"What are the wild waves saying"
SCOOT FRIENDS SCOOT, TO THE YORK STREET RESTAURANT.
Christmas has come and gone, and it is a thing of the past. Some parties, I have been informed, have made the remark that my advertisements are rather fishy, and I think it is a seedy thing for them to make such remarks, but I wish to inform them that I can shell out on Christmas and New Years, and if they doubt my word let them drop in on New Year's eve on their way to or from midnight service and they can see me shelling out the Oysters and assist in spending the parting year and welcoming the incoming New Year.
Please give the York Street Restaurant a bumper house to-morrow night as I want lots of cash as my wardrobe is getting down and I've got to pay the tailor a visit.
To my numerous customers I take this opportunity of wishing a Happy and prosperous New Year.

COMPULSORY VACCINATION.

Some More Opinions in Opposition to the Scheme as Furnished by our Correspondent "B."

During the smallpox epidemic in Montreal in 1885, the medical profession was so intent upon collecting vaccination fees, that whatever was likely to depreciate vaccination was withheld from the public. No record was kept of the number of vaccinated victims of smallpox, but it was well known to the public vaccinators that a large proportion of those stricken were fully protected (?) by vaccination and revaccination.

Determined to reach the truth, if possible, I kept an account of the name, nationality, age, and residence of every man, woman and child who died of smallpox from April, 1885, to Jan 30, to 1886, and had I not been seized with illness would have personally discovered who were vaccinated and who were unvaccinated, from inquiry among the relatives and friends of the deceased. However, I employed a capable and trustworthy medical man (not an anti-vaccinator) to do what I had proposed to do myself. The labor has been delicate, arduous, and expensive, requiring great patience, finesse, and tact; but the work has been faithfully done, and I append the summary of results. I am preparing a pamphlet, in which I shall give the statistics in detail.

I have made many converts throughout the Dominion during the past year. No honest, intelligent man can study the question for one week without being convinced that vaccination is a hideous delusion.—A. M. Ross, M. D., F. R. C. S., April 26, 1887.

SUMMARY OF MONTREAL EPIDEMIC, 1885-86.

Ages at Death.	French Canadians.	Other Nationalities.	Protestants.	Vaccinated.	Unvaccinated.	Totals.
Under Six Months.....	194	12	6	48	165	213
Six Months to one Year	299	15	10	148	166	324
One Year to Twenty...	245	113	43	1052	349	2405
Twenty to Fifty.....	144	36	29	128	81	209
Fifty to Ninety.....	13	10	3	24	2	26
Total.....	2803	187	97	1400	1777	3177

From the Scots Registrar Generals returns we extract the following:

Deaths by small-pox in Scotland of children under one year of age in 1871-73.

Year	Vaccinated	Unvaccinated
1871.....	64	142
1872.....	314	64
1873.....	139	39
Total	517	245

It can hardly be alleged that in the instance of these 517 babes their "protection had worn out by age," or that constituting a tenth of the victims of the epidemic their deaths were "rarities."

MR. W. WHITE'S REVIEW OF SIR LYON PLAYFAIR'S SPEECH IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, JUNE 19TH, 1883.

The small-pox epidemic in Leipzic in 1870 killed 1027 of its inhabitants, 715 of whom were children. The vaccinated constituted an overwhelming majority of the sufferers. Of 1,611 in one hospital, only 29 were unvaccinated; and of 1,727 in another, only 139 were in like case. Of 117 children received in the General Hospital all were found vaccinated. In 1871-2 there were in the British army 344 cases of small-pox and 42 deaths, all revaccinated. A curious commentary on the infallible prescription which saves even nurses in small-pox hospitals.

The Useful Workman.

London Iron Trade Exchange.

By far too many mechanics, in all industries, neglect the only certain means of self advancement and success. They rely too much on their membership in this or that organization, and pay too little attention to increasing their own skill, and their usefulness to their employers. The mechanic who is constantly striving to excel, who makes the most of all his opportunities, and aims to perform every task in a manner superior to his last, is accomplishing two important results. He is constantly increasing his own usefulness and value, and is becoming more and more of a practical mechanic, and developing more manliness and character. Such a mechanic is seldom obliged to engage in strikes or other labor controversies. The value of such a man's service is readily recognized, appreciated, adequately paid for. That is the class of men all employers are glad to secure, and the desire to retain their services provides for their satisfactory payment. But the class of hands whose only object on entering the shop is to while away the time, no matter how, till the whistle blows, are always in an unpleasant frame of mind, are always discontented with their lot, and are almost always ready to participate in any controversy for the improvement of their condition. Feeling and manifesting but little interest in their work, their services are of little real value, and tolerated simply because better hands are not available. Rendering but indifferent service at the best, they receive the often grudgingly paid, average market rate of wages, and are not regarded with special interest or favor by their employers. This class stand directly in their own light. By their neglect to improve themselves in every possible manner, they continue to lack the skilled efficiency which would readily and invariably improve their condition in every respect. The condition of this class is little better than that of slaves. Their labor is irksome in the extreme, its rewards unsatisfactory, and their prospects anything but pleasant. But let them but enter upon their work with a determination to master it and perfect themselves in all its details, they will immediately be surprised at the wonderfully improved aspect of their lot. The more faithfulness and efficiency a workman puts into his work the lighter and pleasanter that work becomes, and the surer are its due rewards, for faithfulness and efficiency are qualities which every employer prizes and quickly recognises. Whenever a workman honors his work, his work is sure to honor him. Labor organizations are well in their way, but they cannot relieve the indolent or careless workman from the direct consequences of his self-neglect, and the mechanic who is true to himself as well as to his employer, by developing to the utmost his own skill and usefulness, has seldom, in the long run, reason to complain of ill-treatment.

