THE CONFESSIONS OF A TRAITOR.—It is a generally received axiom, "that experience teaches fools," but, like many other of the old saw's family, it is not without the exception to the rule. There is another, and, we believe, a more infallible maxim, and that is seldom found to miscarry, which is, that "murder will out," and under the verity of this saying has that unfortunate young man James A. Harding fallen. That this person never possessed talent to entitle him to rank among the Representatives of the people is admitted on all hands, yet he was, as he announced in one of his rambling and not very lucid election speeches, "born and brought up in our midst;" this accident, trifling as it is, had its weight, again he was a connection of the late loyal and worthy Alderman of Duke's Ward, and this was, with the people generally, the most potent claim he could offer, thus then he had claims, such as they were, but all apart from, and other than that of intrinsic worth. He was known to be a "free trader," and would rather pay two prices for a Yankee trap, than employ the workman, who like himself, was "born and brought up in our midst." He was also known to be tinctured with a Republican itch. Yet by the true Liberals it was hoped that age and experience would correct those blemishes in his character, and this forbearance, coupled with his unqualified promises at the last election to support the present Government, put him on the Conservative ticket and secured him his return. But so short-sighted is hypocracy and deceit that with all its wiles, it cannot hide the cloven foot, for scarce had the first cheer of the successful electors died away, when this Traitor, this second ARNOLD, in a hotel in this city, when flushed with victory and wine, boast that he was the key stone of the Legislature, and whichever way he turned that party must rule. Sober men who heard the apostacy of the man, shrugged their shoulders, and left his company in disgust at his treachery. In the course of his vaporings, he did not hesitate to intimate pretty plainly that he should take care of himself. Is it much then to be wondered at that he should take an office under the present Government that realized for him £350 in a hundred and twenty days, and for a like sum and the promise of the old shoes of J. R. Partelow and his crumbs of office, sell himself, body and bones to the Faction Mongers of the "dark north!" We said, "experience teaches fools," as a general thing it does do so, yet there are some fools so incorrigibly obtuse, as not to be taught even by that rigid preceptor. The fate of traitors, from Montieth to Cardinal Wolsey, and from that down to the arch-Arnold, has been fraught with fearful retribution, and such will enviably be the fate of the man who has disgraced himself and betrayed his too confiding constituents. J. A. Harding can never again regain the confidence of this constituency.

"He now may wander witheringly in other lands to die,
And where his fathers' ashes be his own may never lie.

ENGLAND.—The Government Defeat.—On the night previous to the Division Lord Palmerston invited the Liberal members of the House of Commons to meet him at the Treasury Office, Downing street. About 180 members attended. The Globe states that the Premier addressed the meeting at considerable length. In the most lucid statements, he detailed the series of insults and the equivocating conduct on the part of the Chinese authorities that led to the forcible interference of the British Admiral. Lord Palmerston was warmly applauded at the conclusion of his speech. The Morning Post says, Lord Palmerston declared that he was disposed to expect; from the large majorities which Government hitherto had obtained on questions of vital moment, that on the present occasion the support of the House would not fail him, and that he felt assured of the confidence of the country.

During the debate on Tuesday night, Lord Palmerston addressed the house at considerable length in defence of the position of the English Government in this matter.

D'Israeli and Cobden followed in reply, when the house divided, and the numbers stood:

For the motion, - - - -	263
Against it, - - - - -	247
Majority against the Government——	16

The Commissioners, in concluding their Report, bear testimony to the ability of Dr. Waddell in the following terms:—

"The Commissioners have great pleasure in again testifying their confidence in Dr. Waddell, the Medical Superintendent, and to his able and zealous endeavors for the improvement and comfort of the unfortunate inmates, and to efficient management of the Institution, in its various departments; and the acknowledge and appreciate the continued gratuitous services of the Rev. W. Scovil, A. M., the Chaplain."

The total number of patients remaining in the institution on the 1st of Nov. was 78 males and 72 females—150 in all.

ROYAL ENGINEER OFFICE,
St. JOHN, N.B., 9th MARCH, 1857.

SIR,—The Fire Department of the City of Saint John, having given, at the fire which broke out in the Engineer's Workshop at Lower Cove, on Saturday evening last, a remarkable proof of their promptness and efficiency, I have much satisfaction in conveying to them on behalf of H. M. War Department, the thanks of that Department for their strenuous exertions; without, which, I am convinced that serious loss and damage would have been sustained.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your Worship's most obedient humble Servant,
JAMES H. FREETH,
Captain R. Engineers.

