MOUNTAIN MUSINGS.

Our lowland marts and marble domes
Still craven vassels gave,
But never yet on mountain top
Was born or dwelt a slave.
On mountain top the prophet first
God's awful mandate bore:
On mountain peak the dove did rest
That flew the deluge o'er.
Then ye whose heart doth weary beat,
With care or sorrow riven,
Come, climb with me Slieve Callan's brow;
And let your thoughts, like Titan's now
Ascend from thence to Heaven!

The scholar hath a quiet look
Within his cloister cell,
He poreth o'er some goodly book
Till peals the vesper bell.
But though his life unruffled flows,
Like gentle streams that glide
All smooth and still, through level plains,
With sunshine on their tide,
That student pale I envy not—
Such guise ill suiteth me:
Oh better far the wave-tossed lake,
The pine crown crag, the forest brake,
And step o'er heather free!

The trickling rill that cools your lips,
Soft flowing through the glen;
Or else the springs that burst from rocks,
Icy tears from rugged men;
Herb Cyprus wine and flavor sweet,
Or stoup of Mayvolie;
Preach ever abbot [illegible] hills,
So true a homily:
Then in their sabbath solitude
Go, often meditate;
And when their lesson right is read,
The valley slops them lowly tread,
A wiser man in heart and head,
To wrestle with your fate!

Miscellaneous Selections.

THE DYING SOLDIER'S LAST PRAYER.

In the evening of the 5th of November, 1854, after the glorious victory of Inkermann, there was found in the inclosure formed by the tents of our brave allies a large number of killed and wounded; the Russians were the most numerous. The English had already collected theirs and were helping the French to raise their soldiers who had fallen on that bloody field. The earth was strewed with corpses. Some of the faces seemed to smile, some seemed to sleep, others looked fierce, some had received the mortal blow whilst in the act of tearing the cartridge, and still remained kneeling, convulsively grasping their weapon; the arms of some were raised, as if they sought even in dying to deal a blow, or as if they were uttering a prayer with their last breath. The wind blew strongly, and the moon, darkened every now and then by thick clouds, burst forth at intervals, and illumined this sad spectacle seeming to reanimate the long rows of dead bodies.

The silence of the night was disturbed by the cries of the poor creatures who writhed in the last agonies of death, and by the distant rumbling of the Russian batteries, still sending forth shots which touched only the corpses of the slain. Here and there men bearing litters, walked over the battle field, seeking and carrying off the survivors.

At the moment that one of these litters, approached, borne and escorted by soldiers, preceded by a woman with a lantern, near a heap of bodies horribly mutilated, a voice cried feebly, "To me my friends!" It was a young foot soldier; a shot had terribly torn his side; he was just about to die. "You cannot bear me hence," said he, "I know that my last moment is fast approaching, but I am glad to see friendly faces before my reason forsakes me. * * * * I have a great favor to ask, and I hope that one of you will be preserved to accomplish it." Then, perceiving the woman, 'Oh! Madam, God will preserve you for this mission; you will go to my poor mother, you will console her, for woman alone know how to use words which can heal a wounded heart. Tell her that her son died like a soldier; tell her also that he died a Christian. Take her this New Testament, which some unknown friend gave me when we were embarking. Tell my mother that this book has made of a bad person, of a swearer, of a profligate man, a new creature; it has discovered to him the abyss into which he was plunged, it has shewn him the means of salvation by the grace of God, and through faith in the merits of a Saviour, it has been a succour to him in day of trouble, and it has given him in his last moments the courage necessary to appear with calmness before his last great trial—the heavenly tribunal. You will find my mother in the Market of the Innocents, at Paris. She will have received the fatal news, she will be inconsolable; but you will give her this message of peace; you will read it with her; you will embrace all my loved ones for me, and Isidore Briche will thank you for it, in begging you to unite with him in his last prayer."

The hardest and most unbelieving heart could not have resisted the last request of the dying man. These soldiers, who had doubtless faced without flinching the immense perils of that day, fell on their knees by the side of the sufferer.

The woman had passed her arm under the heavy head of the soldier. "O our God," said he. "Thou all good and almighty. Thou who has taught me to pray, bless Thou my mother, console her, forget the wanderings of my youth; grant to her the same knowledge of thyself, that Thou has given to me; grant that my brothers and sisters may learn Thy ways. Take care of these brave men whom Thou hast sent to me in answer to my earnest prayer; keep them from the misery of living far from Thee; assist this woman in the work that I have given her to do. And now, my God, I thank Thee that Thou hast opened to me the door of life. May thy blessing rest on those pious Christians who are distributing thy Word to the soldiers, and on those, also, who came to bring that Word into our camp. I thank Thee, I thank Thee for Thy boundless mercies!"

He was silent, and the pale light of the moon lit up his dying but happy face; his spirit was fast passing away; the soldiers were thoughtful and silent; the woman in tears. The sufferer perceived her, 'You will remember my name," said he, "because it is written on the first page of my Testament." * * * * * He was silent again; his features expressed the sufferings he was undergoing. The sergent approached him: "I shall write before to-morrow to Madam Briche,' said he; 'my handwriting is known to her, & will not alarm her, I shall be able by degrees to break the bad news to her; and, on our return, if God brings us back we shall able to finish the work of consolation which you have committed to us." "Thank you, sergeant; when all is over, you will take this book, for I shall keep it to the end, which not far off. Stay near me with your wife, the rest can leave me; I cannot profit by their kind attentions; they will be more useful elsewhere." At a sign from Robert they departed, and he knelt down near his wife to assist supporting their young friend. Soon the blood began to flow from the mouth of the dying man, the death rattle was heard, delirium followed. An hour thus passed. At length his senses returned for a moment, he feebly murmured, "Pardon—my mother,—thanks—my God." His head fell backward, he was no more. The young woman leant towards him, gave him the last kiss, and took from his hands—already growing cold—the book which had led him to eternal life.

"No one would take you for what you are," said an old fashioned gentleman a day or two ago to a young would be dandy who had more hair than brains. "Why," asked Joe immediately. "Because they can't see your ears."

There is a time when thou mayest say nothing, and a time when thou mayest say something, but there never will be a time when thou shouldst say all things.

Good actions once resolved, like fixed stars, should hold one and the same station of firmness, and should not be subject to irregular and retrograde motions.

It is the part of a wise man to foresee misfortunes, and to prevent them before they come; of a valiant man to order them when they do come.

Learning is the temperance of youth the comfort of old age, and the only sure guide to honor and preferment.

IMPORTANT TESTIMONIALS.

Recent Testimonial from a native Medical man in Bombay.

Agiari Lane, Native Town, Bombay,
October 2nd, 1855.

Dear Sir,—I have great pleasure in informing you of the great good your excellent Cough Lozenges do in Pulmonary diseases.

I am a Medical Practitioner in Bombay, and am satisfied with their good effects, and would feel obliged by your sending me the wholesale price for a quantity.

I remain, Sir, yours, respectfully,
COWASJI RUTTONJI KHARADI.
T. KEATING, Esq.

Recent Testimonial to the value of Keating's Cough Lozenges.

I cannot express what I suffered,—coughing expectorating, and the respiration impeded Strange to say, I gradually recovered, without any treatment, except by taking a few boxes of Keating's Cough Lozenges. My lungs were so much affected, and the general health so debilitated, that I had but little hopes of recovery.

Sergeant 66th Regiment, Quebec.
