WALLCOTT MASTER

But what he took from Nelson in order to get this blow over would have sufficed to have stronger men cry quits. Nelson hammered Dixie on the body until the flesh was raw. He also made a target of the colored man's face, landing almost at will in some of the rounds.

Only One Knockdown.

Nelson registered the only knockdown of the encounter in the second round. Soon after the bell Nelson bounded over to Dixie's corner and shot over a terrific right between the eyes. The Dixie was momentarily blinded and he sank to the floor for the count. When he got up he rushed into clinch and hugged Nelson until the pair were pried apart by the referee.

After that round the Dixie showed a profound respect for Nelson's right, and kept a keen watch for that mitt. Nelson, however, got in many stiff lefts which dazed the negro.

The tenth round was fast and furious, and for the first time the Dixie showed a flash of his old form. He landed several lefts and rights which almost toppled over the tired Nelson. The latter was content to clinch the final half of the round.

This is the first decision that has been recorded against the Dixie since he beat Walcott.

ROYALS TIE SCORE JUST AT DARKNESS

Buffalo Evens Up With Royals at Montreal in Time.

Montreal, Sept. 20.—Buffalo started with a two-run lead off Burchell and stayed in front till the eighth, when Pattee's heave gave Jones three bases after one man was out. Dubee then was sent in as a pinch hitter and and singled over second, tying the score. Umpire Hurst then called the game owing to darkness. Ten minutes later rain commenced to fall. The score:

SKEETERS' ERRORS FINE FOR ORIOLES

Baltimore Wins From Jersey City by Score of 7 to 1.

Jersey City, Sept. 20.—The Orioles beat the Skeeters this afternoon by a score of 7 to 1. The locals could not hit the ball and piled up errors behind Brill and Bartley. Baltimore battered like fiends, getting two home runs, one of which went to Pitcher Russell. Walsh got the other circuit-chaser with a man on. The score:

SHIFTING THE TAX

English Brewers Have Scheme to Make Ratepayers Mulcted.

London, Sept. 20. The big English brewing companies are now engaged in organizing a campaign throughout the country for shifting on the rates the extra burdens imposed upon them by the increased license duties of Chancellor Lloyd George. It seems to be anticipated that the recent decision in the case of "The Crown and Shuttle" at Shoreditch, in which the courts held that allowance must be made for the increased duties in assessing public houses for rates, will not be taken to the House of Lords, as was at first contemplated, but will be accepted by the local bodies generally.

In this event the brewers, who in this country own the majority of the public houses, will avoid much of the burden imposed by the budget, and arrangements are being made all over the country to set in motion the machinery necessary to secure the reduction. As it is calculated that the number of premises affected is about ten thousand, the seriousness of the matter, from the ratepayers' standpoint, will be readily apparent. It looks, in fact, very much as if the effect of the new duties will be to make the rates pay contribution to the taxes.

Two reasons are ascribed by French scientists for the floods that nearly overwhelmed Paris. One is the wholesale cutting down of trees in the Ardennes, the Vosges, Burgundy and along the affluents of the Seine. The other is the comet visitations.

EVERY ENGLISH TOWN ITS OWN COMSTOCK

Theatrical, Political and Patten Medicine Posters Condemned Wholesale.

London, Sept. 20.—In every English town there are a number of Anthony Comstocks who cluster themselves into a watch committee to safeguard the eyes of the public against the exhibition of improper posters. The watch committee of Nottingham have been working overtime; not only have many theatrical posters been banned but patent medicine and political drawings have been discovered to be pernicious.

Many of the members of this committee dispatch their duties with admirable conscientiousness. They sneak down to London, observe the lewd sights, and return with itemized reports that forearm the committee against the invasion of similar improprieties. From the list of posters which have recently come under their condemnation Londoners conclude that discernment and imagination are properties of the mind singularly developed in the Midlands of England. The following posters are said to be evil:

"The Christian."—John Storm clasping the kneeling figure of Glory Quayle.

"The Face at the Window."—A head with peering eyes and snarling teeth.

"The Prairie Flower."—Picture of a vision.

"The Worst Woman in London."—Two women, one in male attire, fighting with a revolver.

A patent medicine—A skull with a border of crossbones.

A political poster—Referring to government.

"A Girl's Cross Roads."—Picture of a young girl, holding a bottle, toothless and dishevelled, entitled, "The last stage."

With regard to the last a well-known firm of printers stated:

"We have printed much worse pictures for temperance societies, showing the evil of drink, and yet theatrical posters depicting the same subject have been forbidden by these censorship committees." The loss to producers and printers runs into thousands of dollars every year.

Perhaps the censorship which is causing the most comment is the action of the Nottingham committee regarding the theatrical poster, "The Girl Who Lost Her Character"; the exhibitors were obliged to delete the last two words.

