the grounds when a man came up to him and entered into conversation.

After walking about for some time, discussing topics suggested by the place, the two set out on a tour of inspection, the man, apparently an official, inviting the visitor to go over the asylum.

At length they reached the foot of a flight of steps, up which the guide led the way, and at the top the visitor found himself out upon the roof, a height of more than a hundred feet from the ground.

As they gazed below his companion startled him suddenly by proposing to see who could jump farthest toward the grounds! Not until then had it dawned upon the visitor that his guide was mad. Mercifully, he was a man of ready wit, and his wit saved the madman's life. "Oh, anybody can jump down," said the visitor. "Let us go down and see who can jump to the top." The madman thought it a good idea, and, retracing their steps, the two began their jump from the earth instead of from the roof.

Why the Stomach Lasts.

An old question which has long puzzled physiologists is, Why does not the stomach digest itself? The walls of the stomach are in substance not unlike the food which they contain and which is digested by the peptic fluid. The stomach is able to digest proteid food when introduced into it, yet it does not digest itself.

The reason for this has been shown by Weinland. Weinland found that a substance can be extracted from the cells of the stomach which, when added to proteid material, will not allow it to be acted upon by the pepsin of the stomach. This substance belongs to the class of so called antiferments—that is, a group of bodies which by their presence inhibit fermentative actions. The presence of this antiferment in the cells of the stomach prevents them from digesting themselves.

After death, when this substance decomposes, the stomach will digest itself.

Tea Smoking.

It has been recorded on good authority that one of the early uses made of dried tea leaves was to smoke them after the manner of tobacco.

On the first introduction of tea into Europe, in the seventeenth century, pipes, especially in France, were frequently filled with tea, at least among the wealthier classes of society, to whom on account of its high price it was alone accessible, and the fumes of the leaf were thus enjoyed, like tobacco, without prejudice to the use ordinarily made of it as a beverage.

Blegny, a French physician of the time, in a work published in 1687 and quoted in Le Grand d'Aussy's "Histoire de la Vie Privee des Francais," has a reference to this practice of smoking tea, which was then, as he affirms, a frequent and popular fashion.

Minard's Liniment Lumberman's Friend.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grevious ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease and by tranquillizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result, improved appetite. Northrup & Lyman, of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, guaged by the opinions of scientists, this wine approaches nearest perfection of any on the market. All druggists sell it.

VOICE FROM THE PRAIRIES

Thos. L. Hubbs tells how his Kidney Strain Vanished when he used the great Kidney Remedy.

Kenlis, N. W. T., May 11.—(Special)—In this new country where medical attendance is often hard to get the action of special preparations is carefully watched and the results as carefully noted. Consequently, conclusions are arrived at that are of value to the public. And the almost unanimous conclusion is that as a family medicine there is nothing to compare with Dodd's Kidney Pills.

As a tonic it has made a name for itself, while its cures of all stages of Kidney Disease from Bright's Disease to Backache might be considered miraculous if their frequency did not make them almost common.

The following story told by Thos. L. Hubbs, a farmer in Indian Head municipality, is one of the many that have given Dodd's Kidney Pills their reputation.

"About one year ago," says Mr. Hubbs, "I was thrown from a waggon, causing some strain on my kidneys. I tried several medicines but could get no relief till I was induced to try Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"Dodd's Kidney Pills relieved me almost from the start, and by the time I had finished one box my pains were gone. They have not come back either."

IN BORROWED PLUMAGE.

Well Dressed Women Who Wear Goods Sent on Approval.

When the ways of some women are considered, it is less remarkable that such numbers of women dwelling in the large cities dress extravagantly than before their methods of securing rich costumes for all occasions have been scrutinized.

There are women, and many of them very wealthy, who make a regular practice of having elegant garments sent to their homes on approval, wearing them once and then returning them to stores or costumers. Some women will wear a dress or a cloak to the opera and send it back next morning. Or they will get a hat or wrap and go driving or visiting in it. The average person would be astonished to know all the things, from handsome umbrellas and fans of great beauty to jewelry and clothes, that some women borrow from the shops.

Of course all of these women are not well off, but they all dress well and go out a great deal, and although the shopkeepers often discover the manner in which they are being deceived, they do not always like to make a fuss for fear of losing a good customer. Besides they know that if they incur the enmity of such impostors the women are quite capable of abusing their goods and robbing them of other and more honest customers. Strange as it may seem, these women generally mingle in pretty good society, or the fringes of it, and have some influence in the matter of dress, since they have won the reputation of always dressing elegantly and in the newest things.

This sort of imposition had been carried on so often by a customer of a certain large firm that its members determined to put a stop to her flaunting about in borrowed plumage, at least when the plumage belonged to them. One Saturday this woman had a splendid wrap sent home on approval, and on Sunday one of the head clerks of the firm who knew Mrs. Blank as the offender stationed himself near her pew in the fashionable church which she attended. When she sailed down the aisle after service, resplendent in the borrowed cloak, this man stepped up to her and said:

"How do you do, Mrs. Blank? I am delighted to see that you like our cloak well enough to keep it."

Of course after that she could not return the cloak.

Still, with all the efforts put forward by shops and costumers to break up the pernicious habit of forcible borrowing on the part of sundry feminine customers, the practice goes merrily on, and many a fair dame with an enviable reputation for exquisite dressing appears but once in garments and hats that when next seen are bedecking another woman or hanging in the show-room of some smart shop.

Barred Out Immigrants.

Uncle Sam has a black list of birds and quadrupeds which it is absolutely prohibited to introduce into this country, says the Chattanooga Times. The mongoose, the flying fox and the starling are on the list. The mongoose is a species of ferret, a native of India, where it is domesticated as a sort of animal rat trap and snake destroyer. It was introduced into Jamaica to get rid of the sugar cane rats. These exterminated, however, the mongoose went on to diet off the insect destroying birds, with the result that the crops have been devastated by insects in some sections of the island. The animal is exceedingly crafty, nocturnal in its habits and evades traps with ease. The flying fox, known also as the fruit bat, is a voracious harvester of fruits and vegetables. The starling belongs to the crow family.

Animals and Alcohol.

Many animals yield to the seduction of rum drinking, especially elephants, horses, cows and swine. Poultry, especially turkeys, will absorb the tempting drink till they tumble over in leaden sleep, lying around as if dead and utterly ignoring their accustomed roost. On awakening they stagger for a few moments and soon recover, but it is hours before they renew their cheerful cackling.

Their Last.

"Neither," replied he of the sad looks. "I'm a shoemaker."

"Yes, I was just thinking."

"Thinking what?"

Results That Astonished Relatives and Friends

Miss Barbara M. Stanfold, a Victim of Anaemia, Imperfect Circulation and Debility Is Cured by

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND.

In the month of May it is an absolute necessity that the body should be furnished with a richer and purer supply of blood ior the establishment of a health that can successfully cope with the enervating effects of hot summer weather. Poor blood in May produces listless, ambitionless, sleepless and sallow-faced men and women, who quickly become victims of some organic disease that ends life.

Intelligent people recognize the necessity of cleansing and fortifying the system in May by using Paine's Celery Compound, which speedily removes all poisons from the system, gives to the thin, watery blood a larger proportion of red corpuscles, and arouses all the organs of the body to healthy action. Paine's Celery Compound does a work for victims of impure, watery and stagnant blood that commands the attention of the most eminent medical men in the world. Miss Barbara M. Stanfold, Hamilton, Ont., says:—

"For over a year my health was in bad condition, and I became very weak and much depressed in spirits. My troubles arose from poor and watery blood and imperfect circulation. My appetite was almost gone, and I was afflicted with insomnia. After several doctors had done all they could for me, I was weaker than when they first began to treat me, and my family became anxious about my condition. A neighbor advised my mother to have me use Paine's Celery Compound. Before I finished the second bottle, my appetite was better, I felt stronger and could sleep soundly for five or six hours each night. I had so much faith in the wonderful compound that I continued with it until I was perfectly cured. To-day, after using six bottles, I am as well and strong as ever before. I thank you with all my heart for such a medicine; it saved my life when other medicines failed. All my friends are astonished at my happy cure."

Page Woven Wire Fence
All fences slacken in warm weather and tighten in cold—except the Page Fence. Page spring coil takes up the slack in summer and lets it out in winter. No loose sagging in summer, no straining or breaking in winter. Common crimped wire is not spring tempered and if it slackens it stays slackened; if it tightens it loosens again worse than ever. Page wire is tempered to regulate its own tension summer and winter. 60,000 miles of Page wire fence in use now.

ENQUIRY CONTINUED

Western could not legally refuse to accept lands from reserves contiguous to the railway as the subsidy grant, but he held that the government were right in not insisting on this selection, as morally the government obligation would not be satisfied by a gift of valueless mountain peaks. He denied that it was the intention of the government in bringing in bill 87, enlarging the selection rights, to enable the company to get possession of the two blocks in question, and he also denied having promised Brown that such legislation could be brought in.

Taking up Wells' letter in response to that of Brown's, McPhillips enquired if studying in sequence Brown's reminder to Wells that he had not been given assurance that blocks 4,593 and 4,594 would be secured to the company; Wells' intimation that it was "impossible for the government to go beyond the legislation it intended to bring down" and then this bill No. 87 (redemption of that promise) the natural inference was not that this bill had for its covert object the enabling of the company to get these particular lands?

Again Wells said no. The inference to his mind was the reverse. His letter to Brown stated emphatically that the company could not have these blocks. It could not have anything more than the reinstatement promised and intended to be given by bill No. 87.

Wells with hesitation stated that Brown, throughout, had shown especial anxiety to secure these particular blocks, and Eberts had at all times supported the grant and maintained the authority of the government to thus deal with the lands. The latter had upon his (Wells') arrival from Montreal, pressed him to deliver the grants and he had said to Eberts that if such were done, "the government would have to go", upon which Eberts replied, "Let us go then."

The attorney-general had been quite prepared to stake his political fortunes on completing the grants. He had not on other occasions shown such inclination to risk the going. Not even when McBride left the cabinet or Prior stepped into the premiership. This conversation was previous to the cancellation by order in council, from which Eberts dissented.

Eberts had also disapproved of bill No. 16 of the present session. This bill was drafted in the attorney-general's office, but was materially changed in the house at McPhillip's suggestion. As it had come from the attorney general's office, it had referred to the grants as executed, whereas delivery had not been completed. With the knowledge of Eberts' feeling in the matter the witness agreed that it would have been proper to have seen to it that bill No. 87 was drafted with special care, so as to carry out the intentions of the government, and make sure that Brown should not be able to carry out his "sinister scheme" with respect to blocks 4,593 and 4,594.

No doubt the government, in canceling the grants was largely influenced by the Taylor incident, of which the witness had made no report to Shaughnessy. He was quite satisfied that Shaughnessy had no knowledge of the agreement for the transfer of the grants from the B. C. Southern to the Columbia & Western. He (witness) had become impressed with the fact that through this substitution the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Company could be deprived of its selection of lands under the agreement shown by Shaughnessy with the B. C. Southern. In other words, the purpose of the substitution would be to defraud the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Company out of 20,000 acres.

With respect to Hunter's opinion the witness had furnished a presentment of the facts and it had been complete. The witness had deferred to the majority when the granting order-in-council was passed. He had no information at the time of the particular value of the substituted lands. The policy of the government with respect to the licenses in these blocks was not yet decided. When the applications had been received, they with the money accompanying them had been returned. There had been no determination as yet as to whether or not priority would be recognized.

Oliver at the resumption of the house on May 20th will ask the following questions:

1.—How many applicants for coal and oil prospecting licenses in blocks 4953 and 4594 are made by agents claiming to act for applicants?

2:—Have agents signing the above applications satisfied the government that they were authorized to sign the above mentioned applications?

3.—What steps, if any, do the government intend to take to ascertain if these applications by agents are, or are not fraudulent?

4.—Is it the intention of the government to recognize the claim to priority of location by the discoverers of coal and oil in southeast Kootenay.

Victoria, May 14— Attorney general Eberts gave evidence to-day before the investigation committee of the South-East Kootenay land scandal.

He was pressed by counse to relate what happened, after ex-premier Dunsmuir informed him of Wells' statement regarding the efforts of witness' partner, Taylor, to bribe him in Montreal.

He said he had gone to Wells once and found the other members of the cabinet holding a meeting, of which they had not informed him. Dunsmuir said: "Wells, tell Eberts what you told me." Witness started to tell the story, he said Wells began to stammer and stutter. Then Helmcken, one of the committee, told the witness he had no right to disclose cabinet secrets. A lengthy argument followed regarding the scope of the ministers' oath of office,

Finally it came out that Eberts had told his partner, Taylor, of the attempted bribery in Montreal as related by Wells. Wells rose and said he had given Eberts permission to tell his partner. This Eberts denied. He said he knew of no arrangement made before Wells went to Montreal that he was to ask the C. P. R. to build to Spence's Bridge before delivering the grants. He ridiculed the drawing up of grants to send to Montreal with a string on them. This Spence's Bridge road, he said, was a pet of Wells.

It came out that Eberts' name was on the back of the description of the land to be embodied in the since cancelled grants. He did not know how it came there.

After the committee rose he is said to have stated that the name had been transferred to the papers as a result of the copying of some other papers in the letter book, coincidentally with the particulars of the land.

He will be examined again tomorrow.

MISCELLANEOUS ADVANTAGES OF

MORRISSEY MINES

It has more hours of sunshine per day than any other town in the district. It has an abundance of pure spring water. It is high, and has perfect drainage. It is nearer by eight miles to the Flathead oil fields than any town in this section.

.....It is situated at the largest coal mine on earth..... the pay rolls of which are large now, but will double within one year.

The Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co.

own the mines and townsite, upon both of which development is being carried forward with all possible haste.

The new town begins life with the support of an army of wage earners, whose patronage means prosperity for its business men.

With pay rolls on every hand, no power on earth can stop its growth. The demand for coal and coke is much greater than the present supply, which means a rapid increase in the already large output of the Morrissey collieries, the employment of more hands, and the distribution of more money among the people.

COAL HAS NO RIVAL. Write for Terms and Particulars.

RESIDENTS WARNED.

WEST PEAK OF TURTLE MOUNTAIN THREATENS FRANK.

News From the Stricken Town—Out look For the Future of The Town Appears To be Very Gloomy.

The situation at Frank has reached an acute stage this week. The long period of uncertainty which has surrounded the place ever since the memorable slide almost a month ago has at last given way to certainty and for the present at least, the town is doomed

"C. P. R. authorities report from geological survey that west peak of mountain is dangerous and threatens the entire remaining portion of the town. Notify all residents."

In accordance with these instructions notices were posted in different parts of the town by the inspector. The townspeople, the few that have returned to the ill-fated town, are in a quandary as to the best course to pursue. Few realize the gravity of their situation as they seem to be in a dazed condition as a result of the trouble through which they have recently passed. There are only five business houses opened up. These are the Alberta Mercantile Co., general store, Chambers & Grady, hardware, W. C. Hamilton, general store, Murphy, clothing house and A. V. Lang, general store. The stock in these places has of late been reduced but they will still aggregate at least $60,000. A. W. Bleasdell & Co.'s store is closed and the stock will be moved to Morrissey Mines as soon as the company's new building is completed at that place. C. Reid, the other druggist, will move his business to Blairmore at an early date. The hotels of the town are doing very little business beyond that supplied by the C. P. R. in making transfers. The town wears a deserted air and the outlook for the future is gloomy indeed.

The work of the recovery of the bodies has been entirely abandoned as the immense valley of rock would have to be moved in order to obtain anything like satisfactory results. Only about a dozen trunks have been found. Many gruesome finds are made. It is not uncommon to come upon an arm or a foot belonging to the body of some victim of the awful slide. The body to which the limb belongs may be buried beneath a hundred feet of rock half a mile distant. One body was recently found within 60 yares of the C. P. R. station by a construction gang. It was cut through in two places, through the head and through the trunk. Of the 30 horses and 18 hogs belonging to the Company, the bodies of 13 of the former and 12 of the latter were recovered and burned.

The Canadian-American Coal and Coke Company have about 25 or 30 men at work; of the remaining 200 miners all have gone and all their household effects have been moved away. The few miners at work are engaged in opening up the old workings and also in sinking a new shaft. In the former the old shaft has been opened for a considerable distance. The frog of the track was found and also the top af a car, but the wheels are supposed to have been driven out of sight by the tremendous pressure. The new shaft is situated on the same seam but at the other end of the town and on the other side of the spur line to the tipple. The seam runs parallel with the main street of the town.

The C. P. R. construction work at Frank under the contract held by Breckenridge & Lund is progressing rapidly. About 450 men have been employed and though put back considerably by the inclement weather of late, the work is so far advanced as to permit through traffic by to-morrow. The line is being constructed close to the old road, a natural passage-way through the debris of rocks having been followed, which has materially lessened the labor. The work of ballasting of course remains to be done. The rails are in places laid on rocks which at first glance appear to be anything but safe. A great amount of filling in will be required in such places. The men engaged on the work sleep in box-cars or any other available place and the terrible storm which swept through Alberta during the beginning of the week has caused much suffering among these people resulting in several cases of pneumonia. An English engineer by the name of Wilcox came to Frank recently for the purpose of erecting the Belgian coke ovens for the French Company. The site selected for this work is covered many feet deep with rock from the slide.

The hospital nurses are leaving the town but the doctor and his wife are still there. Half a dozen mounted police are on duty in the town. Some curious facts have been noted in connection with the disaster. The set of books belonging to the railroad contracting firm of Poupore & McVeigh were found a third of a mile from where they were stored in their camp. They are little injured by their rapid and rough trip. Some five inch underdraining which was six feet below the ground has been dug out by the penetrating action of the sliding rock. A powder house situated near the station and belonging to Chambers & Grady had a narrow escape. The slide seemed to enclose it on all sides but the building and contents escaped injury. The most curious part was that the outside door was uninjured while the inside one was badly wrecked.

It is expected that the body of the trapper will soon be found by the miners excavating in the old tunnel entry. He and the driver were supposed to have been near the mouth when the slide occurred and the former who was on the inside was drawn into the mine. The later was forced out and ground to pieces.

The recent snow-fall at Frank measured 15 inches. This represented a large amount of water as the snow was extremely heavy and during the first part of the storm it melted as soon as it came down. Experts have held all along that the addition of water, especially in large quantities hastened the disintegration of the limestone. This being true the danger of a slide at this particular time, when the snow is melting, is great. It is conceded by all that a peak to the other side of the fallen point must give away shortly, but it is thought that this cannot injure the town. The fissures behind this one are widening and extending around behind the west peak on the other side of the chasm made by the big slide. This peak is several hundred feet lower. The fissures are gradually working their way around this mass of rock. It is probably 300 yds long and is sure to destroy the remainder of the town if it falls. Mr. McHendry, engineer of the C. P. R. survey, has been conducting a searching series of investigations and the wire from Premier Haultain is based on his report.

PAY-ROLL FOR APRIL.

THE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLAR MARK AGAIN REACHED.

Chinamen Arrived on Monday for the Coke Ovens at Fernie—Compressor at Work At Morrissey.

Last Saturday pay was given out at Fernie by the Coal Company. The men at Michel were paid on Thursday and at Morrissey on Friday. The total for the three camps amounted to $103,266.80 made up as follows:—

Coal Creek	$37,234.10
Michel	40,345.70
Morrissey	25,687.00

When it is remembered that work was resumed on April 1st after a six weeks' strike and that a full force could not be worked in consequence these figures are very satisfactory.

The work at the coke ovens at Fernie is now progressing more steadily. The Slav oven-workers who quit the work some time ago have to a large extent been replaced by about 80 Chinamen who arrived on Monday morning from Vancouver. The Company had for a time taken a body of Italians from important development work to keep the ovens working, until regular men could be supplied. The union had been asked to supply men and it had been powerless to meet the demand, and the only way left to the Company was the method adopted. These Chinamen are experienced coke-oven workers. The output of coke is steadily increasing and more ovens are being started at frequent intervals. Many of the Slavs who quit the coke ovens are working on the construction at Frank where high wages are being paid.

At Morrissey the new compressor was put in operation on Wednesday. This huge engine now supplies all the motive power in the mines for drilling and hoist purposes. The air is conveyed into the mines in 5 inch pipes at a pressure of 100 inches to the foot. It is giving splendid satisfaction.

IRON IN E. KOOTENAY

BULL RIVER IRON DEPOSITS CREATING MUCH ATTENTION.

Description of Property; Advantages to Fernie; Favorable Comparisons With Pittsburg, U.S.

The May number of the B. C. Mining Record contains an exhaustive article on the Bull River Iron Mines, from the pen of C. Hungerford Pollen, F. G. S., M. A. I. M. E. The location of these claims as shown on a map accompanying the article is on a straight line connecting Fernie and Fort Steele, the distance from the claims to Fernie being about twelve miles while to Fort Steele it is given as 22 miles. The same map outlines the Kootenay Central Railway to Elko, and the nearest point of the line passes within seven miles of Fernie. The success of the iron industry depends largely upon its distance from the fuel supply. The nearness of this location to the Crow's Nest collieries at Morrissey and Fernie make it of especial interest to these places as well as to the promoters of the iron mines.

He says:—"It is a matter, not merely of individual, but of national importance whether pig iron or steel can be profitably produced in British Columbia. There must always be a beginning. The value of a commodity must be governed in the end by the cost of its production. The position of Bull River is a striking one when the estimated costs of production are compared with that of steel produced in the United States."

"The building of the Kootenay Central Railway, which seems now a certainty, will give special advantages in the making of a great centre for the reduction and refining of metals. Deposits of various kinds such as manganese that have hitherto been considered of no commercial value whatever seem destined to become great assets to the wealth of the country.

"The property in question is known as the Bull River Iron Mines and is situated on Fenwick Mountain eighteen miles from Fort Steele. The distance to existing railway points are to Jaffray and Wardner on the C. P. R., nine and five miles respectfully; Elko on the Great Northern Railway, twenty miles. Good wagon roads connect with these places at present but the route of the proposed Kootenay Central Railway passes immediately below the claims at the foot of Fenwick mountain and will be within convenient reach of a tramway. The elevation of the claims is 6,000 feet above sea level and 2,500 above Bull River which encircles two sides of Fenwick Mountain. The extent of the property is about nine hundred acres. The base of the mountain is composed of slates, shales and quartzites of Cambrain Age. Above these and including the deposits the formation is Deveno-Carboniferous The deposits occur in a limestone which is in places dolomitic and which has a general strike of northeast and southwest with a north-easterly dip."

The writer then goes into a lengthy and scientific description of the formation etc.

The vertical distance measured from the summit to the lowest workings is 500 feet and to the lowest outcrop it is 900 feet. The analysis from samples taken from 11 claims gives an average of 59.99 per cent. metallic iron. The cost of extraction of ore is placed at $1.00 per ton. The falls on Bull River two and a half miles from the claims, afford a magnificent opportunity for power. The river drops 200 feet within a distance of one mile and has a flow of 6000 inches.

The reduction of the ore on the spot is taken up by the writer and by comparing all the costs connected with the iron smelting industry at Pittsburg with what they would be here he shows that the cost of making one ton of pig iron at the former place is $12.94, while at Bull River it would cost only $11.85 or $1.09 less per ton.

Another table comparing freight rates to the Pacific coast shows that the Bull river product would have an advantage of $5.90 per ton in this respect, which taken with the gain of $1.09 at the the smelter would make a total gain of $6.99 per ton of pig iron.

He closes with this paragraph.—

It is, unfortunately, considered very visionary at present for anybody to take a sanguine view of mining in B. C. A fact often overlooked is that although in the initial stages of mining the ruggedness of the country is an enormous drawback on account of the expense of exploitation and of the bringing of supplies and materials up hill, when the balance is turned and it is a question of hauling the product down hill the principles of gravity afford, in the flowing stream, cheap power and easy transport. The natural grades of the mountains themselves facilitate the accumulation of raw materials in the most economical manner. The very snow itself, once so objectionable, acts like a lubricant under the loaded sleigh.

In the above description of the Bull River mines I am largely indebted to Mr. Jas. T. Laidlaw, mining engineer of Fort Steele, to whose skill and foresight the exploitatiyn of the property is due. To Mr. Laidlaw must be given the credit of being instrumental in bringing the reserves of East Kootenay forward both in connection with the coal and oil as with the metal mines.

A NOTED VISITOR IN FERNIE

Ex-Speaker Higgins is in Fernie, the guest of his son, Dr. C. P. Higgins. The ex-speaker, who filled the chair of the provincial legislature for nine successive years, visited Frank on Wednesday and passed several hours amid the wreck of matter that fills the valley for a distance of several miles. He says the scene beggars description. Two ranches are entirely obliterated, not a trace of the farmers, their families and their live stock being left, all being buried beneath a mass of rock from 50 to 175 feet in depth. The fragments of a few dwellings are scattered here and there, but of other happy and peaceful homes not a vestige remains. The escape of two girls and the three month's old baby of Mr. and Mrs. Leitch, while the rest of the family were hurled to quick destruction, is considered marvelous The baby occupied the same bed as its father and mother, who were killed, and was picked up unharmed and sleeping. Asked to account for this miraculous escape Mr. Higgins replied sententiously, "Angels".

The political situation at the capital is described as lamentable. Each change of government brings a fresh scandal and the country seems as far from stability in public matters as ever. The worst feature of the inquiry now in progress is that perjury has been committed by one side or the other for the stories are unreconcilable and inconsistent. The lack of memory of the witnesses is extraordinary. The most important questions are evaded by the reply, "I cannot recall" or "I do not remember". It will need all the ability of the exceptionally strong committee to draft a report that will fasten the guilt and responsibility on the proper parties.

Mr. Higgins says that the Mining Association matters are flourishing. Branches are being formed almost everywhere, except at Fernie. At Nelson a vigorous organization has been instituted. The mining committee of the house have refused to entertain the suggested amendments to the mining act and Mr. Curtis will bring the matter before the house on an early day and will insist upon the amendments being considered so that the country may know who are in favor of reform and who opposed to it.

Mr. Higgins has been a resident of the province for forty-five years and is therefore one of its oldest old-timers. He has been identified with newspaper work all his life and for 20 years he was the proprieter of the Colonist. In latter years while taking a deep interest in politics he avoids any active participation. Mr. Higgins has reached that time of life when he can afford to take life easier, but even in his idle moments he delights to humor his literary taste, and in doing so he gives to the world some marvellously touching and true reminiscent stories of the earliest of the early days in B.C. The so delightful stories have from time to time appeared in the coast papers and are attracting wide attention. It is hoped by his many admiring readers that he will collect these stories and add to them and present them to the world of literature in book form.

The Ex-Speaker will leave for the coast on Monday evening.

ANOTHER COAL AND COKE CO.

The International Coal and Coke Co. has been formed under the laws of Washington with a capitalization of $3,000,000 of $1 shares, for the purpose of developing a coal property at Blairmore. The company is controlled by the Granby Smelter Co., a large amount of the capital having been subscribed by the latter and the officers of the new organization being connected with the Granby Co. The object of the company is to supply the smelter with its own fuel, though the output will not necessarily be limited to that amount.

The Paulson property west and south of Blairmore has been purchased by the company. This property, it is said, extends for seven miles, has nine veins, four of which have been prospected and have been found to aggregate a width of 60 feet. The company claims that the coal is of a fine coking quality, successful tests have been made. Work on three seams has commenced and the company has announced that 100 ovens will be erected at an early date.

ACTIVITY AT BLAIRMORE.

Description of Different Coal Properties—Town Benefiting From Frank Disaster.

Our correspondent at Blairmore sends us the following interesting letter this week.

THE INTERNATIONAL PROPERTY.

The coal property lately acquired by the International Coal and Coke Co., (the Granby Co.) and which has been known locally as the Paulson property, consists of some ten thousand acres of coal land on which there are seven known seams of coal varying from six to eighteen feet in width. The situation of the property is such that the seams can be worked to a great depth by a system of tunnels and as a consequence coal can be produced very cheaply. The point at which the property is being opened up and where the main workings will be situated is about 2½ miles west of Blairmore and about one half mile south of the C. P. R. near McLaren's sawmill. The veins which are seven in number have a dip to the west of about 45 degrees and a strike north and south through the whole length of the property. The character of the coal is very similar to the Fernie and is comparatively clean making a very superior quality of coke and being a first-class coal.

Active work is now being prosecuted upon this property and no expense will be spared to develop them as quickly as possible and already ground is being laid out for coke ovens and a survey made for a railroad spur to these mines.

A BLAIRMORE COAL PROPERTY.

The property of the Hastings Exploration Co., which is also tributary to Blairmore, is situated up Fishburn Creek which empties into the Old Man River at Blairmore, consists of some six miles in length on the coal series and embraces some eight thousand acres of land. Considerable surface work has been done upon the various coal seams, buildings have been erected and preparations are being made for extensive development work this season. This property has also seven veins of coal varying from a few feet to over twenty in width which is of a similar character to that of the Paulson property, being of a very fine steam and coking quality.

ON THE COAL MARKET TO STAY.

The Fishburn-Proctor coal property which is situated directly at the town of Blairmore and which is one of the town's main dependencies, is without doubt one of the very best coal propositions in the Canadian North West. The property embraces some eight miles in length on a series of seven coal veins and comprises some five thousand acres of land. A large amount of prospecting work has has been done upon the various seams and the development work which consists of open cuts, shafts and a long crosscut tunnel has thoroughly demonstrated the value of the property.

This property which was one of the first located in this locality and whose superior quality of coal first attracted the attention of mining men to this section is now in a fair way to be thoroughly developed and before this season is over should become a large producer and shipper of first-class steam and coking coal. Development work is now being pushed upon this property under the direct supervision of C. Morris, late mine superintendent of the Frank property and to whom that company is indebted for its rapid development. Shipments of coal have already been commenced and as the development is carried out to completion the shipments will be largely increased. The character of the coal produced here is well known, being preferred for domestic and steam purposes above any other coal in Alberta, while exhaustive tests made have proved it to be second to none as a coking coal. A entry is now being driven on the property at a point about ½ mile north of the town and preparations are being made for other extensive development work to be carried out at once.

BLAIRMORE'S OUTLOOK.

Blairmore itself is experiencing a revival in business and a building boom is being started here owing largely to the late disaster at Frank, besides the general activity of our several mining companies that make this place their supply point. At present nearly all of the business men of Frank are making this their home and a number are building themselves homes here and contemplate removing their business here as soon as possible. Owing to the late lamentable catastrophe at Frank our only business rival is practically removed and Blairmore, the natural business centre of this section, is rapidly coming into her own as a distributing point for the adjacent mines.

PLEA FOR COLONIES

CHAMBERLAIN FAVORS COLONIAL PREFERENCE.

In a Speech at Birmingham He States Why Canada's Exceptional Advantages were not Accepted—Advocates a Free Discussion of the Question.

Addressing his constituents at Birmingham on May 15 Colonial Secretary Chamberlain made an important speech which seems to foreshadow the direct raising of the question of free trade versus protection at the general election.

In the beginning of his speech Mr. Chamberlain referred to his South African tour and to his return home to find the minds of the people filled with local questions He made light of the difficulties he had been told assailed the Unionist party. For him these local questions were comparatively unimportant beside the great imperialist policy upon which the fate of the empire depended, namely, "whether we stand together one free nation against all the world or whether we shall fall into separate states selfishly seeking their own interests and losing the advantages that unity alone can give."

In a passing reference to home rule Mr. Chamberlain said that if separation began with home rule, the empire would dissolve into its component atoms; but if we could believe that the opposition party had frankly abandoned home rule he would be the first to sing "Nunc Dimitis."

The Colonial secretary proceeded strongly to urge the necessity, in order to preserve the great empire, that the trade of the colonies should be secured. Canada had offered exceptional advantages, he said, which Great Britain did not dare accept because of the narrow interpretation of the doctrine of free trade, the policy of dictation, and interference by foreign powers.

Mr. Chamberlain said he was justified by the belief that Great Britain was so wedded to its fiscal system that it could not defend its colonies. This was a position not intended by the pioneers of free trade who, if they were alive today, would agree to a treaty of preference and reciprocity with the empire's children. The speaker said he believed that an entirely wrong interpretation had been placed upon the doctrine of free trade, but that the country ought not to be bound by this and it should not hesitate to resort to retaliation, if necessary, wherever the interests between the colonies and the home country were threatened.

He avowed himself a free trader, but he objected to the artificial and narrow interpretation of free trade. He pointed out that Cobden had made, and that Brown had approved, a preferential treaty with France, and said: "There are two alternatives before you; first to maintain the free trade policy in all its severity although it is repudiated by every other nation and your colonies; second, to insist that we be not bound by any purely technical definition of free trade. While we seek the one chief object, the free interchange of commerce between ourselves and all the nations of the world, we will nevertheless recover our freedom and resume the power of negotiation and if necessary retaliation.

"In conclusion the colonial secretary said he desired that the discussion of this subject should be open.

It was an issue graver in its consequences than mere local disputes. A mistake in legislation could be corrected, he said, but a mistake in the imperial policy was irretrievable. Personally he did not think a general election was near, but whether near or distant, the issue would depend on whether the people have it in their hearts to do all that is necessary even if it occasionally went against their prejudices, to consolidate an empire which could only be maintained by relations of interest as well as by relations of sentiment.

GROWTH OF RAILWAY FACILITIES

Sir Thomas Shaughnessy on C. P. R. Development and the Steady Growth of Traffic.

Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway company, has given to the press a reply to the statements that there was a freight blockade in the west, and furnished some facts and figures which are of great interest to the people of Western Canada in showing what the company has done towards giving this country a good railway service.

"There has been no 'breakdown'—as some are fond of putting it—in the Canadian Pacific Railway company.

"I will not alone prove my statement, I will demonstrate it," continued Sir Thomas.

"From a statement which has just been prepared, you will see that the total number of tons of freight carried one mile was in the year up to June 30, 1902 2,383,633,945; in the year to June 30, 1902, the aggregate was 3,247,922,167; while in the year of June 30, 1903 (which is conservatively estimated in part on the basis of the freight carried during May and June of last year), it is anticipated that the total will reach 3,788,632,649 tons.

"The increase in the tonnage carried one miles was in 1902 over 1901, 36.26 per cent., and in 1903 over 1902, 58.52 per cent.

"Similarly the increase in the number of barrels of xour carried in 1902 over 1901 was 31.87 per cent., and in 1903 over 1902 it was 36.42 per cent.

"Greater even was the increase in the number of bushels of grain carried; the figures showing an advance of 60.10 per cent. in 1902 over 1901, and the very remarkable—the abnormal—increase of 97.34 per cent. in 1903 over 1902.

"Now, figures do not make the most interesting reading in the world, I know, but those which I have given prove—if they prove anything at all—that the C.P.R. must in 1901 have been either greatly overburdened with cars or it has since that date added enormously to its carrying capacity.

"What other conclusion can you draw when you see almost twice as much grain carried this year as was carried last?

"What other alternative presents itself?

"This is not a question of what Mr. Jones or Mr. Smith, or Mr. Anybody else may think; it is a question of fact.

NO. OF CARS IN COMMISSION.

"Let the figures speak once more. The number of freight and cattle cars in commission in 1901 was 21,932, while, in 1903, they have increased to 29,396, an increase of 34 per cent. or, including equipment ordered, but not delivered, 35.4 per cent. The capacity of these same cars has increased in the past two years by 53 per cent., or, including those which will be put in commission before the end of June, of 24.7 per cent.

"In 1901, the number of locomotives in the freight service was 527, while, this year, it has increased to 657, an advance of 24 per cent.

"To show that the company is alive to the exigencies of the case, I may say that orders have been given which, were the engines now in commission, would have brought the advance in this branch of the service up to 38.1 per cent.

"The capacity of the engines in question has gone up 37.3 per cent.

"The capacity of both the cars and the engines has gone up wonderfully in the last two years, larger cars and more powerful engines being constantly brought into requisition.

GROWTH IN FREIGHT EARNINGS.

"But the growth in the freight-earnings tell the most forceful story of all. During the year ending June 30, 1901, the freight earnings were $18,983,186; last year they were $24,199,428; while this year (always remembering that May and June are estimated on a basis of the two corresponding months of last year), the freight earnings will be $28,127,095.

"The increase in the freight earnings in 1902 over the year next preceding will thus be seen to have been 27.48 per cent., and in 1903 over 1902, 48.17 per cent.—figures, which I think, prove conclusively that the volume of trade flowing over out line is at once abnormal, extraordinary and unprecedented.

"There are some disadvantages attendant upon great prosperity.

"At no time has any country gone ahead with such marvellous strides has the Canadian Northwest in the last eighteen months.

"It would seem that this should be a source of unadulterated satisfaction, but, judging from the complaints that have come in from the west, the situation gives proof to the contrary.

It is claimed that the Canadian Pacific, as well as other western roads, is suffering from something approaching a freight blockade.

"As a matter of fact there is no blockade.

"A blockade is a state of affairs when nothing is moving, whereas freight is moving in the west in a larger volume and more rapidly than ever.

"The real difficulty of the situation is that freight is presenting itself in such vast quantities that all the rolling stock the railway companies have been able to provide is hardly adequate.

"Yet the great transcontinental road, and in fact all the Canadian roads, as well as their American competitors, have been striving to add to their motive power and to their rolling stock, ever since it became apparent that the true worth of the Canadian Northwest was known to the world. They have done much, and if those who are grumbling would carefully review the situation, they would find that instead of being dissatisfied they should give the greatest credit to the management of the Canadian Pacific railway for the really surprising amount of rolling stock they have succeeded in providing for western freight

MANY PILGRIMS FOR CANADA.

"Never since the days of the crusades have so many ardent pilgrims sought a foreign shore. Every ship that has crossed the Atlantic has contributed its quota of eager, restless men, whose one goal was the fertile land of Canada's great Northwest. Such conditions are altogether unusual, and it should be a matter of congratulation that the Canadian roads have been able, on the whole, to do as well as they have.

"It is quite certain that they have done at least as well as their American competitors. Moreover, in the case of the Canadian Pacific, at least, the temporary scarcity of rolling stock and motive power will disappear so soon as their new shops at Hochelaga are completed. These will be models of what other roads should have, and in their completeness and size they will be entirely without a rival."

A marvellous airship, invented by Stanley, is now building to compete for the St. Louis exposition prize. It is made of aluminum, and will present some entirely new features. It will contain accommodation for thirty passengers, baggage, mails and freight. The ship, including equipment, weighs 3,000 pounds, and its lifting capacity is 21,000 pounds.

Edmonton is to have a mounted infantry depot.

Hamilton, the robber of many Winnipeg houses, received a ten years' sentence in the penitentiary.

A discussion on the gambling evils of English society women is now going on in London.

DAKOTA PRAIRIE FIRES.

Much Damage to Property Reported—Child Burned to Death.

Reports from all over the State of North Dakota concerning the prairie fires of last Thursday indicate that probably never since the state was settled has there been more damage done in one day in a similar manner. The Red River valley appears to have been free from disaster of this kind, but from there west fires swept over the plains, covering thousands of square miles of territory and destroying an immense amount of property.

The ground was covered in most cases with a dense growth of grass, little of which had been burned off last fall. The weather for some time back has been quite dry, and on Wednesday the wind rose from the south, and blew away what little moisture was left in the grass, and made it as dry as tinder. Thursday morning the wind was still blowing strongly, and it continued to increase in force all day. The government station at Bismark recorded a velocity of 44 miles an hour, and this rate was probably reached all over the state. The air was filled with dust from the plowed fields, and where the soil is light, this amounted to an old fashioned dust storm. All that was needed to produce a disastrous fire was the dropping of a spark.

While the danger was happily averted, the conditions were probably more threatening at Harvey than at any other place in the state. There it appeared certain that the entire town would be swept out of existence. Fire was seen away in the west early in the day, and the residents of the town began to prepare for it as best they could. It was realized that with the wind that was blowing the fire fighting apparatus of the town would be absolutely useless should the fire once reach the town. The only hope was that the fire might be kept from reaching the place. The fact that the fire was to the west and not in a direct line with the wind gave some hope that the town might be passed by. All the men in the place organized into fire fighting gangs, and with plows, wet sacks, and other apparatus, started out to plow breaks, to back fire and in every conceivable way to protect the town.

At one time the fire was within half a mile of the town, and it seemed as if the place was doomed. Residents in many cases buried valuables hoping thus to save them, for it was realized that if a spark fell among the buildings the earth afforded the only shelter. Two trains of freight cars stood on the side track all day on which it was proposed to take away residents from the place should the fire once start. As evening came it was seen that the efforts of the volunteers who had been fighting to save their homes was successful. The fire passed by, and the town was safe

On the same day a disastrous fire started near the Great Northern track between Rolla and St. John. In a few moments it was beyond control, and it swept everything before it. Numerous farm houses and barns were destroyed, among them being the buildings on the Boyd farm, occupied by the manager, Mr. Wright. All these were burned, the loss being about $1,500, and Mr. Wright's family barely escaped with their lives. Wm. DePuy lost about $200 worth of new lumber and feed, and there are several other losses not reported.

...One of the most distressing incidents of the day was the burning of the three-year-old daughter of Ben. Granstadt, of Sawyer, Ward county. The fire threatened the home of the family, and Mr. and Mrs. Granstadt went out to do what they could to save the place. They could not take the little one with them into the heat and smoke, and were afraid to leave her in the house, which was threatened. As a measure of safety they her into the centre of a plowed field, where there was no chance of the flames running. While they were at work a spark flew across the field and lit in the dress of the child. In an instant she was enveloped in flames, and before her agonized parents could reach her she was burned so badly that her recovery was regarded as impossible.

Aside from the loss of life and the destruction of buildings, there was great damage done to the timber of the state, and this is not so plentiful that any can be spared. For some time there have been bad fires in the Turtle mountain country. This section is heavily wooded, and in fact it is the only section of the state where there is any great expanse of forest. The fires there have been fanned occasionally by the winds, and then have died down, to be revived by the next breeze. Before Thursday immense damage had been done, and the fires then had got beyond any possible effort to stop them. The reports from that section since the high winds are meagre, but there can be no doubt that the damage was tremendous. The Turtle mountain belt of timber covers a large area on both sides of the line, and the damage from the fires of the past week or two there has been incalculable.

IS AN EXPANSIONIST

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AT SAN FRANCISCO.

He Talks on the Development of the United States position in the Pacific and Advocates a Larger Navy—Bluster Won't do.

San Francisco, May 13.—At the Mechanic's Pavilion, President Roosevelt tonight made the most important speech he has delivered since he left St. Louis. His subject, Expansion and Trade Development and Protion of the Country's Newly Acquired Position in the Pacific," together with the advocacy of a greater navy. was one that made his discourse of particular interest and he aroused his audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm.

M. H. de Young, president of the citizens' reception committee, opened the meeting, and Mayor Schmitz formally introduced the president to the people of San Francisco. It was some minutes before the cheering subsided and the president was able to make himself heard. He said:

"Before I saw the Pacific slope I was an expansionist, and after having seen it I fail to understand how any man, confident of his country's greatness and glad that his country should challenge with proud confidence our mighty future, can be anything but an expansionist. America's geographical position on the Pacific is such as to insure our peaceful, domination of its waters in the future, if only we grasp with sufficient resolution the advantages of this position. We are taking long strides in this direction. Witness the cables we are laying and the great steamship lines we are starting. We have taken the first steps towards digging an isthmian canal, to be under our own control, a canal which will make our Atlantic and Pacific coast lines, to all intents and purposes, contiguous and will add immensely alike to our commercial and our military and naval strength. The inevitable march of events gave us the control of the Philippines at a time so opportune that it may without irreverence be held providential unless we show ourselves weak, unless we show ourselves degenerate sons of the sires from whose loins we sprung.

We must go on with the work that we have begun. I earnestly hope that this work will always be peaceful in character. We infinitely desire peace, and the surest way to obtain it is to show that we are not afraid of war. We should deal in a spirit of fairness and justice with all nations; we should show to the strongest that we are able to maintain our rights. Such showing cannot be made by bluster, for bluster merely invites contempt. Let us speak courteously, deal fairly and keep ourselves armed and ready. If we do these things we can count on the peace that comes only to the just man armed, to the just man who neither fears nor inflicts wrongs."

CARNEGIE CRITICIZED.

English Press Has Turned Against the Giver of Libraries.

A London cable says: Andrew Carnegie is evidently beginning to be found out by the press, which hitherto seemed to regard him as the king of beneficient fairy queens. His wanton attack on Canada finds no sympathizers, while even the Scottish papers reproduce the Outlook Onslaught upon what is called the "Bastard Individualism of His Pittsburg Carrot Bonus Philanthropy."

The Canadian Gazette, in an article entitled "Carnegie Vinegar," shows that Carnegie is ignorant of elementary facts as to Canada's present position, and prays that Canada may be delivered from Carnegie's benefactions.

"As for Mr. Carnegie's profit sharing schemes, they are severely dandled in some quarters. Why, it is asked, should British workmen exchange the interests thay have acquired in provident and sick funds and trade unions secured upon good independent investments, for an illassured interest in a business to which they must tie themselves if they would derive benefit from book bonuses or book shares? Some even enter a larger field with words like the following: 'The enormous extension of huge monopolies in America in course of years will convert the bustling, reliant, cute American into a salaried and pensioned, own-your-own-home, lifeless, hum drum clerk or official, toiling after a bonus of carrots dropped by benevolent magnates. This bastard individualism is devised to make more millions for millionaires. Even trade disputes, so long as they are an outcome of independence of character, will in the long run serve people better.'

"This strong language but represents a good deal of the English criticism of present American tendencies."

A dispatch from Buda Pest, says there was recently a serious peasant demonstration in Croatia, especially in the Kreuse district, where the houses and castles of Hungarian land owners were attacked and pillaged. Martial law was declared. Similar disorders have occurred at Brod, Sissek and other places.

W. F. McLean has introduced a bill in the House of Commons to change the name of Husdon's Bay to "Canadian Sea." He said foreign countries were on the look out for it.

THE RAILWAY BLOCKADE.

Other Countries Worse off than Western Canada—Trade Paralyzed in the United States.

The question of railway freight congestion in Manitoba and the Territories, discussed in the Dominion Parliament rerently, has brought out the fact that Western Canada is not alone in being a sufferer from overmuch prosperity. In the United States. It is shown, even a greater blockade exists than that complained of here, which, in some parts, has caused almost an entire suspension of business. One paper says that factories are closed, that trade is paralyzed and that many people have been brought to the verge of ruin owing to the inability of the railways to handle the immense volume of traffic. The railway companies assert that every effort is being and has been made to meet the requirements of the public, but that, so great has been the development of both freight and passenger traffic, and the impossibility to secure additional rolling stock, they cannot attempt to successfully carry all the goods offered. They point out that the conditions are such that it is actually beyond human power to do more than is being done, and they hold out no hope of relief till the unprecedented rush of the past year or two is over. The same state of affairs exists but fortunately in a lesser degree in Eastern Canada. While Western Canada cannot expect to be exempt from the prevailing conditions elsewhere in America, there is some satisfaction in knowing that we are not so badly off as elsewhere.

A MILLION FOR "A GIRL."

A Chicago Banker Who is in Search of a Domestic Servant at High Wage.

A dispatch from New York dated May 9 says: His search for a good servant maid has brought John Farson, multi-millionaire and philanthropist, to the Waldorf-Astoria. The Chicago bond broker and banker could not find in all Chicago or the western country a girl who was willing to accept his offer of $1,000,000 bonus, in addition to good wages and an ideal home, to enter his household service and agree to remain in the family until he died. He is now 48 years old.

There is no trick about this $1,000,000. Mr. Farson is eager and anxious to find someone to accept it. He has not given up hope of securing what he wants, but if he fails to find the ideal domestic on his present trip to New York he admits he will be discouraged.

"I'll give $1,000,000 for a good servant girl," said the owner of "Pleasant Home," a splendid suburban place in Oak Park, Chicago, to a reporter who asked him if the offer still held good. "If I get a good girl the money will be well spent. No one but a married man knows how hard it is to find competent help—and when found, to keep it.

"Some servants leave to get married, others because they are misunderstood, and still others are asked to leave. The servants at my home generally leave to get married.

"Now, I'll give $1,000,000 to the servant girl who will come to my home and agree to stay there as long as I live. This is aside from the wages to be paid. I want someone who will always be there and who will never want to leave. So far I have been unable to find a good girl who will agree to stick. What's the matter with the girls, anyhow? Don't they want a good place and a fortune thrown in?"

Mr. Farson is head of the banking house of Farson, Leach & Co., of New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston.

The formal offer which Mr. Farson has made is all ready to be transcribed into a contract as soon as the right girl steps forward to affix her signature. Here it is:

"My ideal servant girl never makes an error in table service. She knows at a glance the likes and dislikes of my guest at the table whom she has never seen before. She never sulks. She always is dignified. She is prudent and knows her place. She is always neat. She never discusses household affairs with outsiders. She is a good nurse, a good cook and knows something about dressmaking.

"To such a girl as this I will leave $1,000,000 in my will."

The Ontario Government will erect a statue to Sir Oliver Mowat and will ask the legislature for a preliminary vote of $5,000 this session.

Joseph Abey, formerly of Chater, Man., where he was well known, left Atlin, Yukon Territory, in company with a man named McIntyre on Nov. 30 last to convey the mails to Log Cabin. They were drowned while crossing Tagish lake, and no trace was found of the bodies until last Saturday, when the remains of Abey were found on the lake shore. His brother, Mr. G. Abey, of Chater, was notified by telegram of the fact and he will have the body brought to Manitoba for interment.

An Elm Creek dispatch says that when the express train was a couple of miles west of Fanneystelle on Thursday of last week a man from Carman named George Elliott was passing from one car to another, and the wind blew him off the train. No one saw him tumble except a foreigner, who said nothing about it until he got to Elm Creek, when the man Elliott being missed, he told his story. The passengers for Carman change cars at this station, and the Carman local was run back on the main line to look after Elliott, who was found about eight miles back, lying unconscious alongside the track, being stunned by the fall, but not otherwise injured.

The powers have notified Bulgaria that she will have to meet the Turk without any prospect of intervention.

MARKETS.

(Compiled from The Commercial)

WHEAT—The wheat market during the past seven days has been nervous and uncertain, though for the most part there has been an undertone of strength. This, however, has not prevented a slight decline in the American speculative markets as compared with a week ago. These markets have exhibited a great deal of nervousness during the week. On some days the fluctuations in prices were quite erratic though never what might be called violent. Much of the influence bearing on the market was through the fear of manipulation of the May option. Towards the end of the week this fear was less in evidence, and the market seemed to be becoming governed more by the legitimate influences of supply and demand and crop prospects. The cash demand during the week has not been pronounced and export demand has also been moderate so far as reported, but from the evidence supplied by the variation in visible stocks, and the largeness of world's shipments there seems no let up in the large consumption of wheat products. The movement of wheat in the States continues to be on a larger scale than at the same time last year and export of wheat from the North American continent is smaller than a year ago, yet the visible supply continues to decrease, and in the spring wheat States the interior elevator stocks are down to a very low point. Notwithstanding large world-s shipments the amount on passage to Europe is 14,000,000 bushels less than last year, and stocks at European ports are also light. In regard to crop prospects, there can be no doubt that at the present date there is a distinct deterioration in the American winter wheat crop from the glowing prospect of a month ago. It is not improbable that the high prospect that has been credited to that crop ever since it was seeded until a fortnight ago has been more apparent than real. Anyway the weather of the past few days has not been very favorable to it, and within the last ten days reports of damage have increased and are becoming more emphatic. The causes of damage are various, but are principally severe frost in some districts, and insect damage in others, together with cool, unseasonable weather all over. In California where the prospect was very fine until a fortnight ago they are now having it very hot and dry and the prospective yield is being cut down thereby. The spring wheat crop in the Canadian Northwest is now all seeded, and the acreage probably increased 20 per cent., but it is too early to say anything definite about the prospect. In Europe there is not any change in crop reports except that it is more certain the crops in Germany, France and Russia do not give good promise, in some parts they are bad, but in no country is there the promise of bumper crops. The expectation is, therefore, that Western Europe will continue to require large imports of wheat during the coming year.

Manitoba wheat has been firm all the week with a generally fair demand, and the fluctuations in values has not been over ¼c. At the close Montreal .... 694,000 hard 77¼c, 1 northern, 76c; 2 northern, 73¾c; 3 northern, 70¼c; No. 4, 66c. spot or delivery first half May. The greatest medical authorities say that when food is not thoroughly digested it leaves a mass of undigested matter at a standstill, when immediately fermentation sets in, and which thrives from various gases and poisonous vapours, creating fullness of the stomach and bowels, bad breath, furred tongue, dizziness, but the worst of all is this generated poison passes into the blood, from which it is carried to the brain, nerves, kidneys and every important part of the human anatomy. Cases of this kind are dangerous and should be treated by a remedy of reputation. We have such a remedy in Dr. August Koenig's Hamburg Drops, which has been successfully prescribed by the medical profession throughout the world for more than sixty years. It is a pharmaceutical preparation of the highest possible order of merit. St. Jacobs Oil, Ltd., of Baltimore, are the sole proprietors. 50 cents. Directions in eleven languages.

THE POOR DYSPEPTIC.

Is the Most Miserable of Mortals—Only Similar Sufferers Can Understand His Hours of Agony.

There is no mortal more miserable than the poor dyspeptic. He is never healthy, never happy—always ailing, always out of sorts. Every mouthful of food brings hours of distress—every moment of the day is spoiled and soured.

If you are a dyspeptic you know the signs; the coated tongue, the dull headaches, the heartburn, the biliousness, the persistent torment after meals, the hopeless despondency. Any one of these signs points to indigestion. The one sure cure for indigestion is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They make new blood—that's the whole secret. Through the blood they will brace up your strength, waken your liver, and set your stomach right. If you ask your neighbors you will find prrof of this right at your own home. Mr. Charles Wood, Mars, Ont., one of the thousands of dyspeptics cured by the use of these pills, says: "For upwards of twelve years I was a great sufferer from indigestion and nervousness. Everything I ate tortured me. I doctored almost continuously, and used almost everything recommended for this trouble, but never got more than temporary relief until I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Words cannot express the good these pills have done me. I am in better health than I have enjoyed in years before, and I have proved that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure when other medicines fail."

Bad blood is the mother of fifty diseases, and Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will cure them all, because they convert bad blood into good, rich, red blood, without which there can be neither health nor strength. Don't be persuaded to try something else—take nothing but the genuine Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Paine's Celery Compound
Rescued a Lady Who Was Drawing Near the Grave.
The Life Building Medicine That Wives and Mothers Need in May.

Paine's Celery Compound does a wondrous work for sick and half dead women in May. The conditions of winter have been detrimental to the health of women and girls everywhere; they have declined in nervous vigor, the blood is reeking with impurities, the excretory organs do not perform their work, and the digestive machinery is sadly out of gear. The human machine must be cleansed repaired and strengthened in May. Paine's Celery Compound does the work surprisingly fast, and gives a guarantee of permanent health and long life. It is the one spring medicine that truly nourishes, regulates and invigorates the entire system from the brain to the minutest nerve filament. It gives a full, rich supply of energizing blood, it clears the muddy, unhealthy skin, it gives an increase in weight, and more refreshing sleep. Whatever be your condition unhappy sufferer, we give you a blessed assurance of a new and lasting health through the use of Paine's Celery Compound. Mrs. Flora S. Brantley, Levis, P.Q., writes thus:

"Eighteen months ago I was terribly afflicted with daily headaches and was despondent, nervous and weak. Medical assistance and patent medicines failed to bring me relief. My sufferings increased, and I was told I would not get better again. I was suffering so much that I was satisfied to die if it was God's will. A neighbor kindly suggested the use of Paine's Celery Compound, and to please her, I consented to try it. The first few doses seemed to send a feeling of new life into my blood, and I went on using the compound. I have taken five bottles and can honestly say I am fully cured. I am sleeping well, appetite in good condition, getting back lost flesh, and feel as active as a girl of fifteen. I think my cure is a permenent one. I thank God for Paine's Celery Compound; it saved my life to my husband and children."

WONDERS OF THE NEEDLE.

Beautiful Wo[illegible] Artisans of Former Centuries.

The wonders of the needle were in ancient times in Egypt, India, Babylonia and Phœnicia mainly lavished by women on veils and hangings for temples. Connoisseurs consider the veil decorating the tomb of Mohammed at Medina, priced at 10,000,000 rupees, the most marvelous piece of embroidery ever made. Its pattern, a cunning interlacing of scrolls and arabesques, exclusively delineated with rare pearls and precious stones, produces, when exposed to the rays of the sun, a stupendous effect of coloring, soft and harmonious and equal to the bold gracefulness of the design. Linen, silks, leather and the richest stuffs were in turn beautified with the little insignificant tool, the needle.

Diaphanous Indian muslin charmingly embroidered with green beetle wings is still renowned, as well as examples of painted spangles and artificial pearls strewn amid devices wrought in gold. But where is now to be found the incomparable Decca muslin, thirty yards of which were once inclosed for a turban in an ordinary cocoanut incrusted with gems and presented by a Persian ambassador to his master, the shah. Other varieties known as invisible have also disappeared. The term originated from the fact that when dipped in water or spread out on the grass the material was lost to the eye through its extreme fineness.

The trained fingers have disappeared, and through modern competition customers are no longer willing to pay the real value of genuine hard work. This superiority of eastern craftsmen over their western fellows was recognized centuries ago, first by Portuguese, who were in the habit of sending satin to India to be embroidered by the natives after European designs, a fashion which at times renders somewhat puzzling the classification of the marvels of handiwork.

The French followed suit, since the majority of the Louis XVI. court sets, including coat, waistcoat and breeches in satin, velvet, plush or corded silk, so exquisitely adorned with delicate sprays and admirable borders wrought in satin and tambour stitches, are due to the skill and industry of the Chinese, who have reproduced the French devices with floss silk in such lovely and fast colors, which still appear in all their beauty, with a mellowness imparted by time which further adds to their charm.

BOOKS AND READING.

Reading is to the mind what exercise is to the body.—Addison.

A home without books is like a room without windows.—Beecher.

To read without reflecting is like eating without digesting.—Burke.

Books are the best things well used; abused, among the worst.—Emerson.

Next to acquiring good friends the best acquaintance is that of good books.—Cotton.

Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed and some few to be chewed and digested.—Bacon.

Half the gossip of society would perish if the books that are truly worth reading were but read.—Dawson.

What is a great love of books? It is something like a personal introduction to the great and good men of all past times.—John Bright.

The three practical rules I have to offer are: (1) Never read any book that is not a year old; (2) never read any but famed books; (3) never read any but what you like.—Emerson.

What Makes Things Grow.

According to Maurice Springer, a French writer on the subject, the energy of growth is closely related to electric energy and may be identical with it. At any rate, growth energy is closely connected with the phenomenon called osmosis—that is, molecular pressure due to differences of density in adjacent liquid masses. Such molecular pressure in the cells of the body he believes to be the phenomenon that underlies the multiplication of these cells in growth, and osmosis has been shown by experiment to be closely connected with electricity. The writer referred to believes that we shall soon be able to measure growth energy as we now do heat or electricity and perhaps control it so as to produce tall or short families or races at our pleasure.—Success.

Perfectly Safe.

A tourist in a remote part of Ireland, having stayed the night at a wayside inn not usually frequented by visitors, informed the landlord in the morning that his boots, which had been placed outside his room door to be cleaned, had not been touched.

"Ah, shure," said the landlord, "and you moight put your watch and chain outside your room door in this house, and they wouldn't be touched."—London King.

Quite Similar.

La Montt—Who is that old fellow that is always hunting for you to buy him a drink?

La Moyne—He claims to belong to the upper crust.

La Montt—The upper crust, eh? Well, I notice he is always short and always dry.

Plenty of Truth.

"Perhaps," ventured the unsuccessful contributor, "you didn't consider my little ode true to life."

"Oh, it was true enough," replied the editor. "I assure you there was more truth than poetry in what you said."

An African Lion.

One day when elephant hunting in the Baseleka territory, accompanied by 250 men, I was astonished suddenly to behold a majestic lion slowly and steadily advancing toward us with a dignified step and undaunted bearing. Lashing his tail from side to side and growling haughtily, he fixed his terrible eyes upon us and displayed a store of ivory well calculated to inspire terror among the timid natives.

A headlong flight of the 250 men was the immediate result, and in the confusion of the moment four couples of my dogs were allowed to escape. These instantly faced the lion, who, finding by his bold bearing he had put his enemies to flight, now became solicitous for the safety of his little family, with which the lioness was retreating in the background.

Facing about, he followed them with an independent step, growling fiercely at the dogs, which trotted along on either side of him.

As my natives had all deserted me, I considered it unwise to interfere with his departure and, calling back my dogs, saw the last of this king of the forest without regret.—"Five Years' Hunting In Africa."

The End of the World.

Here are six views on the end of the world that have been given out by eminent scientists during recent years:

The land surface is diminishing; the human race will be finally drowned.

Ice is accumulating at the north pole; some day the earth will fall out of balance and man will be utterly annihilated by the rush of moving objects.

The earth is gradually approaching the sun; the last man will therefore finally be roasted alive.

Water is slowly growing scarcer; in the ages to come all human beings and animals will perish for the want of a drop of moisture to cool their parched tongues.

With the beginning of the year 3000 A. D. man will commence to retrograde and will finally come to be a creature no larger than a plant louse.

The sun is burning up; as she cools the earth's glacial zones will enlarge, and the last remnant of humanity will be frozen in a heap.

When Gaslight Was New.

The first shop in London lighted by gas was one of which a Mr. Ackerman, a German, was the proprietor. This shop was on the Strand, and the date was 1810. One of the ladies of rank who often visited the Ackerman shop was so delighted with the brilliancy of a gas jet on one of the counters that she requested the proprietor to let her take it home for the evening, promising to return it safe and sound on the morrow.

IN MEMORIAM.

The first anniversary of the awful catastrophe at Coal Creek mines has arrived, and though the many heart-rending details of that disaster were so deeply burned into our memories as to defy effacement it is fitting that a day be set aside for the public commemoration of the sad event and to thereby mark the yearly revolutions of the cycle of time.

None have forgotten the first sensations of fear and trembling which possessed them when late in the evening of May 22, of last year rumors, dark and ominous, spread about the town. Facts swiftly followed on the heels of rumor and citizens and comrades, wives and children, fathers and mothers braced themselves with superhuman efforts to face the saddest scenes which, it is hoped they may ever be called upon to share.

Brave and willing comrades hastened to the rescue and though in all human reasoning it appeared impossible that the entombed miners could be rescued alive, they hoped against hope, and the work of fighting the deadly after-damp and the obstructing rock and timbers was pushed silently and swiftly on.

The worst fears were soon realized. With the exception of those fortunate miners who escaped from No 3 soon after the explosion occurred, all were cut off by the one fell stroke of the grim Reaper s mighty arm. The sad scenes about the mine's mouth where anxious relatives and friends awaited the recovery of their loved ones were followed by even sadder sights when the recovered bodies were laid in long rows preparatory to the last solemn rites of burial. Day after day, often hour after hour, funeral processions wended their solemn way through the town to the cemetery overlooking the town and valley, where rows of yawning graves gaped wide to receive their own.

A year has passed since those stirring scenes took place. Time, Nature's most potent healer of breaking hearts, has done much to lessen the grief and soften the painful memories. The lessons of immortality have been renewed within us, and the uncertainty of human life, thus brought so suddenly home to us, has had a leavening effect upon our lives.

The memory of our dead comrades will live on, and be ever green, but let our thoughts take the same form as Tennyson's in his mourning song "In Memoriam,"

"Thou wilt not leave us in the dust .
Thou madest man, he knows not why ;
He thinks he was not made to die ;
And Thou hast made him: Thou art just."

EDITORIAL NOTES

The prompt decision of the Dominion government to close the town of Frank is a striking confirmation of the opinion of Mr. Blakemore given in our columns last week. It will involve considerable loss and hardship for those who had invested their all in the town, but no consideration of a monetary character can be allowed to weigh against a question of the safety of human life, and there will be nothing but commendation for the decisive action taken by the government. According to the opinion of mining experts much might be said as to the unscientific methods adopted in connection with the unfortunate Frank mine but we have no desire to add to the burden of responsibility and remorse which the proprietors must feel. Obviously no further mining operations will be permitted in that district without the strictest control by the government, and under the most expert management.

The new coal and coke company which has acquired coal lands near Blairmore and are making plans for immediate development on a large scale will no doubt be the means of forming a little town at the junction of their spur with the railway, though we understand that it is not definitely known yet whether that junction will be made at Blairmore or a few miles west of that town. Blairmore is an ideal site for a town and the promoters of the International Company should consider this feature well before deciding on any other place for their headquarters.

THE fruit growing industry in B. C. is making greater strides than ever. Altogether there have been sold to B. C. growers about 220,000 trees this season. This means that about double the usual number have been set out this spring. The fruit belt of the province is widening and encroaching upon the mountains of the eastern portion of B. C. In many parts of West Kootenay it has been absolutely proved that fruit can be grown successfully. The industry is an assured success in the Fort Steele district and needs only time and patience to make it one of some magnitude. The recent action of the Associated Boards of Trade in asking for a government fruit farm in this vicinity is also significant as showing the growing faith in the fruit growing possibilities of the mountains. These facts are significant in another sense, even granting that the climate of our immediate vicinity is too severe to mature fruit. It means that our markets will be supplied with cheaper and fresher fruits. Strawberries will this year be placed on our tables the same day that they are plucked from the plants. The great reduction in the express rates will mean a corresponding reduction in the price that the dealer will demand, thus bringing such luxuries within the reach of all.

While the Grand Jury were preparing their presentment it would have been wise on their part to have recommended certain improvements in the Fernie gaol. There is no doubt that the lack of accommodation for prisoners at this place is to a certain extent responsible for the fact that there were only four sent up for trial on the Coal Creek riot charge. If Fernie is the "bad" place that the Grand Jury think it is, its high time that the regular assize court was held here. Not only would a great amount of expense be saved in railway fare and witnesses' fees but the Grand Jury being then on the ground would be in a better position to size up the situation correctly in making a presentment treating of this district.

The spur from the Gold Creek collieries to Frank is hopelessly buried beneath many feet of rock for the first mile and a half from the town. This property lies north and somewhat west of Frank and a spur to Blairmore would be very little longer than the present one. The latter has a grade of 2½ per cent. while it is stated that the Blairmore spur could be built on as low as 1½ per cent grade. In view of the fact that the Frank townsite has been partially ruined and another slide threatens to wipe the rest out, it would seem reasonable to suppose that Blairmore will be selected as the new junctional point. This townsite is one of the prettiest along the Crow line and it possesses many natural advantages. It has waited patiently for the prosperity which has hitherto passed it by, but apparently its turn has now come.

IMPOSING ON GOOD NATURE.

Dan McKenzie Impersonated at Different Western Points.

A personator of Dan Mackenzie the well-known Fernie miner has been creating some little excitement at Moyie, Nelson and Rossland. At Moyie he appeared with a hand tied up which he said had been hurt in the Frank disaster. He represented himself to be one of the entombed miners, when he got out he found his wife and children, with the exception of the youngest, all dead This youngest child was with friends in Nelson and to get to that place was the great desire of his heart. The sympathies of the kind-hearted Moyie people were immediately enlisted and the deeply afflicted man was sent to Nelson with plenty of money in his pockets.

At Nelson he maintained much the same story but said that he was searching for a married sister who was supposed to be living in the vicinity of Nelson. He received free medical attendance for his bruised hand. The real Dan McKenzie, who has been living in Fernie of late, as soon as he learned of the imposter wired to Nelson warning the public against the man.

He next appeared at Rossland under he name of Dan McKinsley. He told the same story but avoided any discussion on the awful catastrophe by saying that the memory of it all was too horrible to allow him to relate his experiences. He tried to work the Oddfellows of Rossland but by wiring to the lodge in Montana of which he claimed to be a member the man was found to be a fraud.

The police at Rossland and Nelson also received warning from other sources and the so called McKenzie made himself scarce.

It has been learned that the impersonator is a Fernie saw-mill worker by the name of Grady who hurt his hand while working in the mill.—Morrissey Despatch

SHAUGHNESSY'S STORY

SIR THOMAS RELATES HIS PART IN THE DEAL.

He Claims That the C.P.R. Have an Indisputable Right to the Property.

The most important feature in the Columbia and Western land investigation this week was the evidence supplied by Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, president of the C.P.R. He brought with him to Victoria a large bundle of correspondence and other documents bearing on the subject, for the examination of which the commission adjourned for several hours.

With respect to the delivery of the grants for blocks 4593 and 4594, Sir Thomas stated Mr. Wells had called on him in Montreal about the deeds and had asked to retain them for a month on account of cabinet changes at Victoria. The next day Wells called again and asked for a receipt for the grants which he had delivered, and he had then spoken to witness about the building line to Spence's Bridge. Witness had then told him that their present line was not paying and an extention was out of the question. When Mr. Brown had wired that the grants had been cancelled without notice, the government pleading political exigency and proposing to substitute other lands elsewhere, witness had replied that under the circumstances the company had no alternative but to accept the situation, as it appeared a government could repudiate its acts in a way which would not be count enanced in a private individual. Afterwards their solicitor had advised that the grants, having been duly issued, actual delivery was not essential, and that the government could not cancel the grants in that way.

Sir Thomas admitted that Brown might have used his influence to secure the blocks in question. He was left with a free hand and he doubtless had tried to make the best bargain possible with the government. The witness believed it to the duty of the government to deliver the disputed crown grants to the company, and if it were not done the later were prepared to test the question in the courts. Confirmatory legislation was not necessary to validate these grants.

The Nelson News has the following account of Mr. Duff's examination of the witness, relative to the alleged conspiracy of a company of twenty individuals to get possession of the lands, and of Wells' business with him.

"He had never mentioned to Mr. Wells the formation of any company to develop any portion of the lands covered by the disputed crown grants. The company had thought of establishing a coal industry at Lodge Pole creek, but there was no plan and no question or intention of forming a land company or alienating any of these lands from the company. He had heard gossip regarding the formation of a company, but there was positively no foundation for it. Colonel Prior did not tell him that there was a question of a land company and some improper suggestions with regard to the delivery of the crown grants. He did not pay any attention to the gossip which reached him, as it was utterly groundless, and did not concern the company in any way. Mr. Brown may have stated in a general way that reports of proposed wrongdoing was one of the reasons for which the government introduced the bill rescinding the crown grants. Mr. Wells explained that the action of the government was due to political trouble and regretted that the grants could not be handed over forthwith. He had told Wells that the company would stand on its legal rights and would fight the matter in the courts, and Mr. Wells said if the C. P. R. would convince the government of its legal standing it would be willing to hand over the grants. Mr. Wells said there were two vacancies in the cabinet, and it was desirable that these should be filled before the grants were handed over. Witness said he had assured Mr. Wells that he had no desire to embarrass the government, and consented to Mr. Wells retaining the grants on the understanding that they would be in a position to state publicly that the transaction was not completed, should it be called in question. In the ordinary course those patents should have been delivered to the company at Vancouver or at Montreal, by mail, but instead, a minister of the crown went to Montreal with them, and he (witness) could hardly refuse that minister's request to withhold them for a time. It was not his nor the company's affair what purpose Mr. Wells proposed to serve by holding the grants. He did not anticipate that the legislature would pass a bill to cancel the crown grants.

When Wells spoke of the extention to Spence's Bridge, witness said the company had all the railway it could conveniently operate at that time and that it would be time enough to talk of extensions when the existing lines begin to pay. He also pointed out to Mr. Wells that the British Columbia government was too ready to grant subsidies to promoters and thus discourage legitimate railway builders. Wells did not speak about railway extension on the first day. The conversation was confined to discussing the government's right to grant those particular lands. Mr. Creelman was present and Mr. Wells raised the question. It was not until the next day that the railway question was discussed. Mr. Wells was not under any obligation to the C.P.R. or any of its subsidiary companies. Cross-examined by Mr. McCaul, Sir Thomas said that under the agreement with the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co., the C.P.R. could not operate coal mines for ten years, unless the coal company failed to carry out its contract. The Pacific Coal Company was not formed for the purpose of operating the coal lands of the B. C. Southern or the C. & W.

COMMUNICATIONS.

To the Editor.

The price of shaving has gone up to 25 cents and cartage has advanced as well and no doubt there is rejoicing among the barbers and draymen because they have been successful in using organized labor as a cloak to accomplish their object. And now they discard the union and would denounce a union man who would patronize a "scab." Some of these men have not attended a union meeting for months. Their conduct corresponds very much with that of some of the settlers on the prairie who if called upon to fight a prairie-fire, drop out of line as soon as they feel satisfied that their own place is out of danger. If that were the union spirit, it would be no wonder that men are joinidg non-union-unions. But one who knows better says it is not, it is only trade-unionism that will take from one worker to add to the wages of another. Now the object of this letter is, not as some may think, to divide the house of labor against itself, but to draw the attention of the wage-earners to the fact that such has already taken place and to point out to them the cause, namely, the men who join a labor organization for no other reason than to use the combined efforts of the workers to further directly their own personal interest.

It is far better to recognize the division than to allow a hypocrite or one not versed in the needs of the household to rule. The man with the true union spirit i.e. the advanced unionist also advocates trades-unionism to a certain extent, but he agrees with the President of the United Mine Workers of America in saying that it is not the ultimate, but unlike Mr. Mitchell he is not afraid to name the ultimate. The constitution of the United Mine Workers of America reads, that it is the object of the organization to procure shorter hours of work etc. by peaceful conference between employer and employee. O! how often has the labourer pleaded for bread and has been given a stone, how often when he found himself sinking has he tried to reach the shore where his employers stood only to be repulsed. It is written "The meek shall inherit the earth." Surely we have waited long enough, through ages and ages we have supported drones and parasites. It now rests with the worker if he will claim his heritage. But trades-unionism will never get it for him, it is not a solution to the labor problem, it is only the first reader of true unionism, it is as inadequate to bridge the chasm now existing between employee and employer of labor as a common school education would be to qualify a man for a business career. The miners of Fernie have gone back to this first reader when some of their fellow workingmen would have been only too glad to extend the helping hand to a step higher. Let us hope that the lesson they will learn this time will have more effect on them. In conclusion I wish to say that these are my personal sentiments and are not authorized by any organization. And I trust that I have not made myself unduly misunderstood

The railway service on the Crow line was badly out of order at the beginning of the week, owing to a severe storm on the prairie. Two feet of snow fell in Alberta, and 10 feet in Montana is reported. 200 cattle, out of a trainload of 350 which arrived at McLeod, were dead. 90,000 head were lost in Montana, aggregating a loss of $2,000,000.

Methodist Ministers Change

The stationing committee of the Methodist conference at Victoria concluded its final draft on Wednesday. Rev. R. F. Stillman has been appointed to Rossland and Rev. J. Robson comes to Fernie. It appears that some little difficulty had to be encountered when the first draft was made. It sent W. W. Baer, of Nanaimo, to Fernie and J. Robson to Nanaimo. This met with dissatisfaction from all parties.

Mrs. R. W. Rogers, of Morrissey, is the guest of Mrs. Stillman.

G. ●. Roberts who has been in the Old Country for a couple of years returned this week to Fernie and he is being welcomed by many old friends.

The wife and three children of Mr. E. G. Hazell arrived from Toronto last week and have taken up house-keeping in one of the company cottages on Baker street.

None should fail to take in the excursion on Monday. The trip and the marvellous sights at Frank will combine to make the outing both pleasant and interesting.

Services at Christ Church to-morrow will be as follows: Matins, 11 a.m.; Sunday School, 2:30; Evensong, 7 p.m. Collection in aid of the society for the propagation of the gospel.

Your attention is called to the notice of the excursion to Frank on Monday, 25th. This being a public holiday a large crowd will likely take advantage of the splendid opportunity of seeing for themselves the wonderful effect of the great and destructive rock slide at Frank.

Mr. Wm. W. Thomson, of the Trites-Wood Co., who has for some time been employed at the Coal Creek store, has accepted the position of manager of that branch. Mr. and Mrs. Thomson moved this week into the pretty cottage recently occupied by Mr. Richards on the east side of the creek.

Among the Fernie people registered at Nelson hotels this week are the following Dr. Higgins, W. Eschwig, T. H. Whelan, W. A. Ingram, Mrs. T. Davies, A. Cartlidge, T. Davies, R. Maddison, J. W. Miner, E. Cusack, A. Johnson, R. Oliver and A. Foster. Many of these are down to give evidence at the assizes.

The Junior Guild of Christ Church are preparing a first-class entertainment to be given in Princess Hall. Wednesday May 27th. It is a convention of the "Young Women's Single Blessedness Society" and in their efforts to obtain a man much fun comes out. It will form a treat for the fun lovers of Fernie.

All mayors and editors in the "Inland Empire" have received invitations from the Spokane Chamber of Commerce to a place on the platform of the reception committee to receive President Roosevelt next Tuesday. The "Inland Empire" evidently includes British Columbia. Five hundred seats are arranged for on this platform.

The regular monthly meeting of the Ladies' Aid of the Ladies' Aid Society of the First Baptist Church will be held on Tuesday afternoon of next week at Mrs. J. McEwings'. As a most interesting communication will be read from Miss C. Shafford, Pres. W. M. B. it is the urgent request of the secretary that all members be present.

Mr. Keith Whimster came up on Thursday from Frank where he has been employed with Messrs. Chambers & Grady. He is staying with his parents. Keith regards the situation at Frank as critical at this particular time when the snow is melting. When he left numerous little slides were occurring, caused by the action of the water on the limestone.

Sensation at Rossland

Rev. J. Burtt Morgan, formerly Baptist preacher at Rossland and editor of a weekly newspaper called "Truth" at that place is being tried at the assizes on a charge of criminal libel by Police Commissioner and Alderman, Harry Daniel. The charge is based on certain statements published in "Truth" exposing the gambling system and charging Daniel with receiving a rake-off from the fines imposed by the authorities. The evidence for the defence makes very readable newspaper matter. No doubt among those who were called to give evidence were many unwilling witnesses. Different hotel men and municipal officers were examined and evidence was given to the effect that "Dave" Morgan, proprietor of the International hotel was a "go between" man between the authorities and the keepers of gambling houses. This "ambassador" fixed the amount that each house was to pay at $150 per month. This money aggregating about $900 per month was supposed to have been handed over to the municipal authorities. Besides this it was stated that the Miner and World newspapers received $150 per month to keep quiet.

Thursday of this week was Ascension Day.

Letters from Fernie indicate that Chris Foley is likely to be a candidate for the legislature in that part of East Kootenay at the next general election. Foley will do well to think it over. He does not want the reputation of a professional politician continually seeking endorsement.—Vancouver World. Mr. Foley has since indignantly denied the above statement.

THIS WORLD IS ALL A FLEETING SHOW.

This world is all a fleeting show,
For man's illusion given;
The smiles of joy, the tears of woe,
Deceitful shine, deceitful flow,
There's nothing true but heaven!

And false the light on glory's plume,
As fading hues of even,
And love and hope and beauty's bloom
Are blossoms gathered for the tomb—
There's nothing bright but heaven!

Poor wanderers on a stormy day,
From wave to wave we're driven,
And fancy's flash and reason's ray
Serve but to light the troubled way;
There's nothing calm but heaven!

A Farmer Cured of Rheumatism

"A man living on a farm near here came in a short time ago completely doubled up with rheumatism. I handed him a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and told him to use it freely and if not satisfied after using it he need not pay a cent for it," says C. P. Rayder, of Pattens Mills, N. Y. "A few days later he walked into the store as straight as a string and handed me a dollar saying, 'give me another bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. I want it in house all the time for it cured me.'" For sale by all druggists and dealers.

Infringement of a Trade Mark

In an action in the High Court of Justice for Ontario, recently tried before Chancellor Boyd, at Toronto, the Slater Shoe Co., and Chas. E. Slater, president of Montreal, makers of the famous Slater Shoe, obtained a judgment forever restraining F. C. Wilkinson, a boot and shoe dealer, of Owen Sound, from advertising, exposing, or offering for sale or selling boots or shoes not made by the Slater Shoe Co., as "Slater Shoes," "Slater Goods" or the Slater Shoe." The Chancellor, also ordered Wilkinson to pay the heavy costs of the action. The Chancellor, after hearing the evidence, decided that no one except the Slater Shoe Co., had a right to use the name "Slater Shoes," "Slater Goods," "The Slater Shoe," or any similar names in connection with boots and shoes, and that Wilkinson had no right to use any name or names in connection with boots and shoes which might enable him to pass of a shoe not of the company's make, as being of their make, nor in any way to reap the benefit of the reputation which the Slater Shoe has acquired throughout the Dominion of Canada.

IS WAY OF PROGRESS

INFLUENCE OF ANGLO-SAXON RACE ON THE GOSPEL OUTLOOK.

COMMANDS FORWARD, MARCH.

An Optimistic View and an Important and Impressive Augury—Present Crisis in History of Nations Likened to That of the Children of Israel When They Received God's Command "That They Go Forward."

Chicago, May 10—In this sermon the preacher takes an optimistic view of the spiritual outlook and sees in the growing predominance of the Anglo-Saxon race an augury that foreshadows the spread of the gospel throughout the world. The text is Exodus xiv., 15, "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward."

Napoleon Bonaparte, in some respects the greatest warrior of modern times, once declared, "There sometimes comes a crisis in a battle or a campaign when victory, as a bird, will hover over the standards of that general who has brains and grit enough to give the command, 'Forward, march!'" This was the way the French commander defeated the two great wings of the Austrian army at Montenotte and Ceva. This was the way he tried to win Waterloo, when he commanded Marshal Ney to lead the Old Guard against the solid squares of the British infantry. And this was the way Moses, the great law giver and soldier, led the children of Israel out of Egypt, over the sands and on through the Red sea and freed them from the onrushing charge of the pursuing Egyptians.

But the divine command given to the children of Israel "that they go forward" is applicable to the children of God at the present time. I believe we are at a crisis in the world's history. To-day I want to show that the world can be brought to Christ if the Christian church will only realize its full opportunity and grasp it. I want to show this because I believe all the great preliminary battles have been fought and won which are necessary for this final triumph.

The first great battle for the world's redemption was fought and won when every man's fireside became his "city of refuge" or his impregnable castle from which no feudal lord or arbitrary chieftain could dislodge him. It was won when a husband and a father could walk into his home and shut the door and defy the great wide world as he said: "These goods are mine. This wife is mine. These children are mine, and no man dare touch them." It was won when an honest man, no matter how humble he might be, had a right in fee simple to the property which his energy had earned, to the woman whom he had led to the marriage altar and to the children who were born to them.

But this condition of individual rights of a man and of a family did not always exist in the human race. There was a time when the name of husband and wife did not mean what they do to-day. "There was a time," wrote Sir John Lubbock in his book entitled "The Origin of Civilization," when in many tribes the children took the name of the mother instead of the father because the name of the father was never known." There was a time when, by the old feudal system, the cornerstone of society was not in the home of the laborer, but in the castled walls of the near by ruling lord. The feudal lord not only owned his people's cattle and sheep and horses, but if he wished he could do what he would with his serf's wife and children. There was a time when every woman became by law the wife of every male member of her tribe and every man the husband of every female member. Thus the communism of the brute prevailed. Thus the human being was an animal, a beast pure and simple. Even down to Bible times we find that Abraham was not only the husband of Sarah, but also the father of Ishmael by his handmaiden Hagar. David and Solomon were the husbands of many wives. But now the condition of society is all changed. The marital status has gone back to the Edenic state. Now by law there is only one husband for one wife and one wife for one husband. It has gone back to the ideal condition God first ordained, which the psalmist described when he wrote, "God setteth the solitary in families." Such being the social condition among the civilized races, I believe we are one and all ready to grant that no class of men are more willing to recognize their responsibility to God than those who conscientiously try to fulfill their responsibilities in family life.

The next great battle for the world's redemption was fought and won when the frowning walls of religious intolerance were battered down and the torture dungeons of the dark ages were forever opened to the purifying light. Ah, the battle for religious liberty was a long and bitter struggle! It was not won in a day, a decade, a generation or a century. It fought its way through the flying stones and the bloody swords and the spears and the martyrdoms of Christians of apostolic times. The fight for emancipation went on among the crackling flames of burning Rome. It clutched by their throats the man eating monsters that leaped into the Roman Coliseum. It steeled the backbone of lion hearted Martin Luther as well as of John Huss. It fought its battle until at last the opened Bible was placed in the hand of the common people and every man was free to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience, whether in the Christian church, the Jewish temple or the Mohammedan mosque.

No man can be said to worship God in sincerity and truth unless he bows before the mercy seat under the impulse of a free will. When Torquemada headed the inquisition and Charles IX. was drunk with human blood and "Bloody Mary" signed the death warrant of over 300 martyrs and Charlemagne forcibly drove the people of his kingdom into the rivers, where, like struggling cattle, the priests baptized them by the wholesale, fear may have made the frightened men and women bow and profess Christ, but fear never yet made a true Christian.

The Bible is full of the gospel invitations "to come." "Come, for all things are now ready. Come, come, come!" But upon no page of the Bible can you find anywhere the words written: "Come to Christ against your will!" "Come with hate in your heart!" "Come with defying sin on your lips!" "Come as a trembling murderer is led to the scaffold or to incarceration for life!" Thus we find that the second great onward movement for the world's redemption was taken when bigotry's swarthy limbs were manacled, when the hissing tongue of persecution was stilled and when religious liberty could lift up her smiling face toward the heavens and stretch forth her white hands to lead, as well as to protect, a free human race.

The next great onward movement for the world's redemption is to be found in the commercial supremacy which has brought all the five continents and the islands of the sea into sympathetic touch. There was a time when a man rarely traveled 100 miles from the place where he was born. But now everywhere commercialism is making of one blood all nations that dwell upon the face of the earth. The American sailor's "Yo, heave!" is heard by the wharfs of Tarshish. The East Indian merchantmen and the ships for China and Japan and the Philippines and Australia and New Zealand follow each other through the Suez Canal. The railroads of Brazil and the steamship lines of Chile and Buenos Ayres and Cape Town are owned by foriegn capital. The Russian warships are being built in the American shipyards. A great international war is becoming more and more an impossibility because the Turkish mortgages are held in Paris, Berlin and London and Wall street, and the foreign capitalists must rise or fall together.

But from a spiritual standpoint why do we say that a great battle was won because commercialism has brought all the world into sympathetic touch? Is the cable sunken under the seas, the telegraphic wires strung overhead, the railroad lines bringing New York and San Francisco into closer communication than were once New York and Georgia, and the great steamboat lines turning all oceans into ferries—are any of these to have anything to do with the advent of the millennial dawn? Is that wonderful invention of Johannes Gutenberg called printing, the outgrowth of which is the modern newspaper, to have no part in the world's redemption? Oh, yes. The Bible does not say that the world shall grow gradually better and better, but it does say that when the "gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations then shall the end come." And how can that gospel be preached quicker to all people than through the medium of the telegraph and telephone and railroad train and passenger steamboat lines and freight boats?

Another great prelimary battle for the world's redemption was fought and won when the parliament of religions assembled at the world's fair in Chicago. Then all the intelligent members of the Anglo-Saxon race realized as never before that the gospel of Jesus Christ was not only the best of all religions, but also that it is the only gospel which promises perfect peace this side of the grave as well as salvation beyond.

In 1892 an American tourist was talking in Calcutta to a high class Bengali. During their conversation this dark colored native of India exultantly said: "Ah, you are from America! We are soon going to send over our missionaries to Chicago, and we shall convert America to the teachings of Kali, Buddha and Mohammed." But when the oriental missionaries began to talk we remembered the burning ghats of the Ganges. We could hear the death cries of the child widows who were being sacrificed upon the funeral pyres. We could see the superstitions and debaucheries of the harems and the degradations of their people in the east. As all peoples must believe in a God of some sort, so to-day, as never before, the intelligent, civilized nations know that the gospel of Jesus Christ is the only gospel which will bring true peace and progress to the world. When a native chief asked Queen Victoria the source of England's strength, she handed him a Bible. So, to-day, most of the civilized races are ready to confess that the strength of the mightiest earthly governments is centered in the word of God. Where the Bible is not, there are superstition and ignorance and brutalizing crime.

Thus many preliminary battles have already been fought and won. Now comes the practical question. What race of people is going to start forth to lead in the last great battle, which is to be fought for the redemption of the workd for Christ? Has Jesus a right to look with hope toward any people more confidently than to the Anglo-Saxon race? From what race came the crusaders, Godfrey and Frederick Barbarossa and Baldwin of Flanders and Richard the Lion Hearted and Frederick II.? Who to-day are striving most of all to civilize and Christianize the world at large? Is it not the members of the Anglo-Saxon race? Are there any people who can be more justly called a Christian people than the Anglo-Saxons?

The Anglo-Saxon race is best qualified to lead in this great forward movement for Christ also because in this century it holds a position of dominant power and influence among the nations analogous to that held by ancient Rome at the birth of Christianity. They [illegible] y hold the strategic poi[illegible] e world. Open the map of the world where you will and drop your finger at random. Gibraltar, the key of the Mediterranean, held by England. Suez canal and the sovereignty of Egypt by England. Eastern as well as northern Africa dominated by England. The islands of the Pacific held by Germany, England and the United States, North and South America dominated by the United States government by its Monroe doctrine. Europe for the most part controlled or influenced by Germany or England. Both supreme in their own ways—England by her navy, Germany by her army. The whale and the lion practically unconquerable in their domains.

Then where can you find a people mentally and spiritually and physically better equipped to carry forth this gospel message than the members of the Anglo-Saxon race? To conquer the world for Christ God is going to use giants now as he used giants of old. Under the power of the Holy Spirit the apostolic messengers were able to scatter the gospel messages everywhere. But how could such wonders have been accomplished in so short a time unless God had first sent forth a messenger, mentally and spiritually gigantic, as he did when he sent forth Paul? And where can God get better modern emissaries, if we are willing to do what we ought to do, than among the members of the Anglo-Saxon race?

There are many reasons why the Anglo-Saxon race should lead in this movement. Some of these may be regarded as fanciful and romantic. The essential fact is that the gospel of Christ, which must ultimately triumph, is enshrined in the hearts of the Anglo-Saxon race more than in those of any other race and that they have the opportunity and the qualities which fit them to embrace it, of propagating that gospel to the ends of the earth.

This glorious consummation of Christ's earthly kingdom, I believe, will be achieved under God's omnipotent power, working through the Anglo-Saxon race. Who will lead the way? The beginning of every great movement in the world's history has been humble and inconspicuous. The origin of the Christian church itself, now numbering its millions in all lands, was in a single room, in which, all told, there were only 120 persons. Where will the movement for the final triumph begin? It may be in such a church as this, but it will be somewhere where there is a band of earnest, consecrated, praying souls—men and women self sacrificing, ardent, agonizing in supplication to God for power. The best way for the Anglo-Saxon race to start on his worldwide mission is for us, as individuals, to start here and start now. A little handful, under the power of the Holy Spirit, we may accomplish at least as much for Christ as did that little band of praying men and women in the upper chamber of Jerusalem.

So, to-day, I want to enlarge your gospel horizon, I want to show you that the work you can do for Jesus should be studied no longer through a microscope, but through a telescope. I want to show you that, all this time, as all time is merely nothing more than a long succession of seconds and minutes and days and weeks and years, so all great events are merely the accumulations of the works of single individuals. The Anglo-Saxon in great units may be composed of nations. The Anglo-Saxon race in small units is composed of individuals just like ourselves. Will you and I start here and now, with God's help, for the conquest of the world for Christ.

The final redemption of the world would not be far off if we could only bring Jesus in touch with all mankind. An imaginative religious writer once had a beautiful dream about how the world was finally to be conquered for Jesus. It was, I believe, to be the year of 2001. A great international war was about to burst over Europe. All the nations of that continent were divided into two sides. England, Germany, Norway, Sweden, Belgium and Holland were on the one side. France, Spain, Italy, Turkey, Austria and Russia were upon the other side. The great armies were marshaled into two mighty hosts, the tread of whose feet and the rumble of whose cannon made the earth shake. The night before the decisive battle was to open the camp fires of the sleeping soldiers stretched for miles and miles away. But the night before that battle opened a strange being was seen to go rapidly through the different camps of the nations. Upon the breast of each soldier he pinned a badge or a sign. The next morning the bugles sounded, and the armies were drawn up in battle array. But when the generals gave the command "Fire!" and "Charge!" not one gun spoke, not one soldier moved. Then the generals began to inquire the cause. They found out the reason. This strange being who the night before went from camp to camp was Jesus Christ. The badge which was pinned upon every soldier's breast was the sign of the cross. Jesus had at last conquered. The sign of forgiveness and of love and pardon and sinlessness had at last spiked the guns of war and turned every soldier into an emissary of peace. There is only one way I would change that wonderful dream of the gospel writer. In the last great battle of sinful war I would not have the members of the Anglo-Saxon race participants. The night before the battle was open I would have Jesus Christ go through the camp of the Slav, the Malay and all the peoples of the earth, led by a white skinned guide. That guide I would have the ruddy, flaxen-haired Caucasian, the guide whom I would call the Anglo-Saxon race. Oh, my brother and sister, by the consecration of your lives and prayers will you not help make this scene possible? Will you not here and now start forth, by God's help, to conquer in the near future the world for Jesus Christ?

AN INDIAN'S TEST.

How He Discovered That a White Man Was a Coward.

"The Indian has a queer way of determining whether or not a man is game, judging from an experience I had some years ago," said a man who once made an educational tour of the west, "and the same little experience convinced me that the Indian's system of reasoning along this line is by no means a bad one.

"Stories had been told which brought about a clash between the Indian and a white man. The two men originally had nothing against each other. The Indian had a bad reputation—that is, he had the reputation of being a bad man, a desperate, dangerous fellow, who would fight a buzzsaw at the drop of a hat. The white man who blew into the section had in some way gained a similar reputation. He was said to be a dangerous character and a man who had never been whipped. We concluded that we would have some fun. We met the Indian and told him a long story about his new rival and reminded him that his laurels were in danger and succeeded in getting his pride stirred, and his Indian blood was soon up to the fighting point. Soon after this we met the white man, and we filled him up with the same kind of talk. He said he would take care of the Indian all right in due time, and, in short, would make him take to the woods. Shortly we met the Indian again and told him the desperate white man was after his scalp. He smiled and shook his head.

"A few days later we were talking to the white man when the Indian came up to join the group. He had spotted the stranger and knew him by sight. Without saying a word to him he walked up within arm's reach and struck the white man in the face with a rough, heavy glove. He paused for a few seconds and hit him again. 'Ugh!' he exclaimed as he wheeled around and walked away. The white man looked at the Indian in amazement, but made no show of resentment. Later in the day when we asked the Indian why it was that he did not follow up the insult with blows he told us the white man was a coward. In explaining how he knew it he said the man's 'jaw dropped' when he struck him in the face the second time with the glove and that this, with the Indian, was an unfailing sign of cowardice."

Properties of Cellulose.

Cellulose absorbs water and by its swelling provides the softest possible obstruction. On account of its low specific gravity, less than that of cork, it is valuable for life belts and may be used in large quantities to keep a seriously damaged ship afloat. Cellulose compressed and packed in the cofferdam of a ship, to form a leak belt, does not emit any unpleasant odor and does not decay for two or three years. When penetrated by a projectile it is not ignited and does not give off any disagreeable smoke, possessing in this respect a great advantage over rubber armor. If dry, loose cellulose be ignited, it gives out white smoke.

THE CHEST PAINS OF BRONCHITIS

The dry, tight cough, the soreness aggravated by coughing, all disappear with the use of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine.

It is the tendency of every cold to develop into bronchitis, consumption or some form of lung trouble. Bronchitis is most dreaded because it has a tendency to become chronic and return again and again, until the patient becomes worn out or falls an easy prey to consumption or pneumonia. Only the most robust constitution can throw off bronchitis. Aged people, children, and all who are in delicate health or have weak lungs have every reason to fear this ailment.

If the cough is dry and hard; if there is pain, soreness or tightness in the chest; if breathing is difficult and causes pain in the chest, you have every reason to suppose that you have bronchitis, and should promptly begin the use of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine.

Cough mixtures that may help an ordinary cold have no effect on bronchitis and asthma, but Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine has won its enviable reputation on account of its wonderful success in curing these ailments. It is far more than a mere cough medicine, and acts on the whole system, thoroughly eradicating disease.

Mr. John Clark, coachman, Port Hope, Ont., states:—"Being exposed to all sorts of weather I frequently catch cold. Last winter I was so bad with a cold that I could not speak above a whisper and had great pains in the chest. At last I feared it would develop into consumption if I did not succeed in getting proper treatment.

"A friend advised me to use Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine and I began to improve before I had taken half a bottle. One bottle cured my cold, which I believe would have proven very serious if I had not used this medicine."

It is necessary for you to be careful when buying Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for there are many substitutes and imitations offered. The portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase are on every bottle of the genuine, 25 cents a bottle, family size, (three times as much) 60 cents. At all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

APSLEY HOUSE.

Sale of Former Residence of the Duke of Wellington.

The London Express says:—Apsley House is to be sold if no great objections are raised in certain quarters. The news will come as a shock to the many people who still believe that the famous house at Hyde Park Corner was presented to the great Duke of Wellington by the nation. As a matter of fact, the Iron Duke purchased Apsley House in 1820, when it was the residence of his elder brother, Marquis Wellesley. Originally a plain brick mansion, Apsley House was built about 1785-6 by the Adams for Henry Bathurst, Baron Apsley, Earl Bathurst and Lord Chancellor, who died in 1794. In 1828 the house was cased with Bath stone, and a gallery, a suite of rooms, and the present portico were added, at a cost, it was then stated, of £130,000. The house contains a wonderful picture gallery, where a Waterloo banquet was held annually until 1852, and which still contains precious works of art; a wonderful china room full of fine bronzes and interesting relics, of the great Duke, and a small, ill-lighted room, in which the famous general slept on a narrow bedstead. The late Duke of Wellington was very anxious to sell Apsley House some years ago, but he met with opposition from an exalted quarter on the grounds that such a sale would be an indignity to a great name. As the present Duke represents the fourth generation, and no longer receives an annual grant, it is believed that no opposition will be made to the sale, so that before very long a "prince of finance" may be ensconced at the house which a foreigner once aptly described as "No. 1, London."

