PARSONS' PILLS

These pills were a wonderful discovery. No others like them in the world. Will positively cure or relieve all manner of disease. The information around each box is worth ten times the cost of a box of pills. Find out about them, and you will always be thankful. One pill a dose. Parsons' Pills contain nothing harmful, are easy to take, and cause no inconvenience. One box will do more to purify the blood and cure chronic ill health than $5 worth of any other remedy yet discovered. If people could be made to realize the marvelous power of these pills, they would walk 100 miles to get a box if they could not be had without. Sent by mail for 25 cents in stamps. Illustrated pamphlet free, postpaid. Send for it; the information is very valuable. I. S. JOHNSON & CO., 21 Custom House Street, BOSTON, MASS.

GRAY FUR

BY E. GERARD.

III.

Clara walked into the room which had been turned into a temporary chapelle ardente, and almost violently she flung down the wreath on to the bier; then, without a glance at the little dead child, she turned, and quickly ascending the staircase, re-entered her chamber and set about the preparations for her departure with feverish haste.

She would not tarry a day longer in this great house where there was no room for her, nor among these great people who would have nothing more in common with her, not even their grief. Her pride had been slow to wake up, but now, once roused, it would not go to sleep again. She felt as though every morsel she tasted in this house would choke her, as if the very roof which sheltered her were heavy and oppressive. A few minutes ago she would have been terrified at the notion of having to take a journey of many hundred miles unprotected, she who never yet in her life had traveled a mile alone. But now she had no room left for fear, and was only conscious of a burning desire to be gone.

She made all her preparations with breathless energy, and packed till late into the night, having arranged to depart at early dawn next morning.

When at last she rose to her feet, having just locked the solitary trunk which contained the whole of her not very extensive worldly possessions, it had struck 11 o'clock.

Clara contemplated her work with some satisfaction, and felt proud of herself, as a practical and experienced traveler. Oh, she felt quite equal to going all over the world alone, without protection. She was perfectly well able to take care of herself and avoid all the usual accidents which occur to timid or silly women. She took some pleasure in reviewing all those unpleasant possibilities which she meant to avoid by her prudence and energy. Firstly, murder, the most decidedly unpleasant of all the unpleasant contingencies which usually suggest themselves to timorous females. Unpleasant, certainly, but then so easy to be avoided, if only the unprotected female were careful not to step into the traveling compartment occupied by the mysterious villain, easy to be recognized by his coal black beard and the false glitter of his dark eye, even if the dagger did not happen to be peeping out from under his cloak—nothing could in fact be simpler, and why dirty one's boots by walking in the puddle when there is a dry road alongside?

Secondly, there was robbery to be considered, not quite so easy to provide against, since pickpockets, in particular, she knew were in the habit of adopting all sorts of strange disguises, without any distinctive badge of their trade to mark them. But here again, after half a minute's reflection, the shrewd damsel discovered an infallible antidote to this evil. No one need really have their pocket picked unless they pleased. You had only to put your money—not in your pocket, but somewhere else; and with a smile of compassion for those unpractical people who allowed their pockets to be picked, Clara put her hand into hers in order to draw out the stiff yellow envelope containing her salary.

She had not thought of it since the moment Count Proloff had handed it over to her, and was somewhat dismayed to find her pocket empty. This was scarcely a promising beginning to the unprotected journey. She must either have dropped it in the gallery or left it below near the little coffin.

It was distasteful to Clara to have to return to that room thus, in the dead of night, but there was no other alternative; so, taking a taper stand, she made the best of her way through the silent passages, feeling rather like a thief bound on some guilty errand.

The wax torches were still burning brightly round the little catafalque, and nodding in one corner was a drowsy domestic, who gazed at her with sleepy incomprehension as she proceeded to examine the flowers on the coffin. Her wreath lay half buried under newer and fresher garlands, adorned with richer bows of ribbon, offerings from wealthy neighbors which had been placed above hers. Even here she was not wanted, it seemed.

A minute's search, however, brought the yellow envelope to light, concealed in a fold of the draperies, and clutching it tightly in her hand, Clara stood still for a moment to take a last look at the dead child, which, bedded among that profusion of blossom, looked almost like another white flower.

It was a sweet little face she gazed upon, and Clara had dearly loved her little pupil; yet now, in the revulsion of wounded feeling which burned within her, she gazed at it coldly, almost hardily, and there were no tears in her eyes. Her jaundiced glance seemed to detect on those baby lips some shade of the same unapproachable hauteur she had seen on the father's face; the cold, white forehead looked as icily proud as those of the canvas ancestors in the ball room.