His Worship The Mayor, &c. &c.

HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH ON PROROGUING THE LEGISLATURE.

Mr. President and Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council:

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly:

I have readily given my assent to the Bills which you have passed. On a full consideration of the present state of public affairs, I have come to the determination of proroguing this Assembly with a view to its immediate dissolution. I entertain the hope that the progress of public business will be fairly facilitated by the authority of a new Assembly.

LATEST PARTICULARS OF THE RAILROAD DISASTER NEAR HAMILTON, CANADA WEST.

A national calamity may fairly be said to have befallen us. Men who have ever stood in the foremost rank—capitalists the most shrewd, speculators the most keen, merchants the most far-sighted, clergymen the most earnest—have at one fell swoop been taken from among us. The brain wanders, and the pen refuses to do its accustomed duty, when attempting to describe the heart-rending scenes we have witnessed.

The train from Toronto, due in that city at a quarter past six, P. M., yesterday evening, had come from Toronto as was usual, and was proceeding at a moderate rate of speed to pass the swing-bridge across the Desjardin's Canal. Those residing at a distance may not know that a cutting has been made as an outlet to this canal through the Burlington Heights, and that the railroad crosses it by a swing-bridge, 60 feet at least above the level of the canal. At this time, of course, the water below is covered with ice, about two feet thick.

Just before the train reached the bridge, the engine ran off the track, owing it is supposed, to some defect in the axle. This, however, is a mere surprise, founded only on the observation of some marks on the road for some distance on the other side of the spot where the accident occurred. The immense weight of the engine, cutting through the timber of the bridge, produced the effect naturally to be expected. The whole structure gave way, and with one frightful crash, the engine, tender, baggage car and two first class passenger cars broke through the severed frame work and leaped headlong into the yawning abyss below. The engine and tender crushed at once through the ice. The baggage car, striking the corner of the tender in the act of falling, was thrown to one side, and fell some yard from the engine. The first passenger car rushed after, and turning as it descended, fell on its roof, breaking partly through the ice, and was crushed to atoms, while the last car fell endways on the ice, and strange to say, remained in that position.

The loss of life was of course frightful. There were 98 passengers on the train, and the list of those who have escaped only numbers about 20. As far as we can yet learn, every one in the first car was killed; those who were not crushed being drowned by the water which nearly filled the car. About thirty were in the last car, of whom ten were taken out dead, and most of the others were fearfully mutilated. The conductor, Mr. Barrett, the deputy superintendent of the line, Mr. Muir, and Mr. Jessop one of the auditors, who were on the Lind platform, jumped off and escaped. The latter jumped over the baggage he had piled up ready for delivery, and escaped with but slight injury, while the three others went down, but miraculously enough, were not much hurt. The engineer and fireman went under the ice, with the locomotive, and their bodies have not yet been recovered.

The excitement in the city directly on the news spreading was intense. Hundreds swarmed towards the Great Western depot, and streamed along the line to the fatal spot. The scene presented was such as to baffle description. Large locomotive lamps were speedily brought. Fires were kindled and a lurid glare was thrown over the shattered remnants. Special trains were despatched to the bridge to bring home the wounded. It was no easy task to descend the steep slope to the canal. Ropes were lowered and ladders attached to them, on which the dead and wounded from the car which stood endways were first drawn up. Then the bottom of the car which had partly sunk through the ice was hewn away with axes, and the unfortunate passengers, some sadly mutilated and even cut in pieces, and all saturated with water, were taken out. Many worked with energy and vigor; but who was that noble fellow that every one must have seen, stripped to his shirt sleeves, standing up to his middle in the freezing water, who, himself a host did more than all the rest? We watched him long from the height above, as he hewed away the fragments, and extricated the bodies. If ever man deserved a reward, it is he.

As soon as the dead were drawn up the slope they were either put in the cars for conveyance to Hamilton, or were laid in a small house near the bridge. It is said that one family were in the cars, consisting of father mother and children. Only one of the children escaped.

One of these little ones, a girl about four years of age, was brought into the house alluded to when we were there. The poor little creature was smiling prettily, as if she had been sleeping and dreaming of sweet things when the accident occurred, and had been launched into the long sleep of death before the dream had vanished from her mind.

