Peddie's Defeat.

Meredith Raised the Non-Resident Cry Against the Labor Man

Because He Lived in the Village of London West!

An Important Point Now That Mr. Meredith Is a Resident in and Paid Servant of Toronto.

When Mr. Peddle ran as a Labor candidate in this city in 1886 Mr. W. R. Meredith strongly objected to his candidature on the ground that, though he was a workman in the London furniture factory, he had his home in London West!

At the nomination in the City Hall on Dec. 21, 1886, we learn from the report of the meeting that Mr. Meredith spoke as follows:

He (Mr. Meredith) referred to the fact that his opponents had gone outside the city to select a candidate, and said this was the first time such a thing had been done in London.

A Voice—Didn't Sir John go to the Pacific slope?

Mr. Meredith—He did; but this is the first time London has had to go outside its limits for a candidate.

In reply to this allegation, Mr. Peddle said:

"Mr. Meredith has told you that this is the first time the people of London have had to go outside the city to secure a candidate. I say that I am a citizen of London because all my money has been spent in London ever since I have been here. I was an Englishman, but now am I a Canadian, and such I shall live and die."

At the ward meetings and in the private canvass Mr. Meredith and his friends urged strongly that Mr. Peddle should be defeated because he was not, as Mr. Meredith then was, a resident of the city. And Mr. Peddle was defeated by a small majority. Two years later (in 1888) Mr. Meredith found that he could make more money in Tororto than in London. He forgot the cry which he had raised in order to defeat the labor candidate, and he deserted London. Since then he has become the salaried officer of Toronto, and he now draws $13,500 a year from our rival city as the chief guardian of its interests.
