BE CAREFUL WHEN FILLING RADIATOR

It Should Not Be Filled to the Top—Timely Tip to Motorists

In filling the cooling system remember that when cylinders become heated the water expands, and that sufficient room must be allowed to take care of all this expansion. Do not fill the radiator to the filling nozzle. If you do the expansion will force the water around the filler cap and cause it to run over the top of radiator and bonnet, giving them a dirty appearance. Frequently when this condition prevails, people are under the impression that the water has boiled over from over-heating, when as a matter of fact, it is simply the result of not allowing for the water's expansion, which, of course, always takes place when the cylinders become heated. Put in only enough water to bring the level to an inch or an inch and a half above the top of the radiator tubes; this will give a room for expansion. Care in connection with this detail will save considerable annoyance. When mud has become splashed upon the radiator and becomes caked on the tubes, or fills up the cells, it should be washed off with hose and water until the radiator is clean. If this is neglected, radiation is defeated, the water will boil and run out of the system, and the motor cannot be expected to perform satisfactorily. Be careful not to get water on the plugs, wires, or magnet, while using the hose. When the water becomes rusty or dirty, flush out the cooling system through the radiator filler and petcock, or water pump by pouring water from an ordinary garden hose into the radiator filler.