The incident with the money had given Clara something of a fright, as she reflected how terrible would have been her position had the money been really lost or stolen. What could she have done on finding herself destitute, so many hundred miles away from her home? She felt sure that she would rather have died than to apply again to the cold, haughty, courteous master of the house. How to avoid a recurrence of this danger was her principal thought, as she regained her room and counted over the crisp bank notes. She laid aside a portion of the money, just what would suffice for paying her expenses to K——, where she would reach the railway, and all her worst troubles would be over; but the bulk of her little fortune she wished to secure beyond all danger of loss or theft. Of course she would not put it in her trunk; boxes sometimes went astray, or were occasionally tampered with in Russia; then she passed all her articles of clothing in successive review as suitable receptacles for the notes.

She had heard of people carrying about their money in the stocking, but this must be extremely uncomfortable, Clara thought; also sewing it into stays, as bad heroines are often made to do in novels, was scarcely a pleasant idea; then her eyes fell on the traveling clothes which lay ready on the bed—a gray merino cloak lined and trimmed with gray Astrackan fur, and with muff and cap to match. Might she not sew her money into the muff? or, better still, into the cap itself? for "a muff might be dropped or lost, whereas I could not well manage to lose my cap unless I lost my head as well," she reflected.

Clara felt it to be almost a stroke of genius, as she unpicked the gray silk lining and introduced the precious notes into the opening. She need not take them out till she reached K——, where she was to rest one night, and in the meantime they were as safe as safe.

This fur suit, the only handsome article of dress she possessed, had been a present from Countess Proloff only some days previously. "You do not know our Russian winters, my dear," she had said to the girl kindly. "You will require something warm to wrap yourself up with in our sledging parties." This had been last week, and she had then felt like a daughter of the house almost, while now she was a poor outcast, sent forth alone into the wide world.

IV.

Two days after his departure from St. Petersburg, Hugo Weyprecht found himself pacing the road at the entrance of a small country town, as he waited for the arrival of the diligence.

He had been dropped here by some other conveyance earlier in the day, for his mission had involved various stoppages and zigzagerings from off the main track, much bargaining and wrangling with cunning Jewish contractors or obtuse country bumpkins. Now he was about to take the regular diligence as far as K——, where his business was to terminate.

He was finding the time of waiting very long, for there was absolutely nothing in this filthy little town to attract even the passing notice of a stranger. The frost had somewhat relaxed, but the air was chill and the atmosphere dense with the presage of an approaching snow storm, which, in the shape of thick white mist, brooded over the place, obscuring the view and giving to the nearest and commonest objects a far off unreal appearance. Like the breath of some colossal monster it was floating everywhere in fleecy flakes, intangible and transparent, yet distorting each object within its range: giving to the stunted willows on either side of the road the guise of crooked specters, and to the hooded crows flying homeward to roost the semblance of huge black griffins.

"We shall have snow before long," muttered the young man to himself. "If only the roads are not blocked up! It would be awkward to be delayed on the way, and I shall not breathe freely again till I have got rid of"— He did not finish the phrase, which he had spoken half aloud, for the sound of approaching bells had arrested his attention.

"The diligence at last!" he exclaimed with relief, as he distinguished a dark mass advancing toward him.

Fitfully moreover through the fog appeared the figures of three white horses, looking no more substantial than if formed of the floating mists around. But it was not the diligence Hugo Weyprecht recognized as he stepped aside to let the phantom equipage pass by, but a small light open carriage in which reclined a single figure.

Hugo could only distinguish a vision of golden hair, very wide open blue eyes, and a slender youthful figure, which, like everything else, seemed wrapped in curling gray mists as she floated by. She looked like the queen of the mists herself.

So at least thought Hugo Weyprecht, as for full two minutes he stood staring open mouthed at the retreating carriage. Then he began retracing his steps toward the post house, in the faint hope of catching another glimpse of the beautiful vision. Evidently some great lady traveling in her own carriage, he thought, a Russian princess most likely, and he gave a sigh and then smiled a little at his own folly. What had he to do with Russian princesses? The chances were he would never in his life come across her again, and it could do him no good even to hear her name.

ODDS AND ENDS.

In the bright lexicon of youth there is no such word as fail.

CAUSING AN IMPRESSION.—Many cures made by B. B. B. have been those of chronic sufferers known throughout the district through the very fact of their having been afflicted for years. This naturally creates a strong impression in favor of this valuable family medicine.

Strange it is that when the rain comes down in sheets no one ever cares to wait to wrap himself up in them.

AN OLD TIME FAVORITE.—The season of green fruits and summer drinks is the time when the worst forms of cholera morbus and bowel complaints prevail. As a safeguard, Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry should be kept at hand. For 30 years it has been the most reliable remedy.

My son, this life is the chrysalis state of man. Be sure there are no butterflies on you, then go ahead.

A DYING WISH to try Burdock Blood Bitters is often expressed by some sufferer upon whom all other treatment has failed. Marvelous results have often been obtained by the use of this grand restorative and purifying tonic under these circumstances.

The man who rules his own house is greater than he who painteth the town.