WIT AND HUMOR.

A Few Short Jokes for those who Like Them.

A Convis Center, Mich., farmer says it is so warm out his way that the horns of the cattle had shrunk, allowing the brass knobs to fall off.—Exchange.

An oculist's advertisement: "The artificial eyes furnished by this house are noted for the gentleness of their expression."—Judge.

Building in Boston is very much behind this year. In the middle of the busiest day a Boston bricklayer will throw aside his plumb-robert to discuss with his fellow craftsmen the totality of the regressive synthesis.—Exchange.

One of the most fickle husbands on record is one who had his wife cremated, affectionately placing her ashes in an urn. One day, seeing his second wife approaching, he rushed for the urn and threw the ashes of wife No. 1 on the slippery stoop so that wife No. 2 would not break her neck.—Epoch.

"Yes," said a hard hearted cynic "women are certainly sympathetic creatures. They sympathize with a man in his poverty and distress, and are always doing their best to keep him there, so they can do more sympathizing."—Washington Critic.

It is a sweet, revengeful thought that when waiters sit down to eat they have to be waited on by some of the other waiters.—Washington Critic.

It would seem natural for a carpenter to walk with a lumbering gait.—Merchant traveller.

He Couldn't Stand That.

"Hello, it's 11 o'clock!" remarked a traveling man as he sat down the glass; guess I'll go home."

"What's the matter? Afraid of your wife?"

"You bet I am."

"What does she do when you're out late, call her mother?"

"Naw. Her mother don't live at our house."

"Does she mount guard with a rolling pin?"

"No, she don't."

"What does she do then?"

"Well, gentlemen, she just kicks a little and then she up and cries. Good night; I'm in a hurry."—Merchant Traveler.

A Growing Child.

Conductor—Madam, did I understand you to say this girl is not 12 years old?

Mother—She will be 12 next spring.

"And you want to go all the way to New York in this car?"

"Yes."

"Then you should not go on this train."

"Why not?"

"Because this is a slow train, and if that girl keeps on growing as she has been, by the time we get to New York she will be so large that she will not be able to get through the car door. The company can't afford to take the car to pieces on a half fare ticket."—Texas Siftings.

The Drummer's Only Hope.

"And is this to be the end?" said the deeply enamored traveling man to the beautiful young lady who kept the books for one of his regular customers in the little inland town.

"It is, Mr. McThompson," she replied; "I can never be anything to you but a friend."

"Then," said the drummer, with tremulous voice and a face of ashy paleness, "it only remains for me to say farewell. I shall be here again," he said, consulting his memorandum book with rapidly recovering self possession, "in thirty days with a full line of samples in millinery and dress goods. Save me your orders, please. Good afternoon."—Chicago Tribune.

Not so Bad After All.

Old Mr. Anjerry, the father of Tom Anjerry, was in Austin last week. Tom is a student at the university of Texas, and spends a great deal of money in frivolity and wickedness.

"Tom," said the old man, "you got a registered letter from me last week containing $50."

"Yes, I got it."

"I'll bet you have not got any of it left."

"That's where you are off. I've got the envelope in my desk right now."—Texas Siftings.

A SAD CASE.

A Dying Man on a Car.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 22.—In the baggage car of an express train from Boston, to-day, was a stretcher containing a man too sick to walk or talk. The stretcher was marked and tagged with the man's name. The stretcher and man came from New Brunswick without a single friend or companion. The following open letter, signed by Rev. J. O. Babineau, of Tracadie, Miramichi, N. B., in a measure explained the sad plight:—

"To all those to whom these presents may come, I wish to certify that the bearer, William Brideau, wishes to reach Providence where his mother resides. He is an advanced stage of consumption and has very limited means. I recommend him to the kind charity and attention of conductors and others with whom he may travel, that he may reach in safety his place of destination."

The directions on the stretcher were to Mrs. Mary MacGrath, the sick man's mother.

CHOLERA IN ITALY.

A Mob Shoots a Postman who is Supposed to Have Spread the Disease.

ROME, Sept. 22.—The successor of the prefect of Messina, who recently died of cholera, also succumbed; a number of chemists and physicians, who became panic stricken, fled from Messina, pursued by the police, were taken back. At Villahalta the mob shot a postman, under the impression that he spread the epidemic through letters which he distributed at Monreale. Fugitives from Palermo were met by citizens with guns and compelled to camp in the open air. A nine-year-old boy was driven by hunger to approach a valley and was stabbed to death. His body was burned.
