Redistribution Bill Is Causing Government Much Embarrassment

Not Ready for Introduction to the Commons Yet, in Spite of Much Carving.

Ottawa, Ont., March 29.—(World Staff Correspondent.)—It is quite evident that altho ministers have been putting in some work on the redistribution bill since parliament met, and have doubtless had the benefit of unstinted suggestions from members, the measure is by no means ready for submission to the house. For instance, the question as to the division of Ottawa's two electoral districts is not yet decided. While there is a demand for the division from a section of the Liberal party, who point to the majority in the lower town as good reason for erecting it into a party stronghold, prominent Liberals are opposed to the division on wider grounds. They contend that if there is one section of the Dominion which ought to set an example in the obliterating of race and creed differences, it is the Capital.

Where Creeds Clash.

The present arrangement whereby each party selects a French-speaking Catholic and an English-speaking Protestant candidate, has the effect of tempering creed and racial animosities, so it is claimed, whereas a division of the constituency into two would accentuate these differences at a time when men's judgment is prejudiced by strong political feeling. These are considerations which doubtless are being looked into by both the Prime Minister and Secretary of State.

Compliment to Sir Louis Davies.

The presentation to Sir Louis Davies, former Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and now a justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, of a group photograph of heads of the branches of the department, took place in the present minister's room Saturday. Messrs. MacKinnon and Hughes, members from Prince Edward Island, were also present. Lieutenant-Colonel Gourdeau, Deputy Minister, made the presentation.

Sir Louis Davies in reply expressed the pleasure it gave him to receive such a handsome collection of portraits of the gentlemen who were heads of the different branches of the department during the time he presided over it.

He was proud to know the finances of Canada were in such a prosperous condition that he might hope to see their services recognized in a tangible way.

The presentation piece consisted of a portrait of Sir Louis in the centre of grouped photographs of the heads of all the branches of the depactments.

Lecture From Vassar.

Prof. Bracq of Vassar College lectured before the Ottawa Literary and Scientific Society Saturday night on the Newfoundland French Shore question. He took the French side of the controversy thruout, claiming that under the declaration which followed the treaty of Versailles in 1783 the rights of the French were fixed and exclusive. For this reason he thought the Newfoundlanders were trying to oust the French. The Newfoundlanders would refer the matter to arbitration, he believed, but that Britain usually got the worst of it in arbitration.

Justice Takes Issue.

Sir Louis Davies, who was in the audience, took issue with this statement. He said England had participated in 75 cases of arbitration. Of these she had lost 18, had wholly gained 25 and in 32 she had been awarded the predominance of power. Sir Louis further reminded Prof. Bracq that all territorial rights in Newfoundland belonged to Great Britain. He protested also against unfair statements by United States press of Canada's claims in the Alaska boundary dispute.

Notes From the Capital.

Mr. Oliver Simmons, member for East Lambton, is in St. Luke's Hospital suffering from a severe attack of pneumonia.

Senator Millar, who had been ill for some days with pneumonia, is convalescent.

A CONTAGIOUS CASE.

Mr. Ross: It's a great mercy we got you in here, James. If you had been left at the House the whole family 'd likely been down with it.

SOME STRIKING NEWS FEATURES OF THE DAY.

TORONTO'S THIRD WARD.

Ottawa, March 29.—Mr. T. C. Robinette, K.C., of Toronto, is here and has been in consultation with Alex. Smith, the Liberal organizer, regarding the cutting up of Toronto and York County by the redistribution bill. There is a strong desire on the part of some Liberals to have the third ward in Toronto set apart as one constituency.

HOW CANADA GROWS.

Ottawa, March 29.—(Special).—W. D. Scott, Commissioner of Immigration, was asked to-night if there was "anything moving" in immigration. His reply was: "Well, eight special trains are moving to-night between Halifax and Montreal. They are carrying about 2000 immigrants to the Northwest."

RIVAL FOR THE BELL.