It is no uncommon thing to see a male ostrich strutting about followed by three or four distinct broods, all of different sizes. When the incubating process is completed, the cock bird leads his young ones off and if he meets another proud papa engages in a terrific combat with him. The vanquished bird retires without a single chick, while the other, surrounded by the two broods, walks away triumphantly.

ST. THOMAS MAN GIVES ADVICE

Tells His Friends to Use Dodd's Kidney Pills for Kidney Pains.

Lew Dake well-known Hotel-keeper, gives his experience with Canada's great Kidney Remedy.

St. Thomas, Ont., May 18.—(Special)—Everybody in St. Thomas and the surrounding country knows Lew Dake, proprietor of the Dake House, and one of this railway centre's most popular citizens, and many people know that for years he was the victim of a very aggravated form of Kidney Disease. To-day he is a sound, healthy man. He used Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Speaking of the matter recently, Mr. Dake said:

"I had been troubled for over five years with my kidneys and pains in my back. Nothing I used could give me any relief till finally on the advice of a friend I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"By the time I had finished one box the pains and Kidney Disease were gone. That is over five years ago now, and as I have had no return of the trouble since, I think I am safe in concluding that the cure was permanent.

"I advise all my friends who are troubled in the same way to use Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure all stages of Kidney Disease from Pain in the Back to Bright's Disease.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. HEIMBURG.

"Because I do not wish to. I wish you would not look at me so—it makes me nervous!"

Lucie went out without a word and waited in the salon. She heard boxes fall down, and Hortense's impatient step about the room. Finally she came out. She wore a tuft of pale-blue feathers in her hair, and her ornaments were turquoises and pearls. Silently they left the room and descended the stairs. A waiter was just going through the lighted vestibule with some gorgeous table ornaments of fresh flowers and disappeared behind the door of the smaller dining-room. Hortease had looked at him in an absent manner.

"There is going to be an entertainment there," she said, as if glad to find an indifferent topic.

"The Rittmeister von Wilken is to give his intended bride and her parents and relations a little supper after the theatre," said the head waiter, who was just passing, very respectfully.

Hortense inclined her head to thank him, and stepped out into the twilight of the spring evening.

"We shall be too late, Lucie," said she, with perfect composure, "let us hurry a little."

They arrived just before the beginning of the overture. The house was jammed; for a foreign singer was to take the part of Susanna in "Figaro." They stepped into a box in the first row, and at the door of it stood a gentleman bowing as if he had been expecting them—Waldemar Weber.

Frau von Lowen passed by him; she did not seem to have noticed him; but after Lucie had taken her place, he dropped into the next chair with the coolest expression on his energetic features, as if that were his place, and the only right one for him in the whole house. Lucie scarcely noticed him; she was examining with great anxiety the boxes in the first row, then a shudder went through her, for opposite to them, next to the royal box, sat Wilken in uniform, between a handsome old lady and a young girl in a pink silk dress, with long blonde braids hanging down her back, and who was listening to him with a smiling face. Behind him sat an elderly gentleman in civilian's dress, and two young officers.

Lucie turned anxiously to Hortense, and just at that moment her gaze returned from the same group. There was in this unguarded moment a look of the bitterest grief in those large gray eyes. Involuntarily Lucie tried to grasp her slender hand, but it was immediately withdrawn. Hortense sat quietly in her chair and looked with apparent interest at the stage, where Susanna was just trying on her hat before the glass and Figaro was measuring the room. Lucie saw and heard everything as if in a dream; she knew that near her was Hortense, suffering a thousand torments, and she gave a sigh of relief when the first act came to an end. The boxes were emptied. All flocked to the lover. Hortense, too, rose. She went slowly between the rows of laughing and chattering people, and leaning toward the buffet said, "I am thirsty."

In this large, pillared hall there were not many people; only a few groups were standing before the inviting table, or sitting on the sofas by the marble balustrade. Hortense seated herself as if tired. As Lucie asked for a glass of seltzer water a voice near her said. "Do not trouble yourself, fraulein, I have already what you want in my hand."

Waldemar Weber handed her a glass of the sparkling water, and then turned to Frau von Lowen.

Lucie looked about her and forgot to drink; she was convinced Hortense, in her mood of to-day, would do something rude. She could not trust her eyes. The young baroness took the glass smilingly, and pointed to the sofa, and he took the place there by her. Lucie soon knew why. Opposite, on a low divan, sat Wilken and his fiancee, who with a childish appetite was devouring a plate of ice-cream, and did not notice how her lover's gaze was fixed upon the beautiful woman before him in the thin black dress.

Hortense looked really charming at this moment. Laughing and talking were becoming to her; and as she held her head a little to one side and played with her fan of blue ostrich feathers, more than one look was fastened upon her.

But her cavalier did not suit such a charming apparition, thought Lucie; there was something—but that she could not define it—it was not in his clothes, nor in his figure, for he was a large, fine-looking man; it was something in his manner as he entertained Frau von Lowen, Lucie thought at last. She put down her untouched glass on the little table and looked at the crowds hurrying away. The bell had just rung for the second act.

Hortense also rose, and resting the tips of her fingers on Herr Weber's arm, followed close behind the engaged pair. She had signed to Lucie, and put her hand in hers. Lucie noticed how her eyes rested on the slender officer before her, though keeping up an animated conversation.

"Hortense," asked the girl as they were taking their places, "what does this mean?"

HOW DUNWOODIE GOT HIS SMOKE

By HAROLD W. RAYMOND

Copyright, 1902, by McClure's Newspaper Syndicate

Dunwoodie liked his pipe as well as the next man and perhaps a trifle better, and when he had settled himself in his bos'n's chair near the top of the big bridge's tallest suspender and found he had left his beloved corncob and his bag of "Painters' Delight" in his other overalls at home his despair was so great that his head swam and he saw red clouds before his eyes.

"It's the curse of the trade," said Dunwoodie. "Here I've been at the brush for forty year or so, and never the time but I was painting in the wrong place. If I worked on a red fence, a bull was sure to be in the field; if I'd been off on a bit of a bat, the boss would set me a-painting of scrolls and wriggly things till it seemed as if I'd got 'em sure; if I was dying of thirst, they'd give me the steeple of a meeting house to color—Baptist at that, more than likely—with never a drop to drink 'twixt me and the earth. And now here I be hanging 'twixt heaven and the East river—and the river much easier to reach—perishing for a smoke, and my pipe might as well be on top of one of them burning volcanoes for all the good it is to me. It's the curse of the trade."

Dunwoodie laid on with a heavy hand. Well for him that his perch was high and that the eye of the boss was not likely to inspect his work critically!

Just then, as if to add insult to injury, there came a pungent smell athwart Dunwoodie's nose. Young Pat McCabe was smoking in his comfortable perch five strands to windward of Dunwoodie—young Pat McCabe, the impudent fellow who had dared ask Dunwoodie for his only daughter's hand in marriage!

Dunwoodie's daughter, the peerless Pearl, the girl Dunwoodie had been father and mother to since that sad day when her own mother was laid beneath the sod in the Cemetery of the Evergreens and of whom the old man was as jealous as a hen with one chicken! Need more be said? Dunwoodie looked upon young McCabe, a likely fellow enough and as handy with his brush as old Michael Angelo himself, with keenest detestation. He hated him all the worse because deep down in his soul he knew that Miss Pearl favored the handsome Irishman.

McCabe's pipe was considered the dirtiest in the gang. He had the love of his race for a well colored dhudeen, and he smoked a tobacco so strong that it would draw tears from the eye of a potato. Dunwoodie had often cast aspersions upon it. But now—now the odor which the winds wafted to his hungry nostrils was sweeter than the spicy breezes of Araby the Blest.

He glanced darkly across the chasm of twisted cables and dizzying heights of air which separated them and remembered some of the hard things he had said about McCabe and his pipe and his pretensions. Now it seemed to him he would willingly barter his chances of heaven for a smoke of the same.

"I swan," said Dunwoodie, overcome by a craving which made him desperate, "it would be a pleasure to murder you, young man, if I could get possession of that chimney by the doing." The thought of murder seemed to give the painter much temporary joy, for it sprang from the heart of a father jealous of the child who was his all in all of life saving and excepting the pipe of which he was deprived.

Murder, however desirable, being out of the question, Dunwoodie resorted to strategy instead. It was hard work. But after clearing his voice a few times he managed to say:

"I say, Mac, could you lend me your pipe and a bit of tobaccy? I'll return them up at the house tonight. Swing it across on a string; that's a good lad."

McCabe looked up in amazement. It was many a day since he had heard such friendliness in Dunwoodie's voice.

"The fact is," said the old man, "I left my pipe at home, and I'm dying for a smoke."

"Oho!" said McCabe to himself. "So that's where the winds are blowin'." And then he said loudly: "But ye can't smoke my pipe, Daddy Dunwoodie. Sure, ye said I put it to soak in the tannery." Dunwoodie coughed and looked uncomfortable. "Ye said it would be afther makin' a dog sick, so it would. If I reckomember correctly, Mr. Dunwoodie, ye said I smoked scrap leather an' findin's."

Hard blows, these. Dunwoodie winced.

"I was only joking, Mac, my boy," he said, with a feeble laugh.

"Was ye jokin' when ye said I couldn't marry the darlint of me sowl? Ye know whom I mane, Mr. Dunwoodie."

"No!" shrieked Dunwoodie. "I was not joking! I'd rather see the girl lying in the cemetery with her dead mother than marry a tarrier like you!"

"Oh! All right, Mr. Dunwoodie. I guess ye were right. My pipe would make a dog sick, and it's not fit for the likes of ye." McCabe's brogue grew broad when his anger was high.

He lit another pipe and whistled "One Girl." As the odor saluted Dunwoodie's nostrils he grew frantic. He must have that pipe and tobacco! It was hours before he could descend for the nooning. He looked at McCabe, who was smoking away as if unconscious of his presence, and it occurred to Dunwoodie for the first time in his life that McCabe was not a bad sort of man after all. He was clean, sober—that is, reasonably so—industrious, and he had the best and sunniest nature in the world. Besides that, he loved Pearl, and Pearl loved him. And if it was not McCabe it might be worse—very likely would be.

Dunwoodie cleared his throat.

"Mac!" he said.

"Well!"

"Lend us your pipe—do. I'm perishing."

"Will ye l'ave me marry yer daughter, Mr. Dunwoodie?"

"I'll l'ave ye anything!" said the suffering one.

"Put it down on paper?"

"Anything, anything, if you'll only give me a smoke!"

"I'll give ye me pipe and 'baccy," said McCabe as solemnly as if he were surrendering the dearest treasures of his life.

In three switches of a lamb's tail McCabe was by the old man's side. Dunwoodie was clutching at the pipe.

"Sign the consint first," said the artful Irishman. He had a bit of paper and a pencil in his pocket, and he quickly drew up an article of agreement. It read as follows:

S. S.:

Whereas, in the course of human events, I, Michael Jay Dunwoodie, being of sound mind and robust constitution, hereby give consent to the marriage of my daughter Pearl to Patrick McCabe, Esq., late of the County Cavan.

[Signed] M. J. DUNWOODIE.
P. M'CABE.

Soon Dunwoodie was in the ecstasy of smoking the favorite McCabe mixture. Then he noticed the younger man packing up his tools of trade and making to descend.

"Here! Hey! What are you up to now?" he demanded suspiciously. "Go back to work, you young rascal!"

"I'm only afther goin' to tell Pearl the good news," said McCabe, with a quiet smile.

And when Dunwoodie got home that night the mischief was done and a homemade wedding supper awaited him on the table.

Trees Are the Friends of Men.

All trees display constantly and broadly their nature and the marks of the class to which they belong. The oak, elm, willow, birch, beech, together with poplar, chestnut and pine, are among our native born trees, and those most familiar to us as the ancient landmarks, remembered so well in childhood—the mulberry, olive, ilex, hemlock, spruce, apple, pear and cherry trees—go to make up the almost sacred circle of friends so dear to us because they are monuments of other and happier days.

The homestead and its associations recall all the dear old trees so fondly cherished in days "lang syne" and so dear to me now that it is pleasant to write what I know of their history, utility and why they are valuable as lumber or the more valuable mechanical need which they meet. They all afford the human race a certain amount of reliable service and are the foundation of many industries. They furnish the ships that cover the ocean with white sails and afford easy communication with all nations. The arts and sciences depend upon them for substantial aid in completing palaces and churches and all the grand and lasting buildings which have dotted the earth with beautiful cities and comfortable dwelling places for man. And thus we find that the trees are really the steadfast and never failing friends of men.—Exchange.

An Anecdote of Brignoli.

Though one of the most nervous singers that ever went before an audience, Brignoli in his way was one of the most conscientious. He refused to sing if he did not feel that his voice was in a condition to do justice to the song and to himself. He was a firm believer in homeopathy and was never without two small vials, one containing bryonia and the other spongia, which he used alternately. His body servant, Barbagelata, usually administered the drug.

On one occasion it happened that Barbagelata gave him a larger quantity of bryonia than he had asked for, but, like the faithful servant that he was, he informed his master of the mistake. Brignoli was furious. He thought he was a dead man. He raved and stormed and swore as only he could swear. Barbagelata, thinking to relieve his mind, swallowed the entire contents of the vial.

"You see, Signor Brignoli, there is no harm in the medicine," he said.

"Ah, misery!" cried Brignoli, forgetting his own danger at once. "You are a dead man! What have you done?"

All the doctors in the neighborhood were sent for, and all had to testify that the drug was harmless before Brignoli would believe that Barbagelata could survive.

Asking Questions In Society.

This from an authority: "Don't ask questions; don't mention names; listen occasionally, and you will find yourself a society favorite." The first "don't" seems to have been most correctly placed. There is nothing which creates a pleasanter impression and which really leads to the most complete confidence than the tact which listens sympathetically to all a companion will say, but never probes deeper by an impulsive interrogation. One learns to trust such an acquaintance and feel in his company a peculiar sense of security that is very satisfying. Many of our small attempts to make an impressive recital are, we know, most vulnerable. One or two sharp queries would riddle them, and we learn, as a burned child learns to avoid the fire, just whom we may not and may impose them upon. The latter please us the better.

WHEN THE MOON BURNED RED

By WINTHROP ALLEN

Copyright, 1902, by McClure's Newspaper Syndicate

"Do fairies thrive in China or do the maidens of the moon affect the garb Celestial?"

Hugh Cannon gazed curiously at the figure in the dainty kimono as he spoke.

"Neither," she replied, with a rippling laugh. "I am an ordinary mortal like yourself, driven by the heat to the housetops. I did not suppose that any one else would be here at this hour, and there was no use trying to sleep."

"I have observed," said Cannon lazily, "that in a flathouse of this sort the inhabitants are so afraid of being compared to the dwellers of tenements that they deprive themselves of many privileges, including the roof in summer. After the heat of the last three days I'd be willing to brave public opinion rather than put in another night in that stuffy pigeonhole downstairs."

"I feel equally desperate," responded the girl, but her voice sounded brisk and alert as compared to the weary, dragging tones of the man. "And as we have decided to suffer in the open rather than conceal our anguish perhaps"— She hesitated, but the faraway look had come back in Cannon's eyes. He was staring again at the hazy, crimson glow that hung over a distant roof garden. "You, I believe, are Mr. Cannon unless your doorplate bears false witness."

"You can't expect much from a ten cent doorplate," laughed Hugh, pulling himself together. "But in this case it tells the truth. I am Hugh Cannon, very much at your service. And you are the girl across the hall."

She laughed in turn, that rippling, yet self reliant laugh which Hugh had heard more than once across the hall.

"I admit the charge. I am Patrice Birchard, and, according to the ethics of flat life, we should have met across the dumbwaiter shaft weeks ago. Now as we have at last come together in this most unconventional fashion tell me am I interrupting you? The janitress informs me you write. If you are shaping up plots here in the moonlight, don't hesitate to say so, and I'll go."

"Don't think of it," he urged, catching a fold of her kimono in a detaining hand. "Indeed I am not thinking up plots! This awful heat seems to have gone to my head, and I was doing nothing better than having a bad half hour with my conscience. It is not good in hot weather to admit even to yourself that you are a failure, but up here in the quiet my thoughts would travel that way. I can understand now why men go forth to seek the eternal heat in the summer time."

She shot a startled glance in his direction. "Is it as bad as that?" she murmured softly.

"Worse," he admitted. "I don't know why I should bore you with my troubles, but it eases my mind to talk. Six months ago I came to town to win my way as a story writer. I have placed four short stories and have had forty come back. The serial upon which I counted the most was the worst blow of all. Half the publishers wouldn't read it at all; were snowed under with manuscripts. I took it to a new, practically unknown publisher last week, and he agreed to have it read—some time. If it comes back, I'm going to quit. I can work on a farm if I can't write."

"I know just how you feel," said the girl. "I draw, and that's worse than writing. At one time it seemed to me that the world was dead to art, and I, too, wanted to go home. It was a hard fight, but I stayed, and now I'm glad I did. Don't give up, for the tide will turn when you least expect it. Perhaps if I'd illustrate one of your stories"—

"Would you do it? If I had you for a partner, I know I could succeed." His voice almost broke over the words. "My ideas are not half bad, but I have no name, no standing. But your pictures would catch the editor's eye. Will you chance with me on a story or two?"

She took his outstretched, trembling hand.

"It is a promise," she declared.

He leaned back against the chimney and half closed his eyes.

"I'd like to write a story," he mused, "and put you in just as you are, a perfect picture in that kimono. The gold embroidery gives just the right touch, and the rich red in contrast to the white of your throat and the dark masses of your hair—oh, I wish I was an artist!" he broke off disconnectedly.

She laughed in an embarrassed fashion, and the swift flush again mantled her cheek, but he did not seem to notice it.

"Some day I will draw a picture of you as the hero. We'll have to open up an exchange bureau in compliments if you keep on at this rate. But, seriously, I am something of a prophetess, and I predict that the tide is ready to turn for you."

"You're awfully comforting," he murmured gratefully. "When you came up here"— His glance traveled toward the low coping on the edge of the roof. "You read of people falling off roofs in summer time. How many do it by accident and how many with actual intention?"

Again Patrice looked at him anxiously. His hands were clasped about his knees, and his eyes glowed strangely.

"Oh, you can't understand how lonesome I've been. I've been hungry for the sound of a woman's voice, and since I've been in this house I've sat and listened to your singing and wondered if any one would ever sing like that—for me."

Silence fell between them. The girl was thinking hard and fast. It was the heat, the awful heat, that had nearly unbalanced his mind. Perhaps she had come just in time. And he had a mother—on the farm. There was a sharp, brief struggle with the old power of conventionalities; then she leaned over for a nest of pillows she had brought up from her den.

"Lay your head on these," she said, with an air of authority. "You're too tired to talk, and you never should go to Newspaper row a day like this. It's deadly. Come!"

She patted the pillows and looked at him smilingly. Like a tired child he laid his head on the pillows, and, with a gentle maternal movement born in every good woman, she commenced to stroke his forehead. Her fingers felt cool to his hot head, and her voice, crooning one of the songs his mother and hers had sung, grew fainter and fainter in his ears, and at last he slept.

When Cannon awoke, dawn was creeping over the city. He was alone on the roof. Then he looked at the pillows and remembered. A hot flush mounted to his face. He had been a coward. Moreover, he had let a woman see it. And what had he said to the pretty girl in the kimono? The remembrance of a gray eyed girl at home came to him, and he paled once more.

He gathered up the pillows and hurried down to his apartment. Just for an instant he paused outside her door, but no sound came from within. The pillows seemed to burn his fingers, and he dropped them on his couch, a yellow one done in white silk crescents and a Yale blue in odd brocade and a red just the shade of her kimono.

After his bath he felt better and more reasonable. Then he went out to breakfast. On his return he found a letter in his box. It brought a new light to his eyes. The question of how he was to meet and greet her no longer disturbed him. A moment later he tapped on her door.

She threw it open. The kimono had disappeared, and a slender figure clad in a short walking skirt and a shirt waist stood before him. She was evidently just ready to start out on her day's work. He hesitated, and she filled in the pause.

"How much better you look this morning! You must have slept."

"Slept? Like a child!" he laughed. "May I come in just a moment? I want you to see this letter."

She took the letter and led the way to her tiny parlor.

"Yes, and I tell you? The tide has turned. Two hundred dollars for the serial, and they'll be glad to consider short stories also. I am very glad. I would like to see you succeed." Her eyes fell. "I—I think that when one lives alone, as I have been doing, she is apt to watch others. And I—I've known just what a struggle you've undergone. And now, you see, you won't need my poor little illustrations to catch the editor's eye. Two hundred dollars! I guess we'll drop the partnership idea." She smiled cheerily and reached for her hat. The clock in the church tower across the street chimed 9.

He looked straight into her honest eyes.

"You are mistaken. I will need you more than ever. The serial must be illustrated."

It was now her turn to blush, and she jabbed her hatpin nervously into the saucy sailor.

"I'll be glad to do it, of course, and it will probably be my last work of this sort. I—I shall be married in October to our art editor."

Cannon instinctively drew a breath of relief. His hazy recollection of that scene on the roof cleared. He rose and opened the door for her.

"I'll call for you to take lunch with me. With two hundred looming up, it must be something special today. And we'll talk illustrations."

But in his heart he knew he would tell her about the gray eyed girl at home.

The Habit of Keeping a Diary.

Upon the whole, the habit of diary keeping does not deserve to be decried. If the diary be a veracious record of public events, it may, at any rate, serve as an exercise in prose writing and precis to the writer, and, on the other hand, if the diary be merely parochial, domestic or even personal in tone the same may be said of it, with this added qualification—that at least in the last case it may act in preserving a human individuality.

Among my papers and books I found the other day an old yellow brown diary of my great-great-grandmother. Until that moment I had no more idea of the old lady than of Julius Cæsar's nurse, but when I read of her journeys to and from Bath, which she much affected and where she "see a great deal of Company;" of her loss on Thursday, April 2, 1767, of £1 4s. at cards; her payment on April 2 of 1s. 10d. for "face wires" (whatever they may have been); of 11 shillings on April 13 for "Chare (sedan, no doubt) and Gloves," and how, on leaving Bath on the 18th of April, she gave the maids 10s. 6d. and the bath "servant" (she was evidently a poor hand at spelling, dear old soul!) another half guinea, then I seem to see her dim shape assume material tone.

For your posterity's sake, therefore, if you think well of your own individuality and also that you may get a sort of outside view of yourself, you may be counseled to keep a diary; but, for goodness' sake, do not get hysterical in your confidences with it!—All the Year Round.

Fate of a Coward.

"Don't you kiss me!" she cried as she sprang from his side.
"Why, I had no such thought," answered he.
Now, forgive him she could had he kissed her—and would—
But to say the temptation he'd calmly withstood
Was too much, so she "shook" him, you see.

MORRISSEY

From The Despatch

General Manager J. H. Tonkin and General Supt. Thos. R. Stockett spent Wednesday at Morrissey Mines inspecting the works and arranging for a further increase in the output of the mines.

Mr. J. Gillis, general merchant at the Junction, expects to commence building operations here next week. He will put up a commodious store on Mr. H. L. Stephens lot, next to the big hotel. Mr. Gillis expects to put in a stock of Gent's Furnishings, etc.

Owing to the heavy rains of the past few days the carpenters have been somewhat delayed in building operations. There are now about one hundred men engaged in the erection of buildings here, and a week or two will change the aspect of the new town very much.

Mr. Jas. McDonnell, of Foss & McDonnell came up from Michel on Wednesday, where he has been engaged on extensive excavations for the new coke ovens which Mr. E. Wriglesworth is building in that town. Messrs. Foss & McDonnell have opened a large ranch a few miles out of Michel and are rapidly stocking it with cattle. These gentleman are the first who have gone into the ranching business on anything like a large scale in that part of the country and we sincerely wish them success.

Work has commenced on Mr. A. W. Bleasdell's new drug store, one door west of the Despatch office. Mr. Bleasdell, who is a prosperous Fernie merchant, will put in a large and complete stock of drugs and fancy goods. The store will be under the management of Wm. Bleasdell jr.

Owing to the high water at the Junction the wagon bridge has been destroyed in order to prevent the possibility of it being swept down against the new footbridge and demolishing it. A large scow is under construction for the purpose of carrying on traffic with the town across the river.

President Hill of the Great Northern Railway was in town on Tuesday of this week. Mr. Hill is travelling in his private car and is accompained by some New York gentlemen who showed much interest in the mines of this camp. Mr. Hill is on one of his regular trips of inspection and did not remain long in Morrissey Mines.

Work on the new siding has developed rapidly in the last week and about 200 yards are now in use. This will be a great advantage to those who are opening up business in Morrissey Mines. Many have kept back their shipments owing to the poor facilites for handling their goods upon arrival here, but this disadvantage was removed on Monday and about fifteen car loads of fright, which had been delayed at the Junction was shipped in. The siding has been a busy scene all week.

COMMEMORATE SAD DISASTER.

Solemn Celebration Held In Remembrance Of Mine Explosion One Year Ago.

The mines are closed to-day by the order of the Coal Company management as a mark of respectful remembrance of the lamentable disaster which occurred in the Coal Creek mines a year ago. No work is being done to-day in any part of the mines. The Roman Catholic church held a memorial service this forenoon which was largely attended. The Rev. Father Ouellette, of Cranbrook, gave a very impressive address in keeping with the sad memories which the day recalls.

The Gladstone union kept yesterday as Commemoration Day. The miners gathered in a body at their lodge room and marched to the cemetery where the mortal remains of their dead comrades were laid a year ago. There, appropriate services were conducted under the charge of Revs. Gordon and Houghton who delivered eloquent addresses recalling the sad memories of scenes witnessed a year ago and from which were deducted suitable and worthy lessons for all. The Slavonians were addressed by one of their countrymen. Sacred music also formed a part of the services. The business houses were closed from two o'clock until four o'clock.

It is a regrettable fact that any bungling should have occurred by which two days were set apart to commemorate this event. Notices were posted about town on Monday by Rev. Father Milleux announcing his service for Saturday; and the Coal Company immediately posted other notices officially announcing that the mines would be closed on that day. The union took no action until Wednesday night when the members met and decided that Friday and no other day would do for their celebration It if true that the accident occurred on the 22nd, though late in the evening, but the Company in selecting Saturday had in mind the fact that the two following days were holidays. Had one day only been selected trades unions and the citizens generally would have joined in the celebration; and the pay-roll and the mine output would have been increased to the extent of one day's work.

A SEVERE CRITICISM.

The Grand Jury in connection with the spring assizes held in Nelson this week reported at some length on the conditions in Fernie at the time of the Coal Creek mob. The presentment has a single paragraph dealing with other matters and the remainder of the report is devoted to Fernie, as follows:—

The grand jury desire further to present that during the past year the district which they represent has on the whole been orderly and law abiding, with unfortunately one exception and that is the town of Fernie, and its neighborhood. In this neighborhood there appears to exist a lawless and dangerous element largely composed of foreigners. This element has on several occasions defied the authorities, been guilty of overt acts of personal violence and riot, and brought the good name of this district for the maintenance of law and order into disrepute and disgrace. The grand jury have come to the conclusion from the evidence that has come before them during this assize and from occurrences of common public knowledge that an urgent need exists for a stricter and more determined and forcible administration of the law, especially as regards acts of personal violence, and the interference with the rights and liberties of private individuals. To justify this strong expression of opinion the grand jury may refer to the fact of a constable named Stephenson being run out of town for several miles and severely maltreated, to the case of a private individual who was similarly treated, and in neither of which cases was a single person brought to justice; also to the riotous assembly that took place at the Coal Creek mines on the 19th of March last when a mob of some 150 to 200 men, mostly disguised gathered together and forced men to leave their legal avocations, and others to leave their beds and drove them for several miles down the railway track by violence and threats, besides being guilty of assault and battery. In view of the fact that only four men have been committed to trial for the unlawful assembly last referred to, although many more were recognized, the grand jury cannot help coming to the conclusion that there has been a deplorable want of a prompt and energetic administration of justice in the neighborhood referred to, and that the constables appear to have been noticeably absent at the time when their services were most urgently needed.

The grand jury therefore deem it their duty to present to your lordship, in the most serious and emphatic way they can that an absolute necessity exists for a better provision for enforcing the law at Fernie at least while the lawless element above referred to continues to manifest itself. A larger force of provincial constables should be maintained at Fernie, or failing this, the dominion government should be asked to establish a force of mounted police in that district.

The grand jury consists of H. E. Croasdaile (foreman), Fred Irvine, Blake Wilson, E. D. Orde, H. Giegerich, H. E. Macdonnell, J. Fred Hume, W. P. Tierney, C. E. Miller, Bruce Heatheote, George Kydd, J A. Turner and T. S. McPherson

His lordship stated that the presentment would be forwarded to the proper quarters and no doubt the recommendations would receive the attention they deserved. In order to co-operate he would follow the presentment up with his personal recommendation that steps be taken at once to put an end to the condition of affairs in the district referred to, which tended to lower the prestige of the country for being law abiding.

POLICE COURT

The application of R. Schram for an hotel license at Morrissey Mines came up before the commissioners on Wednesday evening. The matter was laid over until the next regular meeting.

Harry Wilson was up before the magistrate yesterday on the charge of being drunk and disorderly and having no visible means of support. Wilson was up on a similar charge about a week ago and was let off then upon promising to go to work, which promise he did not keep. Wilson will spend the next month on the chain gang.

A. H. Trent, of the Columbia Hotel, Elko, was brought down by Constable Kummer charged by G. Griffith, proprietor of the Hoffman House, with killing a chicken belonging to him. The case came up yesterday morning. No difficulty was found in proving the charge as the act was witnessed by different people. The accused was fined $12, most of this amount being required for expenses.

Mr. Jos. Black, a travelling representative of The J. Y. Griffin Co., Ltd., at Nelson has been through this district this week.

"THEY SAY."

Have you heard of the terrible family, "They,"
And the dreadful venomous things they say?
Why, half the gossip under the sun,
If you trace it back, you will find begun
In that wretched house of "They."

A numerous family, so I am told,
And its genealogical tree is old;
For ever since Adam and Eve began
To build up the curious race of man
Has existed the house of "They."

Gossip mongers and spreaders of lies,
Horrid people whom all despise!
And yet the best of us now and then
Repeat queer tales about women and men
And quote the house of "They."

They live like lords and never labor,
A "They's" one task is to watch his neighbor
And tell his business and private affairs.
To the world at large they are sowers of tares
Those folks in the house of "They."

It is wholly useless to follow a "They"
With a whip or a gun, for he slips away
And into his house, where you cannot go,
It is locked and bolted and guarded so—
This horrible house of "They."

Though you cannot get in, yet they get out
And spread their villainous tales about.
Of all the rascals under the sun
Who have come to punishment never one
Belongs to the house of "They."

One of the most remarkable industrial developments that has characterized the rapid growth of South East Kootenay is now in progress at

MORRISSEY MINES

Every issue of our newspaper will chronicle new building operations here.

Investors realize that the success of the new town is guaranteed by a great and growing industry; that an investment here is safer than a Savings Bank, as it is not subject to panic, while the prospective profits are infinitely greater.

They know from past experience that property in an industrial town is the surest and most profitable investment that can be made.

You are cordially invited to participate in this prosperity.

FERNIE WINS TWICE.

VICTORIA DAY SUITABLY OBSERVED IN FERNIE.

Three Interesting Games of Amateur Sport—New Recreation Grounds Used—Trip To Frank.

Monday was held as a public holiday in Fernie. The day was very fine and everybody seemed to enjoy the relaxation from the everyday duties. A goodly number took advantage of the excursion to Frank while those who remained at home had splendid opportunities of witnessing several interesting contests in amateur sport.

A game of foot-ball was arranged on short notice between Michel and our local team. It resulted in an easy victory for the latter by a score of 3–0. For the first time the new recreation grounds below the hill was used for an exhibition game. The beautiful location of these grounds was the subject of much favorable comment from the many interested spectators who gathered on the hill and along the edge of the field.

FERNIE.		MICHEL.
Piper	goal	Derbyshire
Herchmer	backs	Armstrong
McMordie		Gomm
Staebler	Half Backs	McKenzie
Milen		Taylor
Grimes		Eccleston
Spiers	Forwards	Milne
Jarvis		Briscoe
Hackett		Marsh
Rutledge		Burdett
Ziegler		Oakly

In the first half the play was very much in favor of the local team, and it was only because of hard luck that several goals were not scored in this time. Two shots especially, of C. Zieglers' were close calls, one striking the cross-bar and the other the ground immediately underneath. A few moments before the half time whistle sounded the first goal was scored by Rutledge who received a neat pass from Ziegler on the outside wing.

The score remained at 1–0 until most of the second half was played. The second was scored by a clean shot from Hackett and the third and last goal was the work of Spiers. The visitors made some determined rushes on the home goal during the latter half but in only a couple of instances did they get past the stalwart backs. The Fernie backs and goal had little to do but they did that little well. Of the remainder, Ziegler, Hackett and Staebler probably did the most effective work.

The game was marked by the best of feeling throughout. Mr. J. Wild refereed the game to the entire satisfaction of all concerned. The visiting team is a strong one considering the little practice they have had together, and better results may confidently be expected later in the season. Taken altogether the game was one of the most interesting foot-ball contests ever held in Fernie, and it indicates that the old game is experiencing a healthy revival in the town.

BASEBALL.

In the afternoon a large crowd gathered at the old gronnds to witness the game of base-ball between Fernie and Michel. The heavy score af 29–0 which the locals piled up against the visitors was as unexpected as it was decisive, and made the contest so one-sided as to detract much from the interest shown by the spectatorf. The positions were played as follows.

FERNIE.		MICHEL.
Taylor	pitcher	Ferguson
Whalen	catcher	Armstrong
Kastner	1st base	Corpe
Forseith	2nd base	Austin
McCreary	3rd base	Ellis
McKellar	short stop	Burdett
McIntyre	centre field	B. Wilson
Trenbath	right field	Grant

Michel batted seven innings and Fernie six. The runs by innings were, 7, 3, 5, 9, 0, 5, total 29 runs for the home team while the visitors failed to make a single run. Taylor's delivery seemed to to puzzle the latter and they lost heart almost from the beginning, Ferguson's work was too mechanical and the locals soon got onto his curves. Michel players were struck out sixteen times while the home team were similarly treated only six times. The visitors can play better ball than they gave us on Monday, but they are not in the same class with Fernie. F. Label umpired the game and gave general satisfaction by his fair decisions.

LACROSSE.

In the evening the first game of lacrosse of the season was played on the new grounds between the Junior lacrosse team and a picked team. The latter which consisted mostly of last year's senior team, had no trouble in holding the juniors down, and the score finally stood stood 4–2 in favor of the picked team. The juniors are developing some clever stick handlers and before the season is over they will no doubt have a good record established.

Theexcursion to Frank was patronized by about 100 Fernie citizens. The trip was thoroughly enjoyed by all. The magnitude of the slide surpassed the expectations of all who viewed it. The train arrived on its homeward trip about 6 o'clock.

KILLED IN MICHEL MINE.

Walter W. Ridings Killed and His Companion Tony Micone Badly Injured on Wednesday.

While working in No. 5 mine, Michel, on Wednesday afternoon Walter Waddington Ridings was fatally injured and his companion, Tony Micone, was seriously injured by a part of the roof falling in.

These men were employed as car pushers in this mine. On the day in question while going down an incline with a car they neglected to apply the ordinary sprag brake in time and the rapid speed which the car attained threw it off the track. The force of the derailed car was spent against an upright timber support which was knocked out of place. This allowed part of the roof to fall in, which buried Mr. Ridings beneath the rock. When the body was recovered it was found to be lifeless. Micone was severely injured, though to what extent, excepting a broken ankle, we have not learned.

Coroner H. H. Trites was at once notified and he went down to Michel on Wednesday evening to hold an inquest. After impanelling a jury and viewing the body, orders were given for its burial and the inquest was adjourned until Wednesday, June 23rd, so that the government mine inspector, A. Dick, may examine the place and report at the inquest should he see fit so to do. The doctor's report was not given at the inquest but it is thought that the deceased's neck was broken by the falling rock.

The deceased was buried at Michel yesterday. He is a Lancashire man 41 years old and has been in Michel about 5 months. He has a brother-in-law living in Michel.

FIRE AT MICHEL.

Lamp House Burned Down—600 Lamps Destroyed.

About 7 o'clock on Monday evening the lamp house at Michel was burned to the ground and the contents which consisted of 600 new Wolfe safety lamps were completely destroyed.

It is not known definitely what caused the fire but it is thought that one of the friction matches specially used for lighting these safety lights, was ignited by being stepped on, and that the flame caught on to some waste cotton lying on the floor. When the lamp-man detected the fire it was well started and though he did what he could to extinguish it by using his coat on the flames he was powerless to put it out and it spread so rapidly that he was obliged to beat a hasty retreat. A small quantity of gasoline was stored in the house but this had no connection with the origin of the fire.

The building was 18x30. It contained 600 new Wolfe safety lamps which were recently imported from Germany at a heavy cost. The Coal Company have more on the way, and in the meantime a supply of lamps from Morrissey and Coal Creek were sent down so that no hindrance is being caused to mining operations.

PRIOR IS DEFEATED.

House Refused to Pass Three Months Estimation. Affairs in a Desperate Muddle.—General Election at Once.

Upon the re-assembling of the legislature on Wednesday after its long recess several intensely interesting developments took place which ended in the defeat of the government. Three of the cabinet ministers had previously resigned and the vote of want of confidence in Col. Prior was the natural consequence.

The premier first addressed the house and reviewed the events leading up to the present crisis, ending with an explanation of the resignations of Provincial Secretary McInnes, Commissioner of Lands and Works Wells and Attorney General Eberts. He said that a few days after he joined the Dunsmuir government the cancellation bill, with which he was in perfect accord, was passed. When in Montreal in January he had gathered from conversations with President Shaughnessy that the claims of the province upon the two blocks in question were not as certain as he had thought, and upon his return he had urged upon the government the advisability of ratifying the cancellation by legislation and bill 16 of this session was the result. This bill had been put through despite the opposition of Attorney General Eberts.

Afterwards when the select committee to enquire into the grant was met he listened to all that had been said, and he saw it was impossible for different members of the government longer to sit together as an executive with such divergent opinions. It was plainly to be seen that the confidence and mutual respect that should exist between members of the government were not present, and that the business of the country could not be carried on under the circumstances and he had therefore called upon two of his ministers to resign, which had been done and their resignations had been accepted by the government. The provincial secretary had that morning also handed him his resignation. This had not been accepted and that gentleman had upon request promised to give the government his support until the estimates were passed.

Col. Prior then said that he had called upon the lieutenant governor and asked to be granted dissolution. This had been promised even though the house might pass a vote of want of confidence upon him. He would ask the opposition to assist him in passing the estimates after which he would appeal to the country.

Eberts in addressing the house bitterly unbraided the premier for his arbitrary act in anticipating the verdict of the enquiry commission. He contended that he was right in opposing the cancellation bill and that the Columbia & Western should have been allowed the right to test their case in the courts. He attributed the premier's act, in demanding his resignation, to his desire to win approbation from the country, by which his political aspirations would be gratified.

Prentice delivered a raking fire of hot shot into the attorney general, and "that nefarious partner of his, Taylor," who were responsible in the first place for the granting of the two blocks of land. Prentice upheld the premier in his actions throughout. Col. Prior had men in his cabinet who were unfaithful to him and to their trust and who were "cowards and liars."

Wells was disposed to take the matter philosophically. He expressed the opinion that Prior had not acted wisely in taking the action he had done. He thought he should have waited for the committee's report. To do otherwise was to treat the committee with disrespect, the house with discourtesy and the ministers interested with injustice. He believed that Prior saw in the coming report a condemnation of the government as a whole and had taken this action to divert public opinion, to avoid being dragged down with the other members of the cabinet.

The premier moved that the house at its rising stand adjourned until 2 o'clock on Thursday. The motion was lost by a vote of 17 to 15. Martin and McInnes voting with the government and E. C. Smith and Dunsmuir against the motion.

McBride assumed the responsibility for making a motion to adjourn which was turned down by a vote of 16 to 13.

Martin and McInnes pointed out to the opposition members the necessity for their assistance in order that the government might pass the necessary estimates to tide them over the intervening three or four months before a general election could be held. Finally Premier Prior made another motion for adjournment which was passed by a vote of 16 to 15, Dunsmuir not voting and Stables voting with the government.

McInnes in an interview stated that he would only support the government in passing the estimates. The government was not in a position to carry on the affairs of the province with dignity and it should step down. An early general election on party lines was the only solution of British Columbia's difficulty.

On Thursday Premier Prior moved that the House proceed with the passing of necessary estimates for three months supply, after which he assured the house that he would ask for an immediate dissolution and appeal to the country. The motion introduced a hot discussion which brought out much unexpected opposition, some taking the ground that the government would use the desired funds as campaign ammunition in the manipulation of the public works. Others contended that the passing of these estimates would justify the Lieutenant-Governor in granting dissolution to the premier, and that he with only one follower, Prentice, was totally unable to administer the affairs of the province until the general elections were held.

Martin held that it was evidently the wish of His Honor that a reasonable supply should be passed after which he would dissolve the house and he therefore favored the motion.

McInnes showed a decided change of front from the preceding day when he had favo ed the passing of the estimates. He now opposed the measure on the ground that the Premier was not to be trusted. During the past 48 hours a wonderful change had come over Prior in which he had apparently overcome his dislike for Martin and had catered for his support in the house. The Premier had also promised that His Honor would be present that day to dissolve the house and he (Prior) had offered no explanation as to why it had not been done.

The motion was finally put at 3 o'clock and the defeat of the Prior government confirmed on the following division:

For supply—Gilmour, Hayward, Martin, Helmcken, Prentice, Prior, Smith, A. W. Ellison, Clifford, Houston, Dunsmuir, Hall, Rogers, Hunter, Dickie, Mounce—16.

Smith Curtis then brought to the notice of the house another alleged scandal which he considered should be investigated. The charges were based on a press report of illegal acts on the part of the first minister by which the business firm of E. G. Prior & Co. fraudently obtained a contract for a cable for the Chimney Creek bridge. It is alleged that a clerk of that firm had access to the tenders submitted to the department and that Col. Prior afterwards cabled a lower price and secured the contract.

Curtis also wrote a letter to His Honor asking that the matter be looked into before dissolution was granted, and when Col. Prior went to the Government house on Thursday afternoon expecting to be granted immediate dissolution he was met with this obstacle. In the meantime the house was debating the motion of Curtis for the appointment of an investigation committee. Many on both sides resented the action of Curtis in introducing the subject and much difficulty was being experienced in securing a committee of five toserve until Prior returned, when e persuaded some on his side of the house to serve, as he stated that he was anxious that a full enquiry be made into the transaction. A committee comprising Messrs Helmcken, Hall, Hayward, Tatlow and Curtis are now at work taking evidence in the matter.

GOVERNMENT CENSURED.

Report of the Commission—Lands Safe From C.P.R. Grasp.

1.—The committee find that the order in council of August 10th, 1900, authorizing the conveying of blocks 4593 and 4594 to the Columbia & Western railway company was not in the public interest.

2.—We find that within the original Columbia & Western reserve there remained, after deducting alternate blocks, appropriated for the construction of the first section, and two pieces of land appropriated for deficiency lands to which the Company were entitled for construction of that section, an area of land amounting to 2,000,000 acres. We also find that within said reserve there was ample land available to satisfy all that the company was entitled to receive for constructing the third section, which reserve had remained set apart for the purposes of the company for five years.

3.—We find that the order-in-council directing the issue of grants for blocks 4593 and 4594 was fettered by no conditions of any kind whatever and that under that order-in-council, assuming that the settlement had not violated the conditions of the subsidy act, the company would have been forthwith entitled to delivery of the grants.

4.—We find that questions pertinent to the matter we had to enquire into were asked throughout the session of 1902, as would appear by the journals of the house and the government permitted answers to be given thereto that were not in accordance with the facts.

5.—We find that on May 5th, 1902, a return, purporting to be a return of orders-in-council relating to the granting of blocks 4593 and 4594, and of all correspondence, etc., connected therewith, failed to refer to a number of letters that had passed between the executive agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway company and the chief commissioner of lands and works, which although marked 'personal' were clearly official letters dealing with official business, and also that they failed to return a letter of November 8th, 1901, from the deputy commissioner of lands and works to the government agent at Fort Steele, showing that blocks 4593 and 4594 were granted to the railway company.

6.—We find that if bill No. 87 had become law, the Columbia & Western Railway company would have had the power conferred on them to claim blocks 4593 and 4594.

7.—The committee have no difficulty in finding that the rescinding order in council, of March 18th, 1902, and bill No. 16, were steps taken in the public interest as unquestionably the said lands, being blocks 4593 and 4594, were not and never could have been considered to have been within the purview of the Columbia & Western Railway Subsidy act of 1896, and it is unreasonable to assume the railway company, advised at all times by eminent council, was not aware that such lands were not within the purview of the statute. That being the fact, no matter what other causes moved the government in the matter, the rescinding order in council was right and proper as was also the legislation that followed, all being in the public interest, and viewing the matter in this way we cannot see what ground of complaint is open to the railway.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

C. W. D. CLIFFORD, Chairman.

COAL CREEK RIOTERS.

Case of Four Men Discharged at the Nelson Assizes.

The trial of J. T. Davies, R. Madison, J. W. Morrison and F. Chioda came of last week before a jury at the Nelson spring assizes. The accused were defended by W. R. Ross, of Fernie. The accused were tried together on the charge of unlawful assembly on March 19 at Coal Creek mines. The evidence produced was much the same as that given at Fernie at the preliminary hearing. Mr. R. G. Drinnan and J. Hunt were the chief witnesses for the prosecution.

Mr. Ross asked that Chioda be dismissed as the prosecution had not tried to prove that he had been nearer Coal Creek mines than Fernie. This the judge consented to do. Several witnesses were called to prove that Morrison and Davies were in Fernie during the time the riot took place at Coal Creek Other witnesses testified that Madison was merely a spectator of the mob and that he took no active part. The case was adjourned overnight and the judge peremptorily refused to allow the prisoners out on bail. The next morning after an hour's deliberation the jury rendered a verdict of not guilty and the prisoners were discharged.

The big hog engine on the Great Northern brings as many as 116 empty cars from Jennings to Morrissey.

The trains this week are running on their old schedule and the many inconveniences resulting from the break in through traffic are at an end.

The Calgary Cattle Co., have rented the lower floor of the Turner block and will open up a butcher shop in a short time. These arrangements are somewhat different from what Mr. Knight settled on when here last week.

ON TRUE RELATIONS

BETWEEN MAN THE DEBTOR AND HIS DIVINE CREDITOR GOD.

WHAT HE OWES THE ALMIGHTY

Full and Grateful Acknowledgment of Immeasurable Obligation and a Loyal and Loving Surrender of His Life and Actions to the Divine Will—Honest People Will Wish to Pay the Bill Presented.

Chicago, May 17.—In this discourse man, the debtor, is shown in his true relation to his Divine creditor, to whom he owes not only a full and grateful acknowledgment of immeasurable obligation, but such a loyal and loving surrender of his life and actions to the divine will as shall prove the genuineness of his professions. The text is Matthew xxii, 21, "Render unto God the things that are God's."

Many people talk as if this world was full of rigues. I do not believe any such charge. There is more honesty in the world than it gets credit for. Indeed, it is my belief that most people are honest, that most people want to do right. This is not a world of hypocrites. All men are not scoundrels. If you have not found this kind of a world, there is something wrong with your own principles. The man who declares that all men are rogues at heart is practically making confession of his own dishonesty. If you tell me that all men cheat, I conclude that you yourself would cheat if you had the chance. It sometimes takes a thief to catch a thief.

If most people were not honest it would be difficult to explain some of the customs of the business world. In many of our cities lunch buffets have been started, where you can go to a large counter and help yourself. You can eat as much as you want. Practically no one watches you. The proprietor leaves it to your own honesty to tell how much you owe. Does not this prove that most people are honest!

Taking this premise, then, for granted, I shall boldly present to you a bill which I know you will try to pay. It is from my Lord and Master. It is a statement of the debt which every man, woman and child, to more or less extent, owes to God. I do not demand payment of it, for it is greater than you could ever pay, though you lived on earth a thousand years and worked as hard as you could; but I want you to feel your obligations and to resolve that you will do all that is in your power to show your gratitude to your Heavenly Father for all the mercies and comforts with which he has surrounded you during your life. Therefore, what you are to do, you must start to do right away, and in order to do it, you must serve Christ from now on with your whole heart.

A big bill for good health is charged up against most of us in the divine ledger. We may be growing old now and have here and there a rheumatic twinge; we may be unable to eat as heartily of indigestible foods as we did when young, or to work as rapidly or as long, but most of us have had years and years of good health. We have had years with two stout lungs and two keen eyes with good digestive organs and good nerves. Now comes the question: What have we accomplished with this God given blessing called good health? Have we done anything more with it than to eat and sleep, and brutelike, physically to enjoy ourselves? Have we placed that good health at the service of the Master, as we know we ought to have done? If you had been very sick, and I should come into the room just after the crisis was past, and say, "Well, Mr. So-and-so, how are you feeling to-day?" You would answer, "Thank God, I am better: I hope I shall soon be well," you give by that answer all the credit of your convalescence and health to God. Can it be that God is not expecting you to do anything for him on account of this blessing?

"But," answers some one, "you cannot blame the average person for not being more grateful for his good health. A healthy man does not think about his health. If that good health was taken away from him it would be different. Then the individual would realize what he had lost. But how can you blame a man for not being grateful for a healthy liver or kidneys or spleen when the mere fact that these organs are healthy proves that he never knew he had a liver or spleen or kidneys?" In one sense, my brother, your answer is right. When a man loses his good health he is ready to give up almost everything he has to win it back. If his lungs are diseased he will sell out his business to go and live in Los Angeles, Cal., or San Antonio, Tex., or in some mild climate in Arizona. But in another sense, my brother, your answer is wrong. Though most of us may be healthy, yet there was a time when nearly all well persons have been sick, and awfully sick. We know what it is to have the temperature run up to 104 and 105 and the pulse, like a trip hammer, beating 130 times to the minute. We know what it is to have pneumonia or typhoid fever or appendicitis. And from the past experience of those sicknesses we should fully realize the blessing of good health and be willing to pay a great debt of service to God for that health. When visiting the Isle of Wight in 1885 we saw the Queen's physician every morning ride up to the royal palace. He did not go there because the Queen was ill, but in order to prevent her from becoming sick. If the royal courts of Europe have their attending physicians, who are paid large salaries to keep the rulers well, shall we not pay in service anything to our Heavenly Physician for the physical strength with which many of us are endowed?

"Oh," said a poor laborer to a missionary one day, "I do not owe any debt to God. He has done nothing for me." "Nothing for you!" exclaimed the missionary. "Would you be willing, poor as you are, to take one million dollars cash for your two eyes?" "No," answered the laborer, "I would not." "Would you be willing to take a million dollars for your two legs, and all the rest of your earthly days have to be wheeled around as a cripple? Would you be willing for a million dollars to exchange your good lungs for those of a consumptive?" "No," said the laborer, "I would not." "Then," said the minister, "you owe to God gratitude and service to the amount of at least $3,000,000 capital for good health."

A big debt, for food and clothing and house rent, I find charged against us in the divine ledger. A noted French statistician has compiled the following summary of how an average man, fifty years of age, has spent his past life: He has slept 6,000 days; played 4,000 days; was eating 1,500 days and has been sick 500 days. During his 1,500 days of feeding, he has eaten a whole car load of bread—17,000 pounds; a whole car load of meat—16,000 pounds; 4,600 pounds of vegetables, eggs and fish, and has drunk 7,000 gallons of liquids. He has worked only 6,500 days out of the 18,250 days which he has lived. In other words, he has slept nearly as long as he has worked. Then when you further estimate all the expense of a man's clothing and cost of travel during his life, you can to some extent compute the financial value of the food and clothes with which God has endowed one of his children up to the half century milestone.

But though the divine debt for food and raiment may be very great are you going to try to cancel it by merely estimating, dollar for dollar, how much the beefsteaks and the chops and the potatoes and peas and barrels of apples and the garments have cost? Oh, no. That would not be right. You, a strong man, with the earning capacity you now have, owe to God financially more than that, You have a moral debt as well as a financial one. If I should come to you in a business crisis of your life and help you, you would never forget it. If I should say: "Mr. So-and-so, I hear the banks are beginning to push you. Never mind, I will see you through this crisis. Bring your notes to my office, and I will indorse them," what would be the result? Tears would come into your eyes. You would perhaps cry like a little child. You would say to me: "I can never forget your kindness. It means more to me than money. If any trouble ever comes to your home, you can always count upon me as your friend."

Suppose your father and mother died thirty years ago and left you penniless. Suppose at that time I should have gone to a foundling's home and found you and brought you into my house and adopted you and reared you as my son, what would be the result? Would you estimate the sacrifices I have made for you by the dollar and cent measure? By how much I spent for your clothes and board? Oh, no! You would estimate it by the extent of my love. You would give back to me more than money. You would feel that all you are and all you have you owe to my paternal kindness and that I have claims upon you that all your devotion cannot repay. What, then, are your obligations to God for all the comforts you have enjoyed? If you give yourself to him, body, mind and soul, is that more than your duty? We must remember all the days he has cared for us in our infancy. Think how he has guided and protected us all through the struggle of life. We must pay installments on that bill by caring for God's helpless children, by feeding God's hungry and clothing God's naked and bending over God's sick.

We can never get away from this responsibility. One day a gentleman stood waiting for a friend at the New York entrance of the Brooklyn Bridge. While standing there he saw a little street urchin go up to an ash barrel and pick out of the refuse a piece of bread and begin to eat it. The gentleman turned to an old woman who was tending an apple stand near by and said, "Have those little boys nobody to care for them at all?" "No one," grimly answered the old woman, "except God, and he does not always seem to be around." Yes, as we look at distress unrelieved, at lives in which there is no brightness, it does seem as if God were not always around. But has that thought no message for us? Are not these very cases opportunities placed in our way of repaying some of our obligations to Him? We cannot pay him, but when as his children we relieve the destitute or lift the burden from the weary shoulders we are acting as his almoners and are doing his work. We should care for others in Christ's name because God has so long cared for us.

A big bill for church privileges I find charged against us all in the divine ledger. Why all? Because the church of Jesus Christ is not, as some people suppose, a small building dedicated for a few weddings and funerals and a place in which are to be gathered a few Sunday school teachers. It is not, as a great preacher once described it, merely an "ecclesiastical Flying Dutchman," with a dead minister in the pulpit and dead hearers in the pew and a dead deacon passing the collection plate.

The church is the greatest purifier of the community. It is the great preventer of crime. I knew of a keen, shrewd business man who lived in a small Ohio city. Every year he sent a large donation to all the different churches, "not," said he, "because I am a professing Christian, but because I believe the church does more to empty our jails and poorhouses and criminal resorts than any other power on earth." The church of the Lord Jesus Christ is the great cornerstone of a pure home. We do not have to argue here for one moment to try to prove this statement. It is an axiom, a self evident fact. Now, my brother, if the church of God makes your clerks more honest and keeps the messengers of crime from off the streets, where they might destroy your sons and daughters; if it is the foundation stone of a strong national government as well as that of the home; if it is the great enemy of ignorance and the leader in all movements that look to the purifying and spiritual elevation of the human race, do you not believe that you should cast your influence into its work? Do you not owe it an inestimable debt? Should you not try to broaden its teachings and through it to try to disseminate the gospel redemption which will save men this side of the grave as well as upon the other side?

A big debt for gospel education I find charged against us all in the divine ledger. The struggles of poor boys for a college education offer some of the most pathetic of illustrations. Harry is a farmer's boy. He lives in the country and wants to go to school, but how can he? Try as hard as the family may, they can just make ends meet and no more. But get an education he will. He works on the farm during the summer and teaches school during the winter. After awhile, by night study, he fits himself for an academy. His little savings he hoards like a miser. He enters the university. Then perhaps he comes up to graduation with a hacking cough or ruined eyesight and with his physical health wrecked. Ah, that is pathetic! That is a sacrifice that is being made in every part of the land.

But if it is pathetic to see a poor boy struggling for an intellectual education how much more pathetic is it to see one struggling for a spiritual education when he has been born in the cradle of sin? When I go down the street and see men and women whose faces from early childhood were scarred and marred with sin, I often say to myself: "What chance have those poor mortals? Their fathers perhaps were jailbirds. Their mothers were dissolute and deserted them perhaps on the day they were born. Their companions from youth have been thieves and robbers. And yet some of these poor wretches, born in sin, have struggled up by the grace of God into the light. They have by slow and painful stages, won a hard earned spiritual education. They struggled on and up, battling their way step by step, fighting against all the inherited tendencies of their past lives. They struggled up out of the hovel and the saloon and the gutter and the poorhouse. Like the demon possessed Mary, at last they became the sainted Mary, as spotless and pure as the driven snow.

But, thank God, none of us—no, I believe not one—ever had to go through such a struggle for a spiritual education. We had that in the days of our childhood. We were born at the knee of Christian mothers. Shall we not be willing to pay God back for this education? Because he has given us that spiritual education free, so that we can discriminate between right and wrong, shall we not now be willing to pay something at least for our past Christian tuition?

How can we pay God back for this spiritual education of our childhood? I will tell you. In the same way I expect my children to pay me back for their intellectual education. Some years ago I had my life insured on the tontine plan. These premiums at times have been very hard to meet. But when we come up to them I always say to my wife: "This money will come due when I am forty-four years of age. That is just the time we shall want to send our boys and girls to college. Then, after they have had their education, as well equipped men and women they can go forth to the battle of life and be intellectually good men and women." I am going to get my pay back in the good that I hope my children may be able to do. And so God expects his pay for our spiritual education in the moral, pure, consecrated lives we should, by the grace of God, live for his service. Are you and I, my friends, doing what we ought to do? Are we truly living the Christian lives which our early bringing up should justify?

A big debt we also owe to God for the blessings which come to us from our living loved ones. Strange is the fact that we rarely appreciate a dear one until she is gone. There are plenty of monuments and memorials erected for dead men, but very seldom any for the living. We would be willing, if our finances would warrant it, to endow a hospital or library or foundling home to the memory of a dead child. Do we not owe God any debt of gratitude to the loved ones who are still by our side? Shall not the father and husband feel that he needs to make some acknowledgment for the children and the wife who now sit with him at the table and bow with him at the family altar? Oh, my Christian friends, I do not believe we are intrinsically mean. I do not and will not lower myself to the belief that we have intentionally gone to God heretofore only as beggars. Most of us have stopped to think with how many blessings God has surrounded us. Therefore I have today tried to show you the joys of Christian giving, the joys of paying back to God at least a little of what we owe.

The simple fact is that but few of us have ever begun to taste the sweetest nectars which come from the gospel vineyards. We have only selfishly looked at the gifts which God has given to us. But when we honestly try by a consecrated life to pay back God for what he has done for us then we shall have a joy which increases in value as we delve into it. Oh, my brother and sister, will you be honest with God? Will you try to repay him by a consecrated life's service for all the mercies with which he has surrounded you? I to-day present this bill of debit from my Divine Master and King.

NORWAY HOUSE RELICS.

Sun Dial Constructed by Sir John Franklin in Wonderful Preservation.

Mr. C. E. Perry, C. E., has arrived at Quebec City from Norway House on the Nelson River, the outlet of Lake Winnipeg, where he has been in charge during the last winter of the surveying party engaged in exploratory and location work for the trans-Canada railway. Norway House is one of the most important of the fur-trading posts of the Hudson's Bay Co., the Indians coming in to it from all directions for a distance of 250 to 300 miles in their canoes in summer and dog sleighs in winter. In this trade last year the profits of this post exceeded $40,000.

One of the most prized possessions of Norway House is a sun dial constructed there by the famous Arctic explorer, Sir John Franklin, with his initials, supposed to have been carved by himself, cut into the lead covering. It is placed upon a pillar of spruce four and a half feet high in the garden of the chief factor. The copper disc, which is covered with the lead plate already described, is a foot in diameter, and there is also a little copper index. The longitude and latitude of Norway House are marked upon the plate. The wood and metal work are as good as new, and though relic and curiosity hunters of all kinds have made repeated efforts to get it they have always been refused.

One of the most pathetic landmarks of the place is a monument erected to the memory of a former chief factor of Norway House, who was accidentally drowned in a rapid more than a decade ago by the upsetting of his canoe. His faithful Indian managed to lash him in the water to the canoe, and endeavored to swim with him to the shore, but lost his own life in the attempt. The monument is not only to Mr. Belanger, the late chief factor, but bears also the inscription, "To the faithful servant, who died for his master."

Mr. Perry has with him plans and profiles of the survey work done by his party during February and March. This may be briefly summarized as follows' Explorations carried on for fully four hundred miles have demonstrated an exceptionally easy country east and west of Nelson River, at head of Lake Winnipeg. On the first thirty miles of located line but two easy curves exist, and the party are now running a 100-mile straight line through level country east towards Island Lake. Westerly from crossing of Nelson River there will be a 60-mile straight line, and the gradients exceedingly easy. An excellent crossing of the Nelson River was secured, and exhaustive surveys made of the river channel. Crossings tried and soundings carefully taken to determine the very best bridge site.

IDEALS OF LIBERTY.

English and American Conceptions Contrasted by Prof. Milner.

Prof. W. S. Milner of Toronto University recently read a very carefully prepared paper upon "The English and American Conceptions of Liberty," before the Toronto Canadian Club.

He considered that the best conception of liberty was embodied in the English idea rather than the American. The English had never forgotten the early German conception of individual liberty, which had been carried from the shores of the Baltic, and every great revolutionary movement had represented the fact. The Normans had brought the conception of Roman Imperialism against which the English had battled, and he believed that the danger of the Norman influence upon English civilization, had been thwarted, and that the German conception, as illustrated in the turning out of Governments when in power with a safe majority, as pointed out by government defeats in bye-elections, had won the day.

American democracy was a faith in man, which had almost attained the zeal of a religion. It embodied all the good and bad ideals of the Roman and the Greek. It had made the people believe that the revolution of 1767 had given the country the most lofty ideal of liberty, and it had culminated in the great trusts and in the most impure system of party government in the world.

He considered that the younger Canadians are losing the English conception, and drifting towards the American, and that only the assertion of the individual conception would save us from falling into the American ideas. The present apathy in Canadian politics strongly supported his contention. Discipline had lost its force, partly by reason of the ideals of American democracy, which had crept in, and by reason of so many women teaching in the public schools.

Medical Knights.

Sir James Grant of Ottawa, and Sir William Hingston of Montreal are the only two Canadian physicians who owe their knighthoods to their professional rank and services. Although Sir James Grant long sat in the House of Commons, it was not the politician, but the physician to the vice-regal household and the successful doctor who was decorated. It was as a medical man and not as a member of Parliament that Dr. Hingston received his knighthood. The other "doctors," like Sir Charles Tupper or Sir John Schultz, won their titles in public life, not in medical practice.

The occasion was of interest to all Presbyterians, and the honor done Manitoba College in the selection of one of its graduates for so important and responsible a position, is highly appreciated by friends of that institution.

BLOOD IS WATERY IN THE SPRING.

It is lacking the Essential, Life-giving Principle which is Best Obtained by the Use of

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

The tired, languid, and depressed feelings which come with spring are the outward indication of the weakened condition of the blood and the low state of vitality.

When the blood gets thin and watery the waste of the human body is more rapid than the process of reconstruction. Gradually the action of the heart grows weaker and weaker, the lungs do not work to their full capacity, the stomach, and other digestive organs fail to perform their duties, and the result is all sorts of bodily derangements.

Aching head, dizzy spells, indigestion, feelings of weakness and despondency, lack of energy to perform the duties of the day, loss of appetite, failing memory and power of concentrating the mind, irritability, nervousness, and sleeplessness are among the symptoms which distress you, and all can be avoided by the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

There is no preparation to be compared to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food as a spring restorative. It does not stimulate and so whip the organs of the body to overexertion, but by enriching the blood, instils new vigor into the nerves and builds up the whole system. By noting your increase in weight while using this great food cure you can prove that new firm flesh and tissue is being added to the body.

BABY'S HEALTH.

Mothers all over the Dominion will be spared many an anxious hour if they will always keep at hand a box of Baby's Own Tablets and give them to their little ones as occasion may require. These Tablets have saved thousands of little baby's lives and grateful mothers everywhere acknowledge the good they have done their little ones. Mrs. E. J. McParland, Wylie, Ont., writes:—"I cannot praise Baby's Own Tablets enough. When I got them my baby girl was very bad with whooping cough, and cutting her teeth besides. With both these troubles at the same time she was in a bad way and slept but little either day or night. After the second dose of the Tablets I found there was already a change for the better. She slept well through the day and nearly all night, and this was a great relief to me, as I was nearly worn out losing so much rest at night. She cried almost incessantly before I began giving her the Tablets, but in a short time the cough ceased, she cut six teeth, grew cheerful and began to gain wonderfully. In fact, I believe I owe her life to Baby's Own Tablets, as I do not think she would have pulled through had it not been for them. I can recommend the Tablets to any mother who has a cross, fretful, sickly child."

These Tablets will cure all the minor ailments of little ones; they are guaranteed to contain no opiate, and can be given with advantage to the youngest and most delicate child. Sold by all druggists or sent by mail at 25c a box, by writing to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont

SON OF NOVA SCOTIA

HON. JOSEPH HOWE THE GREATEST ORATOR B.N.A. HAS PRODUCED.

Began Life as a "Printer's Devil"—His Wonderful Oration at the Detroit International Commercial Convention—A Famous Libel Suit in Which He Defended Himself—Confederation Fight.

"I shall depend upon the sober second thought of my countrymen to come right at last, and do me justice, and I hope that justice will be done me by-and-by," said Joseph Howe. After the neglect of 30 years, the province which he loved so well is about to erect an enduring monument to his memory. Nova Scotia, boastful that she has been the birthplace of more great men than any other province, has proved singularly callous to her famous son. Worshiping him at first, some men turned their backs on him, and heard his name with hisses. The act which would be considered by Canadians to-day the wisest in the career of Howe was the sin which his enemies could not forgive. Howe opposed Confederation, therefore Canadians are unmindful of his claims upon their respect and honor; Howe accepted Confederation, so a faction in Nova Scotia hated him.

Greatest Canadian Orator.

Joseph Howe was undoubtedly one of the finest characters this country has produced. As an orator the only man who can be compared with him is D'Arcy McGee, and the Irishman was not a Canadian in the sense that Howe was. Mr. Joseph Pope says of him in his "Life of Sir John Macdonald," he was incomparably the greatest orator that British North America has produced. The most eloquent appeal ever made by a Canadian was that of Joseph Howe in Detroit at the International Commercial Convention. On that occasion Howe's oratory was such that the United States delegates would have decided in favor of the continuance of the Reciprocity Treaty had the vote been taken on that day. And yet in this magnificent oration Howe repudiated annexation, flung it back in the faces of the Americans who yet hung spellbound on his words. Despite the fact that he was an Imperialist of the Imperialists, Howe was probably more popular in New England than in any part of Canada outside his native province. No man of the day was in greater demand at large gatherings in the Eastern States. He did not think of the most pleasant things he could say to Americans, and his Boston speeches might have been delivered in Halifax. No characteristic of Joseph Howe's was more marked than his fearlessness. The people of the United States have never failed to love and respect this quality. Undazzled by the glare of party politics, they formed a truer estimate of the great Canadian than the mass of his own countrymen.

Howe, the Printer's "Devil."

"In the time of persecution," as one of his biographers rather vaguely expresses it, four Howes left England and settled in the United States. Their descendants spread from Maine to California, and numbered not fewer than a thousand at the time of the American Revolution. Only one of them, Joseph's father, chose the King's side, and he was forced to seek a new home in Nova Scotia. A courtly, educated gentleman, his worth was appreciated, and he was everywhere respected. Never an active politician, he yet was honored by those who were, and was made King's Printer and Postmaster-General of Nova Scotia. His son Joseph was born in 1808, and received little regular education. At the age of 13 he went into the office of The Halifax Gazette as printer's "devil." For 11 years he set type, wrote poems and sketches, and mastered the somewhat varied accomplishments of a journalist of the time. In 1827 he entered into partnership in another newspaper, but sold out his share within the year, and secured The Nova Scotian for $5,250. He reported the debates in the Local Assembly himself, traveled about forming agencies, and indulging his love for verse. The famous "Sam Slick" is said to have been one of his contributors at the time.

A Famous Libel Suit.

Until 1835 Howe never spoke in public. A libel suit was brought against him in that year, and arrayed for the prosecution was able legal talent. Howe defended himself, and it took the jury ten minutes to acquit him. At this time there was not an incorporated city in Canada. Towns were goverened by magistrates appointed by the Crown, and in no sense responsible to the people. Howe's attack on the system landed him in prison, and brought against him the charge of libel. His speech destroyed the reign of the magistrates, inaugurated responsible Government in the Lower Provinces, and established the freedom of the press. The year 1835 also saw Howe's entry to public life. His official record may be briefly summarized. Until 1863 he was a member of the Nova Scotia Assembly almost continuously. Twice he was Premier. In 1863 he was appointed Fisheries Commissioner; in 1867 he was elected to the House of Commons. For 11 months he was President of the Privy Council, resigning to accept at the hands of Sir John Macdonald the Secretaryship of State. In 1872 he was made Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia, an office he held but a few months, when his death occurred.

The Confederation Issue.

From the fact that Confederation was the most important event in Canada's history, there is a tendency to judge public men who touched the great question by their attitude toward it. In the beginning Howe opposed it. The Nova Scotia House, while he was in Opposition, pledged the province to the noble vision, without appealing to the country. In the election of 1867, based on the Confederation issue, the Province of Nova Scotia returned only two members out of 38 in favor of it. Secession was the cry, and Howe was its mouthpiece. The strife was bitter. The extremists called for armed rebellion, and were rebuked by Howe in a notable passage: "I hope to live and die for Nova Scotia, and must be careful for her reputation and my own. In all the struggles of the past for the elevation and advancement of our country, it has been my boast that no life was lost nor a pane of glass broken. I owe it to the living that this policy shall not be abandoned. I owe it to the dead who in honor and sobriety fought by my side that in the autumnal season of my life I shall not go mad and turn our country to a shambles."

Despised by Countrymen.

Every constitutional means that could be used to free Nova Scotia from Canada was seized on by Howe. He went to England and argued his case with all his eloquence before the British Parliament. He was supported by John Bright, but was defeated. Seeing that his cause was lost, Howe accepted the inevitable, and when the original terms upon which Nova Scotia was taken into the Dominion were changed in the interests of that province, Howe advised their acceptance. His death, before the wisdom of Confederation was apparent to all, robbed his declining years of the tribute which was their due. So he appealed to posterity to judge him. Posterity has answered, says The Mail and Empire.

NIAGARA FALLS.

Is Lord Kelvin's Prediction Near Through Man's Use of the Water?

Above the roar of Niagara Falls some people think they can hear the great cataract's knell being rung by science. Lord Kelvin's prediction that the falls in the course of time will disappear is, they apprehend, near fulfilment. Man has already begun to turn to account some of the tremendous energies of that leap of waters. Immense power works are in operation on the New York bank of the Niagara, and three companies are preparing for the development of electricity on a prodigious scale on the Ontario side. Is this conversion of hydraulic into electrical power likely to continue until the water shall be wholly diverted from its course over the falls into penstocks carrying it into power-houses at the foot of the bluff? Some alarm on this point has recently been expressed in New York State by persons who think that the great scenic features of nature should be conserved, even though demands of science and industry have to be denied. The protests that have been made against the mechanizing of the falls are the subject of a special news article and an editorial in The New York Tribune of Sunday. Artists, photographers, lovers of natural scenery, power interests, and persons concerned in the tourist traffic were interviewed, and a considerable volume of opinion was found inclined to the view that the upper waters will in a comparatively short time be conducted to the lower level through power canals and tunnels. By several practical men, however, the opinion was expressed that the falls would remain, notwithstanding any drain kept up on power account. It is pointed out that the river is higher above the falls than at them, and that consequently the tapping of the stream at points slightly above the brink of the cataract will only accelerate the movement of the stream. That acceleration is not likely to be brought at such a rate as to cause any contraction of the great storage basin, Lake Erie. Until that mill pond declines markedly from its present volume there is little danger of power development greatly checking the impetuosity of the falls. Lake Erie is a shallow reservoir. Its bottom is not far below the level of its outlet, so that the upper Niagara is reasonably certain of continuing to flow as strongly as ever, even though half a dozen power vents are opened for it at the falls. It is complained that the developments on the Canadian side are marring the scenery, because the buildings are unsightly. That complaint is unfounded. The fact that all the contracts for power development have been made with the Queen Victoria Park Commissioners is in itself a guarantee that the natural grandeur and beauty of the spot will be protected. Aesthetic considerations have been taken into account in all the agreements. Unsightly buildings are not likely to be seen on our side if the commissioners continue the present policy of fostering the natural scenery.

A Neglected Branch.

There is not a more neglected branch of education in Canada than that of reading aloud. Go into our schools, churches and colleges, and listen for an hour to anyone trying to grasp the mysteries of pronunciation, intonation and phrasing, and see how absolutely lacking the mass of our people are in that dramatic power which makes the reader assume the very intonation of the author. Flat, dull, unmusical and not too intelligent, is the usual rendering of the most beautiful bits of English literature. As for the small children in the public schools, their reading is something too terrible to listen to.—Lally Barnard, in The Globe.

Famous Canadian Punster.

Mr. G. G. Pursey writes from Davisville as follows:

Many readers of The Globe will remember Sam. M. Jones, late resident of Toronto (now in Philadelphia) as Prince of Punsters. On one occasion, after listening to a lecture in Toronto, delivered by Dr. Richardson of the Veterinary College, on the mica mines of Sudbury, the irrepressible Sam. propounded this triple pun:

For my part, I have never seen this pun excelled, and I think it deserves a place among the first, even if it does not take first place, in the English language.

CROWN LANDS SOLD.

Summary of the Annual Report of the Department—Settlers for New Ontario—The Temiskaming District.

The annual report of the Commissed to the Legislature at its first meeting after the Gamey adjournment. It states that during the past year the department disposed of 924 acres of clergy lands, valued at $731.30; 104 acres of Common School lands, valued at $187; 317 acres of Grammar School lands, valued at $298; 5,722 acres of university land, valued at $2,881.25. There were no sales of railway lands.

During the year there were sold for agricultural purposes 66,868 acres of Crown lands, aggregating in value $44,913.67. The collection on account of these sales and those of former years was $58,892.31. There were sold for mining purposes during the year 3,985 acres, the aggregate value of which was $8,202.52. There was received on account conversion of mining leases into patents $9,594.75. The gross collection on account of mining sales and conversions of leases into patents was $19,076.87. There were leased for mining purposes 25,518 acres, at a rental of $25,288.38. The collection on account of rental of these and former leases was $64,436.94. There were leased of Crown lands 968¾ acres. New rent, $67. Collection on account of this and leases of former years amounted to $732. The total area of lands disposed of during the year was 101,436¾ acres, the value of which was $92,163.87. The total collection on account of Crown lands was $164,770.03.

New Ontario Settlers.

The Temiskaming and Rainy River districts attracted most of the settlers. In the former district about 224,000 acres were taken up. About 700 heads of families went in and the estimated increase of population was from 3,000 to 3,500. In the Rainy River country 500 heads of families took up land, a large number of whom came from the United States.

The mineral industry shows a substantial progress. The output of nickel and copper for the former wholly and the latter chiefly, contained in the Sudbury nickel-copper mattes, was 5,945 tons nickel, valued at $2,210,961, and 4,932 tons copper, worth $686,043. The production of iron ore was considerably greater in 1902 than in any previous twelve months, being 359,286 tons, worth $518,445, as against 273,538 tons, worth $171,428 in 1901.

The production of pig iron during 1902 was 112,667 tons, valued at $1,683,051, and of steel, 68,802 tons, valued at $1,610,941.

Revenue of Departments.

The total collections of the department from all sources was $1,501,518.23; of this, $164,770.03 was derived from sales and leases of Crown lands; $1,321,352.10 was derived from timber, and $5,396.10 from miscellaneous sources.

The total disbursements were $295,050.89. The includes $34,097.31 for fire ranging, $31,962.48 for forest ranging, $32,887.97 for surveys, $21,090 19 for refunds. It also covers $102,581.31, special services under the direction of the department, such as Mining schools, $47,191.80; Iron Mining Act, $25,000; parks, $12,368.72; diamond drill, $5,451.45; Liverpool agency, $4,777.25.

The total revenue collected from the Woods and Forests branch was $1,331,352.10; of this, $1,078,273,35 came from timber dues; $227,667.84 from bonuses, $61,039.41 from ground rent, and from transfer fees, $4,371.50. The revenue collected on account of timber dues is the largest in the history of the province.

Losses by Fire.

The losses caused by fire this season are of small moment, and the timber damaged will all be cut. $10,000 is approximately the damage reported to have been done by fire during the past season.

The Mohawk Institute.

The Mohawk Institute at Brantford, which was burned the other day, was a particularly good residential school for Indians. It was held in high esteem by the Indians of the Grand River Reserve, who have manifested much loyalty to it, and have shown eagerness to place their children in it. The ownership of the Institute rests in the New England Company, which claims to be the oldest Protestant missionary society in the English-speaking world. Its inception was due to the efforts of John Eliot, the "Apostle to the Red Men," and it was founded in the middle of the seventeenth century, during the Commonwealth. The governing body is a self-perpetuating board, many of whose members are descendants of the original members of the society. The society has considerable means, and for two centuries and a half has carried on educational work among the Indians. At the time of the Revolution it migrated with the Loyalists, and it has for years maintained a school in New Brunswick and the Institute of Brantford.

Joseph Brant Documents.

E. M. Chadwick, barrister, has sent to Dr. Oronhyatekha, some exceedingly valuable documents relating to Joseph Brant for preservation and exhibition in the historical collection. The documents were secured by Mr. Chadwick after considerable trouble, and his action in turning them over to the Oronhyatekha historical collection is indeed one of public interest. They relate to the conduct of Skayentaghengh, a war chief of the Onondaga tribe in the war of 1812, and are signed by Joseph Brant himself. These documents are, of course, highly valued by Dr. Oronhyatekha, and he appreciates very fully Mr. Chadwick's kindness in turning them over to him.

ADVICE TO STOCKRAISERS

Prof. Coard Points out How to Improve Cattle for Market.

Addressing a public meeting of farmers and stock-raisers at Moose Jaw last week, Prof. W. H. Coard, of the Agricultural College of Regina, enjoined upon those engaged in raising cattle for beef the absolute necessity for feeding their stock to a finish, pointing out that at the present time an unfortunate custom prevailed of neglecting to grow any grain in order to finish off the beasts, the sequel being that some of the most promising western animals got into the hands of United States stock buyers at poor rates, were conveyed into the States, there fattened on grain and sent to the British and other choice markets as American beef, where they realized those high prices which were the envy of the Canadian, who, while protesting, failed to apply a simple remedy, which they had in their own hands, by securing the finest breeds, feeding them on the best known methods and finishing them for export.

In dairying Dr. Coard advocated care in the selection and caution in the handling and cleanliness in every thing.

In the matters of crop raising, he said farmers must exercise discrimination in purchasing seed, discretion in cultivation and a determination to secure at minimum cost a maximum of production, and thus attain the summit of agricultural economics.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC AID

Sir Wilfrid Ladrier met the Ontario Liberals and Quebec Liberals in caucus on May 20. The subject discussed was the aid to be given to the Grand Trunk Pacific railway. As there is no opposition to the charter the only question was as to the amount of aid and what character it will take. The premier talked the matter over personally with his supporters and frankly told them his own views.

From what can be learned Sir Wilfrid favors guaranteeing the bonds of the company and taking a first mortgage on the road. If any cash subsidy will be granted it will be very small, and it is doubtful if there will be any. As for land grants, there will be none. Some parties talked of the government building a road, but it is scarcely probable that this will be done.

The question also of extending the road from Quebec to a maritime province port was discussed and this will be done if better arrangements cannot be made with the government road. It is said that the Grand Trunk prefer building to St. John in preference to going to Portland.

The wire was broken and lying on the ground, when the boy, who was returning from school, caught hold of it and died in about a minute. There were 500 volts in the electric wire.

Owing to the exclusion of Argentine cattle a cargo of Russian chilled meat was brought to Smithfields, says a London cable. Experts say the Russian fine third class beef is on a level with Argentina chilled, and is more suitable to the poorer classes. This means another competitor for Canada.

A queer case of superstition which resulted in the loss of two lives is reported from Hungary. A peasant named Barjas, living in Nosztany, died of heart disease while attending market in Kurd. His relatives started to take the body home, but were forcibly prevented from carrying it through the village of Iharos, whose inhabitants believed that the passage of a strange corpse through their town would bring endless misfortune to it. The procession returned to Kurd, and the next day it set out again. This time with an escort of gendarmes. When it reached Iharos it was met by the whole population of the village armed with scythes, pitchforks, axes and anything that could be used as a weapon. The gendarmes were forced to fire three volleys before they could get through the place. Two of the villagers were killed and many wounded.

IN NATURE'S GARB.

Twenty-Six Naked Doukhobors Captured By Mounted Police.

Yorkton has another Doukhobor invasion on its hands. Word reached town that a number of the fanatics were marching again, and Corp. Junget of the Northwest Mounted Police, accompanied by his assistants and a crowd of curious townspeople, went north to meet them. The doughty corporal met the pilgrims, 26 in number, about half a mile from town and arrayed in nature's garb only. They had called a halt and discarded every vestige of clothing.

Corp. Junget at once ordered the Doukhobors to put on their clothing and submit to immediate arrest. After some little delay these orders were complied with and the Weary Willies marched into town in silence, winding up finally at the immigration hall, where they were received by Caretaker Foster with open arms.

SWEPT BY FLAMES.

St. Hyacinthe, Quebec, has 2,000 Homeless People.

St. Hyacinthe, a manufacturing town of 7,000 population, situated forty miles from Montreal, has 2,000 homeless inhabitants.

It is estimated that 250 dwellings, three hotels, and several mills, factories and business establishments are in ruins.

The fire which caused this disaster broke out in a storeroom of Cole Bros.' shoe factory, where 140 people were employed, and aided by a long drought and freshening breeze, spread quickly and got beyond control of the town brigade. Building after building caught fire and it looked as if the town was doomed, but two hours later the conflagration was under control.

The loss is estimated at $300,000. There was no loss of life.

South African Labor Problem.

A meeting was held at Pretoria recently to protest against the importation of Chinese labor into the Transvaal. The hall was packed with citizens. A resolution was adopted declaring that the government should check the present influx of Asiatics and preserve South Africa as a white man's country. The chairman, Mr. Loveday, said it was necessary that they should form themselves into a strong political army against the powerful capitalists whom the Briton and Boer alike had joined hands in resisting.

The seconder of the resolution, Mr. Greenlees, referring to the admission made by Sir Godfrey Lagden, the British resident commissioner of Batutoland, that there was no knowing the number of blacks, as no census had been taken, said that there were probably 5,000,000 natives south of the Zambesi, of whom 800,000 were sturdy men. If every man took his turn there was no doubt that there were enough laborers in South Africa for all purposes.

A speaker named Mather declared amid howls, that 15,000 indenture forms to bring in Asiatics were now in the hands of the printers.

Conversing by Whistling.

The inhabitants of Gomera Island, one of the Canaries, converse with each other by whistling. A German officer, who has spent some time on the island, describes this whistling language as follows:—It consists of the ordinary speech of the natives, expressed by articulate whistling. Each syllable has its own appropriate tone. The whistler loses both fingers and lips, and it is asserted that conversation can be kept up at a distance of a mile. Whistling is said to be confined to Gomera island and to be unknown on the other islands of the group. The adoption of this mode of conversation is due to the geological formation of the island, which is intersected by gullies and ravines. As there are no bridges across these ravines intercourse is often difficult. A man living within a stone's throw of another may have to go many miles round to make a call upon his neighbor, and the inconvenience of intercourse led the people to cultivate whistling as a useful means of conversation.

Caught Disease from the Horses.

A dispatch from Grand Forks, N. D., says: Physicians were summoned from here to investigate a case of contagious disease on the farm of John Peterson, west of Northwood. The doctors found a terrible state of affairs. The disease is a type of glanders. All the horses on the place are affected and will have to be killed. Mr. Peterson had contracted the disease and was dead; his wife is so ill that little hope of her recovery is entertained. There are eight or ten children in the family, all of whom have been exposed. The place has been quarantined and all the means available taken to prevent the spread of the disease.

An Awful Death.

A terrible accident befell Harry E. Little, an employee of the Windsor, Ont., Street Railway company, on May 21. Little's duties were over at 12 o'clock, he then lay down on the wide belt of an engine to rest and fell asleep. The engineer, unaware of his position started the ponderous machine. Little screamed but it was too late. He was terribly crushed. So tightly was he jammed between the belt and the driving wheel that the engine had to be taken apart to release him.

MR. BARR RESIGNS

REV. MR. LLOYD NOW IN CHARGE.

A Shuffle Takes Place in the All-British Colony -- Charge that Unreasonable Prices Prevail at the Stores--Prairie Fires Do Damage.

A dispatch from Battleford, N. W. T., says: Rev. Mr. Barr has returned here from the colony. He complains of the slow progress in the work of locating the colony, and claims the section should have been all re-surveyed as the old survey is very nearly obliterated.

The feeling against Barr is rapidly assuming a serious aspect. Saturday afternoon a meeting was held in the camp here, and by unanimous resolution Barr was deposed from the leadership and Rev. Mr. Lloyd and a committee appointed to act in his place. The government will be asked to appoint a commissioner to co-operate. Mr. Barr at first positively declined to step aside or to open the books for inspection, but has changed his mind since and handed in his resignation in writing.

Several parties here who had paid him money for C. P. R. land got a refund. Barr's return here caused some excitement and also apprehension that he was leaving, as the outlet to the east by the Battle River bridge was patrolled by colonists. Barr told a correspondent he had been warned it was not safe for him to return to the colony, and his life was in danger, but he takes this lightly. He claims the large number of his party who arrived here without means are the principal cause of the existing troubles and dissatisfaction. He is urging Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann to start railway construction through the settlement at once. Returning colonists complain bitterly of the prices at the Barr store. For instance paying $6 per hundred pounds for flour; $7 for a two-bushel bag of potatoes; $1 a bushel for oats, Mr. Barr having bought all the surplus supply of oats from the farmers.

HOT TIME IN DUBLIN.

Gaelic League Causes an Uproar at a Meeting of Citizens.

A cable from Dublin, dated May 18 says: Scenes of extreme disorder were witnessed here to-night in the Rotunda in support of the Irish parliamentary fund, owing to the presence of members of the Gaelic league, who are opposed to giving King Edward a friendly welcome on his coming visit to Ireland. Timothy Harrington, Lord Mayor of Dublin, was in the chair.

While John Redmond was addressing the audience, Mrs. McBride, formerly Miss Maude Gonne, advanced to the platform and interrupted the proceedings by asking Lord Mayor Harrington whether he intended, as head of the municipality to oppose the presentation of an address of welcome to the King. Mr. Harrington replied in an evasive way. Mrs. McBride insisted on a direct answer, whereupon scenes of the wildest disorder occurred, and prevented John Redmond from continuing his speech.

The members of the Gaelic league tried to storm the platform amid cries of "put them out!" Fierce collisions between the Gaelic leaders and other members of the assembly ensued; chairs were hurled to and from the platform, and many persons were injured in the desperate efforts made to eject the disturbers. John O'Donnell, member of parliament from South Mayo, was badly injured on the head during the scuffle. Many persons fled terror-stricken from the hall. John Redmond continued his speech and eventually a semblance of order was regained, and a resolution in accordance with the object of the meeting was carried.

Oh, Mr. Carnegie!

The London Daily News of May 18 has a sensational interview with Andrew Carnegie, who insists that Washington is the natural capital of the English speaking world. He said that British colonies are not increasing. Australia is a mere ring round an empty interior. South Africa is not a white man's country and the English government's policy of encouraging emigration there, expecially of women, is a crime. Canada's only chance of the future is to throw in her lot with the Americans.

"Your colonies put tariffs against you. Your colonies have virtually no manufactures. The empire has lost its industrial race to America, but England has produced Shakespeare, who is more to me than the Bible. His birthplace is to me more sacred than the Holy Sepulchre itself."

This interview is provoking the hottest sort of comments.

THE GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC

When the most eminent editor in Canada suddenly threw up his position in the Globe last year, many reasons were assigned by the quidnuncs. Some ventured to assert that his action resulted from a dispute with those responsible for guiding the policy of the paper in respect of the proposed financial arrangements between the Dominion Government and the promoters of the Grand Trunk Pacific. One has only to read Mr. Willison's editorials now appearing in the Toronto News to find a full justification for this opinion. Never has a railway scheme been subjected to such a searching and scathing criticism as that which is now being directed to this well known project. Mr. Flavelle made no mistake when he broke loose from his former associates and declined to be longer compromised by their unscrupulous schemes, and he made no mistake when he selected Mr. Willison to conduct the organ which was to expose the machinery of the most gigantic boodling project which was ever designed to enrich a small band of capitalists and speculators at the expense of the people of Canada.

After the very generous subsidies in land and money to the C.P.R. and C.N.R. it was not to be expected that another trans-continental railway would be built without government aid, but the wildest flight of the imagination never pictured a $15,000,000 cash subsidy, a bond guarantee of $60,000,000, a common stock issue which with the bonds reaches $184,000,000 being at the rate of $55,000 a mile and in addition to all this a kind of a blanket charter covering every kind of industry which could spring up along the course of the railway and constituting the most complete monopoly in existence in any civilized country. These are the modest demands of the gang whicn tried to "railroad" this charter through the Dominion house and which so scared the government that for the first time in seven years they refused the demands of their political financial dictators and the latter in danger of losing their charter brought the most astute and diplomatic Sir Charles Wilson Rivers over to general their forces.

But this is not all, the News clearly demonstrates that the cost of the proposed railway will not exceed $20,000 a mile and therefore that a government guarantee of bonds on the basis of $55,000 will mean $100,000,000 of "water" which if the bonds are sold at par—as they undoubtedly would be—gives a rake off of that amount to the promoters No wonder that a honest man like Mr. Flavelle got frightened, and no wonder that the News sees in this "bunco steering" game a permanent tax on every citizen in Canada and a particularly heavy one in the settlers along the new railway in increased freight rates.

Beyond this the News sees the absorption of the Canadian Northwest by the larger octopus and with it the various lands grants and subsidies which that company has acquired. In fact it is a case of "bluff" to run two sets of applications for charters and after securing from the country everything possible to "divvy up".

Apart from the very material interest which every Canadian has in his national affairs there is a special interest for this province in that both G.T.P. and C.N.R. are seeking land grants from the Rockies to the coast. In the name of conscience why not ask for every acre of government land remaining in the province. Our watch word must be "no more day light robbery" and "down with every member who votes for a land grant".

THE REPORT.

The report of the Columbia & Western investigation commission has not fastened any specific charge of fraud against any individual, but the whole government has come in for a share in the responsibility of the proposed outrageous grant. However, to those who have followed the evidence of the different ministers it is not difficult to ascertain the commissioner's opinion of the different ministers.

For instance, in clause 6, bill no 87, is shown in its true colors, as a deliberate scheme to transfer from the government to the C.P.R. the right to choose the subsidy land of the Columbia & Western. Eberts, as the acknowledged father of this bill, deservedly comes in for a large share of blame, and even Martin is said to have favored the bill. Wells and Dunsmuir have denied any knowledge of the real purport of the bill and by so doing they have, to say the least, shown a lamentable lack of interest in the affairs of the province. Again in clause No. 5 reflections of fraudulent intentions are cast upon the Hon. Commissioner of Lands and Works for withholding important official letters bearing on the subject on the ground that they were private.

Other clauses might be taken up to show where individual blame has been cast, but we believe the commission has acted wisely in shouldering the responsibility upon the whole government, for it should be the business of every cabinet minister to make himself familiar with the details of such a gigantic measure as this one.

The confident manner in which the commission, in clause 7, refers to the cancellation order and bill 16 is re-assuring to those who were beginning to fear that the C.P.R. might have an indisputable claim to the lands. It is clear from the tenor of this clause, that in their opinion, the C.P.R were aware that they were accepting lands from the government that the latter were not legally empowered to give, and that under existing conditions the C.P.R. have absolutely no claim on the property.

The finding on the whole will no doubt meet with the satisfaction of the people of the province. It can be considered in no sense as a "whitewash" and yet it is worded so conservatively as to give it the ring of mature deliberation and of sound judgement.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Now that the C.P.R. track is open at Frank the car shortage along the Crow line should be relieved. During the past month the Coal Company have been seriously handicapped in their coke shipments, and at times several thousand tons of coke accumulated at the Fernie and Michel ovens.

Last year Mr. Smith Curtis made certain charges against the Dunsmuir government and Mr. Justice Walkem was appointed a Commission to enquire into them. The Commission proved to be worse than a farce, it made a mockery of truth, it was a travesty of justice and its abrupt termination was a fitting climax to the miserable pretence that it was. That the delated report of the Commissioner, just presented, should exonerate the Government is only what was expected but it means nothing. The facts brought out in the evidence, and the method of conducting the investigation rob the report of its value. It is an appropriate termination to a scandalous episode.—Kamloops Sentinel.

AN agitation is on foot by some of the residents at Coal Creek Mines for some arrangement with the postal department whereby Coal Creek people can get their mail more promptly. Under the present system all the mail is called for at the Fernie office. Many of the people are unable to get down until the 6:30 train comes down and usually from this time on till 7 o'clock the wicket is closed as the office clerks are sorting the west mail. Under these circumstances people without lock-boxes are unable to to get their mail. The modest request for a branch office at Coal Creek mines should meet with the favorable consideration of the Postmaster-General. It is estimated that there is a population approaching 900 people at Coal Creek and it is unreasonable to expect these people to draw their mail from an office five miles distant.

Miners' Licences Expire To-day.

All free miners' licences for the province of British Columbia expires at midnight tomorrow and it is essential that renewals be made to-day. All holders of licences should see to it that their licences for the ensuing year are taken out this evening. The deputy mining recorder's office is at the court house. We understand that up to the time of writing very few of these licences have been renewed. The importance of renewing free miners' licences promptly is almost too well known to require comment. It is sufficient to state that the titles to mineral land held under miners' licences, and on which no certificates of improvements have been issued, will become void when such licences are permitted to run out. Such land reverts to the crown immediately and can be relocated under the Mineral Act.

The Cranbrook Herald is out with another batch of "likely" aspirants for political honors in this district. Friend Simpson has had his hands full attending to the campaign work of two districts but he can probably find consolation in the knowledge that he is nearing the end of the list.

Our Victoria correspondent intimates that Prior will recommend Helmcken as his successor. Helmcken is a very weak man, and unless the conservatives are willing to accept his leadership temporarily, it is improbable that he could form a cabinet. McInnes is also mentioned as a possible successor to Prior, though it is doubtful if he would accept the task of forming a government at this juncture, as unless he could come to some arrangement with Joseph Martin, he would find himself handicapped at the outset by internal party dissensions over the leadership. If the lieutenant-governor decides that he must get rid of Prior, and we cannot see that he can well decide otherwise, the simplest way out of his difficulty appears to us to be to call upon the acknowledged leader of either the liberal or conservative party to form a government, Joseph Martin or Charles Wilson. The people have declared unmistakably for party lines, and the country could not go far wrong in giving them the earliest and surest way of getting what they want. Sir Henri Joly can render good service to British Columbia by facilitating an early appeal to the country on party lines. He can do a whole lot of mischief by selecting some weak-kneed nondescript like Helmcken, who might try to form a non-partisan government.—Nelson News.

MUDDLE AT VICTORIA

THE Prior government is defeated. Two members have been forced from the cabinet, another has voluntarily resigned and only Prentice and the Premier are left in the sinking ship of state. Worse than this, the legislature after passing a vote of want of confidence in both opposition leader and government leader declines to pass sufficient estimates to carry on the different departments until the new legislature meets.

Such is the condition of affairs at Victoria to-day. The province is practically without a government and without the means of meeting its necessary expenses until another government can be elected. Just what the outcome will be it is difficult to foretell. There is consolation in the knowledge that the one man in whose hands the situation now rests possesses the respect and confidence of the people of British Columbia. Sir Henry Joly, the lieutenant-governor of B.C., has a difficult problem to solve, and much depends upon his next move. Every thoughtful, patriotic citizen of our Province is watching the present crisis with a feeling of weariness and disgust, and is looking to Sir Henry with a strong hope that at last the bottom has been reached and the Province is to have a stable and prosperous government.

The Perry Creek Placer company, of which Mr. Trow is at the head, will do an immense amount of work this season. They will have their saw mill running in a few days, and will cut lumber or a flume three by four feet and three miles long. Within a week they expect to have thirty men at work.

Monday was a holiday, and in Cranbrook it was universally observed. The lacrosse boys were in Lethbridge, about thirty joined the excursion to Frank, while many formed picnic parties and visited Perry Creek, the Mission, Fort Steele and the Wild Horse, while the rest celebrated the day under their own vine and fig tree. Every business house was closed, and the town was like a deserted village. It was a pleasant day and everybody had a good time.

A Nelson syndicate of thirty own some very valuable coal lands in Alberta, just six miles south of Pincher Creek and members of the syndicate are leaving tomorrow to inspect the lands and see what progress has been made on the prospecting work that has been going on all winter by a small force employed. In all, the syndicate owns ten thousand acres, and six or seven good coal seams have been already uncovered on the lands running from 12 to 60 feet in width. Some of the members of the syndicate who start off to-morrow to visit the properties are A. H. Buchanan, Bruce White, George Tunstall, J. Fred Hume and George Roy. The party expect to be away about a week.—Nelson News.

Patrick Eakin attempted to commit suicide at the Granby Hotel, Pheonix, last week by slashing his throat with a razor. He was taken to the hospital and stitched up, and though his wind pipe is cut the doctors expect him to live. He is a blacksmith aged 38. Despondency is given as the cause.

Mr. J. F. Armstrong was in town on business on Thursday and Friday. He took a run down to Morrissey Mines on Thursday. While here he inspected the work under way on the bridge across the Elk.

Mr. John Todhunter has received an appointment from the International Coal Mining Company at Blairmore to oversee some development work on their new property at that place and he is advertising for 30 men to take down with him.

