The minister of commerce has addressed to Rear-Admiral Slade (commander-in-chief in the East Indies), and to the governor of Aden a letter in which he expresses the thanks of the Austro-Hungarian government for their strenuous efforts to rescue the Trieste.

Maids of Honor

M. A. P.

A girl who aspires to become a maid of honor intimates, usually through her parents, to the mistress of the robes that she would like to serve Her Majesty in this capacity, and if she is a suitable candidate her name is put down and submitted to the queen when a vacancy occurs, or in the event of Her Majesty wishing to increase the number, which is at present limited to three.

A maid of honor must, of course, occupy a well established social position, though it is not now necessary as it was once that she should be of titled rank. A maid must be able to speak French fluently and should be able to converse in German; she must be a good pianist and be able to read accompaniments at sight, and she must, it is scarcely necessary to say, be thoroughly well educated and have travelled on the continent. A good, well trained voice is a qualification.

Brooklyn is to have an incorporated family. Under the name "The Jacobson Family" 65 relatives have applied for papers of incorporation "for the purpose of obtaining cooperation in social, family and business affairs." The heads of the organization are Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Jacobson, who are each seventy-seven years old. The corporation will hold monthly entertainments, and may eventually undertake some business venture.

THOSE DISTRACTINGLY COQUETTISH WINTER CAPS

One of the fads which spread like wildfire and took possession of the youthful contingent is the knitted worsted cap used this winter for skating, motoring, tramping and all out-of-door sports. These jaunty knitted caps were even seen at the Horse Show on young women who came in town in motor cars. The caps were first worn at the Aviation Meet in October, at Belmont Park, and now every woman under thirty has one or is bent on having one. The caps come in all white, in red, brown and a deep hunter's green, and also in smart combinations of color like the model pictured.

The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

THE lady and her husband were househunting.

Chancing to be calling at an apartment and to be taking my leave just as the lady interviewed the janitor on the front steps, I, of necessity, overheard this scrap of conversation.

Janitor—"So you think you'lltake it. And how many are there in your family?"

The lady—"Five—my husband, myself and three children."

And what sort of an apartment do you think they had been looking at? A seven room room affair in a big city block, with no piazza and no yard—absolutely nothing but the street for the children's playground.

Furthermore, with but seven rooms, of course, there could have been no nursery and not even a separate bedroom for those children.

Aren't you sorry for those unlucky babies?

I am—and for all the little ones whose fathers and mothers do not realize that they owe it to the lives they have brought into the world to give them a normal healthy place to develop.

I recently did a little househunting for a friend of mine, and found a state of affairs which impressed me deeply.

This was it. Plenty of big, comfortable, comparatively old fashioned houses with ample space about them for garden or playground, just going abegging at low rents, while little six and seven room apartments were being snapped up at several dollars a month more.

Of course the apartments had "all the modern conveniences"—electric lights, open plumbing, gas ranges, etc. (In fact, in several of them the old fashioned stove had been completely ousted by the gas range. I suppose it's absurdly old-fashioned, and non-progressive of me but I must say that to take the stove out of the kitchen seems to me kind of like taking the heart out of the home).

Also, of course, these apartments were much daintier and more attractive, had prettier wall paper, hardwood floors and were altogether capable of being fixed up more prettily than the big houses.

For young couples or for families of grown-ups I'll admit they made most desirable nests.

But for people with children, I think they were impossible—I had almost said criminal.

The kind of people that can't be satisfied anywhere except in such a predigested existence are the kind of people who should not have children.

I believe that all fathers and mothers owe it to their children to select homes where the children, if possible, will each have separate playrooms, where if possible there will be a big airy nursery or indoor playroom, and where it shall surely be possible for them to have plenty of opportunity for outdoor life, even if some sacrifices have to be made to find this sort of home.

When the owner of some big apartment house makes a rule excluding children, the press usually gets wildly excited over this "premium upon race suicide."

Personally I think it's a mighty good move although actuated of course by a selfish motive.

If people with children don't have sense enough to stap out of such places I'm glad there is something to keep them out.

But I wish they'd have the sense of themselves.

Daily Hints for the Cook

MAPLE MOUSSE.

Whip one-half pint of cream until stiff. Then add enough maple syrup to color and flavor the cream. Put into a quart fruit jar and pack in ice. This makes a quart of delicious, easily prepared and inexpensive cream.

SPONGE CAKE.

Separate whites and yolks of two eggs beat both well, then put together and beat in one cup of sugar, then half cup lukewarm milk. Add one cup flour, one teaspoon baking powder and one teaspoon vanilla. Beat with egg-beater.

TO WHIP CREAM.

If the bowl of cream is kept in a pan of ice water during beating there will not be the embarrasment of seeing it come to butter when butter is the last thing that is wanted. The cream should be very cold before the work begins.

MARSHMALLOWS.

One-half box sparkling gelatine, 2 cups (one pint) granulated sugar; few grains salt and flavoring to taste. Soak the gelatine in ten tablespoonful cold water. Heat the sugar with ten tablespoonsful water till dissolved. Add gelatine to syrup and let stand until partially cooled. Add salt and flavoring, beat with a whip until too stiff, then with a large spoon until only soft enough to settle into a sheet. Dust granite pans thickly with confectioner's sugar; pour in the candy about half inch deep and set in cool place until thoroughly chilled. Turn out, cut in cubes and roll in confectioner's sugar. This recipe will make over 100 marshmallows. Nuts, chocolate, fruit juices in place of part of the water, or candied fruits chopped may be added — or the plain ones rolled in grated cocoanut before being sugared. Dates stuffed with this confection are delicious.

DECEMBER CANADA MONTHLY.

Without knowing very definitely what it is, or having a really clear notion of the reasons for it, most people profess to find incomprehensible the Terrorist's point of view, the mental processes of the apostle of the red flag and the echo bomb. How can a man believe it right to kill and maim his fellows, to preach Nihilism and destruction, to stand himself in the shoes of God and judge the world? Not many of us have ever talked with a live Terrorist at first hand, and it is something of a revelation to see and hear the "Red" at home, as Arthur Stringer shows him in the December of Canada Monthly (formerly Canada-West.)

This number also contains "McGahan's Christmas," by Arthur McFarlane, a story of three exiled Canadians in China, on Christmas Day; Will D. Eaton tells how Old Caesar, a pet lion, celebrated Christmas with a mouthful of canvasman; J. H. Reed rambles along English country lanes in "One Foot Up and One Foot Down," Arthur Hawkes tells how a friend of his became "Grandfather to Hansard" by teaching the secret of public speaking to some of his acquaintances; and in "A Nook of the Cote de Neiges," Ellen Huling gives a quaint account of an old French cemetery. Cy Warman, in "The Heart of a Man," describes how a journalist got a story for his magazine, and there is also material by E. A. Orchard, Leslie Adams, W. D. Nesbit, W. Lacey Amy, Barbara Ballantine and others. The illustrations are by Percy E. Anderson, Frederick M. Grant, Donald McGregor, Lillian Clarke and others.