Ottawa, March 29.—The following ambiguous notice appears in this week's Canada Gazette: Notice is hereby given that an application will be made to the parliament of Canada, now in session, for an act empowering the applicants to construct and operate telephone and telegraph lines thruout the Dominion of Canada.—Kidd & Thompson, solicitors for the applicants.

Expect Developments In the Bribery Charges Of a Lively Character

COMMITTEES AND COMMISSIONS.

The whole of Mr. Ross' argument against committees was based upon the fact that committees have given partisan verdicts. The people do not care what verdicts the committees give, so long as they elicit the facts. Suppose there were a committee of fifteen, eight Liberals and seven Conservatives. Does any one suppose that the fate of Stratton or Gamey would depend upon one Liberal being converted to the Conservative side? The notion is utterly absurd. The duty of the committee is to bring out the facts. In every case cited by Mr. Ross the committee did bring out the facts. It might make a partisan report, and that report might be supported by a partisan majority of the House. But this did not prevent the people from learning the facts and forming their own conclusions.

On the other hand the history of commissions in this country has been almost invariably a history of failure. Nowhere was failure more marked than in the commission on the Brockville and West Huron cases, referred to by Mr. Ross as a glorious illustration of the growth and development of Liberal ideas. Certainly, if the difference between the old and the new Liberalism is a difference between discovering wrongdoing and covering it up, the Premier is right. There has indeed been an advance along these lines.

Fight Coming Up as to Adjournment of the House Pending the Trial.

What's coming in the bribery scandal this week? That's the query thruout Ontario now. That something startling is in the air no one familiar with the situation doubts.

The legislature will resume this afternoon at 3 o'clock the consideration of several matters left over from Friday, namely, the Attorney-General's bill respecting evidence, the supplies for April, the debate in reply to the speech from the throne, and the proposed adjournment till April 21. These matters will not all be disposed of to-day, if indeed any of them are, as it is improbable that all the members will be on hand to vote, and Mr. Whitney will not consent to a division till his full strength is on hand.

On the motion to adjourn a strong fight will be put up by the opposition, tho the debate will not be lengthy.

Mr Whitney's Views.

Mr. Whitney's view is that the House should remain in session while the commission is sitting on the Gamey charges. "If the Premier's motion carries," he said to The World last night, "it will mean that the House desires to padlock itself to prevent action on any question which might arise out of the Gamey charges, or on any other question. We cannot agree to anything of the kind."

The Conservative leader was positive that there would be no division to-day, but could not tell what Tuesday would bring forth.

As to Opposition.

Asked what opposition would be offer-

FIRE AMONG MAIL BAGS.

Cigaret Causes Blaze at Station—Man Nearly Suffocated.

The baggage room on the west of the Union Station was nearly the scene of a serious blaze, attended with fatal results. About 7.30 smoke was observed issuing from the baggage room. An attendant at the station rushed into the room. He became blinded by the smoke and lost his way out. Others that were attracted followed in to the room and discovered a number of mail bags ablaze. The burning bags were quickly removed to the outer station and the blaze extinguished. The young man was discovered in a dazed condition and almost suffocated. It is supposed cigarets were responsible for the fire.

LAMENT OF AN OLD LADY.

Mrs. Mary Holmes lives on the point jutting out into the lake above the Humber. She complains to the police that Toronto's bad boys bother her. The aged woman is quite vigorous in her denunciations of the mischievous boys. "I have lived here many years and these boys have never failed to arrive with each spring. None of the bad boys who disturb me ever came to a good end," continued Mrs. Holmes, folding her arms grimly. "Nearly all of them that stood on that hill years ago are dead. There were always lots of boys, tho. Just as fast as one crowd grew up others came along. They were so mixed that you could never tell when one lot went away and the others came. Big ones and little ones, they were forever with me.

"When I first moved here, that hill, now so bare and rocky, was covered with trees and green grass, and there were big purple spots made by the violets that grew there by the thousands. They are there no longer. The boys have tramped the life out of them. They have just lived on the hill all these years, leaving scarcely a green thing upon it.

