HEADS OF NEW YORK "POULTRY TRUST" ARE JAILED FOR CONSPIRACY

Three months in the penitentiary and a fine of $500 was the sentence imposed by Judge Rosalsky in the Court of General Sessions, in New York, on each of the thirteen commission merchants, known as the heads of the "Poultry Trust," and who were found guilty of conspiracy in endeavoring to restrain trade in the poultry business. In sentencing the men Judge Rosalsky declared that they had been found guilty of a mean and despicable crime, and that to let them off with a fine alone would not be justice.

This is the first conviction in New York under the statute providing punishment for conspiracy in restraint of trade, and the first time in the history of the country that a member of a trust has been sent to jail.

THROUGH ONTARIO WITH THE BRITISH-BORN

By Arthur Hawkes

Owen Sound, Aug. 19.—"I walked from Hamilton to Owen Sound before you were born," he said to me, as I looked incredulously at his brown head just sprinkled with grey.

"And you've held on to that Scotch accent ever since?" I queried, for there was a twinkle in his eye that invited you to disregard the thin line between humor and sauciness.

"Yes," he said, "and I'm gonig to stick to the accent as long as ever I can. I brought it from Scotland to Hamilton and from Hamilton to Owen Sound and walked back with it, years before you were born, sir."

"I was born in seventy-one," I ventured, "and it's a long way for shoe leather from Hamilton to Owen Sound."

"Indeed, and it is, and itw as longer by many miles in those days, going round swamps from clearing to clearing in the bush."

"What year was that?" said I.

"It was in fifty-four," said he, "and I was twenty years old."

"And now you're seventy-six?"

He nodded and laughed like a youngster.

"Well," said I, "your tongue speaks the truth, but it's the only thing about you that does. What will you look like when you are up in years?"

Mr. McLauchlan laughed again—it's a habit he has, and rollicked off into a story, Scotch, in design, delightfully Scotch in accent, woefully modern in its religious point of view. Another somebody asked how many votes there were in his biscuit factory. He didn't know. There were nearly 200 employes half of them feminine; for biscuit making and candy production mainly belonged to the sweeter sex.

I pressed this rare specimen of the British immigrant for more about the days that are almost as far back as the flood for those who come across the sea in Royal Georges. In 1854 sailing ships for the emigrant and a walk from Hamilton to Owen Sound.

"Just over there," said Mr. McLauchlan, pointing across the handsome Main street, "was a swamp,crossed by a line of single planks. I saw a man stop off the walk to let a woman pass, and by the time she had got by, he could only get back to the plank by pulling his off his Wellington boots. There were 200 people in Owen Sound then."

Take this from his sket of the two hundred and fifty mile walk from Hamilton to Owen Sound and back, nearly 57 years ago:

"The stopping places wouldn't pass for first-class hotels in these days; but they were comfortable for tired and hungry men. Three of us made the journey, and kept together night as well as day. You couldn't except to get a bed apiece every night or to sleep in fine linen. We have supper, bed and breakfast for 50 cents, and, if you were in the mind, there was a drink or two of whiskey before you slept and another or two after you awoke, all at the 50 cent rate"—a pause—"and not bad whiskey either."

Two hundred people all told in Owen Sound at that time, and now more than two hundred men are on the C. P. R. Dock alone, handling the business with the West that was not in existence when the young Scotchman had his first glimpse of the Georgian Bay.

Ex-Mayor Kennedy came in. He has been a Liberal candidate. He has the jowl of a fighter and he's going to fight against the Americanization of Canada. "A hundred and fifty men in our foundry," said he, "and when the Americans have their way and control our manufactures as well as our farms, we'll have to let the men go; none of it for us."

The McLaughlan has been nearly sixty years doing his share in building up Canadian business independence. Scotch as they are made. Canadian as they are made; he would fain preach his experience to those who are now where he was in the mid-Victorian epoch. There is room and need for this gospel. A few hours after talking with him I saw a Londoner rise in a big public meeting and ask whether reciprocity would make his food cost less. He was a revelation, largely because of how he used the word "food." It was a voice from London, strangely attuned to the atmosphere in which it was heard.

