New Drill Hall for Brantford—A Berlin Minister Says "Thank God for the Salvation Army."

BRANT.

Word has been received in Brantford of the death by drowning, in Michigan, of Andrew Skimmin, a former resident there. He used to be employed by Workman & Watt, and left for the States some time ago. He was a boss rafter, and it is supposed that he met his end by slipping off some logs.

Plans have been received from Ottawa for the new drill hall for Brantford. It will be a handsone brick structure, the Government contributed $10,000 towards it.

Nurse Margaret Wate, of the John H. Stratford Hospital, Brantford, died the other day after a brave struggle of very short duration. The deceased returned from Tilsonburg a few weeks ago, where she had been attending a protracted case of typhoid fever. All that kindness, undivided attention and medical skill could do was meted out to her in the endeavor to preserve her useful life. It was all, however, of no avail.

When last seen he had $550 or $600 on his person, and it was supposed at that time that he was murdered and his body secreted in the swamp near by. A thorough search was made all through that section, but to this day no trace or tidings have been recived of him. Stole to Pay His Debts of Honor.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Dec. 7.—H. D. Allard, a clerk employed in Foster & Besse's clothing store, has confessed the theft of $2,500. His employers' suspicions were aroused by the fact that he boarded at a "swell" cafe on a salary of $10 a week. Allard said he lost $500 on the election and that he stole to pay debts of honor. A large amount of stolen goods and a bank-book showing large deposits were found in his room. His employers agreed not to prosecute if he should leave town at once.

PROHIBITION IS PRACTICAL.

So Say the Liquor Traffic Commissioners at Sherbourne Street Methodist Church—An Interesting Session.

[From the Toronto Globe.]

The spacious school-room of the Sherbourne Street Methodist Church was crowded to the doors Monday night to listen to the proceedings of the "royal commission on the liquor traffic," conducted under the auspices of the Epworth League of Christian Endeavor. The commissioners were Rev. J. F. German, M.A. (chairman), Mr. Emerson Coatsworth, M.P., and Mr. Joseph Tait, M.P.P. The cause of the prohibition party was ably conducted by Mr. N. W. Rowell and Mr. B. E. Swayzie appeared as counsel for the antis.

In opening the case, Mr. Rowell explained that the two points they would endeavor to consider were, was prohibition desirable and was it practicable.

The first witness called by Mr. Rowell was Mr. J. W. Dowd, of the Smead-Dowd Company. He deposed that he was a large employer of labor, and much preferred temperance men to drinking men. The drinking habit was a disadvantage to business. Those who took liquor did not attend to their work as well after a holiday; it always took them two or three days to sober up. As a consequence their families suffered, their children were badly looked after and their homes neglected. In his opinion it would be a decided benefit to the country to adopt a total prohibitory law, and he believed it would be practicable if the people were in favor of it. It would be as easy to enforce it as to enforce the law against smuggling; perhaps easier. He had not had much experience of prohibitory laws in the United States, but while inspector of schools there he found that the children of drinking parents were far worse off, worse cared for and less regular at school than those from temperance homes. He was satisfied that those children were severely handicapped in the race of life.

To Mr. Swayzie witness said he was a Sunday school teacher and knew his Bible pretty thoroughly. He held that the Bible was both a set of rules and a guide upon the principles of which a man should order his actions. He believed it distinctly taugh prohibition when it said, "Look not upon the wine when it is red," etc. The injunction of St. Paul to Timothy to take a little wine for his stomach's sake was not a case in point. He had never taken it for his stomach's sake. (Laughter.) A thing might not be wrong in itself and yet wrong in its working. He admitted that God gave man a choice between right a wrong, but added that he would not give a choice where harm resulted from man's action. He did not know that unlicensed selling increased under a prohibition law.

Dr. O. R. Avison, called by Mr. Swayzie, gave his opinion that the habit of drinking alchohl was due to the craving for stimulant, the result of overwork or worry. Therefore, the condition of life must be changed so that either there should be no need for the stimulant or that the body could get needed rest. Enforced abstinence did not eradicate the craving. To Mr. Rowell he said he could not declare that those who drank most worked hardest, but moderate drinkers could, in his opinion, do as much work as total abstainers. As a rule total abstainers had the best chance in sickness. Excessive drinking was detrimental and the liquor traffic was as a whole detrimental. Moral suasion was better than force, but he admitted in the cases of the craving he had spoken of moral suasion was no good.

Mr. J. W. Henderson, for the prohibitionists, deposed that in business they had to do with many farmers and farm mortgages. His experience was that 30 per cent. more farms owned by drinking men were sold out than those of the other class. Prohibition would be an advantage in city and country, and he believed it could be enforced with a strong Government behind it.

Mr. J. H. Madden, barrister, did not consider drinking a sin. The Bible did not declare one way or the other; it was a question for individual action. He did not believe prohibition could be enforced. It was not in Leeds county when the Scott Act was running there. An enforced prohibitory law was worse than a license law.

Rev. J. E. Starr was the next witness for the prohibition side. As a minister of religion he had studied the liquor question, and, in his opinion, it was safe to say that drink caused four-fifths of the crime, six-sevenths of the immorality and six-sevenths of the poverty. He never knew of a real good family row where drink was not more or less responsible, and the children and homes were neglected every time. He had no doubt prohibition could be enforced, and he would treat the liquor traffic as he would treat the devil—bury it face down, so that the harder it kicked the deeper down it would go. Four-fifths of the police court cases last year in Toronto directly or indirectly arose from drink, and so great would the saving be in prohibition that he would pay the city debt, transfer the car service and build a trunk sewer with five years' receipts from the profits in this city. (Cheers.)

To Mr. Swayzie he said he did not know that prohibition gave rise to perjury more than any other measure did, and if he were told so on the alleged authority of Sir Thomas Galt he would draw his own conclusions. (Laughter).

Mr. B. H. Spence was the last witness, after which the counsel on either side briefly summed up, and the commissioners, after consultation, rendered their decision to the effect that the evidence was overwhelming that the liquor traffic was a great evil, and that prohibition would be a great good, while the great preponderance of evidence went to show that a prohibitory law could be enforced.

The debate created great interest, and was closely followed throughout. Between the witnesses' evidence, vocal and instrumental selections were rendered by Mme. Jennie R. Stewart, of Boston, Miss Hattie Rutherford and Miss Olive Sargent, Mrs. Grove acting as accompanist.