"The swamp was then a green pasture where I kept my cows. Fillin' in land for houses and factories caused the water to stand, so that the grass would not grow and I was forced to sell my cows.

"Once I had a dog that scared the boys away. He's been dead years. He knew more than most men. One day a boy fell into the water near my house. He jumped in and dragged him out. Then he poked the boy with his nose until the little fellow ran home, dripping wet, to get some dry clothes. Was that boy grateful? No! He came back the next day from the hillsides and threw stones at poor doggie and me. That boy was around here for years. Then he grew up and disappeared. I suppose he went to jail."

DEATH OF DR. GORDON.

On Saturday morning Dr. D. Gilbert Gordon, one of Toronto's best-known physicians, died at the Church Home Hospital in Baltimore, Md.

Dr. Gordon was attacked by peritonitis early in February. An operation was performed on February 5 and his condition not improving very rapidly, he went south about four weeks ago in the hope that the change of climate would facilitate his recovery. He spent a couple of weeks at Old Point Comfort, but as his health did not improve he was taken to the hospital in Baltimore.

The Late Dr. D. Gilbert Gordon.

The body was brought home yesterday, and the funeral will take place at 3 o'clock this afternoon from his late residence, 646 Spadina-avenue.

Dr. Gordon was a son of the Rev. Daniel Gordon, and was born in Glengarry County on December 24 1858. His early school days were spent at Athol. When he was 13 years of age his parents removed to Harrington, Ont., and he entered St. Mary's High School. While at St. Mary's he was a leader in all athletic sports, and was very popular with his schoolmates and teachers. In 1879 he entered the University of Toronto, taking the degree of B.A. in science in 1883. Upon graduation he was appointed a house master in Upper Canada College.

COAL QUESTION OUT WEST.

Montreal Mining Man's Statement as to Prevailing Conditions.

Montreal, March 29.—(Special.)—William Blakemore, mining engineer, who has just returned from Fernie, where he represented the reconciliation committee, states that, altho he has always been friendly to labor, the attitude of men in repudiating the agreement of their own union is indefensible. He adds, however, that it may be a benefit if such action is a sign that the men are going to throw off the yoke of the American organizations and organize on a Canadian basis.

He also makes the important announcement that the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co. have abandoned their opposition to the Dominion government throwing open their 50,000 acres of coal mines to royalty or lease, this information having been imparted to Mr. Blakemore by no other than Robert Jaffray, vice-president, and Mr. Stockett, mining superintendent, of the company. He claims that if such action is not taken ruin stares the miners and smelters in the face. It will also be well for the government to see that the coal company does not take advantage of a clause in its charter which revokes the agreement of the company not to exceed $2 a ton.

Mr. Jaffray, spoken to last night by The World, denied Mr. Blakemore's assertion. He had no knowledge, he said, of ever having imparted such information.

MYSTERY OF A BOGUS BOER

Curious Mixture of Gen. de Jongh's Name With a Daring Swindler Who is Caught.

BROUGHT TO LIGHT A STRANGE CASE

Genuine Officer is Believed to Have Committed Suicide—Police Investigating.

The mystery surrounding the movements of General W. T. De Jongh, the Boer general, deepens with the arrest of the bogus veteran, who has been masquerading under that name for several weeks. Grave fears are entertained for the safety of General De Jongh. Nearly a month ago, De Jongh wrote a letter to his friend, Col. Hughes, in which he expressed his intention to commit suicide. He was despondent over domestic grief and financial embarrassments, and declared that he was arranging to take his own life.

Became an Object.

Col. Hughes had become fond of the splendid old fighter, because of his earnest efforts, after he had been captured by Col. Hughes' command, to induce his countrymen to cease their hopeless struggle and accept British law. For this, General De Jongh was despised by his people, and deserted by his wife. He came to Canada to begin life anew, but seemed unable to throw off the saddening influence of the affair. To him it was a real tragedy, and to his friend of the battlefield he poured out his grief, when he announced a few weeks ago that he contemplated suicide. Since then, the genuine general has not been seen, but, about that time, a man appeared at the Walker Hotel, and registered as General W. T. De Jongh. The coincidence is most mysterious. He was accompanied by two companions. They were evidently foreigners, and possibly Boers.