Rumors are flying about the town this week to the effect that the Great Northern will be extended on to Fernie this summer. It is said that Mr. Hill's recent visit to the district was on business connected with the extention of the road at once.

The erection of several new houses have been commenced at Coal Creek mines. They comprise another row on the north side of the creek, facing the present row which are on the upper side of the creek. A force of carpenters are at work on them.

H. T. Irvine returned last evening from a visit to the mine of the Alberta Coal & Coke company near Cowley, Alberta. John Hunt, foreman of Nos. 2 and 3 mines at Coal Creek wishes through the columns of the Daily News, to contradict the assertion made by the grand jury in its presentment that the trouble at the mines has been caused by the foreign element. On the contrary, he claims, every bit of the trouble that has occurred there in the way of strikes or rows has originated and been carried through by the English speaking section of the miners.—Nelson News.

Murder at Hayden.

The police have received word of a murder which occurred at Hayden, on Wednesday night. It appears that a man by the name of Patrick O'Brien held up three Italians and demanded their money. One of the latter made a motion as if to reach for his gun and the highwayman fired and killed him. He made good his escape and the authorities here have been given a discription of the man in case he should come this way. Hayden is a construction town four miles below Gateway on the Jennings branch. There are nearly a thousand men in the camp and its reputation for outlawry has already spread far and near.

The Old Maids' Convention

The dramatic entertainment given on Wednesday evening in Princess Hall by "The Young Ladies' Single Blessedness Society" was a huge success. This society (which we understand was organized only for the purpose of providing an evening's amusement for the fun-loving public) dramatized "The Old Maids' Convention". Various devices were employed to render the characters more effective and real, and it is only fair to those who took part to say that it was with much difficulty that the audience recognized the performers. The "Convention" consisted of twenty old maids who met with the avowed object of furthering their matrimonial chances. Many very funny things, intended to bring out the traits peculiar to the proverbial "Old Maid", were said and done. Prof. Makeover who introduced his "remodelling machine", whereby the subject had only to enter the machine to obtain the desire of her heart, thoroughly captivated the "Convention". Some good choruses, quartets, solos and a recitation relieved any possible monontony that might occur. A prettily executed step-dance by little Jean Nicol took the house by storm. The affair was further improved by the localization of several parts, in which the personal reference amused without hurting. The proceeds which netted $85.00 will be spent in church work by the Ladies' Guild of Christ Church under whose auspices the entertainment was arranged.

C. Laidley was at Michel this week on business.

Dr. and Mrs. Willson, of Morrissey Mines spent Sunday in town.

O. N. Ross went to Morrissey on a horse deal transaction on Thursday.

R. W. Wood, of the Trites-Wood Co., left for the East this week. He will be absent about a month.

A Pathetic Story

J. E. Rogers who was down at Lethbridge for the past two weeks on a business trip to secure horses for the Cartage Company returned last night. He reports that the storm in that vicinity was fully as bad as reported. Ranchers have suffered very heavily in the wholesale loss of stock, both on the prairie and in transit. He relates a sad story of a man named Jos. Garrick who lost two sons in the dreadful blizzard in the Chin Coulee district about 30 miles from Lethbridge. Four of the family consisting of the father and three sons, aged 13, 10 and 5, were out about a mile from their house at a tent which was used for herding purposes. The tent blew down and the father and the youngest boy started for home in the wagon with a load of little lambs, the other boys attempting to follow with the sheep. The father upon reaching home went back to the assistance of the boys but in the blinding storm they could not be found. Three days afterwards one boy was found near his home. A couple of days later a dog which had been with the boys a good deal enabled the father to find the other body, by running to a certain snow bank and remaining there. They found the lad there with his shoes off and the body of a lamb on each foot. Mr. Garrick lost 2000 sheep in the storm.

Sued for Damages.

At the supreme court sittings at Nelson on Tuesday the case of Kingsmill vs. The Crows Nest Pass Coal Company was heard before a jury. S. S. Taylor appeared for the plaintiff and W. A. Macdonald for the Company. A. C. Kingsmill was injured in No. 4 mine, Michel, over a year ago and he is now suing for damages. In his evidence he claimed that the Company had not supplied timber with which to make the roof safe and that in consequence he had been injured by the coal falling upon him. Considerable evidence was produced by both sides on the proper or improper timbering of the mine workings at and about the spot where the accident took place. His lordship in charging the jury submitted a list of six questions to be answered by them and he intimated that in the event of a negative answer being given to the first one the others could be abandoned. This queston was as follows:—"Did the defendant company or its servants do anything in regard to the timbering of the room which a person of ordinary care and skill would not have done under the circumstances, or omit to do anything which a person of ordinary care and skill would have done under the circumstances?" The jury brought in a negative answer to this question which judgement acquitted the company of negligence in connection with the accident.

A Farmer Cured of Rheumatism

"A man living on a farm near here came in a short time ago completely doubled up with rheumatism. I handed him a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and told him to use it freely and if not satisfied after using it he need not pay a cent for it," says C. P. Rayder, of Pattens Mills, N. Y. "A few days later he walked into the store as straight as a string and handed me a dollar saying, 'give me another bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. I want it in house all the time for it cured me.'" For sale by all druggists and dealers.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. EHMBURG.

"Nothing," was the answer; "after the next act let us go. I am tired to death."

She did indeed appear entirely exhausted when they returned to the hotel and to their salon. The tea-table was set, and the candles were lighted before the mirror.

Lucie helped her to lay aside her light wrap.

"My dear Hortense," she said, affectionately, stroking her pale cheeks and bending down to her, "come, let us go away; you will be ill here."

The baroness started as if beside herself.

"Why," she cried, "have I committed a crime? Must I hide myself? Why do you make such a proposal? What do you think about me? Are you afraid that I—I—will again—" she stopped.

"No, Hortense, I am not afraid," said Lucie, quietly. "I meant it well, for I see that you are suffering."

"You see the imaginations of your own brain, my child," continued Hortense, excitedly. "You drove me to desperation in the theatre with your looks. You treated me as if I were crazy; you compromised me dreadfully. I must beg you for the future to cease from such unwished-for sympathy.'

CHAPTER XVI.

Lucie stood like a wax figure before the young baroness. These were the first unkind words she had ever heard from her. Unable to remain quiet, she went into her room and seated herself at the open window. It looked toward the Elbe. From the tiny garden below her came up the perfume of the lilacs and the flowering shrubs; beyond the roofs and towers the town stood out in dark relief against the starlit sky, and in the black, broad stream a thousand lights were reflected. Across the large bridge flowed the life about the palace, dark crowds of men, lighted horse-cars, and cabs with lighted lamps, and from the places of amusement sounded cheerful voices and merry music. She neither heard nor saw anything. She stared out as if in a dream; her heart beat with bitter pain—with a great longing for the peace that she had once known. She longed for the gentle words of that sister who had been a second mother to her, for her little room where the lindens waved before the windows, for the daguerreotype of her dead mother over the birch-wood bureau. "Ah! to be there just once!" she whispered, and then she passed her hand hastily over her eyes, for again there rose before her eyes, as there did every day now, the vision of a cozy little house surrounded by tall trees and illuminated by the setting sun.

But she would not think of that; she would not. Something else—quickly! This Herr Weber, what did he want? She forced her thoughts back to Venice; he had first met them in the hotel on the Riva dei Schiavorni, and from there he had persistently followed them to Padua and Bologna. In Florence, in the Pitti Palace, he had found an opportunity of speaking to them, by returning a lost fan to Hortense, and had been politely but coolly thanked for it. In Rome he had suddenly appeared beside them at the Fountain of Treve like a shadow, and that whole week had not let them out of his sight.

He had once had the opportunity of relieving them from a disagreeable predicament, when their carriage was jammed in a crowd during the carnival. A broad-shouldered figure in a wire mask suddenly seated himself on the box of their carriage, and bowed respectfully when they reached the hotel. And so he kept following them at a distance through their entire journey, till at last they had had resort to a stratagem to put him on the wrong track. And now he had appeared again and Hortense had been most gracious to him. For the moment Lucie felt really jealous of the big Thuringian. Then she had to smile. Hortense had so evidently used him to-day as a mask to conceal the pain she was suffering.

"Poor Hortense!" She rose and went over to the door. "She is unhappy," she thought; "and I left her on account of an unkind word, wrung from her by her sufferings."

Hortense was standing by the window, looking out upon the Platz. She did not turn round as Lucie entered. On the table the lamp was burning, and by it lay a letter. Lucie recognized the gray envelopes used in her sister's house.

"Letters," she added, "this evening again? I must have overlooked it before," she added, as no answer came.

She seized it; it was her brother-in-law's handwriting. Her heart began to beat wildly. What had happened that he was writing to her? She tore open the envelope. Thank God, it was her sister's writing, but written with a pencil, and not half as clearly as usual. Lucie seated herself on the nearest chair, drew the lamp toward her, and read:

"My good little Lucie,—You must now have been a good while in Dresden, and perhaps have not missed the letter from me which was to be waiting there for you; or did you? I have not had any news from you for a long time; you never wrote except in answer to my letters. Lucie, if you knew how I longed for a few words from you in my sick-bed, you would surely have written, I know. George wanted to telegraph you when I was at my worst, but I would not let him; I would not have you worried, and I could not have let you make the long journey alone in the state of anxiety you would have been in.

"But now I am much better; my cough is not so severe, and my chest is not so oppressed. I have once more confidence in the future. Summer is here again, and I see my husband and children again without the tears blinding my eyes. My poor husband! Lucie, he was in despair. You know him; he has not much patience, and when he thought our good Doctor Feldner was not curing me quickly enough, he went off one day to Hohenberg, and brought Doctor Adler to my bedside. The meeting agitated me very much Lucie; I had to cry bitterly; I felt as if I must beg his pardon for you. But he was quiet and sympathetic, and did not allude to the past. He came often after that; I have the greatest confidence in him. The last time he came to see me, your letter from Palanza lay on my bed. He turned quite pale when he saw it. Oh, Lucie! why must it be so? Anxiety for you has given me many weary hours. When I was lying so quietly in my bed, the children playing round outside, and George at his duties, I had plenty of time to worry. I can not help feeling that it was your duty to devote yourself to him, to try and find your happiness in that; for you had given him your word, I do not begrudge you all the beautiful things you have seen, of which you write so enthusiastically, but I fear you have built your castles of pleasure on the ruins of your true happiness. You write me that friendship has its rights, as holy and unassailable as the bonds between parents, brothers, and sisters, and married people. It may be so; but I can not imagine it. May God preserve this friendship to you, and keep you from disappointment.

"Shall I see you soon? Can you not leave your Hortense for a few days, and come and sit once more by my bedside? The children talk so much about you, and what beautiful stories you can tell. Do come, Lucie!

"I must stop now. I am very tired. Much love from your sister,

"Mathilda."

The girl sat quite still when she had finished reading this, her large, sad eyes fixed upon Hortense.

"I must go," she said, half aloud.

Frau von Lowen came back from the window, and stepped up to the table. "What?" she asked.

"I must go; Mathilda is ill; to-morrow, or, still better, to-day."

She stood up, holding the letter tightly in her hand; then she went with slow steps into her room, and sat down on the edge of her bed. "I have been wicked, wicked, and neglectful of my duty," she said aloud, and the invalid's white, thin face, and her lonely room came vividly before her.

Who would stay by her? Occasionally her brother-in-law; but in a short time he would leave, "because he would be of no use;" the old servant, when she had time; her little girl would come in with a bunch of wild flowers, and would give the feverish mother something to drink, but the rest of the time—she clasped her hands over her face—the rest of the time she would lie quietly, as was her wont, alone, and no one with her to hear her cough, or to notice her want of breath.

Lucie trembled from head to foot; she knew the cough and the hectic flush on her sister's thin cheeks. They had long feared this for her. Was it possible, and so quickly, so quickly? Oh, no! it could not, it must not be!

She sprung up, struck a light, and brought her little traveling valise out of the corner. She had but one thought—to go to the sister who had watched over her and loved her as if she were her own child.

The door opened, and Hortense came in.

"What are you going to do?" she asked, hesitatingly.

"I am going to Mathilda; I told you Mathilda is ill."

"Is it serious?"

"I fear so."

"You will leave me alone—here—now?"

"Go to your grandfather for a time. Why should you stay here? It is—"

"No, and a thousand times no!" cried Hortense, beside herself. "I will not go!"

Lucie was just putting a mourning dress in the valise. She stopped and looked with alarm at her friend's pale face. Hortense let her look, then turned slowly as if to go.

"Do not be so hard-hearted," cried Lucie.

Hortense came back.

The Baseball Score

AGAIN we see the score in print,
The good, old baseball score,
With names and figures all in line
As in the days of yore.
For way down south, in Dixie land,
The boys are doing stunts,
Again connecting with the ball
For liners, flies and bunts.

Of course the games now being played
Are not the real thing,
Because the heroes widely famed
Are merely practicing.
They're getting muscles into trim
So they can freely play
And training eyes so they can swat
The balls that come their way.

But just the same the practice score
With eagerness we scan
To get a line on playing skill
And work of every man.
We note with joy the wondrous catch,
Swift covering of ground,
And chuckle when one hits so hard
He goes the whole way round.

We look along the lines to see
The record each has made
And note the letters which explain
Position each has played.
We analyze the pitchers' work
And that of catchers, too,
Concluding we have got a team
That certainly will do.

'Tis thus anticipation whets
Desire for real games,
The time when rival teams will meet
And strive to clinch their claims.
But as we cannot speed that time,
With patience we must pore
Through stories of the stunts down south
And scan the practice score.

GRAND PROMOTER

Major Crofoot Turns the Great Sahara Desert Into a Rabbit Warren

[Copyright, 1903, by J. R. Haskell.]

IT was a woman with a book under her arm—a book entitled "Mother, Home and Heaven." She was selling it by subscription, and as Major Crofoot opened his office door in response to her knock she began her stereotyped speech in praise of the volume and wound up by asking that he put his name down for a copy.

"Certainly, ma'am—certainly," he promptly replied. "If you had come here with a thousand books, this would have been my choice over all. I once had a mother, but she has long been dead. I once had a home, but it was long ago broken up. The only thing left me now is to live in such a way that I may reach heaven. I thank you from the bottom of my heart for bringing my attention to this book."

"YOU ARE NOT J. PIERPONT MORGAN?" SHE HESITATINGLY ASKED.

"Then you will put your name down for it?" she asked.

"Twice over, if you wish, and I will take great pleasure in calling the attention of my friends to it. Poor old mother! Poor old broken up home!"

The major turned away as if to conceal the tears in his eyes, and the canvasser decided that she had stumbled upon a soft thing. The emotion of the grand promoter was so deep that it was sixty seconds before he turned to her and said:

"My dear woman, perhaps you did not know what good fortune awaited you when you knocked at my door. Let me say to you that I am a promoter of enterprises and an originator of trusts, corners and squeezes. In the last year I have promoted no less than sixteen different enterprises, each with a capital of millions, and the seventeenth is now in hand and almost ready for launching."

"You—you are not J. Pierpont Morgan?" she hesitatingly asked.

"Not exactly, ma'am. I am only the man who gives him hints and backs him up with cash. I tell you this in confidence and ask that it go no further."

"I won't say anything, of course. Will you put your name down for the book?"

"With the greatest cheerfulness. But before doing so let me ask you a question. Do you know anything about rabbits?"

"I had one once for a pet."

"Capital, capital!" exclaimed the major. "I had an idea you knew all about rabbits, but wasn't sure. You are indeed the woman I want and must have. Have you any objections to earning $10,000 a year?"

"Mercy on me, no!" gasped the woman as she turned pale.

"Then consider yourself engaged at that salary. Let me explain. You have heard of the Great Sahara desert?"

"I think so."

"It is a great waste covering 248,000,000 acres of land. At the present time it does not produce one cent's worth to the acre. The land is too sterile to grow anything. Thousands of deep thinking men have wrestled with the problem and given up in despair, and it has been left to me to find a way out. I have found it. The Great Sahara shall be made a gold mine."

"Dear me, how wonderful! And you will take my book?"

"I will take your book. I shall today file articles of incorporation of the Great Sahara Desert Improvement company. I shall be president, of course, while you will be secretary. Your salary, as stated, shall be $10,000 a year, and if you want money to buy a sealskin sack or a pair of diamond earrings I'll draw you a check this minute. I was looking for a woman who knew all about rabbits, and, lo, I have found her!"

"But—but I can't realize it," replied the canvasser as she looked around in a helpless way. "You can't mean that I am to get $10,000 a year?"

"Ten thousand, my dear woman—$10,000 a year. My idea is to stock the Great Sahara with American rabbits. I shall send over 5,000 this year. Next year the 5,000 will have become 75,000. In two years there will be half a million. In five years I shall be able to sell 4,000,000 skins a year at 20 cents apiece. The cost of keeping the rabbits will be nothing. The cost of killing and skinning will be a cent each. Nineteen cents clear profit on every skin. No gold mine will produce such an income. Madam, let us congratulate each other and shake hands on it."

"It is wonderful—wonderful," whispered the canvasser as they shook hands. "It doesn't seem possible that such good fortune has come to me."

"No? Well, it is here, and you may enter upon your duties Monday next. Only one thing remains. As a token of the earnestness of your intentions and as a proof of your honesty I shall require a deposit of $2 in cash. This money will be used to print letter heads bearing your name as secretary."

"But I—I don't know about it. This is so sudden, you see."

"Good luck always comes suddenly, and it should be grasped before it can get away. You have $2 about you, I presume?"

"Yes, but—but"—

"Then I will take it and order the letter heads this very day. Salary $10,000 a year, and all you'll have to do will be to answer the business letters received. Rabbits will be offered us by thousands of persons, but you must insist that all be bobtailed. The $2, please."

"Here's the money," said the woman as she handed it over, "but I—I don't understand. I ought to have time to think it over. I feel all mixed up over it."

"It is a surprise, of course," replied the major as he pocketed the greenback, "but you will soon figure it out to your satisfaction. Can you call again tomorrow—next day—the day after? I shall expect to see you within a week anyhow, as we must get the rabbit business started soon. Remember, only bobtailed rabbits, and their hind legs must have the right crook to them. That is all today, and now goodby—goodby—so long."

"I want to talk more about it!" called the woman as she found herself on the outside of the door.

No answer.

"You didn't subscribe for the book!"

No answer.

"And you've got my $2!"

No answer.

She tried the door, but it was locked. She rattled it, but the major had lighted the stub of a cigar and sat down with his feet on his desk, and he was undisturbed.

"Do you know what you are?" blurted the angry citizen who had been run into.

"No, I do not," responded the exasperated foreigner. "Late last night a policeman called me an owl, this morning a conductor called me a lobster, and around the corner a woman said I was a monkey. Next time I come to America I'll bring a volume of natural history to find out what I am!"

In Marble Time.

A patch of moist and trodden ground,
A scooped out hole, a mystic ring,
A group of urchins clustered round,
A noisy sound of quarreling,
The click of pretty painted spheres,
The well known cry of "Knuckle down"—
By all these tokens it appears
It's marble time around the town.

The long years back it carries me
To when, a grubby little boy,
I bent a badly tattered knee
And cleaned my comrades out with joy!
And when my bulging pockets showed
Their sad misfortune and my skill,
How I with satisfaction glowed!
I wish I played at marbles still!

They make a dickens of a noise
With protest and triumphant whoop,
But I confess I like those boys;
My heart quite warms to the whole troop.
I say I do not like the row
They make. I'd chase them off, but I'm Unusually softened now
With memories of marble time.

MESSRS. C. C. RICHARDS & CO.
Gentlemen,—My neighbor's boy, 4 years old, fell into a tub of boiling water and got scalded fearfully. A few days later his legs swelled to three times their natural size and broke out in running sores. His parents could get nothing to help him till I recommended MINARD'S LINIMENT, which, after using two bottles, completely cured him, and I know of several other cases around here almost as remarkable cured by the same liniment, and I can truly say I never handled a medicine which has had as good a sale or given as universal satisfaction.

BEAUTY'S CHARM.

A Clear Skin, Rosy Cheeks and Bright Eyes Compel Admiration.

No woman needs to be told the charm of a clear complexion. No man can be blind to the beauty of rosy cheeks, or the power of sparkling eyes. And every woman—no matter what her features may be—can have a perfect complexion. Bright eyes and a perfect complexion come from pure blood—and pure blood comes from Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. By enriching the blood Dr. Williams' Pink Pills give vigor, strength, health, happiness and beauty. Here is a bit of proof: "For upwards of three years I suffered from anaemia," says Miss Mary Jackson, of Normandale, Ont., "I had no color in my face, my lips and gums were bloodless and I grew so weak I could scarcely walk about the house. I doctored a good deal but got no benefit until I began using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Before I had taken them more than a couple of weeks I could see a change for the better, and continuing the use of the pills for some time longer my strength returned, the color came back to my face, and I gained fourteen pounds in weight. I can recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to every weak, ailing girl or woman."

These pills are good for all troubles due to poor, weak blood or nerves. Don't take any other medicine—see that the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People" is found on the wrapper around every box. If in doubt send direct to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and the pills will be mailed at 50 cents per box or six boxes for $2.50.

Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Mrs. Huffman of Napanee.

And Now She Recommends Them to Other Young Ladies or Married Women.

Napanee, Ont., May 25.—(Special.) That Dodd's Kidney Pills are one of the greatest boons ever conferred on suffering womankind is the experience of Mrs. John C Huffman, of this place. For the benefit of her sister women she has given the following statement for publication:

"I had been troubled for about six years with Kidney Disease and the pain was so great I could not stand it. I could not entertain any company.

"One night when I was feeling miserable, I read some wonderful cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills and I decided to try them. The first box brought an improvement and by the time I had taken six boxes I was completely cured.

"I can recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills to any person suffering from Kidney Disease and I make this statement hoping it will help other young ladies or married women."

Mrs. Huffman is only one of many women who have proved that many female complaints are the result of disordered Kidneys and are as such easily curable by using Dodd's Kidney Pills.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grevious ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which being stimulated, courses through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result, improved appetite. Northrup & Lyman, of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, guaged by the opinions of scientists, this wine approaches nearest perfection of any on the market. All druggists sell it.

FOREIGN CORRESPONDENTS

Their Life Is an Exciting One and Carries Many Responsibilities.

American visitors in Paris, Berlin or Vienna often wonder how and where correspondents do their work. The truth is a large part of their work is done at these very social gatherings where you have met them. Important news is usually there obtainable only. Statesmen and diplomats, generals and admirals, leaders of thought and action, the foremost men of business and the indefatigable promoters of great new ventures—all the men and women, in fact, who make the news and who are the fountain head of it—the correspondent will meet there. It depends on his individual exertions and on his tact and gift of persuasion what use he makes of his opportunities. Being treated as a social equal, it devolves of course on the correspondent to reciprocate favors shown, not in quantity perhaps, but at least in quality. The leading correspondents must have homes of comfort and must throw them open to the official and unofficial world at stated intervals, say three or four times per season. Their private fortunes or their incomes must be large enough to admit that. Their annual expenditures cannot be less than $5,000 and may exceed $15,000. The London Times, for instance, pays its correspondents on a liberal scale, salaries of $5,000 to $10,000 being the rule. Yet the majority of them find it necessary to make up regular deficiencies in their exchequer out of their own private funds.

The life of the American correspondent on the continent of Europe is a life interesting and fascinating enough in its way, and it broadens the mental horizon as perhaps no other occupation does. But it is a nerve destroying life, a life in which there is scarcely a minute he can call his very own. Every day in the year it spurs its slave on to utmost exertion. It barely pays expenses, and it necessitates constant outlays in time and money which cannot be put down in the expense account and which are a drain on health and purse alike. Even under the most favorable circumstances the game is hardly worth the candle. To go to bed at 2 or 3, fagged out with never ending excitement and toil; to be waked out of a sound sleep an hour later by a ring at the telephone or by inopportune cable inquiries from the home office; to dress hurriedly, take a cab to the nearest telegraph office and there wire a hasty reply; then to return and seek a few hours of fitful sleep and to rise morning after morning unrefreshed, with never repose for body and soul—all this is neither conducive to longevity nor to a quiet and contented mind.

Some Visual Measurements.

"When I watch a new building going up day by day from foundation to flagstaff," said the city salesman, "I get so muddled by the time it is completed that I cannot tell for the life of me whether it is fifty feet wide or 500 feet. So far as mere visual measurements go, the size varies so much in the course of construction that confusion is unavoidable. When the excavation for the foundation is in order, the hole in the ground seems so enormous that I could take oath it covers a ten acre lot. After the steel framework goes up the building shrinks amazingly, and I say to myself: 'Well, that isn't going to be such a big affair after all. How could my eyes have deceived me so when looking at the excavation?' But when the walls are finished and the windows in and the decorations all stuck in place the whole building swells out again prodigiously."

Some Foreign Coins.

The franc was formerly called livre (pound), though the connection with any special weight is not evident. The name of the German coin, mark, meaning a weight of eight ounces, was formerly in general use in Europe. The name of the Italian coin that corresponds with the franc (lira) also means pound. The coins in present use in Spain have their names from other sources.

The five peseta piece, which corresponds with the American dollar, is called escudo (shield). "Peseta," the name of the small coin representing the monetary standard, means simply "little piece." "Ruble" is from the word meaning "to cut," and was so called because originally the coin was made with an ornamental edge.

Highest Cross in the World.

The highest cross in the world is said to be that which caps the loftiest peak of the Harz mountains. The cross is in reality a tower, and it commands a magnificent view of the country around. The height of the tower is 120 feet, and it stands on a mountain 1,731 feet above the sea level. A stair of 200 steps leads to the top of the cross, but there is an elevator, of which the people avail themselves who for any reason wish to avoid the long climb.

The Language of the Turf.

"Couldn't you get your money down on that race?"

"No."

"What was the trouble."

"I pronounced the name of the horse correctly and the bookmaker couldn't understand me."

Pretty Decent Husband.

"But you say her marriage to young Highroller turned out better than was expected?"

"Much better. He hadn't spent more than half her money when they separated."

Would to heaven that the thousands burdened and oppressed with physical agonies, wearied, despondent, sleepless and weak in this month of May, could hear that mysterious whisper, "Man! Woman! Paine's Celery Compound will banish thy disease and give unto thee that perfect health and life which leads to happiness and contentment."

Take courage, afflicted one; though physicians have pronounced you incurable, let us assure you of positive aid and cure. The virtues of Paine's Celery Compound will give you, in as large a measure, the same blessed results that were experienced by Mr. T. Simons, of Everton, Ont., who gratefully writes as follows:—

"I have suffered from nervousness, run-down system and heart weakness for a long time. Very often, spells of unconsciousness would come over me, and last for an hour or more each time. When consciousness returned, I would find myself exhausted and quite sick at the stomach. I doctored long without any good results. I then happily commenced with Paine's Celery Compound, and soon became a new man. I am feeling splendid just now and as strong as ever in my life, thanks to your great medicine. I advise all sick people to use the great compound that did such a grand work for me."

MORRISSEY

From The Despatch

The auction rooms of J. Acillo were opened this week.

Little Tommy Clare the Despatch news boy had the misfortune to fall and break his wrist on Monday of this week.

Government Agent Armstrong visited the townsite yesterday on business in connection with the government road from Fernie to Morrissey.

Considerable inconvenience and delay was caused at the tipple yesterday owing to the breaking down of the big box car loader.

John Mason and Trueman Thompson came in from Toronto this week to take situations with the Trites-Wood Co. The former is stationed at the store here and the latter at Fernie. Both express themselves ae being delighted with the west.

Mr. G. Mitchell, of Grand Forks, arrived in town on Monday to take the position of supply clerk at the mines. Arthur Berridge who has occupied the position will be transferred to the Coal Creek mines. The citizens will be very sorry to lose Mr. Berridge as he is an estimable young man.

A meeting for the formation of an Athletic Association will be held at the Gourley boarding house on Monday evening next, at 8 o'clock. All those interested in sport should make it a point to be present.

The Canadian Bank of Commerce, through their local manager at Fernie, E. H. Bird, have purchased the lot opposite the Windsor Hotel from H. Bentley. We understand the price paid was $1,000. The erection of a bank here will be a great convence to the business public.

The Cedar Valley Improvement Co. have sold their saw mill at the Junction to N. Hanson. We understand Mr. Hanson has secured timber limits up the river. The people of this neighborhood will be be very sorry to lose the general manager, Harry Lever, who will shortly return to Fernie.

Upon the return of the excursion from Frank on Monday evening an informal dance was given at the Australian Hotel to which the visitors from Morrissey Mines were invited. They report a delightful evening.

Jim Lee a Chinaman at the mines had a narrow escape from death on Tuesday. He was knocked down and run over by a team of runaways. He was badly bruised and is now under the doctor's care.

From appearances Morrissey Mines is in close proximity to a regular sportsman's paradise. Large herds of deer are often to be seen grazing on the opposite side of Morrissey Creek and indications are not wanting to show that there are plenty of bear in this vicinity. W. J. Blundell, manager for the Trites-Wood Co., reports having observed a herd of seven deer within easy rifle range of the store on Tuesday of this week.

Wm. Hair, referred to in the paragraph below, is a brother-in-law of W. J. Blundell, manager for the Trites-Wood Co. at Morrissey Mines:—

Petrolea, Ont., May 19.—Wm. Hair was instantly killed to-day by an explosion of nitro-glycerine, his head being blown to pieces. Wm. Bedal, a workman, who was some feet away and walking towards the place of accident, was blown some distance back and through the door of a stable beyond, but was unhurt. Deceased leaves a widow and three children.—Winnipeg Telegram

Owing to unforeseen circumstances the Ven. and Rev. Archdeacon Edwyn S. W. Penbreath, D. D. was prevented from taking the services at Morrissey Mines on Sunday last. He has therefore arranged to come for services on Sunday the 31st of May. He will conduct all services of the Church of England, being assisted by Rev. Stoney. Services at the Mines at 7:30 p.m. and at the Junction at 2:30 p. m.

Mr. Thos. Crahan has received permission from the company to clear a tract of land for a recreation grounds. Now is the time to get in and organize an athletic association for this season. A meeting of those interested should be called at once if the boys intend to do anything this year. Michel and Fernie both have good football teams. Why should Morrissey be behind them in sports? There are plenty of young men to pick from and now is the time to get in and drill.

THE EGOIST.

The Story of a Phonograph.

Cecil Arthur Dovely could not understand why he made no progress with Mary Barclay. His position as the chief dispenser of pills and postage stamps in the biggest drug store of a country town had given him an exaggerated idea of his own importance He was not a particularly bad looking young man, but was very conceited in his manner. His broad, high forehead was surmounted by his carrot colored hair brushed a la pompadour; his eyes, a light blue, were lacking in strength and expression, and his dress was just a trifle too flashy for the station in life he had been called upon to fill. To crown all, he owned a horse and buggy—that charmed possession which in rural communities so enhances one's prestige with the eligible young ladies. Cecil, who was not a bad fellow at heart, had kept the girls of Rossville and their anxious mothers guessing for a long time, and the news that he had been offered a partnership in his employers' store did not lessen feminine interest in him. He used to ride around the circle of Rossville femininity and select whom he would to go "buggy riding" with him on a Sunday afternoon. There was one young lady in the town who resisted Dovely's wiles, or, rather, those of his horse and buggy, and the prospect of a partnership in a partnership, and she it was whom Cecil, with no other motive at first than perversity, determined to win.

One day he decided on a grand attack upon the fortress of Mary's heart. He wrote for permission to call on a certain evening, and received it. Thus encouraged, he awaited the event which would mark him victor or vanquished. He scarcely hoped for the former; he dreaded the latter. He sought to embellish his language with quotations from the poets and studied the most effective manner in which to exploit his many captivating qualities.

It is, therefore, needless to say that when he called on her he talked principally about himself. He was, however, quite puzzled at the sudden and energetic interest that Mary seemed to manifest in all that he said; but, encouraged by it, he soared into giddy heights of eloquent self exploitation. He wound up the whole monologue with a passionate avowal of his love for Mary and an almost tearful entreaty for her heart and hand in return. Mary was genuinely interested in Cecil, and, in consequence, he was the very last person in the world she would have suspect it. So she tried to simulate indifference by affecting a sort of platonic feeling for him. Such a regard, however, did not come up to Dovely's requirements, and when he objected to being side tracked from the main line of love to the siding of sisterly affection and demanded a direct response to his appeal Mary showed an inclination to temporize. In brief, she asked him to call upon her a week later, and if, after mature consideration, he were of the same mind, she might think the matter over seriously. Dovely protested that his present frame of mind was not the result of sudden impulse, but the full blown flower which she had planted in his bosom with the first glance of her eyes long ago. He vowed that the end of time would find his love unaltered and unalterable—all of which he had read in "How to Propose, or Every Man His Own Lovemaker." Mary, however, remained firm, and Dovely went back to his pills and plasters. It would be vain to describe the battles fought between hope and fear, exultation and despair, in the young drug clerk's brain during that week. He was sustained somewhat by his inordinate vanity, but beneath all lay the suspicion, ever so faint, perhaps, that Mary had been laughing at him. When poor Dovely pulled the bell handle of the Barclay house on the appointed night, he was so full of nervous uncertainty that his knees trembled and his heart seemed to smite his ribs in the very terror of doubt.

The door was opened by Mary, who received him with such a pleased look and cordial pressure of her soft, warm hand that his conceit, coward that it was, as soon as it believed all danger to be passed, mounted again to the most conspicuous heights and crowed more lustily than before. The magic of her glance transformed him from the suppliant to the prince, and he strutted across the hall to the drawing room and seated himself in the best chair, prepared to receive homage from the girl.

Mary expressed great joy at his kindness in calling and archly confessed that she had suffered not a little fear that something might detain him. These delicate compliments caused Cecil considerable chest expansion, and when Mary humbly begged to be excused for a few minutes while she attended her mother, who was ill, he granted her the brief respite with almost royal graciousness. When she had gone Cecil picked up a magazine and was complacently perusing its prosy and academic pages when he was startled by the sound of voices in the same room with himself. He looked about quickly and, seeing no one, experienced a sensation of fear. As the sounds proceeded Dovely sat in mute amazement. For a moment he suspected that he was going mad. He was superstitious, but ghosts, according to his way of thinking, always manifested themselves to the eyes rather than the ears and with shrouds rather than dialogues. There was something uncanny in the sounds, too, as if issuing from a metal casket. Dovely would have attempted an investigation, but very fear held him rooted to the chair. He could not escape, and he began to feel that he had been selected by some restless spirits as the custodian of their confidences. The sound of the voices at first seemed like an echo of something he had heard before, and this circumstance deepened his perplexity. The conversation seemed to be between a man and a woman. The man's tones were imperious, those of the woman half flattering, half conciliatory.

"You know men are such deceivers," the voice was saying. "You play with a woman's heart as a child does with a toy. Then you look for another that is newer to you, though perhaps not to some others, and another fellow, who perhaps has thrown aside and bruised the heart that you pick up, comes along and picks up the very heart that you have thrown aside."

"Oh, that's the old story with women," replied the man, "you are all wrong; you don't understand man. Your feminine minds can't grasp the depth and breadth of his nature. I have tried often to make some women soar with me to loftier realms of thought, but I have never found one to sympathize with my poetic or artistic moods."

Here a soft little sigh, like a zephyr touching the maple leaves, stole across the room, and then the imperious tones resumed:

"I know women. I've seen a good deal of life. Didn't I live more than a year in New York?"

The perspiration stood out in beads on Dovely's forehead as he stared in the direction of the voices and clutched the arms of the chair in which he sat It seemed like a nightmare. The echo was getting clearer and clearer. He hated the dreadful sounds, but felt that he must suffer the ordeal to the end. And memory told him that the end was yet a long way off and the path thereto full of thorns of humiliation and shame for him. He began to feel like a disembodied spirit that stands beside its erstwhile prison and contemplates with horror the ravages that debauchery has wrought on its once beautiful form. But through the nightmare he was sustained by the sweet reflection that he was not irreclaimable and that this scourging was at worst only a severe lesson from which he would emerge a better man.

The imperious tones of the man and the conciliatory, even pleading, tones of the woman went on. With deep humiliation he followed the mysterious dialogue to the crowning point of his own shame. He could hear the soft, solicitous tones of the woman leading the man on to make a fool of himself. And he heard the man following with braggadocio and bombast right up to the very pitfall that had been prepared for him. The grandiloquent and preposterous phrases in which a proposal was next couched struck him as being so comically conventional that he would have laughed aloud had not the humiliating reflection of his own conduct covered him instead with shame. Then he heard a sweet voice asking him to think it over and then come back in a week, if he were still of the same mind. Even then he did not realize the truth. He wondered if he were not asleep and this an awful dream. The volume that he had been holding fell from his knee and startled him. He put his hand to his forehead and brushed the beads of perspiration away and said: "Thank God, it was a dream."

At that moment Mary entered the room and smilingly apologized for keeping him waiting. She drew a hassock over to him, and, seating herself, upon it and looking up in his eyes, said: "I'm awfully sorry I kept you waiting, Arthur; I know you must have been so lonely. But there"—she stopped suddenly and knitted her brows—"I really believe you have been asleep and dreaming. You look it, quite."

The poor young man took her hand in both his own and looked fixedly at her. "I don't know whether I've been asleep or not, but I certainly must have been dreaming—such a horrid dream"—and he passed his hand quickly over his eyes as if to wipe away the last traces of a nightmare. Then he took her hand again. "Mary," he said slowly, "you told me to come back tonight if I were still of the same mind as when I was here last. I have come to tell you that I am not of the same mind."

Mary looked surprised and would have spoken, but Dovely broke in quickly: "It is not that I don't love you as much as ever—aye, a great deal more than ever before—but I feel that I have been a fool; that I'm not worthy of you, and that it was a presumption for me to ask you to mary me. I believe that I can be a more modest and sensible man, and that I want you to give me the opportunity to prove it before giving me your answer."

Mary's answer was worthy of her brain and her heart:

"Arthur," she said, "what you have said proves that you are all right, and I'll take you on faith." Next morning the phonograph was sent back to town, it having succeeded in eliminating forever the capital "I" from the personality of Cecil Arthur Dovely, and the fun of it was that Cecil thought he did it himself.—Times-Herald.

PERRY CREEK MINES.

STEAM SHOVEL WORKS SUCCESSFULLY.

Large Returns are Expected—Further Improvements are Planned to Decrease Labor.

The property of the East Kootenay Placer Mining Company on Perry Creek in which several prominent Fernie men are interested, is now being worked on a dividend-paying basis and its promoters and stock-holders are more confident than ever that they have got a good thing.

Arrangements were made by this company last Fall for the purchase of a steam shovel, and a large force of men were employed in building a wagon road to the place and installing the machinery.

Everything was ready for the final test this week and the steam shovel was put in operation. It has proved a success from a mechanical point of view. Its present capacity is 400 cubic yards per day and it requires ten men to work it. The actual result in gold of the present system will not be known for some days yet, until the first clean up is made. The sluice-boxes used are of considerable length to enable the handling of a large quantity of gravel without moving the machinery. The sectional measurement of the boxes is 24x30 inches. Those directly interested in the property are expecting very gratifying returns when the first clean-up is made and judging from some "flakes" picked up from the top of the boxes that were shown to us this week they have strong grounds for such expectations. The largest of these pieces was worth $1.25 and all were large enough to be classed as coarse gold.

It is the intention of the company to add a "tailing" machine to the plant whereby the gravel will be taken from the shovel more rapidly. With the ordinary sluice-boxes a short wait of two or three minutes is required between each shovelful for the raking off of the rocks. A "stacker" will also be purchased so that the tailings will be disposed of without hand labor. When these improvements are made it is expected that the shovel will move 1500 cubic yards per day and that 5 men will do the work instead of ten. The improvements have already cost the company $20,000.

It will be remembered that this company was organized last Fall. J. A. McDonell is President, Dr. S. Bonnell is Vice-President and W. R. Ross is Secretary-Treasurer. Another Fernie citizen, A. W. Bleasdell, also has some stock in the company. The property consists of six leases extending three miles on Perry Creek from foot-hill to foot-hill, an average width of 400 feet. It is about 15 miles west of Cranbrook. There are two distinct gold strata on the property. The lower one is on the true bed-rock, which varies in depth from 20 to 70 feet. This run has as yet been only worked at one place about two miles farther down the creek. A shaft has been sunk and drifting on the pay-streak yields 20 dollars per day per man, or four to five dollars per superficial yard.

From the true bed-rock to a point varying from four to ten feet from the surface the original valley has become filled with a stratum of tight clay gravel and on the top of this clay, or false bed-rock, and through its covering of 4 to 10 feet of wash gravel is the run of gold which the company is separating now. This gravel is supposed to yield an average of 25 cents per yard.

The result of this method of working this placer property is being watched with interest by many who have similar properties in South East Kootenay and there is no doubt that if the system proves the success it is believed it will, there are other larger bodies of auriferous gravel in the district that will be treated in the same manner and it may mean the inception of a new industry for this portion of Canada.

All the stock of the company is held by seven individuals and it is needless to say that none are anxious to dispose of their shares.

PRESS COMMENTS.

Apropos of the late storm a certain local optimist said "its an ill wind that blows 'everybody' good"—or 'everybody' except Lane and Gordon & Ironsides and a few other cattle men who have been heavy losers. With these exceptions our cheerful friend declared the cattlemen would gain more from the storm than they had lost by it. It has assured the season's hay crop, whatever the summer's rainfall may be, and after all may prove a blessing in disguise.—Pincher Creek Echo.

Even a casual perusal of the list of commissioners to the Presbyterian Assembly which meets here in June reveals the fact that a most notable gathering is at hand. The home addresses of the hundreds who will be in attendance shows that no such representative body has ever visited the city. When we find more than four hundred men scattered all across the Dominion from the Yukon to the farthest east of Cape Breton and Quebec and hardly any two from the same place some idea of the advertisement this city will receive may be formed. The fact that these men are prominent and influential in their various communities cause their statements to be accepted by those amongst whom they live and the remarkable resources and picturesqueness of this province will thus become to many more than the dim shadow of the splendid reality. Many members of the assembly are active business men and these cannot fail to be impressed by the opportunities for enterprise that the coast furnishes.—Vancouver World.

The C.P.R. engines out west are distinctly on the bum. Over on the other side they haul as many as forty cars of stock with one engine. These train-loads alluded to above came to Portal with twenty cars but had to be split up to accommodate the C.P.R. toy engines which have an unpleasant habit of "dying" on the road between stations.—Pincher Creek Echo.

Further reports are coming in from the ranges regarding losses during the storm. Call a spade a spade. It was the worst crack this country has had since the winter of 1892-93.—Medicine Hat News.

The number of men now employed at the mine is much larger than of late years at this time. When it is remembered this is usually the slack season of the year for the mines, the present activity is a good index of prosperity of our townspeople.—Lethbridge News.

MANY BRIDGES GONE.

DAMAGING SPRING FLOODS IN THE ELK VALLEY.

Fernie Lumber Co's Bridge Swept Away—Serious Losses Along the Crow Line Impairing Traffic.

The hot weather of the past few days has been making deep inroads into the enormous depth of snow which fill our mountains and as a result every creek and river is full to overflowing with the spring freshlets. Considerable damage has been caused at different points along the Crow's Nest line both on the Elk and Kootenay Rivers, as well as on some of their tributaries. Traffic on the railway has been badly demoralized in consequence.

At Fernie bridge the high water mark of 8 ft. 2 in. has not been reached but it has been within a foot of it upon different occasions.

On Tuesday morning the bridge spanning the Elk at The Fernie Lumber Company's mill was swept away by the high water. The danger to the structure was known by the company, whose private property it was, and men were employed trying to strengthen the weakening parts when it was taken away, one of the workers narrowly escaping drowning. The bridge which was 140 feet long was taken away in three sections, the first passing Fernie about 9:30 o'clock in the morning. It struck the middle pier with a heavy shock and swinging around passed under. This bridge is the third that the Fernie Lumber Company have lost in this way. Its cost was about $1500. As all the company's timber is on the other side of the Elk a bridge is one of the prime requisites of the company. It is fortunate that during the winter a large supply of logs were gotten out. These will keep the mill employed until the water subsides and another bridge can be built.

Another bridge was observed floating down the Elk past Fernie on Thursday. It is not known where it came from.

At Fernie no serious damage has been done. The approaches to the Elk bridge are flooded, which increases the difficulty of making the steep grade caused by the raising of the bridge. The water has surrounded Mott, Son, & Co.'s mill and sawing operations have been suspended.

The Elk River near the Fernie Lumber Co's mill has overflowed its banks and the house of Mr. Proctor is surrounded by the water which finds its way into the creek.

The railway bridges are as usual suffering severely along the Crow line. Early in the week the foundation of the bridge below the Loop gave out much the same as Coal Creek bridge did last year and transfers were made on Tuesday and Wednesday. Communication with the west was entirely cut off at Moyie, where the track was covered for a mile or more by the water of Moyie Lake. A bridge was also washed out below Moyie. The company was unable to make transfers and all connection with the west has been cut off since Tuesday. The work of repair has been pushed with all expedition and the line is expected to be open for traffic to-day.

Heavy losses are reported from Wardner. The water-way piling of the Crows Nest Lumber Co. in the Kootenay River has been seriously damaged and a great number of logs belonging to this company have been swept away by the raging currents.

On the Columbia immense damage has been done by the swollen waters. The big bridge at Robson which cost $300,000 was swept away on Wednesday.

It is thought that the Elk river has not yet reached its highest point. The mountains are known to contain more snow than usual this spring and the season has been unusually backward.

PRESENTATION TO MR. ROBSON.

The Rev. John Robson, B. A., who has for some time officiated as pastor of the Princess Street Methodist church, leaves on Monday for Fernie, his new field of labor. Mr. Robson has been highly successful in his pastorate here, and it was probably on that account that he was appointed to Fernie, which in view of the present rapid developement, is regarded by the conference as a very important station.

Last night a farewell gathering was held in the church, there being a large attendance present. An excellent program of music and recitations was rendered and addresses were delivered by Revs. A. E. Green and C. H. M. Sutherland. Both gentlemen referred to the zeal, thoroughness and effective work of the pastor during his three years' ministry here. He had succeeded in building up a large membership and congregation, while the church itself, probably better laid out and equipped than any in the city, stood as a moument to his faithful and indefatigable efforts. During the past year over $6,000 was raised by the congregation, and the total indebtedness on the property was now very small.

During the evening the Rev. Mr. Robson was presented with a substantial purse of gold, accompanied by an address.

For some time past Mr. Robson has conducted a regular week-night service at the branch Sunday school mission on Campbell Avenue, and at the Thursday evening meeting those accustomed to attend the service presented their pastor with an address expressing their gratitude and acknowledging the help received. The address was also accompanied by a purse.—Vancouver News-Advertiser.

HOGGARTH—WELLMAN.

Mr. George Hoggarth of Elko, and Miss Nellie Wellman, sister of Mrs. E. H. Small and Thomas Wellman, were united in marriage in the parlors of the Manitoba Hotel, Cranbrook, June 3, at 12 o'clock noon, Rev. Beacham, of Christ church officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Hoggarth left for an extended tour of the coast cities, which will include Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles, and they will probably return by way of Denver, Chicago and Winnipeg, arriving at Elko, their future home about the middle of July.

ASHDOWN—ROBINSON.

A quiet wedding was solemnized at the Central Hotel, Wardner, on Wednesday afternoon of this week when J. W. Ashdown of Frank and Loretta Robinson were united in marriage by Rev. C. W. Houghton. Miss Robinson for some time made her home in Fernie. Mr. Ashdown is in the employ of the Alberta Mercantile Co. and he is well known in Fernie from his connection with lacrosse and hockey. The newly married couple passed through Fernie on Thursday on their way to Frank where they will make their home.

INQUEST CONCLUDED

Corner Trites concluded the inquest this week on the adjourned case of W.W. Ridings who was killed in Michel mines last week. Inspector Dick represented the government. His evidence went to show that the track was in good condition and several workmen testified to the fact that the deceased had been running the cars at too high a speed and had been warned of the fact not two hours before the accident. The jury rendered a verdict to the effect that the accident was the result of carelessness on the part of the deceased.

Next week will be another busy week at Princess Hall. The first three nights are engaged by the Casino Comedy Co. and on Thursday evening the La Dell-Scott entertainment is billed to take place.

RESULTS IN MURDER.

J. CROUCH A. VICTIM OF FOOT-PADS SUCCUMBS TO INJURIES.

Suffered for Many Weeks—Coroners Inquest Murderer is Still at Large.

Jay Crouch, the victim of a hold-up scrape which occurred two or three months ago on the railway track, died on Tuesday at the hospital. He had been a patient there until about two weeks ago when he was discharged on the plea that he wished to leave. He was warned by the medical attendants to be careful of his health as he was still in a frail condition.

He left Fernie and went down to the Loop to engage in his regular work as a cook but his health failed him and he was brought back to the Fernie hospital. When he arrived he was in a comatose condition and nothing could be done to save his life.

An inquest was held by Coroner Forbes on Wednesday when after securing all the available evidence the verdict was given that the deceased came to his death from the effect of a blow struck with some blunt instrument on his head behind the ear. It will be remembered that this case was a most brutal one.

Mr. Crouch was engaged as a cook at Coal Creek and was on his way home one Sunday evening when he was attacked from behind by one or more assailants. He was knocked down by a blunt instrumemt which made a scalp wound on the top of the head and a deep and dangerous gash directly behind the ear. After robbing him of the little money on his person a matter of only a few dollars the thugs left his unconscious body on the track to be run over by the first passing train.

The victim escaped that fate by regaining consciousness before a train arrived and he managed to drag himself as far as the brewery where he was taken in and assisted to the hospital.

No trace has ever been learned by the police of the perpetrators of the foul deed. The death of the injured man makes it more imperative that they be brought to justice.

Cranbrook

From the Herald.

The Macconnell Furniture company expects to be ready to open their new store for business next Wednesday.

DIED.—On Saturday, May 30, 1903 at St. Eugene Hospital, Cranbrook, Allan Farrell, aged 37 years, of stomach complications.

The King Mercantile company is constructing a second saw mill on their limits, just one mile west of their present mill. The new one will have a capacity of about 35,000 giving a combined output of the two mills of 65,000 feet.

The ladies of the Foreign Mission society of the Presbyterian church met at the home of Mrs. M. McInnis Tuesday afternoon to give a farewell reception to Mrs R. R. Jamieson, who has been a hard worker in their organization, and who will leave soon for her home in Calgary.

A bunch of mining magnates from Fernie, were in town last week on a visit to Perry Creek. They were James McDonell, G. O. Foss, A. W. Bleasdell, W. R. Ross and Dr. Bonnell, who are the leading stock holders in the East Kootenay Placer company, and are the people who had the nerve to install a steam shovel at great expense on Perry Creek to handle the dirt of their placer ground. The idea was laughed at by many of the old time placer miners, but laughing don't affect that crowd. They kept digging up the coin and going ahead. As a result they are now ready for business and have demonstrated that the idea will be a success.

MANGNAN—BELANGER.

A quiet marriage took place on Thursday evening of this week in the R. C. church, Rev. Father Milleux officiating, by which Mr. John Mangnan and Miss Kathleen Belanger were made man and wife. The affair was kept very quiet and none but intimate friends knew that the event was to take place. The event was witnessed by a very limited number. After the wedding ceremony the newly married couple and a few intimate friends sat down to a supper prepared at the Queen's Hotel. Both bride and groom are well and favorably known in Fernie, Miss Belanger having occupied the position of housekeeper in the home of Mr. A. McDougall for some time while Mr. Mangnan has been employed as bookkeeper for the Fernie Lumber Co. It is reported that Mr. Mangnan will shortly sever his connection with the Company and that he will make his home at the coast. The honeymoon will be spent at Cranbrook and other western points.

FAREWELL RECEPTION.

Presentations Made to Rev. Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Stillman by the Methodist Church.

On Monday evening the Epworth League of the Fernie Methodist church held a farewell reception in the church in honor of Rev. Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Stillman who are leaving this field to take up similar work in Rossland. A large number of friends and members of the congregation were present to express their kindly feelings towards their departing pastor and his wife and their regret and sorrow at losing them from their midst.

Mr. A. T. Claxton, president of the Epworth League, occupied the chair and announced a short program of music and addresses. Revs. D. L. Gordon, of the Presbyterian church and C. W. Houghton, of Christ Church delivered brief but interesting addresses in which feeling references were made to the sterling worth of the founder of Methodism in Fernie and of the brotherly spirit which he had shown towards them in their work.

During the course of the evening the following address was read by Mr. W. Liphardt.

To our pastor and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Stillman.—On the eve of your departure from our midst we feel that we cannot let you depart without an expression of the high esteem and honor in which we hold you both. Coming as you did, some four years ago to the pioneer field of Fernie, you held your first service in a rough boarding-house dining room. Since then, through storm and sunshine, with undaunted mind and strong, hopeful heart; you have prayed and labored, proving your faith by your works, until as an outcome you leave behind you, as you go to your new field; a flourishing church society, that has been built up largely by your untiring efforts. By the consistency of your life, the purity of all your motives, and the thoughtful giving up of all self interests, you have given to us, as a church, an example to follow, that shall always be an inspiration as we say Good-bye to you we mean, from the heart, the old form of the farewell, "God be by and with you" as you go to your new work. As you no doubt have the name "Fernie" written in large print across your heart, so we also, shall have your name away up in the sunniest corner of ours to remind us of your "contagious sunshine," laugh and smile. We hope our parting is but the Auf Wiedershen of the Germans, "we part to meet again" and pray that God's richest blessings may be given to you both, that warm hands and loyal hearts may meet and greet you wherever you may be. We ask of you to accept these gifts as a slight remembrance of the love and esteem in which you both are held by us.

Miss Phillips then presented Mr. Stillman with a gold locket and chain and Mrs. Stillman with a set of beautiful pearl handle table knives and forks. Mr. Stillman feelingly thanked the friends for their kindly expressions thus addressed to himself and wife, and for the beautiful gifts. In his address he referred to the great assistance which had been given him by his staunch supporters during the four years he had labored in their midst.

The ladies passed around cakes and in the interval before dispersing to their homes much hand shaking was indulged in. Rev. and Mrs. Stillman accompanied by their children and Mrs. Stillman's sister, Miss Blanche Elliott, left on Wednesday's train for their new home in Rossland.

MARRIED

A TAINTED BREATH.

WHAT CAUSES IT AND HOW IT SHOULD BE TREATED.

The Trouble Is the Result of Decomposition Along the Respiratory Tract, and the Remedy Is Pure Living, Pure Habits and Cleanliness.

Any one inflicted with bad breath, instead of using disinfectant washes or gargles, should try to discover the cause of the bad breath. It is almost ridiculous to keep using disinfectants while the cause of the fetor continues to operate. Suppose any one were to notice a bad smell in the back yard. Instead of finding out exactly what the cause of the bad smell is, he would simply throw a disinfectant around, or deodorizer, in order to stop or disguise the smell. Such a procedure would be silly indeed. No one but a sanitary officer would do such a thing.

A bad breath indicates some decomposition going on somewhere in the respiratory tract. It may be a hollow tooth filled with decomposing material, or the teeth may be so jammed together as to inclose portions of the food, which ferment and fill the mouth with noxious gases.

The trouble may be in the posterior nares. One or both nostrils may be stopped up. This leaves an unventilated space just back of the nostril, in the upper portion of the throat. The want of ventilation allows the mucus to accumulate and decompose, which forms a very fetid gas.

Or, again, the trouble may be caused by enlarged tonsils. These sometimes assume a globular form, with deep crevices and seams which retain mucus. Again, mucus collects behind and above an enlarged tonsil, where it is sure to decompose and cause bad breath.

Any portion of the respiratory tract from the throat to the lungs may be the seat of the difficulty. The mucous surface is liable to catarrh, and the catarrh abrades the mucous membranes here and there, forming superficial ulcers, which furnish a continuous effluvia to the breath. Like little volcanoes, they pour out their eruptions of noxious gases day and night to contaminate the breath.

The stomach has often been accused of being the cause of bad breath, but the fact is the stomach rarely is the cause of a bad breath. The breath does not enter the stomach. Respiration has little or nothing to do with the stomach. Breath is simply the act of drawing the air into the lungs and expelling it again.

The fetor of bad breath sometimes originates in the lungs and is no doubt the result of a deranged condition of the whole system. The blood, being surcharged with foul gases and decomposing material, gives off these gases at each respiration. This is why the breath of a person who drinks liquor will become tainted with the smell of the liquor. At first the breath undoubtedly smells of the liquor simply because in passing through the mouth and throat some of it adheres to the mucous surfaces. If any one were to rinse out the mouth with liquor, the breath would smell for a short time, but only for a short time. With the dram drinker the case is different. The liquor having passed into his stomach, it is absorbed into the blood. Through the blood it reaches the lungs, and with each respiration from the lungs a portion of the fumes from the liquor are given off with the breath. This illustrates how a bad condition of the blood can taint the breath.

Undoubtedly onions and many other aromatic substances find their way out of the system through the breath. In this way a bad stomach may taint the breath. This is why a bad stomach means bad breath. Bad digestion produces a bad quality of blood. The blood, circulating through the lungs, gives off bad odors, which find their way into the breath. In this roundabout way the stomach may cause bad breath, but as a rule the cause of bad breath can be found closer at hand—either in the teeth, posterior nares, tonsils, throat or bronchial tubes.

Instead of using mouth washes or perfumes of any sort to cure a bad breath, a person ought to have the cause of the bad breath discovered. Unfortunately it would be of little or no use to such a person to call on the average doctor, as he knows nothing or cares nothing about such things. He is simply engaged in prescribing drugs and spends very little time in ferreting out causes or removing obnoxious ailments by harmless and rational methods. In these matters every person must use his own common sense and try to be his own doctor.

No one should be content to allow a bad breath to continue. It is very unhealthy and is very obnoxious to other people. Every man and woman is entitled to a sweet breath, and with a little care and judgment this can be had. But so long as any one continues to take drugs or use narcotics to any extent he cannot hope to have a perfectly sweet breath. A pure breath comes from pure living, pure habits and the continuous practice of absolute cleanliness. The toothbrush and cold water should be used thoroughly once a day. Gargling the throat should immediately follow. The nostrils should be kept clear; deep breathing practiced. These things alone will do very much toward insuring the possession of a sweet breath.

SOME OLD THEATERS.

Playhouses That Flourished In Ancient Greece and Rome.

You may wonder what there could be injurious to public morality in a theater made of stone. Consul P. Cornelius Scipio Naseia knew, but history doesn't tell. The first attempt to build a stone theater in Rome was made a short time before he was elevated to his office. It was sanctioned by the censors and was nearing completion when Scipio persuaded the senate to command it to be pulled down, advancing as his reason solicitude for public morality.

The Romans did not possess a regular stone theater until a very late period, and, although dramatic representations were very popular in early times, it appears that a wooden stage was created when necessary and was afterward pulled down again, and the plays of Plautus and Terence were performed on such temporary scaffoldings. In the meanwhile many of the neighboring towns of Rome had their stone theaters, as the introduction of Greek customs and manners was less strongly opposed in them than in the city of Rome itself. Wooden theaters, adorned with the most profuse magnificence, were erected at Rome even during the last period of the republic.

A magnificent wooden theater planned by M. Æmilius Scaurus was built in his ædileship 58 B. C. Its scena consisted of three stories, and the lower of them was made of white marble, the middle one of glass and the upper one of gilt wood. The cavea contained 80,000 spectators. In 55 B. C. Cn. Pompey built the first stone theater at Rome, near the Campus Martius. It was of great beauty and is said to have been built after the model of that of Mytilene. It contained 40,000 spectators.

C. Curio built in 50 B. C. two magnificent wooden theaters close by one another, which might be changed into one amphitheater. After the time of Pompey, however, other stone theaters were erected, as the theater of Marcellus, which was built by Augustus and called after his nephew Marcellus, and that of Balbus, whence Suetonius used the expression, "Per trina theatra."

Four Ways to Health.

Hygienic living demands imperatively the absolute purity of the four following necessities: Air, water, food and thoughts. Granted these, you have the constituents out of which nature formulates such a perfect creature that the inward purity seems to lend a radiance to the personality. It is not simply a few breaths of fresh air a half dozen times a day that a woman needs, but a continuous supply, and just as the greater part of women are half starved for fresh air, so they are also stinted, oftener from ignorance than necessity, in the quantity of water the body requires to keep it clean and healthy. Pleasure of a pure, elevating nature has come to be recognized as having a distinctly therapeutic office and hence to be one of those factors which merit the same consideration and attention as other necessaries in a well ordered life.

When Pens Were First Used.

About the year 600 A. D. pens made of quills were introduced. This is shown by the fact that the word penna, a quill, is not found, it is claimed, in any work bearing an earlier date. Previous to that time the word calamus, signifying a reed, was exclusively employed as a designation for the vehicle used in transferring the ink to the parchment or other surface selected by the writers of that early age. Steel pens first came into use in 1803, and about twenty-two years later those composed of gold made their appearance.

Sex of Gems.

The Romans, following the Greek mineralogists, divided gems into males and females according to the depth or lightness of their color. These terms are thus alluded to by Theophrastus: "Both these (beryl, carbuncle, omphax, crystal and amethyst) and the sard are found on breaking open certain rocks, presenting certain differences, but agreeing in name with each other. For of the sard the transparent and blood red sort is called the female, while the less transparent and darker kind is termed the male, and the cyanus also is named one sort the male and the other the female, but the male is the deeper in color of the two." The cyanus, or cyanos, of the ancients is said, though probably incorrectly, by many modern mineralogists to be identical with our sapphire.

The Letter "M" in Mother.

It has been pointed out as a curious fact that the letter "M" in almost all known languages—English, French, Latin, Spanish, Greek, Hebrew, Chinese and the others—is to be found in the word which stands for mother or nurse. Perhaps this is owing to its representing a sound which exists in every spoken speech and has the same pronunciation in them all. It is also exceedingly easy to utter and is one of the first sounds that children make, and it therefore naturally enters into the appellation given to the nursing parent in the first cries of recognition and affection. There is no doubt at all that "ma" and the other baby names for mother originated directly from the child.

An Observing Child.

One man in New York had social aspirations which somewhat warped his admiration of his homespun father. The father actually sometimes relapses into the barbarism of eating with his knife. But the man has a little son whose eyes seek and find out the truth. The other day the little boy licked some mashed potatoes from his knife, and his mother chided him. "Sammy, dear," she said, "only stupid people eat with their knives." "How can you say that, mamma?" cried the child. "Grandpa eats with his knife. And he made all our money!"

Among any 100,000 people 15,000 experience during the year an accidental injury of some kind severe enough to cause a claim on an accident policy.

A Trying Time On Feeble Persons

All Who Are In Low Vitality Have Reason to Dread the Coming Weeks—Fortify Your System by Using

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD.

If you watch the newspapers for the next few weeks you will find that the death record is a large one, and made up largely of persons in advanced years and of weak constitutions.

Vitality seems to be at low ebb at this time of year, and the sudden changes of temperature and humid atmosphere are more than a weakened system can withstand. A little over-exertion, a little unusual exposure, a little neglect of the body, and health is undermined, physical break-down inevitable.

If you could but realize the reconstructive and upbuilding influence of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, it would be easy to convince you of the wisdom of using this preparation at this season of the year. When the blood is thin, weak and watery, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food enriches it by increasing the number of red corpuscles. When the nerves are exhausted, energy gone and strength declining, this great food cure builds up the system, restores and revitalizes the wasted nerve cells and rekindles the spark of life.

No physician can give you a better restorative than Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, for it is prepared in accordance with the most modern and most scientific principles, and contains in condensed form the most potent restoratives known to medical science. By noting the increase of weight while using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food you can prove for a certainty that new, firm flesh and tissue is being added to the body.

Elizabethan Excise Laws.

In striking contrast to the present laws to prevent habitual drunkenness were those passed in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. The Lansdowne manuscripts in the British museum record that in 1594 orders were set down by the lords and others of her majesty's privy counsel for the reformation of the great disorders committed by the excessive number of alehouses, which the justices were ordered to reduce. The publicans were compelled to give to the constable of the parish the name and business of every one who frequented their houses and were forbidden to have any games played therein. On Sundays no persons dwelling within a mile of the public house were allowed to enter except substantial householders traveling to church, and then only for a reasonable time to refresh themselves. Curiously, the chief complaint against publicans was the "brewing stronger ale and beer than is wholesome for man's body."—London Chronicle.

Wasn't Acquainted.

"Waiting in the bank directly in front of me was a charming woman of twenty or so who was having her first experience in banking," said the merchant as he lighted his cigar after luncheon. "She was asked the questions usual for one who is opening an account—her name, address, whether married or single and her father's and mother's name. She got along all right until the clerk asked:

"'Mother's maiden name, please.'

"'I don't quite understand, I'm afraid,' she said hesitatingly.

"'I mean your mother's name when she was a girl,' explained the clerk.

"'How should I know? I don't like impertinence, sir! How should I know? I didn't know her when she was a girl. The idea! Are you trying to make fun of me, sir?'"

"Sure?" inquired the friend.

"Sure! Of course I'm sure. You don't doubt it, do you?"

"Certainly not," replied the friend hastily, "only"—

"Only what?"

"Oh, I suppose it's all right, but I'd like to introduce you to Dobley."

"Who's Dobley?"

"Oh, another friend of mine who told me yesterday that he was engaged to the loveliest and best girl that ever lived, and I'd like to have you two get together and settle the matter."

A Pair of Catfish.

A pair of catfish that were continuously watched in a government aquarium made a nest by removing the gravel from a corner. During the first few days after hatching the fry, banked in the corners of the tank, were at irregular intervals actively stirred by the barbels of the parents, usually the male. Subsequently the parents were seen to suck the eggs into their mouths and then extrude them with some force. The predaceous feeding habits of the old fish gradually overcame the parental instinct. The tendency to suck the fry into their mouths continued and the inclination to spit them out diminished, so that the number of young dwindled daily, and the 500 that had been left with their parents had completely disappeared in six weeks, although other food was liberally supplied.

Gounod the Man.

Gounod was one of the most fascinating men I have ever met. His manner had a charm that was irresistible, and his kindly eyes, as soft and melting as a woman's, would light up with a smile now tender, now humorous, that fixed itself ineffaceably upon the memory. He could speak English fairly well, but preferred his own language, in which he was a brilliant conversationalist, and he could use to advantage a fund of keen, ready wit. He was at this time influenced by a recrudescence of that religious mysticism which had strongly characterized his youthful career, but his tone, though earnest and thoughtful when he was dwelling upon his art, could brighten up with the lightness and gayety of a true Parisian.—Hermann Klein in Century.

Slater Shoe Advertising.

Shoe Cost.

Short talks by the Slater Shoe ad man, No. 1.

It costs less to advertise and sell the "Slater Shoe" than it costs to sell ordinary shoes without advertising.

If a thousand people know a shoe is good more people will want that shoe than if only ten people know it.

If the "whole city" knows it more people will want it than if only the people passing the store where it is sold, know it merely by hearsay.

The "Slater Shoe" makers, knowing the "Slater Shoe" will back up the expense of advertising it, give it wide publicity—they tell the "whole city" about it.

It follows then as the "Slater Shoe" is better known through advertising than unadvertised shoes, that more "Slater Shoes" of equal grades are sold, which is a fact.

So the fixed charges of manufacturing, wholesaling and retailing are divided among a greater number of pairs of shoes than is the case in unknown shoes of smaller sales.

For instance:—Take a salesman's salary at $2.00 per day:—if his sales are only ten pairs per day the cost of retailing alone is 20 cents per pair.

But if advertising will enable him to sell fifty pairs per day the cost is only four cents per pair and thus such fixed expenses as rent, light, taxes, salaries, interest, etc., are reduced and divided.

So the wearer as well as the maker is benefited by the liberal and judicious advertising of a good article like the "Slater Shoe"—and it would be rank folly to risk a large amount of money to advertise a shoe which the wearers would not buy a second time.

SOLE AGENTS
JOYCE BROS., FERNIE, B. C.

A $40,000 SWINDLE

TITLED FRENCHMEN DUPED BY AN AGENT.

They Commissioned Him to Secure Lands and Buildings for a Large Dairying Farm, and When They Arrived He Had Disappeared.

A party of Parisians, consisting of Count de Saint Phalle, Baron de Peauise, Mons. H Morin and Mons. E. Papelland passed through Winnipeg a few days ago en route to St. Norbert, where they intended establishing an extensive cheese factory, for the purpose of manufacturing French cheese and going into the dairy business generally. They returned to the city on Monday. The count and his friends claim that they have been swindled by their agent, who took $40,000 of their money and gave in return nothing but a few acres of hay lands at St. Norbert. The party is much incensed over the deal.

As near as could be gathered by an English speaking man the story is as follows: The count and his friends saw by the papers and magazines published in Paris, and also through the literature of the Dominion government, that Canada was making great strides in advancement and that there was room here for settlement and investment. They chose St. Norbert as the scene of their operations on account of its being located convenient to Winnipeg and the French settlements of the province, and decided to go into the dairy business on an extensive scale. In connection with the dairy they made up their minds to manufacture cheese, the like of which can be obtained only in France.

They made extensive purchases of the necessary machinery in the ancient republic and prepared to come to Canada. As a forerunner they sent an agent ahead of them to purchase improved farm lands, cattle and buildings necessary to start operations, and in him they vested the power to draw on them to the extent of $40,000. With this money he was to start the industry going, and was then to await their arrival with the machinery.

On their landing at St. Norbert they were disgusted to find that instead of their agent being there with farm buildings and stock already purchased, that he was non est. They had title to "all and certain lands lying" etc. The lands, however, were what is commonly known as hay land, or plain virgin prairie.

The inconvenience and unnecessary expense to which they are being put by the alleged rascality of their agent has put them in no pleasant mood, and may be instrumental in causing their return to France without carrying out their extensive project, which would have been of great benefit to the province.

Radium.

All the so-called laws of nature, which are, in fact, no more than inferences from our limited experience, are set at naught by the unaccountable properties of a newly isolated substance to which the name of radium has been given, says The Tablet. The eminent French physicist, M. Curie, who has been devoting himself to its investigation, with the assistance of his no less gifted wife, has communicated to the academy of science a paper giving the strange results attained. Radium is shown by his experiments to be unlike every other known form of matter in possessing the power of producing heat for months together without combustion, without chemical or molecular change of any kind, and without waste or diminution of substance. It maintains its own temperature by some mysterious form of action at somewhat over two degrees Fahrenheit above its surroundings, thus expending without loss of weight or potency an amount of energy represented by the liquifaction of its own weight of ice every hour. This is, according to present knowledge, a perfectly inexplicable phenomenon, which would, unless vouched for on such incontrovertible authority, be absolutely incredible. The evolution of heat has always been regarded hitherto as an outlay of energy or force demanding compensation and incapable of sustaining itself without replacement of the original store. Meantime, the scientific world is all excitement at the announcement of an exception so extraordinary to all its conceptions of physical forces. Radium salt has been hitherto noted for its wonderful power in throwing off rays, which, when thrown upon a sensitive plate, cause it to glow with phospherescent light. This property was demonstrated by Professor Crookes at a recent meeting of the Royal Society, when, though only a few milligrammes of the salt were used, its potency was such that it conveyed its power of exciting phospherescence to every vessel containing it, as well as to the fingers of the operator. The rays emitted by it, though themselves invisible, make themselves apparent under a microscope when they strike the screen by the inconceivable minute flashes they excite. The effects of radium on the animal economy are decidedly unpleasant, as its contact with the skin produces an open sore if continued for any length of time, and it will act in this way even when carried in a package in the waistcoat pocket.

The Winnipeg Street Railway company carried 50,000 people on Empire day. A record day's business.

ADVICE TO NEWCOMERS.

Various Methods Employed in Preparing Land for and Sowing Crops Are Discussed by Agricola.

Settlers locating on new land in the spring cannot expect to grow extensive crops the first year. The crop area has all to be broken and the land is in a raw unworkable condition. There are some crops, however, that are worth experimenting with, and if the season be favorable, satisfactory returns will be obtained.

Planting and growing potatoes may be done without much extra labor. They are planted in the field when breaking is being done. After the land is opened up and two rounds made with the breaker plow, the seed is planted in the open furrows close to the land side, so that horses walking in the furrow for the next round will not crush the potatoes. The next furrow covers the seed, leaving the potatoes near the edge of the furrow just turned. Two more furrows are plowed and potatoes again planted, and so on every third furrow. The potatoes will shoot up between edges of furrows along which they were planted.

The portion so planted should be rolled as soon as planted while the sod is soft, in order to press sods down and keep out the air.

There is no after tillage, in fact nothing could be done with the sod in the way of hilling up. The stalks may not be numerous, but I have seen very nice, clean, even-sized potatoes dug in the fall from such planting. They are dug by using a common stable fork to lift the sod at each bunch of stalks. The potatoes will be found in clusters under the sod.

Early settlers used to sow oats on the sod before breaking. After breaking the land was rolled, and sometimes a satisfactory crop was reaped, sufficient to feed horses during the following spring's work.

Sowing flax on new breaking is a very common practice to this day. After breaking two or two and a half inches deep the land is rolled and a disc harrow put on, driving lengthwise of the plowing. Sometimes a second stroke of the disc harrow is given angle ways The disc harrow cuts many creases in the sod into which the flax seed finds its way and takes root The seed is then sown, half a bushel or three pecks per acre. It is then harrowed and rolled again to make the field as level as possible for the binder in cutting. Seed in most cases is sown broadcast by hand. Care must be taken in all the work of seeding not to tear up the sods. A seeder plays havoc with new breaking.

But every farmer does not take such trouble in sowing flax. Some farmers sow at once on the breaking, and never touch it with the disc or other harrow, sometimes not even rolling it. If the season be wet, the seed is washed into spaces between furrows or cracks and creases, and a paying crop is often reaped.

For a garden patch the first year much work has to be put upon new breaking. The plot should be rolled and gone over with a disc harrow many times lengthwise and at an angle both ways, as well as harrowed many times. The object is to pulverize the sod and yet retain the rootlets.

I remember an early settler in 1880 who was bound to have a nice garden that year, breaking his garden patch about two inches deep and cutting the sod into bricks, removed all from the ground, building a neat sod wall around the plot. He then plowed three or four inches deep of the clean, black soil and worked it up well, planting therein garden seeds, flowers, etc. Nothing grew that year—not even weeds. The soil was too raw. If the sod is well worked, but keeping the grass side down, onions, cabbage, cauliflower, beets and carrots may be successfully grown the first year.

A dispatch from Salonica says: The insurgents seized the village of Smerdesh on the Lake of Presba and Turkish soldiers surrounded the place. They fought for thirty hours. The rebels threw dynamite and dynamite bombs at the houses, which caught fire. The wind spread the flames and burned up the whole town. One hundred and fifty bodies of insurgents were found in the ruins.

Suppose you take the boys and girls into partnership this spring on a poultry deal Tell them you will furnish the capital, and let them do the work. Give them a good chance, but let the responsibility of success or failure rest with them. Guide them by advice and a helping hand, keep their interest in the undertaking unflagging and you will not have to face the question: "How can I keep my children on the farm?"

SLEPT TWENTY YEARS.

Remarkable Case of a Peasant Girl in France.

Marguerite Boyanval, of Thenelles, near San Quentin, who had been in a cataleptic state since May 1, 1883, awakened on Wednesday, cabled a Paris correspondent of the New York Herald. For some time past she had been suffering from phthisis and it is believed that the effect of this malady on her system conduced to her re-awakening.

She moved her hand on Sunday for the first time and groaned slightly. When a doctor took hold of her arms she said: "You are pinching me," and subsequently replied to questions by "yes," and "no." She was, however, in a state of the greatest weakness, and gradually sank, dying yesterday. Her lethargy was caused by a fright. She had had a child, which died shortly after its birth under circumstances which led to a judicial investigation. One day, in May, 1883, while Marguerite was ironing, a neighbor said to her: "The gendarmes are coming to arrest you." Marguerite had a series of fits and gradually fell into her long slumber.

Marguerite Boyanval was about 36 years old, and was a French peasant girl, her mother being the wife of a mason who abandoned her soon after marriage. A child was born to Marguerite in May, 1883. The babe died a few days later and rumors were spread that she had murdered it. The police determined to investigate the matter, but Marguerite sank into her sleep before they began.

In 1896 the girl was described as being white as a statue and as corpse like as a mummy. Her body wasted away almost to a skeleton, and her bones seemed to be covered with parchment instead of skin. The body was rigid, and only the pulse beats showed that she was living. Life was sustained by washing the girl's body in milk every day and pouring a few drops of milk or spirits into the girl's mouth through a reed. The mother allowed anyone to see her for a small fee. Many prominent physicians visited the patient during her twenty years' sleep.

RUSSIAN SOCIETY SCANDAL

Young Nobleman Strangles a Viennese Artiste and Then Suicides.

A cablegram from Berlin says:—News of a singular tragedy near Odessa, Russia, has reached here. Stefen Monvastyreki, the owner of a large estate, met, and loved a Viennese variety singer, calling herself Baroness von Nagel, and induced her to visit his estate. His brother, Alexis, 24 years old, strongly disapproved of this and repeatedly threatened to compel the Baroness to leave the estate.

One night Stefen went to Odessa, and the next morning a servant noticed that the door of the Baroness' room was still locked. His knocking at the door was not answered, so the police were summoned. It was opened forcibly, and the corpse of the baroness was found on her bed. She had been strangled, and on her nose were the marks of teeth.

From a leather strap attached to a hook in the wall hung the body of Alexis. On the table was the following note: "The woman wanted me to share my brother's sin. May God pardon me for what I have done. Through this act I have insured Stefan's future welfare, and I beg of him to erect a cross over my grave. The woman was strangled by my hands. May God have mercy on me. It is 2.30 o'clock at night. Farewell, Stefan, fulfil the request of your unhappy brother, who warmly loved you."

HAIR TURNED WHITE.

Miss Jennie Mackenzie, of Toronto Presents a Scientific Puzzle.

Toronto World: The struggle for life engaged in by Miss Jennie Mackenzie in the Bay Friday night, when her sister and Mrs. Becket were drowned, has turned a part of her dark hair white. The phenomenon is a scientific puzzle, since the change occurs in but a small strip of the young woman's hair. The white hair is confined to a line an inch wide down one side of her head.

There are authentic instances of the color of person's hair changing as a result of extremely narrow escapes from death, but there are said to be no cases recorded where the hair has changed color in a small line under such circumstances.

Miss Mackenzie has been in a highly nervous condition since her frantic efforts to escape while her sister was drowning by her side. She did not notice the white strip of hair until Sunday. Whether the change was sudden or gradual her friends cannot determine. The young woman is still ill as a result of her frightful experience.

Physicians attribute a physical change of this kind to the sudden fright driving the blood from the heart and causing slight paralysis of a part of the scalp, resulting in white hair, though the exact physiological explanation has been the source of much scientific dispute.

The Taglische Rundschau reports that the Czar of Russia is seriously considering an alteration in the law of succession with the view to enabling his eldest daughter to ascend the Russian throne, failing a son. He has directed several educational experts to elaborate a scheme of instruction with the object of preparing his daughter for the duties of a ruler. The project will inevitably meet with strong opposition, and especially from the disinherited grand dukes.

"JOE'S" BOLD STAND

COLONIAL SECRETARY IS CRITICIZED.

Says He Believes in a Reconsideration of the Fiscal System of Great Britain in the Interests of the Empire—Would Help Canada Against Germany.

A London cable of May 29 says:—The House of Commons adjourned yesterday after an important debate in the evening. It was short and incisive but the effects of the speeches of the prime minister and Chamberlain were felt to be far reaching. Sir Charles Dilke, in demanding explanations of the policy of the government respecting a revising of the fiscal system was businesslike and direct. He was forcible without being needlessly argumentative in condemning the taxation of raw material and food products and closed in a declaration that Chamberlain had proposed a policy which had not been thoroughly thought out. Premier Balfour evidently spoke after careful preparation, choosing his phrases deliberately and plainly indicating, except at a single point, that he had been in close consultation with Chamberlain. The point of divergence was one of the utmost importance. The prime minister declared that it would not be wise to impose taxes on food in any circumstances, and Chamberlain subsequently asserted that raw materials ought not to be taxed and consequently that duties would have to be levied on imported food. This divergence of views was an emphatic proof of Dilke's confession that the ministers had not thoroughly digested Chamberlain's proposals. The prime minister defended Chamberlain's conduct in reasoning that the question of preferential tariffs was necessary in consequence of the recent conference of the colonial premiers. He discussed the altered condition of British free trade and the colonial policy in the spirit of the Birmingham speech, and denied that there was any contradiction between his own views and those of his colleague.

Chamberlain speedily convinced the house that he was terribly in earnest and bent upon making fiscal revision an issue at the next general election. It was common comment in the galleries and subsequently in political clubs that he had burned the bridges behind him. His voice rang out with all its old time fervor when he declared that unity and defence of the empire could not be brought about without a reconsideration of the fiscal system. With reference to preferential trade and the assaults upon the colonies similar to Germany's reprisals against Canada he made it clear that he intended to press the subject with all the vigor and influence he possessed, and also that he could not be forced to disclose his precise plan of tariff revision until there had been a general election and a direct mandate had been received. Chamberlain's speech was delivered with earnestness and was greeted with applause by a section of the government's supporters, but approval was by means universal.

There was general comment that while he dragged Premier Balfour well along with him the cabinet was divided on the subject, and the party is dismayed by the prospect of a wide breach in its ranks. The situation is compared to that of the Liberal party when Gladstone was converted to Home Rule and sought to carry all his followers with him without providing the details of a definite scheme for the legislative autonomy of Ireland. Chamberlain, like Gladstone, insists upon having a general mandate from the electorate, and the policy which he favors unites the Liberal opposition and divides his own party. Chamberlain, like Gladstone, is a statesman, with unique personality and influence, and is apparently fully convinced that a new policy is imperatively required in the best interests of the empire.

HIGH-HANDED ACTION.

London Times' Correspondent at St. Petersburg Ordered to Leave Russia.

The London Times announces the receipt of a telegram from its St. Petersburg correspondent stating that he had been ordered by the Russian government to leave Russian territory. The order as originally signified to him was that he was to leave St. Petersburg Thursday, but by the good offices of the British ambassador he has been allowed three days' grace to make domestic arrangements before leaving.

The Times, commenting editorially upon the incident, says: "Until we possess more detailed information it is impossible to comment adequately upon the remarkable measure unprecedented within our experience, or even to speculate upon the causes to which it is due. We feel very confident that our correspondent will not be found to have given the slightest justification for the harsh treatment dealt out to him. He has displayed conspicuous judgment and moderation in the discharge of his responsible duties. If there has been any features in Russia's domestic policy which it was impossible for any foreign observer in his position to either overlook or minimize he has but shared the misgivings felt by not a few of the thoughtful and patriotic Russians themselves."

ADDS THREE ISLANDS.

Great Britain Extends Her Sphere in Southern Waters.

A dispatch from Tahiti says: Information received on the best authority confirms the rumor that three small islands near Pitcairn were seized by Britain recently.

It appears they were regarded by the British consul at Tahiti as valuable, anticipating the completion of the Panama canal. The British foreign office approved the seizure.

Pitcairn island, which has been a British possession for some years, is situated in the Pacific ocean between Australia and South America. It measures 2½ miles by 1 mile. It was discovered by Carteret in 1767, and was at that time uninhabited, although there was unmistakable evidence that it had been inhabited at one time.

In 1790 it was taken possession of by nine of the mutineers of H. M. S. Bounty, with six Tahitian men and a dozen women, the ringleader being called Christian. Four years later the native men murdered all the Englishmen except Alexander Smith, who afterwards assumed the name of John Adams. Thereupon, the women, in revenge, murdered all the Tahitian men. According to another account, the white men and the Tahitians murdered each other at intervals, until only two Englishmen were left alive. Certain it is that at the end of ten years John Adams was left alone, with eight or nine women and several children, and from them the present inhabitants are descended. Adams, changed by these tragic adventures and sobered by his responsibilities, set about the education of his companions in Christian principles.

The little colony was unknown to the world until 1808, when it was 'discovered' by Captain Folger of the American sealing ship Topaz. The first British vessel to visit it did not arrive until 1814. The islanders were visited again in 1825 and 1830, and in 1831, as their numbers had rapidly increased, they were, at their own request, removed to Tahiti by the British government. But disgusted by the immorality and other undesirable customs of their Tahitian relatives, the most of them went back to Pitcairn island after about nine months, in a vessel chartered by themselves.

The island was annexed to Britain in 1839. Nearly 200 of the islanders were transferred to Norfolk island in 1856, but a number of them afterwards returned.

Pitcairn island enjoys a lovely climate; its mountainous surface reaches an altitude of 1,008 feet, in Outlook ridge. The soil is fertile, and produces yams, cocoanuts, breadfruit, sweet potatoes and bananas. The people bear a high character for virtue, contentedness and uprightness, and choose their own pastor and magistrate.

The Fernie Free Press

ESTABLISHED 1898.

H. G. WATSON, Editor. J. R. WALLACE, Manager

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE BRITISH COLUMB

SATURDAY, JUNE 6, 1903.

A NEW GOVERMENT.

As far as is known at the present time Prior is dismissed and his successor has formed a government composed entirely of conservatives. Joe Martin has resigned his position as leader of the liberal party in British Columbia. The FREE PRESS has made several attempts to secure telegraphic news of the recent developments at Victoria but up to the time of going to press the expected reports, for unknown reasons, have failed to arrive.

Col. Prior was dismissed on the grounds of irregularity in connection with the Chimney Creek cable contract, though no direct fraud was associated with the deal. His Honor followed the regular course of calling upon the opposition, despite the fact that a vote of confidence in him had just been passed by the house. Mr. McBride has succeeded in completing his slate on a straight conservative government as follows:—

Premier McBride, Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works.

R. G. Tatlow, of Wancouver, Finance Minister.

Chas. Wilson, conservative leader in B. C., attorney-general.

R. F. Green, of Laslo, Minister of Mines.

J. F. Fulton, Provincial Secretary.

A. E. McPhillips, of Victoria, President of Council.

At last the liberals have evidently grasped the fact that they must unite on a leader and there is no doubt that Mr. Martin's resignation is the result of a request from his party to give up his long and unsuccessful struggle to gain complete leadership of his party in this province

A NEEDED REFORM

The police of our town have at different times recently made raids upon the houses of ill-fame with the object of securing male frequenters who make a practice of living there part or all their time at the expense of their female friends. These raids have been met with more or less success and fines have been imposed upon the offenders. The police inform us this week that many old offenders are still in the town and that they are determined to take more drastic measures to get rid of them. Our co-operation has been asked in this matter not only by the police but by other prominent and respected citizens of the town, and it is granted without hesitation.

The FREE PRESS is opposed to this class of men both from moral and economic principles and it assures the police of its heartiest support in their work of reform by ridding the town of this blighting pest. There is no class for whom we have less respect. A man who lives upon the profits of prostitution is entirely unworthy the name of man; he is devoid of all manly instincts and ambitions; he has lost all traces of honor and self respect and he is a menace to society, with which he attempts to mingle. Such people are of no benefit to a town, they are mere parasites of society and a curse to humanity. Men of this stamp have no respect for law and justice and it is a popular theory that many of them would be serving long sentences in prison cells under more serious charges could crime always be traced to its real source.

We believe that a small fine is not sufficient punishment for such offenders. Nothing less than a lengthy imprisonment will meet the requirements of their cases. In the great majority of cases the guilty party secures his release at the expense of the same person that had previously been supplying him with the means of supporting his unworthy life, thus making greater the offence of which he had been proved guilty. All citizens who are interested in the physical and moral advancement of this town will give this worthy movement their sympathy and practical support.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Cranbrook Herald goes one better this week in referring to its long and frequent lists of "candidates" in this constituency for the next general election as "political news." According to this we would like to have the contract for printing the ballot papers.

A general election is in sight!

* * *

It will be on party lines this time!

* * *

It is time that the Fernie political associations waken up!

* * *

It is now certain that a general election will be held early in the fall and that it will be run on party lines. At last the political atmosphere is beginning to clear and there appears to be some hope that the affairs of this unfortunate province will be placed in the hands of a responsible party which will have the endorsement of the majority of the electors of the province. The time is short for the complete adoption of party lines throughout the province and the political organizations in every constituency should grapple with the task without delay. In Fernie the subject is practically dormant beyond the casual street discussion. It is of the utmost importance that the work of selecting standard bearers be commenced at once so that no unnecessary hurry will be experienced, for, to adapt the well known proverb, "to choose in haste is to repent at leisure." The present opportunity of securing a party government has long been looked for, and it is the duty of each constituency to further increase the present advantages by selecting the very best men as candidates for election.

* * *

Not until we have a live progressive government at Victoria will the meritorious requests of this district be given due attention. That is all we require, for a government that is a government will readily recognize the justice of all demands from this long suffering people of Fernie. We do not ask for the full return of our government revenue in public improvements but there is every reason for charging the government with shameful neglect when it is considered that less than 10 per cent of the revenue supplied from this district is returned for the purpose of opening up this young and mountainous district, which is known to be richer in timber and mineral resources than any other part of the Dominion. Under the present and past administrations in this province it is, and has been, considered necessary to have a "pull" at Victoria to secure a grant for any needed public works; and some constituencies have had such strong and long "pulls" that all kinds of government expenditure have been heaped upon them, whether needed or not. With a strong progressive government in charge of this province, a government that has at heart the general interests of the whole of British Columbia and the rapid development of her magnificent resources, all these things will change. Under such conditions it will not be necessary to have a "pull" which is but a hazy synonym for bribery and corruption in order that this district lying in the extreme corner of the Province, may get its just share of government aid.

* * *

Again, for the third time, has the high water carried away the bridge of the Fernie Lumber Co. The company has been to great expense in erecting these structures across the river by which they might connect their timber limits with their mill. It is high time that the government was taking a hand in that matter by building a bridge that will not float away every time the river fills up with the spring floods. There are many others interested in timber limits on the west side of the river in that vicinity and a permanent government bridge at that point would be of immense advantage not only to the company operating there but to all others interested in similar claims. Then, again, the government should remember that whatever they do towards fostering an industry employing a large number of men is a direct benefit to the immediate vicinity, and the province at large reaps other advantages in an indirect way. The matter was urgently represented to the government last fall in a large petition but it evidently went the way of all similar documents from South East Kootenay—to the pigeon hole.

* * *

Again the spring floods are here and again are the people of the valley subject to the usual inconveniences caused by washouts along the line. The policy of the C. P. R. in erecting their bridges along this line does not appear to have been guided by careful judgement. Bridge after bridge is swept away each year and the improvements which experience, if nothing else, show to be necessary to cope with the mountain freshets of this variable mountain climate are slow in making their appearance. Were the entire loss, consequent on these wash outs, born by the railway company it would ill become us to raise the question of responsibility but unfortunately all the people along the entire line suffer more or less loss and personal inconvenience through the tie-up of the only means of communication we have with the outside world. It is a matter of congratulation that the bridge over Coal Creek which gave the C. P. R. so much trouble last year has been put on a solid concrete foundation which will stand all the force of the mightiest freshets for ages to come. Had such foundations been put in under all the bridges, instead of the treacherous wooden piers, no doubt many of the present and past troubles would not have occurred,

What the people of British Columbia want to do, is to stop quarrelling over the subject of leaders and get down to business on political principles. To hear some people talk one might be impressed with the idea that political principles counted for naught, and that it was simply a question to boost into position of prominence and power some certain individual. British Columbia needs measures more than leaders. Cut out personalities and get down to business. Then select the right men to properly represent the policy promulgated.—Cranbrook Herald.

Tennis in Fernie.

The tennis Club, which organized early in the season, have been making arrangements to secure suitable grounds on which to have their tennis courts built. These arrangements have been completed and the work of preparing the courts have been commenced. The large and level grounds on the rear end of Mr. Stork's large lot have been leased for this purpose. This is by far the largest lot in town and no difficulty will be met in getting sufficient space for two or even three courts. The club expect to be down to business at an early date. The membership is in no sense exclusive and the officers wish it to be understood that all who wish to join the club will be welcome. A private tennis club has also been formed and a court has been erected in the park overlooking the Elk.

On Thursday last two men from the neighborhood of Pincher Creek, named Pike and Brouellette, who were on their way to the Circle ranche, undertook to cross Old Man river at Kipp. The water was high and running fast and the men were advised not to attempt the crossing. They unheeded the advice, however, and trouble arose, for when some distance from shore a pack-horse led by Pike caused a mix-up. Both horses floundered around and the rider was swept out of the saddle and carried down stream. Men on the bank saw the accident but could render no aid, and after a short time the drowning man was seen to throw up a hand and disappear. The man Broullette got ashore as did the horses. Taking the pack horse he at once lit out for the U. S. but was stopped at the boundary and taken to Lethbridge, where he will be asked to explain his reasons for making off with another man's horse. The body of the unfortunate man has not been found.—Macleod Advance.

City Clerg, Nanaimo, B. C.

Dear Sir:

Nothing Like Experience.

"One truth learned by actual experience does more good than ten experiences one hears about." Tell a man that Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy will cure cholera morbus, and he will most likely forget it before the end of the day. Let him have a severe attack of that disease, feel that he is about to die, use this remedy, and learn from his own experience how quickly it gives relief, and he will remember it all his life. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

Too Great a Risk.

In almost every neighborhood some one has died from an attack of colic or cholera morbus, often before medicine could be procured or a physician summoned. A reliable remedy for theses disease should be kept at hand. The rish is too great for anyone to take. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy has undoubtedly saved the lives of more people and relieved more pain and suffering than any other medicine in use. It can always be depended upon. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

A bush fire in the north end of the townsite on Monday afternoon threatened to get beyond control. Some smouldering embers of an old fire were revived by the fresh breeze which was blowing and soon a large area in close proximity to the Fernie Manufacturing Co.'s building was covered by the fire. The carpenters at work on these buildings and others near at hand were unable to put out the flames and reinforcements from the town, among whom were several members of the Fernie Fire Brigade, went down, and by their united efforts the fire was prevented from spreading farther. Had the wind blown from the west the factory would have had a close call.

The experience which Rev. R. F. Stillman and party are having this week in getting to their destination, Rossland, is is an illustration of the erratic state of transportation facilities on the Crow line. This party left on Wednesday's west bound train. The wash-out at Moyie occurred before the train got past and on Thursday evening they were sent east to be taken around by Calgary. In the meantime a blockade occurred on the mainline and the company sent them back this morning over the Crow line which is said to be open for traffic again.

A Chinaman Held Up.

Late Saturday night a Chinaman was held up by four men on the railway track near the power house. The celestial was roughly treated, being knocked down by a blow from the fist of one of his assailants. He was insensible for a time and when he was recovered sufficiently he found that he was minus $59 which he carried in his pants pocket. A coat pocket was also torn from him. A man named Lawrence who brought the Chinaman in from Vancouver to work on the coke ovens saw from a distance the blow struck. As usual the thugs got off without leaving any clues behind them. The matter was promptly reported to the police.

R. W. Coulthard was held up one dark night recently. He was on his way over to the coke ovens to attend the overseeing of the work there about 12 o'clock at night. When near the power house he distinguished a dark object looming up before him which turned out to be a man. Mr. Couldhard stepped to one side to pass the stranger, but the stranger stepped to the same side and obstructed his way, at the same time demanding in broken English, "where you going!" Upon being informed that it was none of his business he exclaimed, "you go no further." The would-be highwayman was about to raise his arm to emphasise his threat, but his supposed victim was too swift for him, for with two swift, and by no means gentle blows Mr. Coulthard sent the man sprauling into the ditch and the former went on his way none the worse for his experience excepting a little skin barked off his knuckles.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. HEIMBURG.

"Lucie," she said, and knelt down by her, "Wilken is to be married in a few days, here in Dresden; the wedding breakfast is to be in this hotel. You can not leave me alone, you can not!" She had buried her face in the girl's lap, her whole body shook. "You do not know," she murmured, "you do not know how I feel!"

"Come with me, Hortense," said Lucie, much moved, as she leaned over her and smoothed her hair. "There is a nice room in the Oberforsterei; it is so quiet and homelike there that it will do you good. You must not—you can not stay here."

Hortense sprung up.

"I will not go. Will you never understand me? Well, go, then, and leave me alone, on this hardest day of my life, and let what may happen."

"Stop, Hortense!" cried the girl, alarmed. "I will stay with you!"

She felt thoroughly frightened; she knew those drawn lips, those large, staring eyes; she seemed to smell again that dreadful odor of chloroform. Hortense came back to her, and threw herself on her neck.

"You would not go away and leave me—you could not!" she cried. And as the girl remained silent she talked eagerly, drawing her down upon her lap. "Now, suppose you were married and had a sick child—then you would not go to your sister, even if the danger were ten times greater. Think that I am your child, Lucie. Don't desert me; we are nearer to each other than to any one in the world. You know it is so. And is not a mental illness just as bad as a physical one? And would you want to leave me just in this crisis?"

It sounded so pathetic.

Lucie laid her head on the shoulder of the young baroness.

"Forgive me," she said, sobbing, "and promise me—"

"We will leave this in a week, my darling, I promise. I will take you to your sister myself." She kissed the girl on the brow. "My good angel!" she said.

They did not sleep that night, and both looked pale and exhausted when they met at breakfast the next morning. Lucie wrote to her sister, but she could not say what she wanted to, for if she had given utterance to her anxiety she would have said to herself, "And you remain here?"

She forced hers?lf to appear calm, but in reality her apprehensions almost broke her heart. When the letter was finished, it was a curious piece of writing; it was full of unfinished sentences. Only at the conclusion she wrote.

"I hope to be with you, D. V., in a week."

CHAPTER XVII.

Hortense now began to live in a whirl; she appeared to care for nothing but amusement. Drives, visits, the theatre followed each other in quick succession. One of her school friends in Dresden had married an officer, another the owner of a large estate in the neighborhood, and she now did what she never formerly cared to do—in fact, had carefully avoided—she sought the society of ladies. She became a leader in everything; she would propose a dinner on the terrace, or an excursion by water to Pillintz. After the theatre there would be a merry gathering in the salon of the hotel, invited by Hortense, and she would laugh and talk and appear to be the merriest of all.

Waldemar Weber managed to be one of this gay throng. Lucie did not know whether Hortense had encouraged him, or whether he had contrived himself to be one of them; at all events he was always there, sitting quietly in his chair, and talking in his deep voice, the first sound of which seemed to rivet attention—to the men about horses and hunting, and to the ladies of the delicate porcelain treasures made in a Thuringian porcelain factory, specimens of which he promised to send them for their etageres.