BE PREPARED.—Many of the worst attacks of cholera morbus, cramps, dysentery and colic come suddenly in the night and the most speedy and prompt means must be used against them. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the remedy. Keep it at hand for emergencies. It never fails to cure or relieve.

It is no use to put on the brake when the wagon is upset.

A SAD LOSS.—Loss of appetite and the attendant low spirits, dullness and debility, are of very frequent occurrence. Regulate the bowels and improve circulation and digestion by using Burdock Blood Bitters whenever these symptoms are present.

A good man with bad friends is liable to be misunderstood.

INDISPENSABLE.—"I have used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for summer complaints and have given it to my friends. It gives instant relief when all other remedies fail. I would not be without it in my house." Mrs. T. Boll, Weidman, Ont.

Flies don't bother the busy man.

May to Bell.

Dear Bell: I'll write you a short letter
To say I'm wonderfully better;
How much that means you ought to know,
Who saw me just one month ago—
Thin, nervous, fretful, white as chalk,
Almost too weak to breathe or talk;
Head throbbing, as if fit for breaking,
A weary, ever-present aching.
But now life seems a different thing;
I feel as glad as bird on wing!
I say, and fear no contradiction,
That Pierce's Favorite Prescription
Is grand! Why, I'd have died without it!
Ma thinks there's no mistake about it.
It's driven all my ills away;
Just come and see! Yours ever, MAY.

Many a fellow has tumbled down when he thought he had slipped up.

What a Dunce!

I suffered with fever, hot head and foul breath,
With stomach disordered—was sick unto death.
I bore it a week—surely I was a dunce—
Then I took a few "Pellets"—they cured me at once.

What a dunce, indeed, to neglect such a remedy and suffer a week, when quick relief could have been found in Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets.

A Kansas school ma'am has introduced a new feature in her school. When one of the girls misses a word the boy who spells it gets permission to kiss her. As a result the boys are improving rapidly.

Golden Medical Discovery.

Thoroughly cleanse the blood, which is the fountain of health, by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vigorous strength, and soundness of constitution will be established.

Golden Medical Discovery cures all humors, from the common pimple, blotch, or eruption, to the worst Scrofula, or King's Evil. Especially has it proven its efficacy in curing Salt-rheum or Tetter, Fever-sores, Hip-joint Disease, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Enlarged Glands, and Fating Ulcers.

Golden Medical Discovery cures Consumption (which is Scrofula of the Lungs), by its wonderful blood-purifying, invigorating, and nutritive properties. For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Bronchitis, Severe Coughs, Asthma, and kindred affections, it is a sovereign remedy. It promptly cures the severest coughs.

For Torpid Liver, Biliousness, or "Liver Complaint," Dyspepsia, and Indigestion, it is an unequalled remedy. Sold by druggists.

PIERCE'S PELLETS—Anti-Bilious and Cathartic. Sugar coated, 25 cts. a vial, by druggists.

"Eating Crow."

During the "unpleasantness" between the state and England there were located on the opposite sides of the Niagara river a British and an American fort, and during an armistice the soldiers of both garrisons were accustomed to go hunting. Among the American troops was one long, lank, stuttering specimen of the genius Yankee, who would persist, in spite of orders to the contrary, in going across the river on his hunting expeditions. One day when on the Canada side he had had poor luck and got nothing, but resolved not to go back entirely empty handed. While passing through the grounds of an English gentleman, he spied a crow, and, blazing away, brought it down.

The Englishman had witnessed the shot and resolved to punish the offender for poaching on his private grounds. As the Yankee was loading his gun he approached, and, complimenting him on his good shot, asked to look at his gun. The unsuspecting Yankee handed it to him, and the Briton, bringing the gun to his shoulder and covering the Yankee, abused him for trespassing on his grounds, and ordered him, on pain of death, to take a bite out of the crow. The soldier begged and pleaded, but to no avail. The Englishman had the "drop" on him, so he finally bit a piece from the breast of the crow. The Englishman, after warning him to keep off his premises in the future, handed him back his gun and bade him clear out.

No sooner was his rifle returned than he covered the Briton and ordered him to finish the crow. Then it was the Englishman's turn to beg off, but the Yankee was firm, and the Englishman, with many a wry face, did succeed in downing several bites of the unsavory bird.

His wounded honor being appeased, the Yankee betook himself back to the fort. The Englishman the next day went to the American commander and told his version of the affair, and demanded that the culprit be punished. From the description given the American officer knew the offender must have been the stuttering soldier, and ordered him to be brought before them. When he came in the captain asked him if he had ever seen "the gentleman" before. The Yankee shifted uneasily from one foot to the other, and, after several attempts, finally answered that he had. "When and under what circumstances?" asked the officer. "I d-d-dined with him y-y-yesterday, captin," stuttered the soldier. The story goes that his wit saved the soldier from punishment.—Atlanta Constitution.