Must Have Known.

The man masquerading as De Jongh must have known something of the affairs of the gentleman whose name he assumed. He also must have known that Col. Hughes had introduced General De Jongh at the hotel, and that the manager to whom the introduction had been made was not in the city. The bogus general carried out his swindling design with consummate art, in spite of the fact that several persons around the hotel knew the real Boer general, for he had stopped there.

Cashed Worthless Draft.

The bogus Boer officer secured fifty dollars cash on a worthless draft, since General De Jongh's credit was first-class at the establishment. He must have known the danger of the game he was playing, for he disappeared the very day he cashed the draft, after attempting the same trick at the Rossin House.

The detectives were hot on the swindler's trail within a few hours after the draft was cashed, because the clerk handling the paper called the attention of his superiors to the matter, and, casually, it was investigated, and the discovery was made that the man who had registered at the hotel as De Jongh did not resemble the Boer warrior at all. When the chase began, the swindler and his companions had taken flight.

How Did He Escape?

Just how they escaped from the city is a mystery, since every avenue was closely guarded. The Police Department sent out hasty descriptions of the men, and the chief was arrested in New York on Saturday. He will be extradited at once.

But the swindling operation dwindles in interest in comparison with the concern felt for the gentleman whose name was made the vehicle by which the game was worked. The police are making an effort to trace the real general now, in response to the queries of his friends, who have every reason to fear he has carried out the threat of self-destruction conveyed in his last letter.

They reason that if General De Jongh was alive he would have lost no time in denouncing the impostor, when he observed the story of the swindling game published in the daily papers. This is accepted almost conclusively as proof that he is dead.

SERGEANT MACMAHON.

TORONTO MAN WHO TAUGHT THE GAME TO 'FIGHTING MAC'

A doughty warrior is Sergt. MacMahon of Toronto, the man who taught "Fighting Mac." the game, a soldier born, and still a soldier at heart. He is wedded to his foils, and between times, when his pupils are away, spends many a quarter of an hour in silent reminiscence. He resides at 349 Yonge-street. He is recognized, not only here, but in Scotland, as a swordsman of the first rank. In 1897 he was appointed junior physical instructor in the Edinburgh Royal High School, an institution which gained its name from the fact that a portion of King Edward's education was achieved there.

Tale of Good Red Blood.

It is a surpassingly interesting story Sergt. MacMahon tells—a story which details the lines thru which a Highland boy's life ran the gamut of human ambition, from the awkward squad of recruits to the heights of the army of the empire. It is a tale full of good red blood, calculated to inspire all that is best in man. The sergeant well remembers the late general, when, in 1871, as a raw recruit, 18 years of age, he landed with the second draft from England at Jullundher, in the Punjab. Sergt. MacMahon was drill instructor for the 92nd at that time, and he put the embryo general thru the goose step in the awkward squad four hours daily—two in the morning and two at night.

Mr. MacDonald was very quick to learn, and picked up his drill with such rapidity that he was in the first squad of recruits, and he was singled out from his fellows to instruct the last squad. He was one of the first "dismissed drill," and this awkward squad was his first "command." He was keenly ambitious. This was shown by his action in taking the commission instead of the Victoria Cross. He was not afraid of entering into competition with the nobility for military honors.

No Time for Frivolity.

He was a plucky fellow and foremost in everything. His commission made him even more so. He would always give good advice to the recruits and caution them from vice. He would never gamble, tho he played billiards for pleasure, and was very fond of the game. He did not drink. He might take a glass of ale occasionally, but that was his limit.

"He was a good non-commissioned officer," said MacMahon. "A better never lived. As a sergeant he kept his accounts as straight as the straightest. I don't know whether high life spoiled him, but as a non-commissioned man, he never had a crime against him."