Lucie was very quiet. She kept asking herself what Hortense meant; but she found no answer.

On the eve of Wilken's wedding-day Hortense remained at home. She had declined an invitation to an excursion to the fortifications under the plea of a headache. She lay on the sofa in her darkened room with closed eyes and a pale face.

"Hortense," said Lucie, sympathetically, and smoothing her pale cheeks, "if I only knew why you so deliberately make yourself ill!"

Hortense pressed the girl's soft hand, but did not answer.

Bothersome.

It always bothers a Frenchman who is learning English to read one day that a murder has been committed and the next day that the murderer has been committed.

The Occidental Amethyst.

The occidental amethyst is a species of quartz, bluish purple in color, generally occurring crystallized in hexahedral prisms terminated by corresponding pyramids. Its fracture is conchoidal or splintery. Its color is due to the oxide of manganese or to iron and soda.

A Mighty Man In Thessalia.

Polydamus of Thessalia, an old time Samson, was almost the equal of Milo, both in prodigious feats of strength and enormous appetite. One day (so it is recorded) he seized a bull by its hind feet. The enraged animal finally managed to escape, but is said to have left both hoofs in the athlete's hands.

Houses In Berlin.

Berlin has 229,000 residences with one room that can be heated, but in 170,000 of these cases this one room is the kitchen.

CABLE GOSSIP.

Duke of Connaught is Named as the Successor to Lord Roberts.

London cable of May 31 says:—Ministers are not engrossed with the tariff issue to the exclusion of other vexatious questions. The King is reported to be anxious to place the Duke of Connaught in line for succession to Lord Roberts as commander in chief. This was the ardent wish of the late Queen Victoria, and her son has taken it up with characteristic tact. The ministers are urged to consent to appoint the duke as adjutant-general, but are reluctant to do so, because they know how unpopular it will be in the House of Commons.

The duke himself is respected and honored as a capable soldier, and a prince of genuine administrative ability, but his appointment as adjutant general with a line upon the succession to the general in command of the army is deprecated on both sides of the house on the ground that a discussion of military affairs would be rendered impracticable at a time when radical reform measures are urgently required.

Mr. Seddon's scheme to open a number of butcher shops in Britain to push the sale of New Zealand meat excites much criticism here. New Zealand now supplies half the British meat imports, and the mutton trade is constantly increasing. Why, then, critics ask, is state aid needed? Is New Zealand beef not of a sufficiently good quality to command a big sale here? Frozen beef cannot compare with chilled which is not imported from New Zealand owing to the length of time required for the voyage.

It is noted that a certain proportion of the £40,000,000 sterling which New Zealand borrowed at various times has been subscribed partly by butchers, who are now in the unfortunate position that their own money may be employed in an unfair competition in their own business.

Mr. Seddon's scheme has given a fresh impetus to the project of the Canadian Produce company. The promoters hope to have the scheme in readiness by autumn. It is proposed to open one Canadian depot in every district in London and 150 more at provincial points. The prices will be appreciably less than those now charged.

An Ideal Advertisement.

One of the best, as well as one that will attract a great deal of attention to the growing importance of Winnipeg as the commercial metropolis of Western Canada, was the illustrated edition issued by the Winnipeg Telegram, Saturday, May 30. This splendid issue, finely illustrated and well written, goes to show that the city authorities need not go away from home to spend their money for write-ups and advertising. That the press of their own city, the foremost of all Canada, is amply able to handle this proposition in a satisfactory manner, is convincingly evidenced by this elegant and valuable edition of the Telegram.

Dry in New Brunswick.

New Brunswick farmers are now beginning to cry out about the need of rain, and conditions are getting serious. There have not been any showers since seeding commenced and from everywhere over the province comes stories of danger to crops. A day or two of rain very soon might yet make things all right, however.

Other serious conditions arising from the lack of rain is the hang-up of logs and the havoc being wrought by forest fires. Fully one-third of the St. John river lumber cut is tied up, meaning a loss to lumber men and mill men of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Forest fires are burning everywhere in the province, in some sections over land previously burned, and in others in valuable timber. Thousands upon thousands of dollars worth of timber is being destroyed and in several places fires have swept away dwellings.

Thousands Homeless.

Unprecedented floods have been raging in central and eastern Kansas, northwestern Missouri, eastern Nebraska and northwestern Iowa, the result of ten days of almost continuous railfall. The general situation is considered most grave, with no immediate relief in sight. Many lives have been lost and it is estimated that no less than 25,000 persons have been driven from their homes, many of which were washed away. The property loss will run well up into the millions of dollars.

Death Sentence for a Woman.

Monticello, N. Y., May 31.—Mrs. Taylor was sentenced to the death penalty and her execution set for the first week of July at Dannemora prison. In pronouncing sentence, Judge Howard said: "You have had a fair and impartial trial, and this jury could not possible return any other verdict." Mrs. Taylor shuddered compressed her lips and turned pale as she sat down. When asked if she had anything to say why sentence should not be passed she said: "I am innocent; I am not guilty." A new trial will be applied for.

SWEPT BY TORNADO

ONTARIO FARMERS SUFFER GREAT LOSSES.

Strip of Country Four Miles in Length Visited by a Land Hurricane—Barns Wrecked and Orchards Damaged.—Only One Serious Injury Reported.

On May 27, during a severe thunder storm in Mornington township, Ont., a whirlwind swept through a strip of country about four miles long by from twenty to forty rods wide, levelling everything in its path. Fortunately only one case of serious injury is reported.

The storm started at Carson's, seventh concession of Mornington, and smashed his silo. It destroyed every tree in Solomon Kopffer's bush, snapping and smashing large elm trees like pipestems. It demolished Arthur Dowd's large barn, leaving not a board standing above the foundation. Dowd's frame house was not in the direct path of the storm, but it was shifted eight feet. Dowd and his sister were inside, but were not seriously hurt. A brick school house on the 100th concession was completely wrecked and brick and timber hurled for half a mile. Had the storm been an hour earlier, before the children were dismissed, many of them most certainly would have been killed.

Janitor James Hastings and his little daughter were in the school. They heard the storm and rushed to the basement, their place of refuge being the only part of it where they could have gone and not have been killed.

Levy Watson's barn was next in the path and no particle of it was left standing, and every tree in the orchard was blown down. The storm then crossed to Ben Johnson's on the side road, and wrecked part of his house and orchard.

John Gamble and his wife and son heard the terrible roar of the storm and saw it coming, carrying debris whirling in the air and making for their house. They ran for a field, but only got a few feet away when they were caught and tossed about like feathers. They fell and lay prone on the ground. Mrs. Gamble was struck by a falling piece of timber and her spine was seriously injured, while the son received a nasty scalp wound. Mrs. Gamble is well up in years, and it is feared will have a hard time of it.

Damage was also done to the buildings of Alex. Twinge and John Martin, but the strength of the storm was checked by this time. The loss will be a serious one to the farmers. Not only buildings and trees, but fences, telegraph poles, and everything in the track of the storm were torn up and hurled about in the greatest confusion. Gamble's barn was unroofed and a buggy picked off the floor and carried over the place and hurled forty rods away, while part of it was carried over a mile. The district is well settled, and a fine farming section, and it is almost miraculous that no less of life occurred.

Elora, Ont., May 27.—Between 5 and 6 o'clock a cyclone passed over about three miles northwest of this town and in its course unroofed part of the barn of Charles Hayes, carrying it sixty yards and depositing it by the house. Scantlings and pieces of lumber were scattered like feathers, windows broken, and many trees in the path of the storm were snapped off.

The same tornado passed through the district about half a mile south of Amherstburg. William Lepain's drive-shed and implement sheds with their contents were demolished. A corn crib containing several hundred bushels of corn were hurled over and over and scattered about the ground. John Gould's new barn, and David Hall's dwelling were both destroyed. John Gould and his brother had narrow escapes. The brother was carried several yards by the wind. Mrs. Hall and her children ran out into the fields and escaped uninjured.

TOWN SWALLOWED UP.

Two Thousand Lives Lost in An Earthquake in Asiatic Turkey.

Advices from Asiatic Turkey show that a terrible earthquake occurred April 29 at Melazgherd, in the Vilayet of Van, 80 miles southeast of Erzeroom, on the Euphrates.

The town was totally destroyed, with its entire population, numbering 2,000 souls, including 700 Armenians, as well as the troops forming the garrison of Melazgherd. In addition, over 400 houses in the neighboring villages collapsed.

The town of Melazgherd consisted of 500 houses. Colonel Khalil Bey, commanding the garrison of Melazgherd, with his whole family, three other officers and eighty soldiers, perished in the ruins. Lieut.-Colonel Tayib Bey, whose family perished, became insane.

A 13-year-old daughter of Henry Whalen, living three miles from Collingwood, left her home on the morning of May 27 for school, some two miles distant. Nothing more was seen of her until the following morning, when her body was found in the woods by a party which had hunted all through the night. The child was blindfolded, but whether she had been maltreated or not could not be learned. There is no clue as to the child's murderer.

A cable from Posen, Prussia, says: The Posener Tageblatt publishes a report that a ferry boat having on board forty-five children, capsized on the river Warthe, near Dembro. The ferryman and twenty of the children, the paper says, were drowned.

SUN DANCES STOPPED.

Indians Summarily Dealt With for Attempting Heathen Practices.

A Dispatch from Regina says: Considerable annoyance to the officials has been recently caused on the eight Indian reserves presided over by Mr. W. M. Graham, agent on the reserves comprised in the File Hills agency. Since the passing of the act about two years ago forbidding sun dances, give-away dances and the like, there was no attempt to evade the law until last March, when a sort of agitator among the Indians arrived at Piapot's reserve and sought to defy the law by an adroitly chosen technical point. He started "circle dances," at which nothing was given away but a supper. The first one was given on March 14th and was quickly followed by a series of others of a similar kind, at which the Indians appeared in all their paint and the squaws in all their finery. The matter was getting serious, Mr. Graham caught the alarm and took proceedings against Etchease, the man who had started the dances, charging him with a breach of the Indian act.

At the preliminary hearing there was no dispute on the facts and the only point was whether giving a supper was a "giving away of goods" within the act. The magistrate decided to send the case for trial and Etchease was duly charged before Judge Richardson and a jury. The accused was found guilty and sentenced to three months' imprisonment.

Another Indian named Shave Tail, who had followed the example set by Etchease and organized a dance so recently as the 16th of this month, was charged with enticing Indians to a dance and was also found guilty, but was recommended to mercy and was liberated after a severe reprimand by the judge.

U. S. Arming Against Canada.

Admiral Dewey, as president of the general board, has made a report to Secretary Moody, of the United States navy, recommending the immediate establishment of a coaling station at Dutch Harbor, Alaska, and the erection there of a coal depot with an initial capacity of five thousand tons. The estimated cost of the work is $51,000. The president has approved the plan and preliminary steps in the work have been taken already.

Rear Admiral Bradford, in his report recommending this new coaling station, said: "Attention is also invited to the present great political question of the day, viz., the settlement of the boundary between the Territory of Alaska and the Dominion of Canada. There is abundant evidence going to show that the spirit of Canada on this matter may be considered as threatening. Between Alaska and the continental limits of the United States is located the domain of a foreign country. The territory separating Alaska has good harbors and ample interior waters, and this fact alone constitutes a great strategic advantage to a possible opponent. It certainly constitutes a strong reason why the sinews of war, whichever they may be, should be stored in Alaska."

Want Their Mayor Removed.

A dispatch from Columbus, Ohio, says: The new municipal code of Ohio gives the governor authority to remove mayors for cause, and the little village of Amesville, Athens county, desires to take advantage of the new law. At the last election the town chose for its chief executive the oddest piece of humanity that ever graced a mayor's chair in the Buckeye State. His name is Alonzo Weed and he came to Amesville from California about a year ago. He is 40 years of age, weighs 105 pounds and is but 49 inches high.

His election to the mayorsl?y w s the result of a joke, but now the good people of Amesville are of the unanimous opinior that the joke is on them. The village council, clerk, marshal and other representative citizens have filed with the governor sundry and serious charges against the midget. They recite that he is mentally incapable of performing the duties of office, that he is wholly illiterate, an habitual drunkard, unable to take care of his own property, is grossly immoral and that, in short, he came to the town a tramp or hobo and that he remains a tramp or hobo to the present day, notwithstanding his elevation to the position of chief citizen of the town.

Upon receipt of the charges Governor Nash, in accordance with the provisions of the municipal code, temporarily suspended Mayor Weed from office, and began a hearing of the charges. If the charges are sustained by the evidence the town of Amesville will soon have a new chief executive and the midget mayor will be obliged to look for another job.

THE GREAT DERBY

ROCKSAND WON, VINICIUS SECOND, FLOTSAM THIRD

King Edward and Queen Alexandra, Accompanied by a Number of the Royal Family, Were Present—Immense Crowds Witness the Race.

The result of the race for the Derby stakes (of 6,500 sovereigns, for three year-olds; about one mile and a half) at Epsom Downs on May 27, was that Sir J. Miller's Rock Sand won; Vinicius was second and Flotsam was third. Seven horses started.

King Edward and Queen Alexandra, accompanied by Princess Victoria, the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke of Cambridge, the Grand Duke Michael of Russia and the Duke and Duchess of Connaught took a special train to Epsom, and their example was followed by many thousands. The railroad stations were thronged throughout the morning by smartly dressed women and men. Altogether, upwards of one hundred special trains were dispatched from the London terminal, besides numerous ordinary trains.

Long before noon every vantage point along the course alotted to the general public was thronged by a motley multitude of spectators, peddlers, evangelists, bookmakers and musicians, while the enclosures were rapidly filling with a cosmopolitan crowd. There was an unusual gathering of visitors from the continent.

THE RACE OF THE WORLD.

Of all the racing events on the face of the globe there are none that can compare with the Derby, which is run on the downs of Epsom. In France, in Austria, in Hungary, Germany, Spain and Italy, and even in America the name of Derby has been applied to important race meetings of the year, but there is not one of them that can compare either in spectacular effect or in sportive interest to the grand old English Derby that was run for the first time officially in 1870, and which has taken place regularly ever since.

It is almost impossible for sportsmen on this side the water to understand the spirit of veneration that is inspired by the Derby in the heart of an Englishman, especially if he be the owner of a racing stable. Long ago it was said that the Prince of Wales would rather win a Derby than ascend the throne, and it is told of Lord Rosebery that when he was asked to name the three things which constituted the climax of his ambition he exclaimed: "To win the Derby, to become prime minister and to marry the richest woman in the world."

Whether the story be true or not Lord Rosebery has been quite successful in realizing his ambitions. He succeeded Gladstone as prime minister of the vast British empire and he married the richest of all the Rothschild heiresses and yet it is well known that fully as highly as either of these successes does he prize his winnings of the Derby.

A Novel Expedition.

Manila newspapers which have just reached the United States war department contain an interesting account of an expedition that has gone into Mindoro "ostensibly," one of the papers publishes it, "to explore the country," but in reality to search for a white colony which it has long been claimed lives in the interior of the island.

According to this account numerous statements have been made by reliable persons, most of whom are officers in the United States service, that the white colony exists, and they declare they have evidence to prove the same.

They are characterized further as a roving band which does not remain in one place.

The expedition is headed by Gov. Offly, and is accompanied by a detachment of constabulary.

A shocking accident occurred on May 27 at the Brandon Brewing company's works when Angus Munroe, who was visiting the brewery, fell into some machinery and was fatally injured. He was conveyed to the hospital, where it was found that every limb was broken and his lungs perforated in several places. Death relieved his sufferings about two hours after the accident.

An explosion of dynamite near Labelle, Que., on Tuesday resulted in J. Lawrence Sutherland, railway contractor of River John, N.S., and Frederick Migernon, boarding house keeper, being killed, and Mr. Michaud, of Labelle, seriously injured. Michaud was using a rod to force the dynamite down to the bottom of a 15-foot hole, in which the blast was. Migernon was blown 50 feet through the air, landing at his wife's feet.

A dispatch from Victoria, B.C., says: While shooting at Parksville on May 25 Richard Christmas was accidentally shot and killed by W. J. Walker mistaking him for a panther. The men, the best of friends, went out to hunt panthers, and separated. Walker heard a rustle among the bushes, and upon looking around saw an object which he at once took for a panther crouching between the logs. Without further hesitation he raised his rifle and fired. He was horror stricken upon investigation to find he had shot Christmas just above the heart.

HAMLETS OF ENGLAND.

The Unsettled Folk in English Villages—Their Wages and Perquisites.

News from the great, troublous world without takes a long while to reach our hamlet, or, at any rate, to impress itself upon the inhabitants. Hence the bulk of them know naught of the new Education act and the county rate, and so forth. I doubt, indeed, whether it will affect us much.

All told, the inhabitants, including the folk of the little beer-house up the winding lane and the Scotchman and his family at the sixteenth centurt farm, number about a hundred. Of these we can count just under forty adults, of whom eight cannot write or read their own names.

The shepherd, for instance, cannot, though he is only thirty-six, and does not therefore belong to a dark age in education matters.

The hamlet is, I should say, on the whole set in a fairly happy valley. There is nobody out of work with us, and some calculations we have been making tend to show that the folk are not so ill-off. I believe that the weekly wage of the men, taking the year through, and making allowance for the perquisites and presents they get, is equal to about nineteen or twenty shillings.

They pay the farmer or the squire a shilling a week for their cottages, whereas the rent would be half a crown if their landlords were small and eager capitalists. The dead dairyman gets sixteen shillings a week, with a quart of milk every day, the under-dairymen get a shilling or so less, and also their quart of milk.

The shepherd has 16s., with 6d. for every lamb he tails—he has been very fortunate with his lambs this season, which, I hear, is not a universal experience. The carter has 15s., with 'waggon money,' i.e., so much for every waggon of farm produce that he takes to the nearest railway station, whence it is dispatched to the junction, and thence to the great city, of which he himself has only 'heard tell.'

Then there is the hiring money at Michaelmas, as much as £4 paid in a lump. At Christmas one of the farmers gave a couple of rabbits to every man who worked on the place; another always gives a joint of beef—the people look on a supper of beef and ham combined as the greatest treat possible, so far as eatables are concerned. Of course we must not forget that there are certain considerable expenses.

There is beer. Some of the men say that they could drink four and a half gallons 'of a hot day.' That is exaggeration. But ten or twelve glasses of beer are not out of the way, and sixteen not by any means out of the question.

By about the tenth glass they often get talkative, so an expert in the trade tells me. After, say, the twelfth they are apt to be rude in language. So, now that the licencing laws are becoming very strict, the sixteenth glass of beer is not often to be reached, save by a man of proved capacity to drink it and not be drunk.—Correspondence of London Express.

In the highly cultured city of Edinburgh, Scotland, there were 10,993 criminal convictions last year, of which 2,484 were against juvenile offenders. In addition to this number of children who were convicted outright 2,066 were arrested for various offences during the year and let off with warnings. And yet we are told that the Scottish educational system is the finest in the world. It seems incredible that such a percentage of a city's crime as this could be chargable to children who live under the best school system in the world.

An animated discussion has just taken place at the annual session of the Berlin synod, on the deterioration of morals in the German capital. Some of the speakers said the German capital had acquired an undesirable name, having outrivalled even Paris in its unblushing vice, and if the police were unable to suppress the ever-increasing immorality it became the duty of the church to endeavor to purify the homes of the people, the streets, theatres, literature and art, of unhealthy influences.

The egg packers of Canada are finding it difficult to do business in England at present prices. At a meeting of the Canadian Packers' association last week a proposition was made that members agree not to pay dealers more than 10½c a dozen for pickling eggs at the present time, with the expectation of a reduction to 9 and 10 cents within a short time. No definite arrangements, however, could be reached.

THE CAR SICK HORSE

HOW A RAILROAD JOURNEY AFFECTED A HIGH BRED HACKNEY.

Bonfire's Trip to the Horse Show and Why It Ended So Disastrously—Terrifying Ride In a Wheeled Box After a Hothouse Training.

The story of what happened to a high bred hackney when he was sent by rail to the Madison Square Garden horse show is told by Sewell Ford in "Horses Nine." Bonfire was the hackney's name, but he did not look at all fiery at the moment. The author says of him:

In his stomach was a queer feeling which he did not at all understand. In his head was a dizziness which made him wish that the stall would not move about so. Streaks of pain shot along his backbone and slid down his legs. Hot and cold flashes swept over his body, for Bonfire had a bad case of car sickness—a malady differing from seasickness largely in name only—also a well developed cold complicated by nervous indigestion.

Tuned to the key, he had left the home stables. Then they had led him into that box on wheels, and the trouble had begun. Men shouted; bells clanged; whistles shrieked. Bonfire felt the box start with a jerk and, thumping, rumbling, jolting, swaying, move somewhere off into the night.

In an agony of apprehension—neck stretched, eyes staring, ears pointed, nostrils quivering, legs stiffened—Bonfire waited for the end. But of end there seemed to be none. Shock after shock Bonfire withstood and still found himself waiting. What it all meant he could not guess. There were the other horses that had been taken with him into the box, some placidly munching hay, others looking curiously about. There were the familiar grooms who talked soothingly in his ear and patted his neck in vain. The terror of the thing, this being whirled noisily away in a box, had struck deep into Bonfire's brain, and he could not get it out. So he stood for many hours, neither eating nor sleeping, listening to the noises, feeling the motion and trembling as one with ague.

Of course it was absurd for Bonfire to go to pieces in that fashion. You can ship a Missouri Modoc around the world, and he will finish almost as sound as he started. But Bonfire had blood and breeding and a pedigree which went back to Lady Alice of Burn Brae, Yorkshire.

His coltdom had been a sort of hothouse existence, for Lochlynne, you know, is the toy of a Pennsylvania coal baron who breeds hackneys not for profit, but for the joy there is in it, just as other men grow orchids and build cup defenders. At the Lochlynne stables they turn on the steam heat in November. On rainy days you are exercised in a glass roofed tan bark ring, and hour after hour you are handled over deep straw to improve your action. You breathe outdoor air only in high fenced grass paddocks, around which you are driven in surcingle rig by a cockney groom imported with the pigskin saddles and British condition powders. From the day your name is written in the studbook until you leave you have balanced feed, all wool blankets, fly nettings and coddling that never ceases. Yet this is the method that rounds you into perfect hackney form.

All this had been done for Bonfire and with apparent success, but a few hours of railroad travel had left him with a set of nerves as tensely strung as those of a high school girl on graduation day. That is why a draft of cold air had chilled him to the bone; that is why, after reaching the Garden, he had gone as limp as a cut rose at a ball.

Recommend Baby's Own Tablets. "I would not be without them," is a very familiar sentence in their letters to us. The Tablets get this praise simply because no other medicine has ever done so much in relieving and curing the minor ills of infants and young children.

Mrs. Levi Perry, Roseway, N. S., says: "I take great pleasure in recommending Baby's Own Tablets for colic and constipation. I have never found anything to equal them for these troubles." Besides curing colic, constipation and indigestion, Baby's Own Tablets prevent croup, break up colds, expel worms, allay the irritation accompanying the cutting of teeth, sweeten the stomach and promote health-giving sleep. Guaranteed to contain neither opiates or other harmful drugs. Sold at 25 cents a box by all druggists or may be had by writing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

COULD NOT WALK.

A Young Lady Tells the Torture She Suffered from Rheumatism.

Miss Myrtle Major, Hartland, N. B., is one of the thousands who have proved that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will cure rheumatism. Miss Major says: I suffered from the trouble for nearly a year. I had the advice of a doctor and took his medicine, but it did not help me. The trouble was located chiefly in my ankles, and the pain I suffered at times was intense. As a matter of fact at times I was quite unable to walk across the room, and for some six months I was confined to the house. I used liniments and other medicines prescribed for rheumatism, but they did me no good. Then some of my friends urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I acted on their advice and before I had used three boxes I began to feel better. I took nine boxes of the pills altogether, and before I finished the last box not a trace of the trouble remained. It is now nearly two years since I took the pills and as there has not been a symptom of the trouble since it proves that the pills make permanent cures."

Rheumatism is a disease of the blood and can only be cured by treating it through the blood. That is why Dr. Williams' Pink Pills always cures this trouble. Good blood makes every organ in the body strong and healthy, and as every dose of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills make pure, rich blood, it follows that they cure such troubles as anaemia, neuralgia, indigestion, heart trouble, kidney ailments, erysipelas, the after effects of la grippe and fevers, etc. They also relieve and cure the ailments from which so many women constantly suffer. Deafness Cannot Be Cured by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed for ever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

THE INDIAN TRAPPER.

The Red Man Has a Keen Eye for the Beautiful in Nature—The Happy Hunting Grounds.

It is dawn when the Indian trapper leaves his lodge. In midwinter of the far north dawn comes late. Stars, which shine with a hard, clear, crystal radiance only seen in northern skies, pale in the gray morning gloom; and the sun comes over the horizon dim through mists of frost smoke. In an hour the frost mist, lying thick to the touch, like clouds of steam, will have cleared, and there will be nothing from sky line to sky line but blinding sunlight and snow-glare.

The Indian trapper must be far afield before midday. Then the sun casts no man-shadow to scare game from his snares. Black is the flag of betrayal in northern midwinter. It is by the big liquid eye, glistening on the snow like a black marble, that the trapper detects the white hare; and a jet tail-tip streaking over the white wastes in dots and dashes tells him the little ermine, whose coat must line some emperor's coronation robe, is alternately scudding over the drifts and diving below the snow with the forward wriggling of a snake under cover. But the moving man-shadow is bigger and plainer on the snow than the hare's eye or the ermine's jet tip; so the Indian trapper sets out in the gray darkness of morning and must reach his hunting grounds before high noon.

With long snow-shoes, that carry him over the drifts in swift, coasting strides, he swings out in that easy, ambling, Indian trot, which gives never a jar to the runner, nor rests long enough for the snows to crunch beneath his tread. The old musket, which he got in trade from the fur post, is over his shoulder, or swinging lightly in one hand. A hunter's knife and short-handled woodman's axe hang through the beaded scarf, belting in his loose, caribou capote. Powder-horn and heavy muskrat gauntlets are attached to the cord about his neck; so without losing either he can fight bare-handed, free and in motion, at a moment's notice. And somewhere, in side pockets or hanging down his back, is his skipertogan—a skin bag with amulet against evil, matches, touchwood, and a scrap of pemmican. As he grows hot, he throws back his hood, running bareheaded and loose about the chest.

Each breath clouds to frost against his face till hair and brows and lashes are fringed with frozen moisture. The white man would hugger his face up with scarf and collar the more for this; but the Indian knows better. Suddenly chilled breath would soak scarf and collar wet to his skin; and his face would be frozen before he could go five paces. But with dry skin and quickened blood he can defy the keenest cold; so he loosens his coat and runs the faster.

As the light grows, dim forms shape themselves in the gray haze. Cones and domes and cornices of snow heap the underbrush and spreading larch bows. Evergreens are edged with white. Naked trees stand like limned statuary with an antlered crest etched against the white glare. The snow stretches away in a sea of billowed, white drifts that seem to heave and fall to the motion of the runner, mounting and coasting and swimming over the unbroken waste like a bird winging the ocean. And against this endless stretch of drifts billowing away to a boundless circle, of which the man is the centre, his form is dwarfed out of all proportion, till he looks no larger than a bird above the sea.

When the sun rises, strange color effects are caused by the frost haze. Every shrub takes fire; for the ice drops are a prism, and the result is the same as if there had been a star shower or rainfall of brilliants. Does the Indian trapper see all this? The white man, with white man arrogance, doubts whether his tawny brother of the wilds sees the beauty about him, because the Indian has no white man's terms of expression. But ask the bronzed trapper the time of day, and he tells you by the length of shadow the sun casts, or the degree of light on the snow. Inquire the season of the year, and he knows by the slant sunlight coming up through the frost smoke of the southern horizon. And get him talking about his Happy Hunting grounds, and after he has filled it with the implemenats and creatures and people of the chase, he will describe it in the metaphor of what he has seen at sunrise and sunset under the Northern lights. He does not see these things with the gabbling exclamatories of a tourist. He sees them because they sink into his nature and become part of his mental furniture.

The most brilliant description the writer ever heard of the hereafter was from an old Cree squaw, toothless, wrinkled like leather, belted at the waist like a sack of wool, with hands of dried parchment and moccasins some five months too odoriferous. Her version ran that heaven would be full of music of running waters and south winds; that there would always be warm gold sunlight like a midsummer afternoon, with purple shadows, where tired women could rest; that the trees would be covered with blossoms, and all the pebbles of the shore like dewdrops.—Miss A. C. Laut, in "The Story of the Trapper."

Hungarian Grass.

If Hungarian grass were cut for hay as early as it should be—that is, in first blossom—it would be more highly regarded, for while it has not been ranked with hay made from the leguminous plants its analytical classification approaches so near to them that it is worth considering. Its habit of quick growth makes it especially valuable for planting after some earlier crop is removed.

Unless the land is very rich all these crops will manifest appreciation of an application of about 250 pounds acid phosphate, 40 pounds muriate of potash and 10 pounds nitrate of soda and heavy applications of the manure of tillage.—W. F. McSparran in Stockman and Farmer.

Near Glasgow, Scotland, an old-fashioned Newcomen engine has been at work at a mine continuously since 1809. It develops 27 horse-power.

As every Asthmatic knows all too well, attacks of asthma come on without warning, usually from two to three in the morning. I strongly advise an immediate investment of $1.25 in the three following remedies:—Dr. August Koenig's Hamburg Breast Tea, Dr. August Koenig's Hamburg Drops, and St. Jacobs Oil, from your druggist so as to have them in the house ready for use at once.

Treatment. Take Dr. August Koenig's Hamburg Breast Tea at night on going to bed, hot, and slowly. St. Jacobs Oil should be used as an outward application across the top portion of the chest, and on the throat, following the bronchial tubes or air passages. As the stomach is always more or less affected, and constitutes one of the indirect causes of asthma, Dr. August Koenig's Hamburg Drops should be taken regularly. The food of the asthmatic should be carefully considered. Take plain, nourishing food, avoid rich dishes or starchy foods, as potatoes, and white bread. Remember that from the food the blood is fed, and from the blood the tissues are formed. This should never be forgotten. The diet which I have advocated is the proper food for the blood of the Asthmatic who has a tendency to dyspepsia, constipation and nervousness. The blood is the life, and where it is debilitated it must be made rich and pure, hence I recommend Dr. August Koenig's Hamburg Drops, in conjunction with Hamburg Breast Tea and St. Jacobs Oil.

MORRISSEY

From The Despatch

Notices have been posted that all cars coming over the Great Northern must be cleaned at the junction before being taken to the mines. The Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co. will not permit Morrissey Mines to become a dumping ground for the Great Northern. This is a wise precaution and will do much to prevent the spread of disease at the camp above the townsite.

A meeting of the local Liberal Association took place on the 27th of May when a resolution was passed requesting the Provincial President to call a convention at Revelstoke on June 17th, for the purpose of discussing party lines. The officers of the local association are: Hon. Pres., Hon. C. Sifton; Pres. Dr. Willson; Vice-Pres. H. T. Martin; Executive :—T. R. Morton, J. Miller and W. J. Moore. The annual meeting will take place about the first of July.

On Monday last the Great Northern private car "Manitoba" came up from Jennings with several importantant officials on broad, among them being T. E. Ward, General Manager of the Western Division; G. Slade, Gen. Supt., and son-in-law of J. J. Hill; H. F. Kennedy, Div. Supt.; and A. Long, Supt. between Jennings and Morrissey. There was a lady in the party, Mrs. S. Ward, the mother of the Western manager.

The party who are paying a visit of inspection to all the branch lines of the Great Northern, spent about four hours at Morrissey Mines going through several of the underground workings.

An interesting social event took place at Trilby Cottage on Wednesday evening, when a number of the prominent ladies of the town gave a party in honor of Mr. Arthur Berridge, who leaves for Coal Creek in a few days. Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Willson, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Tranter, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Nunn, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Blundell, Misses Gourley, Nomeland, and Campbell, and Messrs. A. B. Trites, A. Berridge, C. H. Simmons, W. Avison, T. H. Huber, G. Wilison, W. Mitchell, C. Spence, H. Sinclser, R. H. Richardson The program for the evening was progressive pedro.

The foot-bridge at the Junction was washed away by the high water on Sunday night and traffic was carried on until yesterday by means of the large scow which Messrs. Foss & McDonnell had provided for such an emergency. But yesterday while making the trip with seven passengers and a cargo of beer, the cable broke and the scow was swept down the river. With a board and a piece of scantling which happened to be at hand the men paddled towards the shore, but their efforts were in vain for more then a mile until at last they approched near enough to jump into shallow water and wade out. The passengers were Messrs. G. O. Foss, A. McDonnell, K. Higbie, A. McCool, W. Russel, J. Nelson, D. J. Johnson and "Sailor Jack," and during the trip there were some very much frightened men among them. The cargo together with a watch belonging to A. McDonnell, were lost.

DROWNED AT MORRISSEY.

The junction was the scene of a terrible drowning affair on Monday of this week, when Peter Vincent, a shoemaker who has kept a little shop at the mines for several months, deliberately jumped into the Elk and attempted to swim across.

Vincent has been on the spree for a long time and was drunk at the time the event took place.

J. A. Gillis, Neil Gillis and Frank Carpenter, who were standing near the foot bridge which was washed out on Sunday night, noticed the unfortunate man walk out on the stump of the broken bridge and feel the water with his hand. He then deliberately removed all his clothes but his shirt and taking a short run leaped into the raging flood below.

The horrified spectators saw the man for a moment as he came up in the torrent and then he was swept down the river out of sight. Constable Tranter and a gang of men followed the river for many miles, but no trace of the body could be found.

A story to the effect that some of the spectrtors had urged the drauken victim to attempt to swim the river caused great indignation around town, but it is denied by those who were present.

Vincint is a bachelor, and no one seems to know anything adout his friends or relations. He has been in this part of country for a number of years, having had a shop in the old town at Fernie about three years ago.

GRAPHIC DISCRIPTION OF THE FRANK DISASTER.

(Written for The Herald by Mr. W. Blakemore, C. E., Montreal)

The alarmist reports which were flashed across the continent on the morning of April 30th, were generally regarded as a sensational exaggeratiun of anything that could really have taken place. I must freely confess that I was among those who thought seventy-five per cent was the product of someone's vivid imagination. I was wrong. Having gone over the ground, or rather the rocks. I can only charge against the early news, the fireworks, the volcano and the earthquake. The hideous catastrophe with its lose of nearly a hundred precious lives, the sweeping away as if they had never been, of houses, colliery, plant, machinery, cars, trees and railway track, the bnrying of two large ranches, the moving of the bed of a river nearly two miles, and the covering of a mile and a half square, or more than a thousand acres, with a rolling sea of rocks, towering in one place to a height of a hundred and fifty feet, and averaging over the whole area thirty feet, presents a picture before which the imagination fails and which the most vivacious and capable expert is impotent to describe.

From a gap in the side of Turtle Mountain, which looks ridicuously small as one gazes up at it, one hundred million tons of rock plunged at lightening speed across the valley and racing like the waves of the ocean, chased up the foothills on the other side, a distance of nearly two miles, to the height of five hundred feet, above the base of the mountain. The ground is not visible at one spot within this area. It is not a case of stray boulders, but of a solid overflow with the green grass below thirty, fifty, or a hundred feet. On the land covered by the white ocean of rock, a million people would live in London. or even in New York and the possible destruction of a city by a simple and natural process have never been more clearly demonstrated.

It seems to me that the dramatic interest of this unique disaster transcends that of any similar occurrence of which we know. Not more swift nor silent, was the inflow of the waves of the Red Sea on the Egyptian host. It was not like the engulfing of Pompeii, and all volcanic devastation, heralded by warning eruptions. Without warning and in a flash one of the everlasting hills which looked like a fortress behind the little town crumbled and spread itself as far as the eye could reach across the valley and then, except for an occasional falling boulder all was as still as before the catastrophe, which had crushed out a hundred lives and altered the whole aspect of the country.

One of the few actual spectators, and indeed the only one as far as I could learn was "Mormon Bill," a well known local character. Going out of the saloon at the early, or late hour of four a. m., Bill stood in the street a few minutes to cool off the effects of a night of poker. It was puite dark and chilly. Bill suddenly heard a crash, felt a rush of air passing him and could just discern what he thought looked like a cloud of white dust blowing to the north. In less than a minute all was still, not a cry nor a sound was heard and Bill pulled himself together and went to his shack to sleep the sleep of the just and unconscious. John Anderson, a pioneer of more methodical habits, had gone to bed at a respectable hour. At four o'clock he was awakened by hearing a sound like that of a terrific blast of wind. He jumped up, and rushed to the window and looked out to see, as he thought, a cloud of dust flying past his house. Soon all was quiet and he went back to bed and did not know until broad daylight that a veritiable cataclysm had only missed him by a few feet.

It is probable that not more than fifty or sixty people out of a population of seven hundred knew for hours after what had really happened. There was no shock and very little vibration outside the track of the slide, no fire, no smoke, no volcanic eruption, no earthquake and not a pane of glass broken in the whole of the town.

After the terrible devastation and loss of life one is impressed with the vagaries of the mighty force exerted. Between Mr. and Mrs. Leitch their babe lay sleeping. They were both crushed to death, the babe was flung from the bed and was found uninjured, behind a massive boulder. In an adjoining room four of their children were buried under a mass of rock, but beneath the roof beam two others were found unhurt.

In another cottage the father and mother were both killed, their babe was found in a bush outside without a mark. At a distance of half a mile from the town, whilst walking over the slide, Mr. W. W. Tuttle, of Fernie found the foot of a man, but the most diligent search failed to reveal anything more. A mile and a half from the base of the mountain I saw several large boulders one weighing not less than fifty tons which had been forced from the bed of the Old Man river and transported that distance. But a special edition wonld be required to detail the striking evidences of Titanic power exerted by this phenomenal occurrance. One can only begin to form some idea of its possiblilties by considering that the motive force consisted of a hundrrd million tons of rock falling in one huge body from a mountain nearly a mile high. Does the mathematician live who can compute the power exerted and the possible travel.

The central incident of human interest and one which will be remembered longest in conection with the Frank disaster is the escape of seventeen miners who were entombed in the colliery of the Canadian-American Coal Co. That they are not now sleeping their last long sleep in the deserted galleries is due to the moral courage and skill of one man, Dan Mackenzie. A Nova Scotian, tall, lean and strong—nearing forty, and most uncommon thing for a miner, wearing glasses, Dan looks the canny Scot he is. On the fateful morning he was working in an "upraise" three quarters of a mile from the mouth of the tunnel. A sudden rush of wind, followed by a shower of falling coal, which cut his head, told him something serious had happened. Waiting to collect the men who were at work on the shift, seventeen in all, he made his way towards the exit, only to find that the road had caved in "mountains high."

Retracing their steps Dan and two others climbed three hundred feet, up ladders in the man-way towards Nicholson's level, another possible outlet, only to be driven back by gas. There was nothing to do but return to the main entry and examine the "fall." One of the men, a driver, who had worked in the mine from the commencement and who declared that he knew every post in the road, said that the "fall" was three hundred feet from the mouth. If so their fate was sealed. With the water of the Old Man river flooding the lower entry and slowly but surely cutting off their faint supply of air, with the deadly explosive gas radidly filling the upper workings and backing down on them, and with a possible barrier of three hundred feet of fallen rock in front of them, were ever men in a more desperate condition? This was where McKenzie became their saviour and a hero. Cautiously keeping from the others a knowledge of the more serious facts which he alone had discovered he stimulated them to commence driving a small funnel in the fallen rock. In the face of untold difficulties, constantly falling rock and coal, insufficient light, unsuitable tools and a cramped position in which work was almost impossible, he persevered. One by one the others fell away, becoming first excited, then morose and at the last comatose, under the influence of the great strain and the rapidly diminishing oxygen. At last only three workers were left. Then a falling rock struck Mackenzie on the head and stunned him. Dissembling his injury as well as he could and with a loud ringing in his ears he kept at work with the two faithful ones, and when hope had almost fled pushed his pick through soft clay and gravel into daylight. An inrush of pure air soon revived the gang, and painfully crawling through the narrow tunnel and between the loose boulders which several times imprisoned them, they emerged into blessed daylight once more at six o'clock in the evening, fourteen hours after the accident. In the window of the Alberta Mercantile Company is a photograph of the seventeen rescued miners being escorted up the main street by the delighted remnant of their fellow townsmen. The point at which they escaped was one hundred and fifty feet inside the mouth of the main entry, having been swept away by the slide.

57,726 TONS IN MAY.

LARGEST MONTHLY RECORD OF THE C. N. P. COAL COMPANY.

Michel Still Forging Ahead—June Promises a Better Record.—Improvements at Morrissey.

The output of coal by the coal company during the month of May shows very satisfactory progress. The total for the three camps amounted to 57,726 tons or an increase of 3,126 tons over the previous record which was obtained in January 1903.

Coal Creek	17,796	tons.
Michel	24,849	"
Morrissey	15,081	"
Total	57,726	tons.

Several records for the daily output were established. On May 20th, 1268 tons were taken out at Michel, the record in previous months was 1,136 tons. At Coal Creek 923 tons were mined on Mry 30th, and on two other days 911 tons were taken out. At Morrissey 801 tons was the highest mark.

June promises to establish a record that will leave all other records far in the rear. The Company expect the figures to leap up to 75,000 for this month should no unforeseen delay or hindrance occur. During the part of the month already past Coal Creek has made a much better showing. On June 4th, 1035 tons was the output at this colliery and the average for all the other days is much higher than for May.

On June 10th, 3,131 tons of coal were taken out of the three collieries and Coal Creek mines contributed 1,138 tons on that day.

The demands of the C. P. R. are growing heavier. This month it is estimated that the railway company will require 15,000 tons of coal from the C.N.P. Coal Company.

COMMUNICATIONS.

To the Editor

In going through your paper of the 6th instant I happened to see a graphic description of the Frank disaster written for The Herald by Mr. W. Blakemore, C. E., Montreal, and I beg to contradict the statement that the escape of the 17 entombed miners was due to one man viz; Daniel Mackenzie. I will say however that he worked hard in conjunction with about ten others to drive the tunnel through to the outside which was not his idea only but that of every experienced miner inside which numbered I think about ten or twelve.

About the only persons to fall asleep and become excited were the Slavs, the white men or English speaking men worked hard one and all in conjunction with Mackenzie and freed themselves by their united efforts but not by the personal effort of Mr. Mackenzie. When daylight was discovered about six o'clock in the evening every man except the Slavs were working, some driving the tunnel, others sawing the timber while the rest were carrving timbers from the inside.

Fire Subscribers Read This.

The meeting called by the fire committee for Monday evening is an important one. The matter of fire protection has been worked up to the present state by dint of much perseverance and personal effort on the part of a few individuals. These men have done all they can do and it is now up to those who have subscribed so liberally to put their shoulders to the wheel and do their share, which in our opinion consists in paying up promptly what they have promised, and in showing their sympathy with the movement by being present on Monday evening. This meeting is the crucial point in the important movement and whether Fernie is to have a chemical engine, a fire hall and a well equipped brigade, or none of these, is to be decided at that time. Sufficient money has been promised to put the matter on a satisfactory feoting. The engine can be purchased on a three annual payment plan and no doubt similar arrangements can be made for a lot. In the meantime the town will certainly be incorporated, when all these liabilities will be taken over by the first council. Every subscriber of $10 or more is given a receipt for the purpose of ensuring his reimbursement when incorporation is effected. Prompt attention to this matter will give the town something like the adequate system it requires, while if the promised aid is not forthcoming by Monday evening there is a grave danger of the whole thing fizzling out for the sheer lack of funds, thus leaving the town at the mercy of the fire demon for another year, before the expiration of which time the whole town may be wiped out. Mr. Bentley at the Board of Trade meeting struck the nail on the head when he said that the main difficulty in matters of this nature was to make the start. Just as soon as the lot is purchased, the contract for the erection of a fire-hall is let and the chemical engine is on the way, enthusiasm will run at fever height. Let us make the start NOW.

SERIOUS FIRE IN WEST FERNIE.

150 Acres of Woods Burnt—Mill and Dwelling Property Endangered. Caused by Usual Carelessness.

A fire, which started up at noon on Thursday on the West Fernie townsite, caused much anxiety before it was controlled. It was caused by the carelessness of a man who was clearing a lot near the centre of the townsite. The fire got beyond control and spread with alarming rapidity through the thick brush. Most of this bottom has been cleared of milling timber and the brush and refuse covered the ground in heaps, making an excellent place for fire to spread.

From the hill overlooking the Elk a grand view of the awful fury of a forest fire could be obtained. The mill men supplemented by many others worked hard and succeeded in checking the flames from spreading to the dwellings and mill property. At midnight the flames began to subside but it was not until the big thunder storm arrived last night that the fire was beyond danger of of doing further harm.

The fire covered from 150 to 200 acres and in one or two places intruded on the green timber. The Mott milling property was uninjured and the actual loss in timber is not heavy but the fire has done a serious amount of damage to the property as a townsite, in killing the green trees and shrubs which are valuable for ornamental purposes.

Few people realize the stringency of the law relating to the setting out of fires between May 1st and October 1st. During this period any one starting a fire is required to make a fire guard by clearing the brush all around for a safe distance, and he is also required to watch it closely all the time. A penalty of not less than $50 is imposed upon any one violating this law. Too much care cannot be taken to prevent the spread of fire, and during this dry summer season none but the most experienced and careful men should be entrusted with the clearing of brush. Had there been a heavy wind no doubt this fire would have swept up or down the Elk valley and destroyed many thousands of dollars worth of timber besides turning the beautiful green landscape into a barren stretch of blackness.

The water of the Elk continues high but no damage has been done this week. It is the general opinion that if the present clear weather continues the snow will pass away gradually without doing any injury, but that if a wet season should set in very serious damage would follow.

Later—The water today at noon reached the 7 ft. 4 in. mark and it is still rising. This is the highest yet this summer and it is expected that it will go still higher this afternoon as a result of last night's heavy rainfall. A portion of the road to the Cedar Valley Improvement Co.'s mill was washed out this morning, This was caused by the bank being washed out where a jam on the opposite side of the river throws the current in that direction. Only about 20 feet are as yet destroyed, but in order to repair the break the road will have to be pushed back farther into the woods, necessitating 200 feet or more of new road.

Owing to a sudden death in the parish the Rev. C. W. Houghton did not attend the annual Synod at Nelson as he expected. Mr. E. H. Bird the Nicar's Warden went as Lay Delegate, accompanied by Mrs. Bird. They left on Tuesday and arrived home last evening.

$7,000 IS PROMISED.

Report of Regular Meeting of Board of Trade. Fire Protection Business Attended to.

The Fernie Board of Trade held its regular meeting on Monday evening, a good number of the faithful being present with Chairman Rennie and Secretary Alexander in their places.

Secretary Cree of the Fire Committee reported that the town had been well canvassed for subscriptions to the fire fund with the exception of a small corner. There had been $1600 promised of which $270 was already paid. The committee had interviewed Mr. Tonkin with respect to assistance from the Coal Company. He had stated that the company were unwilling to give or lend a lot for fire protection purposes. The company favored raising funds on an assessment principle and they were prepared to contribute their share.

Considerable discussion followed as to the securing of a suitable lot, it being the opinion of the meeting that the whole success of the fire protection movement depended upon the possission of a fire hall. This matter as well as the funds promised by subscribers was dealt with by the follewing resolution made by Mr. Bentley and carried unanimously by the meeting.

"Resolved that the fire committee be requested to call a meeting of the subscribers to the fire fund at as early a date as possible for the purpose of appointing trustees and calling up the money subscribed, and that the collecting committee report to that meeting as to lots available for a fire hall, with prices, terms etc."

Another resolution was also passed asking the fire committee to see what can be done about putting in hydrants or stand pipes in the neighborhood of the hospital and to wait upon the general manager of the coal company to see what they will do in the matter, also to take up with the company the matter of clearing certain vacant lots in the north end of the town where the danger of fire spreading is great.

The uncleared condition of some of the streets in Fernie were also considered a danger to the town in the event of a fire and a resolution was adopted requesting the local representatives of the government to put the prisoners to work on such streets as are in such a state as to spread fire.

H. A Wilkes read a communication from The McRobie Fire Extinguisher Co., of Winnipeg, to the effect that the company has at the present time a double cylinder chemical engine ready for shipment; ordinarily an order requires to be in three months ahead. The letter also states that the C. P. R. were in the habit of giving a 50 per cent reduction in the freight rates on these engines on the condition that their property receive protection the same as other property in the town.

The secretary then read the following interesting letters relative to requests made by the Fernie Board of Trade to the government:

Victoria, B. C., May 19, 1903.
J. S. T. Alexander, Esq.,
Sec'y Fernie Board of Trade,
Fernie, B. C.

Sir:

In further acknowledgement of your favor of the 18th ult., I now enclose you a copy of a reply received from the Attorney-General's department, in regard to the lockup in your town.

You will see that he says it is a matter that will be remedied as soon as possible, as the Lands and Works have an appropriation for the construction of lock-ups.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your Obedient Servant,
E. G. Prior, Premier.

Victoria, B. C., May 15, 1903.
The Hon. E. G. Prior, Premier,
Victoria, B. C.

Sir:

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 27th ult., respecting the inadequacy of the accommodation for prisoners in the Fernie lock-up.

This is a matter which will be remedied as soon as possible. The Lands and Works department have an appropriation for the construction of lock-ups.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your Obidient Servant,
H. A. Maclean,
Deputy Attorney-General.

Victoria, B. C., May 18th, 1903.
J. S. T. Alexander, Esq.,
Sec'y. Fernie Board of Trade,
Fernie, B. C.

Sir:—Your letter of the 3rd ult., enclosing resolutions passed by your Board, was acknowledged on the 14th ult.

I now write to say that those matters appertaining to roads, streets and bridges were referred by me to the Honorable Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works, and I now enclose copy of his reply to the same, which I trust will be satisfactory.

The matter of appointing commissioners to regulate sanitation and protection from fire, also power to construct sewers and discharge sewerage into Elk River, has been referred to the Honorable the Attorney-General. As soon as I receive his reply I will let you hear further from me.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
E. G. Prior,, Premier

Victoria, B. C., May 9th, 1903.

My Dear Col. Prior:—Replying to your letter of the 27th, ult., enclosing set of resolutions passed by the Fernie Board of Trade, and which are herewith returned. I beg to submit the attached memo concerning those resolutions which belong to my department.

1. Resolution asking for $2000 for Fernie streets and roads.

Tnis has already been discussed and is provided for in the district vote for next year.

2. Road between Fernie and Coal Creek mines.

This is essentially a coal company's road, and it has been the practice of the government to do as little as possible on such roads. If the Fernie Board of Trade wishes work done on this road, it can be provided for probably out of the $2,000 suggested for the Fernie streets and roads.

3. Wagon road from Fernie to Elko and $10,000 for construction.

The Provincial Public Works' Inspector states that $10,000 will not build this road, and it is evidently far too great an undertaking to be considered in one year's appropriations. Provision has been made for $5,000 to be expended on part construction of this work this year.

Yours Truly,
W. C. Wells,
Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works.

The appropriation of $2,000 for the town streets and $5,000 for the road to Elko met with the warm approval of the meeting. A resolution was adopted that a copy of the Chief Commissioner's letter be forwarded to Government Agent Armstrong because he had stated that only $2,500 was appropriated for the Elko road.

The secretary read a letter from the Nelson Board of Trade asking for assistance in appealing for a Sunday mail service over the Crow line. A strongly worded resolution was drawn up and adopted which set forth the urgent need of immediate attention to this matter by the government. Attention was also drawn to the many similar resolutions already passed by the board dealing with the same grievance.

The meeting then adjourned.

MORE JAIL ACCOMMODATION.

Also a Jail Promised For Morrissey Mines.

Chief McMullin when at the coast last week urgently represented to the government the need of more jail accommodation in this district. He secured from the Deputy Attorney-General the the promise of immediate attention to the matter.

The lock-up in this town contains only four cells and this number will be increased to ten. The space required for this improvement will be obtained from the room adjoining it, and at present used as an office. A new lock-up has been promised at Morrissey Mines. It will be a small affair of the regulation "skookum house" pattern. The department promised that the work would be proceeded with at once.

DERICK—BULLOCK.

The Rectory was the scene of a quiet wedding on June 10th when Mr. Stanley R. Derick, of Bremerton, Wash., was married to Miss Winifred May Bullock, sister of Mr. W. E. Bullock of Michel. Rev. C. W. Houghton performed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Bullock were present. The newly married couple spent a day or two at Michel after which they left for their new home at Bemerton.

JULY 1ST AT FERNIE.

ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION PREPARING BIG PROGRAMME.

All Kinds of Sports. New Grounds to Be Fenced and Grand Stand Erected.

An executive meeting of the Athletic Association took place Wednesday evening. Early in the week tenders had been called for the erection of the fence around the grounds but only one tender had been received which was considered high.

The meeting was called chiefly for the purpose of preparing for a day of sports for Dominion Day, and with that object in view a committee of five was appointed to prepare a program and to make all the necessary arrangements. This committee, consisting of Messrs. MacMordie, A. Liphardt, T. Whalen, W. Tuttle and H. Bentley have the matter well in hand and it is expected that a splendid program will be arranged.

The lacrosse game between Cranbrook and Fernie will be an interesting event and base ball and foot ball matches will also be arranged. The band is getting ready for the day and altogether the opening of the beautiful new grounds promises to be an event of unusual interest and pleasure. It is expected that large numbers from Michel, Morrissey, Cranbrook and other towns will be present.

The association will have the ground fenced at once as well as a border fence on the top of the hill. The old grand stand will be put up and an addition to it will be built on.

Since writing the above the committee has drafted the following excellent program for July 1st.

Foot Ball, morning at 9:30 o'clock.
Tug of War Lumber Jacks vs Miners 11 o'clock.
100 yard race, 11:30 o'clock.
Running long jump, 11:45.
Shot Putting, 16 lbs., 11:45.
Hose Race, 1 o'clock.
Base Ball, 1:30 o'clock.
Lacrosse, 3:30 o'clock.
Two Miner's races, 100 yds, and 50 yds. 2:30 o'clock.

The prizes for the different contests will be announced next week. Mr. Mutz has already promised a donation for the tug of war. The committee would be pleased to receive donations from hotel keepers, merchants, and others, as prizes for the other events.

C.P.R. TERMINATE AGREEMENT.

Will Charge Five Cents a Trip Between Town and Mines.

Robt. Kerr, general passenger agent of the C.P.R. has written from Montreal notifying the C. N. P. Coal Company that on and after the July 1st. they will charge all passengers between Fernie and Coal Creek mines a regular fee of five cents each way. Tickets will be on sale at the Fernie station. Strips of six tickets will be sold for 25 cents.

The original agreement between the C.P.R. and the Coal Company was signed on Dec. 18, 1899. In that contract the Coal Company was to pay 15 cents per ton for transporting the coal from the mines, guaranteeing at least $100 per day in freight money. The Coal Company also agreed to pay a nominal sum for the use of passenger coaches in connection with regular coal trains.

The railway now give notice of their desire to terminate that part of the agreement relative to the passenger traffic and they are instituting the fee system. It is said that the change thus about to be made is the outcome of the report of a "spotter" who has been on the scene for a month or more. The Coal Company has paid a much larger average than $100 per day in freight money and there does not appear to be good grounds for the termination of an agreement which has worked successfully for three and a half years.

Messrs. D. Hayes and H. Fullerton of the Hayes Lumber Co. were up from Elk Mouth on Wednesday.

Mr. Wm. McNaughton, of Clinton Ont., arrived this week to accept a position in the dry goods department of The Trites-Wood Co.

MOTHER'S INFLUENCE

IT IS POTENTIAL IN FORMING HER DAUGHTER'S CHARACTER.

AS THE ONE, SO IS THE OTHER

Importance of This Fact Emphasized in the Formation and Development of a Pure and Noble Womanhood—How the True Wife and Mother Should Live If She Would Have Good Daughters.

Chicago, May 31.—In this sermon the preacher illustrates the potential influence of the mother upon the character of the child and the importance of that influence being of a kind that goes to the formation and development of a pure and noble womanhood. The text is Ezekiel xvi., 44, "AS is the mother, so is her daughter."

The Philadelphia mint is one of the chief sights for the traveler in the Quaker City. It has many wonderful pieces of machinery, not the least of which are the powerful stamping machines, cutting the gold and silver bars into pieces the size of a ten cent piece or a dollar. Then, with one terrific pound, they stamp them into United States coins. These stamping machines are powerful enough to crush the hard metal into forms of eagles bearing the impress of the Goddess of Liberty, and yet they are capable of doing very delicate work. If a plain piece of wet tissue paper is placed under their stamp they can cut out of that wet paper a round piece the size of a silver dollar more neatly and accurately than could be done by any sewing girl's scissors or any surgeon's knife.

It is wonderful that a machine should have the power of thus producing from the hard metal thousands of coins exactly alike, each bearing accurately the same impression; but I want to speak to you to-day of something still more wonderful in our social and family life. It is the power inhering in every mother to mold her daughters into her own image and to impress upon them her own characteristics.

The mother's life is inevitably produced in the lives of her little girls whom she rocks in the cradle. This will happen whether she is conscious of it or not. How important then is it, for the sake of those whom they in their turn will influence, that the influence of the mother's life should be of the wholesome and beneficent kind! The girls will be like her as they grow up, and her faults will reappear in them. Therefore, the object of this sermon is to show how the true wife and mother should live. She should not only be true to her husband, but also true to her father and mother, brothers and sisters, and to God, as well as directly to the little daughters who will soon follow in her footsteps. As she thinks, they will think. As she does, they will also do.

The true mother should, first, be a true wife. The butterfly's wing is developed in the chrysalis. The autumnal fruit will not hang heavily from the tree branch as nuggets of gold unless the apple blossoms were fragrant in the springtime. The summer song of the nest is only a sweet encore of the June song, which once softly echoed its way through the pillared halls in the temple of the woods. Neither can the rich, spotless robe of maternity ever be woven in the home unless it comes from a loom in which a bride's pure and consecrated fingers have already woven out of untarnished web, perfumed with the orange blossoms, the robe of true wifehood.

This statement is axiomatic. Yet there are some women foolish enough to suppose that the name of wife and mother are not Siamese twins and have no connection or affiliation. They are so blinded that they cannot see that the silver letters of true motherhood are written upon the golden background of true wifehood and that the strongest and best cradle is that cut from the scented wood of the marriage altar. The duties of maternity must never supersede or extinguish the duties of the wife. There are many women who are true wives until the babies are born. Then, instead of being any longer the comfort, the companion, the helpmeet of the man whom they promised on their wedding day to live for, they turn their backs upon their husbands and bury their existence in the nursery. From morning until night and from night until morning those engrossed and absorbed mothers think and dream and talk about nothing but the one theme of baby.

They will tell you over and over again how many teeth their babies have cut and when those teeth came, but they cannot tell you about the sharp, poisonous fangs of business worries that have buried themselves in their husband's brains and heart. Neither do they care how sharp those fangs may be. They can tell you, without one mistake, how many times last night their babies coughed, but they cannot tell you how many hours their husbands the same night walked the floor, hour after hour, trying to think and plan how they could meet the great crisis of life which may now be confronting them. There is many a man—mark this!—who heard the death rattle of all true, helpful wifely association on the night that their first baby was born. Only a short time ago I had a prominent man say to me: "Any success which I have made in life, I have won in spite of my wife. From the day that my first baby came she has had no interest in me or my work. In my intercourse with my business associates she has been a positive damage instead of a help." There is many a husband who is to-day living as far apart in thought from his wife as if he were ten thousand miles away from her. He may eat with her at the table and live with her in the same home, but their mental and spiritual association is absolutely dead. She lives for her children. He lives for his business. Between them there is the great yawning chasm of indifference, ever widening, ever becoming blacker and more fatal to marital love.

Now, mothers, I want to say to you that a woman cannot be a true mother unless at the same time she is a true wife. I want to say that if a wife will not enter into the joys and hopes and sorrows and cares and perplexities of the husband who is by her side and wants to love her and have her share his burdens she cannot be true to the daughters, who will follow in her footsteps. I want to tell you that no daughter is developed aright unless she has had before her the example of a mother who has been faithfully trying to be true to her father as well as to her.

God develops true motherhood in many ways. The factory's machinery may seem to the untrained eye to be working uselessly and in ridiculous confusion. There are some wheels running from right to left others from left to right. There are sagging belts, and great piston rods moving up and down, and strong steel bars whirling round and round and round. There are tanks where the goods are soaked and places where the raw goods are chewed into pulp. But after awhile, under the explanation of the superintendent or guide, the visitor to the factory finds that every belt and every wheel and every cylinder of the machinery is put there for a purpose. All the different parts of that machinery are working together for good, for the completion of a finished article. So God in the great human factory for the creation of a consecrated motherhood has many wheels and at times seemingly conflicting duties. They all have a purpose, not the least of which is the influence resulting from the right performance of the duty a wife and mother owes to her childhood's home.

My sister, how can you honestly expect your children to respect you if you are stony hearted and refuse to honor the many wrinkles and the bedimmed sight of an aged parent? Can your mother breathe forth the bitter lamentation of the neglected old woman who said, "When I was young my children used to tread upon my feet; but now, when I am old, they are treading upon my heart." Are you going to show the selfish spirit of the brutal people of the Pacific islands, who were accustomed to behead or bury alive their fathers and mothers as soon as they became crippled with age? Are you a heartless woman, going to tear your parents from your thoughts and affections, merely because you can get no more service out of them? How can you expect your little children to love each other after you are gone when you yourself have nothing to do with the brothers and sisters of your childhood? Is it nothing to you when they are sick or in financial trouble? Is it nothing to you when they are dead? Why, some mothers who think they are good and true mothers never pretend to have any affection for their parents or brothers and sisters or for their nephews and nieces. The inevitable result will be that some day your own children will cease to love each other. Ah, my friends, blood ought to be thicker than water. The ties which bind the human heart to the home of childhood ought to be as strong as links of steel.

To-day the sacred memories of the past are calling many a mother to her nobler and truer self. A short time after her marriage a young wife told me of a vision she had that was so vivid it was difficult to believe that it was not real. As she lay in bed in the early morning of the day when she was to leave her father's home her thoughts were busy with her past life, in which her mother, then six months dead, occupied a prominent place. What, she thought, would that dear mother say to her if she were then living? The beloved form, the tender tones of her voice, were well remembered. As she dwelt on the memory it seemed to her that her mother stood beside her. She had the same dear old face, the same look of love. Dressed in pure white, she came and stood at the foot of the bed. "I was not in the least affrighted," said the young girl. "I felt and knew that I was awake. I raised myself upon my elbow and said, 'Is that you, mother?' 'Yes, daughter,' the mother answered. 'It is I. I have come back to have a few parting words before you start out on your new life.' Then, after talking awhile, the mother said: 'Daughter, be true to yourself: be true to your new home; but, daughter, also be true to your old home. Never forget or neglect your old father. He is alone now. Never cease to love your brothers and sister. You cannot be true, my daughter, to your new home unless you are true to your old.' Then the strange vision slowly turned and disappeared." So to-day the sacred memories of the past plead for a noble motherhood which will be true to the old loves and which will therefore be doubly true to the new.

The true mother goes forth in life and sees the miseries and the sufferings and the troubles which are everywhere self evident. Her heart bleeding with sympathy, she returns home and begins to plan how she can help the poor. When her children would destroy their old clothes she turns and says: "Daughter, that is a sinful waste. That dress may not be useful to you, but it may clothe some little girl and keep her warm all winter. I wish that you would wrap it up in a bundle and take it to Mrs. So-and-so's house. Her husband is out of work, and I fear she is having a hard time to get along. I was in to see her to-day." When that little girl carries that dress to the home of destitution and there sees the poverty sticking out through cracks of the humble cottage and the grateful tears of the mother who received the dress she learns a lesson of heart love she could learn in no other way. Do you wonder that every mother teaches her children the laws of gentleness and sympathy and Christian kindness when she herself is ready at any hour of the night to go to the sick neighbor's home or to place flowers on the white casket of a neighbor's child?

The true mother is also always the true church member. Nearly all are ready to grant that the church of Jesus Christ is the great purifying, the great moral and spiritual teacher and developer of every community in which it exists. It is the thrashing floor where the grain which has been raised in the nurseries of Christian homes is separated from the chaff. It is the holy of holies at whose sacred altars multitudes are convicted of sin and led to humbly kneel and publicly confess their faith in God. Many have been brought up in Christian homes who would never have given their hearts to Jesus Christ except through the church's influence.

If the church of Jesus Christ had such an infinite influence upon the lives of your children ought you not, O wives and mothers, to cast your influence there? Ought you not Sunday after Sunday to be seen within the four walls of the sacred sanctuary? It is useless for you to say that you have no time to go to church. A mother can always arrange her time to admit any duty that she knows to be essential to her children's welfare. Who can tell whether the destiny of your children may not be affected for all eternity by your bringing them to church? Some mothers find time every week to take their children to dancing schools. Is not the temple where the people learn about Jesus Christ more important than the floor where the heels are educated instead of the heart?

Do not make the plea I have so often heard—that you have little children too young to go to church and therefore you must stay with them at home. Take your babies along. The minister of the Lord Jesus Christ who would become irritated because a young mother brings her baby to church is not spiritually fitted to stand in any pulpit or to preach from any sacred desk. The greatest honor to-day which a congregation can have is to see the pews filled up with the young mothers who are flanked by little children on both sides. I once heard of a variety show giving a performance in a mining camp in the days of the California gold excitement. The rude theatre for the most part was filled with rough men. While the show was going on a little baby began to cry. That child's cry mightily affected the miners. They made the players stop so that they could hear the voice which recalled the holy memories of their eastern homes. If a child's cry can soften the heart in a theatre it can teach a gospel lesson in a church service. Oh, mothers with little children, when you come to the church bring your babies. When I used to be taken to church as a little child the sweet influence of the gospel penetrated my being, though often before the service closed, in childhood's weariness, I went to sleep with my head pillowed on my mother's lap. No mother can be a true example to her children unless at the same time she is a true church member.

"But," some one may say, "you have not spoken yet of the greatest of all examples which a true mother ought to set before her children. She should and must be a Christian woman. She cannot be a true wife, daughter, member of society and of the church unless in the first place she fully realizes her responsibility to her Maker and Redeemer and Saviour." Well, my friend, perhaps I have done wrong in not making this thought the first and chief heading of my sermon. But, to tell the truth, I have gone upon the supposition that all the wives and mothers assembled in this congregation are Christian women. I believe that deep down in your hearts you feel your responsibility to Christ. I preach with another purpose than to bring you as new converts to Christ. I have tried to show the different directions in which the river of your spiritual love should flow. I have tried to show you this because I want to prove that your daughters' spiritual love will flow in the same direction as yours finds an outlet.

Do you know what impresses me most about a little boy? The fact that he wants to be like his father. The little fellow wants to wear the same kind of suspenders, and the same kind of a vest, and white shirt and collar, the same kind of laced shoes. He wants to imitate his father's good habits as well as his bad. Do you know what impresses me most about a little girl? She wants to be like her mother. "As is the mother, so is her daughter." When my sisters were young, the first act I remember about them was this: They used to rummage in mother's closets and get out her long dresses and pin them around their waists and play they were grown women going calling. When little girls were born in my own home, I found they did with my wife's things just what my sisters used to do with my mother's. I find the little girls along the streets trying to imitate their mothers in the same way.

Mothers in the house and on the street, will you not set your children the right kind of an example when you know your daughters are going to copy after you? Will you not surrender yourselves, body, mind and soul to the Saviour's service as a wife, a sister, a member of the church and of society, so that the Christ love which shines through your face shall shine through theirs? Will you not so live that your Christian consecrated lives will be to your children an inspiration, your death a benediction, your resurrection a fact which will beckon them on to join you at the foot of God's white throne? Shall not the rose bush bring forth a rose? Shall not a maternal song find an echo in a daughter's heart?

THIEVES PETTY AND STUPID

Modern Invention Has Driven Out the Crafty Kind.

"The people who nowadays give the detectives most trouble are the members of that vast horde of petty thieves, both white and black, that infest every great city," said one of the most efficient detectives of the Washington department. "The days of mammoth burglaries, diamond robberies and brilliant thieving operations have passed, perhaps never to return, and instead of the really shrewd, calculating and bold thief of half a century ago we have today a mob of petty pilferers, who are far from possessing one-tenth part of the brains and wit of the old time thief, but manage nevertheless to give the police a vast deal of trouble.

"The progress of invention has put the shrewd thief and burglar out of business. Say, for example, a man steals several thousand dollars. Very well. The moment he does so he realizes that in order to retain his ill gotten gains he must leave the scene of the crime, realizing that he is in nowise prepared to cope with modern detective and police methods. Probably before he leaves the city telegrams and telephone messages have preceded him to the cities of the United States and Canada, and he is nabbed the moment he reaches his destination. But supposing that he escapes all these traps and reaches some foreign country—why, he is simply in as bad a plight there as he was before leaving home. Nowadays there is hardly a government or country with which the United States has not entered into an understanding whereby criminals are caught and returned, and what few and far distant states with which our government has failed to draw up any such arrangement can be very easily managed in case Uncle Sam wants to get any of his missing children back.

"The result is that no really bright or shrewd person would think of undertaking a job of burglary or stealing in this age. None but the desperately poor, the degenerates, morphine users, the submerged tenth, so to speak, nowadays practice stealing. They are too stupid to realize the danger of such a course and plunge headlong into a career that must sooner or later land them behind the bars."—Washington Post.

The Potato Planter.

The potato planter of today would make a farmer of a generation or so ago sit up and rub his eyes. It requires that the potatoes be supplied, but will do all the rest of its own initiative. It picks the potato up and looks it over, or seems to, cuts it into halves, quarters or any desired number of parts, separates the eyes and removes the seed ends. It plants whole potatoes or parts thereof as desired as near together or as far apart as the judgment of the farmer on the driving seat suggests. Having dropped the seed it covers it, fertilizes it, tucks it in like a child put to bed and paces off the next row with mathematical accuracy.

The Oldest Libraries.

The oldest libraries of which we have any certain knowledge are those brought to light by excavations among the ruins of the east. Among these are the Babylonish books inscribed on clay tablets, supposed to have been prepared for public instruction about 650 B. C. It is said by Aristotle that Strabo was the first known collector of books and manuscripts. This was about the year 330 B. C.

PAINS IN THE BACK FOR TWENTY YEARS

Could Not Turn Over in Bed—Kidneys and Bladder Affected—Experienced Great Sufferings—Cured by

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY LIVER PILLS.

The old people especially appreciate the effectiveness of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, because the kidneys are usually the first of the bodily organs to give out, and the result is backache, lumbago, pains in the side and limbs, urinary disoreds and consumption.

Old people learn to trust in Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, for when all other treatments fail this great medicine seems to go directly to the diseased part, and promptly affords relief and cure.

Mr. David Misener, farmer, an old and respected resident of Port Robinson, Welland county, Ont., writes: "I wish to state to you that I had pain in my back and left side for over twenty years. At times I could not turn over in bed, I was so badly used up. I had cramps in my feet and legs, and my hands were so entirely useless that I could scarcely lift anything."

"Kidney disease, was, no doubt, the cause of all my suffering, and sometimes the urinary trouble would be so bad that I would have to get up five or six times during the night. Fortunately, I began using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and they cured me completely. I am now 79 years old and quite well now, but still occasionally use these pills to keep my system in good order. Several persons to whom I have recommended Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills have been equally benefited."

Cromwell's Mother.

The sympathy existing between this mother and son is one of the most beautiful traits in Oliver's personal history. They loved each other with a passionate affection that no time or change lessened, and when he arrived at the summit of his power, though she was then upward of 90 years of age, he appointed her royal apartments in Whiteball and visited her every day.

Noble quaintly says, "She occasionally yet offered the Protector advice, which he always heard with great attention, but acted as he judged proper." It is pleasant to think that this fine old lady died happily before her son's power began to wane. It is pleasant to think of the great Protector kneeling to receive her dying blessing and of her last smiling words to him and his children. "A good night, dears!"

There is yet a portrait of her at Hinchinbrooke, which shows us a handsome woman, with a face full of character and a rather melancholy expression. Her dress is that of a gentlewoman of the time—a white satin hood, a pearl necklace and a neckerchief edged with rich lace. The mantle is of green satin edged with gold lace and fastened with a jeweled clasp.—Amelia Barr in Harper's Magazine For April.

Old Irish Warcries.

Like the modern cowboy yell of the western troops in the Cuban campaign, the warcries and slogans of the ancient Irish clans often had much effect in inspiring fear in the enemy and courage and enthusiasm in the command. The simplest and most frequent of old Erin's warcries was "Faire, faire!" signifying "watch" or "look out." It was a precautionary signal and was commonly written "Farrah." From it the modern "hurrah" is supposed to have been derived. Another cry was "A buaidh!" which meant "to the victory." It was pronounced "aboo" and followed the name of the clan or leader, according to circumstances, like "O'Neill aboo," or "Clann Conail aboo." Frequently "a buaidh" is construed incorrectly in modern English to mean "forever." That translation applies to "go brath," but not "a buaidh." The famous Irish cry of "Fag an bealach!" meaning "clear the way," scared the spunk out of the French soldiery in the peninsular war.

A Generous Whim.

The London Daily Mail tells this pretty story of a kiss sold at auction: A fascinating actress, whose name need not be mentioned, being anxious to assist a certain charity in the provinces, offered a kiss to be put up at auction. The bidding was brisk and had advanced in three leaps from 2 guineas to 30, when without further parley the round sum of £800 was offered. There being no higher bid, the kiss was knocked down by the auctioneer to a colonel in one of our line regiments, who came forward to meet the blushing lady.

But to the surprise of all present, the colonel introduced a dear little fair haired boy, explained that it was his grandson's fifth birthday, and that he had acquired the kiss as a birthday gift for him. Whereupon Miss —— took the child in her arms and discharged her debt with interest. The charity, a local one, in which the colonel took a keen interest, was the richer by £800 for the granddad's generous whim.

A Day's Talk.

Few of us probably ever think seriously about the amount of talking we do in a day and how large a factor mere talk is in the life of the world for both good and evil. It has been estimated that a public speaker utters in one hour, on an average, what, if printed, would occupy 15 octavo pages. Ordinary conversation is even more prolific.

Let us suppose, says The Winoniam, that all the talk of one day be estimated as equivalent to four hours' consecutive speaking. In a single week the amount would make what, if printed, would be an octavo of 320 pages. In a year a man would complete 52 such volumes, and in 30 years he would have accumulated a library of 1,560 volumes of his own talk. What value would most of us place on such a library? How many of us could endure to read it? How many would feel satisfied to have such books go on the market?

It is related of Dean Swift that at an evening party, on one occasion, he retired to a corner of the room and commenced noting down the talk of the company. Being asked what he was doing, he produced a verbatim report of the conversation which had just taken place. Most of the speakers, it is added, felt no small humiliation over the superficial and trifling character of their utterances when confronted with them.

At the exhibition of the International Live Stock association in Chicago a portly old gentleman remarked to one of the men in charge of the cattle department, "You don't call this the 'fat stock show' any more, it seems."

"No," replied the other. "It's quality that counts with us now and not quantity. You can put fat on any kind of an animal, and after it's all done he's nothing but a big, fat—I—I—I beg pardon, sir! I—I hadn't noticed—I didn't mean"—

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. HEIMBURG.

Lucie all that day had an unaccountable feeling of anxiety and apprehension; she went down three or four times to ask the porter if there were any letters for her. He had none. She wondered whether this silence was a good or bad sign. As she was standing thinking about this in the vestibule, a perplexed look upon her face, some men from a florist's passed her with gigantic laurel and myrtle trees, carrying them to the salon, the door of which stood wide open.

In the background hung a bright purple curtain, which the upholsterer was still arranging, and upon the improvised stage stood a gentleman with a white beard, talking to the landlord.

Wilken just then came down the stairs with a handsome lady in street costume on his arm. Her features bore a strong resemblance to his. As he passed Lucie heard him say "Mother" to her. A strong feeling of compassion seized her; she ran upstairs to Hortense, and threw herself weeping upon her neck.

The day passed. Toward evening Frau von Lowen got up; a letter had come, but from mademoiselle. It inclosed a small letter with a crest and a foreign postmark. "From papa," said Hortense, and put it back. She hastily ran though mademoiselle's scrawling French handwriting. "The old people are the same as ever; they play chess; and the horses are well," she said, taking a scissors and beginning to cut the letter, without reading it, in a thousand pieces.

Lucie gazed thoughtfully out on the beautiful Platz, lighted up with the glow of the setting sun. The numerous statues on the Hofkirche seemed dipped in red gold. Over the perforated towers of the Lutheran church, which stood in bold relief against the steel-blue sky, the narrow crescent of the new moon was clearly to be seen. The lamps were burning at the theatres, and the late comers were hurrying into the portals. The air was full of the perfumes which were wafted from the parks and gardens. A handsome carriage now rolled over the pavement. Lucie looked down as it stopped at the door of the hotel. Wilken, in his uniform, helped his bride-elect to alight, and the parents followed. The young girl, in a pink dress, had her blonde braids fastened up to-day, and carried a bouquet of roses in her hand. Lucie started. Hortense had suddenly come and stood beside her.

"Shall I read to you?" she asked. "I see the pigeons flying over the Hofkirche in the evening twilight; it makes me think of Venice. Do you remember how we read the "Merchant of Venice' there?"

At this moment there was a barouche at the door; the waiter announced: "Herr Weber." Hortense bowed assent.

"I had hardly expected to find grace in your eyes," he said, jestingly to Hortense; "but I heard with regret that you were ill, and came to make inquiries about you of Fraulein Walter. I thank you very much," he said, taking a chair which Frau von Lowen offered him. "I will not disturb you. I see you are suffering, you are so pale. I am only afraid that this merry-making just under you will disturb your night's rest. It is so odd that people like the old Herr von Norbert, who has such a handsome house, should celebrate a family banquet in a hotel."

Hortense, who had seated herself in an arm-chair, asked:

"Do you know these people?"

"Slightly. They have an estate near my property. I have met him at the club, and once at an agricultural society. He is an odd fellow, but an honorable man from head to foot, with all due respect to his queer notions. The ladies I scarcely know at all," he added. "I have always heard that Marie von Norbert was a very well-brought-up child. But pardon me, Frau Baronne, you look really ill; may I not send for a physician?"

Hortense shook her head. "I must beg you to excuse me for this evening."

He took his leave with a troubled look.

"The air is very close to-night," he said, softly, to Lucie. "I think we shall have a shower during the night."

Hortense sat still, her head resting on the back of the chair, not saying a word. It was quiet in the room, and very sultry. A shiver went through her as the first notes of the bridal song in "Lohengrin" floated up, soft and sweet.

"I think it will be quieter in my room," said Lucie.

"Leave me alone!"

The girl seated herself silently opposite Hortense. The sweet strains of the band floated through the room then all would be still, and then the dance music would begin. A waltz! Now he has his bride-elect in his arms, and is flying with her through the rooms, and this fiancee has a father who is an honorable man, thought Lucie. Poor, poor Hortense!

"A telegram for Fraulein Walter!" cried the waiter, whose knock had not been heard, and he handed Lucie the small folded paper, lighted a candle, and disappeared.

"For me!" said the girl, in a faint voice.

She knew what it was without reading it. Her hands trembled as she opened the paper, and as she looked at it she stood motionless, her head bent as if she had received a blow.

"What is it?" asked Hortense, and came over to her. She took the paper out of Lucie's limp hand. "Mathilda passed away quietly to-day. — George," she read.

She did not dare to look at Lucie, but laid the paper silently upon the table. The music below had stopped for the moment. There was nothing to be heard but the girl's stifled, tearless sobs. Then Lucie roused herself, hastened to her room, and came back with her hat and cloak.

Hortense seized her by the arm.

"What are you going to do?"

"I must go," was the answer.

"To-night? I assure you, Lucie, you can not travel so; you are dreadfully unnerved. Wait till morning."

Lucie, without answering, tied the strings of her cloak about her waist.

"Do be reasonable, Lucie; you can not be of any use now. You will be there early enough to-morrow; you—"

But she stopped, the girl looked at her so indignantly.

"Do not try again to keep me from my duty," came from her trembling lips. "You have deprived me of her last words. You—"

She stopped, panting for breath, and turned away. On the table lay her gloves and veil; she snatched them up and went to the further door.

Hortense remained standing motionless in the same place.

"Lucie," she cried. The girl stopped and looked back. "I am afraid to let you go alone," said Hortense.

Lucie looked at her absently.

"Afraid? Why do you not come with me?"

"Because—because we could not reach our destination to-night; I am sure the trains do not connect. To-morrow, Lucie. Stay here!"

The girl hesitated. But a still pale face rose before her mind, that lay as if asleep.

"I must go," she said; "do not keep me. I can not stay;" and the next moment the door closed behind her.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Lucie scarcely knew herself how she got to the station and in the railway carriage, or how the night passed, and the three hours of waiting at the little station, where the branch line from her home joined the main line. She had only one thought, one bitter regret; she had one picture before her all the time, and that was Mathilda's eyes full of tears with longing to see the young sister who had forgotten her in her gay life away from home.

When at last the train came to the station the day was beginning to dawn. She shivered as she stepped into the empty compartment. As it grew lighter she looked out into the misty June morning. She was familiar with the region through which she was going; the cloud-covered mountains over yonder, the outlying spurs of the Hartz Mountains, and the villages still sleeping quietly. The clouds in the east became lighter by degrees, but the sun could not dissipate them, and finally it began to rain—a light fine rain that threw a thick grey veil over the entire region. At the little stations where the train stopped peasant women got in with their market-baskets, here and there some gentlemen also going to the market-town. For a moment there would be some confusion between umbrellas and market-baskets, and there would be quiet again. At the station of the town there was more of a crowd and a longer delay. She listened as if in a dream to the bustle of the men and the pattering of the rain as it fell on the roofs of the cars.

Suddenly she sprung up and let down the window. Through the crowd a child was pushing its way; it was a boy of about twelve, whose thin little face beneath his light-blue cap had a peculiarly sad, wistful expression.

"Conrad," cried the girl, "Conrad!" The boy paused and came over. "Get in," said Lucie. "Are you going home?"

He had taken off his cap and bowed, but at the same time showed his ticket.

"I must go third-class," he said.

"Wait," she cried, getting out; and the next minute they were sitting opposite each other in an empty third-class compartment, and the train was beginning to move slowly on.

For a few moments they sat perfectly still; neither spoke a word. The little fellow, with his pale face, and eyes that seemed to ask what this incomprehensible bitter blow that had come to him meant, kept looking out of the window. Lucie could not speak for tears, as she saw before her the child whose mother had been taken from him so early.

"Father wrote yesterday," he began at last; "but Frau Muller did not tell me till to-day, nor let me go. I suppose he wrote to you too, aunt?"

The little boy pressed his lips had cakes baked. She felt sure of it, because she had written you she was ill. Why didn't you come, aunt?"

She wept still more bitterly; the child's reproach was like a dagger.

"She was not angry," said the boy, good-naturedly, "only sorry."

Lucie took down her handkerchief and gazed at the polished wood-work of the railway carriage, and then at the rain outside.

"She is to be buried to-morrow," continued the boy. "Herr Muller has given me a holiday. I may stay a week with father, because I am the eldest," he added, with some pride. "There is Schulzenskamp; we will soon be there!" With the same sad look in his childish eyes, he asked: "Are you going to stay with us, aunt?"

"Is it true?"

"Yes, my boy."

There was not a soul in the tiny station at the edge of the forest. They stood on the gravel road in front of the little waiting-room, and looked at the weather.

"We shall have to walk," said the boy. "Father does not know you are coming, and I—always walk."

They followed the wood road—the old familiar path. The mist hung from every branch of the beeches, and the water stood in the ruts of the road.

"Give me your hand, Conrad," begged Lucie, as if the boy could be a protection to her, for in her bitter self-reproach she felt as if her brother-in-law might drive her from her sister's death-bed.

"The dogs, aunt; do you hear them?j' asked the boy.

She nodded; there lay the house below them. "Go on first, and tell your father I am coming," she said, brokenly.

The little fellow ran on, but as he approached the house his steps became slower. Lucie saw how he trembled as he went up the steps to the hall.

Lucie followed him equally slowly. In the large hall, adorned with stags' horns, which in summer was also used as a dining-room, all was still as death, only the cuckoo clock ticked on the wall. The door of her brother-in-law's room was open, and out of it came a woman's voice, which Lucie did not know, comforting and remonstrating with him.

"For the children's sake, cousin, the poor little things! Who would have thought this would happen so soon? Come, do not have such wicked thoughts, but come and eat something."

Lucie crossed over and opened the door. She took a few steps into the room toward the man who sat so despairingly in the corner of the leather sofa, his head resting on his hand.

"George!" she said, and supported herself by the table; she looked ready to drop, and her white lips could not frame another word.

He looked up and raised himself.

"You come too late, Lucie!"

She stood perfectly still, with clasped hands. A small stout woman of about fifty, with her hair brushed stiffly down at the sides of her face, a stub-nose, and hard, light eyes, wearing a black apron over her lilac calico dress, and black ribbons in her cap, and a black handkerchief round her neck, stepped up to her.

"Ah! you must be the sister that the poor woman so longed for. Ah, yes! it is very hard when one comes and finds all is over. But you are wet as can be. Have you any dry things with you? Wait a moment; I will get you some hot coffee. One must eat and drink even at such times."

She took off the girl's hat and cloak, and went out with them. The Oberforster walked up and down the room; he trod heavily, and as if tired, and was bent over.

Lucie thought he looked years older. She placed herself before him with her hands clasped.

"Take me to her!" she begged.

He pointed with his hand toward the door.

"There lies what remains of her; she can not say anything to you." tightly together to keep back his tears.

Lucie nodded, and then she sat by him and put her arm round him, and began to cry bitterly:

"The last time I was at home," said the boy, receiving her caresses with indifference, "on Sunday—mother thought you were coming, and Native Australian Tree Climbers.

A black never uses his knees when climbing. If the tree is small in girth, he sometimes uses a vine, passing it around the tree and holding on to it as he ascends. The most common way, however, is to ascend by means of notches cut into the tree or bark about one and a half inches deep and about three feet apart. Having fixed upon the side he intends ascending, the climber cuts a notch with his tomahawk about the height of his waist and another on a level with his head, but a little to the right or left of the lower notch, as the case may be. These notches are made by a few taps of the hatchet, first horizontally and then down at an agle of forty-five degrees. Having cut the two lower ones, the ascent is made by standing on the ball of the foot, with the great toe in the notch, while the climber cuts a fresh notch level with his head, and so on until the lower branches are gained.

Often the gum trees run eighty feet from the ground up to the lowest limb, the trunk of the tree being perfectly smooth. These notches are cut with great regularity, for, measured on a fallen tree, the distance between them seldom varies half an inch. In reascending a tree fresh cuts are made for every fresh ascent.

The Eye of the East.

Damascus, perhaps the most ancient city in the world, claims the proud title of "the Eye of the East," which the striking beauty of its aspect from a distance fully justifies.

Bright buildings which sparkle under the Syrian sun rise out of a mass of many tinted foliage. To the northwest stretch the long, bare, snow white ridges of Anti-Lebanon, while in charming contrast gardens, rich cornfields and teeming orchards form a brilliant setting on all sides.

Winding through this profuse display of oriental beauty, the rivers Barrada and Phege—the Abana and Pharpar of Scripture—lose themselves far to the east in Lake Bahr-el-Merj. On a nearer view much of this glamour vanishes, and there is abundant evidence of general decay.

A similar title is given to Athens in Milton's "Paradise Regained." It is:

Athens, the eye of Greece, mother of arts.

A Handy Trick.

"Bessie," said the teacher to a small pupil, "can you tell me what memory is?"

After a moment's reflection the little one replied, "Memory is the thing people use to forget things with."

Produced the Desired Effect.

Kate, when two years old, was fond of climbing. One day when her mother was in an adjoining room she called excitedly:

"Oh, mamma, mamma, come quick!"

Her mother, thinking she was in danger, hastened to her to find her standing quietly beside the table.

"Why did you call that way?" she said. "I thought you were falling."

"I wanted that cup, and I called you that way so you would hurry."

THE RADIUM PEOPLE

A VISIT TO THE CURIES, DISCOVERERS OF WONDERFUL MINERAL.

Husband and Wife Joint Laborers for Many Years in the Realm of Science—A Visit to Their Home in France—Courteous and Willing to Talk of the Nature of the Mineral.

Few people are aware that the wonderful new mineral called radium was made known to the world through the efforts of a woman, Mme. Curie, who is the wife of Professor Pierre Curie, himself a scientist of no mean note. They are Parisians and for the moment are the most striking and interesting personages in the French capital. Their home is in a small cottage in the most inaccessible southern district overlooking the fortifications and far away from the intellectual and fashionable centre of the capital. Nevertheless this little cottage, as may be expected, has become a Mecca for all interested in scientific progress and research. While reticent regarding the uses to which they expect radium to be put—Professor Curie is now organizing a company to exploit the mineral—they are courteous and willing to talk concerning the discovery and the nature of the mineral.

It appears, as Mme. Curie informed the correspondent, when he visited their pretty little home recently, that her experiments which resulted in the extraction and isolation of the wonderful substance were due to her having heard of the accidental discovery by Becquerel, another French scientist, that uranium, which is derived from pitchblende, emitted light rays. She at once resolved to secure some pitchblende and try to determine its chemical analysis. In the subsequent experiments she was of course assisted by her husband, and thus it is that the honor of discovering radium is in the eyes of the scientific world shared jointly by them, although, as a matter of fact, she can justly claim sole title.

After subjecting the pitchblende to chemical tests she finally found that it contained a mineral exhibiting an activity many times greater than the famous cathode rays.

This mineral Mrs. Curie named polonium in honor of her native country, Poland. There remained another substance, however, which possessed a thousand times greater activity, scientists estimating that it will throw off particles with a velocity sometimes reaching 120,000 miles a second. This substance is radium.

So much has been written regarding its wonderful properties that it is not necessary to detail them here. It might be proper, however, to mention some of the peculiar effects it has upon the nervous centres of human beings and animals, as indicating the extreme caution with which the Curies were obliged to pursue their inquiries. A glass tube containing one or two milligrams of radium will when carried in the waistcoat pocket produce a painful wound, requiring months to heal. Tubes of radium placed in contact with the necks of guinea pigs kill the animals in a few hours. Professor Curie says that it would probably be death to a man to enter a room containing a pound of the wonderful mineral. Each week reveals startling additions to its weird properties, and scientists are now beginning to ask themselves if Mme. Curie has not in radium discovered perpetual motion.

The talented Frenchwoman bears her honors modestly and insists that her husband is as much the discoverer of radium as she is. They have worked together for many years. She is a very attractive woman, a delicate blonde, with light blue eyes. In addition to her laboratory experiments she gives lessons four times a week at a normal school for girls in Sevres.

Professor Curie himself is forty years old, tall and well built. He is essentially a dreamer, but the business ability that is lacking in him is to be found in full measure in his wife. He dresses with the negligence so often found in men of genius. Altogether he impresses one as a man of marked individuality and possesses a fascination of manner which is difficult to explain. Like his wife, he is devoted to their little daughter, a girl of six, and both take personal charge of her education. She was born about the time they first got a glimpse of the mineral which is destined to make their names famous in the world of science.

It must be said it is altogether unlikely radium will be a commercial possibility for some time to come. This is owing to the cost of extracting it from the pitchblende. Professor Curie estimates that the initial operation whereby but two decigrams were secured cost $2,000, but he is hopeful a cheaper process will soon be found.

Austria's State Secrets.

The Austrian imperial archives have been lately conveyed from the Hofburg to the great house built for them adjoining the foreign office. They will later on be opened for public inspection, from the most ancient documents down to those of 1840. The rooms containing the secret archives are of ironwork, each story being completely separated from the next one, so that neither fire nor water can penetrate. Hose supplying abundance of water is fixed in every direction, the windows can neither be melted by fire nor destroyed by blows, and the ornamental ironwork before each window can be unlocked in case of emergency.

ROUND WORLD IN 45 DAYS

A Quick Journey When The Trains and Steamers Make Connections.

A writer has pointed out the fact that although there are 100 routes for anyone wanting to go around the world, there is no through service, as trains and steamers do not connect. The ocean route, 25,412 miles, may now be covered in about 85 days. The time now actually required to travel the different sections of the overland route is less than 45 days, but as railroad and steamer services do not connect, the shortest time recorded for the around the world journey is 63 days, and that by the long sea, not the new overland route, but different sections of the latter already are so well served that even now it is possible to go around in 60 days with ease, comfort and certainty, if the companies arrange for the transference of passengers and mails at termini.

There are two main routes, one British, the other foreign. The former is controlled by the Canadian Pacific railway, between Great Britain, Japan or Hong Kong, and by the Peninsular and Oriental between China or Japan and England. A mere readjustment of the hours and days of sailing to and from Yokohama or Hong Kong would constitute a through mail service. The record time to and from Hong Kong eastward is 24 days, from Hong Kong to Vancouver 17½ days, Vancouver to London 11 days; total 52½ days. Therefore it is possible to maintain a 60-day through service round the world with an ample margin for contingencies and waits

The writer proceeds to point out that the route most likely to compete with the Trans-Siberian express connecting Vladivostock with mail packets for Yokohama via Tsuruga, crossing the Pacific at high speed, will possibly be by the enormous steamers of the Northern Pacific railway, whereof two are already afloat. The same company will convey through passengers from Tacoma to New York. There the Morgan ships will convey them to and from Europe. He urges the companies interested in the British link to hasten the linking of connections before a through service is established between Atlantic and Chinese ports by the American route, as the first all-round through service is likely to be the best known and patronized.

Against the possible argument that no one wants to go all round the world in 60 days, the writer points out that if such service existed people would use it as far as they wished to go.

Quite recently a man in Wei Hai Wei posted two letters to London. One via Siberia arrived in 28 days. The other, going westward, arrived in 29. Yet around the world via Wei Hai Wei can only be accomplished in certain seasons and with good luck in 80 days. With a 60-day through service any place would be reachable, eastward or westward, within a month.

COMMENT ON CANADA.

British Journalists Predict a Change in Canadian Politics.

A London cable says: Canadian statistics showing how this year's immigration into Canada from the continent of Europe and the States is nearly double that from Great Britain lead an English journalist to speculate upon the nature of Canada's population in a few decades if the present rate of immigration continues.

The Daily News says the Dominion promises to be peopled mainly by men and women of foreign descent, and in time will doubtless contain as cosmopolitan and peculiar a people as the United States. It adds: "It ought to be realized that the whole nature of the political being of Canada is being changed in a way no one can certainly see by the importing of the heterogenous host of immigrants.

FROM DARKNESS TO DAWN

Something About the Attractions at the Winnipeg Fair.

The spectacular display and scena which is to be one of the attractions at the Winnipeg Fair this year is to be of a most finished and artistic character and something which has never yet been seen in the open, consisting as it does of a very beautiful transformation scene, such as forms part of the pantomimes produced in New York and London, England. Sir Augustus Harris made these scenes on a scale of magnificence which won for them world-wide fame and the Exhibition board this year is emulating the late distinguished London manager.

"From Darkness to Dawn" consists of six scenes, each being most beautifully and artistically evolved from the preceding. The curtain rises on a scene representing rocky cliffs. Demons of darkness are seen standing on the rocky heights. They unfold their bat-like wings while flames burst forth from the rocks. This scene, which is illuminated by an intense red light is then transformed into what is called "The Palace of Darkness," in which eight large dragons with fire spouting from their jaws crawl among the rocks. Ten demons clothed in orange, are grouped around the cave, in the centre of which is the throne of the Prince of Darkness.

The curtain of this scene is drawn aside and behind it is seen another certain representing a dark blue night sky with moon and twinkling stars. The Prince of Darkness sinks from sight while all the demons turn and greet him with flapping of their wings.

The next scene is entitled "The Flower Jungle," and represents a dark green jungle covered with giant flowers. The flowers unfold and show within the spirit of each flower, a maiden dressed in beautifully tinted garments.

This curtain is then drawn aside and the Butterfly scene is introduced which shows eight butterflies (girls) hovering over the flowers. The gaudy butterflies unfold their wings, while fireworks arise from all corners of the stage.

"The Break of Dawn" which is the title of the next scene shows the interior of a Palace richly decorated. Slowly six shells arise from the ground in each of which is a girl dressed in a rich garment of silver white. This scene, which is artistically lit in light yellow, leads up to the "Dawn," which represents the outer terrace of the shell palace. On a raised dias is a throne on which site the Goddess of Light surrounded by her maidens, who hold in their hands staves on which revolve electric stars. The sun lights up the back of the scene and demons of darkness, flowers, butterflies and shell maidens all make their bow to the goddess.

There is no delay between the spectacle and the fireworks for a magnificent silver curtain of fireworks descends in front of the spectacle and a gorgeous display of fireworks follows, concluding the evening's entertainment.

The arrangements for the Winnipeg Industrial exhibition are being rapidly pushed toward completion and the prospects for a successful and record-breaking fair are very promising. The programme of horse-races is a liberal one, and the prizes offered should secure keen competition. The entries are coming in thick and fast, the Winnipeg Fair now having come to be recognized as one of the events of the west. The Exhibition board have received letters from all parts telling of the great interest which is taken in the fair and many of our cousins from the South have signified their intention of competing at this year's carnival.

The purses this year are of a liberal character. The Citizens' Purse for the 1¼-mile dash is scheduled for the second day, and is worth $1,200. The Free-for-All trot or pace is down for the fifth day and the prize is a purse of $2,500 for mile heats, the best three in five.

The attractions programme this year will beat anything that has yet been seen in the capital of the Prairie Province. It is not yet quite completed, but the following list will show the quality of the attractions which will be provided for the patrons of the fair:

Whirling the loop, Lockhart's elephants, Webb's seals, marvellous seal jugglers; the Three Livingstone's, lady and gentlemen acrobats; Coleman's dog and cat circus; the Piccolo Midgets, musical and acrobatic comedians; the Salvagels, lady and gent, whirlwind dancers; Decryon, wonderful performing horse; Hickey & Nelson, lady and gent, grotesque comedians.

