THE CHILDREN OF PEACE.

The Sharon Society at Loggerheads About Property.

The Newmarket Era says: "An unfortunate difficulty appears to have arisen in the society at Sharon known as "the Children of Peace," and which during this week assumed the proportions that looked as if the name was likely to become a misnomer. To tell the whole story would be a lengthy one, and arises out of a question of right of possession between the trustees on the one side and certain members of the society who claim to be heirs. A struggle for forcible possession ensued, and this led to an action being brought before a magistrate's court; but happily for all concerned, the case was adjusted out of court, the morning and afternoon services meanwhile, until the question of title is decided by a court of law, to continue without let or hindrance of either party as heretofore

A Plan of Taking Up Collection.

In the Central Presbyterian church, Buffalo, N. Y., small boxes, with a slit in the top and glass in the sides, are fastened to the backs of the pews. Before the sermon the pastor steps to the desk, and after repeating I. Cor. xvi. 2, "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come," says, "Let us further worship God by contributing to His service." Then is heard all over the house the dropping of the change into the boxes. It requires but a minute.

OLIVER TWIST AGAIN.

Dickens' Pathetic Story Reproduced in Real Life.

(From the Cleveland Leader.)

The Kansas City Journal says: "It is not generally known that a successor to Fagin has an establishment in this country, but such is the case. There is at present living in this city a young man whose life and adventures would serve as a foundation for Dickens' great story, 'Oliver Twist,' if Oliver had not been embalmed in history so many years since. The first recollection he has is of a residence in a house on Sullivan street in New York, where a great number of other boys were also kept. The children ranged in age from six to thirteen years, and were under the care of a man known as Frank Coon. The boys were taught by the master to pick locks, steal, rob and assassinate, and, in fact, were a class of youthful Thugs. They were turned loose to prey every night, and kept inside the house every day. This particular young man escaped from the gang in 1869, when he was about nine years of age, and made his way as far west as Cleveland, Ohio, where he was picked up on the streets by Mr. Jay Odell, a Christian gentleman, and taken home. The boy was educated by his benefactor, and in 1875, being well grown, was furnished money to return to New York to discover some clue to his parentage. He had been in the city about a week when he was again found by Coon and taken to a house where he was imprisoned for a month. One night the youthful Twist again escaped confinement and returned to Cleveland, where he was employed in the office of the county auditor until last November, during which month he left Cleveland for Kansas city, and is now employed in a store here. The young man has employed a private detective to look up Coon, who he thinks is now in Chicago, and also to trace his parentage. Coon was seen in Cleveland by his former charge four years ago and followed some distance, the boy intending to cause his arrest. Before finding an officer Coon was lost in the crowd."

The young man above referred to is Joseph P. Kosell, and he is about 21 years old. During most of his life his home has been in this city with Mr. Odell, or some member of his family, and his life is indeed a sad one. Several years ago Mrs. Odell and her son were returning home from an entertainment one bitter cold night in midwinter. When near the Central market-house they heard a little child crying, and, looking for it, found a wee-faced little boy shivering bitterly and crying as if his heart would break. He could not speak a word of English and she could not talk his language, but the tongue of suffering was readily understood by her motherly heart, and they took the little fellow home. He was dirty and thinly clad, and was evidently a street waif, making his living by begging and fiddling. They saw that he belonged to one of the numerous gangs of Italians who then infested the city. The family kept him some time and then sent him to a relative in Lorain county, where he was sent to a country school and taught English. When he had advanced a little he was brought back here and sent to the public schools. There his former master, Franc Kohn, a German Jew, discovered him and made an attempt to recover possession of him. Kohn was hived with a nest of thieves and prostitutes in the old Italian rendezvous at the corner of Lake and Wood, which the police afterwards cleared of its human occupants and fire cleansed and purified into a vacant lot, which has remained vacant until this spring. Defeated in his attempt to recover the little fellow, and routed out of the west, Kohn disappeared.

Joseph lived with the Odells until 1875. All these years he had been very anxious to find his parents. He had a distinct recollection of being picked up in the street by this man Kohn, when playing near his home in a small village, he thought, near Naples, Italy. The man kept him and made him play a fiddle, with a lot of other children, some older than himself. After a while they went aboard a ship, and he remembers being in Paris playing and begging in charge of this man; they remained there some time, and then all went aboard a sailing vessel with a lot of people who lived in the hold of the vessel and came to New York. There they stayed awhile and then went to Detroit, and from there to Cleveland. He had been here but a short time when picked up by Mrs. Odell.

All the while he was here he would seek out every educated Italian who came to the city and inquire about the region of Naples in hopes of getting some clue to his parents or home. He remembered his father and mother, a brother and sister, and thought his father had something to do with a church, but was not a minister, but had charge in some way. The desire grew on him so that in 1875 the Odells fitted him out with good clothes and some money, and he started, believing he could work his way to Naples from New York as a sailor. He went to New York to set sail, and while looking for a chance Kohn collared him in the street and claimed him. He took away his money and clothes and dressed him shabbily and set him at the old trade, trying to make a thief of him. While tending a peanut stand under the surveillance of Kohn he became acquainted with an old gentleman to whom at odd times he told his story and asked help. The old man assisted him a little, and he ran away from Kohn and made his way back to this city, walking nearly all the way.

Here he remained with the Odells until last spring, when he went west to seek his fortune. His benefactors here speak in the highest terms of him. Years of experience with him satisfy them that he is scrupulously honest. They say he is smart, bright and affectionate by nature, and that his strange life and bad teaching have utterly failed at corrupting him, and they incline to the belief that remarkable good and pure blood mingles in his veins. All here who know him speak well of him, and wish him abundant success in life, that he may some day clear up the mystery shrouding his early days. It is sad to think that it is quite probable the rascal Kohn or Kuhm, or whatever the tall, dark, long-bearded brute's name is who stole him, will never be punished for his crime.

A Requiem.

Thou hast lived in pain and woe,
Thou hast lived in grief and fear;
Now thine heart can dread no blow,
Now thine eyes can shed no tear:
Storms round us shall beat and rave;
Thou art sheltered in the grave.

Thou for long, long years hast borne,
Bleeding through life's wilderness,
Heavy loss and wounding scorn;
Now thine heart is burdenless:
Vainly rest for ours we crave;
Thine is quiet in the grave.

We must toil with pain and care,
We must front tremendous Fate,
We must fight with dark Despair;
Thou dost dwell in solemn state,
Couched triumphant, calm and brave,
In the ever-holy grave.

TORONTO, April 14, 1880.

I hereby certify that I have examined samples of John Labatt's India Pale Ale sent to me for analysis by James Good & Co., agents for this city, and find it to be perfectly sound, containing no ascetic acids, impurities or adulterations, and can strongly recommend it as perfectly pure and a very superior malt liquor. HENRY H. CROFT.

BEAVER HALL HILL, Montreal, Dec. 20, 1879.

I hereby certify that I have analyzed several samples of India Pale Ale and XXX Stout from the brewery of John Labatt, London, Ont. I find them to be remarkably sound ales, brewed from pure malt and hops. I have examined both the March and October brewings, and find them of uniform quality. They may be recommended to invalids or convalescents where malt beverages are required as tonic. Signed, JOHN B. EDWARDS, Phy., Professor of Chemistry and Public Analyst.
