Italian War Dogs.

Dogs, at least some dogs, have proved themselves so valuable for military purposes during the present war, that they have been added to the equipment of every army engaged in the struggle. The main purpose for which they are used is the finding of wounded soldier after an engagement or skirmish in difficult territory, so that they may be carried to the field hospitals immediately behind the lines without delay. The dogs employed for that purpose are carefully trained and well taken care of, as their usefulness depends in a large measure upon their good physical condition and their willingness to work.

Various breeds of dogs have been tried by the Governments of the belligerent nations, but only a few of them have been found of value. The dogs used by the Italian army in its difficult campaign in the mountains are of several different breeds, with the St. Bernard type predominating. St. Bernard dogs have been used in relief work in the high Alps for centuries and have proved themselves hardy, efficient and trustworthy even when working by themselves. The sagacity and courage of the St. Bernards are wonderful. They seem, at times, almost human.—Popular Science Monthly.

The Making of Big Guns.

"No fewer than one hundred and seventeen miles of steel wire are wound on a twelve-inch gun that weighs thirteen and a half tons," says a writer in the Millgate Monthly. "In appearance this wire, which is of the same quality as piano wire, resembles tape; it is one-quarter of an inch wide and one-tenth of an inch thick. It is tested to a breaking strength of one hundred and ten tons. The wire unwinds from a reel as the gun-barrel revolves, and a tension of about fifty tons to the square inch ensures mechanical accuracy in wrapping it around the gun. Various parts of the gun receive different thicknesses of wire. At the breech of a twelve-inch gun, where the chief strain comes, there are ninety-two layers, which give a thickness of nine and a half inches of wire, but at the muzzle there are only fourteen layers. Over the wire the gunmakers shrink on steel rings at white heat. When they cool they contract and grip with immense force. The rifling of the barrel is an automatic process—an example of wonderful mechanical ingenuity. When the gun is finished experts test the accuracy of the rifling with plastic gutta percha."—Family Herald.

Counted Them.

An old toper started home one night in his normal condition, with a turkey which he had bought for his Sunday's dinner.

The road was rough, and he fell several times over all sorts of obstructions in the path, dropping the turkey each time, but picking it up again.

Entering his house he steadied himself as well as he could and said to his wife:

"Here, wifey, I've brought you eleven turkeys."

"Eleven turkeys!" cried his wife. "I see but one."

"Nonsense, you're blind!" cried her good man. "Why, I fell down eleven times coming home, and I swear I picked up a turkey every time."

Rats In Brazil.

In certain parts of Brazil rats are a great nuisance. The common rat does not thrive for some unaccountable reason, but is replaced by a species of small boa constructor—the gibola. The snakes are not venomous. They sleep in the house, generally taking up their position at the foot of the stairs.

The Surgeon's Order.

"The surgeon of the regiment was both professional and military in the order he gave the men when he wanted to vaccinate them."

"What was his order?"

"Present arms."

Rippling Rhymes

CONSERVATION

That I may save the price of rations I've shaken all my poor relations. In olden times my aunts and cousins would come to see me, scores and dozens, and stay as long as I would feed 'em, but now I'm standing up for freedom; I've taken Hoover as my mentor, and so my uncles cannot enter the dining room when dinner's ready—I must conserve, so help me Teddy. I have old spinster aunts aplenty, I reckon there are ten or twenty, and they have come from distant places, at my expense to feed their faces. They'd come in spring and stay till autumn, and some times longer yet, dod rot 'em. They'd bring their cats and pet canaries, and eat my string beans and my berries, and in the pantry and the cupboard for pies and cakes they daily rubbered. But yesterday my Aunt Deborah came to me, smiling like Aurora; she hoped to stay three months or nearly—she's pulled off stunts of that kind yearly. But now I met her at the portal, and handed her no smile or chortle. "I cannot feed you," said I, "auntie; I cannot board you in this shanty. I hope to save this threatened nation by flossy curves in conservation, and so no uncles, aunts or nieces, can visit me with their valises. You cannot use my roadster chummy, no prunes of mine shall fill your tummy; so take your birdcage and your knitting, and do some ground and lofty flitting." And thus, with fortitude unswerving, I'm spending all my time conserving.

The Heat of the Sun.

Why is the air generally much colder a mile above the earth than near the ground? The heat of the atmosphere comes from the sun, but by a somewhat indirect process. The incoming sunbeams are only slightly absorbed by the dry air at high levels, and so have little effect on its temperature. In the lower regions of the atmosphere there is always a considerable amount of water vapor (water in the form of gas), and this substance has a relatively large capacity for absorbing heat from sunshine. Lastly, the earth absorbs all the heat that falls upon it, and then gives it back, by radiation or conduction, to the air above it. Thus the atmosphere is mainly heated from below and not from above. Air heated near the ground tends to rise, but it cools rapidly in rising. As it reaches higher levels the pressure upon it is less; it expands, pushing away the surrounding air, and it uses up in this work some of the energy that it originally possessed in the form of heat. This process is referred to by scientists as "adiabatic cooling."

This explains why the heat of summer often seems to come up from the ground, rather than from the boiling sun above.—Popular Science Monthly.

Forests In Java.

By systematic reforestation Java is constantly increasing its teak forests, which now cover more than 1,480,000 acres, despite the great amount of timber cut every year.

ISLAND FIRE SWEPT.

By Courier Leased Wire

St. John, N.B., June 6.—A report reaching here says that the whole central section of Campo Bello Island, at the mouth of the Bay of Fundy, is being swept by a forest fire. No settled district has yet been reached.

proportion of the recruits now enlisting were of Dutch extraction.

The general outlook in South Africa, he said, is entirely promising and possibilities of development are undoubtedly great.

NEWSPAPERMAN DEAD.

By Courier Leased Wire

Hamilton, Ont., June 6.—William J. Boothe, of The Spectator editorial staff, died to-day, aged 49 years. Before coming to Hamilton, ten years ago, he was employed as a reporter on the St. Catharines papers.

GERMAN LOSSES TERRIBLE.

By Courier Leased Wire

Berne, Wednesday, June 5.—Bearing upon the war losses of some German families, is a statement made to The Associated Press correspondent by a German woman now in Berne.

"Twenty-five of my relatives have been killed, five are invalids and only two are left unharmed out of "sent seven sons into the war and this woman, whose husband was killed on the German front, near Arras. "My uncle," she continued, "sent seven eons into the war and six of them were killed within two months."

The losses of the Germans since the March offensive began have been terrific, she added.