Applications for midway features at the Fair have been more numerous than ever before, and this feature of the exhibition promises to be most interesting.

The Fernie Free Press

ESTABLISHED 1898.

H. G. WATSON, Editor. J. R. WALLACE, Manager

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE BRITISH COLUMB

SATURDAY, JUNE 13, 1903.

WHERE THE BLAME LIES

A representative of the FREE PRESS called upon Mr. Tonkin this week with the object of gaining information relative to recent attacks made upon the Coal Company by the Rossland Miner. The article in question had been sent to various papers throughout the province that it might be published simultaneously in them. The article, if believed will do an incalculable amount of harm to this district and it gives us pleasure to be able to refute every statement it contains. Mr. Tonkin indignantly denied the whole story from beginning to end and he showed clearly, step by step the real situation.

The C. P. R. is both directly and indirectly the cause of any coke shortages the Canadian smelters may be experiencing. At the time of the Frank slide the Coal Company were shipping more coke than ever before. Immediately after that calamity the supply of cars fell off and the Coal Company were entirely at the mercy of the C.P.R. The Coal Company stacked over a thousand tons of coke and then could do nothing but wait for the company to transport it to the smelters. This coudition existed until the line resumed operations and during that time the railway was directly responsible for the shortage of coke at the smelters.

During this time the oven-pullers were able to work only a small proportion of their time and as a result their earnings became greatly reduced, and the men gave up the job to engage at more steady employment. Thus the C.P.R. are indirectly responsible for the reduced output of coke since the men quit work. Many of the regular oven-pullers left town and secured work in other places.

At this junction Mr. Tonkin made strenuous efforts to secure other men. He applied to the Miners' Union and was told that they could not get men and advised him to get some in himself. He applied to Gateway, to Frank and other places without success and finally in his zeal to keep up the coke supply he decided to give Chinamen a trial. These have proved a failure, but now since the car supply is again adequate the regular oven-pullers are gradually coming back to their old work.

In no instance have the men accused the Company with violation of the agreement. The oven men did not object to the price paid but to loss of time, which was solely due to the lack of cars. To show that the Company are determined to keep their part of the agreement it is only necessary to state that the foremen have been notified that a breach of any of its terms on their part will be followed by their dismissal from the service of the Company. There are no "rumors of gathering clouds" except in the brains of the imaginative writer and a few morbid agitators who are still walking our streets as "labor organizers"

The writer shows a lamentable lack of practical knowledge of the coke industry when he states that the output should be greater now than previous to the strike. He evidently does not know that the capacity of an oven plant is limited.

The writer then resorts to the subterfuge of quoting from an unknown authority what he dare not assume the responsibility for himself. This policy on the part of a paper is neither courteous or wise and is sure to reduce the confidence of the public in its veracity. We have the emphatic assurance of Mr Tonkin that Mr. Hill does not own a controlling interest in the C. N. P. Coal Company and that he never attempted to dictate the company's policy in any way. The interesting process by which the "prominent smelting man" arrives at his conclusions are almost worthy the inventive genius of a Sherlock Holmes, but unfortunately the hypothesis upon which he builds his imaginary plot is a false and the whole structure falls at one blow. This blow is the fact that the Coal Company are exerting their every energy to the increasing of their output that the Canadian smelters may be supplied. Not one pound of coke goes, or has gone for the past year, to American smelters excepting to Northport where Rossland ores are treated, though the Company must have been strongly tempted by the splendid transportation facilities offered by the Northern while the C.P.R. were tied up.

The zeal and progressiveness of the Coal Company is still better seen in the actual figures of their output published from month to month. Notwithstanding two very serious drawbacks the coal output for May is several thousands of tons in access of any month in its history. These drawbacks are. 1. The use of box cars for coal. It requires from 15 to 20 minutes to load a box car at the tipple and thus the capacity of a tipple is limit- to about 30 cars per day. Loading box cars is hard work and the Coal Co. to obtain the maximum results employs two loading crews who work alternately. Were the regular coal cars supplied the Co's. daily output would be increased by 500 tons. 2. When the cars of coke and coal are loaded the C.P.R. are slow to have them moved. We have seen a train load of coal and coke left on the siding at Michel from Saturday until Tuesday morning.

A word in conclusion. The papers in the smelter districts are making whips for their own backs in unwarrantedly attacking the Coal Company. They are so prejudicing the labor market that it is impossible to get laborers of any description to come into the Crows Nest and as a result the fuel output is not as great as it might be. The contractors who have the construction of the coke ovens at Morrissey and Michel in hand cannot secure half enough men and their efforts to bring them in from outside points are rendered more or less futile by the false impressions spread abroad by agitators and sensation-writers. There is work for 1,000 more men in these three camps at the present time, not only as miners and oven-men, but as carpenters, lumbermen, masons and all classes of ordinary labor. Labor in the Crows Nest is well remunerated and none know it better than the miners, who with the exception of a few agitators, are working contentedly under the new agreement. It is the duty of those papers who have published ficticious and perfidious stories to the contrary, to give this denial the same prominence in their columns that the injustice done this district may be in some measure lessened.

Complaints have beeu made to us at different times of the great number of children running our streets when they should be at school. These complaints have been accompanied with requests that the subject be aired in these columns with a view to bringing it to the attention of those whose duty it is to enforce the law in the matter.

We believe that there is much foundation for these complaints. This week in the middle of a forenoon we observed, as did many others, a fight on our main-street between two lads who seldom see the inside of a school-room. A prominent citizen assures us that he personally knows of at least fifty children of school age who do not attend school at all, and there were doubtless many others of whom he knew nothing. This is not as it should be, nor is it in accordance with the school act which requires every child to attend school.

A child's mind is ever expanding and the operation is just as natural and continuous as the unfolding of the petals of the bursting buds in spring. It is therefore a self-evident fact that if the children are not learning that which is good and useful they must be learning that which is bad and harmful.

It is a mistake to think that a child who does not attend school grows up in ignorance, the trouble is he is, as a rule, not gaining the right kind of knowledge

The primary responsibility for this serious condition of affairs rests with the parents. It is hard to believe that any sane parent would deliberately allow his or her child to run loose on the streets and grow up in ignorance of the knowledge to be gained in our schools, which are rightly named "public schools."

Another word along this line, which unfortunately touches a far greater percentage of parents. Many children of this town are allowed to spend their evenings on the public streets, often to a late hour, long after they should be in their beds. This unwise practice reflects upon either the thoughtlessness or the wilful neglect of the parental authority. It is a lamentable fact that such parents are alone responsible for the need of curfew laws relative to this matter. It is to hoped that those in authority over children will grapple with the evil so that it may be said that Fernie does not need laws to expel children from its streets.

KING AND QUEEN OF SERVIA MURDERED.

King Alexander and Queen Draga, of Servia, were shot and killed in their royal palace at Belgrade during the night of the 10th inst. The assassination was the result of a revolutionary movement on the part of the army which has since met with the favor of the people. In July, 1900, he married Madame Draga Mashin, a widow much older than himself.

Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Arnold left Saturday for Calgary where they will make their home in future. Mr. Arnold having been transferred to that point.

H. L. Stephens was up from Morrissey Monday and stated that building wa going on rapidly at the new town of Morrissey Mines. He also stated that he was informed Sunday on reliable authority that the Great Northern had decided to extend their line from Morrissey to Michel and that work on the extension will begin within the next thirty days.

Monday afternoon Drs. King and Green were called to Fort Steele to amputate the leg of Enoch Johnson, the miner who met with an accident on Wild Horse creek last week. Blood poisoning had set in and operation was performed about 6 o'clock Monday evening, but Mr. Johnson's condition was such that it proved of no avail and he died about 2 o'clock Tuesday morning.

E. C. Smith, M. P. P., arrived in Cranbrook Monday afternoon on his way home from Victoria and in a talk with a representative of the Herald stated positively that he is out of provincial politics for good. In his talk Mr. Smith said that his only reason for supporting the Prior government was to secure the passage of the bill No. 16 and that when the McBride government came to the front he could not see his way clear to support McBride and still be loyal to his party. Mr. Smith says the election will not take place until November and he is of the opinion that while party lines will prevail on the mainland that this will not be the case on the island and that considerable difficulty will result therefrom.

A WATCH SPRING

is the motive power of the timepiece. If the spring has lost its temper the watch is erratic in its movements. If the spring is broken the watch stops.

WATCH REPAIRING

is in the hands of experts here. The most stubborn watches will be made to go and others cured of any irregular habits. The mechanism of all "movements" is familiar to us, and we do not have to do any experimenting.

P. G. Routh, of Fernie, has succeeded A. D. Drummond as constable at Moyie and left last week to take charge. Mr. Routh has served in the Mounted Police and has also rendered distinguished service in the South African war.

Mr. J. A. Rennie left on Thursday for Vancouver to attend the Grand Assembly of the Masons which meets in that city next week. Mr. Rennie was appointed by the local lodge as an official representative.

Mrs. Percy Routh who has been suffering from an attack of pleurisy at the Fernie hospital is now convalescing and paying Mrs. J. H. McMullin a few day's visit prior to her departure to join Mr. Routh at Moyie.

E. Y. Brake, car foreman, who has been employed in the Fernie yards for the past eighteen months has been transferred to Moosejaw where he has received a much more responsible position with the C.P.R. He will leave next week to assume his new duties. His place will be filled by Mr. Ross, of Cranbrook, who has held the position of car iuspector there.

A. J. Purdy & Co.'s fine corner stand has been greatly improved this week by the substitution of a plate glass front for the old one. The glass plates are of huge dimensions and the whole front gives this well-equipped store the up to date appearance it deserves. The plate was purchased a year ago when it was intended to turn that corner into a bar-room for the Hotel Fernie.

The Crow's Nest Trading Company has been making extensive improvements in their store buildings. The part recently occupied as a drug store, together with the stockroom behind has been turned into one and connected with the main-store by large arch-ways. This commodious apartment has been finished in white and makes a very cool and inviting grocery store. A new stairway has been put in. The upstairs will be used for offices. At the foot of the stairs a cash delivery system is being installed. When the remaining details are finished this will be a most complete and modern store.

The householders at Michel were considerably worked up last week over a lease which the officials of the Coal Company there presented to them for their signatures. A clause calling for the evacution of a house upon one day's notice by the Company being the bone of contention. It appears that the forms were prepared in Toronto and had not been examined at the Fernie office before being sent out. When the mistake was brought to the General Manager's notice the clause was immediately changed to read 30 days in accordance with the original intention of the Company and no further trouble was experienced in securing the signatures.

Important Meeting.

The subscribers to the Feruie Fire Protection fund will meet in Joyces' Hall on Monday evening at 9 o'clock to discuss final arrangements for the purchasing of a chemical engine, lot, the building of a fire hall and the electing of trustees. All subscribers should attend. The meeting is called by the committee comprising H. Bentley, F. Kanouse, F. Stork, H. Wilkes and A. H. Cree.

La Dell Concert.

The entertainment given by Miss La Dell. elocutionest, and Miss Scott soprano soloist, on Thursday evening was much appreciated by those who were fortunate enough to be present. The former is well known and she is a favorite wherever she appears. Her selections given here were well chosen and were delivered in her own inimitable style which captivated the audience. Miss Scott, though not so well known to a Fernie audience, received quite an ovation. She possesses a strong voice which when toned down is also sweet. Both ladies responded liberally to encores. Mr. Leslie Staebler acted as accompaniest. The house, unfortunately, was not a large one and it is feared that little more than expenses were cleared. The fire in the woods no doubt accounted for some being unable to attend.

J. A. McDonell, the contractor for the coke oven excavation work at Michel was in town on Thursday. He reports a great scarcity of men for his work.

Mr. J. L. Jamieson, of Cranbrook, C.P.R. locomotive engineer, has been transferred to the branch line between Fernie and Coal Creek mines.

General Superintendent Stockett was away several days inspecting the mines at the diffent colieries and returned to his work in the office on Wednesday.

Miss Dudley, daughter of Mr. Dudley C.P.R. freight agent, who has been visiting in town returned to her home in Kimberley this week.

Jos. Carter, of Nelson, district passenger agent, and O. K. Becker, of Nelson, district freight agent, were in town this week on business connected with the C.P.R. at this point.

Mr. J. W. Nunn, of Morrissey Mines, has been employed as book-keeper by the Trites-Wood Co. Mrs. Nunn joined her husband here on Wednesday and they have taken up housekeeping in Mr. Richard's cottage.

The heavy shower which opportunely arrived last night has had a marvellous effect in clearing the atmosphere of smoke and other impurities and also in reducing the extreme temperature which has prevailed for several days.

Mr. J. McLaughlin of Rossland arrived last week to take a position in the grocery department of the Trites-Wood Co. He is a well known sport and excels at lacrosse and hockey. He will therefore be a great acquisition to the local clubs.

The new premises of A. W. Bleasdell's drug business in the Wallace block have been nicely fitted up. The large store room has been partitioned and a suitable dispensing room has been fitted up in the rear. The front room is commodious and it has a clean and neat appearance.

Our attention has been drawn to a number of petty thefts which have occurred recently in different parts of the town Small articles such as a wash tub and articles of food are reported to have sneaked away in the night. Here is room for the police to work.

Mr. Elmer Smith, of Toronto, arrived this week to accept a position in the dry-good's department in the Trites-Wood Co. store. Mr. Smith is a noted hockey player, having played in the Marlborough team last season. He is also a good lacrosse player and will doubtless help the local club this season.

Mr. and Mrs. Herdman are mourning the sad and sudden loss of their bright little girl. The little one caught cold some time ago and not fearing anything serious she was treated in the usual way. But alas, on Monday acute symptoms of pneumonia set in and she died early on Tuesday morning. The funeral took place Wednesday, the services being performed by Rev. C. W. Houghton. Much sympathy is felt for the parents.

A picnic party was held in the woods near the recreation grounds yesterday afternoon which was much enjoyed by all who attended it. Towards evening the threatening condition of the weather induced the merry makers to seek shelter and all proceeded to "The Quarters" where the contents of numerous baskets made a splendid spread. The latter part of the evening was spent in music and dancing.

The Casino Comedy Co.

This company played on Monday and Tuesday evenings, and finding a decided lack of appreciation in their entertaining abilities evinced by the Fernie people they cancelled their third evening engagment. The company is not a success and they do not deserve the support of the public. Their show is of the lightest of light vaudeville variety, the joke are old, the music very ordinary and the farces clumsy and overdrawn. The dancing and the acrobatic and contortion acts were the best features of the performance

Thirty-eight Chinamen left for Victoria this morning. They are the balance of the 85 Chinamen who came in a few weeks ago to work on the coke ovens here. The others left last week. The Chinamen are not a success as oven-pullers.

The liquor licence meeting which is to be held at Cranbrook on Monday is an important one, there being no less than 46 applicants. There are at present only 56 licences granted in the whole of the Fort Steele district. The list contains 6 new applicants at Morrissey Mines.

The FREE PRESS is in receipt of a letter from "A Miner" of Coal Creek complimenting us on the article headed "A Needed Reform" contained in last week's issue. Editors are so used to criticism and censure that a word of commendation is an agreeable change for which we thank our correspondent. The letter is entitled "An Added Reform" and strikes deeper into the evil than we attempted last week. It was received too late for publication this week but may appear in our next.

A serious accident occurred at Scovil Lake between Rat Portage and Winnipeg on Wednesday morning when an engine and a car of fish went through a bridge and sank in 14 feet of water. Several passenger coaches were attached but these did not leave the rails. The engine was one of the new and powerful Scotch locomotives. The engineer and fireman were drowned. The former is Mr. Wm. Johnson of Rat Portage, who is the father-in-law of Mr. Robert Black of The McRae Lumber Co.

Perry Creek Mines.

Mr. Albert Banks one of the promoters of The East Kootenay Placer Mining Co. was in town this week. He leaves shortly for the east to purchase additional machinery for the plant already in operation. Mr. W. R. Ross and Dr. Bonnell were at Perry Creek this week and they report a very satisfactory clean-up from the first work of the big steam shovel. So satisfied are the director that they have decided to invest in an additional machine to seperate the coarse from the fine gravel, thus facilitating the washing process.

Notice is hereby given that thirty days after date I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for a licence to prospect for coal and petroleum on the following described lands, situate on toe west side of Elk river and about two miles north of Chas. WOMAN'S WORLD

MISS ISABELLE HAGNER.

The Clever and Tactful Secretary to Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt.

Miss Isabelle Hagner, social secretary to the wife of the president of the United States, is a marvel of tactfulness and efficiency. She is to Mrs. Roosevelt the invaluable friend, the promoter of social harmony, the manual of social tactics and the smoother of the social way.

Miss Hagner is not a Roosevelt product. She belongs to Washington and is deep rooted in the soil of smart society. There is no one who better understands the social structure of Washington than this clever, invincible girl, who was born to affluence and position and who when the necessity came proved herself equal to a personal encounter with the world.

Eight years ago the most popular debutante, the toast of the season and the leader of cotillons was Belle Hagner, and even then she possessed a woman's courage despite her girlish years. She presided over her father's house, advised her motherless sisters and brothers, attended more luncheons, dinners, teas and balls than any girl in her set, and she was never mentally or physically fatigued. Her wonderful vitality proved a stimulus to her natural ambition.

Today, with an infinitely more strenuous life to be lived, Belle Hagner is as beautiful and as much a society favorite as formerly and withal she performs the duties of secretary to half a dozen women of fashion, who swear by her talents and advice.

To Mrs. Roosevelt she is well nigh indispensable, and the two women are the closest friends. At Mrs. Roosevelt's private teas and musicales it is Miss Hagner who is "the second in command." She presides over the tea table and exercises great care that conflicting elements never tread upon each other's sensitive toes. She prevents many a heartache by arranging the White House lists of guests so that different sets and cliques will dovetail with social nicety. She knows every one by name and rank and reputation, and nothing seems like work to Miss Hagner. She simply glories in the responsibility that rests upon her, and it is her pride apparently to assist Mrs. Roosevelt in making historically famous the social record of this administration.—Washington Times.

Exquisite Old Age.

You sometimes see a woman whose old age is as exquisite as was the perfect bloom of her youth. You wonder how this has come about; you wonder how it is her life has been a long and happy one. Here are some of the reasons:

She knew how to forget disagreeable things.

She kept her nerves well in hand and inflicted them on no one.

She mastered the art of saying pleasant things.

She did not expect too much from her friends.

She made whatever work came to her congenial.

She retained her illusions and did not believe all the world wicked and unkind.

She did unto others as she would be done by, and now that old age has come to her and there is a halo of white hair about her head she is loved and considered. This is the secret of a long life and a happy one.

The Fad For Simplicity.

Thanks to the fact that some of the greatest thinkers and teachers and artists of modern times have interested themselves in the problem of beauty as it concerns the commoner things of life, the number of those who are able to plant deep in knowledge their desire to make home beautiful is constantly multiplying, and the crop of simple house furnishings is constantly increasing. It has, in fact, grown large enough of late to attract the attention even of the thoughtless. They, being always ready for something new, have of late been taking slips from this new and sturdy growth and have been planting them in their shallow ground, and behold another prodigious growth, this time of plain furniture and severe draperies, highly polished mahogany tables costing $100 each, but plain, absolutely plain, and wall papers costing $3 a roll, but severe and simple in design.—Caroline Hunt in Chautauquan.

Get Out of It Quickly.

A distressing symptom of neurasthenia is a chronic state of evil foreboding. The victim of nerves studies herself, her ailments, her wants, her loneliness, or she is forever anticipating trouble for her husband or her children. Living so much within herself, it is easy for her to fall into a habit of brooding over trouble, be the same real or imaginary. This condition of worry not only works injury to her health, but reacts upon her disposition. Her ideas become narrowed and insular, and she loses interest in and sympathy with others. The home is no longer a pleasant place for any one within it and least of all for the sufferer, whose unhappy condition might, although she probably would not believe it, be traced to her own mistake in persistently ignoring the demand of nature for sunlight, pure air and innocent diversion.

Maid and Mistress.

Many housekeepers constantly speak of "teaching a maid" when they might with advantage allow the maid to teach them. As a rule, the housekeeper has lived in but two houses, conducted much upon the same lines—her own and her mother's. The maid has seen the innermost workings of many households. Sometimes she has seen better economy, better cooking, more thorough cleaning. Accept a new idea from her now and then and gratify her by saying, "I am so pleased Mrs. So-and-so taught you this; it is a great help to me." If on the contrary you never allow her to tell what she acquired in former situations, you make her whole past life and experience of no account; something to regret and forget.

Lighting a Child's Room.

The lighting of a child's room is a very important matter from both sanitary and convenient standpoints. If gas is the illuminant, it should never be lit longer than is absolutely necessary.

If a night light is required, a little night lamp should be used. It should be so placed that its rays do not strike the child's face. Many a child squints because it too often plays or sleeps where the rays from a light strike its eyes. Grown people, from their superior height, are prone to forget this fact. Poor eyesight in children is very often caused by negligence on the part of their elders to provide a shaded light in the room where the children are playing.

To Clear the Complexion.

The very best remedy for a muddy skin is a warm bath every night. With the bath there must be soap enough to make a heavy lather, and there should be rinsing water. A nice little flesh scrubbing brush is a good thing, and it can be used freely upon the skin and with all the force you can muster, enough to make the flesh glow. Scrub it until it is a bright pink, but no more. Then rinse off with clear water, and you will have the foundation for a clear complexion. Eat plenty of grapes and oranges, also lettuce, celery, young onions and other crisp green vegetables.

Beautiful Big Waists.

The matter of a slender waist is one that is open to discussion. It is a fact that the ideals of beauty as shown in the examples of ancient sculpture do not give a woman a tiny waist, nor one that would even pass for small. Remember that the waist of the Venus de Milo, that lovely thing that is the idol and despair of all artists, measured twenty-seven inches, and she is only 5 feet 2 inches tall, and that attractive figures of art all have large waists.

A Wall Finish.

Wooden cornices of a wood to match the baseboards are the latest finish to the side wall of a room. Sometimes it is in L shape, put in at the angle of the wall and ceiling, one part on each. This wooden cornice, it is asserted, is the most artistic wall finish. A wall should have a crown as well as a foot, and it is best that this cornice or crown should agree in material and color with the foot.

The Kitchen Mirror.

A looking glass in the kitchen will be found to inspire the cook or mistress, if she does her own work, to a much neater appearance, better carriage and pleasanter smile than she was in the habit of wearing before its introduction. At the same time she is not apt to stand before it as much as her less busy sister may imagine.

The Shortened Skirt.

A skirt that just escapes the ground is not only convenient, but it is far better for a woman when walking to stand up straight than it is to lean over to one side, as one almost invariably does when grasping a long skirt to hold it off the ground. Therefore the shortened skirt is healthful too.

The Bathroom Pipes.

When there is sickness in the house, the bathroom pipes require special attention. One of the best disinfectants is carbolic acid, allowing four tablespoonfuls to a quart of cold water. Pour this in the pipes and allow it to stand for twenty minutes or so before flushing.

Jacquard is a name applied to materials woven on jacquard looms, which automatically select the threads and make the designs formerly produced on hand looms only.

In Sweden women vote for the municipal councils, and the municipal councils elect members of the upper house of the parliament.

When about to scald milk, wet the saucepan with cold water to prevent the milk from scorching.

To cut hard boiled eggs in smooth slices dip the knife in water.

DRESS HINTS.

Cornmeal wet in benzine and rubbed over gloves while on the hands is recommended as a perfect method of cleaning.

If cotton blouses are slightly damped and pressed with a warm iron after being worn, they will remain fresh a much longer time.

Before throwing aside a garment remove the buttons or hooks and eyes. Sometimes the want of one of these trifles is very great, particularly if one is far from the shops.

Do not wear a hat or bonnet out of proportion to the head, no matter what the prevailing mode may be. The long, full face surmounted with a tiny hat or bonnet is ludicrous.

The clothes that a girl has no opportunity to wear except on Sunday should be the best she can afford in quality, style and fitness, but never so gay as to attract any one's attention.

No matter how limited the wardrobe space may be, a hatbox for every hat should be the rule. The head covering necessarily gets very hard wear and needs exceptional care because of the perishable quality of the materials usually employed.

For Tired People.

In my book of choice records I have the following simple and available recipe, a medicinal bath for the nervously worn and those who cannot sleep of nights. It was the prescription of an old physician, wise in his day and generation. It is not claimed as a cure all, but some degree of relief I believe is in store for those who give it a faithful trial:

Take of sea salt four ounces, spirits of ammonia two ounces, spirits of camphor two ounces, of pure alcohol eight ounces and sufficient hot water to make a full quart of the liquid. Dissolve the sea salt in the hot water and let stand until cool. Pour into the alcohol the spirits of ammonia and camphor. Add the salt water, shake well and bottle for use. With a soft sponge dipped in this mixture wet over the surface of the whole body. Rub vigorously until the skin glows.

When nervous or "blue" or wakeful, do not omit this bath. The rest and refreshing that follow will amply repay the effort required to prepare it.—Household.

Using Gasoline.

"After I have washed my white gloves and ribbons in gasoline," says a writer in the Woman's Home Companion, "I do not throw it out, but pour it into a quart fruit jar, then screw the cover down tight. It is then ready for numberless other uses, such as dampening a cloth with it and wiping off my gasoline stove and my teakettle. It removes the grease and dust better than soap and water. When there are no fires in the house, I slightly dampen a cloth with gasoline and wipe over my carpets and the zinc under the stoves. Its most practical use, however, is in the bathroom and lavatory. The spatter marks of hard water are difficult to get off without a liberal use of hot water, lye, soap and labor. I have found that the white porcelain surface of bath tub and lavatory can be polished to spotless condition with almost no labor if a cloth dipped in gasoline is used. It would answer as well with a zinc bath tub, I know, for it polishes zinc beautifully."

The Woman Who Drifts.

The woman who drifts—that is, tires quickly of this place or that and is quick to make changes—is rarely either a happy or prosperous creature. Self guidance is not always the best, for unless it be steered by a higher power it is very apt to make the voyage of life a hazardous one. Constantly drifting in new directions, without any definite or serious aim, is giving a life without any purpose to ennoble it or any usefulness to make it worth living. Stay where you are until you are sure that you can better yourself by making a change and learn to make the most of the opportunities that lie within your reach if you would be successful. An old proverb says, "Changes are lightsome, and fools are fond of them." Patient, well directed efforts must lead to strength and light and reward the ambition from which they sprung.

Injuries to Children's Heads.

A child sometimes falls on its head and becomes unconscious. Generally it soon comes around and is itself again, but in any case the child must be put to bed and kept there quietly till the next day. If its feet are cold, fill a bottle with hot water, wrap it in flannel and apply it to the extremities. Wet rags should be applied to the head and changed frequently. An excellent way of cooling the forehead is to apply a little eau de cologne or methylated spirit and then to fan the forehead briskly. This causes the spirit to evaporate and leaves the forehead as cold as if ice had been applied. As head injuries are dangerous, especially to children, whose bones are very soft, it is always best to send for a doctor in any case.

Flatiron Pincushion.

One of the latest of kitchen utensils to take its place on the dressing table is the flatiron, which has been converted into a thing of ornament as well as use. Its use in the bedroom is that of a pincushion, and it is stood face outward in the position in which good housewives put away this kitchen bric-a-brac. Of course it is only a flatiron in shape, for it is made of stout cardboard cut the shape of a small flatiron face. This is padded with cotton and covered smoothly with satin. A handle of heavy wire is added and wound with narrow ribbon, which is tied in bows where the handle joins the cushion part.

LET LIGHT INTO THE HOUSE

Better to Have Wall Paper Fade Than Your Children.

Most housekeepers yearn after artistic home furnishing, and few can resist the temptation to shroud the windows in heavy tapestried hangings and to draw down the shades in order to carefully exclude any beams of sunshine which might have the audacity to peep in. Oh, the placid egotism of finite intellect!

Subdued light is essential to artistic effect in your handsomely furnished parlor, is it, madam? We must assume, then, that art had little to do with the creation and that a sad offense against good taste was committed in that time so very, very long ago when, the beautifying of this poor old world being all complete, "there was light."

Do the trees and the grass and the flowers ever suffer in appearance from being viewed in the strong radiance of sunshine? It is the false complexion that blooms best in shadow. If your rooms will not bear the light, it is the fault of the furnishing. Choose the better part. If need be, banish those dust catching cabinets, those delicate and perhaps slightly soiled upholsteries, those buhl tables and gilt chairs, too ornate for the common daylight.

And yet, again, if you dared put up your shades those bright, intrusive rays would spoil the carpet, would they? Don't have carpet, then; don't have rugs; don't have hand painted cushions; don't have silk tissued draperies; don't have anything inimical to the free admittance of the blessed sunshine, which disinfects and beautifies and makes healthful whatever it is permitted to shine upon. It is better to see the roses on your wall paper fade than those on the cheeks of your children.

It is a mistake to suppose that the beautiful house is the gloomy one, where the guest takes a header, as it were, into the parlor, trusting that luck will help him to a chair, and where people engaged in conversation peer at each other out of dusky corners. Let in the light, with its accompanying cheer and gladness.—Exchange.

Folding Workbag.

Here is an invaluable little comfort for the home, and it is easily made. It is a folding workbag, the frame of which may be made of either straight or curved strips of wood, with a pivot or wooden peg through the legs, fitted loosely enough to allow the frame to close and open. The bag may be made of mercerized cotton or denim and has a row of handy pockets inside for the little odds and ends that the busy sewer needs.

Sponge Fishing.

Sponges are gathered by means of a long pole with a hook attached to the lower end, with which the sponge fisherman is very expert. He lies upon his stomach in the stern of a boat looking through an ordinary water bucket with a glass bottom, which does away with the glare from the water and allows him to survey the bottom leisurely while the boatman rows or sculls the boat. A schooner lies at anchor near by, from which half a dozen or more of these small boats fish. It returns to port when it is loaded, or at night, as the case may be.

Children and Sweets.

If the children covet sweets, let them have them, but the proper kind of sweets. Cheap candies, too much jam, sweet cakes and lumps of sugar are bad. Pure chocolate, not chocolate candies, and honey are good. Honey is more easily assimilated than many "predigested" foods. It is a concentrated food and furnishes the same elements of nutrition as starch and sugar, imparting warmth and energy.

The Flour Barrel.

Keep a flour barrel elevated at least two inches from the floor on a rack to allow a current of fresh air to pass under it and prevent dampness collecting at the bottom. Do not allow any groceries or provisions with a strong odor near the flour barrel. Nothing absorbs odors more certainly than flour.

Soap.

Soap improves with keeping, so it should be bought in large quantities. Before storing it, however, it is well to cut the bars into convenient pieces, for this is most easily done when it is soft. The cutting may be done with a piece of string or wire more easily than with a knife.

Mattress Filling.

One of the cheapest things with which to fill a mattress is a pine fiber, and it is a pretty good sort of filling. No one without experience can imagine the different varieties of hair which go into mattresses of different grades. There are eight or nine different kinds or mixtures.

Slater Shoe Advertising

Wearer's Satisfaction

Short talks by the Slater Shoe ad man. No. 4.

—Because the "Slater Shoe" is widely advertised;

'because a hundred thousand dollars has been spent in making it known,

'the makers could not afford to risk the entire loss of this expensive reputation by turning out shoes which do not in every particular back up the makers' advertised claims.

So that the wearer secures through "Slater Shoe" advertising assurance that the shoe is not skimped in the hidden parts, that wear-worthy materials are used throughout, that the shoe must give entire satisfaction,

'because an advertised shoe which does not satisfy, is subject to ten times as much criticism as a shoe which merely wears but does not make distinctive claims of superiority, such as those made for the "Slater Shoe."

And this large advertising expenditure, besides forcing the makers to maintain the quality of the "Slater Shoe," reduces selling cost, increases factory out-put—permits specializing, with all that means in economy of making.

The Slater Shoe

Made in Canada 40 years. Goodyear welted.
For men $4.00 and $5.50.
For women $3.50 and $5.00.

IN THE STOKEHOLD.

Feeding the Many Ravenous Furnaces In an Ocean Liner.

The work of eternally pushing the old ship on past the meridians—the race against time and the sun and the interest on the money—begins in the gloomy stokehold. You have heard that the stokehold is hot, and when you have clambered into it over disorderly piles of still smoking ashes, steadying yourself by taking incautious hold of burning hand rails, and stand for the first time face to face with the furnaces you feel assured of the fact.

But, besides being hot, it is the most active, interesting part of the ship. It is her whole life. You must spend years studying it before you can stand there in command of your watch with your hand on the feed check valves, your eyes on everything in general, and keep the steam up where it belongs in spite of the ravenous engines sucking it away from you; years before you can tell, in one swift glance, whether a fireman is burning the greatest possible amount of coal per hour in his fires with the least amount of waste.

The problem is this: Under a certain large quantity of water, which is continually changing, build thirty fires, and by means of them, notwithstanding they must all be continually replenished with fresh coal and freed from ashes, keep it at a perfectly even temperature (within a very few degrees) day and night for an indefinite period. The game is the more interesting because a ship can never afford to spare more than just barely enough space for her propelling machinery; consequently everything—engines, boilers, furnaces—must be worked to the very limit of its capacity.

The game goes as regularly by turns and in cycles as progressive whist. Starting with a few fires first in order, the doors are opened to admit a few shovelfuls of coal thrown quickly into the front of the furnaces, then closed again as soon as possible lest too much cold air should enter. As soon as they are closed the fires next in order are served the same way and then a third group. Next the "green" coal in the first fires is raked back through the furnaces to complete its combustion. After another short interval it is necessary to "slice" them—that is, probe them with long pointed bars to lift the clinkers from the grates and make air passages. Finally it is time to stoke again.

Ginseng as a Remedy.

No matter what the disease, the first thing the Chinaman thinks of is ginseng. His faith in his medicine helps to cure him beyond any doubt. Given such trust in any physician or any drug, there is no question but what it would reduce our mortality record. If a man wants to sober up after a night of feasting and wines, the remedy is ginseng. If he has used too much the opium pipe, give him ginseng. If the baby's stomach is out of order, put ginseng into its food. If the appetite is gone, it calls for the same drug. The rich season their food with it as we would with pepper, believing that it aids digestion. The aged Chinaman uses it in the belief that it keeps him from growing feeble.—Medical Talk.

Sunflower Fuel.

In Russia sunflower stalks gathered from the fields and dried in piles have entirely replaced firewood. In fact, these stalks are preferred even to pine wood, producing a quick and hot flame fire. About 2,000 pounds of such firewood are gathered from an acre of land, thus adding a great boon to a district where wood is scarce. Sunflower shells are also used for heating purposes not only in private houses, but in large factories as well. They are burned in ovens specially prepared for their consumption.

A Town Under One Roof.

What would the ordinary woman say to a family that used every day 20,000 napkins, 12,000 towels, 3,800 sheets, 20,000 plates and 18,000 knives and forks? This is what is required by one of the large hotels in New York, at which a man cannot live for much less than $8 a day. The hotel will accommodate 3,000 people, besides 1,500 servants to wait on them.—Youth's Companion.

Too Much Ambition.

"I can't understand why you discharged my boy. You advertised for a boy with ambition, and he"—

"That's just it, madam—that's just it. He wasn't in the place two days before he had his feet on my desk and was smoking my cigars."

The Trick In Omelet Making.

The omelet is the supposed "impossible" in the average kitchen, when in reality it is but a moments' work which any ordinary cook can accomplish. And once a simple omelet is achieved there is no end to the pretty and toothsome variations easily within one's skill. In the first place, omelets need not be "tossed," but just handled calmly and practically, and, in the second place, the puffy omelet is the "souffle," by far inferior to what might be called the "true omelet," which is not puffy at all nor subject to falling.

The one point in omelet making which must be imperatively observed regards the pan. It is not at all necessary to buy a regular omelet pan, as a smooth, rather heavy, medium sized spider answers the purpose equally well. But it must be kept sacred to omelets—absolutely never appropriated to other uses. It must never be washed, but cleaned by salt and brisk rubbing. Before using melt a little lard in it, drain it off and rub out well with a dry cloth until thoroughly clean and shining smooth. It is not too much to say that a proper pan is two-thirds of the battle in successful omelet making.

Never make an omelet for several persons at once, individual ones being both more satisfactory and more easily managed.—Ella Morris Kretschmar in Woman's Home Companion.

Very Aggravating.

Three-year-old Elizabeth was exceedingly busy the other morning when her father interrupted her play, and she piped up: "It is too aggravating to have a man come and kiss you when you are trying to fold a shawl. Really, it is too aggravating."

The Caustic Carlyle.

J. E. Boehm, the sculptor, once met Gladstone at a country house and was immensely impressed by the extent and diversity of the statesman's knowledge, as revealed in his conversation. Boehm was still full of the subject when the morning arrived for Carlyle's sitting for a bust, and to the philosopher the sculptor poured forth his admiration for Gladstone's intimate acquaintance with subjects so far apart as gardening and Greek. Carlyle listened for a time in scornful silence; then he said, "And what did he say about your work?" "Oh, nothing," said Boehm. "He doesn't know anything about sculpture." "Of course," growled Carlyle, "of course, and he showed his knowledge about things that you didn't understand. No doubt if you asked Blackie he'd say that Gladstone knew nothing about Greek, and the gardener would tell you that he knew nothing whatever of gardening."

Sweet Scotch Voices.

For real beauty of speech many experts think that we must go to the glens that surround the highland capital. Sir Morell Mackenzie used to say that the prettiest speakers were to be found in the Badenoch district of Inverness-shire. A wider knowledge would probably have induced him to modify his views and give the palm to the glen folk of the north and west of Inverness-shire. The voices of the highlanders are set low, and yet the articulation is clear, distinct and dramatic. One inclines to liken their speech to many beautiful things—to the clear, mellow note of a bell or the murmur of running water. The inflection of the voice is singularly engaging, rising and falling with exquisite cadences like bewitching music, and this, be it remembered, is the speech of the common people.

A Nation of Smokers.

Notwithstanding all one hears about the growth of the cigarette habit in this country, England occupies a comparatively lowly place as a smoking nation, says the London Tatler. Statistics prove that as smokers Dutchmen are well ahead of all the other nations. Germans come second, although, man for man, they consume less than half as much tobacco as Dutchmen. Three times as many cigarettes are consumed annually in England as in either Germany or Holland, but as consumers of pipe tobacco both these countries are far ahead of us.

A Sap Sucking Squirrel.

A correspondent of Forest and Stream tells of a curious sight he saw in the woods near Liberty, Me. It was a little red squirrel which was having the best of times gnawing through the outer bark of young sugar maples and sucking the sap. He was so intent upon his business that he did not stir when the spectator passed by, but kept on satisfying his sweet tooth.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed for ever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION.—C. W Snow & Co., Syracuse, N. Y., write: "Please send us ten gross of pills. We are selling more of Parmelee's Pills than any other pill we keep. They have a great reputation for the cure of Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint." Mr. Chas. A. Smith, Lindsay, writes: "Parmelee's Pills are an excellent medicine. My sister has been troubled with severe headache, but these pills have cured her."

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grevious ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result, improved appetite. Northrup & Lyman, of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, guaged by the opinions of scientists, this wine approaches nearest perfection of any on the market. All druggists sell it.

THE WAY TO BE WELL.

The Blood Must Be Kept Rich and Pure and the Nerves Strong.

Good health is the most precious treasure any man or woman can have. But good health can only be had by kepeing the blood rich and pure, and the nerves strong. If the blood is allowed to become weak and watery, the whole system is weakened and falsl an easy prey to disease. There is no medicine can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in keeping the blood rich and pure, and the nerves vigorous and strong. Every dose helps to create new blood, and by a fair use of the pills, pale, sickly people are made bright, active and strong. Here is proof. Mr. Robert Lee, New Westminster, B. C., says: "Before I began using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, my blood was in a very impure state, and as a result pimples that were very itchy, broke out all over my body. My appetite was fickle, and I was easily tired. My wife urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I got half a dozen boxes. By the time I had used them I was completely restored to health, my skin was smooth and clear, and my appetite good."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills do not purge—they simply make pure, rich blood. That is why they cure such troubles as indigestion, neuralgia, rheumatism, anaemia, partial paralysis, St. Vitas dance, scrofula, erysipelas, and the ailments so common to women, young and old. Sold by all dealers or sent postpaid, at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

If a girl wants to get rid of an undersirable suitor all she has to do is to appear on the stage of action with her hair done up in curl papers.

Mr. T. J. Humes, Columbus, Ohio, writes: "I have been afflicted for some time with Kidney and Liver Complaints, and find Parmelee's Pills the best medicine for these diseases. These Pills do not cause pain or griping, and should be used when a cathartic is required. They are gelatine coated, and rolled in Flour of Liquorice to preserve their purity and give them a pleasant, agreeable taste.

The Taglische Rundschau reports that the Czar of Russia is seriously considering an alteration in the law of succession with the view to enabling his eldest daughter to ascend the Russian throne, failing a son. The project will inevitably meet with strong opposition, and especially from the disinherited grand dukes.

A LIFE SAVER.

Baby's Own Tablets Make Children Well and Keeps Them Well.

Emergencies come quickly in the lives of little ones, and the wise mother will always keep at hand a reliable medicine to cope with them. Delay may mean the loss of a precious little life. There is no medicine can take the place of Baby's Own Tablets in relieving, curing and preventing the minor ailments of children. "If you could see my baby now," writes Mrs. James Boviah, of French River, Ont., "and compare him with his condition before I began giving him Baby's Own Tablets, you would not know it was the same child. From the age of four up to twenty-one months he was constantly ill, and was wasted away to a skeleton. I gave him a great many medicines, but always without result, until I heard of Baby's Own Tablets and began giving them to him. Almost at once they helped him and he is now a fine, fat, healthy child. I now always keep the Tablets in the house."

The Tablets contain none of the poisonous drugs found in "soothing" medicines, and can be given with absolute safety to a new-born babe. Sold by all druggists or sent by mail at 25 cents a box by writing to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A Bath at Tiflis.

To take a bath at Tiflis is to court a wonderful experience. Abundant springs of water, strongly impregnated with sulphureted hydrogen, supply the building, and in its vaulted chambers, far below the street, there is no sound out the splash of the fountain and the rolling echo of one's own voice. Henry Norman gives a description of the masseur who presides over the bath and makes its most eccentric feature.

"He is a Persian, who speaks but a word or two of Russian. His head is shaved, a rag is twisted round his waist, and his feet are dyed orange.

"First he rubs you, and then suddenly, as you lie face downward on the marble slab, he is upon your back, his feet dug into your spine, his hands grasping your shoulders, to increase the pressure. Slowly, with skillful appreciation of every muscle, his feet grind up and down your back. They encircle your neck. They are on your head.

"Then he vaults lightly off, and in a moment from a linen bag filled with soap he has squeezed clouds of perfumed bubbles, and you are hidden in them from head to foot as completely as if you had fallen into a snowdrift. You are not absolutely bruised, but you are clean."

Sweetness That Never Palls.

During a sleepless night the Vizier Mujjeduddin Kumija dispatched his slave, Bedruddin Ejas, to bring him sweets. The slave procured a copper kettle heaped with many kinds of fruits and sweets, and Mujjeduddin began to eat.

"You relish them, my master?" asked the slave.

The vizier shrugged his shoulders. "These fruits are sweet—for the moment," he said, "but show me a fruit the sweetness of which will endure even unto the judgment day."

"Such fruits there are, my master," cried the slave and hastened toward the Mesched Husa, where he awoke the starving orphans in the house of Aliwin and led them forth and into the room of his master. Overjoyed, the famished children devoured the fruits.

"Look, oh, my master," said the slave. Here you see fruits the sweetness of which endures unto the judgment day.".

Betrothal Customs.

The Scandinavian bridegroom presents to his betrothed a prayer book and many other gifts, which usually include a goose. She in turn gives him, especially in Sweden, a shirt, and this he invariably wears on his wedding day. Afterward he puts it away, and under no circumstances will he wear it again while alive. But he wears it in his grave, and there are Swedes who earnestly believe not only in the resurrection of the body, but in the veritable resurrection of the betrothal shirts of such husbands as have never broken any of their marriage vows. The Swedish widower must destroy on the eve of his second marriage the bridal shirt which his first wife gave him.

To Boil Water Without a Kettle.

"My wife and I," says a traveling man, "were once in a hotel where we couldn't get any boiling water. After we had discussed the situation my wife asked me if I had an envelope in my satchel. I got one out, when she told me to fill it with water and hold it over the gas jet. I hesitated, but finally did it and expected to see the envelope blaze up every minute. But it didn't blaze. The envelope took on a little soot, but that was all. The water boiled in time, and the envelope was as good as ever when the experiment was at an end. I don't know the chemistry of the process, but try it yourself and see if it will not work."

The Oriental Amethyst.

The oriental amethyst is really a violet colored sapphire, which is an exceedingly rare gem and of brilliant luster. It is regarded as a sacred stone, and it is used to ornament the cross and the pastoral ring of Catholic bishops. The ancients often used the amethyst for cutting figures both in relief and in intaglio, and there is in the national library of France a delicately wrought profile of Mæcenas, a Roman statesman of Octavius' time, engraved on amethyst by Dioscorides, one of the four celebrated engravers mentioned by Pliny.

Caught the Students.

There was formerly a barber in Harvard square who caught the university custom with this classic appeal which some friendly patron suggested:

Siste, viator,
Submitte collum tonsori
Et abi alter Adonis.

"Traveler, stay, submit your neck to the barber and depart a second Adonis."

Businesslike.

"Some people," said the caller with a slight sneer, "seem to think that signing checks is the most important thing in life."

"I know it," rejoined Senator Sorghum, "and it's a mistake, my boy; a sad mistake. Getting the money in bank in the first place is what counts."

Agreed on One Point.

"But I am so unworthy, darling," he murmured as he held the dear girl's hand in his.

"Oh, George," she sighed, "if you and papa agreed on every other point as you do on that how happy we could be!"

Superstitious.

"What! Did you let the examinations go by again, Carl?"

WALKED LIKE AN OLD MAN

Had Lost All His Energy and Was Discouraged — The Great Kidney Remedy Cured Mim Completely.

Nicholet, Que., June 8.—(Special)—Of the many people in this neighborhood who have been brought back to health and strength through the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills few are in better position to give the public the benefit of their experience than Joseph Hamel. He knows both sides of the question—the suffering and the relief.

"I suffered from Kidney Disease for three or four years," says r. Hamel. "For two years I would take two or three days off work a week. I was continually sick and forced to walk like an old man. I lost all my energy and became discouraged.

"After trying a lot of medicine that only gave relief for a while I was fortunate enough to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. After using three boxes I was completely cured."

Mr. Hamel is enthusiastic in his praises of Dodd's Kidney Pills and there is not the slightest doubt of the correctness of his statement as dozens of people can testify to his illness and cure.

TOTALLY DEAF.—Mr S. E. Crandell, Port Berry, writes: "I contracted a severe cold last winter, which resulted in my becoming totally deaf in one ear and partially so in the other. After trying various remedies, and consulting several doctors, without obtaining any relief, I was advised to try Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. I warmed the oil and poured a little of it into my ear, and before one-half the bottle was used my hearing was completely restored. I have heard of other cases of deafness being cured by the use of this medicine."

Two Kinds of Wag.

In an Iowa law court an attorney was arguing with great earnestness and eloquence. In the midst of his argument he paused a moment, says the Green Bag, and said:

"I see your honor shakes his head at that statement. I desire to reaffirm it, although your honor dissents."

"I have not intimated," replied the judge, "how I should construe the evidence or what my decision will be in the case, and your remark is uncalled for."

"You shook your head."

"That may be true," the court replied. "There was a fly on my ear, and I reserved the right to remove it in any manner I saw fit. Proceed with your argument."

Caleb Cushing's Dress.

Caleb Cushing's peculiar manner of dress and his eccentricities were frequently the subject of newspaper articles. Although quite a large and portly man, his clothes always seemed to be two or three sizes too large for him and of the cheapest material. He always during both summer and winter were a large cloth cap pulled close down on his head and altogether looked anything but the brilliant jurist and diplomat. One day, after reading an unusually caustic comment upon his dress, he remarked to the writer, "I guess by the time that fool is as old as I am he will care more for comfort than fashion."

MORRISSEY

From The Despatch

Frank Sliger, of Ft. Steele, has opened a cigar store near the Windsor hotel He also carries a stock of aereated water.

Jas. Carter, of Nelson, District Passenger Agent for the C. P. R., spent Tuesday in town looking up business for his road. It is understood that a C. P. R. ticket office will be opened here.

The A. W. Bleasdell & Co., drug firm of Fernie, opened their branch store here this week, under the management of W. A. Bleasdell. They carry a full line of Drugs, Books, Stationery and Fancy goods.

Work was commenced on the Crow's Nest Trading Co's branch store here on Monday. R. A. Kerr, of Fernie, has the contract. The building which will be 25x60, is located on Third St., one door east of the Clark hotel.

All mail matter for Morrissey Mines will in future be found at Bleasdell's Drug Store, and all mail for outside points left there will be promptly delivered at the Post Office. Stamps may also be procured at the Drug Store.

The local miners' union are taking steps towards securing a lot on the new townsite for the purpose of erecting a hall. The building of club rooms for the use of the miners is also under consideration.

C. Spence has resigned his position with the Trites-Wood Co. He has been a resident of Morrissey for over two years and his many friends here will regret to learn that he intends to leave the country, Charlie intends to try his fortune in the Edmonton district and The Despatch wishes him every success.

A dairy has been opened at Morrissey Mines. M. Mawdsley, of Pilot Bay, B.C., has securep possession of a tract of land to the west of the town which he will use for pasture. A dairy will be a great convenience to the new town as up to the present time the people here have been compelled to use canned milk.

J. J. Murphy has opened a clothing store in a large tent one door west of the Alexandria hotel, where he will make his temporary quarters until he can get a suitable building erected. Mr. Murphy comes from Frank, where he conducted a similar business previous to the late disaster.

On Friday morning while engaged in excavating for the new Jensen building, J. Macready allowed one of his teams to slip through his fingers. The horses wound up in a most undignified position in the bottom of the cellar. Fortunately they suffered no injury beyond a severe shaking up.

Another of East Kootenay's pioneers passed away this week, Mr. Enoch Johnston, of Fort Steele. While working on Wild Horse Creek, Mr. Johnston had his leg crushed by a piece of falling rock. It was found to be impossible to save the limb, and it was amputated, at the Fort Steele Hospital last Tuesday. The shock, however, proved too great and on Wednesday, death relieved him from his sufferings. Having lived for several years in the district, the deceased had won for himself a host of friends, and nothing but general regret will be felt in his untimely demise.

The Man of a Thousand.

By M. Quad.

Copyright, 1900, by C. B. Lewis.

They called him "Judge" Dale, because in the far west you never "mister" a man when you can call him "colonel" or "judge." As James Dale looked more like a judge than a colonel, they called him as I have said. He was a mine owner, and when things went wrong he could make hot times for his engineers and foremen, but he didn't do it in a vulgar way. He was always a gentleman even when he cussed the hardest. As a matter of fact, the judge's motto was "good form," and he carried it out in his clothes, his cigars, his dinner and the way he took the news when a fall of rock in the Emma mine buried 12 men at once. What he said on that occasion was, "Please wipe your feet on the rug next time." What he did was to fill out 12 checks for $1,000 apiece for the respective widows.

I have it on good authority that Judge Dale was not vulgarly startled when he received word from Denver that his handsome wife, to whom he had been married five years and who was visiting friends, had taken an old lover's arm and severed conjugal relations by eloping. Others got the news about the same time, and they couldn't find anything to criticise in his conduct. He went through the daily routine just the same for three or four days, and he had the same placid look and the same even voice as he called his head clerk into the private office and said:

"Thomas, I am going away for a few days, and you will take charge."

"Yes, sir," replied Thomas, and next morning the judge was on his way to Denver. He picked up his clew there without having elbowed anybody or soiled the polish of his shoes. He met friends and talked politics and real estate and mines, and, lighting a fresh cigar, he took a train for the east. Arriving in New York city, he paid a detective to locate the couple, but he didn't lug out a gun and shout at the top of his voice that he was an injured husband thirsting for gore. He simply threw a couple of big goldpieces on the table to pay for the information and descended to the cafe for lunch. A steamer was sailing for the Mediterranean at the end of the fourth day, and when she departed the judge was one of her passengers. There were more than a hundred others, and as the weather was also stormy for the first two or three days out no one commented on the fact that the passenger who was registered as Major Davis stuck close to his cabin and had his meals brought to him by a steward. Judge Dale had changed his name, but he had no idea of changing his identity. There were laughter and conversation and a clatter of dishes as all the passengers finally gathered for dinner for the first time since leaving Sandy Hook. To the right of the captain sat one of the handsomest ladies and one of the finest looking gentlemen on the list, but taken altogether it was a grand array of wealth and culture. Dinner was fairly under way, and the lady on the captain's right was beaming, when she happened to cast her eyes down the table, and her face went as white as death in a second. Half a dozen people caught her words as she whispered to her supposed husband:

"My God, John, but there is the judge!"

The man looked, and the color went out of his cheeks, and his jaw fell. Near the foot of the table sat the man who had taken a new name. He was cool and placid, and only the ghost of a smile hovered around his mouth. He looked the woman and the man full in the eyes for a minute, but made no sign of recognition.

"What is it?" asked the captain as "Mrs. Bemis" shuddered and gasped and seemed on the point of fainting.

"A—a sudden illness—heart trouble!" she stammered as she left the table for her stateroom, followed by her supposed husband.

There were wonder and curiosity, but little was said. "Good form" demands that such incidents be passed over as easily as possible. There were those who thought it might be heart trouble and others who suspected the presence of the "major" had something to do with it, but that was no place to compare notes. Neither of the pair was seen again that evening, though Major Davis was very much in evidence until a late hour. At breakfast next morning Mr. Bemis appeared alone. His wife was better, thank you, was his reply to inquirers, but thought it best to remain quiet for a day or two. Not once did he let his eyes roam around the table, but he knew that Major Davis was there among the rest. He knew that a pair of steel blue eyes were scanning his troubled face and that a pair of soft white hands were aching to grip his throat. After breakfast, as the men sought the smoking room, Mr. Bemis started to act on a plan which had doubtless been talked over with his wife. He walked straight up to Major Davis and began:

"Judge, I don't know what I can say in extenuation, but I"—

"Excuse me, sir," interrupted the other, "but you have evidently made a mistake. I think the gentleman called the judge has passed into the salon."

Mr. Bemis looked at the major like a man seeing the face of death in a nightmare, and beads of perspiration started out on his forehead.

"Your—your wife is better this morning, I think I heard you say?" queried the major in courteous tones.

"Y-yes!"

"Glad to hear it. She should beware of overexcitement. Weather seems to have settled, and we are making a fine run of it. Have a light? No? Well, I'll walk a little."

Mr. Bemis stared after him as if seeing a ghost, and his breath came in sobs as he finally turned away. He had seen the man whose home he had despoiled a dozen times or more, and he believed that Judge Dale stood before him. Still there might be a chance that it was simply a wonderful resemblance. Such things had been known. It must have been this faint hope that buoyed up the wife to appear that afternoon. A wife should be able to identify the face, figure and speech of the husband of even a fortnight, but the elopers hoped for a miracle. Major Davis had made several acquaintances, and Mrs. Bemis had no sooner appeared than he was ready to be introduced.

"I am honored," he said as he made his bow. "Permit me to offer my sincere congratulations on your speedy recovery."

"I—I thank you."

"It was your husband I met this morning, I believe, and for a moment he took me for some one else. It is queer how you'll often find two people looking so much alike as to deceive you at first glance."

"Y-yes, it is!" she stammered, leaning on the back of a chair for support and speaking through bloodless lips.

"You do not find in me a resemblance to any gentleman called the judge?" he queried as he looked her full in the face.

"N-no—that is"—

"But I am keeping you. Pray, be seated, and I think I see your husband coming this way. Hope the fine weather will put you in good spirits."

At every meal Major Davis faced the guilty pair. Some of the passengers suspected nothing, but others insisted that there was a queer mystery afoot. The major gave nothing away. It wouldn't have been good form. The woman avoided him as far as possible, but two or three times a day he found excuse to speak to her. If she had hoped for a miracle, her hopes were dashed at the first close sight of him. Major Davis was Judge Dale, and Judge Dale was the husband she had fled from and disgraced. She knew him for a quiet man, but also for an implacable one. He was torturing them at the stake, but that would not be revenge enough. In his desperation Bemis again attempted to approach the man he had wronged. He couldn't plead for himself, but he would plead for the woman.

"Judge, it was my fault, and on me should fall your vengeance," he said as he cornered his man.

"Mistaken again. Ha, ha, ha!" laughed the major. "Really, but I shall come to think that I am your judge's twin brother. See what a cloudless sky and how beautiful the sea. I trust that your wife has had no more trouble with her heart. She is not looking at all well."

"God! God! But what a man!" gasped Bemis as he turned away with a hunted look in his eyes.

The steamer was to call at the Azores. One morning about 10 o'clock she made harbor, and it was given out aboard that she would not get away before midnight. Everybody was anxious for a brief run ashore—everybody but Mrs. Bemis. She feared that she might overexert and bring on another attack of heart trouble. Mr. Bemis had decided to stay with her when Major Davis hunted him out and said:

"I trust you will make one of a little party going ashore, and that you will bring your revolver along, as I shall mine?"

"The party is—is"— began Mr. Bemis as his face blanched.

"A very exclusive one—just the two of us, you see. You have a pistol, I suppose?"

"Yes."

"Ah, of course! We may find game, you know. Do you wish to speak to your wife first?"

"No."

"She's gone to lie down, eh? Well, let's be off."

The two engaged a boat as soon as landing and pulled away to a wooded cape, and two hours later a dead man was brought back in the boat. It was Mr. Bemis. He had accidentally shot himself while shooting at a bird, or at least the major said so, and no one doubted his word. He told his tale without excitement. He was cool and serene as he announced that he would remain and see the body placed in its grave. He came aboard the steamer with the personal effects of the deceased, but he did not ask to see Mrs. Bemis. He delivered everything to the captain, and as he added the sum of $5,000 in gold it is probable that he told at least a part of his story. When the accident became known, and it was found that Mrs. Bemis was to go on with the ship instead of ashore to see her husband to his last resting place, there was an outcry over her want of feeling, but it did not reach her ears. She was in her stateroom under the doctor's care, and none of the passengers saw her again. When the major had finished his work at the island, he took a steamer for New York and home, and upon entering his office at the usual hour and in the usual way he said to his chief clerk:

"Thomas, I am back and feeling better. Bring me the balance sheets for the last four weeks."

FIGHT WITH FLAMES.

FERNIE'S NARROW ESCAPE FROM MIDNIGHT DESTRUCTION.

Gem Restaurant and Cottage Destroyed—Wind and Rain Assist Good Work of Fire Brigade.

About two o'clock Wednesday morning a fire which threatened the destruction of the business centre of the town broke out in the Gem Restaurant on the corner of Hanson and Baker Sts. and opposite the C. P. R. freight shed. The fire alarm was rung before the flames were well started and the brigade were early at the scene and no time was lost in getting a stream of water to play on the burning building. The power house whistle also took up the alarm and awoke hose who slept through the triangle alarm. A great number of men soon gathered at the fire to assist in fighting the flames and in moving house-hold goods to a safe place.

The Gem Restaurant was run by Mr. Samuel Thorpe and his wife, assisted by a night cook Wm. Goodwin and a servant girl, Miss Nearing. The fire started in the kitchen through a defective stove pipe thimble in the wall, and it was detected by Mr. Goodwin before it had made great headway. He promptly threw upon the flames a dipper of water, which had the effect of spreading rather than extinguishing the flames and in a moment the cottoned and papered walls were all in flames. Mr. Goodwin hurriedly warned the sleeping inmates and barely escaped down the stairway without even time to grab his coat before the stairway was cut off by the fire and smoke. The others were obliged to escape from the front upper windows, and so pressed for time were they that they could not save any valuables or even any garments of clothing but escaped in their night clothes alone.

Most fortunately for the town a heavy thunder storm was passing over the town as the fire broke out, which dampened all the surrounding roofs. The wind also, of which there was very little, carried the flames away from the adjoining building towards the freight shed which was sufficiently distant to make it easy to defend. The brigade under the management of Chief Tuttle, directed their united energy against the spread of fire along Baker street. The cottage in which lived Mr. C. J. Digby and family was joined to the burning building and every effort was made to prevent the spread of the flames without tearing out this building. All the furniture was removed immediately the fire was discovered. Many times and in different places the flames caught onto this building, but the hose stream did good work and stubbornly fought the battle out on this little common-ground between the roaring conflagration and the big buildings on the other side, which if they had caught, would have certainly given the whole business centre of the town a close call. The cottage was partly burned and the remainder of it was badly wrecked, leaving it of little value.

The C. P. R. freight shed towards which the flames were blown, in spite of the drenching rain which had fallen, aroused some little alarm and preparations were made to protect it, while a C.P.R. train of freight cars on the siding got so hot that it was thought advisable to pull them out of harm's way. T. Bell's blacksmith shop in the rear also received a scorching. The homes of Mr. Brown and Mr. Cody further up the street were also vacated of all furniture in case the flames should get beyond control, and Baker St. presented a very confused appearance. Gradual however, the flames subsided and the danger mark was past.

Mr Thorpe who lost everything he had, started up business only about a week before the fire. He is a mill-wright and was employed by the Fernie Manufacturing Company. Mr. Dan Lafortune owned both buildings having purchased them last year from Mr. Digby. The restaurant had been thoroughly overhauled and was in first class condition. His total loss is probably over $2,000, of which $1200 is covered by insurance in the London Mutual Co. Mr. Digby's furniture was at once moved into a vacant cottage of Mr. Hunter's, and Mr. and Mrs. Thorpe found shelter in the home of Mr. J. Broley.

A WARNING.

The Powers of Fire Wardens and the Penalty of Disobedience of Their Orders.

The fire wardens of Fernie, consisting of Messrs. W. W. Tuttle, J. D. Quail and H. A. Kanouse have requested us to publish the following extracts from the "Villages Fire Protection Act, Amendment Act, 1901."

"The fire wardens or a majority of them, shall have the following powers:

"(a) To visit and inspect, at all reasonable hours, all buildings and erections in the town or its vicinity:

"(b) To direct and regulate, in the town or its vicinity, the position of stoves, fire-places or furnaces, chimneys, stove-pipes and smoke-stacks, and the removal, change or alteration of the same, or any of them, or the position or condition of them, or any of them, and further direct that anything shall be done by way of precaution to avert fire:

"(c) Generally to take such steps for the prevention of fire in the town, or to check its spreading, as they may think fit:

(d) To regulate the storing of powder or other explosives, and the working of industries or places of a character likely to cause danger from fire:

"(e) To compel the owner of any lot situated within the said town, and within two hundred feet of a dwelling house, to burn or remove all timber, brush or other growth of an inflammable nature thereon, when in the opinion of the fire wardens, or a majority of them, such brush or growth is a menace to the safety of the town from fire: Provided that this subsection shall not apply to trees planted for fruit, shade or ornament:

"(f) To forbid the discharge of firearms within the limits of the town, or or within such portion of the town as the fire-wardens may prescribe:

"(g) To forbid the setting fire to trees within the limits of the town:

"(h) To forbid the setting fire to brush logs or refuse within the limits of the town, unless with the written permit of one or more of the fire wardens."

THE PENALTY.

If any person shall refuse to obey the directions of the fire wardens, or a majority of them, he shall be liable upon summary conviction before a Justice of the Peace, to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars, and any Justice of the Peace making the conviction may direct the execution of the directions of the fire wardens, or a majority of them, at the expense of the offender, who shall be liable to pay the same to the person effecting the same.

NO TIMBER LEASES.

GOVERNMENT REFUSES TO GRANT LEASE TO D. V. MOTT.

Vancouver World Tells of Intrigue Between McBride and C. P. R.—Blocks 4,593 and 4,594 Still in Dispute.

The Vancouver World on Wednesday published a leading article which specificafully charged new McBride government with having deliberately set aside the rights of bona fide locators of oil and coal claims etc. in East Kootenay, as well as timber lessees and licenses in the same district in order that the C. P. R.'s renewed efforts to secure possession of blocks 4593 and 4594 may be facilitated. The understanding is that as compensation for such action in the precise line of their predecessors, the government will have its campaign fund largely supplied by the railroad company. It is further indicated that the arrangements of the present conservative government were largely the result of C. P. R. wire pulling, followed by sleight of hand, and deliberate breach of faith by McBride, through which John Oliver, who has exposed the Columbia & Western steal, was quietly euchered out of the ministerial position, when he sought to make assurance double sure, of the salvation of these two rich blocks to the province.

In the case of one timber lease, that of D. V. Mott, of Fernie, the applicant had the positive assurance that there could be no impediment. He won his lease by depositing the highest bonus ever given in British Columbia, on 10,000 acres of timber, had the granting order signed and is now refused his lease indefinitely, and without any other explanation from the government than that it has been decided not to deal with either of the two immortal blocks for the present, until the C. P. R. can press for intervention with respect to the cancellation legislation of the recent session. Others are similarly deprived of legitimate rights and may be forced into bankruptcy.

The World's charge in brief is that the new government, for the bait of a campaign fund, for need of which the new premier is in desperate straits, is ready to go as far as its predecessors in paving a way for the company to get the lands included in the big steal of the Columbia & Western, and is indeed a ministry created for that purpose.

LOT, HALL & ENGINE.

BIG FIRE MEETING TRANSACTS INPORTANT BUSINESS.

McRobie Engine Ordered. Committee Appointed to Prepare Plans for Hall and Purchase Lot.

The meeting of fire subscribers on Monday evening was a decided success and as a result the town will shortly be equipped with a fairly good fire protection system.

The meeting was held under the auspices of the fire brigade. Chief Tuttle was in the chair and A. H. Cree acted for the secretary who was absent. The latter on behalf of the collecting committee reported that subscriptions were coming in and that he had good reasons for believing that almost the whole of the promised money would be collected.

The meeting was unanimously in favor of proceeding at once to the purchasing of an engine, lot and aid the erection of a fire hall and the following resolution framed by Mr. Bentley was adopted.

"Resolved that the secretary of the fire brigade, Mr. J. S. T. Alexander, be instructed to purchase a McRobie two tank chemical engine as per correspondence at hand, on the best terms possible; that a committee of five be nominated by the chairman to arrange the purchase of a suitable lot, get tenders for, and arrange plans of buildings for a fire hall with rooms upstairs for not less than ten men, and that the secretary send out notices to all subscribers to at once send in their promised subscriptions."

The chairman nominated the following committee: Messrs. H. Bentley, J. D. Quail F. Stork, F. J. Watson and W. W. Tuttle.

The chairman and Mr. Bentley spoke strongly against the carelessness shown by some in burning rubbish in dangerous proximity to the main street. The matter was shown to be under the authority of the fire wardens and the secretary was instructed to write to those men pointing out the existence of this great danger.

The subject of fire crackers came in for a share of discussion. The secretary was instructed to write the chief of police asking that he lend his assistance in reducing the practice of setting off these dangerous little fire works.

The chief was instructed to arrange with the Coal company to secure permission to put in stand-pipes wherever the fire chief might see fit.

The meeting then adjourned.

On the day following the order for the engine was promptly sent off.

The fire wardens have since received the letter informing them of the dangerous manner of burning rubbish, and the chief has secured the necessary permission from the coal company to put in stand-pipes.

TOWN SHOULD BE MOVED.

The Present Situation of Turtle Mountain Described By Government Experts.

The following extract from the report of Messrs. R. J. McConnell and R. W. Brock to the acting Minister of the Interior in regard to the recent landslide at Frank, dated at Ottawa, May 23rd, 1903, has been sent to the Mounted Police for circulation and also to us for publication.

"On ascending Turtle mountain, the steep walled summit between the remaining north and south peaks and beyond was seen to be very badly fractured and shattered, as the result of the shock received during the slide. The south peak for 100 yds. back, had dropped bodily 20 feet and was traversed by a network of open fissures, from a few inches to 20 feet wide. The fissures increase in number and width near the face. The greatest movement was in the area between the two peaks. This portion is completely severed by gaping fissures into blocks, which have tipped and slipped forward 10 to 20 degrees from their original position, dropping in the process 100 feet. Numerous fissures also extend down the shoulder running west from the north peak, for at least 500 feet. The shoulder of the mountain, running east from this north peak, and which frown down upon the town, is very steep, 75 degrees. To its solidity Frank and its inhabitants owe their preservation. It withstood the concussion of the breaking away of the mountain mass and acting like the side of a funnel prevented the loosened material from spreading over the town.

The fractured mass between the north and south peaks does not threaten the town, as the falling material will travel over the former slide. Moreover, the fracturing is so complete that it falls in individual blocks, which though large are not yet large enough for their momentum to carry them to the base of the mountain. Then too, the constant breaking away of the loosened blocks is decreasing the possibility and powers of further rock avalanches. The north peak slipped six inches along a fracture 150 feet west of the summit during an interval of six days between our examinations, but not along other fissures both east and west of this one. The mass lying east of this fissure threatens the mouth of the tunnel, as, if it falls in one block, it will certainly reach the base of the mountain at or near the north end of the former slide. The cottages at this end of the town are also in danger from this point, but the manager of the mine does not intend to allow them to be occupied, while in their present position.

More danger is apprehended from the fissures which extend behind and farther to the west of the north peak, for the safety of the town depends upon the stability of the protruding shoulder. To all appearances it is still secure, but the fractures which were found 500 feet west of the peak and which on account of the snow could not be followed northward, may extend so far in this direction as to loosen the whole of this shoulder of the mountain. The breakaway of the central portion of the mountain, which is going on continuously, is also tending to weaken this northern shoulder by leaving it unprotected. If the town is to remain inhabited and in its present position, these northern fissures must be closely watched. They are not likely to open out or extend suddenly and for this reason no immediate danger to the upper portion of the town is feared. If, however, any signs of slipping in the fissures some distance back of the face of the north peak are detected, the town ought at once to be evacuated. The fracture zone, surrounding the old break is bound to fall away, but whether it falls away gradually and in comparatively harmless blocks, or in large destructive masses, depends upon future conditions which cannot be foretold.

The town of Frank might possibly exist on its present site uninjured for ages, but there will always be the possibility of a second havoc-bringing slide. The fact that the threatening shoulder withstood the first slide is no proof that it is too solid to fall. The same conditions exist on the north peak and shoulder to-day as obtained on the central before it fell away. A succession of seasons with unusually heavy precipitation and rapid changes of temperature, a slight earthquake shock, which is by no means an impossibility, or the closing of the chambers in the mine, after the coal has been drawn, perhaps after the inhabitants have lost all dread of the mountain, may give the impulse which would dislodge this mass and start it on a career of destruction.

Since this possibility must always overhang the town, it would seem advisable to move it a short distance up the valley, beyond reach of danger.

WILL GET SEWERAGE

DR. FAGAN WAS HERE TO REPORT TO THE GOVERNMEMT.

Favors Septic Tank System. Government Engineer will Report More Minutely.

Dr. C. I. Fagan, secretary of the provincial health office, Victoria, came in on last evening's train and left again for the weat this morning. The object of Dr. Fagan's hurried visit to Fernie was to gather information relating to urgent representation sent to the government by the Fernie Board of Trade on the need of sewerage for the town.

The doctor looked into the matter closely last evening and came to the conclusion that something should be done without delay. He stated that he would bring up a competent government engineer to go into the subject minutely. He favors the use of large septic tanks, from which the sewerage could be drained into the Elk with impunity.

It is expected that the government, as a result of Dr. Fagan's report, will take immediate action towards the putting in of a complete sewer system.

Prof. A. Shortt, of Queen's University, Kingston, remained over a day in Fernie on his way home from the coast. Prof. Short is an earnest student of the labor question, and while here he gathered all the available information.

BY LEAPS AND BOUNDS

PAY TO-DAY REACHES THE SPLENDID SUM $115,203.80.

Exceeds all Previous Monthly Records by Ten Thousand Dollars.

To-day is pay-day. The magnificent sum of $115,203.80 will be paid out at the three collieries to-day for the month of May. This marks an epoch in the history of the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Company as it exceeds any previous monthly pay by about $10,000.

The pay for each colliery is as follows:

Michel	$43,156.50
Coal Creek	42,950.30
Morrissey	29,097.00
Total	$115,203.80

A change has been made in the system of paying, and the men at the three camps are paid to-day instead of on three successive days. W. A. Letcher will hand out the envelopes at Michel and A. A. Klauer will pay at Morrissey.

HOUSE DISSOLVED.

The legislature was dissolved by special gazette on June 16th. The Gazette also announces that the writs for the new election will be dated July 16th, returnable Nov. 30th. The new legislature will be convened January 21st, 1904. The collectors of votes for the different districts are appointed, among whon are J. F. Armstrong for Cranbrook and L. R. Forbs for Fernie.

SINKING TO BED-ROCK.

The East Kootenay Placer Mining company are now engaged in sinking a shaft to bed-rock on their property on Perry Creek. The recent clean-up from the thousand yards of gravel which was moved by the steam shovel showed most satisfactory results in gold, and demonstrated what the promoters were anxious to prove that the surface gravel carried the yellow metal in such quantities as to guarantee purchasing of additional machinery to facilitate the the work of the shovel. Mr. A. Banks who has been superintending the operations leaves for the east today to secure this machinery which cost about $2,000 more. This added machinery will increase the daily capacity to nearly 1,000 yds. and reduce the staff of employees from 10 to 5. At this estimate and according to the clean-up average, the shovel when in full operation should yield a daily profit of nearly $200, while the surface gravel on the claims should yield a total value in gold of $375,000.

A block of 5,000 shares have been put on the market at a value of $1.00 each and these are about all taken up. This step has been taken solely for the purpose of raising sufficient money to make the added expenses, and to keep the company out of debt. Up to the present the shareholders have paid up enough on their stock to meet all expenditures and when the plant settles down to steady work dividends will at once be earned.

The steam power is now being used for hoisting purposes in sinking the shaft to the bed-rock. It will be also used later on in digging a large ditch to carry the water from several miles up the creek to the sluice box on the bed-rock. It is expected that the bed-rock will yield large returns. A shaft was sunk on this property by Col. Baker in '87, but a dyke was struck before they had drifted far and the work was abandoned. It is known that a from which was taken about $4,000, rich pay-streak was then discovered. At the presset time, three miles below the company's claims and half a mile below the falls, bed-rock is yielding pick and shovel work $20 per day per man. The dirt from the company's shaft is being frequently tested with the object of determining the most profitable means of workingto the bed-rock.

The Rev. C. W. Houghton paid a visit to Cranbrook on Monday last, returning in the evening.

The service tomorrow at Christ church will be held as follows:

Matin's and Holy communion, 11 a. m.
Sunday School, 2:30 p. m.
Evening, 7:30 p. m.
Collection in aid of church expenses.

C. P. R. CATASTROPHE

MONSTER ENGINE DASHES INTO MOOSE LAKE.

Engineer Johnson and Fireman Knott Find Watery Graves—Rest of the Train Saved—May be Impossible to Raise the Monster Locomotive.

The regular passenger train going east Tuesdaynight was held at Scovil, 14 miles east of Rat Portage, until 4 o'clock Wednesday morning while the bridge gang completed the work of repairing the trestle bridge over the upper portion of Moose Lake. It was thought safe enough at 4 o'clock to allow the passenger train to cross.

The engine, No. 828, which is one of the latest imported, together with a carload of fish, crashed through the structure, taking Engineer W. Johnson, of Rat Portage, and W. Knott, his fireman, to watery graves. The balance of the train were fortunately stopped on the track, thus averting a great catastrophe. The cause of the accident, as far as can be learned, was due to the slipping of the trestle. The company have been trying to fill in this for some time, but there seems to be no bottom to the lake. There was originally from 60 to 80 feet of water at the bridge.

Engineer Johnson, who lost his life at his post of duty, was one of the oldest and most trustworthy servants of the C. P. R. Co., having been running upwards of 22 years and never had an accident of a serious nature in his capacity as engine driver.

W. Knott, the fireman, hails from St. Thomas. He was very much respected by his fellow-employees.

Reliable authority states that it will be well nigh impossible to raise the monster engine from the lake. This trestle bridge has given the company no end of trouble and worry, enough time and money having been spent on it to build several bridges. It is thought by a great many that the bridge over the Winnipeg river, within sight of the town, will go in just the same manner. The new piers are continually slipping, and have to be jacked up from time to time. However, a most careful watch is being kept that such an accident may be averted.

The News in Winnipeg.

The news of the fatality at Scovil was received at the C. P. R. offices here yesterday, shortly after the accident occurred, and soon spread. Engineer Johnson is a married man who has had his home at Rat Portage for many years. He is a pioneer railroad man, having come to the country originally from Scotland. It is a peculiar coincident that the engine, one of the latest and newest of the company's, is a Scotch engine built in the same city in which the dead engineer was born. Fireman Knott is also well known in railway circles. He was a married man, but much the junior of Johnson, who was about 50 years of age.

As soon as word was received here Assistant General Superintendent Brady and Mr. Switzer, chief engineer, repaired to the scene of the wreck.

It was thought by many that the accident was caused by the weight of the locomotive, which is a veritable monster in size. This, however, did not cause the wreck, in the opinion of those who know the bridge. The cause was the sliding of the piles which had been put in along the side o fthe lake. The lake has given much trouble to the railway people, owing to frequent mud slides, and the fact that bed rock is almost too far down to touch. Ballast was thrown down to give more solidity to the trestle not many days ago, and this caused the mud to slide down the steep side and the trestles were carried with it.

The bridge is a very long one and will hold 25 cars. It is a wooden structure.

UNDER HYPNOTISM.

A Women Laughs and Chats While Her Leg is Being Amputated.

The Daily Express relates what it describes as the first instance in England of hypnotic suggestion taking the place of an anesthetic in a serious surgical operation. A woman, 38 years old, was suffering from a severely ulcerated leg, and it was decided that her life could be saved only by the amputation of the limb. She desired to be hypnotized for the operation, dreading the use of chloroform, which, it was believed would have been dangerous in her case. Dr. Aldrich, of Clapton, a suburb of London, hynotized her experimentally on several successive days, the hynotic trance lasting about half an hour on each occasion. All the tests applied proved satisfactory, and on Wednesday Dr. Aldrich, operated upon her in the presence of two other surgeons and a nurse. All the doctors were somewhat doubtful of success, and had provided chloroform in case of emergency. The operation began at 4.50 o'clock in the afternoon. While it was in progress the patient chatted with the nurse and drank wine. To an ordinary observer she would have appeared to have been conscious the whole time. Nevertheless the operation was painless and she was unconscious of what was passing.

While operating Dr. Aldrich said: "I am cutting off your leg below the knee." The patient laughed and said: "All right., hold my hand."

One of the surgeons took hold of her hand, and when the nerves were severed the patient gripped the doctor's hand hard. The operation was completed at 5.10. The patient was awakened at 5.15, whereupon she said: "I have pins and needles." There was no symptoms of shock. Her pulse and temperature are normal, her spirits are high, and she eats well.

The high water at East St. Louis has broken through the levee and flooded the city; 50 persons are reported drowned.

The British House of Commons, by 424 to 28, rejected Henry Chaplin's amendment to the budget bill. The cabinet crisis was averted by Premier Balfour.

The regular C. P. Rfl passenger train going east on the C. P. R. met with a serious accident at Moose Lake, 14 miles east of Rat Portage. The locomotive went into the lake and Enginer Johnson and Fireman Knott were killed.

HON. JAMES BOYLE.

One-Time Toronto Printer Now Consul-General of the U.S. at Liverpool.

Ontario had recently a distinguished visitor in the Honorable James Boyle, once a printer in the office of a Toronto newspaper, and now Consul-General of the United States at Liverpool. Twenty years ago, Mr. Boyle was a printer here in Toronto. He had brains and he had ambition. In his spare time he studied shorthand, and, it is said, became one of the fastest writer in the city. He abandoned the printing business about 1881, and went to Cincinnati, where he obtained a position on one of the local newspapers. He was sent to Columbus, the State Capital, to represent his newspaper, and there he met Major McKinley, who shortly after became Governor of Ohio. Mr. Boyle was detailed by his paper to accompany McKinley on a trip which he made in his official capacity, and so well did the young journalist hand the assignment that in a few months McKinley made him his private secretary. Of course, after that all was plain sailing for Boyle. When McKinley was elected President he offered his secretary any Consul-Generalship which he might choose, with the exceptions of London and Paris. Boyle took Liverpool, a post which, it is said, is worth at least twenty thousand dollars a year to its holder. The fees which the United States Consul at Liverpool collects make his position more valuable than that of the Ambassador to the Court of St. James. That official receives only $17,500 a year, and out of it he has to pay all his expenses for entertaining and the upkeep of a large establishment. A Consul-General, unless he elects, has none of these expenses. He can live quietly as he chooses to live, and, if he wants to, can save nearly all his income. Patrick F. Collins, who was Consul-General at London, saved over sixty thousand dollars in his four years' term. And Liverpool is very nearly as valuable an appointment as London.

Canadians Stay in South Africa.

Miss Florence J. Wilkinson, late of Toronto, one of the Canadian teachers in the Transvaal, writing home by the last mail, states that she and Miss Mabel Yenney, formerly of Peterboro, have re-engaged with the Education Department of the colony as teachers in the Klerksdorp schools for a period of three years.

It appears that the Canadian teachers in South Africa have had very liberal offers made to them to induce them to remain longer in the country. The following options were open up to a recent date for their acceptance:

1. The teachers may go home at end of the year's engagement and are entitled to have their passage paid.

2. Or they may sign an agreement for three years from present date. In this case they can have: (a) Three months' leave of absence without pay, with passage paid home and return, at any time convenient to the Education Department. (b) A gratuity of three months' salary at end of three years' service—the three months' leave of absence not being counted in the three years.

Final passage home will not be paid for any teacher who has taken the three months' leave. If a teacher does not take leave she will have: (a) Free passage home at end of engagement (or on terminating engagement at three months' notice). (b) Gratuity of three months' salary at end of three years' service.

3. Or they may sign for three years from date of original engagement. In this case all right to three months' leave of absence is foregone. The teacher entering into this agreement may have: (a) Full gratuity at end of engagement, or at three months' notice.

The salary paid the teachers for the past year has been at the rate of £100 and naintenance, which was considered equal, in all, to about £200. It is understood that the salary offered for the re-engagement period will be at the rate of £180 per annum, which will include salary and maintenance. It is not yet known how many of the Canadian teachers will remain in Africa for a longer period.

The Payment of Convicts.

Some time ago I urged in these columns that the labor of convicts should be paid for at its market value, and if the said convicts had a family depending upon them their earnings should be used for the benefit of the dependants. Recently a small woman, with a baby and a black eye, put a question to the presiding magistrate in a not far off city that completely nonplussed him, and, as a contemporary says, "practically knocked nine centuries of British civilization into a cocked hat." Her husband, who was responsible for the black eye aforesaid, was given "$20 or a month," and elected to "take it out." Then the small woman stepped up to the bench and pitifully asked who was to keep her and her children while her husband was in jail. The bench glared, cogitated, and finally blurted out "Dunno," or words to that effect. And the same answer has been given for ages by the law, judges, Parliaments, royal commissions, magistrates, etc. "Dunno!" A simple question is put in a casual sort of way by a small, unimportant woman, and the combined wisdom of all Canada, with that of the whole British Empire on top of it, cannot discover an answer. Yet Germany has solved the problem. That out-of-date, derided country makes such men as these toil at remunerative occupations in jail; maintains them in a strictly thrifty manner, and devotes the proceeds of their industry to maintaining the wife and children. Seems as if the British Empire is too beastly proud to learn from Germany.—The Captious One, in Toronto Sunday World.

Slater Shoe Advertising

Selling the first pair

Short talks by the Slater Shoe ad man, No. 2.

Advertising may induce a man or woman to buy the first pair of "Slater Shoes" but if that first pair be a failure no amount of advertising will induce the disappointed wearer to buy a second pair.

If every man and woman in Canada bought a pair of "Slater Shoes" through advertising and ceased wearing—or buying them after the first purchase, the entire Canadian market for "Slater Shoes" would be exhausted in less than two years.

Yet the sales of "Slater Shoes" have gone on increasing for many years.

The same people have been buying the "Slater Shoe" year after year and constant advertising is making new wearers every season 'proving that it is as good a shoe as its makers claim it to be.

The Slater Shoe

Goodyear welted. Made in Canada 40 years.

Cunningham-Graham's Experiences.

Your reference to Mr. Cunninghame Graham (writes a correspondent in M.A.P.) reminds me of the strange scenes the traveler-Socialist has witnessed during his romantic career. Perhaps no English member of Parliament—not even Mr. Henry Norman or Sir William Allen, the blockade runner—has had such a series of strange experiences. He has spent a fortnight below hatches on a tramp steamer whose cargo has shifted, with nothing to do except read the "Fairy Queen," listen to the Ananias-like yarns of the chief engineer, or watch the captain's face, when that worthy, after sixteen successive hours on the bridge, came below looking (in Graham's graphic phrase) "like Lot's wife when she enjoyed her last wistful glance at Sodom." And on another voyage of the same tramp Graham had to act as interpreter and mediator between a shipload of Basque emigrants and an uproariously drunken and outrageous Scotch crew. Read Graham's description of his ride through the wild prairies of Buenos Ayres during an Indian raid, when at every other farm the owner's mangled body lay at the door, and at the pass of Quesquen Salado the corpse of a murdered woman was hung from a post. Or his vivid pictures of Paraguay, after a desolating war in which nearly all the adult males had been killed, and women were Magistrates, police and engineers, and every stray man entering the country had a large bevy of lady admirers. Then you will understand how out of place Graham was in a humdrum House of Commons, and be thankful for the fate which led him, via Trafalgar square, out of that institution, and gave him the opportunity of writing the best books of travel since "Eothen." Curiously enough Mr. Graham's books of travel have never gained the fame they deserved. Perhaps this is because of the writer's Socialistic views, but it is also in part attributable to his vehemently expressed dislike to the Scotch. The Scotch critics, and their name is legion, have never forgiven him this. They forget that Mr. Graham is really only Scotch by name.

The King's Archers.

During the King's visit to Edinburgh the Royal Company of Archers—otherwise known as the King's Bodyguard for Scotland—are the most picturesque feature of the various ceremonies.

Between forty and sixty members of the company remained on duty during the King's visit of four days, and there was a banquet in Archer's Hall, a beautiful old building containing priceless pictures.

To irreverent spectators a body of sedate and middle-aged gentlemen, all armed with large bows and arrows, parading in green and red uniforms, gauntlets and bonnets adorned with eagles' feathers, might perhaps appear ridiculous, but most people will be thankful for the survival of anything that is picturesque in these colorless days.

In order that members of the Bodyguard shall not do each other mortal damage in the narrow places of Holyrood Palace the following instructions are given in the drill book:—

"Before falling in everyone should see that his bow-string is not left slack, but tightened up by the green ribbon at the top. At barriers, stairs and narrow places bows will be brought to an upright position, without orders, and will be returned to the 'trail' when the obstruction is passed."

The King's Bodyguard for Scotland was first constituted in its present form in 1676, since which year minutes have been regularly kept with the exception of a short period at the end of the seventeenth century.

It must not be supposed that the Royal Archers cannot use their bows. They hold shooting matches every month, and during the King's visit the "Musselburgh arrow" was shot for on Wednesday, May 13, the distance to the targets being 180 yards.

Ancient Gold Mines.

The only ancient gold diggings yet discovered which are of sufficient magnitude to be those of the Ophir of David and Solomon are those of the Zambezi region. The gold contributed by David alone to the building of the temple, being "3,000 talents of the gold of Ophir," would be in value over $80,000,000.

The Needle.

The first needle used in England was made in Queen Mary's reign by a negro, who unfortunately died before imparting the secret to any one. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth the art of needle making was rediscovered by a German, who imparted it to an Englishman.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed for ever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

It Wasn't the Hen, but God

At an elementary examination in English which was lately held at a school not so very far from this city two sentences were given out to be corrected. The first sentence was to be corrected as to its subject matter and the second as to its syntax. These were the sentences:

"The hen has three legs."

"Who done it?"

When the papers were handed in, it was found that one of the pupils had apparently regarded the sentences as connected in some subtle manner, for his answer was:

"The hen didn't done it; God done it."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Somnambulism.

Somnambulism? What is it? Did you ever walk in your sleep? If so, you know just about as much about this strange use of the faculties and senses of the mind and the body as does the average physician. Somnambulism has been a mystery and a matter of discussion to the medical profession since the days of the ancients. They knew as well as we all now know that there is such a thing as somnambulism or walking in the sleep. They attempted to explain it just as modern medical science has been endeavoring to explain it ever since. But as it was then so it is now. There are so many explanations that even the physician is puzzled to decide which to accept.

"The Widow's Cruse."

The Sunday school superintendent of the First Baptist church, Brooklyn, was quizzing a class of small girls the other day:

"And what was 'the widow's cruse?'" he asked.

There was a moment's silence. Then a little hand went up timidly:

"Please, sir," said the youngster, "the widow was one of the people that went with Noah in his yacht."—New York Times.

COLLINGWOOD IS WITH THE REST

Remarkable Cure of a Citizen by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Valentine Fisher's Terrible Sciatic Pains Speedily Vanished Before the Great Kidney Remedy.

Collingwood, June 15.—(Special.)—Every city, town and village in Canada is repeating remarkable cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills and Collingwood is not behind the rest. There are scores of people here who have used the great Kidney Remedy and who are not slow to tell of the splendid results. Valentine Fisher, well-known in the town and surrounding country, is one of them.

"I was troubled with kidney disease for 13 years," Mr. Fisher says in telling of his cure. "It developed into sciatica, which located in my side, so that I could not walk without a cane. I had to use hypodermic injections of morphine to ease the pain.

"I tried different medical men and medicines with no good results till I was persuaded to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. Three boxes effected a perfect cure. I can recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills to all who are suffering from rheumatism or any other form of kidney disease."

GOOD HEALTH.

How It Can Be Obtained and How It Can Be Preserved.

The health of the whole body depends upon the blood and nerves. The blood must be rich and pure, and the nerves vigorous and strong. Therefore a medicine that makes new blood and strengthens the nerves reaches the root of many serious diseases. Dr. William's Pink Pills will do this, and this is the secret of their wonderful power to conquer disease. Thousands of cases—many of them in your own neighborhood—have proved that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will cure rheumatism, sciatica, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, nervous and bilious headache, heart trouble, indigestion, neuralgia and the ailments that render the lives of so many women a source of misery. Mr. Jas. Adames, Brandon, Man., says: "Before I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills my health was much shattered with rhuematism, nervous depression and sleeplessness. For fully a year I rarely got a good night's sleep. I gave the pills a thorough trial and can now truthfully say I could not wish for better health."

What Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have done for others they will surely do for you, but you should be careful to get the genuine with the full name. "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," on the wrapper round each box. Sold by all medicine dealers or sent by mail at 50c. per box or six boxes for $2.50, by writing to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Eagles have been noticed flying at a height of 6,000 feet, and storks and buzzards at 2,000 feet. A lark will rise to the same height, and so will crows. As a rule, however, birds do not fly at a greater height than 1,000 feet.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion is occasioned by want of action of the billiary ducts, loss of vitality in the stomach to secrete the gastric juices, without which digestion cannot go on; also being the principal cause of Headache. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills taken before going to bed, for a while, never fail to give relief and effect a cure. Mr. F. W. Ashdown, Ashdown, Ont., writes: "Parmedown, Ashdown, Ont., writes: Parmelee's Pills are taking the lead against ten other makes which I have in stock."

THE AVERAGE BABY.

The average baby is a good baby—cheerful, smiling and bright. When he is cross and fretful it is because he is unwell and he is taking the only means he has to let everybody know he does not feel right. When baby is cross, restless and sleepless don't dose him with "soothing" stuffs which always contain poisons. Baby's Own Tablets are what is needed to put the little one right. Give a cross baby an occasional Tablet and see how quickly he will be transformed into a bright, smiling, cooing, happy child. He will sleep at night, and the mother will get her rest too. You have a guarantee that Baby's Own Tablets contain not one particle of opiate or harmful drug. In all the minor ailments from birth up to ten or twelve years there is nothing to equal the Tablets. Mrs. W. B. Anderson, Goulais River, Ont., says: "My little boy was very cross and fretful and we got no rest with him until we began using Baby's Own Tablets. Since then baby rests well and he is now a fat, healthy boy."

You can get the Tablets from any druggist, or they will be sent by mail at 25 cents a box by writing direct to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

CLOSE OBSERVERS.

Savages Note Things to Which Civilized Eyes Are Blind.

Savages are supposed to have keener senses, especially a keener sense of sight, than civilized races. The author of "Idle Days In Patagonia" does not accept this theory. He believes that savages have no keener senses, but that they pay closer attention to what comes within the range of their perception. As an instance of quick response to an impression he tells the following story:

On March 12, 1861, a company of hunters were camping beside a grove of willows in Patagonia. About 9 o'clock that evening, while they were seated round the fire roasting their ostrich meat, Sosa suddenly sprang to his feet and held his open hand high above his head for some moments.

"There is not a breath of wind blowing," he exclaimed, "yet the leaves of the trees are trembling. What can this portend?"

The others stared at the trees, but could see no motion, and they began to laugh at him. Presently he sat down again, remarking that the trembling had ceased, but during the rest of the evening he was very much disturbed in his mind. He remarked repeatedly that such a thing had never happened in his experience before, for, he said, he could feel a breath of wind before the leaves felt it, and there had been no wind. He feared that it was a warning of some disaster about to overtake their party.

The disaster was not for them. On that evening occurred the earthquake which destroyed the distant city of Mendoza and crushed 12,000 people to death beneath the ruins. That the subterranean wave extended east to the Plata and southward into Patagonia was afterward known, for in the cities of Rosario and Buenos Ayres clocks stopped, and a slight shock was also experienced in the Carmen on the Rio Negro.

PEOPLE WHO APPEAR OLD.

How They May Preserve the Buoyancy and Freshness of Youth.

People who appear old must expect to be considered so, and, if they apply for positions with every appearance that senility has struck them and that they have gone to seed, they cannot expect favorable consideration. If gray haired applicants for positions would only appreciate the value of appearances and would "brace up" when they seek situations—go "well groomed" and well dressed, with elastic steps, showing that they still possess fire, force and enthusiasm—they would eliminate an obstacle greater than their gray hairs.

We think ourselves into incapacity by looking for signs of age and dwelling on them, and the body follows the thought. We should, therefore, avoid the appearance of age in every possible way—by dress, carriage, conversation and especially by our attitude toward people and things. It is not difficult to preserve the buoyancy and freshness of youth, but it must be done by constant effort and practice. A musician who expects to make only one or two important appearances a year must keep up his practice. Youthfulness cannot be put on for a day if old age has had a grip on you for months.

It is important to preserve the fire of youth as long as possible, to carry freshness and vigor into old age by keeping up a hearty interest in everything that interests youth. Many of us seem to think that youthful sports and pastimes are foolish, and before we know it we get entirely out of sympathy with all young life, and consequently really old, whatever our years. We must think youthful thoughts, associate with young people and interest them. When a person ceases to interest the young he may be sure that he is showing signs of old age.

A Shrewd Client.

An amusing story is told among lawyers of a Walloon peasant who had gone to law with a neighbor. In a conversation with his lawyer he suggested sending the magistrate a couple of fine ducks.

"Not for your life," said his adviser. "If you do you'll lose the case."

The judgment was given in his favor, when he turned to his lawyer and said, "I sent the ducks." Astonishment on the latter's part turned to admiration when his client continued, "But I sent them in my neighbor's name."

Simply Impossible.

"Have you got the plans for your new house completed yet?" some one asked him.

"Not quite," he replied. "There is a difference of opinion between my wife and me as to the interior arrangements. She says the pantry is too large and that there are too many closets."

Without another word the medal for the biggest lie of the evening was awarded to him.

His Idea Capacity.

"I read somewhere the other day," said Mr. Henpeck, "that one of the big mercantile corporations pays a certain man $1,000 for each idea he furnishes. George, I'd like to have a chance of that kind!"

"Wretch!" exclaimed Mrs. Henpeck. "Do you want your innocent wife and child to starve?"

So Smart.

The Broken Health of School Life

So many school girls and school boys, too, are pale, languid and run down in health, subject to weak spells and nervous headache, and victims of sleeplessness, that we no longer realize the folly of developing the mind at the expense of the body.

It is on the mothers and fathers that falls the responsibility of looking after the health of their children, and to them we suggest the wisdom of having the health of their children kept at the high water mark by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

This great food cure is so gentle and natural in action as to be admirably suited to the requirements of children. The benefits to be derived from its use are certain and lasting, as it goes to form new, red corpuscles in the blood, and create new nerve force.

Mrs. T. Dalzell, 21 Charles street, Kingston, Ont., states: "My daughter suffered very much with head aches, caused no doubt from overstudy and a run-down condition of the nervous system. These attacks of headache were very trying on her and I noticed that she was gradually growing weaker and more nervous. About two months ago I got her a box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and since she has been using this preparation we are more than pleased with the improvement which has been made in her health. She looks one hundred per cent. better, her nerves are steadier, she is not bothered with headaches and is gradually increasing in flesh and weight."

Mrs. R. Wareham, 267 Sherbrooke street, Peterboro, Ont., states: "One of my children has suffered a great deal with nervous headaches, dizziness and sleeplessness, and, in fact, was all run down, pale and languid. These troubles were attributed to over-study and confinement at school. She began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and I can say that we have found this treatment exceedingly helpful. It has relieved her of headache, steadied her nerves, and built up her system wonderfully. We can see a great change in her, as the color is returning to her face, and she is gaining in flesh and weight."

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS. FERNIE BRITISH COLUMBIA

SATURDAY, JUNE 20, 1903.

AN OBJECT LESSON.

The fire on Tuesday night was an object lesson which the people of Fernie should take to heart. The salvation of the town from total destruction was only averted by the Providential Dispensation which sent favoring rain and wind. The whole affair may be taken as a warning, which, if not promptly acted upon, may come home to us with convincing power at some later day.

The fire proved conclusively the inadequacy of ths water supply. The present mains will not feed more than one stream, and the fire protection of Fernie will never be satisfactory until larger mains are substituted. In a larger fire with the town in greater jeopardy this fact would be still more apparent for many taps would be used to secure water to protect private property, thus greatly reducing the hose stream.

