AFTER FIVE YEARS.

(From Belgravia.)

Beautiful she looked as she lay there in quiet slumber in the drawing-room of the Howard mansion, which is situated in the town of Deepdale, in the eastern part of Suffolk. Her complexion was of that marble whiteness which contrasts so well with black hair; clearly defined eyebrows; long and heavy eyelashes; a full red mouth; a straight, delicate nose; a beautiful chin; in fact, a face of exquisite loveliness. She might have made a fit model for a Madonna, only that there was too much pride, and too little meekness in the cantour of her face.

If she is lovely in repose, what must she be when animation and activity light up her wonderful face? Ask him who stands by her; he will tell you of her rare beauty and her exquisite figure. In short, she seems "a daughter of the gods, divinely fair."

He who stands by her side and looks at her so lovingly, is Guy Wilford, who loves her so passionately, so devotedly, but who also loves her in vain; for he is the son of a poor gentleman, while she is the daughter of the wealthiest man in Deepdale.

Guy had come to see Mr. Howard on some matters pertaining to his profession (that of a lawyer), and had been ushered into the drawing room to await his appearance. There, on the couch lay Helen Howard—asleep. Guy stood looking at her when Mr. Howard entered the room. He seemed considerably surprised at witnessing such a tableaux. He must have read the love light in Guy's eyes, for he crossed over to him, laid his hand on his shoulder and said in a kind voice, "Wilford, you love my daughter? Ah, I know you do. Well, my boy, you have my permission to woo her; though whether you win or not, she will decide. I know of no man to whom I would more readily give my daughter than to you. Money does not make the man in my estimation." And he smiled pleasantly on perceiving the joyous look on Guy's face as he caught his hands, thanking him and declaring his love for his daughter.

"Well, well, Guy, I understood you," said Mr. Howard, with a shake of his head. "But don't be so enthusiastic, or you will arouse my lady. Come, we will withdraw before she discovers our presence."

They left the room quietly, Helen sleeping on, all unconscious of what had transpired.

* * * *

"Helen, do you love me? Will you be my wife?"

Guy Wilford leaned toward her as he spoke, reaching out his hands; but she put them back coldly, saying, "Mr. Wilford, if I hadn't anticipated a declaration of love I should have excused myself from seeing you this afternoon. Have given no encouragement to warrant such a course, and you will excuse me, but I think you too presumptuous. I have always regarded you as a friend, but never supposed you would aspire to Helen Howard's love—or money."

"Helen—Miss Howard, you wrong me!" cried Guy. "I have naught but the purest love for you. I am sorry that I have so displeased you by my presumption, but I could remain in uncertainty no longer. Since you look so unfavorably upon my love, I bid you farewell."

And almost before she was aware of it, he was gone.

She wished then she could take back all the harsh words she had spoken. Not that he had shown any suffering or sorrow, but she herself experienced a lonely feeling, as if she had deprived herself of some good. And this was increased on hearing of his departure for India, where he would remain for five years or more.

Her father guessed the cause of Guy Wilford's departure. He knew the man's noble nature, and that it was Helen he loved, not her money; but he said nothing when she told him all about it.

Helen was more brilliant than ever that season; notwithstanding which she was always possessed of a dissatisfied feeling, which seemed to mar all pleasure. She could not define it. She at first tried company as a remedy, but she soon discovered faults and flaws in those whom she had regarded as her friends. So at last she begged her father to take her abroad, which he did.

Three years passed before she returned to Deepdale. They had gone through all the countries of the continent, met with a great many new forms and faces, and yet Helen Howard was Helen Howard still. Old friends again flocked around her, and she threatened to become as much a belle as of old.

Rosa Carrington came to stay with her—a gushing, bright young lady of 18 or thereabouts. One evening a large party had congregated on the lawn of the Howard mansion, carrying on a perfect tide of conversation, when Miss Rose exclaimed, "News—news! Who can guess? Brother Harry tells a good piece of news. The one who guesses shall have the right of the first introduction."

"Half told, petite Rose," said Helen; "some one is coming. It must be no less personage than the grand mogul, to disturb my little lady's equanimity so."

Then there were cries of "Who? Who? We can never guess—let us know." &c. before Rose would condescend to satisfy their curiosity.

"Well, you all remember Guy Wilford, who flourished in this town about five years ago, and who left very suddenly for India? It is no less a person than he, come back wealthy, polished, travelled—the handsomest man in the world, my brother says, with the form of an Apollo, the pride of Lucifer, the wealth of Croesus, the—Helen, are you ill? What is the matter?" she suddenly cried, as she happened to glance where Helen stood, and saw her reeling and trying to support herself by the column.

Guy Wilford was instantly forgotten; all attention was now turned to Helen. She soon recovered, and excused herself on a plea of sickness, and retired to her room. "Why should I be so disturbed because Guy Wilford has come? I don't love him. Pshaw! I'm foolish."

She laid herself down in her bed and tried to sleep, for she felt week and faint.

She was now possessed of a desire to see Guy, which was increasing every day. She had no more of him until about two weeks after that first announcement, when Rose received intelligence that Guy Wilford would accompany her brother to the ball, which was to be given to one of the leading families of the town. She determined to be present.

On the night of the ball Helen Howard stood before her mirror, just from the hands of her maid. Beautiful she always was, but this night she was superb. A slight flush lit up her usual pale face, increased her loveliness tenfold. She was attired in a robe of dove color, draped with black lace, her marble shoulder fairly gleaming against the costly fabric. Her eyes almost outvied the diamonds on her neck and hair. She felt strangely uneasy.

Upon entering the ballroom, Helen saw Guy Wilford, the centre of an admiring group. Five years since she last saw him! Time; how things had changed.