Recently a watch committee in Ireland stipulated with an exhibitor that if he wished a certain soap advertisement to be posted, trousers would have to be painted on the baby who was depicted as squirming out of his bath.

These committees are receiving interesting suggestions from their city acquaintances. One man advises them to change the title of Shakespeare's play, "The Merry Wives of Windsor." There is, he claims, the innuendo that Windsor had several wives at the same time; it would therefore, be advisable to herald the play with the sign, "The Successive Merry Wives of Windsor." Again, Shaw's "You Never Can Tell," implies a subject impossible to refined ears—else why not tell it. The committees might take a pardonable pride in its substitute, "May Be Told in Drawing Rooms."

PENCIL MARKS MAY CONVICT FITZGERALD

Main Evidence by Which Government Will Try to Bring Theft Home to Chicago Official.

Chicago, Sept. 20—A few indelible pencil marks on the "blotter" made up by George W. Fitzgerald on Feb. 19 and 20, 1907, as assorting teller of the Chicago sub-treasury, formed the foundation of the evidence by which the Government expects to convict that former clerk of the theft of $173,000, according to information given by assistants of the United States District Attorney's office.

If the pencil mark theory of the prosecution is true, the original theft from the cash in the cage of the assorting teller was $200,000. It is declared that $27,000 was returned to the sub-treasury a few hours before Fitzgerald announced his shortage to make the loss agree with a sum shipped to Washington and thus gain 48 hours' delay.

"The indictment found against Fitzgerald," declared the informant, "was based upon the testimony of a Government employee who had thoroughly investigated the theft mystery. It was not necessary to present the Government's full case to obtain the indictment.

"When Fitzgerald made out his blotter, among other items was one of 'gold certificates, $537,000.' He checked each item with a horizontal mark in ink. The total was something over $800,000.

"Next morning he checked off the items by running a perpendicular mark through the horizontal one made the night before. In this second checking he used an indelible pencil. In checking the item of 'gold certificates' his habit of accuracy made him write the figure '3' over the '5' in the amount '$537,000.' We argue that $237,000 was the amount of gold certificate cash in the cage, and that the teller was really $200,000 short.

"In the morning there came an order to send $173,000 to the treasury department at Washington, and Fitzgerald made up a package of that amount. This left him a book balance of $627,000, and an actual balance of $427,000. He knew that other drafts during the day would call for some $300,000, which would leave so little actual cash that the $200,000 shortage would be discovered.

"Fitzgerald knew that mistakes had been made in shipments to Washington by sending duplicate money packages. It usually took forty-eight hours to correct the error. We believe he figured on making his actual shortage the amount of that day's Washington shipment, and that he spent the hour and five minutes' absence unaccounted for at noon in obtaining $27,000 and returning it to his cash drawer.

"At four o'clock that afternoon he startled his fellow employees by declaring he was $173,000 short. The Government has never been able to determine the denominations of the bills stolen, and it does not know to this day how Fitzgerald spent the time he was away from the subtreasury."

LINK DEAD PAST TO MODERN LIFE

Public Men in England Have Had Great Traditions Handed Down.

London, Sept. 20. — Describing family links with the past has been a popular pastime in the correspondence columns of the dull season in England, and some amazing instances have come to light, going away back to Stuart times in many cases.

In Prof. Campbell Fraser, Britain boasts a man who in a way is a living link with Dr. Johnson. This Scottish professor, an honorary LL. D. of Princeton University, has a vivid recollection, while on a visit to the manse at Cawdor, of the old Highland minister who gave the glad hand to Johnson and Boswell on their tour to the Hebrides. Death has recently removed Lionel Newbery, a descendant of the publisher to whom Johnson, acting on Goldsmith's behalf, sold the manuscript of "The Vicar of Wakefield."

Along the living chain of recollection, through Field Marshal Lord Grenfell, come reminiscences of Napoleon, about whom new books on this side are published almost every month. While studying French at Lyons in 1814. Lord Grenfell's father saw the Man of Destiny inspect the troops on the Place Belle Coeur in that city. Thanks to a kindly captain of dragoons, he stood in the front rank of a regiment as Napoleon passed down the line on foot. Napoleon stopped to ask who the little boy was, and on being told, wished the lad good-day. This experience was in after years enshrined in verse, appreciative of the great soldier at the time, "when like an eagle winging his flight, from the chain he had broken free."

WOMEN CRIMINALS WORSE THAN MEN

Head of Czar's Prisons Says Female Nihilist Is Most To Be Feared.

New York, Sept. 20.—"The most dangerous criminals are women. But everywhere they are treated best—because they are women."