We are informed moreover that during the fire, cinders etc., fell at considerable distances from the burning building and had the rain not previously dampened everything, fires would have sprung up in different places.

While the brigade did everything possible with the appliances and water-supply at hand, it becomes more apparent all the time that the safety of this town under its present conditions depends much more largely on preventative measures than anything that may be done after a fire has got fairly started.

All that can be done under existing circumstances is being done. The fire brigade through an executive committee is exerting every energy towards securing a properly equipped brigade, and the fire wardens are doing all in their power to lessen the danger. The remainder of the responsibility rests upon the people. It is their duty to supplement these honest efforts by their hearty support, both in generously contributing to the public funds and in faithfully obeying the fire wardens.

GET ON THE VOTERS' LIST.

We desire to direct our readers attention to the notice in another column regarding the voters' list. Read it carefully so as to satisfy yourself as to the exact conditions required, and that you will always be able to inform those of your friends who may not possess the necessary information. Apply to Mr. Forbes at once. Do not delay the matter as ninety per cent of the voters usually do, but have it attended to at once. It is important that every voter in the district be registered, that the importance of this section may be shown to the government in cold hard figures. Register now.

FIRE-WARDENSHIP.

The attention of our readers is called to the warning of the fire wardens published in another column. In the past the powers of these officers have not been felt by the community and the office has been generally regarded as a useless, governmental one, without any well defined duties or powers and with no power to enforce their authority. Those who carefully read the extract from the act will find that the powers of fire wardens are extensive and that much is left to their good judgement, while the law fully backs up in the carrying out of their orders.

It is well for Fernie that the gentlemen recently elected as fire wardens for this town are men who have the welfare of the town at heart and upon whose sound judgement all can rely. These men are satisfied, as most of us are who have given the subject any consideration, that the present condition of the town in many respects is dangerous both as to the starting and spreading of fires which might wipe out the whole town, and they are determined to enforce necessary and legitimate measures to improve these conditions. They have expressed a desire to carry out their plans in an impartial manner, and it is the duty of every citizen to cheerfully agree to the directions which these men may give relative to the betterment of the fire protection of the town, without stopping to argue that some one else's back yard is in a worse condition than his.

The fire wardens have the power of the law behind them, but they need something better than even that to ensure the best results in this campaign against the fire-breeding conditions of the town. They need the co-operation and the confidence of all citizens. The fire wardens are not renumerated in any way for their work and the same patriotic feeling which prompts them to grapple with the matter at the expense of time and trouble for the common good of the town should also prompt the rest of us to cheerfully and readily fall in with the work of reform and perform our respective parts with this view always before us.

END OF COAL STRIKE.

Victoria, June 18.—The coal strike on Vancouver Island, in consequence of which the miners at Ladysmith and Comox have been getting out very small amounts of coal, and steamers have had to bring coal from Newcastle and Japan to supply the coast market, held by the Vancouver Island collieries, is now at an end. Today the striking miners petitioned Dunsmuir, head of the mining company, to be allowed to return to work. Dunsmuir will meet the miners at Ladysmith.

CONSERVATIVE PLATFORM.

[Adopted at Revelstoke, Sept. 13th, 1902]

1. That this convention reaffirm the policy of the party in matters of provincial roads and trails; the ownership and control of railways and the development of the agricultural resources of the province as laid down in the platform adopted in October, 1899, which is as follows:

"To actively aid in the construction o trails throughout the undeveloped portions of the province and the building o provincial trunk roads of public nesessity

"To adopt the principle of government ownership of railways in so far as the circumstances of the province will admit, and the adoption of the principle that no bonus should be granted to any railway company which does not give the government of the province control of rates over lines bonused, together with the option of purchase.

"To actively assist by state aid in the development of the agricultural resources of the province.

2. That in the meantime and until the railway policy above set forth can be accomplished, a general railway act be passed, giving freedom to construct railways under certain approved resgulations analogous to the system that has resulted in such extensive railway construction in the United States, with so much advantage to trade and commerce.

3. That to encourage the mining industry, the taxation of metalliferous mines should be on the basis of a percentage on the net profits.

4. That the government ownership of telephone systems should be brought about as a first step in the acquisition of public utilities.

5. That a portion of every coal area hereafter to be disposed of should be reserved from sale or lease, so that state owned mines may be easily assessible, if their operation becomes necessary or advisable

6. That in the pulp land leases provision should be made for reforesting and that steps should be taken for the general preservation of forests by guarding against the wasteful des truction of timber

7. That the legislature and governmen of the province persevere in the effort to secure the exclusion of Asiatic labor.

8. That the matter of better terms in the way of subsidy and appropriations for the province should be vigorously pressed upon the Dominion government.

9. That the silver-lead industries of the province be fostered and encouraged by the imposition of increased customs duties on lead and lead produce imported into Canada, and that the conservative members of the Dominion House be urged to support any motion introduced for such a purpose.

10. That as industrial disputes almost invariably result in great loss and injury both to the parties directly concerned and to the public, legislation should be passed to provide means for an amicable adjustment of such disputes between employers and employees.

11. That it is advisable to foster the manufacture of the raw products of the province within the province as far as practicable by means of taxation on the said raw products, subject to rebate of the same in whole or part when manufactured in British Columbia.

CONSERVATIVE CONVENTION.

At a meeting of the executive of the Provincial Conservative Association, held at Vancouver, the province was divided into five divisions for organization purposes. The Kootenay-Boundary division is made up of the following Provincial election districts: Revelstoke, Columbia, Fernie, Cranbrook, Ymir, Kaslo, Slocan, Grand Forks, Greenwood, the City of Rossland and the City of Nelson. At the same meeting the following resolutions was adopted:

1, That conventions for nominating candidates for members of the legislative assembly be made up of delegates chosen as follows:

(a) In city electoral districts, one delegate for every fifty and fraction of fifty votes polled at the Provincial election held in 1900, and if the city is divided into wards, the proportion of delegates for each ward shall be based on the vote polled in each ward at the municipal election.

(b) In other electoral districts, one delegate for every fifty or fraction of fifty votes polled at the Provincial election held in 1900, the delegates to be apportioned to polling places, or as near thereto as will be fair to the voters of the different neighborhoods.

2. The election of delegates shall be at public meetings, held at a designated central place in each polling division, or in each ward in city electoral districts, if the city is divided into wards. At such public meetings only those who pledge themselves to vote for the candidate or canditates selected at the nominating convention shall be entitled to a vote for delegates.

3. Two weeks' notice shall be given of the public meetings at which delegates are to be elected, and nominating conventions shall be held in city electoral districts two days after the day on which delegates are elected, and in other electoral districts seven days after. All nominations throughout the province to be made at a designated central place in each electoral district, and on the same day.

4. All notices of the date of public meetings for the election of delegates to nominating conventions, the apportionment of delegates, and the place and date of nominating conventions in the several electoral districts shall be prepared by the member of the executive of the division in which the electoral districts are situate, and issued over the names of the president and secretary of the Provincial Conservative Association.

A meeting of the Provincial executive will be held at Vancouver within a month, and the date for holding district nominating conventions will then be fixed.

JOHN HOUSTON,
President of the Provincial Conservative Association.

Mr. D. V. Mott returned last evening from the Coast. When asked this morning as to the truth of the report by the Vancouver World, a summary of which appears in this issue, he stated that he was in no way responsible for the article. He presumed that the World had drawn its own conclusions in attributing certain motives to the government. He had nothing for publication beyond the statement that the government had as yet granted no leases on block 4594.

"PLEASANT PLACES"

CHRISTIAN MINISTRY IDEAL PLACE O CONSECRATED USEFULNESS.

NATURE SOOTHES THE LONELY

What the Preacher Learned of Contentment in Apparently Unpleasant Places From a Woman Living in the Backwoods—Bad Thing to Judge by Appearances—Rule Applied to the Preacher's Calling.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1903, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Chicago, June 7.—In this sermon the preacher sets forth with enthusiasm the delights of the Christian ministry and the opportunities it offers to the graduates of our learned institutions as the ideal life of consecrated usefulness. The text is Psalms xvi, 6, "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places."

Different occupations often imply different enjoyments. All varieties of flowers do not thrive equally well under the same colored glasses. The amusements which would be exhilaration and restful relaxation for the physician may be drudgery and irritation for the merchant. The owls and the bats turn their days into nights and their nights into days. The eaglee and the hawks do not circle about in the heavens unless they can heat their feathers by the flaming fires of the sun. The inhabitant of one home may be deaf and blind to the pleasures surrounding another fireside.

In the backwoods I best learned this interesting lesson. With my family, I was spending a summer vacation in the country. In a rowboat, far from a railroad station, I was tracing the bendings and windings of a little river. Suddenly, at a turn of the stream, we came to a small house nestling under the protecting branches of the tall trees. I found there a woman living practically alone. She had no children. All day long her husband was off to work. I said to her: "This is an awful place to live! You must be lonely and heartsick with no companionship." "Oh, no," she answered. "I am never alone. I have hundreds of friends who call and talk to me every day. Do you see that little nest just at the end of my porch? Well, last spring the mother bird came here as a bride and asked me if she could build her home there, and I said 'Yes.' Then she talked and chattered on all the time she was building it. She brought me her husband and introduced me to him. She told me when the eggs were hatched. She is one of my friends. Then just over there under that bank a muskrat has his home and is raising his family. He comes out every little while and blinks at me and talks in the sign language. Then there are my friends the wild flowers and my friends the chickens and my friends the fish, which I feed at the dock. Then the river itself is a friend of mine. It has a language of murmurs and gurgles to which I listen, and when I get tired and weary I am soothed by its sympathy. Oh, no, do not pity me for being alone! My enjoyments are perhaps your enjoyments, but they are many, very many. I would not exchange my life for that of any one I know." Happy woman that. Happy because she was in the place where she could use the qualities with which God had endowed her. Happy because, like a bee, she was able to find every flower filled with nectar for her lips. Happy because every tree branch was to her a choir loft in which a master soloist was singing the sweetest song in all his repertoire.

Well, my friends, as I needlessly pitied that poor woman living in the backwoods there are hundreds and thousands of people commiserating the supposed unhappy lot of a gospel minister. These sympathetic commiserations have become widespread. There are hundreds—aye, thousands—of young men who might otherwise have volunteered for service in the Christian pulpits, have been deterred on account of them, from consecrating themselves to the gospel ministry. Now I want to speak specially this morning to the young men who are graduating from our colleges and schools, and if they have adopted this view of the Christian ministry being a joyless, gloomy life I want to set them right. I make a direct appeal to the young men to enter the gospel pulpit, because it offers the happiest, the most blessed and the most exhilarating life on earth. I am going to make this plea with autobiographical authority by showing the kindnesses and the sympathies which have surrounded me from the day of my ordination down to the present time.

The first objection generally made to the occupation of a minister is that it is not a money making profession. That is true, but it does offer something far better in the joy of noble consecration. We have all at some time proved the truth of Christ's words, that it is better to give than to receive. When the bower bird of love builded her home for the first time in our hearts we immediately tried to manifest that love in many different ways. We laid at the feet of our ladylove our gifts, as the wise men from the east came to the manger with their presents of gold and frankincense and myrrh. We manifested our love in the little attentions we daily bestowed and in the letters we would write. As time passed on we again manifested that love in the engagement ring which we tremblingly placed upon the finger of our future bride. Has any money we have since earned ever given us such joy as that which came in the happiness of her smile, in the welcome of her voice and in the knowledge that we were winning her affections in return for our affections. My young friend, did you ever stop to consider that the Christian minister has such joys as these, which make the acquisition of a fortune appear in comparison low and sordid? Apart from the rewards that God gives to the faithful minister, there is a joy in the self surrender, in the consecration of our whole lives to Christ, who laid down his life for us.

The true soldier does not think of money, the mere question of money, when he surrenders his life to the service of his country. In all probability he will never have anything to live on but a mere pittance of a salary. Yet he willingly dons the soldier's uniform. He willingly promises to suffer and starve and, if need be, to die for his country's good. While promising to make this sacrifice he feels happy in the resolve. Cannot the minister in this same way feel the exhilaration of a noble consecration? I know that the compensations of the gospel minister cannot be estimated by the standard of mere money. I know there are many men preaching week by week in the pulpit who if they had entered the law or a mercantile life would have an annual income of five ten times the income that they receive as ministers. But does not the joy of giving your whole life to the service of Jesus Christ bring some rewards higher than money? Does not the thought that you are trying to save men and comfort men and bring them to the Saviour whether you are standing by the opened casket or by the sick bed or on the street or in the pulpit give you transcendent and at time almost overwhelming joys.

That these spiritual rewards are real and satisfying is demonstrated by the fact that the ministers are the only class of men who, as a rule, want their sons to follow in their own footsteps and their daughters to marry men of their own profession. If you go to an average lawyer and ask him what he would like his sons to be he answers, "Almost anything rather than a lawyer;" to a physician, anything but a doctor; to a newspaper man, anything but an editor; to a merchant, and you will often find him struggling and saving so that he can give his boys a college education for entrance into some professional career. But a consecrated minister invariably wants his sons to enter the gospel ministry. If you ask your pastor this question, "What would you like your son to be?" he will in all probability answer: "Well, I would not like to persuade my boy to be a minister. If he becomes a minister I do not want him to be a man made, but a God made, minister. But if the Holy Spirit should ever work upon his heart I think the happiest day of my life would be when I could hear him preach in a Christian pulpit. May God give me this joy."

But the joy of self surrender is not the only reward. The gospel ministry affords more opportunities for usefulness than any other profession. Every true man wants to make the most of his earthly life. If he has ten talents he wants to use them where they will be most effective; if he has only one talent he wants to make that one talent useful. Where can a consecrated, educated young man have more influence for good than in the Christian ministry?

When the young man graduates from the theological seminary he immediately takes his place at the head of a country or city church. What does that mean? Simply this: The young man immediately becomes the leader of a consecrated band of Christian workers, who are ready to work for Christ in any way the young pastor directs. It means that his individual personal influence is doubled, trebled, quadrupled—aye, a hundredfold increased—by the consecrated band of workers who welcome him into his new charge. It means that by the power of his Christian colaborers working with him and for him he can in time absolutely dominate a whole region for good.

The gospel ministry is a profession whose members are treated with respect and universal kindness. How with respect? The very lowest and most depraved are generally silenced at their approach. When the minister comes around the blasphemer's lips are closed, the lewd story is untold, the evil thought is unexpressed. When the Catholic priest on an errand of mercy enters the lowest dive every head uncovers and every cursing tongue is stilled.

How with kindness? Because from the very moment you step into it there are scores and hundreds of people who will do everything in their power to make your life happy. When installed in a charge the church reception will show you how many friends you have and how welcome you are. When your baby is sick there are always many sympathizers to come around and bring the flowers and, if necessary, help in nursing. When the autumnal fruits arrive there are the tokens of love in gifts of jellies and apples. There are the Christmas presents of chairs and other knickknacks. These gifts may not have much money value, but they show the true beatings of the hearts of a loving and sympathetic people. An aged reformer of England when dying was asked what was the greatest want of this world. He answered, "sympathy." The true gospel minister rarely feels the need of this gift. He has the sympathy of the people in his church work. He finds sympathy, heartfelt sympathy, wherever he goes. I know that there are certain churches which were started in fiendish rows and are now contemptible churches and have ill treated their ministers for generations. But these mean churches are the exceptions—the rare exceptions.

The Christian ministry is a profession in which the members are shielded from many of the temptations that confront men in other walks of life. Richard Baxter once declared that the minister had to face the greatest of all daily temptations. He lived in an exceptional period, and I do not believe he would have said so had he been living in this day. Temptations come to the pulpit, but not with the same virulence and bitterness as they assail the pew. The gospel minister by his official position is under the influence of good associates. He has surrounding him some of the best men and women who are inhabitants of the community in which he lives. These Christians are not only praying for his work, but also for him. We all believe in the power of prayer. Is there to be no direct result upon the minister's life on account of this spiritual association? When I entered college two or three different secret societies invited me to join their organizations. One was composed of men notorious in their dissipations. They were drinkers, card players, carousers. Another was a poorer society financially, but was composed for the most part of noble Christian boys. I said to myself: "I cannot afford to place myself in a position where I may be surrounded by men who drink and gamble. I will join the society which is poorer financially, but whose spiritual members will lift me up instead of dragging me down." The consecrated gospel preacher in the same way is always surrounded by good men and women and not by bad. He cannot if he would associate with evil companions or go to questionable amusements or desecrate the Sabbath. If he did he would be immediately debarred from his pulpit ministrations. Therefore, my young friend, you should desire to enter the gospel ministry for these purifying and holy associations that will lift you up instead of dragging you down.

The gospel minister has the same temptations as other men. Why, that is absurd. I do not believe I am what I am because I am stronger than other men. I believe I am what I am because God has surrounded me by praying men and women and hemmed me in with noble influences and bound me hand and foot with the golden manacles of their petitions. If these holy associates should be taken away from my life I would tremble for what the results might be. My young friend, if God calls you to be a lawyer or doctor or legislator or police captain or merchant go ahead and be what he intends you to be. He will give you strength to resist any temptations that may come in your way if you will only ask him. But if he calls you to be a Christian minister and you deliberately turn a deaf ear to that call I tremble in reference to your future. I tremble for your spiritual life when you have to face the temptations that beset the average man in the outside world. I tremble when you shall not have the guarding, guiding, protecting influence of praying men about you, such as surrounds the average life of the Christian minister.

I have preached this sermon, showing the joys, the spiritual safeguards and the infinite usefulness of the gospel ministry, for two distinct reasons: The first, there never was a greater need than at the present time for young men to enter the gospel pulpit. A few years ago the capitalist, the statesman, the merchant prince and leading lawyers considered it an honor to sit in the aldermanic chairs of our great cities. Now, for the most part, these positions are despised by the intellectual and financial leaders and are filled with professional politicians and men who are weaklings and often dishonest. Once there was a time when the greatest honor that could come to a family was the honor of a son dedicating his life to the gospel ministry. Now the current of popular opinion is running counter to this line of noble service. Our strong young men, instead of entering the pulpit, are giving their lives to law, to merchandise, to railroads, to electrical sciences. Who are to fill the future pulpits of America? "Give us men!" cry our theological professors. Their classes are growing smaller year by year. "Give us men!" cry the churches. "We cannot get the right kind of men for our pulpits." "Give us men!" cry the synodical missionaries. "The harvest is ripe, but the laborers are too few." It is all nonsense for some of our religious writers to declare that the reason our theological students are becoming less and less in number year by year is because we are now getting quality instead of quantity. The reason our seminaries are becoming depleted is because the young men who ought to enter the ministry refuse to come. Men! Men! We want men! We need men for the gospel pulpits, to save the sinful world.

The second reason for preaching this sermon is that I would appeal to those young men to enter the gospel ministry who many years ago heard the call and who have stifled it by an indifferent, wayward life. Young men, you have heard this call to the Christian ministry years ago, will you not hear the call now? Will you not be brave enough, noble enough, Christian enough, to do what Christ bids you do? The church needs you. Christ calls you. Come, offer your life and consecrate it at the altar of Christian ministry.

Mr. Sydney Lee's Tribute.

Mr. Sydney Lee, author of that herculean work the Dictionary of National Biography, during his recent visit to Toronto, said he had felt a great exaltation yesterday morning when by the gateway of a Canadian custom house he had first set foot upon Greater Britain. He referred to Canada's proud historical record and to the American appreciation of its growth. In the United States he had felt himself among cousins, in Canada he felt he was among brothers. Canada's contribution to literature had not been unimportant, and in this connection he mentioned Bliss Carman, Sir Gilbert Parker, Archibald Lampman, whose work would always confer honor upon the literature of Canada; Mr. J. S. Willison's "Life of Sir Wilfrid Laurier," and Mr. Pelham Edgar's Romance of Canadian History from Parkman's works.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. HEMBURG.

The funeral was just over; the carriage with the last mourners rolled along the wood road; all was still again in the house.

The children sat in the yard, and felt quite important, as every one had spoken to them to-day and sympathized with them. The little girls looked oddly in their black woolen dresses, which were almost too long for them. They had their little sister between them, and were taking motherly care of her.

The boy was eating a piece of cake with tearful eyes. The Oberforster passed by them, but looked the other way, as if he could not bear the sight. He had slung his gun over his shoulder, and walked, followed by his dog, across the court-yard, and out of the gate.

In the sitting-room where the mother used to sit, the elderly little woman was resting herself from the fatigues of the last week, and particularly this past day. Lucie, who was standing at the other window, looking at her brother-in-law, knew now that this woman had a right to sit there; she was a relation, and had arranged, so she told Lucie, to remain in the house and look after the children and the housekeeping. So Lucie understood quite well that she was not needed. She laid her head against the window-frame and watched the tall man disappear behind the trunks of the beeches. He was hastening away in his despair; the house was so empty, and life so lonely. She had tried to speak to him as they had met early in the day by the coffin; she had grasped his hand, but he neither saw her tears nor appeared to feel her hand.

"Let by-gones be by-gones," he had muttered.

Her attempt at assistance in preparing the breakfast for the pallbearers, which was set in the best room, was also a failure.

The cousin gave orders about everything in the store-roam and linen closet in such a loud, noisy manner that Lucie felt as if the shaking of the keys must rouse the dead from her sleep.

"I do not need any help, fraulein," had been the answer, as she almost humbly begged to assist. Even old Mike refused her amid her sobs, as she begged to help her in the kitchen.

"Leave it for me, Fraulein Lucie; it is no work for your hands. Ah! you need not have done anything in the house if you had only been here—just to comfort my mistress; she could not make up her mind to die, fraulein; she had taken leave of all, and could not speak any more; but her eyes were always on the door. She waited so long, but you did not come!"

The girl stood with her hands folded at the hearth where she had often busied herself so merrily. She could not weep any more. She sat as one stunned among the mourners. The friends of her sister, the pastor's wife from the next village, and the Frau Director of the sugar factory spoke sympathizingly to her as the funeral procession disappeared in the wood road. She had neither heard nor answered. And she was just as dazed and stunned still. At last she went up to her little room, and lay down on the bed where she had dreamed the happy dreams of youth, and listened to the stillness about her.

It was a curious condition she was in. She tried to put herself back in the time that this was her home, and, strangely enough, she succeeded. Half awake and half asleep, she heard the clock strike, and saw the moon shine through the trees; it made moving shadows on the white floor. The little iron stove in the corner looked, in the uncertain

CHAPTER XIX.

Lucie went out, and across the hall to the sitting-room. The three elder children were sitting by the large table which was covered with oilcloth; the little girls, of eight and nine, with tear-stained faces, were busy with some green leaves. The boy, overcome with grief, was leaning on the table, his head buried in his hands, and sobbing as if his heart would break. The youngest, three years old, stood at the door leading into the room where his mother lay. The tears were running down his round, childish cheeks, and his whole body was shaking as he cried:

"Open the door! open the door!"

Lucie took the child in her arms.

"Come," she said, and carried him into the chamber of the dead.

She stepped, with the child, who had ceased to cry, up to the couch; a white sheet covered with flowers was stretched over it. She did not dare to turn back the cloth and look at the still face.

"Mamma!" said the little one. Then she folded back the linen cover, and lifted the child up to the bed, knelt down and clasped her hands together, and pressed her face, wet with tears, against the cold cheek of her dead sister.

"Forgive me!" she sobbed, "forgive me!"

But the tired eyelids did not open, and the mouth was speechless. When the old woman came into the room a few minutes later, Lucie lay unconscious on the floor beside her sister's body, and the child was sitting by her playing with some of the flowers which it had taken from the couch. Light, like a woman with a long waist and a pointed cap. She had once, when she had a fever, imagined it looked like that, and the recollection had remained with her. As soon as the twilight came on, the woman stood in the corner, and to-day it came again. On the birchwood bureau was the little china vase. Why was it empty? Had she picked no flowers when she was in the wood with the children to-day?

Hark! was not that Mathilda's voice? No, Mathilda was ill, as she always was, but some one spoke.

That was he, her lover! "Alfred!" she said, and started up in abject terror. No, she must have deceived herself. Where was she, really?"

She got up, and steadied herself against the bed-post. She heard a shrill, high woman's voice say:

"The funeral, my good friend? It is over. You wanted to pay the last respects to her? To-morrow? Good heavens! to-day? We have a bed for you, Herr Doctor; come in; my cousin will be back soon; he has just gone into the wood."

The girl sat down again; all the horrors of the present moment came over with full force, and now he too was here! How long she remained so she did not know; all was still in the house again.

"Go to bed at once. Allez! "March!" sounded suddenly, like the notes of a trumpet. Then bitter, childish crying. "For Heaven's sake, what are you afraid of? What nonsense!" sounded again; and then little feet came pattering up the stairs.

The girl's heart beat convulsively. She thought how Mathilda sat by the bedside of her darlings until they had fallen asleep. Suddenly she stood up and ran to the nursery, which was opposite her room.

"Shall I put you to bed?" she asked. Upon that the children hung upon her, sobbing and embracing her. "Be still," she whispered, "so your little sister does not wake."

We always do go to bed alone, but we were afraid to-night," sobbed little Christine. "The charcoal-burner says that for eight days our mother will come every night to see if we are well cared for," whispered the eldest; and in the moonlit room Lucie could see the terror in the child's eyes. She drew the little one to her.

"Your mamma is with the dear Lord in Heaven," said she, "and she asks Him to take care of her children. But she will not come here again, you poor little things!"

The younger one soon began to cry bitterly. Lucie kissed and quieted her, and helped them to put on their night-gowns. She then sat down, as Mathilda used to, between the two beds.

"Shall I tell you a story?"

"Yes," cried the boy, who had his bed behind a curatin. "About Rome, aunt. Mother said you had seen the Capitol, and that when you came you would tell us about it."

She put her hand to her forehead.

"Rome! Yes," she murmured.

"Uncle Alfred has given me a book about Rome, aunt. I do want to go there; it must be so beautiful!"

"Uncle Alfred brought us a box of candy to-day; but the cousin has put it away," whispered one of the little girls. "To-morrow she must give us some, or we will tell uncle before he goes away."

So he was to stay all night here! The girl stood up, very much agitated. Only not to see him—only not that!

She seated herself again, as the children complained again that they were afraid.

"Go to sleep," she said, nervously, "and to-morrow I will tell you a great deal."

They obeyed her and were quiet, and lay with their eyes wide open, and looked at the white moonlight that came in through the uncurtained window. Nothing was to be heard but their breathing; then steps came along the corridor, which made the girl jump up and try to hasten away. She hurriedly looked round. Where could she disappear? In vain; there was but one door leading out. But there, behind the large porcelain stove— She sprung over into the dark shadow, and seated herself on the old chest, in which the children's clothes were kept. The door now opened, and he stepped over the threshold.

In the bright moonlight she could see every feature of his face. She pressed her hand to her heart, it began to beat so wildly. He walked close to her; she could watch him through the open part of the stove, as the tall form bent over one of the children's beds.

"Are you asleep already, my little mouse?" she heard him say; his voice sounded so tender.

"No, uncle," answered a sleepy voice.

"Are you afraid still?"

"No," whispered the little one, throwing her arms around his neck. "Aunt Lucie put us to bed."

He started.

"Aunt Lucie?" he asked.

The Influence of the Trees.

When we plant a tree, we are doing what we can to make our planet a more wholesome and happier dwelling place for those who come after us if not for ourselves.—

A mother's mind is ever on her children. If she is noble, she is praying for them; if she is ambitious, she is scheming for them.—Schoolmaster.

An O'Connell Token.

T. H. Squire, Mount Brydges, Ontario, recently wrote to The Globe, regarding the proposed sale of the Hill of Tara, and the statement that the last important gathering on the Hill was in 1843, when at a gigantic meeting Daniel O'Connell urged the repeal of the union. "I have a coin in my possession," he says, "that bears what I and others always believed to be the image of O'Connell and his harp. On one side is his head only, and on the other his harp and the date 1820. Now if this coin was struck by Daniel O'Connell, I fail to understand how the big gathering you mention took place, for I always understood that O'Connell was only at the head for a very short time."

The token, for that is a better word than coin, might well have been issued to mark the accession of O'Connell to the leadership of the Catholic emancipation party. Grattan died in 1820, and from that time until his death in May, 1847, O'Connell was the greatest force in Ireland. At the Tara meeting it was estimated that close upon a million people were present, or one in nine of the population of Ireland.

STRANGE "HAPPY FAMILIES."

Fox Hound Mothers Light Young Foxes—A Cat and a Rat.

William Gilchrist, a farmer living near Kemble, in Grey County, was going through the bush one day recently when he found a nest of eight young foxes, which he took home, where they were immediately adopted and mothered by a fox hound which had just been parted from her pups. The fox is the natural prey of the hound, and this adoption is in violation of instinct. The hound, while nursing the young foxes, is described as trembling with excitement and the bristles standing up on her back.

In a store window in the town of Dresden is another "happy family" exposed to view—a cat with three kittens and one young rat, the latter being treated exactly the same as the kittens, nursed and played with. The cat, with her strange family, was caged in a store window so that the public might view the queer sight.

P. T. Barnum used to make the lion and the lamb lie down together in his circus. He would cage together snakes, birds, cats, canaries, and all kinds of creatures, the secret of it being that care was taken to keep the snakes and carnivous animals stuffed so full of food that they could scarcely move, and had no desire to eat.

But the cases mentioned are of a different sort. Here is a cat nursing a young rat alongside her kittens, and a hound nourishing young foxes. In an earlier age some reader of dreams and interpreter of omens would probably say that these two queer cases are warnings against years of leanness and famine to come—the cat and the hound but doing what they can to provide game for their kind in the early and necessitous future. That would have been the mildest interpretation put upon such occurences a few hundred years ago. At times in the past some have based predictions of great wars and even the end of the world on meaner omens.

House-Painting Headaches.

House painting and decorating are just now in evidence, and the season is not without its dangers as well as inconveniences to those who are compelled by necessity or slender means to stop at home during the progress. Headache, says The London Lancet, is a common experience at this time. Possibly the oil with which the painter mixes his pigments is sufficient to cause nausea, although there seems to be little doubt that minute qualities of lead are inhaled also. People have been known to suffer from a severe attack of colic after sitting in a room for a few hours a day in which there were "canvases covered with white lead and a drying oil. Artists, again, have been attacked with paralysis owing to the action of the oil paint. People susceptible to the action of the poison should make a strenuous endeavor to leave the house during its painting and decoration, while those who are compelled to remain should live in the fresh air as much as possible. In the sleeping room a very useful precaution is to leave the washing basin full of clean water, or, better still, milk, during the night. In the morning a greasy film will be found on the surface of the water. Milk is a well-known absorbent of odors, and appear to act more effectually than water for this purpose, for after exposure in a freshly painted house the milk will be found to smell quite distinctly of paint. Our contemporary does not mention the practice in some localities of hanging up a bunch of straw or hay dipped in water. By this means a larger wet surface is exposed to the air, with correspondingly increased absorbent powers.—London Telegraph.

Parnell's Humor.

Writing of "Parnell and His Critics," in The London Daily News, Mr. E. Haviland Burke gives an instance of the "grim sardonic humor" of Parnell, which sometimes "contributed to his reputation for callousness:"

Some lady friends of mine witnessed a most amusing scene at a conversazione organized by a Woman's Liberal Association during the period in which English Liberals and Irish Nationalists were working together. With infinite trouble he had been persuaded to attend. A somewhat fussy lady enthusiast insisted on him being introduced to her. After the usual commonplaces she gushingly expressed a hope that there would be no agrarian outrages in Ireland in the coming winter.

Parnell could not resist the temptation. He smiled placidly at his questioner and said, after a pause: "I—er—I'm afraid not."

It is almost needless to say that the poor lady took it "au grand serieux," and retired in horror-strick serieux," and retired in horror-stricken confusion.

How's This for Juggling.

An eye-witness of a celebrated feat of Oriental jugglery told the following story of what he thought he saw a band of Indian fakirs accomplish: "They produced a chain 75 feet in length and in my presence threw one end of it towards the sky, where it remained as if fastened to something in the air. A dog was then brought forward, and being placed at the lower end of the chain immediately ran up and, reaching the other end, disappeared in the air. In the same manner a hog, a panther, a lion, and a tiger were successively sent up the chain and all disappeared at the upper end. At last they pulled down the chain and put it in a bag, no one ever discovering in what manner the different animals were made to vanish.—Chicago News.

The Young Idea.

MRS. BARBERS STORY

SAYS SHE IS MOTHER OF SEVEN CHILDREN.

Witness Had No Idea Her Husband Was Concealed—Contradicts Part of the Grocers Evidence but Admits a lot of Things.

Montreal, June 9.—Sarah Allison, the woman implicated in the sensational "badger" case, gave her side of the story to-day. The woman is neither young nor beautiful. She is distinctly middle-aged. Her hair is a steely grey, worn low over a rather thin and drawn face, which, although it has lost the fullness of youth, is still pleasant and not altogether unprepossessing. Her marriage certificate dates from 1878, and according to her testimony, she is the mother of seven children. She is Brosseau's junior by 19 years.

After relating the circumstances of her first meeting with the wealthy old grocer, through a business transaction in which she endeavored to sell a safe for her husband, the witness said she subsequently met Brosseau at his invitation and accompanied him to hotels. He made violent love and induced her to rent a flat on Chesterfield avenue, where the "badger" is alleged to have been subsequently committed. Brosseau said he had always been generous to ladies, and on one occasion he had given $1,000 to one he admired.

First Visit to the Flat.

The first visit they paid to the rented flat was on a Friday morning. Brosseau opened the door with a key and they went in and examined the apartments. They settled on the Monday following for the next meeting, Brosseau promising to bring her a present. On the date fixed they met in the house and Brosseau brought a bottle of wine. After telling how she submitted to the advances of the wealthy old grocer, the witness described how her husband jumped out of a cupboard and denounced her and her lover, who begged for mercy. Barber, she said, seized her by the hand and shook her violently. Then he grabbed Brosseau and, producing handcuffs and straps, pound her and the old man hand and foot in their disrobed condition.

Barber then said he would sue for divorce and take an action for damages against Brosseau. The latter said: "There is no need to sue, I'll pay damages; I'll give $12,000 if you let me have time."

Barber made his wife go down stairs where she made a clear confession. He then took her up to where Brosseau was and made her confess before him. He afterwards sent her home to get some blank cheques and note paper, which she did. Afterwards she saw Brosseau signing papers for her husband.

Was Not Pre-arranged.

Mrs. Barber swore positively that she did not know her husband was aware that she had rented a house for herself and Brosseau, and had no idea he was concealed in a closet. After her husband left the house Brosseau, the woman said, told her he would look after her and see she was well cared for. He then escaped from the house by means of a ladder.

At adjournment the woman was under cross-examination. Her story was contradictory at several stages. A son of the victim was among the witnesses. He testified that his father came home in a used-up condition, but the family did not hear of his experience until they read the newspapers.

Adventures of a Field-Glass.

Speaking at a yeomanry dinner at Colchester, on Monday night, Colonel Lermitte related an incident in the late war. Mr. Betts, who was serving with the yeomanry, picked up a pair of field glasses which had been dropped by a Boer whom he was pursuing. They had the inscription "H. J. Lermitte, Scotch Fusiliers." When the war was over Mr. Betts proceeded to make inquiries, with the result that a short time ago he was able to return them to Col. Lermitte. The glasses, it transpired, were lost twenty-three years ago at Laing's Nek, and were attached to the saddle of a horse which was shot under Col. Lermitte in that engagement. — London Daily Telegraph.

RADICA DYING.

The Survivor of the Famous Twins a Victim to Tuberculosis.

Radica, the survivor of the twins, who were connected in a way similar to that of the Siamese twins, and who were separated by Dr. Doyen some time ago, after his sister, Doodica, developed tuberculosis, from which she died, is dying from the same disease at the home of the Dames Du Calvaire, in Paris. The malady has attacked her bones and is declared to be incurable. The twins were for some time with Barnum's circus.

JOHN WILKES BOOTH.

A Foolish Story From Oklahoma.

A Globe-Democrat dispatch from Enid, Oklahoma, says:—Junius Brutus Booth, the actor and nephew of John Wilkes Booth, assassin of President Lincoln, has fully identified the remains of a man known as David E. George, as his uncle, George. Booth committed suicide here on Jan. 14th last, and in his effects was found a letter directed to K. L. Bates, of Memphis, Tenn. Mr. Bates came here at once and fully identified the body as John Wilkes Booth. He then went east and has obtained positive identification of the remains from the dead man's nephew and from Joseph Jefferson, Miss Clara Marris and a score of others who knew him in his early days.

According to Mr. Bates' story, he had acted as Booth's confidential agent and attorney for nearly forty years. After Lincoln was shot the assassin escaped to the Garrett plantation in Virginia. According to Mr. Bates the man who was killed was named Ruddy. Being warned, Booth left Garrett's and was taken care of by friends in Central Kentucky. He later settled at Glenrose Mills, Texas, where he conducted a store for several years at John St. Helen.

Mark Sin is Best Man.

A Chinaman as best man to a popular trainmaster will surely go down in history. W. With the car went the faithful cook, Mark Sin. The object of the visit was known to few and the car attached to the train attracted little attention at Ponoka. It was sidetracked and the weddding party, consisting of Miss Roat, her bridesmaid, Miss English, a minister and several friends, boarded the car. When everything was ready for the ceremony the bride-to-be asked to be introduced to the best man. "Best man, indeed," exclaimed Mr. Hewitt, "I thought I was 'it.'" I mean the gentleman who is to stand up with you," was the reply. "Lord bless me," said the bewildered bridegroom, and so it happened that Mark Sin, the Chinese cook, was pressed into service.

BROSSEAU - BARBERS

A FAMOUS CONSPIRACY TRIAL.

Witness Admits Several Visits to the Woman—The Public Were Excluded—Sensational Evidence—She Gave Him Wine to Drink.

Sensational evidence was brought out on Monday at the trial of Charles A. Barber and Sarah Allisan, charged with using violence and extorting notes and cheques amounting to $13,000 from D. C. Brosseau, a wealthy wholesale grocer of Montreal.

Mr. Brosseau, who is 69 years of age, testified that about the end of March last he and the woman, calling herself Mrs. Barber, made his acquaintance by coming to see him about a safe which she and her husband wished to buy. She called on him several times in this connection, and urged him to come to see her husband, whom she said was ill at their residence. This he finally did, but the husband was not there. The woman said she thought he felt better and had gone out. She then gave the witness a glass of wine, and told him she had loved him at first sight. He repulsed her advances and left the house.

The Critical Evening.

She had endeavored several times to get him to meet her in Westmount Park and induced him to meet her at 9 o'clock in the morning of April 27 at a house which she said she had leased on Chesterfield avenue. After she had shown him over the house to convince him that they were alone, they went into a chamber where they proceeded to disrobe. Suddenly Barber burst out of a closet. Brandishing a revolver in one hand and a knife in the other he asked the witness how much he would give to have his life spared. He first demanded $50,000, but afterwards reduced it to $25,000.

SMOTHERED IN HAY LOFT.

W. McFarland, a Lindsay District Farmer Found Dead on Birthday.

On May 25th, Wm. McFarland, a well-to-do farmer, was 62 years of age. He was from Mariposa township, and came to town to celebrate the day. He remained several days and finally disappeared. It was supposed he had gone home to Soniya.

On Sunday last a man named Posue had occasion to go into the loft of the Grand Union hotel barn and discovered the badly decomposed body of McFarland, lying face downwards amongst the straw. Deceased was last seen alive on Tuesday, and it is supposed he went into the hay loft to sleep and was smothered while lying face downward in the straw.

Most Remarkable Will.

The funeral of the late S. J. Major takes place at Ottawa, on Tuesday. The body is to be taken from the residence, on York street, to the Basilica, where a high requiem mass will be celebrated at 9 o'clock.

Mr. Major was the head of a large grocery and provision firm and leaves a considerable estate. By the terms of the will the funeral ceremonies tomorrow will be unusual in some respects. A special chariot is being constructed upon which the uncoffined remains will be taken from the house to the church and then to the cemetery. This will be the first and last use to which the elaborate car will be put. Floral tributes, which may be received, are to be burned. Besides directing that his body should be carried through the streets for burial exposed, the will directs that the house and business establishments shall be elaborately draped. The emblems of mourning are to remain for forty days. During that time the wrapping paper used for the parcels to be black bordered.

WANTED TO DIE.

A Galician Laborer Attempted Suicide Near Keyes.

A farmer named John Cooney, in the vicinity of Keyes station, on the M. & N. W. railway, has had a young Galician working for him for a short time. Yesterday morning (while at work under-brushing), the young foreigner drank freely of slough water, not being aware of its deleterious effects. When Mr. Cooney went out about nine o'clock, he found the Galician stretched over a brush pile and in sore pain, and sent him to the house in care of a boy. At noon when he went home he asked for the Galician and found that he had gone out. On going to look for him, Mr. Cooney found him hanging from a tree and nearly dead, his eyes bulging out, and the rope cutting pretty deeply into his neck. He cut the would-be suicide down and sent for Dr. Gahan, of Arden, who took the necessary steps to save his life. According to the latest reports the man was likely to live. The foolish attempt is supposed to have been due to discouragement caused by the severe pain.

MANY DEATHS IN THE YUKON.

Encased in ice up to the neck the dead body of John Hennessey was found in an abandoned mining shaft, near Dawson, last week. It is believed that all through the winter the body has been frozen solid in the ice, as Hennessey undoubtedly fell into the hole late last autumn, and perished in the freezing water, unable to attract attention.

Three other violent deaths to be added to the Klondike's list of victims have just come to light. They are Owen Connelly, Henry Peterson and Fred Fields, while in addition on the Yukon Thomas Heron was killed. The Yukon is open with the exception of Lake Lebarge.

John Hennessey was a miner, formerly of Clallam county, Wash., where he had property, and also of Seattle. His body was found in an abandoned mining shaft on Ophir Creek, encased all about in ice. It is thought he fell in the water last fall and was frozen solid while standing in water up to the chin.

Owen Connelly, a native of Ireland, was suffocated by gas in his Quartz creek claim.

Henry Peterson, a native of Denmark, and of late years a resident of Oregon, was found on the roadside at Hunker with a bullet in his head and a pistol by his side. A coroner's verdict declared that suicide had been enacted.

Fred Fields, a hunter, was found dead on a raft, on which he was lost from the Duncan mining district last fall. It is not known here from what part of the world he comes.

Thirteen violent deaths occurred on the Yukon during May. The latest is that of Thomas Heron, of Ontario, who was killed by the falling of a rock in a mine.

Burglars Make a Daring Effort to Enter the Bank of Commerce.

A daring attempt was made to rob the Bank of Commerce at Portage la Prairie on Sunday night, but fortunately the effort failed. The bank offices are situated in the east end of Brown's Exchange block and the windows are easily approachable from the east side.

About 2 o'clock G. N. Lount, the junior clerk, who sleeps in a room in the rear of the omces, was awakened by sounds at the window, where the marauders were loosening the bars. Mr. Lount was not alarmed at first and moved around in his bed, calling out to know who was there. The answer was a report from a pistol and a bullet passed over his head, lodging in the wall. Mr. Lount then grabbed his repeater and fired twice. This frightened the robbers and they decamped. The police were at once notified and Detective Cox and Chief McDougall are making efforts to apprehend the culprits, but no arrests have yet been made.

The Raindrop.

The falling of a drop of rain is a commonplace, everyday matter, but a flash of lightning—ah, that is something out of the ordinary, something to wonder at, so most men think. The humble physicist plodding on the trail of these manifestations of physical energy thinks otherwise. To him the drop of water falling gently is much more of a mystery than the sudden rupture of the air gap and the headlong rush of electrical energy in a disruptive discharge.

Although rain has fallen since the dawn of creation, man knows very little about the origin, the structure of the raindrop. The reason for this is that the simple looking drop of rain is in reality a marvelous microcosm. Some day when the mechanism of a drop of rain shall be made plain it will be found that the universe itself is not more wonderfully held together.

The size of the drop is not the obstacle in the way of a clearer knowledge of the drop structure, for the average diameter of raindrops is not far from one millimeter, and men of science have to deal with quantities infinitely smaller.

The Limit Reached.

The prisoner, a faded, battered specimen of mankind, on whose haggard face, deeply lined with the marks of dissipation, there still lingered faint reminders of better days long past, stood dejectedly before the judge.

"Where are you from?" asked the magistrate.

"From Boston," answered the accused man.

"Indeed," said the judge—"indeed yours is a sad fall, and yet you don't seem to thoroughly realize how low you have sunk."

The man started as if struck. "Your honor does me an injustice," he said bitterly. "The disgrace of arrest for drunkenness, the mortification of being thrust into the noisome dungeon, the publicity and humiliation of trial in a crowded and dingy court room I can bear, but to be sentenced by a police magistrate who splits his infinitives—that is indeed the last blow."

Their Graft.

"I know it. But his wife is so homely, you know."

Forgetful Father-in-law.

"I've had another quarrel with my son-in-law, Count Fuscads," said Mr. Cumrox gloomily.

"Have you refused him money?"

"Certainly not. But I forgot to take my hat off and address him by his title when I handed him the check."

KILLED THEIR RULERS

SERVIAN SOLDIERS SHOOT KING AND QUEEN.

Military Revolution Breaks out in Belgrade, and King Alexandra and Queen Draga, Together With Several of Their Leading Ministers are put to Death.

Belgrade, Servia, June 11.—A military revolution broke out here last night. The troops who revolted under the leadership of Major Angikovics surrounded the palace, assassinated King Alexander, Queen Draga, the latter's sister, the queen's brother, Nijodem, Premier Markovitch, Ministers Petrovitch and Tudorovics, General Pavlovitch, the former minister of war, and some of the members of the royal guard.

Prince Karageorgevitch was proclaimed king, a new government was formed and the following proclamation was issued:

To the Servian People—Last night the king and queen were shot. In this grave and fateful moment friends of the fatherland have combined to form a new government. While the government makes this announcement to the people it is convinced that the Servian people will gather round it and lend it their aid to maintain order and security throughout the land. The government hereby makes known that from today the constitution of April 6, 1901, comes into force. A meeting of the national representatives, dissolved by the proclamation of March 24, is summoned to meet at Belgrade, June 15. (Signed): Jopan Avakumovics, premier; Ljubonur Kalievics, foreign minister; Stojon Protics, minister of the interior; George Genshics, minister of commerce; General Jorvan Alanazkovics, minister of war; Vejislav Velikovics, minister of finance; Colonel Alexander Macban, minister of public works; Ljubomir Schiokovics, minister of justice.

The people received the news of the assassinations quietly.

STORY OF THE TRAGEDY.

Dispatches from Servia say that since the late King Alexander's suspension of the Servian constitution the army had been animated by a hostile feeling toward both the king and queen. The revolution was planned weeks ago. Secret committees were organized in the country and worked in co-operation with the army. The leaders of the revolution are said to have been the new ministers of justice and finance, and the Sixth Regiment of Infantry garrisoning Belgrade were designated to carry out the plot. It was originally intended that the plot should be executed later, but fears that the new Servian parliament would settle the question of the succession to the throne hastened matters.

Colonel Naumovics, the adjutant of the king, was trusted with the execution of the plans. While on duty at 11 o'clock last night Naumovics burst open the door leading to the sleeping apartments of the royal couple with a bomb, and then entered, accompanied by Mischics and a number of junior officers. Previously the guard had been overpowered and its commander, Capt. Paujowics, was killed. Naumovics presented to the king a form of abdication for his signature. The document contained the statement that by marrying "a public prostitute" the king had degraded Servia, and that therefore he must abdicate.

The king's answer was to draw a revolver and kill Naumovics on the spot. Mischics picked up the document and presented it again, but the king, perceiving his danger, fled with the queen to the palace room, both being in their night clothes. The officers followed, continuously firing, and ultimately shot down the royal couple. Major Luka Lazarewics, who had been under the king's displeasure for two years, is said to have fired the shot which actually killed the king. At about 2 o'clock in the morning Queen Draga's two brothers were shot at their homes, as well as Premier Markovitch and his brother-in-law, M. Mitkovitch, the minister of the interior; M. Tudorovics and his daughter, and the war minister, Gen. Pavlovitch.

While these events were proceeding at the palace the streets of the city were already occupied by soldiers and an armed force surrounded the royal residence. The horses and guns of the batteries of artillery were all decorated with evergreens as for a festival. The soldiers discarded the badge of King Alexander from their helmets. An attempt was made to support the dynasty by the commander of the Danube division, who tried to march the light regiment of infantry into the city to help the late King Alexander, but he was opposed by a body of troops under Col. Gagovits. In the fight which ensued both the officers mentioned were killed.

OFFICIAL EXPLANATION.

What purports to be an official explanation of the tragedy was issued at Belgrade during the day. It says: "After dinner on Wednesday evening the king and queen, with some of their relatives and several of the ministers, sat on the balcony of the palace. Suddenly the king demanded that Queen Draga leave the country. She refused, and was supported by some of the ministers. When the king saw this opposition he ordered the military to occupy the palace. In the meanwhile the queen's friends were also active and collected her supporters. It was in a fight between two factions that the king and queen were killed."

BARBER'S STORY.

He Suspected His Wife and Secreted Himself to Watch Developments.

Charles A. Barber was on the stand all day in the "badger" case. Barber stated that about ten days before the incident for which he is standing trial occurred, he suspected there was something wrong, as his wife stayed out at night. Two or three days later he followed her and saw her go into the Chesterfield house and his suspicions were strengthened. Subsequently he found a key in her purse, which fitted the house, and upon going through it came to the conclusion that no one lived there regularly.

Sunday night he took two pairs of handcuffs, a baseball bat and a kodak and locked them in the closet. Next morning he knew by the way his wife dressed herself and curled her hair that she was going out. So he went to the Chesterfield avenue house and waited. When he heard somebody coming in he locked himself in the closet and in a few minutes saw his wife and Brosseau come into the room. Barber then described what went on in the room, and continued:

An Interesting Scene.

"I jumped out of the closet and they both screamed in fear. I handcuffed them together and tied them with straps. She pleaded with me not to kill him and he pleaded for his life. I took out a pocket knife which I had and I intended to maim him. The blade of the knife made a wound. I ordered my wife down stairs and took Brosseau's clothes and locked them in the closet. I went down stairs to my wife, and in the most pitiful manner she pleaded to be allowed to go home to the children. I told her to tell me the truth. I listened to her story yesterday and she told the same story. I had a small camera snapshot with me and I made the two sit together. I took a picture, but it was spoiled.

"I determined to get proper evidence against them. I took my wife up stairs and told them both I was going to sue for a divorce. Brosseau pleaded for his life, and my wife joined in asking me to make some settlement, so that our children would not be disgraced. Then I made my first mistake. I asked what settlement he dared propose, and he said that he would pay $10,000 or $12,000."

Barber swore that since he was jailed two propositions were made on behalf of Brosseau, whose representatives wanted him to plead guilty to common assault. In consideration Barber said he was to receive $5,000 and be provided with bail, which he was to jump. He declined to accept.

FOUND GUILTY.

"We find the male prisoner guilty and also the female prisoner," was the verdict returned by the jury in the court of King's bench on June 11, after seventeen minutes' deliberation in the case of C. A. Barber and wife.

When Barber and his wife were brought in to hear the verdict the woman was weeping, and had to be assisted to a seat by her husband. She was in a state bordering on collapse and by direction of the clerk she was not compelled to stand during the rendering of the verdict. As she left the dock she had to be again assisted by her husband.

Chief Justice Lacoste, in his address to the jury charged strongly against the prisoners, whose evidence alone, he said, was sufficient to convict on the charge of extortion. His lordship said he agreed with the defence that Brousseau had in his evidence evaded questions in a silly way, but in the first condition essential to the committal of the crime alleged, one thing was clear—unlawful violence or restraint from the morning of April 27 to the morning of the following day, and the documents were signed during that time.

With regard to the woman the law held that an accomplice was as guilty as the principal. An hour after Barber discovered his wife in Brousseau's company he pardoned her and she was aiding him by going out at his request and obtaining blank promissory notes. She knew everything. She knew that a crime was to be committed; she knew that Brousseau was there against his will. She also obtained and furnished to her husband the food necessary to enable him to remain in the house and to keep Brosseau there, and in the evening when Barber was out she was left in charge of Brosseau. Those were the acts of an accomplice. The crown contended that it was a plot, a scheme, concocted between husband and wife to entrap Brosseau. His lordship thought the facts tended to show this.

The following information relative to the new voters list has been forwarded to us for publication by Government Agent Armstrong. A careful perusal of the conditions required by applicants will make this usually hazy subject clear to our readers.

The dissolution of the legislature will bring the Redistribution Act into force New voters list will be prepared and every voter must now make a fresh application and send it to the collector of votes after the latter is appointed.

The qualifications of a voter are, being a male British subject over 21 years of age, a resident in the province for six months, in the district for one month and being able to read the act if so required by the collector.

Applications must be under oath or affirmation and may be signed before a constable, postmaster or other official.

These may seem unimportant details but the man who omits them from his application may have his application contested.

Be careful in making your application.

My Wedding Day.

A Romance of Concord and Lexington.

By L. G. Woodberry.

Well, as I was saying, this is the way it came about: I was a young thing then, just turned 18. Your grandfather had been my playmate, hero and protector from the time that I was old enough to go to school. I had never thought of marrying any one but him, and so when he asked me to be his wife, why, of course, I said "Yes."

Well, it was in the spring of 1775 that we were to be married. Mother and I spent the winter getting my things made up, and I had as fine an outfit as a girl could possibly have in those days. The day set for the wedding was the 19th of April—yes, the very day on which the battle of Lexington occurred, as I have good reason to remember.

Those were anxious days for us. I remember how serious my father and brothers used to look as they discussed the events which were then taking place. Their only conversation was about rights, stamps and taxes.

When the towns began to raise "minutemen," why, of course, we raised a company in our town, and your grandfather and my brothers were members of it. We girls could not stand guard, of course, so in order to show our patriotism we all signed a paper in which we agreed not to have anything to do with the men of the town who refused to join the company.

The 19th of April was a beautiful day, though a warm one for the season. We were all up early that morning, for there was a great deal to be done. It was about 9 o'clock in the forenoon when my mother, who had been looking over some linen, suddenly raised her head, exclaiming as she did so, "Why, Mary, was that the meeting house bell?"

"What can it mean?" I cried, and, running to the window, I caught sight of our neighbor's sons, Joe and John Eaton, running down the road with their guns. Across the way Harry Wright was plowing the field. The boys called out to him as they passed, and, without stopping to unhitch the horse, he seized his gun and was off across the fields.

"It is an alarm, mother!" I cried.

"The boys are down by the brook," she said. "The sound will not reach them. Run and tell them!"

Without delay I hurried to the kitchen, and, seizing the horn, I ran out of the house and started for the brook, which was some distance from the house. I blew a blast on the horn as I ran, and as the boys caught sight of me I pointed toward the road, where several men could be seen running with their guns. The boys understood, and, waving their hands to me, they were off across the field to the road.

"What do you suppose the matter is?" asked mother when I returned to the house.

"I do not know," was my reply, "but I am going to find out." And I ran out of the house and took a short cut across the fields to the meeting house, which was to be the gathering place if the alarm should ever be sounded. I, for one, had never expected to hear any alarm, for at home we hoped for a peaceful settlement of the difficulties. But when I reached the church and saw the whole town gathered on the green the men's stern air and the women's pale faces frightened me, and I began to fear that something serious was the matter.

"What is it? Where are they going?" I asked. And as I spoke the men came hurrying out of the meeting house, where they had heard a few words from Parson Smith, and, mounting their horses, rode off as fast as they could go. I looked for your grandfather, but he was not there. Catching sight of my father, I ran to him. "Have you seen Henry?" (that's your grandfather) I asked.

"Henry was at the tavern when the messenger rode through here," replied my father, "and, as he had his horse with him, he rode away without waiting for the company to assemble."

You may imagine my feelings as I turned to go home. This was my wedding day, and the man who was to marry me had ridden off without a word, knowing, too, that he might never return, if all they were saying about fights and resistance was true.

My father had reached home before me, and as I opened the door I heard mother ask, "Do you think it is anything serious, father?"

"I am afraid it may be, wife," he said. "The messenger said that Governor Gage has sent some of the king's troops to destroy the supplies which have been stored at Concord. If the report is true, there will be resistance, and if it comes to that it will be very serious business for us."

My mother kept her fears to herself and did her best to make me feel that it would come out all right, but those hours were the most anxious I ever spent. So through the day we watched and waited for news.

The first news that came to us from the fight at Lexington and the other doings of that day arrived about 6 o'clock in the afternoon, when some minutemen from another town stopped at the tavern on their way home. They told the story of the day to the little crowd of anxious women who eagerly questioned them for news of some dear one.

My father would not let me go down to the tavern, but went down himself and brought us the news. I can see him now hurrying along the road.

"Something unusual has happened Mary!" exclaimed my mother. "I never saw your father look so excited."

I hastened down the path to meet him.

"Bad news, my child; bad news!" he exclaimed. "There has been an encounter with the king's troops." And then, reading the question in my eyes, he continued, "But they brought no news of our men."

The hour set for the wedding was 8 o'clock, but it began to look as if there would be no wedding, for it was now after 7 o'clock, and none of our men had returned home.

Mother and I sat in silence in the kitchen while father walked back and forth in the room above.

At last we heard steps outside, and then my brother Arthur, who was among the first to reach home, staggered into the room. I sprang up and ran to him. He sank into the nearest chair, and his gun fell to the floor with a thud. Arthur was only a boy of 15, you must remember, and the day had been a terrible one.

When he had recovered a little, my father spoke. "What news do you bring, my son?" he asked.

Now, I had felt from the first that he had brought bad news, and by the way he hesitated and glanced from father to me and still did not speak I felt sure of it. So I put my worst fears into words.

"Arthur," I said, "is it Henry?"

"Listen," he said, speaking rapidly. "The king's troops were in full retreat when we reached the road. We did not keep with our companies, but each one found shelter as he was able behind trees, walls or fences. I met Henry as I was crossing a field, and we took shelter together and awaited the coming of the troops. We had just got settled when Henry caught sight of a flanking party coming right down on us. He called to the men near us to run for their lives, and at the same time we both jumped the wall and ran for a house which stood in in the field just opposite. I reached the opposite wall in safety and turned round to look for Henry, but he was not with me. At that moment the troops came round a sudden turn in the road and sent some shots in our direction. At the risk of being shot at I stood up and looked across the road. He must have been hit by the flanking party, for he lay just by the wall."

"Are you sure it was he?" asked father.

"Yes; I knew him by the green on his powderhorn," replied my brother.

"You staid by and looked after him?" asked father.

"I tried to, sir, but the troops came down on us, and we were obliged to move on. I went back to the place as soon as I could, but I must have mistaken the spot, for I could not find him."

Meanwhile I sat in my chair, feeling as if I had just awakened from a bad dream. I did not fully realize what had happened, for it seemed impossible.

"Here are some people, Mary," said mother. "You would better go up to your room and lie down."

I did as I was told. There on the bed lay my wedding gown. I could not bear to look at it, and, picking it up, I placed it in the large chest in which my linen was packed and pulled down the lid; then I threw myself on the bed, and tears came to my relief. So I lay there thinking over the events of the day, my wedding day that was to have been. How different from what I had anticipated!

Suddenly I heard the sound of a horse's feet coming up the road at a furious pace. I sat up and listened. "Somebody is riding on an important errand," I said to myself. Nearer and nearer came the sound, and the rider, whoever he was, drew rein at our door. Then there were a murmur of voices and an opening and shutting of doors and then my mother's voice calling to me: "Mary, Mary; child, come down! Henry is here. He's come."

Scarcely believing that I heard aright, I got up and ran down stairs and into the kitchen, and there before me, his face pale as death, with a blood stained bandage bound about his forehead, stood your grandfather.

"Mary," he cried, holding out his hands to me, "I am in time! The clock has not struck yet!"

Then Parson Elder, who had come over to hear the news from Arthur, came forward and said, "Shall I perform the ceremony now?"

So right then and there your grandfather, in his working clothes, all stained with dust and blood, and I in my morning calico, were married.—Forward.

PERRY CREEK TO THE FRONT.

Five Placer Claims Sold for $12,000.

A deal was consummated today by which John Sherwood sold five claims on Perry Creek to F. J. Byron, the mining engineer, for $12,000; the payments to be made in full by July 25th. It is a good property with a large vein and high values. The Perry Creek Placer Company is putting in a flume and other improvemements costing $40,000, and the East Kootenay Placer company operating a steam shovel on Perry Creek, has expended $20,000 in machinery and are now adding $2,000 more to expedite the work. Perry Creek is coming to the front as a great gold camp.

Injured at Michel.

A tramp who was stealing a ride on a load of ties was injured at Michel on Wednesday. It appears that in shunting some cars on to a side track they got beyond the control of the brakeman and the cars came together with such violence as to cause the ties to break through the end of the car. The man in the car miraculously escaped being killed. He received a nasty scalp wound and is in the hands of Dr. McSorley.

TWO C.P.R. FATALITIES

ROBERT MILLER AND ANTONIO SALVATORE KILLED BY EXPRESS.

Former Run Over Sunday Morning Near Fernie and Latter Run Down on a Hand-car Near Morrissey on Wednesday

Two men met their death this week by being run over by the west bound express between Fernie and Morrissey Junction. The first occurred on Sunday morning when Robert Miller was instantly killed near Burns' slaughter house a mile west of the town, and the other occurred on Wednesday morning, the same train running into a gang on a hand car a couple of miles this side of the junction, killing an Italian named Antonio Salvatore. The accidents were similar in one respect that both occurred behind sharp curves, giving the engineer little time to stop his train.

Robert Miller was a young man of about 25 years of age. He was employed at the McRae Lumber Co.'s mill and it is supposed that he was on his way home from town when overtaken by the express. Engineer McGoldrick at the inquest testified that upon rounding the curve he saw an object lying on the track which at first he took to be some dead animal. The engine was reversed and brakes applied without loss of time but the train could not be stopped before the body was reached. The body was mangled and crushed almost beyond recognition, and death was instantaneous. The body was taken to Morrissey and brought back to Fernie on the evening express.

Coroner H. H. Trites held an inquest on Monday morning which was afterwards adjourned for a week to secure evidence of the trainmen. One witness testified to having seen deceased at the Northern hotel at 11:45 the evening before and nothing has yet been ascertained of where he was in the interim. He was perfectly sober when seen then. A flask was found by the body. It is known that he drank but none could testify to having ever seen him under the influence of liquor. The facts that a small sum of money was found on the body and that the body was warm when found disarmed all suspicious of foul play.

The funeral of the deceased occurred in Fernie on Monday afternoon and was in charge of Rev. D. L. Gordon. Little is known of the deceased He came from Kimberley about three weeks ago and was employed at the lumber Company only a few days before he met his untimely death. His parents are dead and his remaining relatives are said to reside in Orillia, Ont.

Antonio Salvatore in company with several other Italians and English speaking men to the number of 13 boarded a hand-car at Fernie on Wednesday morning to go to Moarissey Junction to work in a sand pit there. When within a couple of miles of their destination and behind a curve shutting out the view from the rear the morning express suddenly rounded the curve and was on them without any warning. The men jumped or scrambled out of the way as rapidly as possible and all got clear before the engine struck the car with the exception of Salvatore. When the train was brought to a stand-still his mangled body was taken from underneath the first passenger coach. It still breathed but death shortly followed. His head was terribly cut and his legs were crushed to a jelly.

Constable Tranter who was on the train had the body taken to Morrissey and thence to Fernie on a freight train. The deceased has a brother living here who works in Phillip Carosella's gang. He was a married man of middle age and leaves a widow and family in Italy to mourn his sudden death.

Coroner Trites held an inquest on Wednesday but adjourned it until a later date to secure the evidence of the engineer whose name is Gill. D. A. McRae, the boss of the hand-car gang, was the chief witness. He stated that when they left Fernie the bulletin board reported the train one hour later. They had kept a close watch all the way but had not heard the whistle and the first intimation of the express' approach was its sudden appearance around the curve, after which each man had succeeded in getting away from the car with the exception of the deceased. Replying to questions put by the coroner, witness admitted that thirteen on one car was a dangerous method of travelling; he had made no attempt to enquire from the operator as to the latest report of the train. Had there been only four or five men all would have escaped and probably have saved the car. Wm. McEwing and other men of the gang told similar stories. Constable Tranter also told of thd finding of the body and the position of the up-turned hand-car.

The inquest was concluded on Thursday evening. Engineer Gill and his fireman both swore that the whistle had been blown at the curve, and that everything possible was done to stop the train after the car was in sight. They also testified that all the men were clear at one time and that the deceased approached the car to assist in removing it from the rails, and had hold of it with his back to the engine when struck. The jury rendered a verdict in accordance with these facts.

ANOTHER FATALITY.

KILLED ON HIGH LINE AT MORRISSEY MINES.

J. P. Horan, a Brakeman Run Over by the Donkey Engine. Died in Fernie Hospital.

J. P. Horan, a new brakeman on the high line at the mines met with a terrible accident on Thursday. He attempted to jump on the donkey engine while it was in motion and missing his footing fell in front of the wheels. The engine passed partly over him amputated one leg and broke the other. Dr. Willson was immediatly called and had the unfortunate man removed by special train to the Fernie hospital, but there is little hope of his recovering. Horan was a new hand at braking having only started work that morning.—The Despatch

The unfortunate man above referred to died in the Fernie Hospital shortly after his arrival. Death was due to shock. One leg was taken completely off and the other was badly smashed and almost severed.

Coroner Trites summoned a jury and viewed the body yesterday morning after which the inquest was adjourned until evening when witnesses from Morrissey gave evidence. The jury rendered a verdict to the effect that the deceased came to his death by being run over by the donkey locomotive, after having jumped off the front of the engine to turn a switch. No blame was attached to anyone.

Mr. Horan came from Scotland where he has a wife and family. He was saving up some money to bring them over to this country. The case is a very sad one and enlists the sympathy of the community.

MANAGER Tonkin was up to Michel yesterday on official business.

General Supt. Stockett was at Morrissey mines on Thursday and Friday.

The Tennis club have completed excellent grounds on Mr. Stork's lot and are ready to play the game as soon as the weather permits.

SUFFER THE LITTLE ONES.

A MESSAGE TO EVERY HEART THAT BEATS TRULY ON EARTH.

BLOSSOMS OF HUMAN JOY.

Duties of Parents and Teachers Lovingly Pointed Out in Eloquent Words by the Rev. Dr. Talmage—Hints For Their Training and Culture in the Nurture of the Lord.

Chicago, June 14.—In this sermonic talk to the children, appropriate to the day, there is a message to the heart and life of every boy and girl and to the parents also. The text is Matthew xix, 14, "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me."

The second Sabbath of June is here This is Children's day. This is the morning when the Sunday schools of America, headed by their superintendents and teachers, have made a grand charge and captured the pulpits and pews and choir lofts of all Protestant churches for their own sacred service. This is the day when the church auditoriums are, for the most part fragrant with two kinds of flowers. Here are the flowers which were produced in the greenhouses and the back yards and the front yards and the wild country hillsides and the meadow lands. Here are also the human buds which were gathered out of the nurseries of many homes. Here they are, these human flowers, in clusters of many classes. My, my! Did you ever see so many beautiful flowers abloom all in one garden? We know not which to admire most—the pale lillies in the cheeks, the red roses in the lips, the goldenrod dancing among the yellow curls or the roguish glances of these "black eyed Susans." If any one should ask me what I considered the most important day in the church year, without hesitation I would answer, Children's day. This is the Sabbath morning when parents not only bring their children to the churches where Christ is preached, but when their own thoughts, I believe, are irresistibly drawn toward the divine teachings. If a father cannot feel his affections stirred with love toward God when his little girl is singing her Saviour's praise in the holy sanctuary, his heart must be indeed as dead as a stone.

This is children's day. I would talk to the children for a little while about one of the sweetest scenes in all the Bible. There was a great crowd jostling and pushing about Jesus Christ. It was the time of the Saviour's earthly popularity. Among others there were in that crowd surrounding Christ a great number of fathers and mothers who had children by their side and wanted Jesus to bless them, so that their boys and girls might grow up to be good as Christ was good.

But in the crowd surrounding Christ there were also a lot of unsympathetic men and women. They belonged to that great class of people who think that children are a born nuisance and that they should never be seen and never heard in public places. They think, if they go and visit a married friend, that friend should have his children eat in the kitchen while they are there, or else have the children wait until the older folks are through and then go to the second table. Now, I do not believe that is the right way to bring up boys and girls. If my friends who visit my home are not willing to eat at the same table with my babies they need not come and visit me at all. I am just headstrong enough to believe that what is good enough for my children is good enough for my friends.

There were some men that day, too, who followed Jesus wherever he went and were called his disciples. They knew how precious every word he uttered was and how many sick and blind and deaf people he was curing, and they did not want his time taken up with little children. So these disciples told the fathers and mothers not to bother Jesus with their children. They said: "Here, fathers and mothers, what are you bringing those children here for? Why do you not take them home, where they belong?" But Jesus, hearing the commotion, stopped and asked the cause. Then when Christ heard that these men were driving the babies from his side he turned and practically said: "Ah, that is not right. Do not push those little ones away. Open a path there and let the children come to my arms and be blessed." Then he uttered the sweet words of my text, "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Christ gave this sweeping invitation to all children to be brought to his arms. Therefore I shall try, children, in a few plain, simple words to tell why it is important—very important—for you to come to Christ while you are young. And when I show you that it is important for you to come to Christ I would also try to show you that Christ is the best friend a little child, a young boy or girl, can ever have. Yes, he is even a better friend than your father or mother, sister or brother. He is a friend whose love is beyond your mental grasp, whose love "passeth all human understanding."

Let me tell you what Jesus Christ can do for you. In every child's nature there are two kinds of seed. One of these is capable of growing into a tree of righteousness, and the other is capable of growing into a tree of wickedness and sin. Now, when Jesus takes charge of a child's nature it is the good seed that grows, and then the child's life starts well, and when the child becomes a man or woman that life is a happy one and a blessing to the world. Children, these words may be very hard for you to grasp, but I think I can explain my meaning by a very simple illustration. I hold in my hand an apple. Where did it come from? "Oh, I know," says a young boy sitting in that class behind his teacher. "My mother last summer took me to the country. While I was there I used to visit a farmer who had a farm just back of our hotel. There in his field he had a great big apple orchard. The farmer used to let me climb those trees and pick the apples which grew upon the branches. They were awfully big trees. Some of them were so big that after I had climbed them I found four or five birds' nests in the same tree."

That answer is right, my boy. An apple grows upon a branch in an orchard. But where did those big trees come from which produced the apples? "Oh, I do not know," answers the boy. "I suppose they have always been there. Why, mother said that some of those apple trees were forty or fifty years old. Some of them were as old as my grandfather and grandmother, and they are awfully old." Yes, my boy, you are right again. Some apple trees live to be very, very old. But those trees did not just grow. Every tree had a beginning. If you cut open the apple which I hold in my hand you will find in the centre of it an apple core. Right in the centre of the apple core you will find a little brown seed. Now, children, if you will take this apple seed and plant it in the ground in the springtime that seed will burst open and begin to grow. The little roots of that seed will begin to grow down. A little green shoot like grass will begin to grow up. Then the green grass will change after awhile into a stem. The stem will change after awhile into a tree trunk. From that tree trunk will grow the branches. From the branches will grow the leaves and the blossoms. From the blossoms will afterward grow the apples. The apple tree does not come forth from nothing. The apple tree first grows from the little seed like that which I hold in my hand.

Now, a little child's life can be compared to a seed. How? Because you know a seed does not grow unless it is rightly planted in the right kind of ground. Weeds will grow anywhere without any care. So if the good seed I spoke of just now does not get cared for and looked after it will not grow, but the bad seed will and your lives will become like weeds—good for nothing. Now, if you ask Jesus to look after you and take charge of you, out of your nature can grow the great trees of righteousness which will bear forth good fruit if you will only let the roots of your heart grow about the rock of Calvary, upon which once stood the Saviour's cross. Do you not see, children, how important it is that you give your life to Christ now if from your little selves must come all that is good or all that is bad?

Little children should come to Christ soon, very soon. Their Christian fathers and mothers will not be able much longer to shield them from the evil temptations as they have been able to do. When my little boys and girls were at home I could do what I pleased with them. I could say "Susan" or "Gertrude" or "Thomas De Witt" or "Frank"—for I have four children—"I wish you would not associate with that little boy you were with this morning." And if one of my little girls should say, "Why, papa?" I would answer: "I do not think he is a nice little boy. I heard his mother call to him to-day to come into the house, and he answered, 'I won't come.' And when his mother went after him he lay right down in the street and began to kick and scream and bite. Now, no good little boy will ever act like that, and I do not want you to go with him."

But, children, though I may have been able to guard and shield and protect my little girl while she was at home, there came a momentous day when she went beyond my direct care and guiding influence. That day first came when we sent her to school. It was a sad time for the parental heart when our oldest child had to pack her little school books and leave home. Her mother took her up to a great big room filled with little boys and girls and left here there. In that school we knew that there were bad girls as well as good girls, bad boys as well as good boys, and she had to sit there and associate to some extent with them all. Now, who is going to look after my little girl when she goes to meet the temptations of school unless Christ, who loves little children, goes along and takes her by the hand?

Some grown up people do not think that little children have any big temptations. But I know that some of the greatest temptations we ever have in life come to us when we are young, very young. I knew of one little boy who did not take Christ along with him to school. One day his playmates were teasing him. Then, because he did not have Christ with him, he lost his temper and picked up a stone and threw it at the boys, and he hit an eye of one of the boys and put it out. That little boy, who afterward grew up to be a big man, had to go through life with his eye blinded. I knew of another little boy who, because he did not have Christ with him, wanted to frighten a playmate, as bad boys sometimes do. He pushed him from a bank into the river and the little boy was drowned. I saw his poor little body after it was taken out of the water and I heard the broken hearted mother weeping over it. Ah, children, you cannot afford to go to school and meet the temptations of the playground unless you take Christ along as your divine protector.

Then, after awhile you must go still farther away from the protecting care of your parents. As young men and women you must go out into the great wide world and live entirely aRay from home. You must be like your father and mother and earn your own living. Then, if you do not have Jesus by your side, there are many, many temptations which will beset you and trip you up. Are you not going to drive Christ away from your heart and life? Remember he is your chief protector. I once read a beautiful story about a St. Bernard dog which was killed by the hand of the man he was trying to save. It was on the famous St. Gothard pass, a road leading over the tall mountains of Switzerland, which most of the year is covered with snow. Travelers going over that pass often become so benumbed with the cold that they fall down and are frozen in the snow The monks of a monastery which was built among those mountains used to send out great big shaggy dogs and hunt out the travelers and save them. Around the necks of these dogs was tied a little box filled with food and wine, which the travelers could eat and drink when the dogs found them. Among those dogs was one so intelligent and strong that he had saved sixty-eight persons who had been lost in the snow. But one night this intelligent dog found among the snows a traveler nearly frozen to death, and so to warm him and bring him back to life the great dog stretched his big body upon the dying man, as your mother might cover you up with a fur lap robe when you go sleighing. After awhile the traveler awoke. He thought the big dog lying upon him was a big bear or wolf. He took out his knife and drove it into the heart of the dog, and killed it. Then the monks, missing the dog, went out in search for him and found the dog and the man both dead in the snow. If the man had only known that the dog was trying to save him he would have been thankful to him instead of killing him, and his own life would have been saved. But, you see, he did not know what a friend the dog was. Now, I do not want you to make such a mistake as that. I want you to understand that Christ is your friend, the best friend you can have, for he can save you from dying eternally. So I want you to welcome him and cling to him when he wants to help you and save you, not only from the sins of the schoolroom, but also from the sins of the great wide world at large.

Boys and girls, if you have a father who never goes to church, what a good thing it would be if you could bring him! Suppose you should go home from this service and clamber up into his lap and say: "Papa, why do you not come to church? Why do you not love Jesus?" How good a thing it would be if he should put his arm around you and should say, "Yes, darling, for your sake I will go to church and learn to love Jesus." Boys and girls, what do you think your mother would do if you would climb up into her lap and put your arms about her neck and ask her why she did not have family prayers? I tell you what she would do. Perhaps she would get down on her knees and put her arms about you and then and there consecrate her life and yours anew to the Saviour. Oh, children! Oh, little children, that is one reason why I want you to respond to Christ's invitation, "Suffer the little children to come unto me." I want you to come to Christ to-day to be saved, that you may also ask your big brothers and sisters, your fathers and mothers and all your little playmates to come along by your side.

Having talked perhaps already far too long to the children, I would like to speak a few words in closing directly to the parents and the grown up people here assembled. Fathers and mothers, are you to let an opportunity for your own salvation like this go amiss? When your little children are ready to surrender their hearts to Christ, are you not willing to consecrate your lives to his service as never before? You know that the strongest ties we have on earth are those which bind us to our children. Are we to be a spiritual stumbling block in their way?

Men and women, you know you love your children better than your lives, therefore will you not consecrate your lives for their sakes to Jesus Christ? In all your earthly existence you will never be brought nearer to Jesus than now by any plea. It is not myself that begs you to give your heart to the Master. It is the object lessons which are before you this Children's day of your own little ones commingling in yonder classes.

A beautiful incident lately recounted in the German papers sets forth in strongest terms what the parental love might not only be in the hovel, but also in the palace. Emperor William II. was inspecting some of the famous industrial establishments of his kingdom. In one the most expensive kind of thin lace dresses were being made. The proprietors, desiring to give the Emperor a present in recognition of the honor his visit had conferred upon them, wished to send the Empress one of the most delicate and expensive of gowns. The Emperor looked at it a moment and then laughed. "Oh," he said, "that gown is not appropriate for my wife, It is too thin and delicate. It would not last a day. My wife never moves unless she has two or three babies pulling at her skirts, and they would tear that gauze all to pieces." Beautiful picture that! And yet it is the picture which is seen in every true parent's life. We always should have our babies hanging upon us. And the way we go into the kingdom of Jesus Christ will often decide the way our children will follow. Fathers and mothers, will you start for heaven today as a grand climax to this children's day festival? Standing amid this beautiful human flower garden of little children, I have one more word to speak. I congratulate this church because it places its chief emphasis in the place where it belongs. Next to the prayer meeting the most important of services is the Sunday school session. May God bless the Sunday school superintendents of America. May God bless the teachers and the other Sunday school officers. May God bless the scholars, and may every Sabbath be a children's day. No Sunday should be allowed to pass in any Christian church without some boy and some girl being led to seek Jesus Christ, the one who always has loved and always will love little children.

MADE KINGS' WAYS EASY.

A Delightful Interview With M. Paoli, Who Has Been Exclusively Attached to All of France's Royal Visitors.

At a quiet little flat on the third floor in a quiet little street in the shade of one of the oldest churches, in an old part of Paris, a voice said, "Come in, please," in quiet, deep tones. The voice was that of M. Paoli—a little man with silvery white hair, snow-white moustache, and deep-set brown eyes, which gleam out of a face that is so typically Corsican that the name Paoli and the big bronze figure of the great First Consul in the place of honor on the mantelpiece are quite unnecessary to show that their owner is a countryman of the great Napoleon. Upon the walls, on etageres, on tables, and on every piece of furniture where there is room to place them are photographs of royal personages with autograph inscriptions—the Queen of Holland, the Shah, the King of Sweden, the Princess of Wales, the late Empress of Austria, and many others; but more numerous than any others are those of the late Queen Victoria. A big official portrait of her late Majesty is on the wall, small water-color sketches of the late Queen on her drives in the Riviera are there, and also a photograph of the Queen in the famous donkey carriage. It is not difficult to see that M. Paoli had a cult for the late Queen of England. In his memoirs, which will be published very soon, this cult will find expression, better than in mere conversation; for, as the dear old gentleman said to me, "I lost a dear friend when she died, and only to my pen can I, at all composedly, confide my feelings."

"I do not, as a rule, like to be interviewed," he said, sitting down next to me and speaking quietly and with an introspective smile. "I prefer to be what I have tried to be for the last fifteen years, the man in the shade, whom nobody notices, and whose work and privilege it is to make the King's way easy."

M. Paoli has been in the service of the French Home Office for the last thirty years, and since Her Majesty first went to Aix-les-Bains some fifteen years ago he has been exclusively attached to all the royal visitors to France—their guide, their protector, and in many ways their mentor. He is naturally proud of it—proud of the invariable smoothness with which each detail of the many royal visits which he has stage-managed has passed off, proud of the confidence placed in him by each succeeding Government of France, proudest of all of the friendship of his many royal and imperial friends.

There were tears in M. Paoli's eyes and deep emotion in his voice as he spoke of the late Queen Victoria. "I was with her at Aix-les-Bains, at Grasse, Hyeres, and at Nice," he said. "I was, to all intents and purposes, more with her than was any other man during her stays in France. Each time she left she asked that Paoli might receive her and look after her upon the coming visit. She treated me not as a servant, but as a friend, and, on the long drives out into the country, when I was practically her sole companion, she even honored me by asking my advice on many matters. Sometimes on these excursions I almost shuddered at the responsibility upon my shoulders. The Queen and Empress of a powerful country, the guest of another. Think of the weight of it! But nothing ever happened. Each time the royal yacht steamed out of Cherbourg, mingled with the natural grief of parting from kind friends, I felt a natural feeling of relief that all had passed off without accident; for you must realize that on these visits I am responsible for everything pertaining to the safety and comfort of the royal or imperial visitor.

"The royal guests of France—I very nearly said 'My royal guests,'" said M. Paoli with a smile—"always make matters very easy for me, and of all the Kings, Queens, Emperors, and Empresses that I have known (it seemed a little odd to hear this quiet statement in a third floor flat of modest aspect) the royal family of England have always been the kindest, simplest mannered, and most charming. The members of your royal family know how much I love them, and they are untiring in showing kindnesses to me. I was invited, and went over to the Diamond Jubilee of the late Queen of England, and I was present at her funeral. The King invited me over to the coronation, and honored me with a long conversation after the ceremonial. As Prince of Wales I knew him well, and he was pleased to say the friendship should continue."

"How is it, M. Paoli, that you don't talk English?"

"The fault of all my royal friends," he answered, "for they all speak French, as do the persons of their entourage. I have always meant to learn your language, but I am a busy man. One had to work hard, don't you see, to keep the signs of my work invisible."—Correspondence of London Pall Mall Gazette.

Tennyson's Uniform.

Once when Tennyson dined with Sir Arthur Sullivan his wide brimmed felt hat and long, flowing cloak greatly impressed a servant at the composer's house. At the end of the evening, when Tennyson had departed, she gave vent to her feelings after asking whether that was "really the poet" in these words: "Well, he do wear clothes?" "Yes, so do most poets," answered Sullivan, "and then you must remember he is the laureate." The girl thought it over for a few minutes, no doubt cogitating on his official position, before she remarked, with a sigh, "What a uniform!"

British Mines in 1902.

The mining industry of Great Britain employed during 1902 856,213 men, 825,401 of whom were engaged in mining coal. There were 227,178,140 tons of coal mined, 29,953 tons of gold ore, 25,062 tons of zinc ore, 6,762 tons of copper ore, 8,925,259 tons of iron ore, 23,615 tons of lead ore, 6,698 tons of tin ore and 25 tons of petroleum.

THE TWINGING PAINS OF RHEUMATISM

And Sciatica, Distressing Headaches and Dizzy Spells, Made Life Wretched—Doctors and Medicines Availed Nothing, but Cure Came with the use of

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS.

Instead of giving you reasons why Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills should cure you, we prefer to quote from the experience of the cured ones. This case of Mr. Haines was unusually serious because it was of twenty years' standing, and had resisted the efforts of two physicians and all sorts of treatment. It is merely another illustration of how Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills reach the seat of disease and cure when other means fail.

Mr. William Haines, farmer, of Thorold Township, near Port Robinson, Welland County, Ont., states: "I have been subject to severe and distressing headaches since boyhood, and in later life this became complicated with rheumatism and sciatica, and altogether my life was made miserable. The headaches were accompanied with dizziness and vomiting, and I was for days and often weeks unfit for anything. As the trouble advanced I became reduced in flesh, and was wrecked in health and spirits.

"After undergoing treatment by two doctors and trying many domestic and patent medicines, I almost gave up in despair, as none of these did me any good.

"Fortunately I began using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, thinking that if I were only benefited it would be a wonder. However, I persisted in using these pills until the time came when the bad symptoms of nearly twenty years' standing disappeared. I had gained nicely in flesh, and began once more to enjoy life. For this great change all the credit is due to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and I shall never cease to recommend them whenever the opportunity offers."

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills have attained their enormous sale because they succeed where others fail. One pill a dose; 25 cents a box; at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

A Genius For Friendship.

No man of Johnson's time knew the great city better nor all the varieties of life contained within its walls. He slept with beggars or wandered houseless through the streets at night with a brother poet; he "slanged" a bargeman, laughed and jested with Garrick's actresses or talked "with profound respect, but still in a firm, manly manner, with his sonorous voice," to majesty itself. "I look upon a day as lost," he said, "in which I do not make a new acquaintance." The fact that he never lost a friend except by death shows that he was as tenacious of old friendships as he was eager to acquire new. He had, in fact, a very genius for friendship, and the circle that gathered round him in his later years included not only poets, scholars and men of letters, but the most prominent painters, actors, musicians, doctors and statesmen in England.

He Knew What It Was.

A certain minister, while passing down the village street, observed one of his parishioners seated at his cottage door supping his broth.

Thinking this an unusual proceeding, he stopped and asked him what was the matter.

"Oh," replied John, "the chimley is reeking a bit, so I cam' outside te sup ma broth. Ye had better gan in and gie the missus a bit advice about it."

The minister had scarcely opened the door when a female voice exclaimed, "Is that thoo agyen, thoo awd rascal?" And the minister's hat was crushed over his eyes with a stool.

Without making a remark the minister closed the door and, stepping up to where John sat, said solemnly, "John, our chimney at home smokes sometimes too!"

Telling of the Baby.

When a Dutch baby makes its arrival, the fact is announced by a man wearing a black coat and a white tie who is hired by the little one's parents to go round to all their friends with packets of sweets, which are appropriately decorated with a picture of a baby and an angel. The confection is made of aniseed and sugar. Rough sweets signify the birth of a boy, smooth sweets that of a girl. The children of the families to whom they are sent eat the sweets spread upon their bread and butter. In the eighteenth century the birth of a child was announced by tying a pincushion decorated with lace and ribbons to the door knocker of the parents' house.

NEW MOTIVE SYSTEM

INTERESTING COMPETITION ARRANGED.

Germans Hope That Trains Will Attain a Speed of One Hundred Miles an Hour—A Monorail System Suggested as the Solution.

The Prussian state railways between Hamburg, Hanover and Berlin will shortly conduct an interesting competition between steam and electrically hauled trains. The leading locomotive builders and electrical firms of Germany have been invited by the state to submit designs and specifications for steam or electric locomotives or motor cars capable of making 100 miles an hour with a light load, and 90 miles an hour on ordinary traffic. The test will be a continuation of the trials of high speed electric trains on the Prussian standard guage military line between Berlin and Zossen, which have been arranged on account of the decision to increase the speed of trains between Hamburg, Hanover and Berlin.

The Times, commenting on previous tests, which did not give the speed expected, says:—Engineers are agreed that mean speeds of over 60 to 65 miles an hour are practically commercially impossible on the present two-rail tracks. Owing to the existing curves and the mixture of speeds, a critical stage has been reached in railway locomotion. The liveliest interest will, therefore, be taken in the working of the monorail system, which is to be built between Manchester and Liverpool, on which a speed of 110 miles an hour is promised without fear of derailment. Doubtless some special form of track is the true solution of the problem of high speed.

EXPLOSION AT WOOLWICH

Fourteen Men Killed and Thirteen Injured in the Lyddite Factory.

London, June 18.—Fourteen men were killed and thirteen injured by an explosion in the lyddite factory at the Woolwich arsenal this morning. Several of the victims were literally blown to pieces. The building was completely wrecked. The roof was blown off and the interior collapsed.

The explosion is attributed to the bursting of a shell. There were many pathetic scenes about the gates of the great arsenal, where thousands of relatives of the employes besieged the officials for information.

Six additional men are missing and it is believed they were blown to pieces. The remains of the victims were collected in buckets.

ANOTHER COLONY.

Proposal to Form One on Lines of Moore's Utopia

Advices from Geneva, Switzerland, say: About 100 persons, 30 of them women, have settled at Ascona, on the Swiss-Italian frontier, intending to found a community modeled upon Sir Thomas Moore's Utopia.

The members are to have individual liberty of action and of thought, but are pledged to live in the most frugal way. They are vegetarians; their dress is to be of the simplest character, and no hats or caps are to be worn. All belong to the educated classes.

The laws, they say, are those of nature, and they acknowledge no other. Their sole amusement is music, by preference that of Wagner, whom they call nature's musician. The founder of the colony is a Belgian, but among the members are Swiss, Italians, French, Germans, Russians, and one South American.

Bishop on Gambling.

A dispatch from London, Ont., says: "It is high time for the church to take a definite stand on this subject," said Bishop Baldwin to the Synod of Huron, when the report of the committee on gambling was presented. "This ghastly crime has even entered society; ladies darken their parlors, light the gas and indulge in progressive euchre, which is gambling, pure and simple. The amount of it in London is appalling. It may be called progressive or some other euphemistic word, but there is the crime. Society laughs and simpers and makes its rooms dark and people are being educated in vice."

The report of the committee recommending a petition to Parliament to close bucket shops was passed.

Advices from Aden, Arabia, say:—The British lines of communication between Berbera and Bohotle, Somaliland, East Africa, are threatened by the forces of the Mad Mullah. Three companies of the Hampshire regiment and three hundred native troops have been ordered to proceed from here to Somaliland June 20. Further confirmation has been received of the reports that three British officers are prisoners in the camp of the Mullah. About 14,000 Abyssinians are now co-operating with the British against the Mullah's forces.

Slater Shoe Advertising

Foot Comfort

Short talks by the Slater Shoe ad man, No. 3.

For years the "Slater Shoe" has been advertised as the shoe of comfort—of foot ease.

Thousands of pairs of "Slater Shoes" have been bought because of this claim.

Now imagine a man or woman buying a second pair of "Slater Shoes" after a course in foot agony in a pair of ill-fitting "Slaters."

If the "Slater Shoe" had not proven to wearers its claims to comfort how long could it have remained on the market, no matter how loudly or skillfully it might have been advertised?

How long could the makers have continued to expend large sums in advertising had the "Slater Shoe" fallen short in any of its advertised claims to comfort, wear and appearance?

The sermon caused consternation.

Plea for Canadian Cattle.

London, June 18.—A new force is given to the argument for the admission of Canada's store cattle by Mr. Chamberlain in his imperial reciprocity campaign. The secretary of the Canadian Store Cattle Admission Association of Edinburgh, writing to the papers, says: "By the exclusion of Canadian store cattle the board of agriculture is proving itself one of the worst enemies of the country. Actual experience at the block has proved that Canadian cattle are healthier than the British. It surely is a mistaken policy for the board of agriculture to encourage the breeding and rearing of young stock, which means more grass land laid down, while discouraging arable farming in an old and densely populated country like Great Britain. Canada's claim to free entry is powerful."

Canada is being officially recommended for Italian farm emigrants. The Italian consul at London is being asked by numberless correspondents in Italy whether there is any opening for Italian emigrants. The British agricultural districts send a report to the emigration bureau at Rome that agricultural employment is too unsteady and too poorly paid in England, and that all farming is too heavily handicapped by foreign competion. Italian emigrants should go to the British colonies.

Discontent in Germany.

A cable from Berlin says: The lesson of the general election is that Germany in the matter of industrial progress, military strength, and her inordinate naval and colonial ambition is honey-combed with unappeasable discontent. It means that workingmen, large sections of the middle classes, and petty officials, have no part and no lot in the policy and aims of the government. They do not consider the liberty and dignity of the individual is adequately recognized in an empire, where militarism and class privilege is rampant, and where the ordinary citizen is expected to shut his eyes, open his mouth and swallow what the authorities are pleased to toss to him.

A dispatch from Windsor, Ont., of June 18, says: James Smyth, principal of the public school at Essex, was brutally beaten, it is alleged by Samuel Smith, blacksmith of that town. Smyth overtook young Smith yesterday and picking him up carried him toward the school. Smith heard his son crying, and grabbing up several horseshoes, it is averred, struck the teacher with them and then kicked him.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. HEIMBURG.

"She was here just now," lisped Anne Marie; "she was sitting there, and then she ran away; I saw her."

"Does your throat hurt you still? Did you put on a wet bandage yesterday? No? Then you must have it to-day. Ask Aunt Lucie to put it on for you, little mouse. Your aunt is going to stay, is she not?"

"Uncle," cried the boy, "the cousin won't have her at all; she said just now that such princesses were of no use."

"Our aunt is so nice, so good, and she has cried so!"

"Would you like to have her stay here?"

"It would be ever so nice!" cried the boy; "she has been in Rome, and can tell us all about it."

"Beg her to; she will be glad to stay."

"You tell her, uncle," advised the boy.

He stood up.

"Ah, my good little fellow!" he said bitterly, "that would not help matters! Sleep well, children."

"Uncle, shall I give your love to Aunt Lucie?" asked Anne Marie.

He did not answer; he stood in the middle of the room, in the blue moonlight, without a suspicion that near him hot tears were quietly pouring down a girl's face, that Lucie was pressing herself convulsively down to the chest, as if to hold herself fast, to prevent herself from going up to him and asking him to forgive her for what she had done.

"What then?" she asked herself; but she found no answer. And she looked at him through her tears, and felt herself so insignificant, so wicked, and so wretched.

He turned slowly, and walked out of the nursery door.

"Good-night," he said again, and was gone. Lucie buried her face in her hands and sobbed. All was still in the room, and when she at last went up to the children's beds they were sleeping sweetly and peacefully.

She carefully lifted little Marie up in bed, and put the bandage round her throat, then knelt down and kissed her tenderly. Then she went over into her own room, and sat there by the window a long time.

"Come to supper," sounded in the shrill voice of the cousin, and a hard finger knocked at her door.

She did not answer, and did not move. The slippers clacked down the stairs again; from the hall came up the clatter of dishes and glasses and the men's voices. George must have come back from the wood.

She listened to a few words spoken between them. Then a carriage drew up from the court-yard and stopped with a snapping of whip before the door. Below she heard chairs move, and parting words were being spoken. Lucie did not understand them. She had clasped her hands and bent her head. So he was going that night! Now the house-door shut, and the carriage rattled over the pavement; then she heard it rolling over the smooth wood road, and then all was still within and without. Only the old clock still swung its pendulum; it seemed as if its voice were higher than ever, as if happy that it alone had something to say, and as it struck the hours, quite indifferent as to whether it issued in happy or wretched ones, they were counted by a sleepless young creature, and not till toward morning did her tired eyes close in a short sleep.

When Lucie entered the sitting room the next day, it was with a resolution which the anguish of the past night had wrung from her. She would beg her brother-in-law to let her stay with him to take care of and educate the children.

She had become quieter, and came to the breakfast-table where he sat with the calmness which came from an honest determination to do right, however difficult.

The house door was wide open; the summer wind played among the high trees, and the rays of sunlight danced on the heads of the children, who were sitting on a bench under the lindens.

Lucie gave her hand to her brother-in-law, then pointed to the children, and asked:

"George, can I be of use to you with these? Say so, and I will do all in my power to carry out your wishes."

She spoke hastily, for a picture came before her eyes that had been in her dreams all through the night—of Hortense, with the despairing look of those last days in Dresden. And there in the corner in its large box was a beautiful wreath of white roses, and on it a dainty visiting-card with a seven-pointed coronet over the name of Hortense von Lowen, nee Von Lowen.

The tall man, with a troubled look shook his head, and poured himself out a glass of wine.

"Mathilda, a few days before her death, engaged a teacher. She is to come at Johanni."

Lucie turned paler than before; she seated herself on a chair opposite him, and looked at the little girl; she had turned a footstool upside down, and was taking her dolls out for a drive in it.

"My cousin will attend to the housekeeping," he continued. "But do not trouble yourself about it. In the hardest time in her illbess we got on without you, and we will now — we must," he added, trying to look indifferent.

"But Little Marie is so delicate," she said, hesitatingly.

"Only trifling ailments," he said, turning his head away.

"Let me stay here," she whispered. "I will take care of the child as a mother would; for Mathilda's sake, let me stay!"

"It would be a dull life in my house. I thank you; but no. Why should you give up a position which suits you very well?" He rose, stepped up to the rack where his hat and gun were hanging, and put the latter over his shoulder. "But I thank you very much," he said, and whistled for his dog.

"I am not giving up my position," she answered.

He stood still, and looked at her.

"I hope Frau von Lowen has had no disagreement with her companion. That would be bad for you, and not very nice of her ladyship. That was your only excuse in my eyes for your remaining away so long. For a visit, as I first supposed, it would have been rather long."

Lucie stood up.

"You do not understand how matters are, George," she said, quietly. "Hortense is a friend to me, and—and—"

"As far as I am concerned, you can call her so," he interrupted. "As long as she needs you, you will most likely stay; but some fine day she will marry, and you will be left out in the cold. However, I have promised your sister that you shall at any time find a refuge here. Good-morning."

He touched his hat and was gone. A sad smile came over Lucie's pale face. She mounted the stairs, put on her hat, and, taking the wreath, let the house. She intended going to the grave-yard.

The little girls came running toward her. She persuaded them not to go with her, for she could not speak to them, she felt so desolate and forsaken. She began now to have a burning desire to see Hortense, to lay her head on her friend's shoulder, and say:

"Now I have no longer any one in the world but you. You are my only refuge."

She felt as if she had never loved Hortense as much as that this moment, when the reality of their friendship had been so openly doubted.

She walked through the wood with her cheeks burning and her head erect. She had to pass the little station.

"Does the train go as it used to at five in the afternoon from here?" she asked the official in the tiny station house.

"Yes, fraulein."

"Thank you," and she walked along the road toward the village. The mountain-ash trees at the side of the road were in full blossom; the beauty of late spring was over wood and vale, and the larks were soaring from the young grain fields toward the sky, making the air jubilant with their songs.

The gate of the church yard stood wide open; the elder-berry bushes with their fragrant blossoms hung over the graves, and a number of children were palying about among them. A grave-digger, spade in hand, came toward her.

"Over there, fraulein," he said, "in the new path."

