DANGERS TO NAVIGATION.

Boston, Aug. 7.—Captain Norman, of yacht Transient, reports noon Monday, one quarter of a mile S. E. from the red buoy on Sow & Pigs entrance to Vineyard Sound vessel struck an obstruction and was hung up for two minutes before she cleared the danger. About 6 feet of the vessel's keel was torn away and embedded in the forefoot, just under the stem. Three fragments or cast iron, whcih had been broken off from the wreck, were found. The Transient was bound from Newport for the Maine coast and put into Salem, where she hauled out for examination. The obstruction is a very serious menace to navigation.

REPORTS AND DISASTERS.

London, Aug. 8.—For forty days the crew of the Italian bark Duc Cugini lived on half a biscuit and a quarter of a cup of water each day and when sighted by the Royal Mail Steam Packet company's steamship Magdalena, three days out from St. Michael, Azores, the bark was flying signals of distress. The signals showed that food was urgently required, and a subscription was started among the passengers of the Magdalena immediately the meaning of the signals were made known to them. The master, Captain Trigge, however, told them that he would supply the bark with all they needed.

Enfeebled by their semi-starvation, the men, who put off from the Duc Cugini in a life-boat for the steamer, pulled slowly to the ship, and with some effort climbed on board. They explained that the bark left Pensacola on February 27, and the shortage in provisions and water was due to the unexpected prolongation of the voyage. They were sent back to their vessel with an ample supply of flour, salt meat, potatoes, beans, fresh vegetables and fruit, casks of water, and brandy. The women passengers touched by the men's piteous tale, bought all the chocolate and candies on board, and sent them to the hungry crew.

MARINE NOTES

TITANIC PASSENGER SUES.

Philadelphia Aug. 8.—Hadne Mamee, a cabin passenger saved from the Titanic, today sued the White Star Line for $25,000, the value he places on jewels he was bringing to this country. To his attorney, Howard M. Long, he said that Mrs. John Jacob Astor had saved him.

According to the story of Mamee, who is a Syrian, as told by his attorney today, Mamee plunged through the line of remonstrating men and into the same lifeboat as Mrs. Astor when it was learned that the Titanic was sinking.

Mrs. Astor had just taken her seat in the lifeboat when Mamee jumped in. The men tried to pull him from the boat, but Mrs. Astor, said Mamee's attorney, interceded for him, and when the men persisted in their efforts to take him from the boat she had him under her wraps, so that the men could not reach him.
