TIGRIS ADVANCE BADLY CONDUCTED

Premier Asquith Admits There Is Reason for Adverse Criticism.

London, July 19.—Premier Asquith intimated in the House of Commons yesterday that there was some basis for the adverse criticism of the conduct of the British expedition in Mesopotamia. After the battle of Ctesiphon last November, he said, Gen. Sir John Nixon, who was then in command, telegraphed that the medical arrangements were quite satisfactory.

"Thousands died," one of the members called out.

Later, Mr. Asquith continued, unofficial reports were received which seemed to point to a very different state of affairs, and a commission was appointed to investigate the whole matter. The report of the commission had been received by the Government of India, which was holding it until the Indian Commander-in-Chief had an opportunity to submit his observations thereon. The commission reported that everything possible was now being done. Regarding the transport facilities, Mr. Asquith said the necessity of attempting to relieve Kut-el-Amara was so urgent that it was thought right to push on the troops in advance of their transport.

The Mesopotamia operations had excited widespread and legitimate interest and anxiety, the Premier concluded, and incidents had occurred which had aroused doubt whether the best means had been adopted to bring about the ends in view. Every step had been taken on the advice of the military authorities, and the defects in the medical and transport services had been remedied.

The Premier's remarks were brought out by demands for publication of the papers in regard to the Mesopotamia and Dardanelles expedition. Mr. Asquith said the papers could not be published without assisting Great Britain's enemies, and prejudicing the operations now in progress in Mesopotamia.

The Premier promised to discuss this subject more at length in the House on Thursday.

Sir Edward Carson, in speaking of the Mesopotamia expedition, said that "thousands of people in this country thought it had been conducted with criminal negligence."

Many Reports of Infantile Paralysis in West Are Unfounded

Amsterdam, via London, July 19.—The Dutch shipping council, which investigated the torpedoing of the Dutch steamer Rijndijk last April 7, off the Scilly Islands, finds that the steamer was struck by a torpedo constructed at Fiume, the naval base of Austria-Hungary, on the Adriatic Sea.

How PLANTS Manage to Resist COLD

THE killing of plant tissue by low temperature is the subject of a bulletin recently published by Mr. W. W. Chandler of the University of Missouri, which includes results of elaborate observations of his own, covering a period of about 10 years, and also a resume of the work done by others in the same line. Exact information as to the conditions under which plant tissue freezes beyond recovery is urgently needed, to serve as the basis of efficient and economical methods of protecting fruit and other crops from frost injury.

Much valuable work has already been done by Goeppert, Sachs, Muller-Thurgau, Molisch, Gorke, Lidforss, Maximow and other Europeans, but comparatively little in the United States; hence Mr. Chandler's investigations are especially noteworthy. Some of the principal results are as follows:

Most tissues are more likely to survive the effects of low temperature on account of a subsequent slow rate of thawing. The chief exceptions to this statement are ripe apples and pears, and the leaves of Agave Americana and lettuce.

In the case of fruit buds, blossoms, and young fruit the rate of thawing appears to be of no importance. This conclusion differs radically from the belief of most horticulturists. Fruit buds and the newly set fruit resists cold better than the half-grown fruit. This is stated especially of peaches.

Although increase in sap density (strength of the sap solutions) increases the power to resist cold, and this can be effected by slow wilting or the partial withholding of water through a long period, it is found that rapid wilting has no such effect.

The most important feature affecting the hardiness of plant tissue is maturity, i. e., the condition of resistance that the plants reach during the winter dormant period. Several other interesting conclusions are drawn from the voluminous observations made on a variety of fruits and vegetables, and the author suggests numerous practical applications.