It looked so desolate—the grave: clods of earth were on the new-made mound, and the wreaths were already withered; near it a new grave was already dug. There was not a single tear near it to cast a cool shadow over it; the sun beat down relentlessly. The girl laid Hortense's wreath at the foot of the grave, and remained standing motionless, looking at the bare mound; it seemed as if she must die of sorrow, and yet not a tear fell from her eyes. Was it, then, so dreadful—what she had done? She had tried to make reparation. She had been ready to give all her powers, all her young life, for Mathilda's children, and — she had been repulsed.

She walked again through the main entrance of the church yard; in her hand she held some half-withered twigs of cypress that she had taken from one of the wreaths. When she was once outside the grave-yard she began to walk faster. In the street of the village she met the old postman; she knew him well; he had once criminally brought her the first letter from her lover.

"I have something for you here," he said; "and this for the Herr Oberforster. Will you take it with you? Thank you very much."

Lucie took the letters; that for her was from Hortense.

"Thank God, it is from her!" she said. It seemed as if a warm, true hand clasped hers—she felt suddenly so comforted. Would she be vexed with her?

As she turned into the wood path she thought she would open the letter; but she changed her mind, and hurried on toward the house.

The cousin, who was taking Mathilda's place, was seated at the upper end of the table, helping to the soup. The master of the house had not yet arrived, but the young forester apprentices were already standing behind their chairs, as were also the children.

Lucie laid the letter at George's place, and flew upstairs. Once in her room, she took off her hat, washed her heated face and hands, and then drew out the letter. Just one look before she went down-stairs. She hastily tore the envelope, and unfolded the thick little sheet.

Then she dropped as if stunned on the chair at the window. Was it possible? She turned her eyes again to the white sheet; it was nothing else; there it was, clear and plain.

"My Darling.—Yesterday evening I engaged myself to Weber. Ask nothing; do not be astonished; I can not tell you in writing how it happened. As I suppose you can not be spared just at present, I will go to you to-morrow morning early; you will at least have a few hours to spare for me. Yours, Hortense."

She laid her head on the window-bench, and put her hands up to her temples. She had no clear perception of what had happened or what would happen. She only knew one thing: she had now lost everything!

CHAPTER XX.

The next morning Hortense was seated opposite Lucie in her little bedroom. The girl had had coffee and rolls brought up, but Frau von Lowen scarcely touched them. She sat shivering, a shawl over her shoulders, and said:

"How can you stand it here, Lucie?"

The girl looked at her without a word.

"And you really mean to stay here?"

Still not a word of what had just happened was mentioned between them. As Hortense had alighted from the railway carriage, she said:

"Do not begin now; I will tell you everything in your own room."

So Lucie asked no questions. Now she merely answered:

"No; I shall not remain here."

"Not here?" asked Hortense. "What am I to understand by that? What will you do?"

"That I do not know yet; but I shall not stay here."

"Then you will stay with me. There is nothing else but one of these two things to do."

"With you?"

"Yes, Lucie." Hortense rose and embraced her. "I did not believe you would come back to me. I thought that you would dedicate yourself fanatically to the children and the housekeeping here to quiet your conscience. All the better. I can spare you less than ever."

"You! I suppose you will marry soon?"

"Some fine day—yes."

"Well, then?"

"Well, what is that to you — to us? Herr Weber will be off over his fields or in the business house in A—, or hunting, or somewhere, you see, I know all about it. That is all right, and you must go with me to the rococo castle, Lucie."

It sounded rather frivolous, and the young baroness seemed to be examining, as she said it, a little silhouette of Lucie's mother which she had taken from the wall.

"But, gracious heavens, Hortense!" came from the girl's lips, "what in the world induced you to engage yourself to him?"

"You ask me too much, child. I do not know. I can tell you what happened, but not what I could have been thinking of."

She hung the little picture upon its nail again, leaned against the bureau and folded her arms.

"When you left me alone, I lost my head," she began; "that is, I got into an inexplicable state of nervousness and excitability, very much as it was a year ago. I had the greatest desire to run over to the Elbe and throw myself in. I looked upon you as lost. Down-stairs the wedding banquet was going on, as you know. Perhaps the chamber-maid may have seen me while I was so excited. I was lying on the carpet, and my hair was in some disorder. Suddenly there was a knock, and Herr Weber came in. He lifted me up and persuaded me to sit down like a reasonable person. And then we sat some time opposite each other, as if we were both dumb. I had very decidedly asked him to go away, but he did not go; he could not possibly leave me alone. So not to make myself too ridiculous, I tried to compose myself, and then he announced that he loved me, and asked for my hand. I believe I laughed aloud: 'Do you know anything of me and my family?' He looked very much in earnest, and said: 'I love you, Hortense, and nothing in the world could dissuade me from my purpose.' As he stood so quietly before me, and looked at me so earnestly with his blue eyes, it seemed as if some one whispered: 'You will be hidden and sheltered with him, Hortense.' I did not know anything of him or his family, and still it seemed to me as if some irresistible force drew me to him. He repeated his question again. From below sounded loud cheers; upon that, suddenly my hand lay in his. Then I wanted to withdraw it. 'I do not love you; I acted on the impulse of the moment.' He only held me the firmer. 'But I love you, Hortense; I can wait.' I wanted to speak to him about papa; but it seemed as if my tongue was paralyzed. I felt I was a coward, but I let the opportunity go.

"He sat by me for hours, and talked of his brothers, of his mother—I do not remember what. He opened the door into the little anteroom where my maid as usual sat and knitted; he said it was warm. As the last sounds of the banquet died away, he took his leave and sent the maid into me.

Relaxation.

"I feel happy today," said the club woman. "I haven't a thing in the world to do, not a club to attend. I'm going to clean house and have a good time."

Renamed It.

"Yes," remarked the thin chap, "he told me to name my own salary."

"Well," replied the fat one, "that was very liberal of him. I should think."

"It was so," retorted the thin one sadly, "but he didn't seem to take to the name. He changed it, and now I'm getting wages only."

Some Practical Advice.

It is not necessary to leave your home and friends, give up your occupation or put on a uniform to do good. Here is a simple way: When you hear a good thing said about a man, tell him. This line of missionary work does not take any of your time from your legitimate business.

His Strenuous Way.

Spavin—Hello, Cantle! Exercising your horse this morning?

Cantle (mounted)—That was my intention when I started out, but it seems to me the horse has been exercising me.

Mean.

Tess—Jack proposed last night and I accepted him.

Jess—Did you, dear? By the way, don't attempt to cut glass with that diamond, as I did, or you'll make another nick in the stone.

He Wasn't.

"Don't stand on ceremony. Come in," said a lady to an old farmer who had called to see her husband.

"My gracious! Excuse me, marm," exclaimed the other, jumping hastily aside. "I thought I was only standing on the doormat."—Youth.

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE school meeting this morning was the entnusiastic affair that these meetings usually are, there being tour voters present. It is a lamentable fact that the citizens of this town do not take a live interest in this important annual meeting.

* * *

The new Fernie district includes Michel, Fernie, Coal Creek, Morrissey Mines, Morrissey, Elko and Jaffray. The portion lying west of Bull River and Kootenay river will be known as the Cranbrook district and takes in Cranbrook, Fort Steele, Moyie, Wardner, Marysville and Kimberley.

* * *

THE Cranbrook Herald speaks of the following gentlemen as possible candidates for election in that district, the first named on each side being the favorites. Conservative; Thomas Cavin, C.P.R. conductor; J. A. Harvey, R. L. T. Galbraith, J. F. Armstrong and Jas. Ryan. Liberal; Dr. J. H. King, R. E. Beattie, W. F. Gurd, Geo. Hillier and John Leask.

* * *

CONSIDERABLE trouble has resulted from an attempt to hold a public holiday and celebration at Rossland on July 4th. The civic authorities at first agreed to the proposition but much opposition was expressed by many on the grounds that it was going too far to pass over Canada's national holiday and keep an American anniversary four days later instead. The matter was finally dropped.

MR. Bartley, a member, of the typographical union and editor of "The Independent," a labor paper, in his evidence before the labor commission at the coast recently stated that the labor conditions in B. C. are better than in any other place on the continent, despite the labor troubles and that he believed the recent epidemic of strikes in the province, was due in a great measure to the inexperience of men who have never been in unions before. The older organizations had been through the fire. The witness confessed that if the Typographical union favored sympathetic strikes it would be in trouble all the time.

* * *

THE B. C. Gazette contains a notice that the 14th of August has been fixed as the limit for the preparation of the voters' list and on August 31st courts of revision will be held in every constituency. Get your name on the list now. It is just as easy now as on the last day and it will be off your mind. Applications are coming in fast and there is no doubt that Fernie will have a big list when it is completed. Get your name on the list and do not be a nobody when election day comes around. You have now the opportunity of securing your right to a voice in choosing the people who will control the destinies of the province, and it will be no person's fault but your own if you do not take advantage of it.

A SUCCESSFUL BAZAAR.

The Ladies Altar Society of the Roman Catholic church held a very pleasant bazaar and social evening in Princess Hall on Monday evening, which was not only a very enjoyable affair but proved to be a huge financial success as well.

The raffle which took up the first part of the evening caused no little amusement. The following were prize-winners.

Mr. Skogeski—Dining-room set.
Mr. G. E. Bailey—Toilet set.
Mrs. Pollock—Napkin Ring.
Mrs. Chenette—Mantel Clock.
Mr. Surky—Box Cigars.
Mr. E. B. Smith—Shaving case.
Mr. F. Wilson—Smoking set
Mrs. Mallet—Paint Box.
Mrs. P. Farrell—Parlor Lamp.
Miss Rabischaud—Doll.

Mr. Tuttle acted as auctioneer and by his genial manner did much to add to the general enjoyment. Refreshments were served, consisting of ice cream strawberries, cakes, etc., after which the remainder of the evening was devoted to dancing. The music for which was supplied by Mr. Klauer.

The total sum realized on this evening and in the sale of tickets previously was $399.90 which will be spent in church expenses. The success of the affair is largely due to Miss McDon ald and Mrs. Chenette the president of the society, who originated the event and carried it through.

Among others present who assisted were, Mrs. Eschwig, secretary of the society; Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Herchmer, Mr. Chenette, Miss Frye, Mr. and Mrs, Trites, Mrs. Klingensmith, Mr. and Mrs. McMillan, Mrs. Gillis, Mrs. Tuttle, Miss Rabischaud, Mr. McKenzie, Mrs. Chardon and Mrs. Deslauriers.

Rev. Father Milleux desires us through our columns to express his thanks to all those who assisted in any way towards making the event pass off so successfully.

A CHALLENGE.

Michel, June 26, 1903.

Editor Fernie Free Press.

Dear Sir—We have returned from Pincher Creek after playing base-ball and foot-ball games. We won (3) three and lost (1) one.

Please insert the following challenge. We will play any team both base-ball and foot-ball in East Kootenay on July 1st for $100, Fernie preferred on ou own grounds.

G. H. Wilson, manager.

MR. Tuttle, the manager of the base-ball team was seen in reference to the above challenge and handed us the following reply. "I hereby accept the challenge of the Michel baseball team to play at Michel on July 1st for $100, on condition that a return game be played here on July 4th for the same amount. I think it would be unfair to this town to take the team away from Fernie on the day of our celebration without having some assurance of a return match.

Signed, W. W. Tuttle."

CONSERVATIVE PLATFORM.

[Adopted at Revelstoke, Sept. 13th, 1902]

1. That this convention reaffirm the policy of the party in matters of provincial roads and trails; the ownership and control of railways and the development of the agricultural resources of the province as laid down in the platform adopted in October, 1899, which is as follows:

"To actively aid in the construction o trails throughout the undeveloped portions of the province and the building o provincial trunk roads of public nesessity

"To adopt the principle of government ownership of railways in so far as the circumstances of the province will admit, and the adoption of the principle that no bonus should be granted to any railway company which does not give the government of the province control of rates over lines bonused, together with the option of purchase.

"To actively assist by state aid in the development of the agricultural resources of the province.

2. That in the meantime and until the railway policy above set forth can' be accomplished, a general railway act be passed, giving freedom to construct railways under certain approved resgulations analogous to the system that has resulted in such extensive railway construction in the United States, with so much advantage to trade and commerce.

3. That to encourage the mining industry, the taxation of metalliferous mines should be on the basis of a percentage on the net profits.

4. That the government ownership of telephone systems should be brought about as a first step in the acquisition of public utilities.

5. That a portion of every coal area hereafter to be disposed of should be reserved from sale or lease, so that state owned mines may be easily assessible, if their operation becomes necessary or advisable

6. That in the pulp land leases provision should be made for reforesting and that steps should be taken for the general preservation of forests by guarding against the wasteful destruction of timber

7. That the legislature and governmen of the province persevere in the effort to secure the exclusion of Asiatic labor.

8. That the matter of better terms in the way of subsidy and appropriations for the province should be vigorously pressed upon the Dominion government.

9. That the silver-lead industries of the province be fostered and encouraged by the imposition of increased customs duties on lead and lead produce imported into Canada, and that the conservative members of the Dominion House be urged to support any motion introduced for such a purpose.

10. That as industrial disputes almost invariably result in great loss and injury both to the parties directly concerned and to the public, legislation should be passed to provide means for an amicable adjustment of such disputes between employers and employees.

11. That it is advisable to foster the manufacture of the raw products of the province within the province as far as practicable by means of taxation on the said raw products, subject to rebate of the same in whole or part when manufactured in British Columbia.

CONSERVATIVE CONVENTION.

At a meeting of the executive of the Provincial Conservative Association, held at Vancouver, the province was divided into five divisions for organization purposes. The Kootenay-Boundary division is made up of the following Provincial election districts: Revelstoke, Columbia, Fernie, Cranbrook, Ymir, Kaslo, Slocan, Grand Forks, Greenwood, the City of Rossland and the City of Nelson. At the same meeting the following resolutions was adopted:

1, That conventions for nominating candidates for members of the legislative assembly be made up of delegates chosen as follows:

(a) In city electoral districts, one delegate for every fifty and fraction of fifty votes polled at the Provincial election held in 1900, and if the city is divided into wards, the proportion of delegates for each ward shall be based on the vote polled in each ward at the municipal election.

(b) In other electoral districts, one delegate for every fifty or fraction of fifty votes polled at the Provincial election held in 1900, the delegates to be apportioned to polling places, or as near thereto as will be fair to the voters of the different neighborhoods.

2. The election of delegates shall be at public meetings, held at a designated central place in each polling division, or in each ward in city electoral districts, if the city is divided into wards. At such public meetings only those who pledge themselves to vote for the candidate or canditates selected at the nominating convention shall be entitled to a vote for delegates.

3. Two weeks' notice shall be given of the public meetings at which delegates are to be elected, and nominating conventions shall be held in city electoral districts two days after the day on which delegates are elected, and in other electoral districts seven days after. All nominations throughout the province to be made at a designated central place in each electoral district, and on the same day.

4. All notices of the date of public meetings for the election of delegates to nominating conventions, the apportionment of delegates, and the place and date of nominating conventions in the several electoral districts shall be prepared by the member of the executive of the division in which the electoral districts are situate, and issued over the names of the president and secretary of the Provincial Conservative Association.

A meeting of the Provincial executive will be held at Vancouver within a month, and the date for holding district nominating conventions will then be fixed.

JOHN HOUSTON,
President of the Provincial Conservative Association.

J. Hagley, one of contractor J. Broley's carpenters, happened with a painful accident yesterday. He was extending a heavy extension ladder, which, missing the catch, came down with considerable force and caught his wrist between the sliding parts. He received a very painful bruise which will necesitate him laying off work for a few days.

Next Sunday, June 28th, is the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of John Wesley, and Methodists the world over intend celebrating it as the Wesley Bi centenary. Appropriate services will be conducted in the Methodist church by the pastor. The morning subject will be "Methodism, its founder and doctrines." In the evening a hymn service will be rendered, based upon the hymns of Charles Wesley, and their relation to the life of the Methodist church.

Michel at Pincher Creek.

The Michel base-ball and foot-ball teams went to Pincher Creek on Monday of this week and played two very interesting games with the locals. The base-ball resulted in a very close victory for Pincher Creek, the score being 11–10. The first part of the game was decidedly in favor of the visitors. The foot-ball game was even more closely contested. No goals were scored until within ten minutes of the finish when a Michel man made the lucky kick. This was the only goal scored. Excitement ran high throughout the games. There were 86 Michel people in all at Pincher Creek.

Ice Cream Social.

The Ladies Aid of the Presbyterian church gave an ice cream social in the church on Tuesday evening. The church was well filled. An excellent program was rendered by local talent. Among those who took part were, Rev. D. L. Gordon, chairman, Mrs. Nicol Mrs. F. J. Watson, Messrs. Staebler, Letcher, Bastian, Dr. Morrison, Rev. J. Robson and Miss Graham. After the program the good things provided by the ladies were handed around, ice cream, lemonade and cakes of many varieties were much in evidence. The affair was somewhat informal and all thoroughly enjoyed the evening. About $50 wat realized by the ladies.

The American View Co. have had a couple of photographers busy all week snapping at every building in town. A book of these views should bo a very interesting souvenir. The Industrial company at Toronto get out handsome albums of the province, containing about 900 pages and the best of these are culled out to represent each town.

A peculiar story has leaked out from local Chinamen as to why their compatriots at Fernie quit work at the coke ovens to the effect that they saw hundreds of red and green devils inside of the ovens, dancing around in the flames. The peculiar flames caused by some of the gases imprisoned in the coal were really responsible for the apparitions, but after a few saw them they pointed them out to the others, and after many excited conferences they decided to quit. To the management they said nothing but among themselves talked it over growing more certain of what they had seen, till they concluded that the devils had been imprisoned in the coal, and they were releasing them.—Nelson News.

The Calgary Cattle Company have completed their arrangements for the opening of a branch business in Fernie, and on Wednesday, July 1st, their shop in the Turner block will be opened. This firm, with headquarters at Calgary, have durthe short time they have been in business earned an excellent reputation for enterprise and fair-dealing. The firm is branching out in other B. C. points as well. Mr. C. D. Reed, of Edmonton, will have charge of the branch to be opened here. The shop has been fitted up in first-class shape. A slaughter-house has been erected two miles east of town and a spu built to it. The cattle will be shipped in from the prairie. The company are wholesale dealers and pork-packers as well and sell in car-load lots.

Pay day brought its usual quota of drunks and disorderlies before the magistrate. Those who received the heaviest sentences under this charge were, Morris Burrrill and Ed Cassant, $10 fine each. Alex. Yohel of Michel $15, and Wm. Banner, Michel, $5. A Slav, Sztit Benusik, was charged with assaulting a woman and he paid a $20 fine. C. Corskosky another Slav was fined $10 under the vagrancy act.

Wm. Burrows and John Parris got into a scrap, which ended in the police court, the latter charging the former with using his teath on him. A ten dollar fine was impossed.

Wm. McKenzie and Dia Davis celebrated the opening of the Michel Hotel by indulging in a pugilistic encounter in the bar-room. Constable Henderson was on hand to take a hand. D. Flett who was near by wanted to see fair play and pulled Henderson off. All three subsequently answered to their names at the courthouse. Davis is an old time offender, having been imprisoned here three times before. He got one month. McKenzie got off with a light fine as it was his first offense. Flett's offense, though committed under the influence of liquor, was regarded more serious, it being the impression among a certain class at Michel that the bar-room was exempt from the patrol work of the constable. This extraordinary view narrowly escaped being backed up by force after the three arrests were made. A large mob of the hot headed drinking men gathered together and decided to release the men by force, but were finally persuaded by the cooler ones not to interfere with His Majesty's officers. Flett will put in two months at hard labor.

Mrs. R. W. Wood left last evening for Toronto on a visit to friends.

The Methodist church social will be a good place to spend the evening of the great holiday.

Mrs. F. B. Smith leaves tomorrow for Frank. She will be joined by Miss Fernie on Monday when they will proceed to Banff where they will spend the vacation at the former's cottage there.

OFFICIAL BULLETIN

LARGE INCREASE IN AREA UNDER CROP.

Figures Give Satisfactory Evidence of the Great Natural Expansion of Manitoba—Reports From all Points Show That Weather Conditions Could Not Be Better.

Crop bulletin, No. 68, which has just been prepared by the department of agriculture, and bears date of June 12, is a reflection of the rapid expansion of Manitoba. It shows that in this province the acreage under grain, and especially wheat, is far in excess of last year.

Not only is an increase shown in grain sown, but in all the other branches of farming there is corresponding development. More cattle were finished during the winter and dairying is rapidly becoming one of the features of the country.

Farmers have learned in the past that it is a mistake to leave off engaging help necessary to garnering the crop till the eleventh hour, and have this year taken the precaution to provide in advance. It is estimated that 5,158 additional male laborers and 3,153 females will be sufficient to meet the needs of the province during the harvest of 1903.

From every part of Manitoba come similar reports. "Everything looks its best," "prospects are good," "crops put in in prime condition," "outlook good for an abundant harvest," are the remarks of the correspondents who furnish the information from which the following bulletin is compiled:

THE DISTRICTS.

For convenience the province is divided into districts, as follows:

The Northwestern district comprises the municipalities of Shell River, Boulton, Russell, Silver Creek, Rossburn, Elice, Birtle, Shoal Lake, Strathclair, Harrison, Clanwilliam, Archie, Miniota, Minto, Hamiota, Blanchard, Saskatchewan, Odanah, Dauphin, Gilbert Plains, GrandView, Miniotonas and Swan River.

The Southwestern—Wallace, Woodworth, Daly, Elton, Cornwallis, Whitehead, Sifton, Pipestone, Glenwood, Oakland, Arthur, Winchester, Morton, Turtle Mountain, Cameron, Whitewater, Brenda and Riverside.

The North Central—Rosedale, Lansdowne, Westbourne, North Cypress, North Norfolk, Langford, Portage la Prairie, St. Francois Xavier, Woodlands, St. Rose, St. Laurent, Posen, Ochre River and the west half of Macdonald.

The South Central—South Cypress, South Norfolk, Dufferin, Rhineland, Stanley, Pembroke, Lorne, Louise, Roblin, Victoria and Argyle.

The Eastern—Gimli, Rockwood, St. Andrews, St. Clements, Brokenhead, St. Pauls, Springfield, Kildonan, St. Boniface, Assiniboia, Tache, Richot, DeSalaberry, Hanover, La Broquerie, Franklin, Rosser, Morris, Montcalm, Stuartburn, and the east half of Macdonald.

GREAT EXPANSION.

The table of comparison giving the crop areas for the years 1902 and 1903 gives satisfactory evidence of the natural and expected expansion that is going on in the province. This expansion is taking place in all districts. In the newer districts actual settlement has been the factor at work, while in the older districts settlers are enlarging their crop areas from year to year.

In 1902, owing to the late season, farmers were short on wheat acreage, but the acreage under coarse grains was above the normal.

In 1902 there were 563,730 acres summer-fallowed and 151,395 acres of new breaking. This year's figures show that the area pendulum has swung back to wheat, on account of the early and favorable seeding time, as well as the large acreage ready for wheat as new breaking, summerfallow and fall plowing, in all 1,730,995 acres. Farmers have increased this total with spring plowing as shown in the tables, to 2,442,873 acres.

AREA BROKEN.

The acreage sown to oats has not, however, been neglected, for the figures compiled show a fair increase. There will be less than 500,000 acres to summerfallow this year, but farmers in all parts of the province are busy breaking new land. New land must be broken before increased acreage can be shown. The outlook is that more breaking will be done this year than in any past year in the history of the province.

SEED TIME.

Seeding commenced in different districts, at irregular dates, from the first to the twelfth of April, and was general from the 6th to the 15th of April. Some correspondents report seeding finished from the 15th to 23rd of May; the majority report everything finished by the 1st of June and a few not until the first week in June.

From the time that farmers commenced spring work, ideal seeding weather prevailed. It was dry, but not too hot for work by men and teams. The result has been a perfect seed bed and work well done. The rains that commenced in the second week of May were general all over the province, and the report of correspondents on crop prospects at the 1st of June is repeated many times in the brief expression, "never better."

LIVE STOCK.

To the question, how has stock wintered? correspondents in most cases report "good," "well," "excellent," "first-class," with the note "feed was plentiful."

It is estimated that of the 13,983 cattle fattened during the winter more than two-thirds of this number were required for home consumption by farmers and by butchers in towns and villages.

DAIRYING.

The dairy season opened well this year with good roads. Factories commenced operations in most places early in May. Grass was short until after the copious rains in the middle of May. Prospects are that dairying—like grain growing—is expanding and that this season will surpass all previous records.

CROPS NEVER LOOKED BETTER.

The following quotations are from individual reporters representing conditions in their respective townships:

Northwestern district—

"Seeding weather was splendid and good rain has sent everything forward."

"We had splendid weather for seeding. Farmers have a large acreage sown. There will be little or no summerfallow this year, and a number have started breaking."

"Everything is looking its best for a bountiful crop. A great rush for land."

"Seeding opened dry and warm. Had a heavy rain on May 16th and again on the 22nd and 23rd. The ground is very wet. Crops are coming along fast."

"Prospects good all round. Never better."

ANOTHER BIG CROP.

"We have had lots of rainfall. If we get heat we will have another big crop. Have had a good winter and stock have done well. Land is soaring up in value."

"Farmers are in need of female servants."

"Weather for seeding was splendid and land in fine condition. Should we get warm weather now grain would grow very fast."

"We had a very fine seeding time for getting through work. Had some fine rains and crop is two weeks ahead of this time last year."

"Crops were put in in prime condition. Rain came in abundance just when wanted. The weather is warm and growth rapid."

"Seeding was dry, but lots of rain now. Crops looking fine."

"The early part of seeding was cool and dry. Latter part warm and favorable for growth. Fine spring for working horses."

"Spring came early and weather all through seeding was excellent, every day fine and warm. When nearly finished heavy rains came. Everything good now."

COULD NOT BE BETTER.

Southwestern district—

"The weather during seeding was all that a person could wish for.

"Wheat, oats and barley show fine growth. Heavy rains on 16th and 17th and again on 22nd."

"Crop prospects are good. Hay was short until the rains came."

"I think the country in general around here never looked better. Farmers all seem to be prospering and everything in their favor except price of lumber."

"Prospects for a crop better than last year owing to land being in such good condition for seeding."

"We have had a fine spring and farmers were able to get more under crop than usual."

STOCK DOING WELL.

"Breaking is well under way. Stock doing well. A good crop of foals coming. Weeds are not so plentiful."

"Last year's stubble being very rank and early spring very dry, most of stubble well burnt. Has destroyed pupae of Hessian fly, which was very thick in stubbles."

"Seed has gone in this spring in fine condition and the rainfall since the 15th May has been all that could be desired."

"In twenty years' residence here I have not seen the grain go in in better condition. Abundant rain has come to ensure germination of all grain and prospects could not be better for grain and grass."

"The season of 1903 opened out good for farming operations. First two weeks no rain but cool, which was good for both horses and men. Plenty of rain during the past two weeks. Ground well soaked. Promise of good yield of both wheat and oats."

EXPECT BANNER CROP.

North Central district—

"Land was very dry and seed was put in in good shape. Sandy soil for a time blew badly, but since rains came is all O. K. If nothing unforseen occurs expect to see banner crop."

"Prospects bright for an excellent harvest."

"Fine spring for work—hardly a day lost. Wheat was sown in good form. Land well harrowed and in good shape. Lots of rain in May, giving the crop a good start."

"Fires have done considerable damage to young timber this year."

"Farmers are all in good shape. No scarcity of seed, feed or help. Crops put in well and growing finely. Plenty of moisture."

IDEAL CONDITIONS.

South Central district—

"Crops are looking fine. Lots of rain so far."

"This has been an ideal spring for the farmer. Splendid weather, not a shower to stop work until wheat and oats were in. Then we had a good rain. Splendid growing weather now."

"Prospects are very bright at present. Pastures and hay meadows I never saw in better condition than at present time. We had great weather to get our crops in, and with these showers right after seeding prospects are as good as ever before."

"The outlook is as good for an abundant crop as it ever was in the province."

"The crop went in in good shape and the outlook could not be better for the season."

"The month of April cold and backward, but good for working. May warmer with splendid rains. I am of the opinion that better cultivation has been done than formerly The abundant rains that have come lately make a good crop almost a certainty."

BEST SEEDING TIME.

Eastern District—

"Prospects are good at the present time for another great crop."

"The best seeding time we have had for years."

"Prospects could not possibly be better."

"I do not remember in the twenty years that I have been here to have seen such rapid growth as at this season."

"Most remarkable spring for work on record. Land in best condition for seeding and now plenty of moisture to make the crops grow."

"The land was never in better condition for seeding than this spring, and the growth in the past week has been very rapid. At present there is every appearance of a good crop."

"The acreage in crop this year is larger than ever before and everyone is well pleased with the prospects at present."

Early Canadian Travelers.

The Ontario Historical Society is doing a useful work in reproducing papers and records and making them accessible to the public. Its fourth volume gives an account of the exploration of the great lakes in 1669-70, by Dollier de Casson and De Brehant de Galinee. It contains Galinee's narrative in French, with an English translation, a fac-simile of Galinee's map, fine portraits of Colbert, La Salle, Laval, Talon and other illustrations.

Dollier de Casson was 33 years old when he arrived in Canada. He was a man of enormous physical strength, and before entering the church had distinguished himself as a cavalry captain under Marshal Turenne. Galinee was of a noble Breton family. On the expedition described in this volume they were associated with the famous La Salle, the hero of one of Parkman's works, then just at the outset of his career.

Mrs. Sadlier's Career.

Mrs. James Sadlier, a well-known Canadian authoress, is lying at the point of death. She is 82 years of age, and has written a large number of books in her time. Mrs. Sadlier was the Irish wife of a French-Canadian, and was born in the County Cavan. Her religious writings which have made her a favorite author among her Irish Catholic countrymen are not so well known as the romances dealing with Irish emigration in which Hon. Thomas D'Arcy Magee believed her to be unexcelled. For some years Mrs. Sadlier edited The New York Tablet, and, returning to Canada to end her days, was presented in 1895 with the Laetare Medal by the University of Notre Dame du Lac, Indiana, for distinguished services to the American Catholic public.

The first provincial crop bulletin of the year shows an enormous increase in acreage under crop. Weather conditions have been the best for years and a bumper crop is assured.

Earthquake shocks in Mexico occasion great alarm among the inhabitants.

Floods in Texas claim many victims and do immense damage to crops and property.

One of the most beautiful sights ever seen in California, according to the papers of that State, was observed at Corona last month, when a vast cloud of butterflies passed over the place. They flew about five feet from the earth, and the mass was half a mile wide and several miles long.

One secret of success is to keep all your own secrets.

NO CODE NEEDED

A NEW FACTOR IN TELEGRAPHY.

Messages May Be Sent From and Received Upon the Keyboard of a Typewriter—An Italian Named Musso is the Inventor.

Experiments will be conducted in New York next month to test an invention for the transmission of wireless and ordinary telegraphic messages, which, if they proved successful, will introduce a new factor in telegraphy. The inventor is Giuseppe Musso, revenue collector of the Province of Genoa, Italy, and a graduate of the University of Genoa. By his invention a message is sent from the keyboard of a typewriter without the use of a telegraph transmitter, and is received by another typewriter, which prints the message automatically.

The invention may be said to be a development of the Marconi system. In describing the instrument, Mr. Musso said: "The system is primarily the substitution of the typewriter for the Morse instrument, or written language for the code. The sender uses the ordinary keyboard of a typewriter, while the part of the line to which is a message is to be sent is equipped with the writing portion of the machine. The secret of the use of these parts of a typewriter in this connection is that a current freed by touching a key will operate only the corresponding stamp in the receiving machine. This can be used in either the wireless or ordinary methods of telegraphic transmission. With wireless telegraphy I have experimented for a long time and have succeeded in eliminating the confusion which exists in sending and receiving. I am able to send two messages at once in any direction without having them become involved one with another. By a method of changing oscillations any station or all stations on a line may be isolated. Transmission by this system is much faster than that in which the Morse code is used, and will save much time."

Giuseppe Musso is a native of Vado, Italy, and is 37 years old.

LONDON'S HISTORIC NAME

A Portion of The Old Wall Found at Newgate.

The workmen employed in the demolitions on the site of the new Sessions House in the Old Bailey have unearthed a portion of the old Roman wall immediately behind the 'Dead-man's Walk,' the burial place for executed malefactors.

A substantial piece of the old wall was known to exist at the back of Newgate, and there is a special clause in the contract for the present works there providing for the careful preservation of the relic. The old wall formerly ran almost parallel with the Old Bailey.

The structure of the wall can be plainly seen on examination of the portion now unearthed, which is built of ragstone, flint, and lime, bonded at intervals with courses of plain and curved edge tiles.

The bastion at St. Giles' church, Cripplegate, the fragment in the street known as London Wall, and a portion in George street, Tower Hill, are the only other traces on a large scale now left of the Roman structure.

The wall was built about 305 A.D. by the Emperor Constantine to keep out the hordes of Picts and Scots, at which time, north of the wall, was a huge forest tract, infested with wild boars. The wall was afterwards (about 370 A.D.) repaired by Theodosius, a general of the Emperor Valentinian.

Old Roman London was scarcely larger than Hyde Park. Its level was 18 feet below the present level of Cheapside. The distance from north, at London wall to south, at the Thames, was half a mile, and from east, at the Tower, to west, at Ludgate, about one mile.

The gates on the old wall were Bridgegate, Ludgate, Bishopsgate, Aldersgate and Aldgate.—London Express.

New Stamps.

On Dominion day the post office department will issue new postage stamps, and those who have had an opportunity of seeing copies of them speak most approvingly both of the design and workmanship. The stamps bear the likeness of the King copied from the latest portrait of His Majesty, being the one painted since his accession to the throne and representing him in royal robes of scarlet and Ermine and now in York House, the London residence of the Prince of Wales. In each of the upper corners of the stamp is a Tudor crown, and in the lower corner a maple leaf, with a numeral indicating the denomination of the stamp. The portrait of the King is a striking and admirable likeness of His Majesty.

At the International Chemical congress in Berlin, an interesting paper on the development of railways was read by Dr. Haarman, who estimated that 247,000 tons of steel were lost annually from the world's railways by friction, the German railways alone losing 19,000 tons in the course of a year. The lecturer added that the experience of Europe had now shown that iron sleepers were as cheap as wooden ones.

There was a general celebration at Regina on June 19 over the elevation of the Territories' capital into the city class.

KILLED AN INDIAN.

Fire Water Causes Red Men of St. Regis to Create Trouble.

A dispatch from Cornwall, Ont., of June 20, says: John Francois, an Indian living in the village of St. Regis, was found in a dying condition yesterday morning at Hogansburg, N.Y., with a deep stab in the side of his neck and several ugly gashes about the breast. It is said that Francois had been drinking during the day. The particulars to hand are to the effect that a man named John Eldredge, about 70 years of age, employed as a sawyer in the toy factory of Lanton & Silkworth, Hogansburg, was crossing the bridge in the village about 11 o'clock at night when he was set upon by the Indian Francois, who knocked him down and otherwise abused him. The old man got up and warned Francois to keep clear of him or he would fix him.

Francois continued, and Eldredge drew his knife and made a gash in Francois' throat about five inches long. Eldredge went to the hotel and went to bed early in the morning. Andrew Foulton, a Hogansburg merchant, heard groans outside his home and going out found Francois in a dying condition.

Dr. Shannon was summoned. The wound was sewed up and he was removed to an Indian wigwam, where he died about noon. Eldridge acknowledged the deed, and said he merely defended himself from the attack of Francois.

A big row took place on Saturday afternoon in which an Indian horse was shot by the whites and a butcher named Bacon was pounced upon by a band of about a dozen red men and badly abused. The Indians have been boisterous of late and have been drinking excessively and giving the authorities very much trouble. Eldridge will be committed to Malone jail. He has a family of three children.

BOOKER WON'T GO.

He Declines Invitation to Study Conditions of African Natives.

Booker Washington, the president of the Tuskegee institute, has been asked by Lord Grey, Cecil Rhodes' successor at the head of the British South African company, to investigate conditions and recommend a system of industry and education for the African race, upon which that company draws for labor.

The British government proposes to give its assistance to such project. After talking with President Roosevelt, Mr. Washington has announced that he would decline the flattering offer.

"I will devote all my time and efforts to the work at Tuskegee," said Mr. Washington, "trusting that it will indirectly assist in the uplifting of the race in Africa. The work here is such that I do not feel I can leave it, even for the few months that would be required by the mission to South Africa.

I was in correspondence with Lord Grey and W. T. Stead. It appears that the South African company, which has a close relation to the government, faces some serious problems in South Africa now.

"Is it one of these problems of discontent among the negroes?" was asked.

"No; lack of discontent is the trouble," Mr. Washington replied.

"The Afrikander is too well content. Therefore he cannot see what use it is to work six days in the week when he can make enough to live on in three. That makes things difficult for the company. The problem is to awaken want in the individual. That is a point which is passed here. The negroes here have plenty of wants which they work to fulfil."

Grain Dealers Report on Crops.

Estimated area under crop in Manitoba and Northwest Territories in 1903:

	Acres.
Wheat	3,123,663
Oats	1,101,333
Barley	381,135
Flax	64,639

Area under crop in 1902:

	Acres.	Increase in 1903.
Wheat	2,624,928	19 p.c.
Oats	1,001,212	10 p.c.
Barley	356,562	6 p.c.
Flax	46,550	38 p.c.

The condition of the growing crop over the whole country is excellent. While in the smaller area of the northeastern portion of Manitoba rain would be beneficial, yet in the large wheat belt of the west and south plenty of rain has fallen, and wheat especially could not look more promising.

Interesting experiments have just been made on the telephone between Paris and Tours to test a new system by means of which two separate conversations can be carried on simultaneously on the same line. The tests are stated to have proved so satisfactory that the question of putting the system into actual operation throughout the country is being considered. The inventor is M. Petit, inspector of the electric service at Tours.

Great Britain will not recognize the new Servian dynasty.

Winnipeg aldermen are arranging for a municipal telephone system.

A dispatch from Orillia, Ont., says Miss C. Gill, the tallest girl of her age in Canada, was engaged to accompany the Walter L. Main circus and left town with the show. Her salary is to be $25 a week, a substantial one for figuring as an attraction in a sideshow.

WHEAT ESTIMATE

CONCLUSION OF "THE COMMERCIAL WEST."

Noted Authority on the Crop of 1903—Says There is no Danger of Overproduction this Season—A Complete Resume.

The Commercial West is holding the theory that the United States will produce about 750,000,000 bushels of wheat this year, based on present expectations, and that this crop does not warrant lower than 70 cents as base price of September wheat in Chicago. The above amount is the total announced by this paper on May 1, as the crop that, in its judgment, conditions warranted; but government figures at that time called for about 850,000,000 bushels, and some private estimates were even a little stronger than that. Both the government and private estimates have reduced their figures now to about the 750,000,000 crop, lowering the condition on account of flood damages; in other words they have relieved the market of 100,000,000 bushels of imaginary wheat.

In the view of this paper the floods in the southwest did but little damage to wheat, and we do not lower condition on that account. In fact, the condition, according to our advices has been well maintained in the southwest since May 1; the weaknesses were in the main apparent May 1.

In a general way consumption has overtaken production the world over, so much so that the bear is the one who "runs" now, not the bull. It has been so for a year, and the indications are that it will be so for the year to come. It is not a safe venture to sell grains at present prices on the theory that large profits will be secured. The inevitable reactions will come; indeed, wheat prices may sag two or three cents, but that will not alter, in our judgment, the hardening tendency in the market through out the year.

Europe will apparently have to buy about 50,000,000 bushels more of wheat and flour than last year. This will equalize the crops of Euroue and America and leave them about on the relative basis of last year. The Pacific coast is not going to produce heavily, so that if Australia and Africa need supplies, the price situation is the United States will be strengthened accordingly.

The northwest spring wheat states of America are promising a nice crop of wheat, but July 4 will be early enough to check up prospects definitely. In Canada there is a drouth in the eastern districts that may in some degree affect the prospective increase of 15,000,000 bushels in Western Canada.

The "cinch" enjoyed by the bear for many years in selling produce futures has passed to be followed by the day of the bull. It will continue so until a new record is raised.—Commercial West.

Treasure Hunters.

A cable was received at Halifax on June 17 announcing the arrival at Montevideo of the little Nova Scotia schooner Hattie L. M., which sailed from Halifax March 17, with a band of treasure hunters under command of Captain C. H. McLeod, of Pictou, N. S. The party, which was composed of Sir Asley Cooperbail and a number of other young Englishmen, aristocrats, and several Nova Scotians, is bound to an island in the South Seas, whose sands are reported rich in gold. The expedition was organized at Halifax with a capital of $100,000, many prominent men in that province investing capital in the undertaking.

The cable is the first news received from the party since sailing. The expedition will now push on for the Straits of Magellan, near which the "Island of Gold" is located. Fifteen years ago Captain McLeod was wrecked at this island and he then made the discovery that the sands of the beach were rich in gold, but owing to the hostility of natives he was unable to make a thorough investigation.

New Timon of Athens.

A quaint and well known figure has disappeared from Greek political life by the death of M. Petalas, who for many years sat in the Hellenic Chamber for the district of Agyia, in Thessaly. He seldom exchanged a word with his fellow deputies, and rarely addressed the house.

His will contained a request that none but real relations should attend his funeral, "inasmuch as the presence of the human race, which he had looked upon with disgust during the whole of his life on account of its hypocrisy and falseness, would weigh heavily on his body."

Most of his fortune he bequeathed to the lunatic asylum of his native town, "of which," he added, "I ought to have been an inmate for ever having wished to become a member of the Chamber."

Advices from Tangier, Morocco, say that Walter B. Harris, the traveller and author, who was a member of Sir Arthur Nicholson's special British embassy to the sultan of Morocco last year, is a prisoner of the mountaineers at Zenat, the headquarters of the bandit Raisuli. Government trrops attacked the place, burning many farms, but they did not succeed in rescuing Mr. Harris.

Wonderful West—upon whose Prairie Plain
In rich profusion bends the golden grain.
No land so favored by Heaven's smile of grace;
No land that upward lifts such happy face.
In gratitude for gifts of sun and shower
Poured out on Manitoba in rich dower.
Each harvest greater than what yet has been;
Great Prairie Province of all lands the Queen

In Spring the Farmer plows the virgin soil;
Nurse Nature rears the product of his toil.
Day follows day, and now the fruitful ear,
Unfolds in golden beauty, rich and rare.
Summer has come, and crowds the City throng
The streets resound with mirth and jovial song
Races, attractions, sports, no room for care
In the vast grounds of Winnipeg's Great Fair.
As all with gladsome hearts now celebrate
Lightsome and gay the City's Annual Fete.

Fondly we hail thee, Wondrous Western Land,
All Nature joins to swell the chorus grand;
In loud triumphant strains our song we raise
Rich, deep and clear, tribute of love and praise.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed for ever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

There is no truth in the report that bald-headed men scramble for seats in the front row—at church.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result, improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman, of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, guaged by the opinions of scientists, the wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

It is said that when Pope Leo read how Cardinal Gibbons was showered with congratulations at the time of the Baltimore prelate's jubilee His Holiness remarked jocosely: "I should have liked to see him, but the poor man is getting old and must now have rest." The humor of the remark will be apparent when it is remembered that James Gibbons is but a year older than Joachim Pecci was when he was elected pope.

The Paris Cafe.

The Paris restaurant reflects the conservative views of the Frenchman. The Parisian loves to sit on cushioned benches along the wall and as like as not enter into talk with his neighbor.

Again, the Parisian is a true democrat. Whatever his rank, he is willing to join in the fun going forward. I remember one night in the Cafe de Paris seeing a Hungarian prince with a rent roll of scores of thousands stalk up to a band of his countrymen and take the first violin from the hands of the leader. The next minute a score of well known people were gathered before him. A count sang a love song; a ballet dancer from the opera obliged us with a remarkable fandango; a sugar refiner gave us a comic patter. Nobody cared who his neighbor chanced to be. It was good fun. That was sufficient.

Imagine a duke and an earl and a rich merchant amusing the supper crowd at the Carlton or the Savoy!

Decidedly they do these things better in France.—Paris Letter in London Express.

New Stars.

It is suggested by Louis Rabourdin, a French writer, that in each of the new stars that blaze forth in the heavens from time to time we see the destruction of a celestial body by a volcanic cataclysm. At any rate, he says, if part of the earth's crust underlying the ocean should give way our earth would doubtless present in succession to a distant observer the same series of appearances that we witness in the case of "novæ," or new stars. First there would be an outburst of blazing hydrogen from the sea water decomposed by the earth's internal heat, then fusion of the whole crust, reducing the globe again to a molten state, and then the gradual extinction of its light owing to cooling. As cooling would first take place locally, we should have a variable star, the darkened portions being periodically brought into view by the rotation of the globe.

A Compliment to the Enemy.

Chattanooga creek was the dividing line between the outposts of the Federal and Confederate armies, and during a lull in hostilities the pickets of both cultivated one another's acquaintance, having agreed not to fire on one another. One day when the captain of the Union guard saw General Grant, with his staff, approaching he said to his men, "Turn out the guard for the commanding general." The Confederates on the other side of the creek, not more than fifty feet away, heard the order, and their captain, conceiving the idea of paying a compliment to the enemy, shouted, "Turn out the guard for the commanding general of the Federal army." The Confederate pickets stood at attention for several moments and then saluted Grant as he rode away.

STRONG PRAISE.

From One Who Has Proved the Value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

"We have used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in our home for the past eight years for various troubles, and have always found them successful." Thus writes Mrs. H. Hevenor, of West Gravenhurst, Ont., and she adds:—"At the age of eight years, my little boy was attacked with la grippe, and the trouble developed into St. Vitus' dance, from which he suffered in a severe form. He was under several doctors at different times, but none of them helped him. Then I decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and they restored him to perfect health, and there has not since been any return of the trouble. More recently I have used the pills myself for muscular rheumatism, and they were equally successful in effecting a cure. The pills have saved us many a dollar in doctor's bills, and I would like everyone who is sick to try them."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure all troubles due to poor or watery blood or weak nerves, and that is the reason why they are the most popular medicine in the world, and have a much larger sale than any other remedy. They cure such troubles as rheumatism, sciatica, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, anaemia, indigestion, neuralgia, heart troubles, and the ailments common to women, simply because they make new, rich, red blood, strengthen the nerves and thus drive disease from the body. You can get the pills from any medicine dealer, or they will be sent post paid at 50c. per box, or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont. See that the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," is printed on the wrapper around every box.

WELL EARNED POPULARITY

J. J. Burns says Dodd's Kidney Pills Saved His Life.

Could Scarcely Sit, Sleep or Walk when He Started to Use Them- His Trouble Gone for Good.

Darnley, P.E.I., June 1.—(Special)—The popularity of Dodd's Kidney Pills in Prince Edward Island has been earned by cures complete and permanent. John L. Burns, Lot 18, Darnley, is one of the cured, and his story is a splendid example of the work Dodd's Kidney Pills are doing.

"For over eight years," says Mr. Burns, "I suffered from what the doctors pronounced Chronic Inflammation of the Loins and Kidneys. In the year 1896 it got so bad that I could scarcely walk, sit or sleep. I was about to give up when an advertisement led me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills and they did a wonderful work for me.

"Dodd's Kidney Pills saved my life and though years have elapsed since my cure I have had no trouble since I used them.

"I belong to the I. O. F., and any member can vouch for my condition and that Dodd's Kidney Pills cured me."

Dodd's Kidney Pills never fail to cure any form of Kidney Disease once and for all.

An invention for manufacturing gas out of chalk has been tried in Sussex, England, with, it is said, surprising success. To every hundred tons of chalk will be mixed about ten tons of coke or coke breeze, and from this it is claimed 10,500,000 cubic feet of gas will be obtained.

WEAKLY CHILDREN.

Stunted, weakly children are those whose food does them no good, because they do not digest it properly. Keep the child's digestive organs right and it will grow up strong and healthy, and it will not cause mother much trouble when it is growing up. It is the weak children—the puny children—that wear the mother out caring for them day and night. All this is changed when Baby's Own Tablets are used. They promote digestion, they give sound, natural sleep, they keep baby bright and cheerful. They are good for older children, too, and cure all their minor ailments. It costs only 25c. to prove the truth of these statements—and you will be thankful afterwards. Mrs. Archibald Sweeny, Carleton, N.S., says:—"I have given my little one Baby's Own Tablets, and am more than pleased with the results. I can recommend them to every mother." That's the way all mothers, who have used the Tablets, talk. That's the way you will talk if you will try them when your little ones are ailing. You can get the Tablets from any dealer, or they will be sent by mail at 25c a box by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Parmelee's Pills possess the power of acting specifically upon the diseased organs, stimulating to action the dormant energies of the system, thereby removing disease. In fact, so great is the power of this medicine to cleanse and purify, that diseases of almost every name and nature are driven from the body. Mr. D. Carswell, Carswell P. O., Ont., writes: "I have tried Parmelee's Pills and find them an excellent medicine, and one that will sell well."

On June 1st in the public garden, Boston, was unveiled the first statue of a clergyman ever erected in a public place in that city. It is in memory of William Henry Channing, one of the founders of Unitarianism.

In his Vegetable Pills, Dr. Parmelee has given to the world the fruits of long scientific research in the whole realm of medical science, combined with new and valuable discoveries never before known to man. For delicate and debilitated constitutions Parmelee's Pills act like a charm. Taken in small doses the effect is both a tonic and a stimulant, mildly exciting the secretions of the body, giving tone and vigor.

A Bird That Is Feared.

The elster (Pica candata) is a bird that is respected and feared throughout south Germany. It belongs to the raven tribe and is about the size of a dove, with black and white feathers and long, pointed tail. It builds its nest in orchards, and its life is sacred. If it is seen three times in succession on the same house top in a place remote from its home it is believed to be a sure sign of death in that house. If it flies over a house where any one is ill and gives its peculiar cry the sick person is sure to die, but if it does not scream the patient may recover. It is better for the sick person if the bird does not come near.

No one could be hired to bother these birds for fear they might seek revenge, and if by chance one of them should die it is a sign of bad luck to the owner of the property where it was found. The bird is a valuable insect destroyer and in this way probably more than compensates for the fear it occasions among the farmers.

To Induce Humility In a Peacock.

If you wish to take the conceit out of a peacock pull out his tail feathers, and as soon as he finds the glory of his plumage gone he becomes the humblest, most subdued and ashamed looking bird that ever walked the earth. A peacock in full feather is so vain and conceited as sometimes to be really troublesome. Not satisfied with squalling at the top of his discordant voice and with parading up and down the walks with expanded plumage, he will attack cats, dogs and even children and has been known to seriously injure small boys or girls that were incautious enough to venture within his reach.

Plucking his tail feathers, however, causes all his courage to evaporate. He will sneak around the yard like a whipped spaniel, will keep out of sight as much as possible, and you will hear nothing of him until his plumage has again grown.

Dumas and Porthos.

Dumas, like Balzac, was fond of his own creations. Among them all he loved Porthos best. The great, strong, vain hero was a child after his own heart. One afternoon, it is related, his son found Dumas careworn, wretched, overwhelmed. "What has happened to you? Are you ill?" asked Dumas fils. "No," replied Dumas pere. "Well, what is it, then?" "I am miserable." "Why?" "This morning I killed Porthos—poor Porthos! Oh, what trouble I have had to make up my mind to do it! But there must be an end to all things. Yet when I saw him sinking beneath the ruins crying, 'It is too heavy, too heavy for me!' I swear to you that I cried." And he wiped away a tear with the sleeve of his dressing gown.

A Clever Method of Stealing.

An ingenious and successful trick was played at a London flat in broad daylight. A gentleman rang the bell at 3 o'clock and inquired whether Mr. Grey was at home. "No, sir," said the janitor. "He rarely if ever comes back from the temple before 5 o'clock." "That is strange," returned the other, "since I know he has an appointment here with a Mr. Johnson at 4 o'clock." Then he went his way.

At 4 o'clock to the minute Mr. Johnson called and, giving his name, was of course allowed to wait in Mr. Grey's apartments, which he denuded of everything of "portable value" in ten minutes and then walked out, observing as he passed the porter that he could wait no longer.

Parrots Are Vegetarians.

Parrots are vegetarians. They live chiefly upon a light but nutritious diet of fruit and seeds or upon the abundant nectar of rich tropical flowers. And it is mainly for the sake of getting at their chosen food that they have developed the large and powerful bills which characterize the family. You may have perhaps noted the most tropical fruit eaters, like the hornbills and the toucans, are remarkable for the size and strength of their beaks.

Shark Soup.

In Ceylon there is a considerable trade in the oil of the white shark. The fins of the animal are very rich in gelatin and are used largely by the Chinese for making soup, of which they declare that the turtle soup so prized by epicures in this country is but a distant and feeble imitation.

Severe colds are easily cured by the use of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, a medicine of extraordinary penetrating and healing properties. It is acknowledged by those who have used it as being the best medicine sold for coughs, colds, inflammation of the lungs, and all affections of the throat and chest. Its agreeableness to the taste makes it a favorite with ladies and children.

Success never roosts on the banner of the man who can't rely on himself.

MORRISSEY

From The Despatch

Rev. Stoney was made the recipient of a well filled purse by the members of his congregation this week.

D. McKay is here this week engaged in the improvement of His Majisty's highways.

M. A. Kastner and W. S. Keay rode in from Fernie on a speeder last Saturday. They returned the same evening by the train.

A number of C. P. R. telegraph operators went through to Cranbrook on Sunday to attend a meeting of their organization held at that place.

The furnishings for the local branch of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, which will shortly be established here, have been shipped from Sandon B. C. and are expected to arrive in a few days

William Shaw has opened out a full line of Cigars and Tobaccos in his store next to the Western hotel. Mr. Shaw will also carry fresh fruits and soft drinks.

Hugh McDougall, a miner from Morissey, died of pneumonia in the Fernie Hospital on Friday last. Mr. McDougall was very popular here and leaves a host of friends to mourn his loss.

Church of England Services will be held by Rev. Stoney in the Alexandra hotel, at Morrissey Mines, on Sunday June 28th at 3 o'clock. All are cordially invited to attend.

Frank McCabe, of Wardner, was in town on Monday. During his stay here he sold his property on Third St. to Jos. Ailleo, of the Auction Room, who will erect a two-storey building.

Rev. Father Milleux, of Fernie, says it is the intention of the church authorities to erect a Roman Catholic Church here next spring. He has started a fund for that purpose and will place the handsome profit which he made on his recent transfer of Morrissey property, to the credit of the fund.

The annual meeting of the School Board will be held in the schoolhouse at the mines on Saturday June 27th at 11 a. m., for the purpose of electing a trustee for the ensuing year. General business of importance will also be transacted and everyone interested in school matters should make it a point to attend.

The Provincial Government have at last decided to put on their sale of lots. They will be auctioned off from the office of F. M. McLeod, barrister, on Thursday next July 2nd. An upset price has been put on each lot. The terms of the sale will be one-third down, one-third in six months and balance in a year. The sale of lots at this time will do much to build up the town as the reserve was having a tendency to scatter the town over too large an area.

The new Western hotel was thrown open to the public last Thursday morning and is now running full blast. Up to date visitors to the town have had no place to put up, but were obliged to go down to the Junction for the night, and on that account many outsiders were deterred from coming in. Now, however they have a first class house to stop at, with lots to eat and plenty to make glad the heart of man.

The hotel is well finished, being lathed and plastered throughout, and Messrs. Farrell, Rader & Drummond are to be congratulated on its appearance. Jas. Bryan also deserves great credit for the speedy manner in which he completed the work. A Colt's acetylene gas plant will be installed next week and this, with other contemplated improvements, will make the Western one of the most up-to-date hostleries in the Kootenays.

Politics are warming up in Nelson. S. S. Taylor is the unanimous choice of the Liberal party. The conservatives are somewhat split at present. It is almost certain that John Houston will get the nomination though there is a strong feeling in favor of Lawyer Lennie. John Houston is courting the nomination by announcing in his paper his willingness to be a candidate for the conservative party provided he is duly nominated by the convention. Mr. Houston has done much for Nelson but there are many conservatives in his constituency who do not like his style.

A Small Investment In

MORRISSEY MINES.

Will be a Safeguard against Want in Old Age.

The Boston Herald said a few weeks ago of Arioch Wentworth, Boston's largest individual owner of real estate:

"Much of his pecuniary success—and he is believed to have paid the largest tax in Boston of any man who has built his own fortune from foundation to turret—was due to early and fortunate investments in real estate. It would be more correct to call them shrewd and far-sighted investments rather than fortunate ones. Money is frequently made by fortunate investments of various kinds, but a great deal more by shrewdners, intelligence and confident faith in the future's developments. Mr. Wentworth's methods were of the latter kind, and he profited by them to the extent of millions. He believed in the great tuture of Boston, and lived to see his expectations realized in large measure.

The above is an example of the shrewd buyer of real estate. The same chances present themselves here now, that were in Boston when Mr. Wentworth begun making his investments. The same chances are here now, that were in Pennsylvania and other coal mining sections fifty years ago.

Invest in real estate in any part of the Crow's Nest section, and it will make you wealthy. Write for particulars.

MORRISSEY

From The Despatch

Rev. Stoney was made the recipient of a well filled purse by the members of his congregation this week.

D. McKay is here this week engaged in the improvement of His Majisty's highways.

M. A. Kastner and W. S. Keay rode in from Fernie on a speeder last Saturday. They returned the same evening by the train.

A number of C. P. R. telegraph operators went through to Cranbrook on Sunday to attend a meeting of their organization held at that place.

The furnishings for the local branch of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, which will shortly be established here, have been shipped from Sandon B. C. and are expected to arrive in a few days

William Shaw has opened out a full line of Cigars and Tobaccos in his store next to the Western hotel. Mr. Shaw will also carry fresh fruits and soft drinks.

Hugh McDougall, a miner from Morissey, died of pneumonia in the Fernie Hospital on Friday last. Mr. McDougall was very popular here and leaves a host of friends to mourn his loss.

Church of England Services will be held by Rev. Stoney in the Alexandra hotel, at Morrissey Mines, on Sunday June 28th at 3 o'clock. All are cordially invited to attend.

Frank McCabe, of Wardner, was in town on Monday. During his stay here he sold his property on Third St. to Jos. Ailleo, of the Auction Room, who will erect a two-storey building.

Rev. Father Milleux, of Fernie, says it is the intention of the church authorities to erect a Roman Catholic Church here next spring. He has started a fund for that purpose and will place the handsome profit which he made on his recent transfer of Morrissey property, to the credit of the fund.

The annual meeting of the School Board will be held in the schoolhouse at the mines on Saturday June 27th at 11 a. m., for the purpose of electing a trustee for the ensuing year. General business of importance will also be transacted and everyone interested in school matters should make it a point to attend.

The Provincial Government have at last decided to put on their sale of lots. They will be auctioned off from the office of F. M. McLeod, barrister, on Thursday next July 2nd. An upset price has been put on each lot. The terms of the sale will be one-third down, one-third in six months and balance in a year. The sale of lots at this time will do much to build up the town as the reserve was having a tendency to scatter the town over too large an area.

The new Western hotel was thrown open to the public last Thursday morning and is now running full blast. Up to date visitors to the town have had no place to put up, but were obliged to go down to the Junction for the night, and on that account many outsiders were deterred from coming in. Now, however they have a first class house to stop at, with lots to eat and plenty to make glad the heart of man.

The hotel is well finished, being lathed and plastered throughout, and Messrs. Farrell, Rader & Drummond are to be congratulated on its appearance. Jas. Bryan also deserves great credit for the speedy manner in which he completed the work. A Colt's acetylene gas plant will be installed next week and this, with other contemplated improvements, will make the Western one of the most up-to-date hostleries in the Kootenays.

Politics are warming up in Nelson. S. S. Taylor is the unanimous choice of the Liberal party. The conservatives are somewhat split at present. It is almost certain that John Houston will get the nomination though there is a strong feeling in favor of Lawyer Lennie. John Houston is courting the nomination by announcing in his paper his willingness to be a candidate for the conservative party provided he is duly nominated by the convention. Mr. Houston has done much for Nelson but there are many conservatives in his constituency who do not like his style.

A Small Investment In

MORRISSEY MINES.

Will be a Safeguard against Want in Old Age.

The Boston Herald said a few weeks ago of Arioch Wentworth, Boston's largest individual owner of real estate:

"Much of his pecuniary success—and he is believed to have paid the largest tax in Boston of any man who has built his own fortune from foundation to turret—was due to early and fortunate investments in real estate. It would be more correct to call them shrewd and far-sighted investments rather than fortunatc ones. Money is frequently made by fortunate investments of various kinds, but a great deal more by shrewdners, intelligence and confident faith in the future's developments. Mr. Wentworth's methods were of the latter kind, and he profited by them to the extent of millions. He believed in the great tuture of Boston, and lived to see his expectations realized in large measure.

The above is an example of the shrewd buyer of real estate. The same chances present themselves here now, that were in Boston when Mr. Wentworth begun making his investments. The same chances are here now, that were in Pennsylvania and other coal mining sections fifty years ago.

Invest in real estate in any part of the Crow's Nest section, and it will make you wealthy. Write for particulars.

A GOOD DAY'S SPORT.

CRANBROOK DEFEATED AT LACROSSE, 6--3.

Base-ball, Foot-ball and a Full List of Sporting Events Occupied the Day.

Wednesday, July 1st dawned, like many immediate predecessors, dark and lowering, and finally about 8 o'clock rain began to fall in a manner that would dampen the ardor of people with a less patriotic spirit than possesed by the citizens of Fernie, but it only served to increase the determination of the Fernie people to make the big celebration a success.

Early in the forenoon the Fernie Brass band gathered at the skating rink and despite the inclement weather opened the day's proceedings by marching to enlivening music down the business street and halting at the Royal hotel where several pieces were rendered in excellent style.

About eleven o'clock the special train from Cranbrook pulled in and though the number on it was not nearly so large as would have been under favorable weather conditions, those that came, including the lacrosse club, were heartily welcomed. Immediately after the noon hour the band led the way to the new recreation grounds and with little delay the program of sports was proceeded with.

BASEBALL.

The first game was a baseball match between two local teams, the one largely composed of the regular team while the other was picked up for the occasion.

REGULARS.		PICKED TEAM.
Taylor	pitcher	Peacock
Whalen	catcher	Joiner
Kastner	first base	Tuttle
McIntyre	second base	Harwood
Thomson	third base	McLaughlin
McKellar	short stop	Stork
Sunberg	right field	Darcy
Colwell	centre field	Walters

Umpire, F. Label.

Only 5 innings were played owing to the lack of time. The score stood 6-2 in favor of Taylor and his aggregation. The score was 6-0 at the end of the 4th innings, three runs beiug made in each of the 1st and 4th innings. The pitching of Taylor and Peacock were interesting features of the game.

LACROSSE.

The lacrosse game fully equalled the expectations of the spectators. It was the first league game for the locals and considerable speculation was indulged in as to how the team would play together this year. The result was most satisfactory. Mitchell the crack home man was at Nelson playing against Westminster and Flett another good home player did not play but in spite of this the boys in black and gold more than held their own and ended by doubling the score.

The players were.

CRANBROOK		FERNIE.
McPeak	goal	McKinnon
Maclean	point	Reynolds
O'Donald	cover point	Kastner
Porter	1st defence	Lafortune
Hill	2nd defence	Kirkpatrick
Fox	3rd defence	Taylor

Patton	3rd home	Wriglesworth
Clancy	2nd home	McLaughlin
Tate	1st home	Schram
Kenny	outside home	Miller
Cameron	home	MacQuire
Sproule	field captain	Vance

Referee, W. J. Blundell.

The game started slow enough, but soon in spite of the soft slippery ground the play got fast and good combination and individual work was seen on both sides. At the end of 8 minutes playing MacQuire made the first goal. Six minutes later Wriglesworth landed the ball in the net the second time. Five minutes later during a hot scrimmage near the Fernie flags the ball was scooped into the net. With only one minute to play before quarter time Reynolds made a phenomenal run down the right field and passed the ball to McLaughlin who scored before the whistle blew making the tally 3-1.

The second quarter rather favored the visitors who scored once, seven minutes after play began. This goal was also made in a scrimmage immediately in front of the Fernie flags. McKinnon made an excellent stop after which the ball was rushed on the opponent's goal but the whistle checked further damage, score 3-2.

The third quarter started off with repeated rushes on the Cranbrook flags. Maclean only four minutes after play had resumed, was sent to the fence for the remainder of the quarter for rough playing. This handicapped the visitors who closed in more to defend their goal. Taylor secured the ball at defence and rushed down the right field, passed it to Miller, who passed to McLaughlin who scored, time 10 minutes. The visitors successfully defended their goal for the remaining ten minutes of the quarter, the last two of which Wriglesworth spent on the fence for illegal checking. Score 4-2.

The fourth quarter was probably the best part of the game, both sides playing hard and clean lacrosse. Five minutes after play was resumed Ross Tate made a clear shot from his position and scored. Two minutes later McKinnon who had changed positions with Miller, did the trick for Fernie. Nine minutes more of hard play saw the last score made when McQuire got in one of his invincible grounders which found the net. Score 6-3.

SHOTS.

No one was hurt badly.

Both teams were satisfied with the referee's work.

McLaughlin and Smith, Fernie's two new men, know the game.

Reynolds makes a good captain.

Miller and McQuire played an excellent combination.

O'Donald, Porter, Clancy, Maclean and Kenny played the star game for the visitors.

FOOTBALL.

This game took place in the evening. It was a close contest between the Scotchmen on one side and the English and Canadians on the other. Neither side succeeded in scoring a goal and at the end of the time it was mutually decided to call it a draw. This result shows the relative merits of the respective teams. At times one side appeared to be on the aggressive and at others it was forced to take to defensive tactics. Both goalkeepers were called upon to stop a number of well-aimed shots. The Scotch players did well to hold their own as several of their men had not played since leaving the Old Land.

TUG OF WAR.

The Tug of War between the miners and the lumbermen was an event which created no little interest. The coal diggers won the contest and they showed their appreciation of the prize offered in a very unmistakable manner.

CATCHING THE GREASED PIG.

This sport caused considerable amusement though the fun would have been enchanced by allowing the animal a better start for freedom. A lad named F. Dunigree succeeded in catching the animal and he marched him off in triumph.

PONY RACING.

In the evening both sides of Victoria street were lined with spectators to witness Fernie's fi st horse race. The event was exceedingly interesting as the speed of the ponies and the skill of the youthful riders was something of a surprise to many. Five entered, the result of the first three ponies in the three heats was.

Dobson & Willingham's pony ridden by Neil Dunlap	1.	1.	1.
McEwing & Slinn's pony ridden by Neil Chamberlain	2.	3.	3.

The two latter ran a close race and it was decided to give them another race together. This made a pretty race but the result only confirmed the first decision.

GATE RECEIPTS.

The Athletic Association made out very well financially considering the unfavorable weather conditions. The tidy sum of $265 was taken in gate receipts alone in the afternoon. About $80 was realized from the sale of badges.

The Manitoba elections have been fixed for July 20th.

The Winnipeg fair is billed for July 20th to 25th. Every effort is l eing put forward to make the event a greater success than ever. The C. P. R. are offering special inducements in railway fare.

71,253 TONS IN JUNE.

AN INCREASE OF 13,527 TONS OVER PREVIOUS RECORD.

Several Daily Records Were Made. The Mines at the Three Camps are Steadily Improving.

The output of coal by the C. N. P. Coal Co. for the month of June shows a phenomenal increase over all previous monthly records. The increase is being steadily made in each of the camps.

Michel	28,543 tons.
Coal Creek	24,586 "
Morrissey	18,124 "
Total	71,253 tons.

On June 13th 3,161 tons were mined at the three collieries and on June 20th the amount was increased to 3,323 tons.

IS THE GOVERNMENT TO BLAME?

The Nelson News recently published a long article dealing with the government and the East Kootenay land reserves. It said in part: "While block 4594 is under reserve as to surface rights, there is no reservation as to the sub-surface properties. In respect to block 4594 there is no reservation. In both of these blocks during the past ten years or more, prospectors have been busy, and locations have been made in goodly numbers. As long ago as in 1890, Mr. Watts, a practical oil man from the Petrolia district, staked 15 oil claims in block 4593. He has behind him a wealthy company who are prepared to go ahead at once with the development of their properties and the establishment of another great producing industry in British Columbia. He has complied with all the forms of law, yet has never succeeded in having his rights acknowledged and ratified by government. Though government indisposition to respect the rights of such bona fide citizens and investors, his claims have been covered with dozens of secondary locations. Scores of others are similarly situated, among them Mr. French, of High river, Alberta, who with Mr. Patrick, the Calgary surveyor, may be honored as the discoverer of the East Kootenay oil fields.

"Now comes the declaration that the surface rights of both these blocks are to be refused to applicants, for the apparent benefit of the C. P. R. which has been plainly shown to have no claim or title to them, and that forces are secretly working to have the undersurface rights thrown open without regard to the priority of right of those who have prospected, located, toiled and waited for years.

"In this connection it is interesting to note that C. E. Race paid a visit to the capital recently—Mr. Race being the editor and manager of the Rossland Miner, a conservative journal—and that immediately upon his return the papers of East Kootenay country were filled to overflowing with notices of applications for oil and coal rights—a Rossland group of conservatives being very much in evidence.

"The plain inference is that these at least expect the government of the day to repudiate legitimate and prior rights in order to enable party favorites to make their fortunes out of the resources of the province and through the repudiation of honest rights therein.

"That the government of premier McBride is seeking to advance the interests of the C. P. R., at the cost of the interests of the people of British Columbia in the manner of their predecessors:

"That the fight of the past three years with respect to the setting aside of the untenable claim of the C. P. R. to blocks 4593 and 4594 is not yet fully won and must be forced by loyal British Columbians:

"And that an endeavor is being made to oust from their coal and oil rights those who have honestly earned them and borne "the burden and heat of the day" in order that party capital may be made for an ephemeral government.

COAL CREEK MINES.

Rev. Robson, of Fernie, visited Coal Creek Mines on Tuesday evening and aided in organizing a building committee for the intended new Methodist church. On the same evening the Ladies Aid met at the president's home and promised the substantial donation of $100. Mr. Colwell will act as chairman of this committee and any sum will be thankfully received by him.

The first social of the Ladies Aid realized $20 clear of expenses. The result is indeed gratifying and only a foretaste of what the ladies may accomplish. The Company kindly granted a dozen nice benches for their place of meeting.

A number of the ladies gathered for the closing exercises of the school here, in charge of Miss Kidwell. The children recited very nicely and those present also listened with interest to a couple of solos rendered by Mrs. Landers and a recitation by Miss Kidwell.

Quite a goodly number of our people took in the 1st at Fernie and from all appearances miners can do more than dig coal especially when they get hold of a rope with some sturdy men at the other end.

SPORTS AT MICHEL.

Miners Union Hold a Picnic at the Prairie.

The Michel Miners' union held a celebration at Michel Prairie on July 1st which, considering the weather conditions, was very successful. The C.P.R. ran a train between Michel and MacDonell's camp at frequent intervals during the day and the remaining mile and a half were made on foot.

John Galvin, well known in Fernie as the ex-president of the Gladstone Miners' union, was the whole committee in himself and exhibited much energetic activity in carrying out the program.

A base-ball game between Sparwood and Michel was one of the most interesting events of the day. Only four innings were played and the score stood 33-1 in favor of the home team. Wilson of Michel, umpired the first innings but his decisions did not meet with the approval of the visitors and a Sparwood man was substituted. In the fourth further disputes made it impossible to continue the game.

A foot-ball game between the regular team and the base-ball aggregation resulted in a draw, each side securing one goal. The former team claimed another score but it was not allowed. Mr. R. L. Henderson refereed the game and experienced considerable difficulty in exercising his authority.

A good list of running and jumping events were pulled off. The 100 yard open race was easily won by F. J. Mitchell 1st and S. W. Nunn 2nd, both of Fernie. MacGuire, of the Loop, Burdett, of Michel, and two others entered.

The 200 yard race was won by Burdett 1st and Nunn 2nd. The latter tripped in a badger hole seriously handicapping him. Mitchell did not enter.

The mile race was a well contested event between Burdett and Fowler. The latter ran at too rapid a pace and collapsed in the last, allowing his competitor to make up the intervening 50 yds. and come in first.

Several jumping contests also took place.

A larg quantity of beer was on hand and it was freely handed out and the more substantial refreshments were liberally provided.

short for the second meal.

The return trip from the picnic grounds was made in the rain, which caused considerable discomfort.

POLICE COURT.

Andrea Kasak was charged with the theft of the sum of $33, the manner in which it was said to have been done making it a serious case. Kasak was entrusted by a friend to secure a post office ord r for $90. He sent only $57 and changed the receipt to read accordingly. The accused was found guilty and was sentenced to 3 months at hard labor in Nelson jail.

Joe Gall, of Morrissey was up on the charge of selling liquor without a license. Two witnesses who testified to having purchased and drunk the liquor gave unmistable evidence of the accused's guilt. The later in defence claimed that the liquor sold was merely cider with raisins in it. His Worship found him guilty and imposed a fine of $100 which was paid. Gall evidently thinks he may as well have the game as the name as he has since applied for a wholesale licence at Morrissey Mines.

Another interesting case was that of J. Pipa, a Slav of the Oldtown, who was charged with theft. It appears that a customer of his pulled out a $20 bill intending to pay $10 on a $18 account. Pipa grabbed the bill, tearing it in doing so, and returned him $2. The matter was well thrashed out between the lawyers as to whether Pipa was actually guilty of theft. The case was finally dismissed.

T. Hewett, a liveryman of Elko, was up charged with horse stealing. It appears that a horse belonging to McCready of Morrissey, was caught and taken in charge of by Hewett who claimed the payment of an old debt before consenting to release the animal. The case was dismissed.

AN AWFUL DISASTER.

Terrible Mine Explosion in Hanna, Wyo. Many Lives Lost.

An Accumulation of Black Damp Said o Have Been the Cause.

Evanston, Wyo., June 30.—A report has been received here that 200 men have been killed and injured in an explosion in the coal mines at Hanna, Wyo. today.

Hanna, Wyo., June 30.—The worst coal mine disaster in the history of Wyoming occurred in mine No. 1 of the Union Pacific Coal company today, when a terrific explosion occurred. Two hundred men were working in the mine at the time. The explosion set fire to the mine and at this time it is impossible to estimate the loss of life. Not less than twenty miners were killed outright. Although this mine is well ventilated and provided with many avenues of escape the loss of life will be very large. Not a man at this time has found his way to the surface. Superintendent E. S. Brocks is working diligently with a large force of men to rescue the imprisoned miners and extinguish the raging flames.

At 1 o'clock the party of rescuers reached the surface with the mangled bodies of 25 miners, who were taken out of the mines by the rear shaft or manhole. Some of the men were alive when found but many will die. Those who can talk say that the men who were working further on in the mine are probably dead. A conservative estimate places the number of dead at 175.

Hanna, Wyoming, July 1.—It has been decided that the explosion yesterday was caused by black damp which gathered in a small alley of the seventeenth level, where the circulation became defective from some unknown cause. A miner working with his lamp, and not knowing about the existence of the deadly gas, ignited the explosive. Probably no trace of the miner will ever be found, for he was surely blown to atoms. Wm. Christian, colored, is the hero of the calamity. He was unconcious when brought to the surface. He could have made his way out himself but remained behind to assist others less fortunate.

In some instances the entire male membership of families is among the victims of the disaster. James Wilds, father, and James Wilds, Jr., and Jube Wilds, son, were working together near the 17th level. Oscar Oelf and Jacob Jacobson, brothers, and the sons of a widow and sole supporter of same and two little sisters, were killed on the twenty-first level. T. M. Davis, one of the dead men, was one of the best known miners in Wyoming. He had charge of the electric hoists and was caught below the seventeenth level.

Of the 167 dead, fully two-thirds were married and leave large families. The several nationalities were represented as follows: Finlanders 12, colored 25, Americans 15, Irish 5, Swedes 6, Italians 11, Austrian 1, Prussian 1. Arrangements have been perfected for caring for the dead bodies as fast as they are recovered. The company will defray the funeral expenses in most cases. No funeral arrangements have been made and none will be made until after tomorrow.

Denver, Colorado. July 1.—A special to the Republican from Hanna, Wyoming, says: "The startling information was received tonight from an experienced miner and fire fighter, who penetrated the mine to the sixteenth level, that the workings below the seventeenth level are a mass of flames and where a few hours ago it was believed the rescuers would reach the bodies of the entombed miners not later than tomorrow noon. Added to the horrors of the fire, which will doubtless be in the underground workings, is the danger of another explosion which may occur at any time. Additional fire fighters and volunteers are arrivingon every train. The force is well organized and the work of rescue is progressing as rapidly as possible.

Winnipeg, June 29.—Information has been received from Ottawa that Mr. Justice Richards has been commissioned to enquire into the charge that western lumber dealers have formed a combine in restraint of trade. This action was taken by the dominion government upon strong representations made to it by Hon. Thomas Greenway during his recent visit to the east. The work of the commission will begin at the earliest possible moment.

KEEP UP MORAL BARS

REV. DR. TALMAGE ADVISES SUMMER VACATION RESORTISTS.

THE WAGES OF SIN ARE SURE.

How to Start a Summer Vacation So That It Will End Well—Temptations That Are Rife Under the Circumstances Forcibly Pointed Out—Remember, Whatsoever You Sow That Shall You Also Reap.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1903, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Chicago, June 21.—In this sermon the preacher points out the all too prevalent custom of letting down the moral bars during the summer vacation. Some of the evils peculiar to so called popular summer resorts are unsparingly denounced. The text is Numbers xxxii, 23, "Be sure your sin will find you out."

What are you going to do this summer? "Take a vacation," you answer, "I am going away to the country. There was once a time when I did not believe in summer vacations. I thought they were merely lazy men's excuses for shirking work. But now I know that I was mistaken. I have been gradually breaking down under the ceaseless monotonies of business. I want and need a change. I am going out among the green hills or down by the seashore. I am going to rusticate. I shall turn myself out to grass and let my mind run fallow."

Good resolve, that! I always did believe it better to pay for a fresh air tonic and country sunlight than for a medicine chest. I always did believe it far better to associate with the farmer, the fisherman and the country tollgate keeper for a little while during the summer than it is to have the doctor and the trained nurse your constant visitants during the winter.

But, my hearers, before we separate for the summer, as your pastor I would like to ask you another question: What do you expect to do when you are in the country? How are you going to spend that vacation? "Well," you answer, "I really do not know. I am going to let things drift and not make any plans. If I feel like fishing I will fish. If I want to take a drive I will go driving or I will take a trip upon my bicycle. But the simple fact is I am not an enthusiastic sportsman. I fear the time some days will drag heavily. But go away to the country I will. I know I need the trip." Yes, my brother, your answer is that which most men can give. You have been working hard during your life. In one sense you have destroyed your ability to play. Therefore when you go to the country and do not know what to do temptations will there assail you which would never tempt you when you are at home and at work. Now, the purpose of this sermon is not to talk to libertines and loafers and dead beats. But I would to-day, as a pastor, earnestly and prayerfully give a few words of practical advice to hard working people who will spend their vacations away from home. I would try to warn you against the temptations which will confront you and which, if successful, may destroy your entire Christian character.

Summer red light the first: Beware of Sabbath desecration. That means beware that you do not unarmor yourselves by one false move and leave your beating hearts defenceless before the poisoned arrows of the Satanic archers. Beware that you do not practically say to the evil tempters: "Here am I, off on my summer vacation. I have left my religion at home. I am ready to let you lead me where you will. For two or three weeks, or one month at least, I will enter no church, listen to no sermon, utter no public prayer and ask for no divine protection. I will take a holiday from religion as well as from business, and as a beginning I will disregard the Lord's day."

"What do you mean by such a warning as that?" some one asks. "Why do you place such emphasis upon Sabbath observance?" Because, my friend, the way you generally start your summer vacation is the way you will end it. The Sabbath desecration is the keynote, as a rule, or the forerunner, of a long series of spiritual backsliding. How? In all probability your summer vacation will start on a Saturday afternoon. How will you spend your first day in the country? Will you do it with prayer and consecration? Will you do it by taking your children to the Sunday school and joining the Christian workers of that neighborhood in public worship within the four walls of the little village church, or will you do it by coming down in your fishing togs or by waving your golf stick or with your baskets full of food for a rollicking time in the woods on a Sunday picnic? Here are the two extremes. Which will you choose? The one heads toward spiritual renovation; the other heads toward spiritual death. No man or woman ever lived who could successfully resist the temptations of our summer resorts who started their vacations by breaking the law of God's sacred Sabbath. Such a church member always comes back to his church home a moral cripple after he has spent the Sabbath days of his summer vacation in handling the tiller of a sailboat or in hitting the little white balls over the golf links or in looking at the bobber floating at the end of a line attached to a fishing pole. Start your vacation aright for God and it will end right.

Summer red light the second: Beware of the hotel ballroom and the summer public dance hall. I am not now discussing the question of dancing in general; I am not considering whether it be right or wrong for the young folks, within the quietude and the sacred precincts of a home, to have one of their number finger the ivory keys of the piano; then, while the stately strains of the minuet or the lancers sound forth, to have the boys and girls join hands and the slippered feet keep step to the swifter or slower beating of the music. We do know that Miriam danced before the Lord. Perhaps there may be times in the home when the dance may be a harmless amusement. It may be the means of a harmless frolic and the means of keeping the children at home, where the fathers and mothers and grandfathers and grandmothers may be participants in the domestic merriment. But though I am not now denouncing the harmless social enjoyments which take place in the home, I do most vehemently protest against the promiscuous dance hall at our summer watering places. I know of what I am speaking. I am not a stranger to the social etiquette of this world. And I believe the hotel ballroom and the summer dance hall are among the most awful cesspools of mental, physical and spiritual destruction. They are the places where the young men and the young women from the very best of homes are often irresistibly drawn into a life of worldliness, of sin and of eternal death. Men and women whom I address to-day, I defy you to find one man or woman of noted spiritual power who will contend that the summer ballroom is a safe place in which to allow our sons and daughters to pass the summer months.

The public ballroom of the summer vacation can aptly be termed the place for the "Dance of Death." William H. Ainsworth, the famous English novelist, once gave a description of such a dance. It was during the famous plague which devastated the city of London a few centuries ago. The homes of thousands and tens of thousands were deserted. Thousands upon thousands were dying. Thousands upon thousands were dead. The dead carts used to make their rounds every day. The drivers, seated upon their piles of stenchful corpses, would call from street to street, "Bring out, bring out your dead!" Decomposed corpses would be brought out and the drivers would throw them upon their carts as a scavenger might toss a dead dog into his wagon. During that awful plague many of the young people rifled the wine cellars of the homes of the wealthy citizens. They took possession of the deserted cathedrals. They turned the churches into dance halls. They danced and drank during the night. They danced and drank during the day. When one of their number would fall in the dance the dancers would stop and lift up the dying man or woman and carry the body out of the room to await the arrival of the death cart. It was an awful time. But if we could look below the surface and know the subsequent lives of some of these dancers whirling around the summer ballrooms we should find that the fatalities, physical, moral and spiritual, are almost as appalling as in that great plague. The summer ballroom has not even the excuse of physical benefit. Is it not a place for physical death?

Is not the public dance hall of the summer vacation the place also of moral death? We are very careful with whom our children associate in the city. Are you justified in letting that young man, about whom you know practically nothing, speak what he would into the ears of your young daughter as he moves about in the fascinating dance? People may call me hypercritical. They may say I am trying to stop our young people from having fun. But I say that any place which has done the physical and moral damage the summer dance hall has done our children ought to be forbidden to enter. I am not so much afraid that our young folks may enter the low halls of evil resort as I am that they may enter the vestibules which will lead them into those Satanic dens. I firmly believe that the summer dance hall is the place where during the next few months thousands upon thousands of our young people will have their immortal souls destroyed.

Summer red light the third: Beware of all games of chance. What does that mean? Beware of joining the gambling game, which will be played every night in the side room of the hotel which opens into the hotel bar, which game will be kept up until 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning. Beware of commingling with the "plungers" gathered before the bookmakers' stands at the famous summer races? Oh, no. I would no more expect you to be found in such flagrantly compromising positions than you would expect to find your pastor there. But beware of the insidious beginnings. Beware of wagering the box of candy upon the game of tennis or quoits which is played in the hotel grounds. Beware of betting the penny upon the simple game which is played upon the hotel porch. In other words, beware of taking your first lessons in one of the awful, the most fascinating and the most destructive of all evils, the gambling evil.

When the poisonous desires of a game of chance are once inoculated into a young man's heart there seems to be no human power to stop him from committing mental, physical and spiritual suicide. Trifle not with the games of chance, however small the wager, any more than you would play about a rattlesnake's fang or toy with a boa constrictor's coils or a tiger's claw.

Summer red light the fourth: Beware of trifling with human affections. That means do not be a flirt. Do not falsify with the glance of the eye or the smile of the lip or the touch of the hand. Do not imagine that you can treat the delicate instrument of the human heart as a mere temporary plaything, thumping and banging it and snapping its many silver strings, and indulge the belief that it can afterward be retuned and made capable of sending forth sweet music. That means do not trifle with the beautiful diamond of love and plunge it into the Satanic fires of a summer flirtation and then hope it will have lost none of its luster. It will not retain its purity. It will become as black as the fatal line of Cain's forehead, which marked him as a destroyer of his brother's life.

Oh, the fascinations and yet the hellish malforming power of a summer flirtation! Have you ever sat upon a hotel porch and watched the insects gather out of the darkness and buzz and plays about the electric lights? Those lights have for them the fatal spell that the glittering eye of the black snake has for the mother bird sitting upon the edge of her nest. These insects will circle round and round the brilliant light. They will disappear for awhile, as though they know the hot tongue of death is ready to touch them. Then at last they will make one plunge and in an instant the wings and the legs are gone. Then the poor suffering creatures fall to the ground, wriggling and twisting and dying, to be trampled under the foot of man. Such are the awful results which follow when the human insects play about the hissing, blasting fires of a summer's flirtation. It may be pleasant for awhile to feel the hot flush upon the cheek. It may seem only fun to pass a few hours as a coquette, tearing and inflaming the tenderest feelings of a true man in a summer rowboat or in romantic walks through the woods. It may seem to be a glorious act to boast how many you can conquer in love, as an Indian warrior boasts of his prowess in war by the number of scalps he carries at his belt. But by the scorched and bruised and mutilated hearts of thousands which have been malformed for time and eternity in the glowing flames of a summer flirtation I denounce trifling with human love. I denounce it before the young people who may be participants during their next summer vacation in this merciless, heartless and damning universal evil.

Summer red light the fifth. Beware of the serpent which lies coiled up in the bewitching wine cup. A few summer and winter resorts of this country are especially noted for the power of their mineral waters to physically straighten a man out after a long debauch. But though there are a few, a very few, summer watering places whose waters have these curative qualities, most of our summer watering places are noted for the fact that they make drunkards rather than reform them. They make them in wholesale quantities and not in retail. Men carry their bottles of intoxicating beverages when they go fishing or dancing or taking a tramp in the woods, and men drink everywhere.

But this is not the greatest curse for which our summer resorts are famous. They are noted as places where women get drunk as well as the men. To me the most abjectly repulsive creature on earth is a drunken woman. When I see one I know not which feeling predominates most in my heart, that of pity or of horror. Therefore, friends, I beg of you when you are in a summer party where wine is passed around do not touch it. For your Christian example's sake do not touch it. For the danger of inflaming your own evil tastes do not touch it.

Summer red light the last: Beware of the family separations which take away for any length of time wives from husbands, husbands from wives, brothers from sisters and parents from children. Where do you say you are going this summer? "Well," you answer, "I do not know. I have not yet made up my mind. I would like to go down to the seashore if I could, but that is so far away. My husband and boys could be with me only a little while if I go there." Mother, wife, I would not go far away from home if I were you. If your husband and boys and brothers have to work during the summer to earn you a livelihood it is not good to be separated from them. It is not good for you. It is not good for the husband and the boys. Mark this, my friends, what I say. I speak calmly and deliberately: Nine-tenths of all the evil temptations of our summer resorts are directly or indirectly due to the separations of families. These separations lay temptations, awful temptations, at the feet of the men who are compelled to stay at home and work. They lay temptations, awful temptations, at the feet of the women who are off in the summer hotels. Go to a summer resort near to your home. Be in a place where all the members of the family can get together every few days. Never let your husband learn the lesson how to be happy without you and the children. Wives and mothers, never learn yourselves the les on how you can be happy without your husbands and the children by your side.

In closing I would speak to you words of congratulation and good cheer. Before we separate for the summer months I would say, men and women, I congratulate you because you have well earned your rest. I congratulate you because you have finished a hard winter's work. I congratulate you that you are going out among the trees and the flowers and the mountains and the valleys; that you are going to drink out of the cool spring and see the cows gather for the evening milking. And I also congratulate you that the same Christ whom you worship here you can worship there. Take along the Saviour's companionship. Pray during the next few weeks for divine protection and help. Then, if you have Christ along, there will be no fear that you will succumb to the evil temptations which beset every one during a summer vacation.

Use Boiled Eggs Sparingly.

Hard boiled eggs mixed with bread crumbs, one half of each, is very good for one feed a day, say every other day for the first week. But too much boiled egg is not good for them, and an entire diet of hard boiled eggs would soon kill a great many of the little chicks.

Fecundity of the Oyster.

The fecundity of the oyster is wonderful. A single female oyster in one season's spawning will produce, if she is of an average size, about 16,000,000 eggs, while a large specimen will produce 80,000,000 or 40,000,000.

THE WALKER OF THE SNOW.

"Speed on, speed on, good Master!
The camp lies far away;
We must cross the haunted valley
Before the close of day.

"How the snow-blight came upon me
I will tell you as I go—
The blight of the shadow-hunter,
Who walks the midnight snow.

"To the cold December heaven,
Came the pale moon and the stars,
As the yellow sun was sinking
Behind the purple bars.

"The snow was deeply drifted
Upon the ridges drear,
Thay lay for miles around me
And the camps for which we steer.

" 'Twas silent on the hillside,
And by the solemn wood,
No sound of life or motion
To break the solitude.

"Save the wailing of the moosebird,
With a plaintive note and low,
And the skating of the red leaf,
Upon the frozen snow.

"And said I, 'Though dark is falling,
And far the camp must be,
Yet my heart it would be lightsome
If I had but company.'

"And then I sang and shouted,
Keeping measure as I sped,
To the harp-twang of the snowshoe,
As it sprang beneath my tread.

"Not far into the valley
Had I dipped upon my way,
When a dusky figure joined me,
In a capuchin of grey,

"Bending upon the snowshoes,
With a long and limber stride;
And I hailed the dusky stranger
As we traveled side by side.

"But no token of communion
Gave he by word or look,
And the fear-chill fell upon me
At the crossing of the brook.

"For I saw by the sickly moonlight
As I followed, bending low,
That the walking of the stranger
Left no footmarks on the snow.

"Then the fear-chill gathered o'er me,
Like a shroud around me cast,
As I sank upon the snowdrift.
Where the shadow-hunter passed.

"And the other trappers found me,
Before the break of day,
With my dark hair blanched and whitened
As the snow in which I lay.

"But they spoke not as they raised me,
For they knew that in the night
I had seen the Shadow-hunter,
And had withered in his light.

"Sancta Maria speed us!
The sun is falling low—
Before us lies the valley
Of the Walker of the Snow."

Mimickry In Caterpillars.

A very large caterpillar stretched itself from the foliage of a tree which I was examining and startled me by its resemblance to a small snake. The first three segments behind the head were dilatable at the will of the insect and had on each side a large black pupillated spot, which resembled the eye of the snake. It was a poisonous or viperine species mimicked and not an innocuous snake. This was proved by the imitation of keeled scales on the crown, which was produced by the recumbent feet as the caterpillar threw itself backward. I carried off the caterpillar and alarmed every one in the village where I was then living to whom I showed it.—"Records of a Naturalist In the Amazon."

A WOMAN'S ADVICE.

To Those who Suffer from Headaches, Backaches and Ailments Peculiar to the Sex.

Every woman needs plenty of pure, rich, red blood and sound nerves to carry her safely through her times of pain and sickness. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are good in a special way for women. They actually make new health-giving blood. They give ease, strength and vigor. They stimulate all the organs to perform their functions regularly and well. They banish all pains and depression, all headaches and backaches, and all the secret distress that only a woman knows.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills bring the sparkle to dull eyes and the rosy glow of health to cheeks once pale and pinched with silent suffering. They being health and strength when all else fails. Here is a bit of strong proof from Mrs. John McKerr, Chickney, N.W.T., who says: "For some years I was greatly afflicted with the ailments that make the lives of so many of my sex miserable. I tried many medicines, but found nothing to relieve me until I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills have made me feel like a new person; the almost continuous suffering I endured has passed away, and life no longer seems the burden it once did. I know other women who have been similarly benefitted, and I think the pills are worth their weight in gold to all who suffer from female complaints or general prostration."

All over the land are suffering women who can obtain new health and strength through the use of these pills. Only the genuine should be taken, and these bear the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People" on the wrapper around every box. Sold by all dealers at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, or sent by mail by writing to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Toilet of the Cat.

Cats, large and small, make the most careful toilet of any class of animals, excepting some of the opossums. The lions and tigers wash themselves in exactly the same manner as the cat, wetting the dark, rubberlike ball of the fore foot and inner toe and passing it over the face and behind the ears. The foot is thus at the same time a face sponge and brush, and the rough tongue combs the rest of the body.

London has the largest proportion of insane of any English city, the number being 361 per 100,000. Nottingham is a close second, with 342 per 100,000.

We are won't to look forward to troubles with fear of what they will inflict, but back upon them with wonder at what they have saved us from.

In 1812 there were only 409 people in the United Kingdom with incomes of £5,000 a year and over. To-day nearly 4,000 people enjoy this income.

So queer is the sentiment of women that, though it brings them the misery of their life, they will hold their wedding day in sacred reverence.

THE SUFFERINGS OF WOMAN.

Many Irregularities and Weaknesses, Much Pain and Misery Which Can be Permanently Overcome by Using

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD.

No woman can expect to have good health unless the monthly uterine action is regular, and any breaking of this law of nature not only causes much vain and suffering but may make her an invalid for the rest of her life.

Nearly all derangements of the feminine organism are due to thin, watery blood, a poor circulation or lack of nerve force. Whether the menses are irregular, insufficient, profuse or painful the cause of trouble rests with the condition of the blood and nerves, and soon disappears when these are restored to health and vigor.

The dull, aching pain in the back and thighs, the cramps in the abdomen, the distressing headaches, the irritability and feelings of utter weariness will disappear when Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is used to put the blood and nerves in proper condition.

It is usually in girlhood that these irregularities have their beginnings, and hence, mothers, the necessity of looking to the health of your daughters during the period of change. A few words of advice at this point may save them from a life of ill-health and misery.

From girlhood to the change in life, for the nursing mother and at every trying time in woman's life, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is of inestimable value because it forms new red blood, insures good circulation and revitalizes the wasted and depleted nerve cells. It gives health, strength and buoyancy, rounds out the form, increases flesh and weight and builds up the system.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is composed of nature's most powerful restoratives and cannot fail to benefit you. Fifty cents a box at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

Found Pharaoh's Tomb—Important Discovery by a Toronto Explorer.

Mr. C. T. Currelley, M.A., of Toronto, assistant on the Egyptian Exploration Fund staff, had recently the good fortune to discover the tomb of Aahames, first King of the eighteenth dynasty, the Pharaoh of the Bible, who "knew not Joseph," and under whom the oppression of the Hebrews commenced. This tomb had been searched for for some years without success, and its discovery is on that account even more gratifying than it would otherwise be. The tomb is described as one of the largest known, the entry being by a shaft or well sunk in the rock of the desert and forty-five feet in diameter. At the bottom of this is a square chamber, which no doubt opens into various passages and chambers, as is usual in such tombs.

The mummy of Aahames has already been discovered, having been removed from the tomb to a safer place during some turbulent period. The chief value of the discovery, however, will be in the historical material contained in the inscriptions with which the walls of such tombs are decorated, and which may perhaps throw light upon some important matters of sacred history.

Mr. Currelley left Egypt at the end of March to spend four months working on the pre-Mycenaean deposits of Crete under the British School of Archaeology. In addition to the valuable collection presented by the Egypt Exploration Fund to Victoria University last autumn, Mr. Currelley expects to ship further archaeological materials before leaving Egypt. The work of establishing a branch of the Egypt Exploration Fund in Toronto has been undertaken by the Chancellor of Victoria University.

DOUBLE STABBING

ITALIANS AT FORT WILLIAM IN A FRACAS.

Hermanni Santi and Ed. Johnson Knifed While Passing the Italian Village at the Coal Docks—A Tough Spot to Deal With.

A dispatch from Fort William, of June 25, says: Another attempt at murder took place at the coal dock village last night in which two Finlanders were stabbed by an Italian

Hermanni Santi and Ed. Johnson were returning from Port Arthur and got off the 11 o'clock car at the corner of Simpson street, near the coal dock. They were on their way home and stopped in front of an Italian house where there was a dance going on. While listening to the fascinating music of an Italian party, an unknown Italian rushed out of the house and knifed Hermanni Santi right below the heart, and then stabbed Johnson through the left arm. Santi and Johnson ran for their home, a short distance from the scene of the affray, and their friends immediately got Dr. Birdsell to attend to their wounds.

IN A POOL OF BLOOD.

Dr. Birdsell found Santi in a pool of blood and very weak from the wound. After dressing the wounds of the men Dr. Birdsell had Santi removed to the hospital, where he is resting easy, but at present the doctor says it is hard to tell whether the wound will prove fatal or not. Johnson was under the influence of liquor when the stabbing took place, but Santi was perfectly sober.

An Italian inhabitant, who has been a respected resident of the town for some years, says the five Italians who have been raising so much disturbance and notoriety in their village are the men who came to town after the construction of the Canadian Northern and are the worst element from Chicago, Buffalo and New York. They have kept law-abiding foreigners of the village in constant fear of being assaulted by some unknown Italian. Chief Dodds and Constable McCallum went to the Italian village to look for the assailant.

DREW REVOLVER ON POLICE.

