A Brother's Present

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

(Copyright, 1919, by Western Newspaper Union.)

"THERE was once," said Daddy, "a boy whose name was Worthington, and for short they called him Worthy.

"He had a sister whom he called Minnie, and it is a story of these two I want to tell you this evening."

Nick and Nancy looked very much pleased. They loved to hear about other children, especially of boys and girls about their own ages.

"Worthington was unlike some brothers, but he was like you in that way Nick. He liked to play with his sister. His sister liked, too, to play with him. He never frightened her, but he showed her how to do things, and she was never afraid when she was with him. In the fall he took her for rides in her express cart, and he made a high seat in the cart for her when he took her for slower and more stylish rides.

"He taught her to climb trees and to swim and to do tricks on the trapeze. And she, too, used to play in the snowball fights, back in the forts which he and the other boys would make.

"Well, it was summer, and Worthington was not going to school. He thought and he thought and he thought, and finally he said:

More Stylish Rides.

"'I wonder if it couldn't be done. I will try anyway.' He worked out the whole scheme in his head, and the next day he went to his aunt who owned a garden, and he said:

"'Auntie, I have been thinking about something.'

"'Yes,' she said, 'what have you been thinking about, Bubby?' For she had always called him that—ever since he had been a small boy and she had written a funny little poem for one of his birthdays where she wrote Bubby to make it rhyme with chubby.

"'I think Minnie is old enough to ride a bicycle now. I would like to give her one.'

"'A bicycle!' exclaimed their aunt. 'Why don't you suggest giving her an automobile or a motorboat with a sleeping cabin? How could you ever manage it, Bubby?'

"She hadn't realized that he had thought it all out, and she stopped to hear what he had to say, for he usually had extremely sensible things to say.

"'It wouldn't really be so awfully expensive, auntie, and I'd love to do it so. I would like to give it to her for Christmas. I couldn't do it before I don't believe, and besides she could look at it all winter and think of what fun it was going to be in the summer. I have a bicycle mother and daddy gave me—and I do wish Minnie could have one, too.'

"'How do you think you could buy it?' Auntie asked again. She felt pretty sure by that time that he might be able to manage it, but she wondered how.

"'Well, this summer,' said Worthy, 'I could hoe the beans in your garden, and I could weed the garden paths. I could water the flowers every night, and do all the weeding, in fact. You wouldn't need to have a man do the work, except one day a week to do the heavy things.

"I Could Work in the Garden."

"'I could work in the garden every morning and every evening just before supper. It would be fine! Then I could do all your errands and later I could rake the leaves and build the bonfires. I wouldn't tell Minnie that I was getting—well—I hoped—perhaps you'd pay me half of what you might pay a man.

"'I could carry the wood from the woodhouse into the dining room woodbox every morning, before school when the fall comes, and then with a little bit I have in the savings bank I could get Minnie, my precious little sister, a bicycle. I heard mother and daddy talking the other day about how they'd like to get one for her, but they thought maybe they'd better wait another year or two, and I know it will be a jolly surprise to both of them, as well as to sister, when they see it.'"

"'Indeed, I will help you do it,' Auntie said. 'But you will get just the same as a man would get for the work you will do. And Minnie will talk to you and sometimes help you so it won't be so hard.'

"'I don't care how hard it is,' said Worthy, 'for I would like it to be a little bit hard. Then I would know I were giving something to her.'

"And when Christmas came Worthy gave his little sister a bicycle. And did he," said Daddy, "is a true story."

Pains About the Heart

ANY derangement of the heart's action is alarming. Frequently pains about the heart are caused by the formation of gas arising from indigestion.

Relief from this condition is obtained by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Chronic indigestion results from sluggish liver action, constipation of the bowels and inactive kidneys.

Because Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills arouse these organs to activity they thoroughly cure indigestion and overcome the many annoying symptoms.
