THROWN AWAY.

The sacred time for cleaning
Had come to hold its sway,
She spent the hours in gleaning
Some things to throw away.
She rummaged through the attic
And in the cellar poked,
Pursued her course erratic
Through closets treasure-choked.
But this thing might be mended
If she had time to try,
And that old wreck was blended
With memories gone by.
The derelicts thus guarded,
What did she throw away?
The sole thing she discarded
Was one divine Spring day.
—McLandburgh Wilson.

STEPS TO RESCUE MAROONED PARTY

To be Taken by British and Norwegian Governments.

Christiania, April 8.—Negotiations between the British and Norwegian foreign offices which followed the receipt of a wireless appeal from the steamer Solovei, ice bound in the Arctic with eighty souls on board, has resulted in an ice breaker being placed at the disposal of a rescue party organized by Russian scientists.

The message of distress from the Solovei was received at Moscow by wireless last March 31, asking aid for the men, women and children who were in danger of perishing from cold and hunger. The vessel, the message said, became ice bound in the river Chiga in January, finally drifting into the Kasaza. The position of the vessel on March 22, the message added, was latitude 72, longitude 69.

EDITH CAVELL IN MARBLE

Statue Unveiled by Queen Alexandra—Work by Sir George Frampton, R. A.—A Labor of Love.

"The countless thousands who will pass this spot in our time and in future generations will think with sorrow of her cruel death, with pride of her splendid fortitude, and with affection of her unselfish womanly character."

This was Queen Alexandra's moving tribute to the memory of Edith Cavell at the unveiling of the beautiful white marble statue of the heroic nurse near Trafalgar Square.

The crowd below, a distinguished gathering, including Princess Victoria, Lord Burnham, chairman of the Cavell Memorial Committee, Mrs. Wainwright and Miss Cavell, sisters of Miss Edith Cavell, and the Bishop of London (who offered a dedicatory prayer), the Belgian Ambassador (who presented a little deputation from the Ecole Edith Cavell at Brussels), Lord Knutsford, the matron and many nurses from the London Hospital, where she was trained, stood silent, with upturned faces gazing at the figure standing high on the massive grey granite plinth.

Strength, serenity, and gentleness blend in the marble presentment of the cloaked nurse. The work has been a labor of love to Sir George Frampton, R.A., the sculptor. It is the real Edith Cavell, remote but near, that Sir George has given to the hurrying crowds, who may read the heroic words on the rough-hewn granite—"Humanity," "Sacrifice," "Fortitude," "Devotion," and on the base the simple inscription, "Edith Cavell, Brussels, Dawn, October 12, 1915."

The band of the Coldstream Guards played Nurse Cavell's favorite hymn, "Abide With Me," the hymn she sang on that October morning, and there came poignant thoughts of Edith Cavell's last dawn as the buglers on the plinth sounded the "Last Post," mournful, impressive, triumphant.

Penalizing Progress

St. John needs more building of homes and expansion of business properties. The Paving Bill sent to the Legislature by the Common Council will not help to secure these, but will have the opposite effect.

In Douglas Avenue the measure amounts to a Practical "Confiscation of Property," Says an independent authority and the injustice in other sections is equally as great. What will happen to the 44 widows owning property in Brussels street?

The tenant is carrying the load of all increases and there is a limit to the advance in rentals. All classes should think seriously of the burden imposed on property by this new Bill and
