VARIETIES

AN HONEST RACE

Lying, cheating and theft are practically unknown among the Eskimos. These primitive people are always considerate of each other's feelings—so considerate that once, when it was determined to rid a tribe of an inveterate liar by death, the sentence was unknown to him till he received the deathblow.

MANY USES OF HONEY

For centuries Hindus have used new honey as a laxative and old honey as an astringent. Aborigines of Persia offered honey to the sun. Greeks still mix it with milk or water and use it as a libation to the dead. In one section of India milk and honey are handed to a bridegroom as he arrives at the door of the brides father. In ancient Egypt honey was long a chief ingredient of embalming fluid.

ON THE WAY TO MECCA.

The Bishop of London has published an account of his visit to the Soudan, which included a morning walk "in the very middle of native Africa.' A native boy whom he saw standing near a well "was on his way to Mecca having travelled already two or three thousand miles, which had taken two or three years. His father had died on the way, and when I asked him how he would manage he said quietly, 'Allah will provide," and it never entered his mind to ask me for anything. Five minutes afterwards we came across three women—an old woman and two daughters. The eldest daughter was five-and-twenty. They were coming back from Mecca, but they had started off, she said, when she was a little girl about twelve."

TORTOISESHELL ORNAMENTS.

Personal ornaments of great beauty are made from tortoiseshall and pearl shells by the natives of the Torres Straits, Queensland. Haircombs, earrings, finger-rings, chains, and brooches made of tortoiseshell and inlaid with mother-o'-pearl are given an artistic finish. In most cases the only tools used are an old knife, a piece of broken glass, and a stone. In many of the homes of the white residents of Thursday Island, North Queensland, the serviette-rings are made of tortoiseshell, ornamented with pearl, or silver, or gold filings. The tortoiseshell, when heated, becomes very pliable, and can be twisted to any shape; it is when the shell is heated that the pearl or metal piece is inlaid.

METHOD IN HIS MADNESS

An Englishman travelling in Germany kept constantly putting his head out of the window of the railway carriage, until at length a gust of wind blew away his hat. He immediately took down his hat-box and hurled it out of the window. His German fellow-travellers roared with laughter.

"You don't expect your hat-box to bring your hat back, do you?" one of them asked.

"I do,' said the Englishman. "No name on the hat—full name and address on the box. They'll be found together, and I shall get both."

AN ANCIENT STOREHOUSE

Pure food labels were in existence in 90 B.C., according to a discovery made by Professor George A. Reisner, of Harvard. Inscriptions excavated in the ancient city of Samaria, in Palestine, are labels which were employed as seals on jars of wine and oil. They mention the year in which the wine was laid down in the cellar of the palace storehouse, and they state the vineyard from which the wine came. These labels, about seventy--five in number have been dug up on the ruins of the storehouse that was attached to the palace of King Ahab some three thousand years ago, and the names of the owners as given indicate that not only the King himself but other men stored their wines and oils there.

A MASQUERADE IN THE ANTARCTIC.

The frozen wastes of the Antarctic continent do not strike the ordinary person as an encouraging spot for merrymaking, but Doctor Jean Charcot, the intrepid French explorer, in "The Voyage of the Why Not," says that his men and officers, even in the most strenuous weather and when harassed by many difficulties, were always ready to make merry. Here is a description of Shrove Tuesday celebrations after they had been in winter quarters a month, and extreme cold, wind, and snow had been continuous.—

"Liouville appears with his beard shaved off, wearing Austrian whiskers, with his nose painted red and his head covered with a tropical helmet. Then Gourdon and Gain disguise themselves in their turn showing a strong preference for white clothes and tropical head-gear. The mess steward turns out in a most extraordinary garb, and the cook is disguised as the chef in a big hotel.

"This is the signal for a general masquerade, very merry, though simple. The crew are content, with turning up their trousers' legs and displaying superb red underclothing, which, with their blue nitted vests and scalers' boots and caps, makes a striking uniform.

"Bongrain adds to his already respectable height by adorning his head-dress with the only feather on board, and carries in his hand an enormous pole. Then every one gets hold of a gun, and the troop goes through evolutions on the island, while Liouville uses a clarionet as a bugle and Levebourg accompanies him on a tin box as a drum, and Gourdon, harnessed to a sledge, represents the ambulance service.

"The greatest merriment prevails, and the rest of the day is treated as a holiday. In spite of the north-east wind, we have had no snow during the afternoon, but in the evening it begins to fall again, so that we do not lack confetti.

"Dinner includes pancakes, and Gourdon brings out of the hold a tin box, labelled, 'For Shrove Tuesday,' containing some excellent honey, which a member of the family kindly presented before we started from home."
