EARLY CLOSING IRREGULARITIES.

The Anti-Bylaw Storekeepers Submit Additional Affidavits.

Solicitor Biggar yesterday examined William James Somerville and John James Findlay, two deponents to affidavits against the Early Closing Bylaw. The proceedings took place before Special Examiner Bruce. Lawyer Barwick appeared in support of the affidavits. Mr. Somerville is President and Mr. Findlay Secretary of the Toronto Traders' Protective Association.

Mr. Somerville's second affidavit recites the "excessive hardship" of the bylaw. Lists were supplied of the parties in the trades entitled to vote.

Mr. Findlay, dry goods merchant, 386 Queen-street west, points out irregularities in the original petition for early closing. W. P. Harris, 323 Dundas-street, is not a dry goods man but a confectioner. M. A. Hiscocks, 683 Queen-street west, on the dry goods list, is a dress maker; so is Mrs. Van Norman, 681 Queen-street west. John Kay, Son & Co. are not a dry goods but a carpet firm. The affidavit proceeds to recite the hardship of the bylaw; how it diminishes his trade profits and wills if allowed to remain in force, compel many traders to give up business. Many storekeepers employ no clerks, are persons of limited means and are only able to carry on by close attention to business, especially in the evenings. Their customers are principally clerks, mechanics, domestics and operatives in factories, who have only opportunity to make their purchases after 7 o'clock.

Other affidavits to similar effect have been filed. Sarah Watson, dry goods, 326 Spadina-avenue, says her name was affixed to the application for the passage of the bylaw by her daughter without authority and contrary to her wishes. James Green, 337 King west, has the same tale to tell. He subsequently signed against the bylaw. John Applegath, hatter and furrier, signed the petition not understanding the effect of the same. He erased his signature but his name nevertheless appeared.

Practical Chaps.

Editor World: Our amiable friend Mr. John Kemp, of the Bank of Commerce, says through your columns that it "tickles him like a straw" to hear persons not bankers criticising the "practical chaps" in that calling. Being myself a practical chap who has seen and shared in the work of banking in an incomparably wider sphere, with more varied features, and offering a more instructive field of observation than banking can give in Canada, I somewhat sympathize with my Falstaffian brother. But to ridicule the criticism of our banking laws and usages by persons not engaged as bankers is not wise. The history of Canadian banking for many years has been one of disaster and shame, millions having been wasted owing to disregard for old world experience. In the bank Mr. Kemp is engaged I, when his co-officer, warned the management of a certain practice which is a fruitful source of trouble. Not being regarded as "a practical chap," being fresh in Canada, my words were not heeded, and the result was in one instance that I had especially called attention to, a heavy loss. Other Canadian banks in the hands of practical chaps have made tremendous losses the last twenty years, the vast bulk of them arising from imprudences that have been condemned by writers on banking who are, or who were, not practical chaps. It is worthy the attention of bankers who resent criticisms by persons not in the trade, that the standard works on finance and banking were written by persons who were not bankers. Any bank officer who is not familiar with the books, knows very little of his business beyond its routine mechanism, and although he may be inflated with pride at being a "practical chap," he is showing very great contempt for his profession by keeping ignorant of its history, and its principles and the great questions of finance with which banking is interlaced. As the banks handle so much public money, and are so essentially trustees of public funds, the public exercise a most just right in studying their affairs and commenting upon the conduct of banking business, and bankers do well who do aid them in this salutary criticism. Yours, etc.,

JOHN HAGUE.

Coal Dust in a Road Bed.

Editor World: On Yonge-street, north of King-street the Engineer's Department lately dumped a lot of coal dust to fill up the yawning chasms which for months had rendered the thorough fare dangerous for travel. It was a superb quality of ignorance that ordered such material to be placed there, and judging from my experience the past week, the blundering official is boss of the situation. True, taxpayers' goods are each day being seriously damaged by the clouds of black dust blown into their stores, and every citizen of cleanly habits endeavors to steer clear of a thorough hfare so abominably befouled. Yet persistent representations on my part to the Engineer's Department for nearly a week past have so far failed to remove the abomination. I therefore ask you to allow me the opportunity of placing the blame of such miserable mismanagement on the proper shoulders. As one of the aldermen representing a ward, many of whose prominent business men are daily suffering from such indefensible work, I desire to say that in the presence of such masterly inactivity as rules supreme in the City Engineer's department I surrender. True, in my simplicity I many days ago suggested that gravel as a makeshift until the intended stone paving was laid would be preferable to the filthy rubbish now on the street. The startling boldness of the suggestion seems to have paralyzed the merits of the officials of the Department.

In the interests of my suffering constituents I pray for them a speedy deliverance from their state of suspended animation.

E. KING DODDS.
