ABOUT LONDON TOWN.

Years ago the custom of moving votes of thanks to retiring members of the City Council was carried to what was thought by many to be a ridiculous extreme, and some members determined to break up the habit once for all. "Years ago" does not mean a century in this case, because the affair happened about 1881. Still it is long enough ago to become ancient history. In those days an alderman, whether retiring voluntarily or because he was defeated at the polls, had recorded a motion expressing the esteem in which he had always been held, and setting forth his value as an alderman and the loss the city had sustained by his removal. Then there was the usual deprecatory "did it all for the city" reply. When there were about a dozen aldermen retiring, this ceremony occupied considerable time and became very boring. The time for the last meeting of the year in question came, and just as the usual votes of thanks were about to be entered on the town colored whitewasher, Mr. Moorhead, walked into the council chamber with his brushes and pail, and clothes spattered with whiting. It took the aldermen about two and a half seconds to comprehend the situation, and the meeting broke up amid roars of laughter. The popularity of the vote of thanks has never rallied from the shock.

Lifeguardsman Burnand, a warrior of the Soudan, and for several years with No. 1 Company, R.C.R.I., is the hero in a little story entitled "Monkeying With a Monkey." Mr. Burnand, who is a splendid specimen of physical manhood, and a cricketer held in high esteem, is no longer a soldier, and has been leading a civilian's life for about a year. In company with a city official he stopped at an East End hotel the other day. The proprietor of the house has a menagerie in connection, comprising a monkey, a coon and a deer. Like some men who make monkeys of themselves, this particular monkey has a fondness for beer. In its sober moments it will shake hands and make itself very agreeable. The guardsman put his finger in the bars of the cage and the monkey shook hands and grinned. Then Mr. Burnand went to another part of the building, where he had business, and while he was away the bartender gave the monkey a glass of beer. It went to his head immediately, and the animal began to act in a very disorderly manner and shook the bars of the cage savagely. When Mr. Burnand returned he was not aware that the monkey had been indulging in alcoholic stimulants, and once more put his finger into the cage to play with the animal. With a shriek it buried its teeth into the bone, and could not be induced to let go until a bystander pried open its jaws with a foot rule. The wound had to be cauterized by a doctor, and Mr. Burnand vows that before he shakes hands with another monkey it must make affidavit that it has signed the pledge.

It does not pay for unprotected women to make remarks about the appearance of the rough element, even if the element in question is dressed in a way to excite comment, and the comment is passed in the lowest of tones. Bums are very sensitive about their personal appearance, no matter how shabby or uncouth they may be, and are apt to resent it. A couple of Waterloo street ladies noticed a particularly tough looking specimen of humanity slouching along the street as they neared their home the other evening. Their house had been burglarized some time before, and his presence in the neighborhood caused one to make a remark about his very sinister appearance. The tough apparently understood the drift of the remark, and mumbled an indistinct reply. The ladies went into their house, and a few minutes later were horrified to see pressed against the window of the sitting-room the horrible face of the man who had passed them. It was only a minute, but it was long enough to send the women almost into hysterics.

There was a time when Sir Isaac Pitman, or plain Isaac, as he was then called, could make alterations in his text books with impunity. Now the writers of Sir Isaac Pitman's shorthand, especially in Great Britain, apparently control Sir Isaac and his system. A short time ago Mr. Pitman proposed some changes, which immediately brought a phonetic storm ratting around his ears. The proposed changes included: (1) Three grammalogues—for, every and ever—lose their hooks without changing the letter. (2) Three others—over, either and other—are turned over to the opposite curve. (3) Three letters now written with the large hooks—fl, vl and shl (up)—would be written with small hooks. (4) The hookless "vr" is introduced for convenience in joining. (5) In addition, one word in four or five hundred received a different outline, on the average a better one. Out of 1,240 phonographic teachers to whom the question of alteration was submitted, only 132 felt sufficient interest in the subject to reply, and only about half of them thought that the alterations would be improvements. The Reporters' Magazine, an English shorthand monthly, has this to say of the proposition: "* * * However we leave the reference of the matter to a committee of phonographic experts. Therefore, as the improvements have been condemned over and over again by phonographic experts in public meetings, in conference, in association meetings, etc., and as no single competent phonographer, excepting sundry fossils, have said a good word for the proposals, the reference to a committee of experts settles the matter. It would be well if we could at the same time have pitched overboard such tenth edition lumber as still clogs the working of the system; such as the ridiculous restrictions placed upon the use of the stroke 'ing,' and the adoption of that tenth edition abortion of the small right angle 'wi' for wi" ("way" and diphthong I).

"GOOD-BYE."

The Empire's Valedictory to Its Readers

TORONTO, Feb. 5.—The Empire will tomorrow bid farewell to its readers in an editorial announcement headed "Good-Bye."

The article says that an amalgamation having been effected between the Empire and the Toronto Mail, both of these papers cease publication in their present shape today, and a new paper to be called "The Daily Mail and Empire," will make its first appearance tomorrow. Accounts due to the Empire remain payable to the Empire, and subscribers having paid in advance will receive the new paper.

COURT DUFFERIN, I. O. F.

Annual Reunion—Addresses by High Court Officers.

The annual reunion and social of Court Dufferin, No. 4, I. O. F., was held last evening in the rear hall, Duffield Block. The officers of the court were agreeably surprised by the large attendance, the hall being crowded. The programme provided was an excellent one, and some of the numbers were several times encored. The pleasing occurrence of the evening was the two addresses given by High Chief Ranger of Ontario Harry A. Collins and High Inspector C. C. Whale, of Toronto. Both expound the predominant features of Independent Forestry in a terse and clever manner. Mr. Collins, since assuming the head of the order in Ontario, has been a busy man, his forcible and excellent speeches, making him largely in demand by the district courts throughout the jurisdiction. His humorous anecdotes last evening were very laughable. His colleague, C. C. Whale, also related the many advantages to be gained by joining the Foresters. He stated he was happy to be present at such a gathering in London, which was the home of Independent Forestry. Short speeches were also delivered by Rev. Archdeacon Davis, past high chaplain, and Mr. Atwell Fleming, high treasurer of Ontario. The following was the programme:

Address	Alex. Aikman
Instrumental	Master T. Halem
Song	Harry Lenox
Song	Miss Palladino
Limelight views	Ed. Crawford
Address	Harry A. Collins
Song	W. Shipman
Instrumental	Master Ralph Lenox
Selection	Mr. Williamson
Song	W. Shipman
Instrumental	Master T. Halem
Musical selection	Messrs. Williamson and Hullett
Address	C. C. Whale
Recitation	Harry A. Collins
Song	W. Shipman
Song	Harry Lenox
Addresses	Rev. Archdeacon Davis and A. Fleming

The court is to be congratulated on the success of the reunion. It might be stated here that Mr. Harry Pratt, of this court, is the oldest Forester belonging to the order, while Mr. Alex. Aikman will reach the age of 70 in April next, and then be released from paying future assessment $100
