NEW FEATURES IN THE KINRADE CASE.

NO INSANE MAN.

The charming home of Mrs. A. Elmore Richards, Wentworth street south, was thronged with callers yesterday after-noon for Mrs. Richards' at-home. The was No INSANE MAR. Miss Kinrade, the afternoon of the tragedy, examined by a detective in the room where her sister was murdered, told about returning from the back yard where she ran after giving the man the money and struggling with him, while he held the revolver. Then she rushed out the front door for asthronged with callers yesterday after-noon for Mrs. Richards' athome. The thostess, gowned in black sequin and net, with touches of white, and assisted by yer sister, Mrs. Baker, of Toronto, who wore a black gown and cream lace, re-reived the guests at the entrance to the spacious drawing rooms. Mrs. J. B. Crawford was matron of honor, and wore an old rose directoire dress with cream lace trimming. She was assisted by Mrs. Baker's little daughter, in a dainty while frock. The tea room, which was as unique as it was dainty, was presided over by Mrs. Ernest La-zier, Mrs. Norman S. Jones and Mrs. Harry Carpenter, who were assisted by Misses Mariorie and Ruby Campbell, Mabel Montague and Edith Ballard. The table was lighted by a large drop light, shaded in red, and the contrepiece was a bank of crimson carnations and rib-bons, large bunches of billes of the val-ley in cut glass wases were at the four corners. The pretty little conservatory off the drawing room was much admir-ed, and the flowers gave a delicate fra-grance to all the rooms. Among those who called were; Mrs. R. G. Sutherland, Mrs. Janes Angus, Miss Emma Angus, Mrs. Broek Green, Mrs. Charles Gardner, Mrs. Cyrus King, Miss Dempsey, Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. J. S. Atkinson, Mrs. The she rushed out the front door for as-sistance. The next day she repeated the story, but said nothing about the struggle with the man when she re-turned to the house. In fact, she said then that she did not see the man when she returned. When reminded of the struggle she had told about the day be-fore, she remarked that she had for-gotten this, that she did struggle with the fellow. The third story was the one in which she mentioned the well dressed stranger and made the startling statement that she thought several shots were fired at her. -In the first two interviews Florence she rushed out the front door for as chaded in red, and the contrepletor was a bank of crimson carnations and rishos were at the four point of the drawing room vas much admining of and the flowers gave a delicate iranger and made the startling statement that she thought several being and the flowers gave a delicate iranger and made the startling statement that she thought several she drawers flowers. ## NATURAL GAS.

Report That Its Export to Buffalo Will be Stopped.

(Special Despatch to the Times.)

St. Catharines, March 9.- A report has ome from Welland that the Welland Board of Trade has practically received in assurance from the Dominion Govern-nent that the annual license which has ment that the annual heense which has from year to year permitted the Provin-cial Gas Company to export natural gas to Buffalo, and which expired on March 1, will not be renewed, thus conserving the product for Canada. The customers of the lead of the destance of the second second second for the second secon local gas company there might have committed the mur-der, suggested itself at the start, but the trouble was to find a motive. The sheary of the detectives was that some admirer of hers, disappointed probably because Ethel had disapproved of him, came to the city and murdered her. In-vestigation of this phase of the case, however, caused the officers to hastily abandon the Virginia clue. They found that Florence was engaged to a divin-ity student in Toronto, and that there had never been any suggestion of breaking off this engagement. THIS IS THEORY NOW. The fourth theory, the one they

The drag-net extended over the country for a distance of thirty miles or more on the first Saturday after the tragedy, was a precaution on the part of the Provincial officer in chargo of the case at that time, to avoid any criticism later on if the police should discover themselves mistaken in the views they held. Florence Kinrade, in a hysterical con-dition, told the officers three different stories while she was in Hamilton. The first two supported the tramp theory. The third shattered it. She declared that it was no tramp but a fairly well dressed man who did the shooting. NO INSANE MAN. THIS IS THEORY NOW. The fourth theory, the one they grand so jealously, comes nearer home. Detective Miller has centred all his work in the vicinity of Hamilton. The frequent visits of the officers to the Kinrade home, the frequent searches of the vicinity for the revolver with which the crime was committed, and the ef-forts of the authorities to show that the crime was not committed just be-fore 4 o'clock, but earlier, in the after-noon, show that the theory on which they are working is that some one close to the family did the deed. He added that in the stress of the few moments after the first shots were fired the sister of the dead girl might have run into the room and done any one of half a dozen peculiar and inexplicable things, then fainted. "It is equally pos-sible that the next shots fired would awaken the girl from her syoon," he said, "after recovering she might not remember what she had done before." THOSE FOOTSTEPS. A feature of the case that may play a prominent part in the coroner's inquiry, and which is still engaging the attention of the detectives, although lost sight of for a time in the struggle with more baffling features, concerns the footsteps in the snow-covered yard in the rear of the house. Detective Bleakley' closely examined these when he first went over the ground. the ground. From the back door of the Kinrade

The officer remarked that the men investigating the hold-up of Miss Burk-holder were experiencing this trouble in their work. The girl was positive when seen by the police that she scream-ed when the man grabbed her, and that was what made him run away. "Isn't it a funny thing," the detective asked, "that on a Sunday night, a quiet night, at 8.15, no person heard that scream? And there were half a dozen people who might easily have heard it, yet claim they did not," he added. BD TIME FOR JOKING. The officer told of a peculiar incident in the east end three nights ago, which was key secret by the headquarters men. Three girls were out together, and one had to go home some distance alone. She was suddenly confronted by two persons who were masks and had the appearance of fearful looking tramps. She screamed and ran, and vere scon a dozen people were looking

The police were notified of the affair, and discovered that the two bad ramps were the girl's two companions dressed in their brothers' clothing. They had done it to scare the girl for a joke and succeeded in scaring a whole neighborhood. "A good many of these things are the same kind of jokes," he remarked, "peo-ple indulge in just to keep the excite-ment and agitation going." The names of the three girls are being kept back by the police, who claim they have the names and addresses, and will call on the young ladies if any other explana-tion of the affair is needed.

One reason is that the police have gone too far and wasted too much time in follow-ing the wrong line. If they had spread their drag nets over the country in time, and not wasted precious days in go-ing on a theory that any of us were keeping something back, they might have had the murderer by this time. What a coward the man was. I would like to have hold of him for a short time; shooting down a defenceless girl. I don't know what the motive was.