"The late General Hector MacDonald joined the service companies of the 92nd Highlanders, then stationed at Jullundher, Punjab, East India, in December, 1871. When dismissed 'recruits' drill' he was appointed lance-corporal, and in two years was promoted to be sergeant. Previous to the Afghan war he was made color-sergeant of No. 3 Company, under Captain G. S. White, now General George Stewart White, famous as the defender of Ladysmith.

Wit and Courage Won.

"'Fighting Mac' and I were both sergeants and comrades, and I can speak most highly of his good moral character, both as a soldier and a man. He was a good living man and always willing to give the young soldier good advice. He gained his commission after the massacre of the British envoy at Kabul. The Gordons was one of the regiments ordered to march on Kabul. We were then stationed at Alli Kheli, five days' march from Kabul City. Our first day's march was to Caratagia, where we rested for the night.

"On the following morning the whole Khuram Valley field force marched to the summit of a large mountain known as the Shuther Ghurdan, or Camel's Neck, so called from its form. No. 3 Company, with 'Old Mac' as the color-sergeant, was ordered to remain behind to see all the baggage removed to the front and bring up the rear. There was no officer with No. 3, so Mac was the senior N. C. O.

"Just as his company was preparing to move and join the headquarters, General Lord Roberts and staff appeared, escorted by a troop of the 9th Lancers. Mac heard shots fired from a hill running parallel to the road, and at once saw that the party had been attacked by the enemy. These comprised about 100 Afghans, who had waited in ambush. He at once formed his company into fighting order, and, leading them, beat the enemy off, thus being instrumental in saving the general's life. For this he was recommended for the V. C. or a commission—the latter he accepted. Six months later, in Sherpur cantonments, he was gazetted as 2nd lieutenant in the Gordon Highlanders.

Police Catch Foxy Smith Leader of Young Bandits

Galt Boy Identified as Tweed Highwayman Who Used a Revolver.

Galt, March 29.—(Special to The World.)—Foxy Smith is in the toils again. Bold burglar, crook and leader of a band of desperate young criminals of this section of Ontario, he was ignominiously "bested" by a modest C. P. R. station agent at Tweed last week. When the Galt police read the report of how a masked highwayman walked into the depot with a big revolver and attempted to hold up the place, they suspected that it was the work of "Foxy" Smith of this place. Chief of Police Clark investigated and discovered the man's identity.

Foxy a Good Prisoner.

It has been nearly a year since the police were able to capture him. At that time he was released from the Central, where he had served two years for burglary. As 17873 "Foxy" was a good prisoner, and the authorities congratulated themselves on having reformed a desperate crook, but the free air and the many unprotected buildings to rob were too much for the young robber, and he sought his old companions and entered on another career of crime within a few weeks after he was reelased. In fact, his imprisonment seemed to have glorified "Foxy" in the estimation of his tough friends, and he became a genuine terror to the police of this and adjacent towns.

A big, husky lad of rather honest mien and pleasant ways, it has always been difficult for the police to secure information about his crookedness. His hiding places are numerous, and he always receives information when the police are after him.

Comes of Good Family.

"Foxy" Smith comes of a good family. His mother resides here, and for years he was looked upon merely as a mischievous boy. Gradually he came within the police circle, and

"FOXY" SMITH,
Daring Galt Highwayman and Fighting Crook.

what had been excused as the play of wild boys became the first lessons in real crime. "Foxy" was always the leader of these toughs with whom he associated, and his great strength and undoubted courage made him an ideal leader for the element that thrives on cheap literature and tales of convicts.

Always Fights the Bobbies.

The stories of the young desperado's conflicts with the police read like a yellow-back novel. It is his boast that he always fights the police, no matter how many there are, and the scars of those who have found it their duty to arrest "Foxy" testify to the prowess of the crook in battle.

In police parlance, "Foxy" has been known as a "stick-up man" for some time. In other words, he holds individuals up with his revolver and robs them whenever the opportunity presents itself. His cognomen was derived from his many escapes from the authorities.

Many Galt people who have known Smith from boyhood assert that he is merely a wild lad whom the police have taken to task too severely, and has been driven into criminal excesses.