She had no chance to speak to him till the latter part of the evening, when Rose Carrington brought him to her and introduced them, thinking they had never met. She was glad that he hurried her off to dance; for she felt faint now that she was at last with him again.

They separated after the dance, Helen retiring into a deep bay window, complaining of weariness.

He soon returned, hardly expecting to find her alone, and requested her to accompany him to the conservatory to view a large cactus they had been discussing.

Whilst there, almost before he knew it, he had her in his arms, telling her how he loved her, and asking her again to become his wife. Oh! how happy and peaceful she felt at last! After five long years she had found contentment. They had much to say to each other; and though she danced little, and was in the company of him whom she had once termed presumptuous, she afterwards said that it was the most pleasant evening she had spent in five years.

Rose Carrington often visits Mrs. Wilford, and declares that she never saw such a case of "love at first sight." Helen never told her what happened five years ago.

Injudicious Organs.

(From the Winnipeg Sun.)

A great newspaper organ has hitherto been deemed necessary to the health and happiness of every political party, but it is very doubtful if organs do not often do their parties more harm than good. Such has often proven the case in Canada, at least. The Globe has frequently defeated the reform party by its ill-tempered zeal for the cause, and vile abuse of individuals and classes who refused to vote for its ticket. The Mail seems to have grown jealous of the Globe's monopoly of Blunderdom, and is making the conservative party responsible for its own narrowness, intolerence and stupidity. Its political columns are pervaded by the same snobbish spirit that ruled and ruined the U. E. club. The climate of Canada is too raw for the successful cultivation of the luxurious plant snobbery, and any party or paper that goes extensively into that sort of horticulture will surely be the looser. But the Mail has been guilty of something worse than snobbery in making wholesale attacks upon unoffending nationalities, and that almost upon the eve of a general election.

* * * *

It would be better for the conservative party to have no organ at all than one that manufactures deadly ammunition for the enemy.

The Early Rain.

Down through the misty air,
Down from the glooms above,
Falling, pattering everywhere,
The rain comes quick with love.
Softly the missel-thrush
Sings in the golden storm:
The robin under a laurel bush
Waits for to-morrow morn.

Drip, drip, drip from the eaves,
Pit, pit, pit on the pane,
Swish, swish, swish on the drenched leaves,
List! 'tis the song of the rain.
Grasses are bending low,
Green is the corn and thick;
You can almost see the nettles grow,
They grow so strong and quick.

Soft in the wind from the west,
Softer the rain's low sigh:
The sparrow washes his smoky breast,
And watches the gloomy sky.
Stirred are the boughs by the breeze,
Scarcely a leaf is still,
Something is moving among the trees
Like a restless spirit of ill.

Standing watching the rain,
Do you not seem to hear
The voice of God outspeaking again
To man's ungrateful ear?
Promising plenty and peace,
Garners with treasure heaped,
That seed-time and harvest shall not cease
Till the harvest of earth be reaped.

THE INTERNATIONAL THROAT AND LUNG INSTITUTE, 75 Yonge street, corner of King, Toronto. A body of French and English physicians are in charge. Great reformation in medical science. The spirometer, the wonderful invention of Dr. M. Souvielle of Montreal, and ex-aide surgeon of the French army, which conveys medical properties direct to the seat of the disease, has been proved in the leading hospitals of Europe to be indispensable for the cure of catarrh, catarrhal deafness, bronchitis, asthma and lung disease. Dr. Souvielle and a body of English and French surgeons and physicians are in charge of this most scientific institution on this continent. We wish country practitioners who have not had sufficient practice to distinguish the different forms of lung disease to bring their patients to our institute, and we will give them free advice. This institute has been organized by this body of scientific men to place Canada in a position to compete on scientific views with any part of Europe, and to protect the people from the hands of insignificant men. Dr. Souvielle's spirometer and its preparations, were invented after long and careful experiments in chemical analysis and used in hundreds of cases to prove its effects. He has the sole right in France, England, the United States and Canada. Last year over 1000 letters of thanks were received from all parts of Europe, Canada and America for the wonderful cures performed by the Spirometer. Hundreds of the leading people of this country given as references. Write or call at the International Throat and Lung Institute, 75 Yonge street, corner of King, Toronto, and you will be received by either of the surgeons. Consultations free to physicians and sufferers. Call or write enclosing stamp for pamphlets giving full particulars free. 135

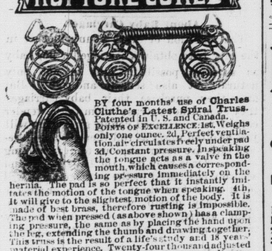
RUPTURE CURED


BY four months' use of Charles Cluthe's Latest Spiral Truss. Patented in U. S. and Canada. POINTS OF EXCELLENCE. 1st. Weighs only one ounce. 2d. Perfect ventilation, air circulates freely under pad. 3d. Constant pressure. In speaking the tongue acts as a valve in the mouth, which causes a corresponding pressure immediately on the hernia. The pad is so perfect that it instantly imitates the motion of the tongue when speaking. 4th. It will give to the slightest motion of the body. It is made of best brass, therefore rusting is impossible. Thrown when pressed (as above shown) has a clamping pressure, the same as by placing the hand upon the leg, extending the thumb and drawing together. This truss is the result of a life's study and 18 years internal experience. Twenty-four thousand adjusted in the last seven years by the inventor. Recommended by leading physicians. I defy the rupture I cannot hold with ease. Spinal instruments, most improved. A new apparatus for straightening Club Foot, without cutting or pain. Send 6 ct. stamp for book on Rupture and the Human Frame (registered, by Chas. Cluthe), valuable information. Address CHAS. CLUTHE, Surgical Machinist, 118 King Street, West, TORONTO, Ont., and corner Main and Huron Streets, BUFFALO, N.Y.
