SPRING.

BY THE FOREST BARD.

The throne of the storm-king is faded and gone,
The reign of old Winter's no more;
And the advent of Spring is now fast drawing on,
E'en now she approacheth the door.
The landscape is gilded with sunshine and smiles,
There is balm in the breath of the breeze,
Which it bore as a prize from the South sunny skies,
As it came to us over the seas.

The valleys are green and the hill sides look gay,
And old earth seems rejoicing aloud,
Since the frown of cold winter hath vanished away
And the bow of our God's on the clouds.
There voices abroad in the woodland and glen,
Gentle songs of the tenants of air,
Bright proofs holden forth to the worshipers ken,
That the God of creation is there.

There's a bright velvet robe on the bosom of the earth,
Like the vest round the god that's twined;
But here the bright flow'rets are scattered in mirth
Like gems in rich grammer shrined.
On the dark cheek of night there's a silkier veil
Than old winter delighted to wear;
It is scented with balm, and sweet, and more fair.

There's songs in the grove and there's smiles in the wood,
Every heart seems rejoicing in love,
Swelling up in rich peans, each moment renewed,
To the throne of our Father above.
There's a lovelier blue on the vault of the sky,
Every cloud is snow tipp'd with gold;
There's a balm on each breeze as it wandereth by,
That it carries anon to unfold.

Then be thou not silent, my harp, but in gladness
Pour thy heart in rejoicing to God,
Who calls gloomy winter away with his sadness,
And scatters his blessing abroad.
We'll tune every harp with a hymn of sweet praise
Which gift to his altar we'll bring,
Devotion in songs to the Ancient of Days,
Who sendeth us back the sweet Spring.

AGRICULTURE.

GRUB IN SHEEP AND ITS CAUSE AND CURE.—From ignorance of the following valuable receipt we have known a number of valuable sheep to die with the fatal disease "worm in the head." Symptoms in the sheep affected are, constantly sneezing and snuffing, turning the head as if in pain, and trying to remove the cause. Loss of appetite soon follows, weakness, and in a few days the animal will refuse to eat at all.

Remedy.—When first discovered, inject with a syringe up each nostril a quarter or half a gill of the following liquid, viz.: a half a pound of scotch snuff, boiled in a quart of water, allowed to cool and settle. Some add a little assafœtida: this has a deadening effect on the animal, and is not necessary to cause a cure.

Violent convulsions ensue after this operation and the worms are then thrown from the head.

Many farmers smear the noses of their sheep with tar in the spring to keep off the insect, which in summer, deposits its eggs in the nostrils, from whence come the worms. Sheep, during the heat of the day, huddle together with their heads inward and to the ground, to protect themselves from this insect.—New York Evening Post.

LARGE CALF.—Mr. Reuben Hamlin, of China, has a heifer calf which weighed, when dropped, 160 pounds. This is worthy of a place among the "large ones."—Maine Farmer.

EXCELLENT BUTTER.—We have received a sample of excellent butter, made by Mrs. J. B. Fillebrown, Winthrop. Although this butter was churned during the hottest days of July, and then laid down, it is now, after remaining eight months in the firkin, perfectly sweet and every way as good as when first laid down. We understand Mrs. B.'s process to be, after churning, to work the butter in cold water, and divest it thoroughly of all buttermilk. Then salt it with the best of fine salt, and let it be until it becomes impregnated with it, and beat it over twice before laying it down.—Ib.

Windmills are again coming into use to turn machines for cutting straw, stones for grinding corn, and for pumping water. Several very great improvements have recently been made in windmills.

THE CARROT CROP.—If every farmer in the United States would raise half an acre of carrots the present year, it would be the beginning of a new era in agriculture. We regard it as an indispensable crop—quite as useful in feeding cattle and horses as Indian corn. The carrot is raised in large quantities by Eastern dairymen, some of whom plant as high as ten acres yearly. The advantages of root raising are various; they ameliorate the soil; they afford a variety of feed during winter, and feed of a succulent nature, which tends to preserve the animal's health; they increase the flow of milk; and carrots and parsnips greatly improve its quality. All crops do well after carrots, which is not the case with turnips or beets.—Prairie Farmer.

The following relative to the "care of colts" we extract from the New England Farmer;—

1. Keep colts in good order, and to fat, with a variety or change of food. Oats, cut feed or roots, and two or three quarts of grain, not more, per day.

2. Wean colts before taking up for winter, if strong and lively; if not, afterwards, but according to the time of being foaled.

3. The colt should be weaned according to the strength of it and its dam, but generally at about the age of six months.

4. If the colt was a late one, by all means. It would not materially injure the mare, if she could be kept in good flesh and spirits; but a large and strong colt, it would reduce the strength of the mare. It is not advisable to let a colt draw on the mare longer than can be helped.

I will here remark that there is no particular need of cleaning or rubbing, but feed and water, and by this, and kind treatment push them forward for the first two years. But above all things to begin with,—feed from the best blood to be had, as they are more profitable, and the expense is no more than so much to raise a good one that will bring a $150 at a year old, perhaps $300, as one that never will bring much.

METHOD OF CURING BAD TUB BUTTER.—A quantity of tub butter was brought to market in the West Indies, which when opening, was found to be very bad, and almost stinking.—A native of Pennsylvania undertook to cure it which he did in the following manner:—He started the tubs of butter in a large quantity of hot water, which soon melted the butter; he then skimmed it off as clean as possible, and worked it over again in a churn, and with the addition of salt and fine sugar, the butter was made sweet and good again.—Cultivator.

BEDBUGS.—In answer to an inquiry, Dr. Holmes, of the Maine Farmer, gives the following:—There are various preparations which are "death to bedbugs." One of these is one half ounce pertartar emetic, dissolved in a pint of rum. This is poison enough to kill any bug, or any body.

Another preparation is this: spirits of turpentine, one half pint; soft soap, half pint; all shook up together.

The best method we are found to clear a room or house of bedbugs, where they get into the chinks and crevices of the wall, is to take out the furniture and burn sulphur there.—The fumes will kill them wherever they penetrate. We have known bedbugs to live in a house that had not been occupied by anybody for more than a year.

A GREAT TRUTH.—By education men become easy to lead, but difficult to drive—easy to govern, but impossible to enslave.

It is reported that the New York Bible Society is meditating the plan of publishing the Bible in newspaper form for more general circulation.

At a marriage ceremony, which is of most value, the bride or bridegroom? The bridegroom; for the bride is given away, while the bridegroom is sold.

THE BEAUTIFUL.—We should do our utmost to encourage the beautiful, for the useful encourages itself.