Did it ever strike you that while we often complain about the high cost of living we never hear about scarcity of food? I mean in the sense in which we were all too familiar with it in Britain. This man has not begun to realize that the whole shift of things is different in Canada from what it is in his native place—London. His question was an echo from, oh, so far away, and on the crowd of Britishers who heard, it produced a curious effect. They laughed at him, told him to sit down, and generally exhibited a superiority to his point of view that was a mighty contract to the anxious silence that would have signalized such a question before such an audience in London.

And when they had got rid of the questioner, who, they were sure, was talking about minor things, they turned too, and formed a branch of the Canada British Association, whose object is "to promote among those of British birth and origin the sense of Canadian Nationality, as an increasing power within the British Empire, and to preserve and extend the Canadian and British channels of commerce, on which the prosperity of the Dominion has been founded."

Reciprocity will destroy the prospect of inter-Imperial preferences and without a preference in the other parts of the British Empire, no industry, agricultural or otherwise, located in Canada, would enjoy any advantage over a rival industry situated south of the border.

THE BAPTIST CONVENTION

Much Business Done at Yesterday's Session of the Gathering, in Bridgetown—Baptists Urged to Pay Better.

Bridgetown, N. S., Aug. 21.—A large attendance was on hand at the opening of the business session of the Baptist convention this morning. The Rev. Prof. Gilmour, McMaster University, Toronto, was introduced and addressed the convention. His address rang true to the best things in Christian life and of Canadianism and British ideals.

Rev. Edwin Crowell, D. D., reported for the committee on union with the Disciples of Christ. This committee advised that the policy of co-operation on home mission fields and through the interchange of fraternal delegates be continued.

Rev. I. W. Potter explained that this co-operation on home mission fields looks to the providing of pastoral care for small churches of both bodies which might not otherwise be carried on.

Rev. W. E. McIntyre, D. D., urged that no arrangements be entered into which may in any way hamper the work of the Baptists.

The committee on minimum pastors' salaries reported through E. M. Sipprell of St. John. The committee endorsed the principle of the proposition of Rev. J. W. Brown, that an effort be made to increase pastors' salaries to a minimum of eight hundred dollars and a parsonage. Dr. Brown then presented his plan. He had examined the salaries of 216 pastors in the convention. The average salary of Baptist ministers is $699.31; 146 pastors receive less than $800 salary; 37 pastors receive $1,000; over 70 receive $800 or over. It will require $25,800 to bring up all pastors salaries to $800. Dr. Brown proposed that the entire membership of the Baptist churches pay a subscription of at least 20 cents per member to create a fund to supplement all salaries now below the minimum. All churches receiving aid from this fund are to raise not less than $500 and a free house. The treasurers of denominational funds are to be the custodians of this supplementary fund. One individual in each association to be responsible for bringing this subject before each church in the association. Dr. Brown eloquently urged that the denomination rise to the full obligation of their responsibility to deal justly by their pastors. He urged that the honor and the reputation of the denomination is involved in the matter. No pastor can do his best work while he is cramped as to the necessities of life. Dr. Brown says he has become cognizant of facts touching the conditions under which some pastors are living which, if told, would rouse indignation on the part of the people. He showed that the average amount contributed towards the pastors stipend's by the Methodists of Eastern Canada was $6.19 per member. If this amount was given by the Baptists many of the small salaries would be raised to the minimum proposed, apart from any outside help.

Dr. Brown's proposition was seconded by the Rev. A. G. Barton, of Springhill, who added valuable information concerning the methods being worked in England to increase pastors' salaries.

Rev. G. Goodspeed urged that the wisest possible consideration be given to this matter if it takes a week to do it.

Rev. E. M. Saunders rose to full height of the eloquence of his strongest days as he compared the convention of today with those of fifty years ago. He paid a glowing tribute to the ministry of today and declared that never in his life had he heard a grander presentation of the Gospel of Christ than in the two grand sermons of Sunday.

Rev. S. T. Langille urged immediate action toward increasing salaries as he does not expect to be in the pasforate many years more.