This is the frank statement of Commissioner M. Etienne de Krouleff, chief of the Russian prison administration, who is here as a delegate to the International Prison Congress to be held next month in Washington. Everybody has read horrible tales of the cruelties inflicted on Russian prisoners, including the women prisoners, so M. Krouleff was asked just what penalties could be inflicted on women in his country. And, according to his story, they at least come off better than the men, however serious their crimes.

9,000 Female Prisoners.

"We have 9,000 women prisoners in my country, including those in Siberia," he said. "Many of them are suffering for crimes quite as serious as those for which the majority of men prisoners are arrested. Yet there are two penalties which we never inflict on the women. Whatever they do they are never whipped with the knout. And they are never sent out of the prisons to labor.

"Our women are kept in prisons separate from those of the men. The staff in the women's prisons is in a great measure composed of women. They are sent to Siberia, of course, and the severity of the exile varies with individuals, but they are protected even as in the home prisons.

"A great deal has been written about women conspirators, because it seems such a romantic subject, but as a matter of fact there are comparatively few. The proportion of ten men to one woman among the Nihilists would certainly hold good.

Few Women Conspirators.

"Only when a woman does engage in crime she is always more to be dreaded than a man. She can do everything that a man criminal can do and more. She can kill, rob, burn, plot—and she can induce hundreds of men to do likewise if she has the least pretension to beauty or magnetism. And while a man may be very bad himself, he is much less to be feared than his woman colleague. She is herself—plus as many men as she knows.

"Yet, I assure you, the woman criminal is well treated in Russia, as she is everywhere else.

"Since the war with Japan there have been many, many murders in my country, a perfect outbreak of lawlessness. There have been women among the murderers, proved guilty. But in all our records of the last troubled years you can hardly find a single instance in which we have sentenced a woman murderer to death. Our judges will not do it—because she is a woman."

NOVELTIES IN DRESS

Lots of Velvet This Winter—A Miniature Aeroplane for a Hat.

Paris, Sept. 20.—As the stage is becoming more and more the public showrooms for the display of new fashions, every new fashion being at once reflected, even if it does not originate there, and all the great dressmakers being called on to aid in the correct gowning of the actresses, who are to create the roles in the new plays, every woman at this time of the year is anxiously awaiting the opening of the fall theatrical season before ordering new gowns.

The greatest problem to be decided is that of the proper width of skirts. The general belief is that they will be wider. Some of the newest winter models, not yet seen by the public generally, show this effect. One smart tailored gown of deep red-wine color, and which, by the way, is to be one of the popular colors, had a, comparatively speaking, wide skirt. It measured one and one-half yards around. The jacket was short. The craze which is predicted for velvet during the coming winter, was seen in the folds and pipings of velvet of a deeper tone, and which is to replace the braidings so long in use.

One of the novelties of the coming season will be the revival of the fichu. A pretty example of this was seen in a blue satin gown, with a tunic of silk crepon. The fichu, draped on the corsage, was of blue satin.

It will not be surprising if devotees of fashion do not succumb to the graceful panniers being shown. No one seems to wish to add to the hip measurement by accepting the pannier that is bunched just beneath the waist, but it is a different thing if the draperies come just to the hem of the skirt, for they are then tolerable, and indeed, pretty.

An "areoplane" hat is the latest cry in extreme fashions. A lady, quite evidently anxious to attract attention, appeared recently in Paris wearing as a head covering a representation of an immense aeroplane, the wheels of which revolved as she walked, much to the amazement of the crowd which gathered about her.

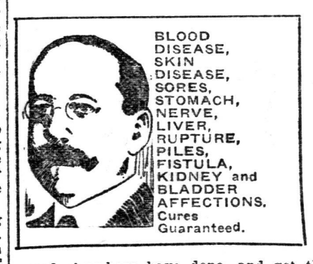
Only Scientific Specialists Cure



BLOOD DISEASE, SKIN DISEASE, SORES, STOMACH, NERVE, LIVER, RUPTURE, PILES, FISTULA, KIDNEY and BLADDER AFFECTIONS. Cures Guaranteed.

WHY SO MANY SUFFERERS FAIL TO GET CURED.—Nine physicians out of ten use unscientific methods and resort to guesswork in treating their patients, which results in the many there are who are not only disappointed, but lose their money. Have you made a great mistake in not getting skilled treatment; in not having a reliable specialist to treat you, only by which you will ever be cured?

Our methods are scientific, therefore they produce quick, everlasting cures. We employ only scientific methods and for this reason we make more cures than other physicians and specialists. We can afford to cure for less than others, and that is why we say to the sick, diseased and discouraged, come to our office, as others who failed to get cured elsewhere have done, and get the quickest, surest, cheapest cure obtainable, from one of the most skilled specialists in Detroit.