At the railway depot, when the sufferers were brought in, crowds assembled anxious to hear who was dead and to know if any of their friends were there.—Hamilton Spectator—Extra.

Godey's last Lady's Book contains a beautiful steel engraving of the "Motherless Bairn," along with the usual variety of plates illustrative of the latest fashions, patterns, &c. Mrs. Allen, of Westmorland, was frozen to death on Tuesday, 10th inst. She had been for some time labouring under insanity, and had left her home, when immediate search was made, but had perished before she was found.

Sir J. F. Crampton, late Minister at Washington has been appointed Minister Plenipotentiary to Hanover.

A SMUGGLING CASE: IMPORTANT TO COLONIAL SHIP CAPTAINS.—Mr. Alexander Abbott, master of the ship Falcon, lately arrived here from St. John, N. B., was charged before Mr. Mansfield, stipendiary magistrate, on Wednesday, with attempting to smuggle three bottles of brandy. Alexander Jenkins, customs officer, said he was on duty near the defendent's vessel that morning, when a parcel was sent ashore. He asked the captain what it contained and the latter replied, "Only some dirty clothes and a lot of other old things. On searching the bundle it was found to contain three bottles of brandy. The defendant denied the statement of the officer, and said he sent the brandy ashore openly. He thought he had a right to do so, because he had purchased it duty paid at St. John. If he had acted wrongly he could assure the magistrate that it was through an ignorance which was very prevalent. Mr. Mansfield: You forget that this duty brand has not paid British duty. Captain Abbott: It paid duty in St. John, and that's a British port. Mr. Mansfield: So is Dublin a British port, but there is a difference in the duty here and there. Capt. Abbott. Well I have acted through ignorance Mr. Mansfield: Then you must pay 13s., the value of the brandy. The money was paid, and Captain Abbott left the court.

On the evening of Sunday week, three respectable looking persons publicly renounced Romanism, and were admitted as members of the Church of England, in the congregation of St. Matthew's Scotland road, by the Rev. Dr. Hillcoat, the incumbent.

An interesting experiment took place in the Huskisson Dock on Wednesday, on board the Turkish frigate Gayvan Bahry, which has been fitted with the patent reciprocating pump, invented by Mr. Massie, of London. A pump of 7 inches stroke 9 inch. cylinders, and two suction pipes of 3 2-4 inches diameter, working at the rate of 45 strokes per minute, lifted 78 tons of water per hour. Commander Bevis R. N. and several captains of American packet ships were present, and the experiment was pronounced perfectly successful.

CARD.

TO THE ELECTORS OF KING'S WARD.

GENTLEMEN,

THE Subscriber having for many years past remonstrated, through the public prints, with the City Corporation on the subject of liquidating the City Debt, which is annually increasing one per cent.; reducing taxation, which has grown intollerable; and making BETTER and CHEAPER arrangements for MAKING (!) REPAIRING (!!) and CLEANING (!!!) Streets; has been induced by the friends of Progress, to offer himself for the office of COUNCILLOR of KING'S WARD at the coming Election, with a view, should it be the pleasure of the Constituency to honor him with their suffrages, of bringing measures forward at the Board and using his best exertions for so desirable a consumation. He would further statethat it is his firm conviction, that under judicious arrangements, the Properties, Rents and Issues belonging to the Corporation are amply sufficient to meet all the expenses of governing a city, containing less than thirty thousand inhabitants, without trenching on the pockets of the people. In furtherance of these views, he will offer himself as above.

Respectfully, Gentlemen, Yours,
[Firm & N. Bruns] J. HOOPER.

Remember my Text!

THE public will please take notice that there are two parties who strive to rule in this City, the independant and the dependant; the former resemble Lot and his family, the latter the unfortunate beings who remained in the doomed cities.

This Province of seventy years standing, has only a population of about 200,000, although it possesses natural resources, if properly developed, equal to any part of the habitable globe.

In my sermon which I intend to deliver in front of the Court-House on the first Tuesday in April next, I shall give a full, true, and particular account of the present, past, and future prospects of this City, and of the Province at large. On that occasion my text shall be—the MORAL, SOCIAL, and POLITICAL Condition of New Brunswick.

Remember I shall preach in front of the Court-House at 2 o'clock, P. M.