While on their duty a Finlander named Edward Erse, drew a revolver on them. He was arrested and brought before Police Magistrate McDougall upon two charges, one for carrying firearms and the other for threatening to shoot at the police. Erse's plea to the charge was that he thought they were two of the Italians, and he carried a gun to protect himself from any one who would try to assault him, as he was afraid to go home in the dark.

The foreign village at the coal dock is becoming such a place for drinking among a certain class of the inhabitants that action is being taken to put down their lawless ways, and it appears that until an example is made, which will be more than putting them in jail for a long or short period, they have no fear for law or order.

The Great Schreyer.

After a considerable amount of trouble the attractions committee of the Winnipeg fair have been able to again secure the services of the great Schreyer who was seen here at the last fair in his sensational ride and dive. Schreyer is known as the mile a minute aerial cyclist of New York and those who saw this intrepid cyclist last year will remember that he makes a flying high dive from his wheel thirty-five feet in mid-air after shooting down a 300 foot chute at the rate of two miles a minute into the tank of water three feet deep placed 85 feet from the lower end of the chute. This, it is claimed, is positively the greatest distance ever covered through space by any human being in this manner.

Head-on Collision.

Hamilton, June 25.—A fatal accident occurred on the Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville electric railway this afternoon near Winona, resulting in the death of one of the employees and the serious injury to others

A freight car loaded with fruit coming west and a passenger car going east had a head-on collision when both were running at a good rate of speed. The cars came together with great force, and several passengers were thrown violently forward. J.A. Doucette, of Hamilton, commercial traveller, was injured and other passenger were bruised. Robert Braidwood, motorman on the freight car was thrown under the car and had both legs badly crushed besides sustaining other internal injuries. He died when being removed to the city hospital. Henry Branton, conductor on the passenger car, was also injured.

Mr. McKerchar, a C. P. R. engineer, was run over and killed by a train at Regina. He was asleep on the track.

Over 4,000 homestead entries were made in the west last month.

The stocking of South African farms with Texas cattle was discussed in the Commons at Ottawa on June 25.

A THRILLING EXPERIENCE

Capt. Blackburn Fails in His Attempt to Cross the Atlantic in a Dory.

A dispatch from Halifax says: After a thrilling escape from drowning and terribly exhausted and chilled, Capt. Howard Blackburn, the daring dory navigator, put in at Clarke's Harbor, on the south coast of Nova Scotia, Tuesday. Since sailing from Gloucester from Havre, France on June 7, in his 16-foot dory "America" he has encountered three heavy easterly storms, during which he had a very trying and perilous experience.

The last and worst one came on Sunday last when he was 25 miles off Lockport, N. S. The dory behaved well, but was carried westward by the inset of the Bay of Fundy current. The following day the seas were running high and when Blackburn was asleep a big wave struck the dory and turned her over on her side. Blackburn was thrown into the water, but managed to grasp the little craft, and after great difficulty righted the craft and scrambled aboard. His lanters and compass were washed away, and on bailing out the water he found that his charts and stores were almost destroyed. The gale continued till Tuesday, when Cape Sable was sighted. The lone mariner reached land chilled and exhausted but cheerful. The dory was not injured and no gear was lost. He is putting the little craft in shape, and will he says, make another start on his Atlantic voyage when the weather becomes favorable.

AN ELEPHANT'S CRIME.

Pet of Irish Children in the Dublin Zoo Murders His Keeper.

The Dublin Zoological gardens has just been the scene of a peculiarly melancholy tragedy.

One of the chief treasures of the Irish Zoo is the royal elephant presented by King Edward on returning from his memorable Indian tour. For twenty-seven years this elephant has been the pet of all the children in the Irish capital, and almost equally high in their estimation has been its keeper, McNally.

For the past few days the elephant has been troubled with a sore foot, and on Tuesday evening McNally was on his knees dressing the sore, when the elephant suddenly knocked him down with his trunk, and, placing its foot on his head, crushed his skull into fragments. Death, of course, was instantaneous.

McNally's son was a spectator of the tragedy, but was powerless to render aid, the whole scene being over in a second.

The elephant paid the penalty with its life

The postmaster general has introduced a bill in the House of Commons to amend the post office act. It affects departmental salaries and the rate on newspapers and periodicals. One provision states that railway mail clerks shall be appointed on probation for a period of six months at a salary of $400, with an additional allowance for mileage, and on confirmation of appointment the clerk may get $500 and mileage with annual increases of $50 until the maximum of $1,200 is reached. Railway mail clerks must pass yearly examinations, and no increase will be given if his examination is not passed.

Weekly newspapers will be carried for 300 miles from the place of publication at a quarter of a cent a pound, instead of hals a cent. as at present.

Farmers Must Go In For Live Stock.

In addressing the American Association of Farmers' Institute Workers at Toronto on June 25, George Harcourt, for Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, said institute work there was in the pioneer stage. Their difficulties were great on account of distances and indifference, or the feeling of independence, by the farmers. There everybody grew wheat and little else. This could not last, and the problem was to prepare the people for stock raising. Another problem was that of weeds, and it was necessary to appoint a weed inspector and sub-inspectors all over the Territories. They also sent samples of weeds to the schools, so that the children might know them.

They were encouraging forestry, both as wind breaks and to assist in restoring the fertility of the soil.

There are now 24 agricultural societies carrying on experiments in grain growing, and he hoped by co-operation to secure even better results.

The Servant Girl Problem.

"I had rather a daughter of mine be dead than working in the homes of many of you women who are before me to-night," said the Rev. Dr. Morgan Wood, former pastor of Bond Street Congregational church, Toronto, in his sermon at Cleveland last Sunday evening.

"The women," he said, "who preside over the American homes in the large cities are largely responsible for the present day situation, when capable servant girls can be secured only with the greatest difficulty, if at all; it is because of the fact that the girls who do housework are not treated as real human beings, and thousands of them would rather work in factories or departmental stores at far less money than they could secure from householders."

Vital di Bruno, an Italian, has been arrested in Winnipeg, charged with stabbing a fellow workman.

Died Slowly on the Cross.

Mail advices have been received from Kiating, China, of the crucifixion of some Chinese robbers. The Kiating correspondent of the North China Daily News says: "A horrible spectacle is seen here of two men nailed to wooden crosses and four others hung in wooden cages being paraded along the streets and followed by thousands of people. All of the men were dead except one of the two on the crosses. They were finally piled at the entrance of the west gate, where they were left exposed alternately to the rains and sun. The live man on the cross did not die for three days, and then he was poisoned with medicine. Large spikes were driven through his wrists and his legs just above the ankles. Their crimes were robbery of a burning house and murder. The two on the crosses had caught a yamen runner, tied him up to a tree and sliced him to pieces.

An Interesting Discovery.

A dispatch from Mexico City, says:—The recent discovery of an ancient City of Pyramids in a dense forest in a remote part of the state of Puebla has been found to be of the greatest archaeological importance The feheral government has commissioned the sub-director of the national museum, Senor F. Rodriguez, to visit the ruins. Nicholas Leon, an archaelogist and enthnologist, accompanied the sub-director to the ruins. Dr. Leon reports that the ruins are such as never before have been known to the world of science, and most primitive ever discovered in Mexico, in fact so ancient as to require a great deal of time and study to learn in what epoch they were built as well as by what people.

NAVY 200 YEARS AGO

BRITISH MERCANTILE MARINE IN THE YEARS 1695-97.

How Vessels Were Stolen From the Harbors—Some of These Cases Were Attended by Special Aggravation—Curious Helplessness of the Admiralty to Protect the Ships of Those Days.

In the latest volume of the "Manuscripts of the House of Lords," just issued, relating to the years 1695-7, it is stated that a session of Parliament at this period would hardly have been complete without an inquiry into naval administration, and the two sessions under consideration were no exception to this rule. In that of 1695-6 it was the insufficient protection afforded by His Majesty's ships to the mercantile marine that came under investigation.

The papers show how well-founded were the complaints made by the merchants. No fewer than 108 ships seem to have been actually taken by the French, while the loss of 25 more was indirectly caused by the failure of the Admiralty to provide convoys and cruisers. Some of these cases were attended by circumstances of special aggravation. Thus one vessel was carried off from an Irish harbor, where her owners may well have thought that she was safe, while another was rendered so defenceless by the impressment of almost the whole of her crew that she fell an easy prey to the first French privateer that attacked her. And the East India Company came to the committee with a sad story. On June 13, in view of the expected arrival before long of several of their ships, they made urgent application to the Admiralty for cruisers to be sent out to look after them. The Admiralty replied that they would do what they could, but a month later the company learned that the number of cruisers, instead of being increased, had been reduced. Early in August the company, having received intelligence that the French Admiral, De Nesmond, was about to sail from Brest with a considerable force for the express purpose of intercepting their ships, renewed their application for more cruisers, but were met with the reply that the Admiralty could send out no more. The ships were now arriving. One was attacked by two French privateers, but made so good a defence that she was able to escape from them. Her captain reported that he met with no men-of-war till he arrived off Portland. Two others were taken by De Nesmond. A fourth was forced ashore by a privateer on the Irish coast.

These occurrences, as news of them arrived, were reported to the Admiralty, who, however, held out no hope of any effectual steps being taken for the protection of the rest of the expected shipping. The company now, in their distress, petitioned the Lords Justices, by whom the Government was being carried on in the King's absence abroad; and on 14th September the Duke of Shrewsbury acquainted them that a squadron had been ordered to go as far as Ushant to look after their ships, and oppose De Nesmond. But, notwithstanding this order and a further memorial from the company to the Admiralty, three more ships were taken by the enemy 20 leagues off the coast of Ireland. The company estimated their loss at £1,500,000. Other bodies of merchants also suffered severly. Formidable lists were handed in by the Barbadoes Merchants and the African Company, the losses of the former being put down at £387,100, those of the latter at £199,540; and further lists were presented, showing an aggregate loss of £345,600.

The answer made by the Admiralty to these complaints amounted to this—that they had not ships enough. They had done the best they could with those they had, but the navy was not large enough for what was required of it. They gave a detailed account of the way in which they had disposed of the force at their command, and brought a countercharge of rashness and foolhardiness against the masters of the merchantmen, accusing the merchants of trading during the war with almost the same freedom as in time of peace. In the month of September 74 cruisers had been employed out of a total of 176 available ships in His Majesty's service. Incidentally they laid some of the blame on the Marquis of Carmarthen, whom they represented as having been dilatory in putting to sea and slow in finding the squadron which he was to command. When he did eventually come in sight of it engaged in convoying a number of merchant ships, he took it for a French fleet and ran into Milford Haven for shelter. Lord Carmarthen indignantly repelled the reflections passed upon him, and much of the committee's time was devoted to an inquiry which could have been carried out more properly and efficiently by the court-martial which he had demanded, and not the time of the committee only was thus taken up, but that of the Commissioners of the Admiralty also, as they complained with some bitterness: "The service suffers infinitely by our being here," they said.

In the next year, 1896, the Admiralty were called upon to furnish detailed accounts of the navy, showing the number, condition, and stations of the King's ships; the Navy Board were required to give particulars of the stores; and Sir George Rooke was ordered to lay before the House copies of all orders, letters, and papers received by him relating to the conduct of the Cadiz expedition. The Commissioners said they were confident that the naval power of this country was much greater than it had ever been before.

The complete list furnished by them shows a total of 277 ships, either at sea, or preparing to put to sea, while 18 more were on the stocks. Nor were they at all content to submit without protest to the imputation of having neglected the interests of the country. Here is the note which they appended to their answers to certain questions addressed to them: "And having now answered the several questions sent to us by their lordships, we beg leave to observe that we thought we had little reason to expect being called in question for our proceedings of the last year, after having so happily got together, in four days' time, such a considerable fleet for the preservation of the kingdom, so visibly and so imminently in danger." This refers to the expectation of an attack by the French fleet on the English coast. The Admiralty Board were not responsible for the return of the fleet from Cadiz, which was carried out in obedience to the King's orders, issued at the end of January, and not communicated to the Admiralty till two months later.—London Globe.

LONDON AMBULANCE SERVICE.

Only City in Europe Lacking This Great Public Need.

One of the most urgent needs of the metropolis is a properly organized and well-equipped municipal ambulance service.

London is the only great European city which is lacking in an effective service of this kind, and there is no European city in which it is wanted more, for, according to the latest returns, there is an average of 500 serious street accidents every week in the year, and of these the police ambulances can only deal with some 200 at the outside.

The Metropolitan Asylums Board has a complete horsed-ambulance service in existence, maintained in a high state of efficiency in order to meet sudden outbreaks of infectious disease. Under normal circumstances however, the service is far larger than the requirements, and the board is accordingly circularizing all the London local authorities on the subject of extending this into a regular municipal service.

In London there is no uniform system for dealing with street accidents; no central authority controlling ambulances and keeping close touch with the hospitals. Even the telephone is unknown as an adjunct to the haphazard systems which exist. Thus the London Hospital receives twice the number of accident cases in cabs and carts of those conveyed in antiquated ambulances. What lives have been lost, what pain and misery inflicted, by the present methods, no one can say.

Dr. Perry, the Superintendent of Guy's Hospital, says: "It is very painful to watch the arrival of accidents at hospitals under the present system. What London wants are horsed ambulances, and a telephone system in conjunction."

The Metropolitan Asylums Board offers six ambulance stations in telephonic communication with the head offices on the Victoria Embankment. These are situated at Homerton, Hampstead, Fulham, Stockwell, New Cross Road, Shooters Hill, and in each station are the most modern carriages, with horses, drivers, and nurses ready day and night to proceed at the whirr of the telephone to any destination to which they may be called.

Wages and Cost of Living in the Transvaal.

Some interesting facts regarding the present industrial and social situation in the Transvaal are contained in a "handbook" to the new Colony published by the Emigrants' Information office of London. The following are enumerated as current rates of pay for skilled workmen: —Bakers, £4 to £6 per week; blacksmiths, 20s per day; carpenters, 22s 6d to 25s per day; bricklayers, 22s 6d to 25s per day; masons, 22s 6d to 25s per day; fitters, 20s per day; traction-engine drivers, 20s and 22s 6d per day; painters, 20s and 22s 6d per day; plasterers, 22s 6d per day; plumbers, 20s per day; upholsterers, £5 to £6 per week; cobblers, £5 per week; watchmakers, £25 to £30 per month; hairdressers, £20 to £22 10s per month; tailors, £20 to £30 per month; butchers, £25 to £30 per month. As a set-off to these high wages, it must be remembered that "it is practically impossible to rent a cottage of any kind under £10 a month," and that groceries can only be purchased at such prices as these:—Fresh farm butter, 2s per lb; tinned milk, 7s per dozen; candles, per 3lb packet, 2s; breakfast oats, per packet of 2lb 1s.; golden syrup, per 2lb tin, 11d; biscuits, 1s 3d per lb; English hams, per lb., 1s 4d; bacon, per lb, 2s; Australian bacon, 1s 3d; groats and barley, 1s 6d per lb; peas and beans, dry, 1s 6d per lb; peas and beans, tinned, per three tins, 2s; flour, 3d per lb; white sugar, best, per lb, 3½d; tea, per lb, 1s 6d to 3s; coffee, 1s 9d to 2s 6d per lb; jam, 1s per tin.

The Man of Sokoto.

M. A. P. says:—Brigadier-General George Kimball, D.S.O., Royal Artillery, who led the West African troops into Sokoto the other day, is a man, say those who know, who has a rosy future before him. Fair, with blue eyes, clear-cut features and a well-proportioned figure, he gives one the idea of great mental and physical strength disguised under an extremely calm, well-bred manner. A typical Scotchman in his tenacity of purpose, capacity for hard work, foresight and level-headedness, he has been called "as keen a soldier as any of the highly-vaunted German officers." General Kimball was, in the best sense, "a marked man" early in his career. He served on Lord Roberts' staff in India, has seen a considerable amount of active service, and commanded the Bida and Kontora expedition in 1901. After this he was "mentioned" and decorated. Subsequently Mr. Chamberlain appointed him Inspector-General of the West African Frontier Force—a post which necessitates his being half the year at the Colonial Office. He is a notably popular "chief" with his subordinates.

EDITORIAL NOTES

EDITOR Simpson says he has no new candidate for Cranbrook district this week. Wonder if he has got to the end the list at last. He adds another for this district however.

* * *

The figures, in another column, showing the coal output for the month of June must be most gratifying to every resident of this section of the Crow's Nest valley. It proves that our prediction in these columns when the two year settlement was effected was no idle talk. June has taken a tremendous leap ahead of all previous records, the output being an increase of over seventy-three per cent above the output for May, which held the record up to that time. At this rate of progress the present capacity of the mines will be doubled in a few months. The more coal that is mined by the coal company, the larger the pay roll becomes, and the larger the pay roll the more prosperity there is for the individual, the town and the district. The Coal Company has been up against a lot of hard luck at frequent intervals during its history and this has reflected similar results upon all these dependent upon the chief industry of the Pass, but with fair assurances of smooth sailing ahead the prospects of the future in this district are of the brightest.

* * *

The use of profane language is doubtless more prevalent in the west than in the east. In Fernie, we regret to say, the practice is indulged in to an alarming extent. Outside of the moral or religious point of view altogether (for none would defend the habit in the face of such argument) we would like to say a word from a practical standpoint on the effect of profanity. Doubtless the habit originated in many cases from a desire to express one's self more forceably. Were the habit less prevalent perhaps his object would be obtained to a certain degree, as in that case the awful significance of the words used would oftener be considered. The actual effect of prefixing ordinary statements with foul oaths is weakening rather than strengthening, even to those who are accustomed to such language, while to those whose ears abhor the profane use of sacred names the intended effect is almost entirely lost. The habit of profanity is a contagious disease of the brain which grows on one imperceptibly through associating with those who have already contracted the disease. Like some physical diseases its existence is scarcely felt by the victim, as in many instances he strings out his worst imprecations without any consciousness of using anything but the plainest of English. Profanity is also like other diseases in that it is more contagious to the young than to grown people. It is hard indeed for a boy to grow up free from this blighting habit when he is confronted on every side by its unrestrained use on the part of his elders. Perhaps nowhere does the loathsome habit present such a striking effect as on the athletic field where wholesome manly sport shows by sharp contrast the unwholesomeness and unmanliness of indecent and profane language.

WEDDING AT BLAIRMORE.

A happy event took place at Blairmore, on the 23rd of last month, in the home of Charles Beebe, Esq., when his eldest daughter, Georgina, was united in marriage to Mr. John Miller, also of this place. The marriage ceremony was performed by the Rev. Donald G. McPhail, of the Presbyterian church here, in the presence of the bride's family only. The groom is highly respected by his fellow townsmen, while the popularity of the bride was attested by the array of handsome presents of which she was the recipient, and she certainly looked very charming, tastefully attired in white and carrying a large bouquet of wild roses. After the ceremony had been performed, and congratulations extended with good wishes to the happy couple, the wedding party sat down to a delicious repast. Mr. and Mrs. Miller will reside for the present in Blairmore.

SPORTING ITEMS.

Lethbridge Lacrosse Club was defeated by the Medicine Hat team at the latter place on Dominion Day by a score of 3—1.

Westminster defeated Nelson in lacrosse on July 1st by a score of 3—1, and again on the 2nd by a score of 8—3.

Harry Nevin, of Cranbrook, was defeated at Cardstone, Alta., on Dominion Day by a local sport named Kenny. Nevin need not have gone so far for a good race on that day. Cranbrook sports dropped $500 in this race.

Too Great a Risk.

In almost every neighborhood some one has died from an attack of colic or cholera morbus, often before medicine could be procured or a physician summoned. A reliable remedy for theses disease should be kept at hand. The rish is too great for anyone to take. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy has undoubtedly saved the lives of more people and relieved more pain and suffering than any other medicine in use. It can always be depended upon. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

1. That this convention reaffirm the policy of the party in matters of provincial roads and trails; the ownership and control of railways and the development of the agricultural resources of the province as laid down in the platform adopted in October, 1899, which is as follows:

"To actively aid in the construction o trails throughout the undeveloped portions of the province and the building o provincial trunk roads of public nesessity

"To adopt the principle of government ownership of railways in so far as the circumstances of the province will admit, and the adoption of the principle that no bonus should be granted to any railway company which does not give the government of the province control of rates over lines bonused, together with the option of purchase.

"To actively assist by state aid in the development of the agricultural resources of the province.

2. That in the meantime and until the railway policy above set forth can be accomplished, a general railway act be passed, giving freedom to construct railways under certain approved resgulations analogous to the system that has resulted in such extensive railway construction in the United States, with so much advantage to trade and commerce.

3. That to encourage the mining industry, the taxation of metalliferous mines should be on the basis of a percentage on the net profits.

4. That the government ownership of telephone systems should be brought about as a first step in the acquisition of public utilities.

5. That a portion of every coal area hereafter to be disposed of should be reserved from sale or lease, so that state owned mines may be easily assessible, if their operation becomes necessary or advisable

6. That in the pulp land leases provision should be made for reforesting and that steps should be taken for the general preservation of forests by guarding against the wasteful destruction of timber

7. That the legislature and governmen of the province persevere in the effort to secure the exclusion of Asiatic labor.

8. That the matter of better terms in the way of subsidy and appropriations for the province should be vigorously pressed upon the Dominion government.

9. That the silver-lead industries of the province be fostered and encouraged by the imposition of increased customs duties on lead and lead produce imported into Canada, and that the conservative members of the Dominion House be urged to support any motion introduced for such a purpose.

10. That as industrial disputes almost invariably result in great loss and injury both to the parties directly concerned and to the public, legislation should be passed to provide means for an amicable adjustment of such disputes between employers and employees.

11. That it is advisable to foster the manufacture of the raw products of the province within the province as far as practicable by means of taxation on the said raw products, subject to rebate of the same in whole or part when manufactured in British Columbia.

CONSERVATIVE CONVENTION.

At a meeting of the executive of the Provincial Conservative Association, held at Vancouver, the province was divided into five divisions for organization purposes. The Kootenay-Boundary division is made up of the following Provincial election districts: Revelstoke, Columbia, Fernie, Cranbrook, Ymir, Kaslo, Slocan, Grand Forks, Greenwood, the City of Rossland and the City of Nelson. At the same meeting the following resolutions was adopted:

1, That conventions for nominating candidates for members of the legislative assembly be made up of delegates chosen as follows:

(a) In city electoral districts, one delegate for every fifty and fraction of fifty votes polled at the Provincial election held in 1900, and if the city is divided into wards, the proportion of delegates for each ward shall be based on the vote polled in each ward at the municipal election.

(b) In other electoral districts, one delegate for every fifty or fraction of fifty votes polled at the Provincial election held in 1900, the delegates to be apportioned to polling places, or as near thereto as will be fair to the voters of the different neighborhoods.

2. The election of delegates shall be at public meetings, held at a designated central place in each polling division, or in each ward in city electoral districts, if the city is divided into wards. At such public meetings only those who pledge themselves to vote for the candidate or canditates selected at the nominating convention shall be entitled to a vote for delegates.

3. Two weeks' notice shall be given of the public meetings at which delegates are to be elected, and nominating conventions shall be held in city electoral districts two days after the day on which delegates are elected, and in other electoral districts seven days after. All nominations throughout the province to be made at a designated central place in each electoral district, and on the same day.

4. All notices of the date of public meetings for the election of delegates to nominating conventions, the apportionment of delegates, and the place and date of nominating conventions in the several electoral districts shall be prepared by the member of the executive of the division in which the electoral districts are situate, and issued over the names of the president and secretary of the Provincial Conservative Association.

A meeting of the Provincial executive will be held at Vancouver within a month, and the date for holding district nominating conventions will then be fixed.

JOHN HOUSTON,
President of the Provincial Conservative Association.

MY HEART'S DARLING

BY W. REMMBURG.

"I sunk on my bed as if in a dream, and slept heavily. I did not wake till noon the next day, as the carriage rolled into the court-yard below, bringing Wilken and his bride from the church. With an effort I remembered I had a fiance, as the chamber-maid brought in a note and a bouquet from him. I excused myself, and stayed in bed all day; I was unutterably miserable. In the evening I made up my mind to receive him with the declaration that I found I had acted with too much haste, and then I would take the night train away. But he did not come. By noon he was off for Hohenberg to see grandpapa. Yesterday morning I received a telegram from the old gentleman, giving his consent. He expects me to-day." She had spoken with trembling lips; now she ceased, and pressed her hands to her temples. "Voila tout!" she said, after a pause, in an entirely different tone. "Now pack your things and come with me."

"But how will you stand this engagement? You have so often warned me, Hortense—warned me of a marriage without love, and now you throw yourself head-first into one."

"But then I have not such a sentimental nature as you have."

Lucie seized the young baroness.

"That is just what you really have."

"And then you know he is very rich," continued Hortense, coolly. "The little cares of life will not bring us together, his house is so large; we can keep out of each other's way. With you it would have been quite different."

"But people do not marry to keep out of each other's way. You must write to him—you must give him back his word," cried the girl, excitedly.

"I do not think I shall," said Hortense, calmly.

"And you say it is my fault; that is very unkind. I can not have you say that,"

"If you had stayed with me, it certainly would not have happened, my child; but I can't help it now. When does the next train go out of these woods? I think at twelve o'clock—is it not? Get ready, and say good-bye; you must go with me, you owe me that much!"

"To Hohenberg?"

"Only till my wedding; then you will go with me to Wottersdorf."

"He will not thank you!"

"That will be all right, Lucie. Now, please do make ready to go."

The girl did not move; thoughts seemed to whirl in her head in wild confusion. She could not stay here, and the idea of going to Hohenberg was painful. But Hortense spoke the truth; she had taken that wild, foolish step because she had been left alone in her despair on the bitterest day of her life.

"I will be honest with you," she said at last. "It was my intention to remain here, but—"

"Was it also your wish?"

"Yes, my wish, too; but George refused to have me. He does not wish it."

"Very good for me. But why?"

"Because I did not come when Mathilda wrote me she was ill; because I forgot her for you!"

The tears were in her eyes as she leaned over her valise, which was in a corner of the room. Hortense did not answer; she went round the room, and looked with interest at each piece of the simple furniture. She looked pale, the complexion look almost yellow, and dark rings were under her large eyes. Lucie knew so well all she must have suffered.

A child's voice was heard screaming outside the door. Lucie sprung out. The youngest little girl had fallen down and was crying. She picked her up and brought her into the room, seated herself with the child on her lap, and tried to soothe her.

Hortense had turned round and looked fixedly at her. Something seemed to be going on within her.

The little thing stopped crying at last. Lucie put her down on the floor, and gave her some skeins of worsted to play with.

"Is she to stay here?" asked Hortense.

"Let her stay, please; they do not know where to go, the poor little things."

"Lucie," exclaimed the young baroness, "take the child away; she makes me feel so badly! I can not look at a child without thinking what fate may be before him, what he may have to bear, and how much he may be sinned against."

"But, Hortense, don't feel so," said the girl, with a shocked look; "every one does not have such a hard time as you."

She took the little child up and carried her to Rike in the kitchen.

The girl stood erect before her.

"Hortense," she said, severely, "write to him that you do not love him, that you do not wish to make him unhappy—"

"He will not change his mind," murmured the baroness.

"But you, too, will be unhappy; how can any one marry with such a prospect of wretchedness? Once again, write to him and decline!"

She shook her head.

Litigants' Requisites.

An old English solicitor used to say a man's requirements for going to law were ten in number, and he summed them up as follows: First, plenty of money; secondly, plenty of patience; thirdly, a good case; fourthly, a good solicitor; fifthly, plenty of money; sixthly, a good counsel; seventhly, a good witness; eighthly, a good jury; ninthly, a good judge; tenthly, plenty of money.

Shoe Externals

Short talks by the Slater Shoe ad man, No. 5.

External Shoe beauty is simply a matter of perforation and polish—in most shoes.

Permanent beauty of form and finish are results of the same methods which secure to the shoe length of wear and shape retention viz:—invisible perfection of internal workmanship.

The "Slater Shoe" with the prestige of years of systematic advertising can afford to take no chances by skimping the internal economy of its make up—can not risk tampering with the fixed rules of standard workmanship.

The "Slater Shoe" has a name and the prestige of a valuable trade mark to maintain—they represent much cold cash in the assets of the makers—therefore both name and prestige are sustained by making the "Slater Shoe" in every particular equal or better than the claims its makers advertise for it.

LORENZ IN MONTREAL.

Eminent Surgeon Tells How He Came to Abandon the Knife.

Dr. Lorenz, the famous Austrian surgeon, is the guest of Dr. Wilson, in Montreal.

"How do the hospitals in the United States compare with those in Europe?" the doctor was asked.

"Well," was the reply with enthusiasm, "they are well equipped. Only the German hospitals are ahead of them as far as I know, and I am told that you have good hospitals here."

"How long is it since you made your wonderful discovery?"

"About ten years, and it is not mine alone now. I have taught that for ten years and have had success, as you are kind enough to say. Ah, bue it took time to find the right and only way. On 264 cases did I operate as a regular surgeon with the knife, and then after study, close and deep, the way was found and then the hands were enough and the knife was not needed."

"What is the truth of the statement that a Dr. Pica, of Italy, made a similar discovery about the same time?"

The doctor smiled thoughtfully. "Many tried it and many experimented, but they were all as far from the truth as one another. The method is not original with me. The idea was known but it was not understood how to achieve success, and one after another medical men have tried until success came.

"Ah, that little fellow was very near heaven," was the only reply the doctor made when he was asked about the dramatic scene in the Rochester City hospital this week, when a little boy, who was being operated upon began to succumb to the anaesthetic and was brought back by the doctor's quickness and presence of mind in treating him.

Cremation.

Cremation has been practiced by most of the nations of the earth from the earliest ages, and although in papan countries it may have taken the form of fire worshipping there can be no doubt that its adoption by the ancients was for the most part prompted by other than religious reasons. Greeks ascribe its introduction to Hercules, who having sworn to transmit the body of Argus to his father, thought this the most convenient way of fulfilling his promise. According to Homer, the burning of the dead was a common practice among the Greeks long before the Trojan war, but the earliest record of it is among the Scythians, who inhabited the vast region known undes the name of Tartary. Slender accounts handed down concerning the manners of some of the ancient natives of Hindostan also allude to the custom. The idea of purification by fire was in all ages universal, and with good reason. Some believed that the body was unclean after the departure of the soul, and it was therefore deemed necessary that it should be purified by fire. Ovid expressed the general opinion of his time when he said that the soul was not completely separated from the body until the latter was consumed on the pyre. The Athenians invariably, after a battle, buried the slain.

There wouldn't be much room at the top if those who reach it were half as big as they think they are.

LARGE FAMILIES.

Mother of Twenty Eight and Not Forty Five Years of Age.

There are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamt of in our everyday philosophy, and one of the most curious among them is the mysterious way in which the birthrate of a country goes up and down in accordance with political or even social requirements. This strange phenomenon greatly exercised the ingenuity of Roman statistics recently, when his Holiness the Pope, desirous to commemorate the celebration of his jubilee, gave orders that every child born in the Eternal City on that memorable day or night should receive a gift of babylinen and a small sum of money. The head of the Papal treasury duly made his preparations accordingly, and based his calculations of the cost on the averages as reckoned by the statistical tables. According to these documents, the average number of children who came into the world daily in the Italian capital is thirty-five, and for so many innocents did the treasury of the Vatican make provision. But the Roman mothers, having heard of the windfall in store for their darlings, upset these prosaic calculations by giving birth to exactly ninety-three olive branches, the number of the Pope's years in this vale of tears. "Worldly wisdom is justified by her children," murmured one puzzled papal official.

"Fools and children cannot lie," replied one of the happy parents, and as the certificates were all in order, the Pope's officials thought they had better believe than insist on further proof, although some of the new-born babes looked like "children of larger growth." Among them were triplets, consisting bf two boys and one girl. To the former were given the names Romulus and Remus, while the unconscious sister was honored by the appellation Roma. The baptism took place in the Church of St. Peter's.

It would be dangerous to try in Berlin benevolent experiments like that of the sovereign pontiff of Rome. For in the German capital a record has been established in every detail. Thus one healthy, active hausfrau had been filling her quiver so rapidly that, although still but forty-five years old, she has already twenty-eight olive branches around her table. Another, who is four years her junior, ushered twenty-three into the world, while three other women, between the ages of twenty and forty-three, presented their husbands with twenty-one descendants each. Two hundred and forty Berlin women are the mothers of from thirteen to 20 children apiece.

Protection for Mothers in-Law.

A dispatch from Rochester, N. Y., says: A society sensation, with political and fraternal entailments, was created in the police court when Judge Chadsey sentenced Frank L. Pearce, of the city engineer's staff, to serve six months in the penitentiary for abusing his mother-in-law, without the alternative of a fine, and emphasized the order by directing the immediate confinement of the prisoner before he could procure bail or file an appeal. It is the outgrowth of a family entanglement and the judge was aroused by the effort of the defendant to besmirch his wife's character as well as that of her family. A dramatic incident happened when the wife told of the abduction of her two children, and their concealment in Buffalo. The prisoner's father-in-law is David Ainsworth, a G. A. R. veteran, and an attache of the state comptroller's office and a literary man; also a member of the Union League club. Both the Pearces threaten to bring divorce action. Pearce is a university graduate.

Decryon.

Decryon is the name of a wonderful performing horse, in fact the only horse before the public that has ever attempted to perform the lollowing difficult feats while in harness and attached to a wagon. As the trainer and his beautiful horse appear with the opening of the music, Decryon stops and bows to the audience, with the different changes in the music he marches, goes lame, does the cake walk, walks on his knees, dances the Hooche-Kooche, rears and walks on his hind legs. Through all these difficult movements he keeps perfect time to the music, and closes by climbing to the top of a pedestal, where he poses motionless as a statue. This wonderful horse is to be one of the attractions at the Winnipeg fair.

Stock Shippers Claim C. P. R. Do Not Give Proper Attention in Transit.

A dispatch from Toronto says: A number of the stock shippers, who recently made shipments of cattle and horses over the Canadian Pacific railway have serious complaint to make regarding the treatment the stock received from that road. They were apparently shipping stock to the west. The following letter has been sent to the press by a number of shippers:

"We hereby warn those contemplating to ship via the Canadian Pacific that the aforesaid railway company is entirely unable to handle the freight. Cattle and horses are often knocked off their feet and against the sides of the cars by the force of collisions. Cars of stock, instead of being hurried through, are side-tracked for from 3 up to 10 and 12 hours and cattle have frequently died in the cars on account of this slow transportation and for lack of water."

The Toronto officials are assured from Winnipeg that conditions in all respects have improved very materially and that all classes of traffic are now being handled in a prompt and satisfactory manner.

Fireworks at the Fair.

The Winnipeg Fair will this year introduce a novelty in the line of fireworks displays which has never been attempted before on this side of the Atlantic ocean. Those responsible for the attractions at the fair have, after careful consideration, come to the conclusion that the military spectacles of the last four fairs, good and successful as they were, have to a certain extent lost the charm of novelty, which is of course one of the essentials for successful entertainments. With their characteristic enterprise they have therefore arranged to have an absolute novelty in the way of a fireworks spectacle at this year's fair.

The production which has been decided upon can best be described as a firework transformation spectacle, and, judging by its description, it should prove to be a great drawing card.

Mr. G. Von Palm, of New York, the well known designer of ballets and other spectacular shows, has been engaged to produce his latest work "Darkness and Dawn." Some idea of the labor necessary to produce such a spectacle can be gathered when it is stated that the dimensions of the scenery are as follows: Front display, 230 feet; depth, 75 feet, height, 26 feet. More than a hundred people are engaged in the spectacular part of the spectacle and the costumes used will be the most elaborate and expensive seen in connection with such productions. Over 60,000 yards of canvas is used in the scenery. Special machinery has been constructed to control the curtains some of which are 150 feet long and 26 feet high.

The seven scenes are entitled as follows:—

1. The Way to Darkness.
2. The Hall of Flames.
3. The Palace of Darkness.
4. The Flower Jungle.
5. The awakening of Nature.
6. The Awakening of the Waters.
7. The Queen of Dawn.

In the sixth scene a very novel and beautiful effect dance will be executed by six female dancers the whole being worked with entirely new electric effects.

The designers of this new spectacle assert that it will be the greatest success ever produced in the open air.

For Government Road.

The Toronto Globe correspondent at Ottawa says the report was current on June 23 that there was a strong feeling in inner official circles in favor of the government building a line from Quebec to Winnipeg and then leasing it to the Grand Trunk with provision for running rights to other companies desirous of an outlet from the west.

It was said that this policy was under discussion between the cabinet and the representatives of the Grand Trunk. Members of the government who were spoken to, however, would not confirm the report, nor in fact impart any information at all.

There is a diversity of opinion among the government's following as to what ought to be the proper policy to be pursued. The greatest number appear to favor to favor a guarantee of bonds up to a reasonable amount, the government taking as security a first lien on the line when built.

The council of the Board of Trade of Toronto has passed a resolution favoring the construction of a government railway from Quebec to Winnipeg.

CONSPIRATORS UNEASY.

Russia's Demand for Their Punishment Causes Panic at Belgrade.

Advices from Belgrade, Servia, say the position of the ministry is becoming more unenviable every day in consequence of the Russian and Austrian demands for the punishment of the assassins of King Alexander and Queen Draga. The terms of the Russian note almost caused a panic among the cabinet ministers, who are anxiously awaiting the arrival of King Peter to extract them from the dilemma. The war minister is the paramount power in the ministry as he is backed by the entire army, and he threatens severe resentment in the case of any hint by a member of the cabinet of the punishment of the conspirators. The promotions of officers sent from Geneva are variously explained as either intended as an open defiance or as being the result of alarm caused by the attitude of the army.

The foreign representatives who have not been instructed are asking their respective governments what attitude they shall assume at the reception of King Peter. The Russian minister is in a quandary. He had resumed relations with the provisional government when the Czar telegraphed his recognition of King Peter, but the minister takes the subsequent publication of Russia's demands for the punishment as an indication that Russia will possibly order the suspension of relations with the government until the murderers are punished. In the meanwhile the preparations for the reception of King Peter continue. A public holiday has been proclaimed. Provincial delegations are coming to Belgrade, free wine and beer are to be provided by the government, and the town is to be given up to rejoicings.

CHRISTIAN AMERICA!

Wilmington, Del., June 22.—A mob of a couple of thousand tonight broke into the county workhouse, bent on lynching George White, the negro, who is held on a charge of assaulting and killing Helen Bishop. The guards defended the place, and a boy and a man, were shot and slightly injured.

The negro was taken from the workhouse by the mob who started with him for Price's Corner, the scene of the assault and murder. The mob excitedly announced when they had possession of the negro that they would burn him to death at Price's Corner. There was quite a fusilade for a time between the mob and guards. Four members of the mob are said to have been shot, but in the confusion it is impossible to obtain names, except that it is known that Peter Smith, aged 17, was shot in the back. So far as is known not one of the guards was injured.

The negro was taken to the scene of the crime. He there confessed to having assaulted the girl. He was then burned to the stake and his body riddled with bullets.

Desperate Convicts.

A dispatch from Canon City, Col., says: One convict was shot and killed and another was fatally wounded by the guards at the state penitentiary on June 22. At eight o'clock a number of convicts overpowered the guards at the workhouse. On the way to the front gate the convicts captured Mrs. Cleghorn, wife of the warden, and placed her in front of them.... They dynamited the front gate and got outside, taking Mrs. Cleghorn with them.

The warden instructed the guards to pick the convicts off, taking care not to shoot his wife. When fifty yards from the prison Mrs. Cleghorn fainted and the convicts released her. In the fusilade from the guards Convict Kuykendall was instantly killed, and James Armstrong, the ringleader, was shot and will die. Tom Fisher was captured. Two other men are reported captured at some distance from the prison. Two others one wounded, stopped a wagon, cut the horses loose, mounted and escaped.

Emperor's Significant Statement.

A cable from Berlin says: The papers now print two speeches which Emperor William delivered at Doeberitz, near Berlin, on the occasion of the recent unveiling of a monument there to Frederick the Great. The speech was delivered to the officers in the barracks.

He lauded the army as a national institution. The generals, being the educators, are regarded with respect and confidence by soldiers and citizens. It was a magnificent school for the education of youth. In a national sense the army must have not only service regulations, tactics and strategy, but pride and joy in the service.

"Then," the Emperor added, "my army will ever remain the instrument that I need to support my policy when necessary."

His majesty concluded with quoting Frederick the Great's remark: "Where the pen alone no longer suffices, it must be supplemented by the keen edged sword."

Emerson's Best Bequest.

The best thing that Emerson has left us is his spirit, fine and high, stern and sweet. He took life in a royal way, and bore himself toward the eternal mysteries with serene courage and dauntless hope. His essays, which are his most characteristic work, have their chief value not as revelations of the moral order of life, not as discoveries of the final meaning of things, but as disclosures of his own spirit. There is in these essays an immense mass of truth, uttered in picturesque and memorable words. There is in them also an immense mass that is not true. The Emersonian hit and miss are upon every page, and side by side with a golden and perfect sentence one finds sonorous eccentricity. The origin of this strange compound of oracle and imposition in Emerson lies in the confessional character of his writing. He speaks from within, and his generalizations hit or miss according as his personal experience embodies a law of humanity or a mere idiosyncrasy. That Emerson speaks so often and so royally for man is his great distinction. That he speaks so frequently for the idiosyncratic, the isolated and vain is his chief fault. We have a right to hold him at his best, and through the richness and majesty of the confession we are brought face to face with the confessor. —Rev. George A. Gordon, D. D., in Atlantic.

Sea Serpents Breathe Air.

Like all other serpents, the sea serpents, though permanently inhabiting the sea, are air breathers. The lateral flattening of their tails greatly helps them to swim in any direction, and it specially enables them to rise rapidly to the surface of the water to breathe. That they may do this the more easily and securely their nostrils are placed at the very end of the muzzle and are furnished with valves, which secure them from being entered by the water in which they live.

Unlike other snakes, they cast their skins in small pieces. Their eyes are not adapted to see well out of water, and thus they cannot when in the air take a good aim to bite. They feed on small fishes, which they paralyze by means of their poison, and thus they have nothing to fear from the spines of the fishes they eat.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed for ever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

BABY'S WELFARE.

Every mother is anxious for the health and welfare of her little ones, and Baby's Own Tablets is the best medicine to make baby well and keep it well. Thousands of mothers keep the Tablets constantly in the house—they say they would not be without them. As proof of this Mrs. Geo. I think so highly of the Tablets that I always keep them in the house."

The Victoria Medal.

The Victoria medal is made out of bronze from Russian guns captured in the Crimean war. The design is the work of the prince consort of Queen Victoria. The medals are made separately and only when one is needed. Thus when some soldier or sailor, no matter what his rank may be, has shown "conspicuous bravery or devotion to the country in the presence of danger," as the act reads, the war office sends to the royal jewelers the bronze needed for the metal. It is carefully cast, filed smooth around the edges and then the design is brought out by chasing. The soldier's medal is suspended by a red ribbon and that of the sailor by a blue piece of silk.

TRIED AGAIN AND WAS CURED

A. Bailey, after Repeated Disappointments, used Dodd's Kidney Pills.

And now his Old Pain is Gone for Good and he Can do any Kind of Stooping or Lifting Work.

Winnipeg, Man., June 29.—(Special).—So many deaths are now charged to Kidney Disease and ailments resulting from disordered Kidneys that the cure of Mr. H. Bailey, of 256 Patrick street, of this city, is being widely discussed. Mr. Bailey says:

"Some time ago I suffered a lot with pains across my back and in the region of the Kidneys. I had spent considerable money in England treating this ailment, but got no permanent relief.

"All by chance I read of some wonderful cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills and though my previous failures made me hesitate I finally decided to try them. It was a fortunate thing for me that I did.

"After taking three boxes I found myself perfectly free from any pain whatever, and no matter what stooping or lifting work I do, I never have the old pain.

"It is now two years since I was cured, and I think in justice to Dodd's Kidney Pills, I have the right to recommend them to anyone suffering from Kidney Disease."

A PINCH OF SALT.

As Necessary in Our Daily Life as in Our Daily Food.

How could we get on without salt? In our daily food, as in our daily life, a little of it is necessary, and the absence of it takes away from the flavor of everything we eat. The "salt of life" which we hear about signifies the health, vigor and wit which we find in life. There was a time in countries far from the sea when primitive man never used salt in his food, and it was only when nations advanced in civilization that salt became an absolute necessity.

But it was not alone as food that salt was valued. Among the ancients a salt spring was regarded as a gift of the gods, and it was believed that any salt found in the soil lent it a peculiar sanctity and made it a place where prayers were most readily heard. Every meal that included salt had a certain sacred character, creating a bond of piety and friendship between host and guest; hence the expression, "There is salt between us," meaning friendship, and to be "untrue to salt" means to be disloyal or ungrateful.

In the middle ages, when all classes and degrees sat at the same board, they were placed according to rank, above or below the great saltcellar, which always stood in the middle and marked the dividing social line. "Above the salt" meant "of high degree." Below the salt were the yeomanry, serfs and vassals of the feudal days. A good description of this custom may be found in "Ivanhoe" where Cedric, the Saxon, entertains his vassals and friends.

A pinch of salt is always considered lucky in cooking. To take anything "with a pinch of salt" means to excuse or make allowances for it. A "salt" is a sailor. To salt one's conversation means to make it sparkle. Salt is always employed in a sense of benefit or strength.

The Bible has many references to salt, among them being "Ye are the salt of the earth," Matthew v, 13, and St. Paul says, "Let your speech be always with grace seasoned with salt."

Salt is used by Catholics in baptism. They consider it a symbol of wisdom and put a few grains in the mouth of the person baptized.

DON'T GET ANGRY.

Fire in the heart sends smoke in the head.—German Proverb.

An envious man waxes lean at the fatness of his neighbor.—Socrates.

One of the very best of all earthly possessions is self possession.—G. D. Prentice.

The fire you kindle for your enemy often burns yourself more than him.—Chinese Proverb.

The envious man pines in plenty, like Tantalus up to the chin in water and yet thirsty.—T. Adams.

An irritable man lies like a hedgehog rolled up the wrong way, tormenting himself with his own prickles.—E. P. Hood.

Lamentation is the only musician that always, like a screech owl, alights and sits on the roof of an angry man. —Plutarch.

A man can easily be intoxicated with anger as with wine; both produce a temporary insanity, and during the paroxysm he should be avoided as a madman.—J. Bartlett.

Night Air.

One of the bugbears of old time people is night air, and there is little exaggeration in saying that the superstition against night air has killed more people than the free circulation of it has ever injured. There is abundance of proof that night air is injurious to no one. On the contrary, people who sleep outdoors under the mere protection of a tent are the healthiest of all people, and the practice has largely gained in popularity of late years under wider knowledge of hygiene for people in delicate health to go in camping parties and breathe the balsam of the night air. The vigor gained from a few weeks of such an outing is a marked proof that the old prejudice against night air is as foolish as most other old wives' whims.—Exchange.

Talent and Vocation.

Each man has his own vocation. The talent is the call. There is one direction in which all space is open to him. He has faculties silently inviting him thither to endless exertion. He is like a ship in a river. He runs against obstructions on every side but one. On that side all obstruction is taken away, and he sweeps serenely over God's depths into an infinite sea. This talent and this call depend on his organization or the mode in which the general soul incarnates itself in him.—Emerson.

Young Men and Maidens.

Life would become intolerable if girls could not be on frank and uncoquettish terms with men of their own age or some years their seniors. The idea that because two young people may have a great deal in common they must also be in love is happily dying out. No one is hurt, no one is compromised, when a friendship does not lead to marriage.—John Oliver Hobbes in Pall Mall Magazine.

MORRISSEY

From The Despatch

The people who have occasion to travel on the Crow's Nest Southern, Ry. Morrissey divison, were pleased to welcome a new conductor on the line this week, Wm. Singleton, the former conductor having resigned. Arther Renard brakeman, has been appointed to the office.

J. Mcready lald information against T. Hewitt, of Elko, this week on a charge of horse stealing. It seems that a team belonging to Mcready strayed down to Elko and were locked up by Hewitt, who is a liveryman. When the former asked for the team Hewitt refused to give them up until Mcready paid $5, which he alleged was owing him. Hewitt was arrested and taken to Fernie.

There were three accidents at the mines tnis week, but only one of a serious nature. A horse got unmanagable in No. 4 mine and ran away knocking down one of the timbers. The heavy frame in falling struck a miner named Savage a terrible blow on the head, destroying one eye and leaving a bad wound. The injured man was taken to the Fernie hospital, but it is doubtful if he will recover.

The Miners' Union at Michel held a big picnic on July 1st at Michel prairie, and a good programme of sports was carried out without a hitch. The principal event was a baseball game between Sparwood and Michel, the latter winning by a good score. The only item of interest to the people of Morrissey was the hundred yard race in which Jack Nunn and F. J. Mitchell participated, Mitchell got first prize and Nunn second, the others who entered being strictly outclassed.

Joe Gaul, who kept the store across the creek got into trouble by selling liquor without a license. The case came off at Fernie, before Stipendiary Magistrate Forbes on Saturday night and was adjourned for a decision until Monday morning. The prosecution produced damaging evidence in the persons of two men who bought the liquor and drank it. The defence raised by Gaul was that he had given them cider with raisins in it. The magistrate found the accused guilty and imposed a fine of $100 which was paid. Gaul intends to apply for a license now. He evidently thinks he may as well have the game as the name.

Work has been proceeding rapidly during the past week on the water works system for the new town. Chas. A. Armstrong has charge of the work. He has over fifty men under him and is adding to the force every day. The work of digging the ditch for the main although it has only been going on for a couple of weeks, is completed and ready for the pipe for nearly a mile. Morrissey Mines will have a splendid water system. The ten inch main will be carried down from an elevation of about five hundred feet, thus giving ample force for good fire protection, and as the dam is situated fully a mile and a half above the mines the water is thoroughly pure. The pipes and other fittings for the system are already on the road and are expected to arrived in a day two

From 33 went to 28, 25 and 11, but they were evidently considered too far from the business portion. In block 16 all the lots facing Third street were sold at reasonable prices. The corner opposite the Windsor which was purchased by Newman & Orde, of Rossland, brought $510 and J. J. Murphy secured the corner opposite the Alexandria hotel for $550. The intervening lots which were sold for $450 each were secured by E. H. Bird, Thos Crahan, John Paskey, Kfowry Bros. and Newman & Orde.

A Small Investment in

MORRISSEY MINES.

Will be a Safeguard against Want in Old Age.

The Boston Herald said a few weeks ago of Arioch Wentworth, Boston's largest in dividual owner of real estate:

"Much of his pecuniary success—and he is believed to have paid the largest tax i Boston of any man who has built his own fortune from foundation to turret—was due to earl and fortunate investments in real estate. It would be more correct to call them shrewd an far-sighted investments rather than fortunate ones. Money is frequently made by fortunat investments of various kinds, but a great deal more by shrewdners, intelligence and confide faith in the future's developments. Mr. Wentworth's methods were of the latter kind, an he profited by them to the extent of millions. He believed in the great tuture of Bosto and lived to see his expectations realized in large measure.

The above is an example of the shrewd buyer of real estate. The same chances pr sent themselves here now, that were in Boston when Mr. Wentworth begun making his i vestments. The same chances are here now, that were in Pennsylvania and other coal mi ing sections fifty years ago.

Invest in real estate in any part of the Crow's Nest section, and it will make y wealthy. Write for particulars.

JULY 4TH IN FERNIE.

MICHEL WON AT FOOT-BALL AND LOST AT BASE-BALL.

Big Procession in the Evening. Magnificent Display of Fire Works.

Elaborate plans were made for celebrating the evening of July 4th in Fernie and to lengthen out the celebration the Michel foot-ball and base-ball teams were on hand to play the locals. The weather man behaved very decently in the afternoon and only in the tail end of the latter game did the rain interfere in any way. The grounds were properly roped off for the first time, giving better opportunities to both spectators and players.

The foot-ball game was an extremely close contest. During the first half no goals were scored though the home team were forced to concentrate their forces on the defence oftener than did the visitors. Towards the end of the second half in one of the Michel rushes a goal was scored. No more goals were scored and the victory went to the visitors, score 1—0. The home team was perhaps the strongest team that could be got together in Fernie, but they did not appear to play with their usual speed and accuracy. The visitors were much stronger than when here before, nearly all of their players are big sturdy fellows and there is no doubt that practice will still further improve the strength of the team.

The base-ball game which followed was a decisive victory for the home team thongh early in the game it looked as if the visitors would hold their own. The players in batting order were:

MICHEL—Corp, c; B. Wilson, l. f; Ferguson, c. f; Trinbath, p; Ausitn, 3rd b; W. Wilson, r. f; Burdett, s. s; J. Wilson, 2nd b; Rogers, 1st b.

The visitors secured a run in the first innings and succeeded in shutting Fernie out in their first two innings. The locals, however, were just getting warmed up and in their third innings they experienced no trouble in finding the ball, and securing seven runs. Trinbath and his supporters then lost heart and the game proceeded in a very one-sided manner to the finish, ending with a score of 15—3. The work of Peacock improved as the game proceeded and the the team gave him good support, the batting being their weakest point. The Michel team was stronger than when here on May 25th, and had the pitcher not got rattled the game would have been a good one.

The band was in attendance and a good gate receipt was taken in by the Athletic Association.

THE PROCESSION.

In the evening a big procession formed at the old recreation grounds. It was headed by the Marshall, Mr. Tonkin and several other horsemen followed by the band. Immediately behind were two floats draped with bunting and drawn by four horse teams. In the first were John Bull and Uncle Sam excellently represented in the popular and characteristic dress by W. O. Robbins and D. V. Mott, and in the latter were Miss Macdonald, representing Miss Canada, crowned with a wreath of maple leaves and holding aloft the Canadian and British flags, and Miss Mott, representing Miss Columbia, who wore a crown of Liberty and carried the stars and stripes. These were surrounded on lower seats by other ladies bearing flags of the two nations. Behind this were Margorie Tonkin and Marian Corsan in tne little pony cart looking very pretty in a maze of red, white and blue bunting. Then came the remainder of the procession on foot, armed with the stars and stripes interchersed here and there with the Union Jack. The procession first called at the United States' consul's office and took Mr. Pollock, the government representative, on board with John Bull and Uncle Sam. Then a round of all the American hotels and residences was made, the band at each stop playing favorite American airs.

Finally when darkness had settled over the town the procession returned to the starting place, the old recreation grounds, where elaborate plans had been made for a good fire-works display. For an hour or more the air was filled with bursting rockets and pretty varieties of fire-works. This part of the celebration cost over $200 and was contributed by private individuals. Unfortunately a heavy shower of rain fell during part of the time occupied with the fire-works, causing some discomfort to those who witnessed it all. Needless to say the small boys, and some large ones did not notice the rain. The band closed to the tune of "God Save the King."

THREE OF THE MOST PROSPEROUS CITIES OF CANADA.

At the last meeting of the Directors of The B. C. Permanent Loan and Savings Co., held on Tuesday, the 23rd ult., twenty loans were granted amounting to twenty-four thousand five hundred dollars. Almost all of these loans are in three of the most prosperous cities of Canada, Winnipeg, Vancouver and Sydney, thus covering the two extremes of the Dominion as well as the hub or centre of Canada.

Only five days previous to this meeting, the directors had granted loans amounting to eighteen thousand dollars. A large part of this money is to be used for the purpose of erecting new homes and is not only an evidence of the fact that Canada is growing faster than at any time in her history, but also the modern plans of The B. C. Permanent Loan and Savings Co. have give such satisfaction to those who have taken loans that the reputation of the company for fair dealing has spread far and wide, with the result that even though the company has an income of $600,000 per annum, of which about half a million dollars is available for new loans, still the officers of the company have to refuse a large number of good first mortgage loans for lack of sufficient funds to supply all those who would like to get their loan from this company.

At the present time it is advisable to note that the laws of British Columbia under which the B. C. Permanent is incorporated as well as the by-laws of the company, prevent the funds of the company being loaned on stock and bonds, and as a result the business of the company is confined to first mortgage securities on improved properties, repayable in monthly payments, thus continually improving the securities.

This company has been doing a loaning business in Fernie for over a year. F. J. Watson will be pleased to give full particulars as to their terms etc.

ACCIDENT AT MORRISSEY

A terrible accident took place on the steep incline leading to No. - mine on Tuesday afternoon of this week, in which Grant Howard Willson was instantly killed and George Grant received serious injuries. The men were engaged in conveying timbers up the hill to the mine by means of a steam hoist. They loaded the truck and bound the timbers on with a stout wire and then rode to the top on the pile. While on one of these trips the wire holding the logs together broke and one log rolled off in front of the truck throwing it off the track. The two men had no opportunity to save themselves, both being thrown under the timbers. Wilson was struck in the side by one and instantly killed and the other unfortunate man received several severe scalp wounds besides having his left arm terribly lacerated.

G. H. Willson, the young man killed, was a brother of Dr. Willson, of Morrissey Mines and a son of Capt. Willson, of Winnipeg. He has only been in town about a month having come here to spend his holidays, but during that time he has made many friends and the news of his trugic death has cast a gloom over the community.

The funeral service which took place from the residence of Dr. Willson, was conducted by Rev. Stoney and was largely attended. Messrs. H. Semlser, W. A. Bleasdell, W. Sinclair, R. Richardson, H. Simmons and Burgess acted as poll-bearers.

The body was taken to Winnipeg for interment.

POLICE COURT.

Edwin Cowan was sentenced in the police court yesterday to one week's imprisonment for assaulting Jas. Poirrier in a house in the old town. The evidence of the defence was of a sensational nature.

Wm. McDonald got one week for being drunk and disorderly. It was his second offense during the week.

Mike Warner pleaded guilty to a charge of being drunk and disorderly and got off with a light fine.

Still They Come.

It is rumored that Thomas Whalen, of Fernie, may be labor candidate for that district.—Cranbrook Herald.

A SOCIALIST MEETING.

J. H. Hawthornwaite M. P. P. Addresses a Fernie Audience.

Last evening a fairly large crowd gathered in Princess Hall to hear Mr. J. H. Hawthornwaite, M. P. P. for Nanaimo, deliver his address on Socialism.

The speech of the evening was preceded by some remarks by "Comrades" O'Brien and Neye, in which all political parties but the socialists were denounced as corrupt, and the working men were warned against uniting with any other party.

Mr. Hawthornwaite is a forceable and courteous speaker and however much his audience may have differed from him in the sentiments he expressed, none could take exception to the manner in which he delivered his speech. Mr. Hawthornwaite painted a very pessimistic picture of the condition of the laboring classes describing them as the "slaves of their masters," and using the labor troubles of the Crow's Nest to exemplify his meaning.

The speaker referred briefly to the corruption in the provincial legislature and and to his work in the house. He did not believe that party government would remedy matters, as both parties were corrupt. He predicted that the next legislature would contain 6 or 8 socialist members who would have the balance of power, and he urged those present to send such a member to represent Fernie. As soon as the socialists gained the reins of power everything else would be easy. They would by legal enactment retake the wealth from the capitalist, all would placed on a social equality, and the industries of the world would be run for the benefit of the people reducing the amount of labor by about five times.

Asked what was to become of the capitalist who by his brains and energy had helped to build up the industries of the world the speaker explained that they were to be "swept away." Another enquirer wanted to know more of the practical workings of the radical system, but the speaker signally failed to make this most vital point clear to the audience, as he could do nothing more than reiterate the theories he had already propounded.

Mr. Hawthornwaite expects to be in the district several times during the coming struggle.

LABOR CONVENTION AT MICHEL

Delegates from the three towns will meet to night to Discuss Politics

The convention of labor delegates which meets at Michel this evening is looked forward to by many of the advocates of the labor party as an important one out of which will come victory for their cause at the approaching election. Michel is now the stronghold for unionism for the district. It is entitled to 41 delegates, Fernie 20 and Morrissey 12, on the bases of one delegate to every 10 union men. Thus it will be seen that Michel can outnumber the combined strength of the other places.

This is the third convention that has been held. The first meeting was in charge of labor men and was known as a labor convention. At a subsequent meeting the socialists by some means, not clearly understood, managed to get control and changed the name of the organization to a socialistic one. The labor party is determined to be free from the dictation of the socialist party and one of the first steps taken at the meeting tonight will be to recover the old labor name.

It is more than probable that a labor candidate will be selected by the convention tonight. This candidate, whoever he may be, will not be a socialist. What the socialists will do is problematical. If their determination to "show their strength" and to "educate the masses" be strong enough it is not improbable that a candidate representing the straight socialist ticket will be brought out in opposition to the labor candidate.

The only socialist candidate in sight is C. M. O'Brien and he would secure very few votes beyond those of the few out-and-out supporters of the party. Among the labor party there are many who would like to secure the nomination, but probably the claims of Mr. McPherson, the president of the Michel Miners' Union and also president of the labor convention, are regarded more favorably than those of any other man yet mentioned.

Americans or other aliens who are members of unions are entitled to representation at this convention. Michel has a greater proportion of such non-voters than has Fernie or Morrissey and the relative strength of Michel as shown at the convention will be much greater than will be its labor vote when compared with the labor vote of Fernie and Morrissey.

BOUNDARY PAPERS REBUKED

The Nelson News has taken up the cudgels of warfare against the unscrupulous attacks made by certain Boundary papers regarding the condition of labor in this section of the Crow's Nest Pass. Editorially it says: "Statements have appeared from time to time recently, since the settlement of the strike at the C. N. P. C. Company's mines, in certain Boundary newspapers that further trouble was anticipated there. The immediate effect of these statements is to make it very difficult for the company to secure the extra help the development of the mines makes requisite. Men will not come into a camp where they have reason to believe that a strike may at any moment be projected. The difficulty in securing adequate labor prevents vigorous prosecution of the work of development, with the result that the company's efforts to meet the growing demands for coal and coke are in a measure handicapped. There appears to be no warrant for the rumors concerning possible troubles. J. H. Tonkin, general manager of the company, states that since the settlement he has not been approached by a single grievance committee. Work is being carried on harmoniously and the best of feeling prevails. Under the agreement entered into at the time of the settlement of the last strike certain conditions, binding upon each party, were defined. So long as these conditions are adhered to there should be no occasion for trouble, and in the event of a breach of the conditions by either party a basis of arbitration was arranged for. The chief advantage of the settlement arrived at upon that occasion was the assurance of a long period of continuous operation at the colliery without fear of labor difficulties. This is something the whole province is interested in seeing maintained. Nothing could work more injuriously to the welfare of the chief industry of the Kootenays just now than a cessation of operations at the Crow's Nest collieries. When things are working smoothly no useful purpose can be served by creating an impression on the outside that any moment the fuel supply of the smelters may be cut off. Reports from Grand Forks indicate that the coke supply fo the smelters is now adequate, and this is a condition of affairs we all want to see prevail permanently.

COAL CREEK MINES.

A night school is being established next week for the benefit of all.

The people of our burg are appreciating a few fine days.

Mr. Jamieson, second year man of Toronto university, has been taking orders for stereoptican views among us.

Dr. Harvie has returned from a short trip to Cranbrook where he has been renewing old acquaintances.

Mr. James Lightley has received the appointment of check-weighman for the miners. The appointment meets with general approval.

Mrs. Palmer who has been suffering lately from blood poisoning in her hand is slowly improving.

We are sorry to report that Mrs King has not been quite so well as usual. We hope her usual health may return.

Coal Creek Mines can now boast of having one of the finest brass bands in this section of the country. Some of them are medalists. Why not let us enjoy a little more of their music these fine evenings.

The Company are still busy on their new houses. Some of them are nearing completion and from all accounts will not be long without occupants on account of location. Mr. McInnis our painter is kept quite busy putting on finishing touches.

J. A. Maclean and H. A. Senkbeil were over to Calgary this week and returned this morning.

The voters' list is growing larger and larger. Last evening the list on th court house door showed 364 names. The list has now been open over three weeks and there are only five more weeks before the time for registration expires, so that it will be seen that the names must come in faster than they have in order to secure the minimum estimate of 1000 names for the district. A gentleman well acquainted with the Fernie district has placed the number of eligible voters at 1500.

The boys got up another horse race last evening which created no little interest. Neil Dunlap won the 1st and 3rd heats. Fred Eschwig who rode Joe Deslauriers' pony won first in the 2nd heat. Two other ponies were in the race.

Chas. Spence met with a painful accident at the recreation grounds on July 4th. A large fire-cracker exploded in his hand injuring a finger so badly that the nail had to be removed. He was also burnt on the side of the face but fortunately his eyes escaped injury.

All druggists and dealers will refund your money if you are not satisfied after using Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. It is everywhere admitted to be the most successful remedy in use for bowel complaints and the only one that never fails. It is pleasant safe and reliable.

The socialists are scarcely consistent in announcing the speaker for last evening in their bills about town as the "Honorable" J. H. Hawthornwaite. The principle of socialism as laid down by local exponents of this radical creed are based upon social equality, there being no title or personal distinctions of any sort recognized. Yet how much more inconsistent is it to tack on titles that are not even recognized under our present system of government!

His Last Hope Realized.

[From the Sentinel, Gebo, Mont.]

In the first opening of of Oklahoma to settlers in 1889, the editor of this paper was among the many seekers after fortune who made the big race one fine day in April. During his traveling about and afterwards his camping upon his claim, he encountered much bad water which, together with the severe heat, gave him a very severe diarrhoea which it seemed almost impossible to check, and along in June the case became so bad he expected to die. One day one of his neighbors brought him one small bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy as a last hope. A big dose was given him while he was rolling about on the ground in great agony, and in a few minutes the dose was repeaed. The good effect of the medicine was soon noticed and within an hour the patient was taking his first sound sleep for a fortnight. That one little bottle worked a complete cure and he cannot help but feel grateful. The season for bowel disorders being at hand suggests this item. For sale by all Druggists and Dealers.

WYOMING DISASTER

FIRE DAMP IN A COAL MINE.

Of Two Hundred Miners Imprisoned, One Hundred and Sixty Four Lost Their Lives—A Noble Negro Hero Rescues Many.

A dispatch from Hanna, Wyoming, says: Probably the worst disaster in the history of Wyoming occurred here on June 30, when a terrific explosion of fire damp in Union Pacific mine No. 1 shut off the means of escape of 200 men, who were working in the pit.

It has been decided that the explosion was caused by black damp which gathered in a small alley of the seventeenth level where the circulation became defective from some unknown cause. A miner went in with his lamp, not knowing about the existence of the deadly gas, and ignited the explosive.

Probably no trace of the miner will ever be found for he was surely blown to atoms.

William Christian, colored, is the hero of the calamity. He was unconscious when brought to the surface. He could have made his way out himself had he not remained behind to assist his unfortunate companions. He was breaking down coal in a small chamber off the entry when the explosion occurred. He was knocked down by the concussion but was dazed. The mine was filled with a sheet of flame for a minute. He ran to the slope and saw scores of miners lying on the floor, many writhing in the agony of the death struggle, while others had been killed outright.

Christian rushed down the slope toward the rear shaft, but soon the gas burned out and the mine was in inky darkness. He groped about, falling over the prostrate forms scattered about the slope. Some of these raised up as he passed. They were able to walk, and the plucky miner urged them to follow him. A few did this, and he carried several to places of safety from which they were later removed to the surface by the relief party.

He is not certain how many men he saved in this manner, but he believes he carried out at least a dozen. Some of the rescued miners say he did even better than this. He spent the night in the care of a physician, but the next day day the force of miners and others engaged in removing the debris from the workings.

In some instances the entire male membership of families is among the victims of the disaster. James Wilds, father, and Jube Wilds and James Wilds, jr., sons, were working together near the seventeenth level. Oscar Oelf and Jacob Jacobson, brothers, and the sole support of a widow and two little sisters, were killed below the twenty-first level. Tom Davis one of the dead men, was one of the best known miners in Wyoming. He had charge of the electric hoists and was caught below the seventeenth level.

Of the 167, fully two-thirds were married and leave large families. The several nationalities were represented as follows: Finlanders, 12; colored, 25; Americans, 15; Irish 5; Swedes, 6; Italians, 16; Austrians, 1; Prussians, 1.

TROUBLES IN SERVIA.

Radical Party Demand an Immediate Dissolution of the Chamber.

The London Times correspondent telegraphs to his paper that the Servian Shupshtina has demanded that the new government should present itself to the chamber, but the government declined to do so on the ground that the ministry was the same as that previously approved by the skupshtina. The Independent radicals demand a dissolution and an immediate general election. The situation concludes the correspondent, is not clear, and King Peter's troubles have apparently begun.

Belgrade, June 30.—At the meeting of the Shupshtina to-day Premier Avakumovics read a ukase closing the session specially summoned by the provincial government June 11.

After reading the ukase, the premier thanked the Skupshtina on behalf of the government for the election of King Peter, and added that the government had concluded that it was better to postpone all legislation until the new Skupshtina was elected. The premier pledged the government to see that the elections were carried out with perfect freedom, so that the result may truly represent public opinion. The elections are expected to take place in the middle of September, and will doubtless result in a considerable increase in the number of extreme radicals in the house. The king has already promised that the new cabinet shall be composed in accordance with the results of the elections.

TURKEY AND BULGARIA.

The Belgrade correspondent of The Times says that Petroff, the Bulgarian premier, has given an interview, in which he declared that the Sultan of Turkey and the Bulgarian government were both opposed to war, but the situation was worse than at any time since the delivery of the Turkish note last spring. Though most of the prisoners at Salonica had been released, 400 fresh arrests have been made, and 3,000 refugees have arrived at Adrianople. The aim of the Turks, the premier is reported as saying, is the deliberate extermination of the Bulgarians in Macedonia by methods scarcely short of massacre, and the high officials of Turkey are promoting the war movement.

M. Petroff anticipates a war and expresses contempt for the Turkish army, which, he says, cannot mobilize inside of two months, whereas Bulgaria can mobilize an army of 250,000 well armed men very quickly. It is possible, he thinks, that the sultan, in order to avert a war, may make concessions, but unless he does so a catastrophe is imminent.

ANOTHER SEA SERPENT

With the Warm Weather Comes a Report of the Monster of the Sea.

Southampton, Ont., June 30.—On Sunday some persons were walking along the beach, a short distance from here, when their attention was attracted to a monster of the deep, which was plainly to be seen, near the shore, twisting and squirming and again passing swiftly along the glassy surface of the lake. The story is vouched for by responsible persons, who say the reptile is at least forty feet in length.

The sea serpent seems to be taken more seriously by some zoologists than by the general public. A few years ago a Dutch naturalist reviewed the evidence of alleged eye-witnesses and concluded that such an animal may exist, that instead of being a serpent it is probably a mammal of the order of Pinnipeds, which includes the seals, and that we may expect to find it about 250 feet long. It must resemble the ancient Plesiosauri, with a small head, very long neck, spindle-shaped body, with two pairs of flippers and a tail comprising half its total length. Later reports, with the fact that so large a mammal as the Okapi has remained unknown on land until the twentieth century, causes a leading French naturalist, M. Racovitza, to express his belief in this hypothetical marine monster.

Man Works Better Without Alcohol.

Berlin, July 1.—In answer to an inquiry by the German Temperance society, Count Huelsen-Haesler, the most popular of the retired German generals, and a supposed total abstainer, has written as follows: "During twenty-five years I drank neither beer nor wine and never took spirits except on rarest occasions. On the emperor's birthday I took a small quantity of champagne.

In 1878, after a serious lung affection the physicians advised me to take two glasses of wine a day. I soon recovered and no one is better now than I. I am convinced that a man works better without alcohol. Spirits are the worst and beer is almost as bad because it causes fatigue and creates a thirst. For the soldier water, coffee and tea are the best."

MARKET REVIEW

(Compiled from The Commercial)

With the beginning of this week too much rain fell in the south where winter wheat was harvesting, and reports of lack of rain began to come in from the Northwest, where it was needed. The influence of these caused shorts to cover freely, and very soon it became evident that the wheat market, which previously had depended on the course of the corn market, had begun to act independently and on its own merits. The speculative situation was soon found to be in a condition to advance sharply on Monday. The advance in these markets on the week has been 5c to 6c per bushel, and since the beginning of June the change in quotations shows advances of from 7c. to 9c. per bushel. It is now the general opinion that the situation in world's breadstuffs trade, as comprised in available stocks, prospects of growing supplies and the probable quantities required for consumption during the coming twelve months, warrant a higher average range of value than during the last ywo years. It is now a question, however, whether the market has not attained a high enough figure for the present. Speculative excitement has the faculty of carrying the price too high at one time, as speculative depression carries it too low at another, and there are always some people who will buy at the top of the market, as well as others who will sell at the bottom. The drought reports, so far as Manitoba and the Northwest are concerned, are exaggerated. There has been some lack of rain, especially in the eastern part of the Manitoba, in the Red River Valley, but there has not yet been such drought as to cause alarm. The crops had a splendid start, and have never been long without some rain, and the weather has never been hot, the highest temperature that has been this year was on Thursday, and that was only 87 degrees in the shade. There are to-day hundreds of thousands of acres of wheat of fine growth, which only need a few good showers between now and harvest to give large yields of the finest wheat. The movement of wheat in the States is moderate, but exports are fair. Harvesting is now proceeding rapidly in the south and central winter wheat belt. The yield in the southern parts of Missouri, Indiana and Illinois is very poor, but in Texas, Oklohoma, etc., it is excellent, and with favorable weather the movement of new wheat will become free by the middle of July. European crops are progressing amid generally favorable weather, and tend in some measure toward improvement over previous estimates. India will probably export very heavily during the next four months, as she has harvested a record crop. Seedtime in the Argentine began early this month and a larger acreage under wheat is expected. Australia has had fine rains and a good crop is in prospect there.

Infant Geniuses.

When he was but a schoolboy in the Jesuits' college at Dijon Jacques Bossuet was known as one of the best classical scholars in Europe.

At eight Louis de Bourbon, prince of Conde, was a perfect Latin scholar. Three years later he published a work on rhetoric, and at seventeen he was appointed governor of Burgundy.

Fenelon displayed so much precocity that he won fame as a preacher of rare eloquence when he was but fifteen years of age. Pascal wrote treatises on acoustics at twelve, at which age he was busily occupied in constructing elaborate circulating machines, and at sixteen he published his treatise on "Conic Sections," which Descartes refused to believe was not the work of a great master.

John Stuart Mill was studying Greek at three, had practically mastered the language at seven and a year later was acting as schoolmaster to his younger brothers and sisters. John Ruskin actually produced a manuscript work in three volumes before he reached his seventh birthday.

There is a great deal in arranging flowers to bring out their beauty. Never crowd them. A few stems, with foliage, can be made far more beautiful and artistic than a crowded mass.

A BAD RECORD.

British Soldier Under Sentence of Death for Murder has a Dark Record.

The New York Herald had the following in a dispatch from London on June 30, on the career in Canada of Samuel Herbert Dougal, who is under sentence of death for the murder of Miss Camille Cecil Holland, with whom he lived at Moat House, Safron-Walden, Essex county, Eng.:

Dougal was born in London, 1846. He received a good education, but enlisted in the army when twenty. In fourteen years' service he reached the grade of quarter master sergeant. Up to 1877 his service was all put in at Chatham, but that year he was transferred to Halifax, Nova Scotia. When he landed at Halifax he had two children. He married in 1869. In 1885, the first Mrs. Dougal became suddenly ill, and died within two months under circumstances now considered suspicious.

Dougal was married a second time to a Canadian girl, who died within a year. Both wives were interred in the military barrack place at Halifax. Soon after another woman appeared on the scene, the daughter of a Canadian farmer, whom Dougal brought to England. She lived with him at Aldershot and London, but in consequence of ill-treatment she left him, going back to Halifax with a child and representing herself as a widow.

In 1892 Dougal married for the third time in Dublin, and again, owthis time to her husband's immoral conduct, his wife left him. Two, if not three, mesalliances, in which the women concerned were relatively well supplied with this world's goods, are accorded in this stage of Dougal's career. Being tried for arson was another episode of this period, Dougal having been accused of setting fire to an inn in Hertfordshire which he had induced one of his inamoratas to take and which he had insured heavily.

He was acquitted and similarly escaped paying the penalty of the law for abstracting cheques from the cheque-book belonging to Lord Wolseley who was then, in 1895, commander-in-chief in Ireland, and for forging that officer's name. He was, however, convicted on another similar charge and served a year's sentence.

At the beginning of his term of imprisonment he attempted to commit suicide. He was released at the end of January, 1897, and in 1898 came the opening of the last scene in his amazing career.

Throughout the inquest and the subsequent trial Dougal showed absolute coolness and self-possession. He had been spoken of as a pleasant, witty companion, with considerable native talent, and a good deal of miscellaneous reading. He was a clever engineer and could turn his hand to anything. A craze for feminine society seems to have been the keynote of his character. One paper calculated he had no less than 31 children in addition to those legally bearing his name.

In appearance Dougal is a man of intelligent features with a full beard and whiskers sedulously trimmed, and somewhat thin hair, carefully parted in the centre. He was a good shot and an enthusiastic patron of athletic sports.

An Old Can Exploded.

A dispatch from Grand Forks, N. D., says: Floyd Gile, Floyd Lures, and Ray Soby, aged about 10 years each, were frightfully injured at Crary on June 29 by an explosion of powder, and it is feared that each of them will lose his eyesight.

The little folks in some way got hold of some shells from which the shot had been extracted, and opening them up poured the powder into an old can. While each one of them hovered over the top of the can the powder was touched off. The boys were thrown some distance in the air by the force of the explosion and their faces and hands terribly lacerated. The children will probably recover, but it is feared that their eyesight has been destroyed. Their faces are so badly filled with powder that this cannot be determined now.

The Three Livingstones.

The Three Livingstones are three talented and clever acrobats, two ladies and a gentleman, who do a high class act in ball-room costume. There are many classes of acrobats now before the public performing acts of more or less merit, but the work of the Livingstones, which has received high enconiums wherever shown, will stand comparison with any that have been seen here. Their somersaults from shoulder to shoulder and the many novelties which go to make up the act are well and cleanly done and always secure their fair meed of applause. The Livingstones are to appear at the Winnipeg Fair, July 20-25.

Canal Through Scotland.

Advices from London say: One of the greatest engineering schemes ever projected in this country has grown out of the selection by the admiralty as a naval base of St. Margaret's Hope in the Firth of Forth. A famous firm of Edinburgh engineers has received instructions to make a survey and prepare plans for a canal between the Forth and the Clyde through which the largest vessel afloat may safely pass. A syndicate of responsible London financiers is at the back of the plan for which, as a great canal directly connecting the new naval base with the Clyde would be of the greatest strategic importance, it is expected government support will be readily obtained.

PLANTERS GUILTY

CONVICTED OF ENSLAVING MANY NEGROES.

One of the Wealthiest Planters in Alabama Sentenced to Five Years in Prison—Heavy Fines Imposed Upon Three Other Offenders.

A dispatch from Montgomery, Ala., says: J. W. Pace, a planter of Tallapoosa county, Ala., has been found guilty of holding negroes in involuntary servitude and sentenced to five years in prison. Mr. Pace was under eleven indictments and was found guilty under each indictment, but as he was sentenced to serve his punishments in all cases concurrently he will only suffer the single five-year penalty. This concession was made because of the advanced age of the defendant and his feeble condition, it being represented that he might die before he reached prison. When the cases were called demurrers were filed in all of the cases and overruled. The defendant then pleaded guilty in all of the eleven cases. An appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans, La., to make a test case was filed upon giving bond in the sum of $5,000 in one of these cases. He was released from custody in the others.

Pace was charged with holding in peonage the following negroes:—Jno. Davis, Charles Williams, Doc Crenshaw, Pat Hill, Ed. Moody, Jim Caldwell, Rina Scott, Otis Myers, Owens Green and Ephraim Pope. It is said that the negroes were treated cruelly at Pace's farm, many being brutally whipped. It is said that Owens Green, a negro, was whipped so severely that many bones in his body were broken, and that his power of speech was interfered with. When Mr. Pace made his statement to the judge he acknowledged that he was guilty. He said: "I plead guilty to the offences and would live your honor to be merciful." The judge then asked him if he had anything to say why sentence should not be passed upon him, and he replied in the negative. The judge then sentenced him

The pleading guilty of Mr. Pace practically means that the others indicted will more than likely do the same, as he was considered the principal defendant. After Mr. Pace made bond he left immediately for his home at Dadeville, Ala. The conspiracy cases against him were continued until the next term of the court.

Macon, Ga., June 24.—In the United States court to-day Judge Speer imposed a fine of $100 each on three young men, William Shy, Arthur Clawson and Robert Turner, for holding a negro in involuntary servitude. The offence was that the young men, who are farmers, caught a negro who had gotten in debt to them, gave him a whipping and made him go to work for them. Judge Speer said that the problem of the times could not be solved by harsh measures, and wanted it distinctly understood that the laws of Georgia were against such treatment.

HOT GAME OF BALL.

Negroes Fire Rival Guns in Their Excitement at a Baseball Game.

A dispatch from Quitman, Ga., of June 29, says: As the result of a ball game near here between nines composed of negroes from rival plantations, Sam Johnson, one of the players, is dead and Umpire Dick Edmonson is seriously wounded.

There has been great rivalry between the negroes employed on the Spain and Griffith plantations, and trouble was anticipated when the game began. In the 9th innings, with the score a tie, Sam Johnson, a Spanish negro, started to steal second. The man at the bat interfered with the catcher, and the steal seemed easy for Johnson, when he was shot by an anti-Spain rooter among the spectators. The umpire insisted that a man take Johnson's place, and this decision so enraged the Griffith rooters that the umpire was shot and the game was broken up. Johnson died soon after being shot. Officers have made no arrests as the negroes refuse to inform.

Advices from Medina, Pa., say that six persons have been shot and severely wounded on a trolley car between Medina and Chester. A negro, believed to have been seeking revenge because the conductor of the car recently ejected him, discharged both barrels of a shotgun at the car as it passed a lonely spot in the country. The car was crowded. Four women were among the wounded. The negro made his escape.

Mr. Justice a Beckett, of the Melbourne Court, has helivered an important decision in a case on which he had reserved judgment. The decision is one nullifying the marriage of a man with his deceased wife's niece. The judge said that while in Australia the law allowed marriage with a deceased wife's sister, no provision had been made—probably through an oversight—for the more distant union of a man with his wife's niece.

A rain of mud recently fell in Giardini, Italy, which dried up the plants and destroyed the crops. Geologists explain this curious downpour as being of volcanic source, brought from Africa by the winds. Other savants say it is a meteoric phenomenon and and the mud comes from other planets.

A BRUTAL CRIME.

Gideon Butts, of Prince Edward County, Slays His Wife.

A dispatch from Napanee, Ont., says: Saturday morning a shocking murder was committed at Cloye village, 15 miles from Kaladar, and 50 from Napanee. The perpetrator is Gideon Butts, a laborer, and the victim was his wife.

Butts pounded his wife's brains out with a stone, and when he had committed the awful deed, he went to Constable Cuddy's house, about half a mile away saying: "Come and see the devil I have slain." The constable was horrified to find the remains of the poor woman almost unrecognizable. The man was taken before Police Magistrate Carscallen, of North Brook, who committed him to Napanee jail. An inquest was not deemed necessary.

The man is without doubt insane, and says the Lord commanded him to slay the devil. Butts is of English origin and has been married about 18 years. He has lived in Prince Edward county. The day before he committed the deed neighbors proposed taking him to the asylum, but his wife would not hear of his being arrested and stated that he was perfectly harmless.

FROM YANKEELAND.

Doings in the "Land of the Free and the Home of the Brave!"

Three negroes, Garfield McCoy, Geo. McKinney and Jas. Wiley were taken from jail at Newton, Baker county, Georgia, on June 26 and lynched. The three men were in jail for killing F. S. Bullard, a white man, who was called in to quell a row at a negro dance near his home one night last week. The negroes were taken a mile from town, hung to a tree and riddled with bullets.

HANGED TO A PORCH.

A mob of 50 masked men hanged Jack Harris, a negro, to the porch of a building in the suburbs of Clarendon, Ark., on June 26. Harris assaulted and seriously injured John Coburn, a white farmer. The mob forcibly took him from the custody of the sheriff.

WOMAN PEACEMAKER SLAIN.

Brooksville, Fla., June 27.—W. B. Hunter and Mrs. Cephas Eiland were killed and Cephas Eiland badly wounded in a shooting affray at Spring Lake. Eiland and Hunter were brothers-in-law, but not on good terms. Mrs. Eiland sprang between the two while they were shooting and was instantly killed in the presence of her three little children. After emptying his pistol Hunter ran a short distance, fell and died. Eiland is dangerously wounded.

RACE WAR PREDICTED.

Judge J. C. Perkins, the only colored justice of the peace in the north west, predicts that a race war will follow the lynchings which are going on throughout the United States.

Judge Perkins, is arranging to call a meeting of the colored residents of LaCrosse, Wis. He declares that the first uprising of negroes will be in the north and not in the south, this because of education of the northern colored people.

JUDGE FEARS FOR HIS LIFE.

A dispatch from Jackson, Ky., says: "Judge Cardwell, who presides over the city court here and who fined the two men brought before him on the charge of firing Captain Ewen's hotel, has received notice of a threat of assassination and has taken up his residence in his store. He will be guarded by the militia.

Fireworks at Winnipeg Fair.

The fireworks this year to be provided by the T. W. Hand Firework Company of Hamilton, and which are to be given in conjunction with the great spectacular display "From Darkness to Dawn," will surpass anything that has yet been seen in Winnipeg in the way of pyrotechnic displays. There will be no delay between the conclusion of the spectacle and the commencement of the fireworks which will no doubt be appreciated by the spectators. The programme which has been supplied by the pyrotechnists contains many novelties, among which is a beautiful set piece entitled "The Pride of the Prairie," and which shows an immense bull on a pedestal surrounded by sheaves of wheat. Other novel effects are known as "Firework Jugglery," "Purse of Fortunatus Shells" throwing forth showers of gold and diamonds; a wonderful device called "The Forest of Gold," which is a most elaborate creation with six mammoth golden trees alternated with trees of minor size, the whole thing being connected by a solid hedge of gold. The size of this set piece is 100 by 30 feet. Another beautiful display will be "The Oriental Canopy," the latest invention in fireworks. The "Silverado Star" is another novelty and shell displays, wheels of gigantic size, rockets and bombs will combine to form a most magnificent display.

Drowned at Regina.

While swimming in the reservoir at Regina on Saturday morning William Traynor, a high school student, took cramps and was drowned. It appears that he and another student, named Weir, swam across, and Traynor was swimming back and had reached within fifty feet of the shore when he took cramps and went down. Noticing this Weir at once swam across and notified the jail authorities. The police were communicated with and a search was at once made for the body.

Traynor was about 21 years old.

Success does not consist in never making blunders, but in never making the same one a second time.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result, improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman, of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate and, guaged by the opinions of scientists, the wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

THE TIBER'S TREASURES.

Those Which Have Been Found Lend Interest to a Dredging Scheme.

If we may judge by the past, the forthcoming dredging of the Tiber ought to yield some remarkable "finds." A long time ago it was proposed to divert the stream of the river above Rome, so that excavations might be made in the mud and slime, and also in the solid earth that underlies the present channel. That idea was abandoned as too elaborate and expensive, but in 1877 an effort was made to give to the stream a uniform depth of nine feet. The dredging involved in this hardly penetrated more than three feet below the bottom. It did not touch the lower strata. Nevertheless an enormous number of antiques were disinterred. Few of those dated back to classical times. Coins were discovered at the rate of 14,000 per annum, but nearly all belong to the last two centuries. Some thousands of weapons were also recovered, the witnesses to the revolutions and political outbreaks of the last few hundred years. The revolt of 1831 and the Napoleonic wars supplied the majority of them.

On only two occasions has the Tiber been pierced to a depth of over 30 feet—once in constructing the Ponte Garibaldi, and once in repairing the Ponte Sisto. The excavations made at these times were confined to a very small area, but they brought to light an enormous mass of archaeological material. The treasures comprised coins, medals, sculptures, bronzes, brass work, inscribed stones and gems, specimens of pottery, and also marbles. Among the last was a fine statue in perfect condition except for the loss of its arm. None of these objects had suffered much from their entombment, which varied from 1,500 to 1,800 years. Iron alone is rusted and finally eaten away by the action of water, its effect on marble being mainly to impart a deep reddish-brown tinge. Otherwise Father Tiber is a first-rate curator. He dealt gently with the treasures committed to his care, washing away the lighter ones, no doubt, but, so it is supposed, not moving the heavier objects, such as marbles and statuary, more than fourteen or fifteen yards in a century. A systematic dredging may easily bear out all the tales that have been told in Rome about the Middle Ages of the fabulous wealth that has been cast into his yellow waters.—London Chronicle.

Heckling Public Speakers.

John Morley tells with amusement of a heckling of his own. When he went to contest Montrose Burghs in 1895 he found that the electors had been well supplied with his volume on "Compromise." At almost his first meeting a dour Scot rose to ask, "Am I to understand that the candidate is the author of a book on Compromise?"

Mr. Morley confessed that the poor thing was his own.

"Then what I want to know," continued his interrogator, "is how you reconcile that book with going up and down the country calling yourself Honest John!"

That situation must have been somewhat embarrassing to the candidate, but extrication from it was simplicity itself compared with the plight of a man of whom Abraham Hayward tells. Falkirk Burghs was the seat contested, and the following is the record of questions and answers:

"Will Mr. Merry vote for alterations of the Decalogue?"

Merry (aside to treacherous friend)—"What the ——'s that?"

Friend—"Flogging in the army."

Merry—"I beg to say, if elected, I will vote, and, indeed, I will move, for its total and immediate abolition!"

Good Calf Care.

The calf should be cleaned at once after the birth by careful rubbing with dry cloth or dry straw, as the calf respires only through the skin.

The calf should be protected against dampness and draft. It should have the milk in small portions and as often as the cows are milked, as only then we get the full benefit of the milk.

New milk should be fed exclusively the first fourteen to twenty days. The calf should have part new, part skim, milk from about the twentieth to the fiftieth day. Feed skim milk or other similar liquid food till at least three months old and after that as long as can be afforded.

Give the milk at blood heat, but this should, new as well as skim, be first heated to 176 degrees. The calf should have oatmeal gruel and good fine hay at the time when feeding skim milk commences.

Use clean pails. Uncleanliness may cause deathly sickness. The calf should be made to drink the milk slowly in order not to disturb the digestion.

Joe Jefferson's Cheque.

A good old story is told of Joseph Jefferson's attempt to cash a cheque in a Chicago bank several years ago. The teller did not know him, never having seen him save on the stage in "Rip Van Winkle," and when the famous actor came face to face with one of his greatest admirers the latter refused to believe the evidence of his own eyes, and demanded that Mr. Jefferson got some one to identify him. The latter was somewhat nonplussed that his face was unknown to even the teller of a bank, but before turning from the window to get the necessary identification, said, in those inimitable and world renowned accents "If my dog Schneider vas here he would know me, dot's so." The teller laughed with delight, and paid the cheque without further question. Nobody but Joe Jefferson could have said it that way.

Origin of Ox Tail Soup.

Ox tail soup, now regarded as a national English dish, was first made by the very poor Huguenot refugees from France after the revocation of the edict of Nantes, because ox tails then had no market value.

CURED HIS BRIGHT'S DISEASE

Former President of Bricklayer's Union used Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Andrew McCormick, of Toronto, Tells of a Cure for the most dreaded of all Diseases.

Toronto, July 6.—(Special)—In these days when the dreaded Bright's Disease seems to be selecting its victims at will the report of an authenticated cure is received with relief by all classes of the community. And such a report comes from Andrew McCormick, of 243 Spadina avenue, this city

That Mr. McCormick is well-known and highly respected, is evidenced by the fact that he has held high offices in several fraternal societies, and was for several years President of the Bricklayers' union. Interviewed regarding the cure, Mr. McCormick says:

"I suffered with an attack of Bright's Disease and naturally was much troubled concerning it. I heard of the wonderful cures effected by Dodd's Kidney Pills and concluded to try them. The result was so satisfactory that it gives me pleasure to recommend them."

Make and keep the Kidneys sound by using Dodd's Kidney Pills and there can be no Bright's Disease.

AFTER OTHER HELP FAILED

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Restore a Young Lady to Full Health and Strength.

Doctors and nurses recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills because they have seen their wonderful power to make new, rich, red blood, and to cure all diseases due to poor blood or weak nerves. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are not a common medicine. They do not purge and weaken. They contain no poisonous drugs. They are safe, sure, simple, stimulating and scientific. That is why these pills should be taken by all who are weak, bloodless, nerveless and sickly. Here is a bit of very positive proof of the wonderful power to conquer disease which Dr. Williams' Pink Pills possess: Miss Esther E. Lewis, Lynn, N.S., says:—"At the age of sixteen my health failed me completely. At that time I was attacked by la grippe, which was followed by measles, from the after effects of which I was left in a deplorable condition. I became very pale, suffered from headaches, dizziness, want of appetite. I tried several medicines, but they did me no good; on the contrary I was growing weaker and finally became so bad that I would take spells of unconsciousness lasting from fifteen minutes to an hour at a time, and I had become so weak that I could hardly move about. At this stage I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I have good reason to bless the day I began their use. I had only taken them a few weeks when I began to recover, and under their continued use for some time longer I fully regained my former good health. I will be glad if my experience will be of benefit to some other poor sufferer."

When buying the pills see that the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People" is printed on the wrapper around each box. Sold by all dealers or sent by mail at 50c. a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

HAD LA GRIPPE.—Mr. A. Nickerson, Farmer, Dutton, writes: "Last winter I had la grippe and it left me with a severe pain in the small of my back and hip that used to catch me whenever I tried to climb a fence. This lasted for about two months when I bought a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil and used it both internally and externally, morning and evening, for three days, at the expiration of which time I was completely cured."

NEWFOUNDLAND WRECKERS

The Bounty That Is Gleaned From a Barren Shore.

In bygone times it was the practice of the Newfoundland coast folk to appropriate everything they secured, but this lawlessness had to be sternly repressed. Now the unwritten rule is that they get "half their hand," or 50 per cent, as salvage. In portable and valuable articles, such as silverware, there is still a strong temptation to keep the whole, but the punishment is severe. Champagne, liquors, cabin stores and the like have also a trick of disappearing, and in the poorest fisher's cottage you will come upon rare china, dainty napery, silverware of price and wines to tempt an epicure. The salvors are reckless and unthinking, and as they gather in hundreds every man pre-empts what he can. In the rush there is much destroyed. When the Herder was lost in 1882 they burned whalebone worth $15,000 a ton to save leather costing 20 cents a pound. In the Emmeline wreck of 1900 they trampled crates of costly glassware to get at four cases of French prayer books valued at 25 cents apiece. On one occasion two salvors had got ashore a piano and were adopting the Solomon-like expedient of sawing it in half when a shrewder chum bought it from them for a bottle of whisky looted from the captain's cabin. When the Grasbrook went ashore in 1890 every man on the shore provided himself with a German concertina, of which instruments of torture she had a large consignment, and to secure them packages of much more costly freight were thrown overboard. When the Orion, from Baltimore for Copenhagen, struck the back of Cape Race and went to pieces she had a large consignment of bicycles on board, and they were auctioned in St. John's and disposed of all over the island. The Abbeymore's lading in 1898 included some cases of splendid English rifles for Canada, and these are now to be seen adorning every fisher's cottage along the shore.—P. T. McGrath in McClure's.

FOOD, WATER AND AIR.

The Essential Things Out of Which Blood is Made.

These are the things out of which blood is made. If the food is nutritious and properly cooked, if the air is pure and full of oxygen, if the water is clean and free from impurities, the blood will be rich and red and full of vitality.

Barring physical accidents, there is no sickness except that depending directly upon a want of food or water or air, sometimes all three. When any one is sick the presumption is that he has been trying to subsist on poor food or vitiated air or bad water, one or more.

In order to have good food a person ought to have the first eating of it. Food that has been mussed over and left by one person is not fit to be eaten by another.

In order to have good air a person ought to have the first breathing of it. Air that has been breathed by other persons is not fit to breathe again.

Water should be fresh from some spring or well. If hydrant water must be used let it run a bit, as the house pipes are apt to be of lead and not iron like the pipes that convey the water through the city.

Food that is relished, air that cools and invigorates, water that is quaffed with eager thirst—these are the things that make blood. Put fresh air into the lungs, good food and pure water into the stomach, and nature will do the rest.

A Trick With an Egg.

Place two V shaped wineglasses of the same size near the edge of a table. In the right hand one put an egg, just fitting the rim of the glass. Hold the bases of the glasses firmly down, the top rims touching each other. Now, with a quick, sharp breath, blow upon the line where the egg and the glass meet. The egg will jump to the other glass. With a little practice this can be done every time. Be careful to blow in a line with the left hand glass, or the egg will jump in the wrong direction and land on the table with disastrous results.

Her Objection.

"Don't you think you are taking the wrong stand when you say you do not wish your son to marry, Mrs. Willoughby?" asked an intimate friend. "Don't you know it is natural and best for a young man to marry and that he will not think any the less of his mother because he has a wife?"

"Oh, it isn't that," protested Mrs. Willoughby. "I don't mind his marrying on general principles, but I don't want to be called 'the old Mrs. Willoughby.'"

THE GARBAGE GROUND.

The disposal of the town's garbage and refuse is a vital question to the citizens of Fernie, yet few understand how it is disposed of excepting that it is loaded on carts or wagons and hauled away But to where? That is the question. We were in blissful ignorance a week ago but since we were taken in tow by the sanitary officer and shown the wretched condition of the town in this respect we believe it is our duty to bring the matter before public notice and to give the police any assistance we can in overcoming the evil.

Briefly the condition is this. Some time ago a dumping ground was selected by the government about half a mile north of the northern limits of the town and west of the old road to the Fernie Lumber Co's mill. As the town grew out that way various objections were made by the nearest residents and the government selected a site some distance farther away, an excellent dumping ground on the edge of an embankment. This site was regarded by the scavengers and teamsters who hauled garbage as to far distant, and no attention was paid to the orders of the Government Agent. Since that time the evil has grown from bad to worse. Even the old dumping ground has been regarded as too far a haul and the refuse and garbage has been dumped along the road anywhere so long as it is off the townsite. Enquiry among residents at that end of the town elicits the information that the stench from all this festering filth when carried by favoring air currents makes it impossible to have the doors and windows open, and the workmen from the new sash and door factory complain when the wind is towards them.
